Son petit marteau sombre, effrayant, monotone,
Usant le mont, coupant le roc, sciant le grès,
Complétant sa ruine et faisant son progrès,
Et profitant d’un creux pour creuser davantage,
Et d’une argile-à l’autre, et d’étage en étage,
Du haut en bas, de bloc en bloc, de banc en banc,
Errant, roulant, brisant, sapant, taillant, courbant,
La goutte d’eau travaille, et, terrible ouvrière,.
Tord en cercles profonds l’énorme fondrière.
Le vaste mont, battu des aquilons sifflants,
Frémit de voir creuser dans ses ténébreux flancs
Ce puits prodigieux par ette vrille infime,
Et de sentir l’atome en lui créer l’abîme.
Sur ce qui s’édifie et ce qui se détruit,
Laissons rouler du temps, du gouffre et de la nuit.

Et maintenant regarde: Un cirque! un hippodrome,
Un théâtre où Stamboul, Tyr, Memphis, Londres, Rome,
Avec leurs millions d’hommes pourraient s’asseoir,
Où Paris flotterait comme un essaim du soir!
Gavarnie! un miracle! un rêve! Architectures
Sans constructeurs connus, sans noms, sans signatures,
Qui dans l’obscurité gardez votre secret,
Arches, temples qu’Aaron ou Moïse sacrait,
O champ clos de Tarquin où trois-cent milles têtes
Fourmillaient, où l’Atlas hideux vidait ses bêtes,

Casbahs, At-meïdans, tours, Kremlins, Rhamséions,
Où nous, spectres, venons, où nous nous asseyons,
Panthéons, parthénons, cathédrales qu'ont faites
De puissants charpentiers aux âmes de prophètes,
Monts creusés en pagode où vivent des airains,
Aux plafonds monstrueux, sombres ciels souterrains,
Cirques, stades, Elis, Thèbe, arènes de Nîmes;
Noirs monuments, géants, témoins, grands anonymes,
Vous n'êtes rien, palais, dômes, temples, tombeaux,
Devant ce colysée inouï du chaos!
Vois: l'homme fait ici le bruit de l'éphémère:
C'est l'apparition, l'énigme, la chimère
Taillée à pans coupés et tirée au cordeau.
L'aube est sur le fronton comme un sacré bandeau,
Et cette énormité songe, auguste et tranquille.
Morceau d'Olympe; reste étrange d'une ville
De l'infini, qu'un être inconnu démembra;
Cour des lions d'un vague et sinistre Alhambra;
Gageure de Dédale et de Titan; démence
Du compas ivre et roi dans la montagne immense;
Stupeur du voyageur qui suspend son chemin;
Exagération du monument humain. .
Jusqu'à la vision, jusqu'à l'apothéose;
Monde qui n'est pas l'homme et qui n'est plus la chose;
Entrée inexprimable et sombre du granit
Dans le rêve, où la pierre en prodige finit
Problème; précipice édifice; sculpture
Du mystère; œuvre d'art de la fauve nature;
Construction que nie et que voit la raison,
Et qu'achève, au delà du terrestre horizon;
Sur le mur de la nuit, la fresque de L'abîme;
C'est Vignole à la base et l'éclair sur la cime.
C'est le spectre de tout ce que l'homme bâtit,
Terrible, raillant l'homme, et;le faisant petit.

La grande pyramide ici serait la borne.
Où le taureau courbé vient aiguiser sa corne,

Et tu demanderais: quel est donc ce caillou?
Plante dans le pavé du cirque d’Arle un clou,

Et ce clou jettera dans l’herbe qui se fane
La même ombre qu’ici la colonne trajane.
Quel joueur gigantesque a laissé là ce dé?
Un mont dort dans un angle, un autre est accoudé
Et la brume à son cou s’enfle et pend comme un goître.
Vois croître vers la cime et vers le bas décroître,
Écaillant de lichens leurs lourds granits vermeils,
Ces grands cercles de bancs superposés, pareils
A des boas roulés l’un au-dessus de l’autre.
Avec on ne sait quelle attitude d’apôtre,
Un rocher rêve au seuil, et, le long des degrés,
D’autres blocs stupéfaits, voilés, désespérés,
Semblent des Niobés, des Rachels, des Hécubes.
Vois ces pavés; le moindre a dix mille pieds cubes.

La forme est simple, c’est le cirque; mais le mur,
À force de grandeur et de vie, est obscur;   .
Qu’est-ce que c’est qu’un mur vertical, rouillé, fruste,
Où, comme un bas-relief, le glacier blanc s’incruste?
Des albâtres, des gneiss, des porphyres caducs
Mêlent à ses créneaux des arches d’aqueducs,
Et là-bas la vapeur sous des frontons estompe
Des éléphants portant des blocs, baissant leur trompe;
Ces tours sont les piliers angulaires; de quoi?
Du vide, de l’éther, du souffle, de l’effroi.
L’impossible est ici debout; l’aigle seul brave
Cette incommensurable et farouche architrave.
Comme, lorsque la terre a tremblé, sont confus
Dans l’herbe, les claveaux, les chapiteaux, les fûts,
Tout se mêle, l’art grec avec l’art syriaque.
Sous les portes croupit l’ombre hypocondriaque.
Vois: tours où l’on dirait que chante Beethoven,
Pilône, imposte, cippe, obélisque, peulven,
Tout en foule apparaît; soubassements, balustres

Où l’eau nacrée étale au jour ses vagues lustres;
Crevasses où pourraient tenir des bataillons;
Sur les parois des creux pareils à ces sillons
Qu’aux temps diluviens faisaient aux seuils des antres
Et dans les grands roseaux des passages de ventres;
Là, des courbes, des arcs, des dômes; par endroits
Des murs carrés, des plans égaux, des angles droits;
Partout la symétrie inconcevable et sûre;
Des gradins dont on semble avoir pris la mesure
Aux angles des genoux des archanges assis!
Des pinacles géants portent des oasis;
Ordre et gouffre; les pins semblent sous les arcades
L’herbe; et les arcs-en-ciel s’envolent des cascades.
Tout est cyclopéen, vaste, stupéfiant;
Le bord fait reculer le chamois défiant;
L’édifice, étageant ses marches que l’œil compte;
Blanchit de — plus en plus à mesure qu’il monte,
Et, de tous les reflets de l’heure s’empourprant,
Passe du roc calcaire au marbre pur, et prend,
Comme pour consacrer sa forme solennelle,
Sa dernière corniche à la neige éternelle
Combien a-t-il de haut? demande au ciel profond,
Au vent, à l’avalanche, aux vols: d’oiseaux qui vont,
Aux douze chutes d’eau que l’ombre entend se plaindre
Dans cet épouvantable et tournoyant cylindre,
Aux gaves, épuisés, d’écume et de combats,
Qui s’écroulent; torrent en haut, fumée en bas!

Piranèse effaré, maçon d’apocalypses,
Seul comprendrait ce nœud d’angles, d’orbes, d’ellipses;
Pourtant l’œil peut encore en mesurer, le jour,
La forme inexprimable et l’effrayant contour,
Mais sitôt qu’effaçant le bord, le fond, le centre,
Le soir dans l’édifice ainsi qu’un brouillard entre,
La forme disparaît; c’est sous le firmament.
Une espèce d’étrange et morne entassement
De brèches, de frontons, de cavernes, de porches

Où les astres:hagards tremblent comme des torches,
Et, dans on ne sait quel cintre démesuré,
De l'étoilé qui flotte avec de l'azuré.
Entre encor plus avant dans la chose géante:

Ce cirque, ce bassin, embouchure béante,
Imprime un mouvement de roue à l'aquilon,
Et fait de tout le vent qui passe un tourbillon;
La bise habite: là, traître et battant de l'aile,
Et la trombe y tournoie en spirale éternelle.
Embûche formidable à prendre l'ouragan!
Le précipice s'ouvre en gueule de volcan,
Et malheur au nuage errant qui se hasarde
À venir regarder par quelque âpre lézarde!
Sitôt qu'il y pénètre, il ne peut plus sortir;
Il a beau reculer, trembler, se repentir,
Le tourbillon tient: C'est fini. Le nuage
Lutte, bat le courant comme un homme qui nage;
Il roule. Il est saisi! Vois, entends-le gronder.
Il fait de vains efforts, il cherche à s'évader;
On dirait que le gouffre implacable le raille.;
Il monte, il redescend; le long de la muraille,
Fauve, il quête une issue, un soupirail, un trou;
Étreint par la rafale, égaré, fuyant, fou,
Il vomit ses grêlons, crache sa pluie, et crible
D'aveugles coups d'éclair l'escarpement terrible;

Et le vieux mont s'émeut, car les rocs convulsifs
Tremblent quand, s'accrochant aux pitons, aux récifs,
Du haut de l'azur calme où toujours elle rôde,
Libre et sans soupçonner l'immensité de fraude,
À ce sombre entonnoir trébuchant brusquement,
Et de son épouvante et de son hurlement
Ébranlant la paroi, les tours, la plate-forme,
La tempête, ce loup, tombe en ce piège énorme!
Voisinage effrayant pour les arbres, tordus
Par le vent ou roulés dans l'abîme, éperdus!

Du brin d’herbe au rocher, du chêne à la broussaille,
Tout l’horizon autour du cirque noir tressaille,
Le gave a peur, le pic, par l’orage mouillé,
A le frisson dans l’ombre, et le pâtre éveillé,
Pâle, écoute, et, parmi les sapins centenaires,
Entend rugir la nuit cette fosse aux tonnerres!

Et ce cirque qui met, au lieu de loups et d’ours,
Les ouragans aux fers dans ses cabanons sourds,
Ce large amphithéâtre au mur inaccessible,
Cet édifice fou, redoutable, impossible,
Fait à l’esprit, et même au delà des titans,
Rêver de tels combats et de tels combattants
Qu’on le croirait bâti, qui sait? pour la mêlée
Des hydres que d’en bas la terre humble et troublée
Entrevoit dans l’horreur du taillis sidéral;
Qu’il semble en ce champ clos étrange et sépulcral,
Que, sous cette splendide et sublime falaise,
Les constellations pourraient se tordre à l’aise;
Et que, dans cette arène inouïe, on a peur
Parfois d’y voir descendre à travers la vapeur,
Pour s’entre-dévorer, les bêtes des étoiles;
Et d’entendre lutter, là, sous de sombres voiles,
Et hurler et rugir le taureau, monstre ailé,
L’effrayant capricorne aux nuages mêlé,
Le lion flamboyant, tout semé d’yeux funèbres,
Bâillant de la lumière et mâchant des ténèbres,
Le scorpion tenant dans ses pattes le soir,
Et, se ruant sur tous, le sagittaire noir,
Ce chasseur au carquois rempli de météores,
Dont par moments on voit, ainsi que des aurores
Qui passent et s’en vont et qu’un sillon d’or suit,
Les flèches d’astres luire et tomber dans la nuit!

Immensité! l’esprit frissonne. Quel Vitruve
A bâti ce vertige et creusé cette cuve?
Quel Scopas, quel Sostrate ou quel Eutinopus

A construit cet attique avec des monts rompus?

Quel Phidias du ciel a fait à sa stature
L’âpre sérénité de cette architecture?
Qui forgea les crampons? qui broya les ciments?
Ô nature, qui donc à ces escarpements
A lié les torrents, ces chevaux dont les queues
Pendent en crins d’argent dans les cascades bleues?
Du haut de quel zénith tomba le fil à plomb?
Qui mesura, toisa; régla; tailla? le long
De quel mur idéal a-t-on tracé l’épure?
De quelle région de la vision pure
Est sorti le rêveur de ce rêve inouï?
Quel cyclope savant de l’âge évanoui,
Quel être monstrueux, plus grand que les idées;
A pris un compas haut de cent mille coudées,
Et, le tournant d’un doigt prodigieux et sûr,
A tracé ce grand cercle au niveau de l’azur,
Rondeur sinistre ayant le gouffre pour fenêtre,
Puits qui, lorsque le soir le noircit, pourrait être
La coupe d’ombre énorme où vient boire la-nuit?
Aux temps où, rien n’étant complètement construit,
Du chaos encor proche on sentait le mélange,
Quand la montagne était encore un tas de fange;
Quelque étrange géant, fils de Cham ou de Bel,
A-t-il pris brusquement et retourné Babel,
Et l’a-t-il appuyée à ce mont, comme on scelle
Un cachet sur la cire ardente qui ruisselle,
De sorte que, léguant, dans le mont affaissé;
Sa forme renversée au trou qu’elle a laissé,
La tour s’est dans le roc imprimée en citerne,
Avec sa rampe où l’ombre après le jour alterne,
Et ses escaliers noirs et ses étages ronds;
Et ses portails: s’ouvrant en bouches de clairons
Si bien que maintenant l’œil voit ce moule horrible,
Et le creux dont Babel fut le relief terrible!

L’auteur, je te l’ai dit; c’est l’atome; l’auteur,
C’est ce fil brun rayant l’azur sur la hauteur,
C’est un peu de brouillard d’où tombe un peu de pluie,
C’est le grain de cristal qu’un souffle tiède essuie,
C’est, au jour ou dans l’ombre, au matin comme au soir,
La molécule d’eau qui coule du ciel noir,
C’est la larme échappée aux cils de la nuée;
C’est ce qui tremble au bout de l’herbe remuée,
Ce qui n’a pas de nom, ce qui ressemble aux pleurs;
C’est ce que la lumière, en traversant, les fleurs,
Prend et roule en son vol sans en être chargée,
Ce qu’un petit oiseau boit dans une gorgée!
Oui; ce cirque et ses tours, édifice sacré
Où le drapeau d’azur du gouffre est arboré,

Ce théâtre où le vent combat la trombe enfuie,
Voilà ce qu’a construit un atome de pluie.
Quel besoin as-tu donc d’un Vishnou, d’un Allah,
D’un Bouddha, d’un Ammon cornu, pour tout cela?
Pourquoi sortir du cercle où le réel t’enferme?
À quoi bon détrôner l’élément et le germe?
Pourquoi donc à la chose ôter sa mission?
Pourquoi forcer l’atome à l’abdication?
Pourquoi destituer, homme, le grain de sable?
Quelqu’un qui dise moi t’est-il indispensable?
Tu mets en haut de tout un pronom personnel!
Quelle rage as-tu donc d’un faiseur éternel?
Ne peux-tu faire un pas sans un Très-Haut quelconque?
L’océan se va-t-il ruer hors de sa conque,
Tout mordre et tout ronger si ton Zéus n’est là
Pour le saisir aux crins et mettre le holà?
Tout n’est-il qu’une grotte à loger ce druide?
Crois-tu que le solide étreindra le fluide,
Que la mer manquera d’onde et de gonflement,
Que le soleil fuira, s’éteignant et fumant,
Que le germe oubliera le secret de la vie,
Que la terre prendra la route qui dévie,

Ou que la lune va perdre un de ses quartiers,
Si tu n’as dans un coin, pilant dans les mortiers,
Forgeant, créant, sculptant les os, broyant les poudres,
Un fantôme forgé d’étoiles et de foudres?
Dis, sans cet arrangeur, vivant, perpétuel,
Soulignant ce qu’il faut changer au rituel,
Dont tu doutes, songeur, pendant que tu l’implores,
Les lys pâliront-ils sur les robes des flores,
Les violettes, dis, perdront-elles la clé
De la boîte aux parfums dans l’herbe et dans le blé?
Entre l’ombre passée et la flamme future,
Dis, l’homme sera-t-il, en sa sombre aventure,
Englouti par hier ou détruit par demain,
Si tu n’as, pour sauver le triste germe humain,
Quelque Janus bifront, faisant face aux deux hydres?
La minute va donc figer dans les clepsydres,
Le temps, cet ouvrier mystérieux qui court,
Au cabestan du ciel va donc s’arrêter court,
La lumière, l’aimant, la sève, l’atmosphère,
Vont se déconcerter et ne savoir que faire,
Tout le mouvement va s’interrompre transi
Si ton Brahma ne vient leur crier par ici!
Avril a-t-il besoin d’un mot d’ordre? Un tonnerre
Est-il un frissonnant et noir fonctionnaire
Attendant que quelqu’un lui fixe son emploi?
Faut-il donc un veilleur toujours présent, sans quoi
Les astres manqueraient les heures des aurores?

Le monde est une tour pleine de bruits sonores;
Faut-il un horloger derrière le cadran,
Réglant les poids dans l’ombre et tant de fois par an,
Mettant de l’ordre au ciel, versant l’huile aux rouages
Des globes, des saisons, des vents et des nuages;
Disant: Vesper, Vénus, rentrez! sors, Jupiter!
Donnant à chaque sphère à son tour dans l’éther
Ou la note qui chante, ou la note qui prie,
Et remontant la vaste et sombre sonnerie?

Prends-tu pour des pantins et pour des jacquemards
Orion, Sirius, Vesta, Saturne et Mars?
Et la création est-elle une fontaine
À mécanique ainsi que la Samaritaine?
As-tu donc peur de voir le monde aller tout seul?
Faut-il que la forêt dise: — Père, un tilleul!
Un chêne! des sapins! donnez-moi de la mousse
Pour que le bruit du vent dans mes antres s’émousse!
Quoi! cet échange vaste et saint d’attraction,
Ce flux et ce reflux de la création
Qui jette dehors l’être et sans fin le résorbe,
L’univers, ne peut-il rouler, cercle, flamme, orbe,
Sans que ta terreur crie:nous fait des étais!
Sans que l’homme, appelant à l’aide Teutatès,
Irmensul, Bhagavan, Chronos, Théos, échine
Un travailleur divin à tourner la machine?
Fais ce rêve, homme! et marche où L’erreur te conduit.
Quant à moi; qui suis l’ombre et qui vais dans la nuit,
Je n’accepterais pas, pour faire des prodiges,
Pour creuser un puits sombre et l’emplir de vertiges,
Pour soulever un monde, effroyable fardeau,
L’échange de ton Dieu contre ma goutte d’eau.

— Oui, mais la goutte d’eau, criai-je, qui l’a faite?

XIII. Une autre voix

Swedenborg prit un jour la coupe de Platon,
Et, pensif, s’en alla boire à l’azur terrible.
Il entra sous le porche obscur de l’invisible
Et disparut. Où donc alla-t-il? Qui le sait?
Peut-être aux lieux sacrés où Socrate pensait,
Où, dans l’ombre, effleuré de l’urne des Homères,
Le vin de l’idéal sort du puits des chimères.

Peut-être égara-t-il ses pas plus haut encor;
Jusqu’au gouffre inconnu, jusqu’aux pléiades d’or,
Jusqu’au ruissellement des fontaines d’aurore,
Jusqu’à l’ombre où l’on voit l’inexprimable éclore;
Là sont les cuves: sève, esprit, immensité;
Là vit, abonde et croît la vigne de clarté
Où l’on ne trouve pas un seul astre qui dorme,
Où les créations font leur vendange énorme;
Où la grappe de vie à flots ruisselle, ayant
La pierre du tombeau pour pressoir effrayant;
Là sont les infinis, la cause, le principe,
L’être qui s’évapore en mondes, se dissipe
En astres, et s’épanche en ciel démesuré:
Il revint éperdu, chancelant, effaré,
Ployant sous la lueur farouche des étoiles;
Voyant l’homme à travers des épaisseurs de voiles
Et de tremblants rideaux de lumière où, sans fin
Multipliés; flottaient l’ange et le séraphin;
Ayant dans son cerveau l’ombre et tous ses délires,
De ses doigts écartés Cherchant de vagues lyres,
Nu, bégayant l’abîme et balbutiant Dieu;
Rapportant cette joie étrange du ciel bleu
Qui fait peur à la vie et trouble les fils d’Ève,
Et laissant voir, ainsi que le monde du rêve,
Dans de blêmes rayons tombés on ne sait d’où,
Un paradis sinistre au fond de son œil fou.

La raison l’attendait, grave, et lui dit: Ivrogne!

Esprit, fais ton sillon, homme, fais ta besogne.
Ne va pas au delà. Cherche Dieu. Mais tiens-toi,
Pour le voir, dans l’amour et non pas dans l’effroi.

II — L’Océan d’en haut

I

Et je vis au-dessus de ma tête un point noir.

Et ce point noir semblait une mouche du soir
Volant à l’heure où, l’ombre à prier nous invite.
Et, l’homme, quand il pense, étant ailé, j’eus vite,
Franchi l’éther, qui s’ouvre à l’essor des esprits
Et cette mouche était une chauve-souris.

Et ce lugubre oiseau volait seul dans l’espace
Et disait: — C’est énorme et hideux. Ce qui passe Devant mes yeux me fait trembler. C’est effrayant.
Quand donc serai-je hors de l’ombre? Et, me voyant,
Il cria: « Que veux-tu de moi?”, passant rapide.
Je regarde, éperdu, la matière stupide.
Homme, écoute: je suis l’oiseau noir que trouva
Démogorgon en Grece et dans l’Inde Shiva
Je contemple l’horreur de la sombre nature.
Homme, quel est le sens de l’affreuse aventure

Qu’on appelle univers? Je le cherche et j’ai peur.
J’interroge ce bloc qui n’est qu’une vapeur;
J’observe l’infini monstrueux, et je scrute
La taupe et le soleil, l’homme, l’arbre et la brute.
Je suis triste. O passant, comprends-tu ce mot: Rien!
Ce qu’on nomme le mal est peut-être le bien.
Quand un gouffre se comble, un autre puits se creuse.
Tourment, volupté, rire et clameur douloureuse,
Flux et reflux, le juste et l’injuste, le bon,
Le mauvais, blanc et noir, diamant et charbon,
Vrai, faux, pourpre et haillon, le carcan, l’auréole,
Jour et nuit, vie et mort, oui, non; navette folle
Que pousse le hasard, tisserand de la nuit!
Connaît-on ce qui sert, et sait-on ce qui nuit?
Tout germe est un fléau, tout choc est un désastre;

La comète, brûlot des mondes, détruit l’astre;
Le même être est victime et bourreau tour à tour,
Et pour le moucheron l’hirondelle est vautour.
Les cailloux sont broyés par la bête de somme,
L’âne paît le chardon, l’homme dévore l’homme,
L’agneau broute la fleur, le loup broute l’agneau,
Sombre chaîne éternelle où l’anneau mord l’anneau!
Et ce qu’on voit n’est rien; les fils tuant les pères,
Les requins, les Nérons, les Séjans, les viperes,
Cela n’est que peu d’ombre et que peu de terreur;
L’infiniment petit contient la grande horreur;
L’atome est un bandit qui dévore l’atome;
L’araignée a sa toile et le ver son royaume;
Les fourmilières sont des Babels; l’animal
En se rapetissant se rapproche du mal;
Plus la force décroît, plus la bête est difforme;
Et, quand il les regarde avec son œil énorme,
Homme, les gouttes d’eau font peur à l’océan;
La rosée en sa perle a Typhon et Satan;
Ils s’y tordent tous deux à jamais; l’éphémère
Est Moloch; l’infusoire, effroyable chimère,
Grince, et si le géant pouvait voir l’embryon,
Le béhémoth fuirait devant le vibrion.
Le Moindre grain de sable est un globe qui roule
Traînant comme la terre une lugubre foule
Qui s’abhorre et s’acharne et s’exècre, et sans fin
Se dévore; la haine est au fond de la faim.
La sphère impereptible à la grande est pareille;
Et le songeur entend, quand, il penche l’oreille,
Une rage tigresse et des cris léonins
Rugir profondément dans ces univers nains.
Toute gueule est un gouffre, et qui mange assassine.
L’animal a sa griffe et l’arbre a sa racine;
Et la racine affreuse et pareille aux serpents
Fait dans l’obscurité de sombres guet-apens;
Tout se tient et s’embrasse et s’étreint pour se mordre;
Un crime universel et monstrueux est l’ordre;

Tout être boit un sang immense, ruisselant
De la création comme d’un vaste flanc.
On lutte, on frappe, on blesse, on saigne, on souffre, on pleure.
Tout ce que vous voyez est larve; tout vous leurre,
Et tout rapidement fond dans l’ombre; car tout
Tremble dans le mystère immense et se dissout;
La nuit reprend le spectre ainsi que l’eau la neige.
La voix s’éteint avant d’avoir crié: Que sais-je?
Le printemps, le soleil, les bêtes en chaleur,
Sont une chimérique et monstrueuse fleur;
À travers son sommeil ce monde effaré souffre;
Avril n’est que le rêve érotique du gouffre;
Une pollution nocturne de ruisseaux,
De rameaux, de parfums, d’aube et de chants d’oiseaux.
L’horreur seule survit, par tout continuée.
Et par moments un vent qui sort de la nuée
Dessine des contours, des rayons et des yeux
Dans ce noir tourbillon d’atomes furieux.
O toi qui vas! l’esprit, le vent, la feuille morte,
Le silence, le bruit, cette aile qui t’emporte,
Le jour que tu crois voir par moments, ce qui luit,
Ce qui tremble, le ciel, l’être, tout est la nuit!
Et la création tout entière, avec l’homme,
Avec ce que l’œil voit et ce que la voix nomme,
Ses mondes, ses soleils, ses courants inouïs,
Ses météores fous qui volent éblouis,
Avec ses globes d’or pareils à de grands dômes,
Avec son éternel passage de fantômes,
Le flot, l’essaim, l’oiseau, le lys qu’on croit béni,
N’est qu’un vomissement d’ombre dans l’infini!
La nuit produit le mal, le mal produit le pire.
Écoute maintenant ce que je vais te dire:

L’oiseau noir s’arrêta, d’épouvante troublé,
Puis, sombre et frémissant, reprit:
Je suis allé
Jusqu’au fond de cette ombre, et je n’ai vu personne.

Je tressaillis. L’oiseau poursuivit:

J’en frissonne

À jamais, dans ce gouffre où j’erre plein d’effroi!
Dans cette Obscurité personne ne dit: moi!
Noire ébauche de rien que personne n’achève!
L’univers est un monstre et le ciel est un rêve;
Ni volonté, ni loi, ni pôles, ni milieu;
Un chaos composé de néants; pas de Dieu.
Dieu, pourquoi? L’idéal est absent. Dans ce monde,
La naissance est obscène et l’amour est immonde.
D’ailleurs, est-ce qu’on naît? est-ce qu’on vit? quel est
Le vivant, le réel, le certain, le complet?
Les penseurs, dont la nuit je bats les fronts moroses,
Questionnent en vain la surdité des choses;
L’eau coule, l’arbre croît, l’âne brait, l’oiseau pond,
Le loup hurle, le ver mange; rien ne répond.
La profondeur sans but, triste, idiote et blême;
Quelque chose d’affreux qui s’ignore soi-même;
C’est tout: sous mon linceul voilà ce que je sais.
Et l’infini m’écrase, et j’ai beau dire: assez!
C’est horrible. Toujours cette vision morne!
Jamais le fond, jamais la fin, jamais la borne!.
Donc je te le redis, puisque tu passes là:
J’entends crier en bas, Jéhovah, Christ, Allah!
Tout n’est qu’un sombre amas d’apparitions folles;
Rien n’existe; et comment exprimer en paroles
La stupéfaction immense de la nuit?
L’invisible s’efface et l’impalpable fuit;
L’ombre dort; les, foetus se mêlent aux décombres;
Les formes, aspects vains, se perdent dans les nombres;
Rien n’a de sens; et tout, l’objet, l’espoir, l’effort,
Tout est insensé, vide et faux, même la mort;
L’infini sombre au fond du tombeau déraisonne;
La bière est un grelot où le cadavre sonne;
Si quelque chose vit, ce n’est pas encor né.

Muet, quoique béant, sourd, lugubre, étonné,
Les ténèbres en lui, hors de lui les ténèbres,
Sans qu’un rayon, éclos dans ces brumes funèbres,
Vienne jamais blanchir l’horizon infini,
Pas même criminel, et pas même puni,
Le monde erre au hasard dans la nuit éternelle,
Et, n’ayant pas d’aurore, il n’a pas de prunelle.
Le monde est à tâtons dans son propre néant.

La nuit triste emplissait le ciel comme un géant;
Et la chauve-souris rentra dans l’ombre horrible;
Et j’entendis l’oiseau, disparu, mais terrible,
Qui criait: — Dieu n’est pas! Dieu n’est pas! désespoir!

II

Et je vis au-dessus de ma tête un point noir;
Et ce point noir semblait une mouche dans l’ombre.
Et rien n’avait de borne et rien n’avait de nombre;
Et tout se confondait avec tout; l’aquilon
Et la nuit ne faisaient qu’un même tourbillon.
Quelques; formes sans nom, larves exténuées,
Ou souffles noirs, passaient dans les sourdes nuées;
Et tout le reste était immobile et voilé.
Alors, montant, montant, montant, je m’envolai
Vers ce point qui semblait reculer dans la brume;
Car c’est la loi de l’être en qui l’esprit s’allume
D’aller vers ce qui fuit et vers ce qui se tait.
Or ce que j’avais pris pour une mouche était
Un hibou, triste, froid, morne, et de sa prunelle
Il tombait moins de jour que de nuit de son aile.
Et ce hibou parlait devant lui, sans rien voir,
Comme s’il se savait écouté dans le noir.
Inquiet, palpitant, il regardait, avide,
Le fond muet de l’ombre inexprimable et vide,
Et, l’œil fixe, attentif, sans louer, sans huer, Disait:

Quelqu’un est là. J’ai senti remuer.
Puis il reprit, parlant à la nuée épaisse:
— Quelqu’un est là. Mais qui?Doute! angoisse! énigme! Est-ce
Le Juste ou l’Inégal, le Bon ou le Méchant?
Son nom est-il un cri? son nom est-il un chant?
Est-ce un père qui doit plus tard, chassant la crainte,
Resplendir, éclaireur du profond labyrinthe?
Est-ce un hermaphrodite, homme et femme, ange et nuit,
Vers qui tout monte et vole et devant qui tout fuit?
Est-ce un capricieux qui réprouve ou préfère?
Est-ce un contemplateur calme qui laisse faire?
Est-ce un hideux semeur de vrai, de faux, subtil

Et fort, puissant et traître? Il est là; mais qu'est-il?
Alors je m'approchai de cette silhouette,
Et je lui demandai: que fais-tu là, chouette?
Et le noir chathuant me dit: Je guette Dieu.

Je suis la larve affreuse aspirant au ciel bleu;
Je suis l'œil flamboyant des ténèbres; j'épie
La grande forme obscure en l'abîme accroupie.
Moi, je ne la vois pas; mais je crois qû'elle est là.

Un jour dans l'étendue une voix m'appela.
— Hibou! me dit Hermès j'étouffais dans le vide;
Mais Hermès AEgyptus, le grand songeur livide,
M'a pris, tout en rêvant son sacré Poemander,
Et c'est lui qui m'a fait respirer un peu d'air.
Je suis-esprit par l'aile et démon par la griffe.
Dans un long papyrus; informe hiéroglyphe,
Lourd manuscrit de brume humaine submergé,
Hermès avait écrit ce qu'il avait songé.
Un soir Hermès, à l'heure où l'on sent l'être vivre,
Vit passer l'Inconnu qui lisait dans un livre;
Et l'Ombre s'approcha du blanc magicien,
Prit le livre d'Hermès et lui laissa le sien.
C'est ce livre que l'Inde épèle, et qu'en sa crypte
La bête Sphynx traduit tout bas au monstre Égypte,
Car il est défendu de parler haut; on sent,
Au silence du monde effrayé; Dieu présent.
Dieu! J'ai dit Dieu. Pourquoi? Qui le voit? Qui le prouve?
C'est le vivant qu'on cherche et le cercueil qu'on trouve.
Qui donc peut adorer? qui donc peut affirmer?
Dès qu'on croit ouvrir l'être, on le sent se fermer.
Dieu! cri sans but peut-être, et nom vide et terrible!
Souhait que fait l'esprit devant l'inaccessible!
Invocation vaine aventurée au fond Du précipice aveugle où nos songes s'en vont!
Mot qui te porte, ô monde, et sur lequel tu vogues!
Nom mis en question dans les lourds dialogues

Du spectre avec le rêve, ô nuit, et des douleurs
Avec l’homme, et de l’astre avec les sombres fleurs
Qu’éveillent sur l’étang les froids rayons lunaires!
Sujet de la querelle énorme des tonnerres!
Solution-que va nuit et jour poursuivant
La polémique obscure et confuse du vent!
Dieu! conception folle ou sublime mystère!
Notion que nul crâne, au ciel ou sur la terre,
Fût-il surnaturel, ne saurait contenir!
Quel que soit le passé, quel que soit l’avenir,
Nul ne la saisira, nul ne l’a possédée;
Et, dans l’urne où l’on veut mettre une telle idée,
On sent de toutes parts des fuites d’infini.

Le ciel à force d’ombre était comme aplani.
Et l’oiseau, dont l’œil rond jette un reflet de soufre,
Me dit:

Viens, je vais tout t’apprendre. Il est un gouffre.
Comme s’il eût tout dit dans ce mot, le hibou
S’arrêta; puis reprit:
Quand? pourquoi? comment? où?
Tout se tait, tout est clos, tout est sourd; tout recule.
Tout vit dans l’insondable et fatal crépuscule.
L’être mortel médite et songe avec effroi
En attendant qu’un jour quelqu’un dise: c’est moi.
La taciturnité de l’ombre est formidable.
Il semble qu’au delà du nimbe inabordable,
Une sorte de front vaste et mystérieux
Se meuve vaguement au plus obscur des cieux;
Et Dieu, s’il est un Dieu, fit à sa ressemblance
L’universelle nuit et l’éternel silence.

Moi, j’attends. Qui va naître? Est-ce l’aube, ou le soir?

Un de mes yeux est foi; mais l’autre est désespoir.
J’examine et je plane. O brumes éternelles!

La nuit rit du regard, l’infini rit des ailes.
Tout devant moi se perd, se mêle et se confond.
Je tâche de saisir, là-bas, dans le profond,
Un moment de clarté, d’oubli, de transparence,
Ou d’entrevoir du moins le cadavre Espérance,
Afin de pouvoir dire au monde épouvanté:
C’est un tombeau! Le fond, le fait, la vérité,
Le réel, quel qu’il soit, vide ou source féconde,
Voilà ce qu’il me faut, voilà ce que je sonde.
Je suis le regardeur formidable du puits;
Je suis celui qui veut savoir pourquoi; je suis.
L’œil que le torturé dans la torture entr’ouvre;
Je suis, si par hasard dans le deuil qui le couvre,
Ce monde est le jouet de quelque infâme esprit,
La curiosité de ceux dont on se rit;
Devant l’âme de tout, hélas, peut-être absente,
Je suis l’Anxiété lugubre et grandissante;
Et je serais géant, si je n’étais hibou.
L’abîme, c’est le monde, et le monde est mon trou.
Triste, je rêve au creux de l’univers; et l’ombre
Agite sur mon front son grand branchage sombre.

Je regarde le vide et l’éther fixement,
Et l’ouragan, et l’air, et le sourd firmament,
Et les contorsions sinistres des nuées.
Mes paupières se sont au gouffre habituées.
Toute l’obscurité du ciel vertigineux
Entre en mon crâne, et tient dans mon œil lumineux.
Je sens frémir sur moi le bord vague du cercle;
L’urne Peut-être ayant l’infini pour couvercle!
J’ai pour spectacle, au fond de ces limbes hagards,
Pour but à mon esprit, pour but à mes regards,
Pour méditation, pour raison, pour démence,
Le cratère inouï de la noirceur immense;
Et je suis devenu, n’ayant ni jour ni bruit,
Une espèce de vase horrible de la nuit,
Qu’emplissent lentement la chimère, le rêve,

Les aspects ténébreux, la profondeur sans grève,
Et, sur le seuil du vide aux vagues entonnoirs,
L’âpre frémissement des escarpements noirs.
Homme, il se fait parfois dans cette léthargie,
Dans cette épaisseur triste à jamais élargie,
Comme une déchirure au vent de l’infini.
Alors, moi, le veilleur solitaire et banni,
Je tressaille; un rayon sort de la plénitude,
Et la création, difforme multitude,
M’apparaît; et j’entends des bruits, des pas, des voix
Et, dans une clarté de vision, je vois
Ce livide univers, vaste danse macabre,
Où l’astre tourbillonne, où la vague se cabre,
Où tout s’enfuit! Je vois les sépulcres, les nids,
Le hallier, la montagne, et les rudes granits,
Du vieux squelette monde informes ankyloses,
La plaine vague ouvrant ses pâles fleurs écloses,
Les flots démesurés poussant de longs abois,
Et les gestes hideux des arbres dans les bois.
Et d’en bas il m’arrive une musique, obscure,
L’hymne qu’après Hermès entendit Épicure;
Tout vibre, et tout devient instrument; le désert
Chante, et la forêt donne au farouche concert
Son branchage sonore et triste, et le navire
Son gréement, dont le vent fait une sombre lyre.
Tout se transforme et court dans le brouillard trompèur;
Les morts et les vivants qui sont une vapeur,
Se mêlent; le volcan, crête et bouche enflammée,
Vomit un long siphon de cendre et de fumée;
L’air se tord, sans qu’on sache où l’aquilon conduit
Les miasmes pervers et traîtres de la nuit;

La marée, immuable et hurlante bascule,
Balance l’océan dans l’affreux crépuscule;
Et la création n’est qu’un noir tremblement.
On ne sait quelle vie émeut lugubrement
L’homme, l’esquif, le mât, l’onde, l’écueil, le havre;

Et la lune répand sa lueur de cadavre.

Je cherche, un soupirail. Quel sens peut donc avoir
Ce monde aveugle et sourd, cet édifice noir,
Cette création ténébreuse et cloîtrée,
Sans fenêtre, sans toit, sans porte, sans entrée,
Sans issue, ô terreur! par moment des blancheurs
Passent; on aperçoit vaguement des chercheurs,
Sans savoir si ce sont réellément des êtres,
Et si tous ces sondeurs du gouffre, mages, prêtres,
Eux-mêmes ne sont pas de l'ombre à qui les vents
Donnent dans le brouillard des formes de vivants;
On voit les grands fronts blancs d'Égypte et de Chaldée;
Et, comme les forçats immenses de l'idée,
On voit passer au loin les esprits hasardeux
Traînant la pesanteur des problèmes hideux,
Savants, prophètes, djinns, démons, devins, poètes;
Et l'abîme leur dit: qu'êtes-vous, si vous êtes?

Quel est cet univers? et quel en est l'aïeul?
Ce qu'on prend pour un ciel est peut-être un linceul.
Qui peut dire où l'on vogue et qui sait où l'on erré?
Oh! l'eau terrible ayant des rumeurs de tonnerre!
Les sourds chuchotements du vent sous l'horizon!
Entre le jour et nous quelle épaisse cloison!
Ténèbres. Pourquoi tout parle-t-il à voix basse?
Tout visage qui rit a, dans l'horrible espace,
Derrière lui pour ombre une tête de mort.
Naître! mourir! On entre, entrez. — Sortez, on sort! —
Et je songe à jamais! à jamais mon œil sombre
Voit aller et venir l'onde énorme de l'ombre!
À quoi bon? et vous tous, à quoi bon? vous vivez;
Vivez-vous? et d'ailleurs, pourquoi? pensez, rêvez,
Mourez! heurtez vos fronts à la sourde clôture!
Qu'est-ce que le destin? qu'est-ce que la nature?
N'est-ce qu'un même texte en deux langues traduit?
N'est-ce qu'un rameau double ayant le même fruit?

Le lierre qui verdit à travers le décombre,
La mer par le couchant chauffée au rouge sombre,
Les nuages ayant les cimes pour récifs,
Les tourmentes volant en groupes convulsifs,
La foudre, les Etnas jetant des pierres ponces,
Les crimes s’envoyant les fléaux pour réponses,

L’antre surnaturel, l’étang plein de typhus,
Les prodiges hurlant sous les chênes touffus,
La matière, chaos, profondeur où s’étale
L’air furieux, le feu féroce, l’eau brutale;
La nuit, cette prison, ce noir cachot mouvant
Où l’on entend la sombre évasion du vent,
Tout est morne. On a peur quand l’aube qui s’éveille
Fait une plaie au bas des cieux, rouge et vermeille;
On a peur quand la bise épand son long frisson;
On a peur quand on voit, vague, à fleur d’horizon,
Montrant, dans l’étendue au crépuscule ouverte,
Son dos mystérieux d’or et de nacre verte,
Ramper le scarabée effroyable du soir.
On a peur quand minuit sur les monts vient s’asseoir.
Pourtant, dans cette masse informe et frémissante,
Il semble par moments qu’on saisisse et qu’on sente
Comme un besoin d’hymen et de paix émouvant,
Toutes ces profondeurs de nuée et de vent;
Tout cherche à se parler et tout cherche à s’entendre;
La terre, à l’océan jetant un regard tendre,
Attire à son flanc vert ce sombre apprivoisé
Mais l’eau quitte e bord après l’avoir baisé,
Et retombe, et s’enfonce, et redevient, tourmente;
Il n’est rien qui n’hésite et qui ne se démente;
Le bien prête son voile au mal qui vient s’offrir;
Hélas! l’autre côté de savoir, C’est souffrir;
Aube et soir, vie et deuil ont les mêmes racines;
Le sort fait la recherche et l`angoisse voisines;
D’où jaillit le regard on voit sortir le pleur;
Et, si l’œil dit Lumière, il dit aussi Douleur.

Tout est morne. Il n est pas d’objet qui ne paraisse
Faire dans l’infini des signes de détresse
Et pendant que, lugubre et vague, autour de, lui,
Dans la blême fumée et dans le vaste ennui,
Le tourbillon des faits et des choses s’engouffre,
Ce spectre de la vie appelé l’homme souffre,
Ces deux tragiques voix, Nature, Humanité,
Se font écho, chacune en son extrémité
La tristesse de l’un sur-l’autre se replie;
La pâle angoisse humaine a-la mélancolie
Du plaintif univers pour explication;
Et les gémissements de là création
Sont pleins de la misère insondable de l’homme.

Pourtant vous n’êtes rien que des larves en somme!
Vous marchez l’un sur l’autre; obscurs, troubles, dormants,
Fuyants, et tous vos pas sont des effacements.
Il ne reste de vous, s’il reste quelque chose,
Que l’embryon, peut-être effet, peut-être cause,
Que les rudiments sourds, muets, primordiaux.
L’être éternel est fait d’atomes idiots.

Lui-même est-il? voilà le sinistre problème.
O semeur, montre-nous du moins la main qui sème!

Hermès, mais qui peut voir ce qu’a vu l’œil d’Hermès?
M’a dit qu’il avait vu, du haut des grands sommets,
Au delà du réel, au delà du possible,
Une clarté, reflet du visage invisible;
Elle éclairait la brume où nous nus abîmons;
Tout le bloc frissonnant des êtres; arbres, monts,
Ailes, regards, rameaux, était penché sur elle;
Et, jetant des éclairs soudains, surnaturelle,
Cette lueur sans fond, qu’on n’osait approcher,
Epouvantait parfois le chêne et le rocher
Même le plus terrible et le plus intrépide.
Comme c’est-immobile, et comme c’est rapide!

Comme cela s’échappe à de certains moments!
Comme l’abîme fait d’étranges mouvements!
Oh! j’ai beau vouloir fuir, et fuir, et fuir encore!
La contemplation du gouffre me dévore.
Oui, je te l’ai dit, oui, sur la sombre hauteur,
Je vois le monde!

Aimants, fluides, pesanteur,
Axes, pôles, chaleur, gaz, rayons, feu sublime,
Toutes les forces sont les chevaux de l’abîme;
Chevaux prodigieux dont le pied toujours fuit,
Et qui tirent le monde à travers l’âpre nuit;
Et jamais de sommeil à leur fauve prunelle,
Et jamais d’écurie à leur course éternelle!
Ils vont, ils vont, ils vont, fatals alérions,
Franchissant les zéniths et les septentrions;
Traînant-tous les soleils dans toutes, les ténèbres,
L’homme sent la terreur lui glacer les vertèbres
Quand d’en bas il entend leur pas mystérieux.
Il dit.: — Comme l’orage est profond dans les cieux!
Comme les vents d’ouest soufflent là-bas au large!
Comme les bâtiments doivent jeter leur charge,
Et comme-l’océan doit être affreux a voir!
Comme il pleut cette nuit! comme il tonne ce soir!
O vivants, fils du temps, de l’espace-et du nombre,
Ce sont les noirs chevaux du chariot de l’ombre.

Écoutez-les passer. L’ouragan tortueux,
La foudre, tout ce bruit difforme et monstrueux
Des souffles dans les monts, des vagues sur la plage,
Sont les hennissements du farouche attelage.

Cette création est toujours en travail;
L’astre refait son or, et l’aube son émail,
La nuit détruit le jour, l’onde détruit la digue,
Incessamment, sans fin, sans repos, sans fatigue.
Sans cesse les noirceurs, les germes, les clartés,

Les croisements d’éclairs dans les immensités,
Les effluves, les feux, les métaux, les mercures,
Les déluges profonds, ablutions obscures,
Font des enfantements dans la destruction;
La matière est pensée et l’idée action;
On naît, on se féconde, on vit, on meurt, sans trêve;
Et parfois j’aperçois, même au delà du rêve,
Dans des fonds ou mes yeux n’étaient jamais venus,
Des levers effrayants de mondes inconnus.

Oh! pourquoi ces chaos, si tout vient d’un génie?
Oh! si c’est le néant, pourquoi cette harmonie?
Est-il, Lui? L’univers m’apparaît tour à tour
Convulsion, puis ordre; obscurité, puis jour.
S’Il est, pourquoi sent-on le froid de la couleuvre?
S’Il est, d’où vient qu’un ver ronge toute son œuvre,
La mère dans l’enfant, la fleur dans son pistil?
Et pourquoi souffre-t-on? Et pourquoi permet-il
La Douleur, cette immense et sombre calomnie?
Qu’est-ce que fait le mal dans l’univers? il nie.
Il dit: — vous rêvez Dieu quand c’est moi qui vous suis.
La preuve qu’il n’est pas, vivants, c’est que je suis.

Est-ce mauvais ou bon? est-ce splendide ou triste?
Tout cela suffit-il pour prouver qu’Il existe?
Et qu’il est quelque part un Auteur, un Voyant,
Un être épouvantable ou secourable, ayant
La distance du mal au bien pour envergure?
Esprit fait monde avec l’abîme pour figure!
Grand inconnu tenant la pensée en arrêt!
Mais qui nous dit que l’ombre est ce qu’elle paraît?
Est-elle unité sombre? est-elle foule horrible?
Ne voit-on de clarté que par les trous d’un crible?
Cela roule; sur qui? Cela tourne; sur quoi?
D’où vient-on? où va-t-on? Je ne sais rien. Et toi?.

Et l’oiseau regarda de ses deux Yeux mon âme;

Et je vis de la nuit tout au fond de leur flamme.
Et, comme je restais pensif, il poursuivit:
Ombre sur ce qui meurt! ombre sur ce qui vit!

J’ai lu ceci, qu’Hermès écrivit sur sa table:
«Pyrrhon d’Élée était un mage redoutable.
«L’abîme en le voyant se mettait à hennir.
«Il vint un jour au ciel; Dieu le laissa venir.;
«Il vit la vérité, Dieu la lui laissa prendre.
«Comme il redescendait — car il faut redescendre;
«L’Idéal met dehors les sages enivrés; —
«Comme il redescendait de degrés en degrés,
«De parvis en parvis, de pilastre en, pilastre,
«De la terre aperçu, tenant dans sa main l’astre,
«Soudain, sombre, il tourna vers les grands cieux brûlants
«Son poing terrible et plein de rayons aveuglants,
«Et laissant de ses doigts jaillir l’astre, le sage
«Dit: je te lâche, ô Dieu, ton étoile au visage!
«Et la clarté plongea jusqu’au fond de la nuit;
«On vit un instant Dieu, puis tout s’évanouit.”

Hermès contait encore avoir vu dans un songe.
Un esprit qui lui dit: — Homme, un doute me ronge.
Je ne me souviens point d’avoir été créé.
J’étais, je flottais, seul, pensif, pas effrayé;
Forme au vent agrandie, au vent diminuée,
J’étais dans la nuée et j’étais la nuée;
Je nageais dans le rêve et dans la profondeur.
Tout a coup l’univers naquit; cette rondeur
Entra dans l’horizon qui devint formidable;
Je ne supposais pas le vide fécondable;
J’eus un moment d’effroi; depuis, avec stupeur,
J’examine ce monde inquiétant; j’ai peur
D’être dans l’ombre avec quelqu’un de redoutable.
Hermès s’en est allé les deux mains étendues.
Il cherchait, il sondait les profondeurs perdues;
Et comme lui je cherche; et dans ce que je fais

J’étouffe, comme avant de chercher, j’étouffais.
Car la nuit me punit de vouloir la connaître.
C’est une obscénité de lever, fût-on prêtre,
Le grand voile pudique et sacré de l’horreur.
D’ailleurs, que trouve-t-on? faux sens, fumée, erreur.
L’illusion, riant de son rire sinistre,
Sort de l’ombre, écrit: FIN, et ferme le registre.

On se perd à descendre, on s’égare à monter.
Chercher, c’est offenser; tenter, c’est attenter;
Savoir, c’est ignorer. Isis au bandeau triple
À la surdité morne et froide pour disciple.
Ne pas vouloir est bien, ne pas pouvoir est mieux.
Porte envie à l’aveugle, et n’ouvre pas les yeux.
Tais-toi! tais-toi! S’il est quelques bouches frivoles
Qui parlent, ô vivant, sache que les paroles
Troublent l’énormité menaçante des cieux.
Le muet est plus saint que le silencieux.

Oui, se murer l’oreille avec, le mur silence;
Ne jeter aucun poids dans aucune balance;
Ne pas toucher aux plis lugubres du rideau;

Oui, garder le bâillon, oui, garder le bandeau;
Végéter sans vouloir, sans tenter, sans atteindre;
Laisser les yeux se clore et les soleils s’éteindre;
Telle est la loi.

Pourtant je veux; mais je ne puis.
— Cherche, m’a dit Hermès. Je n’ai rien vu depuis.

Nuée en bas, nuée en haut, nuée au centre;
Nuit et nuit; rien devant, rien derrière; rien entre.
Par moments, des essaims d’atomes vains et fous
Qui flottent; ce-qu’on voit de plus réel, c’est vous,
Mort, tombe, obscurité des blêmes sépultures,
Cimetières, de Dieu ténébreuses cultures.

Mais pourquoi donc ce mot me revient-il toujours?
Est-ce qu’il est l’écho de ces grands porches sourds?
Oh! n’est-il pas plutôt le vide où tout s’achève;
L’éclat de rire vague et sinistre du rêve?
Cependant il faut bien un axe à ce qu’on voit;
Et, quelque chose étant; il faut que quelqu’un soit.
Haine ou sagesse, joie ou deuil, paix ou colère,
Il faut la clef de voûte et la pierre, angulaire;
Il faut le point d’appui, le pivot, le milieu.
À la roue univers il faut bien un essieu.
Croyons! croyons! Sans voir la source, on peut conclure
De l’œuvre à l’ouvrier, et de la chevelure
À la tête, et du ercle au centre d’où: tout part,
Et du parfum partout à la fleur quelque part.
Homme, l’Etre doit être. Homme, il n’est pas possible
Que la flèche esprit vole et n’ait pas une cible.
Il ne se peut, si vain et si croulant que soit

Ce monde où l’on voit fuir tout ce qu’on aperçoit;
Il ne se peut, ô tombe! ô nuit! que la nature
Ne soit qu’une inutile et creuse couverture,
Que le fond soit de l’ombre aveugle, que le bout
Soit le vide, et que Rien ait pour écorce Tout.
Il ne se peut qu’avec l’amas crépusculaire
De ses grands bas-reliefs qu’un jour lugubre éclaire,
Avec son bloc de nuit, de brume et de clarté,
La création soit, devant l’immensité,
Un piédestal ayant le néant pour statue.
Croyons. En disant non, l’esprit se prostitue.
L’Être a beau se cacher, tout nous dit: le voilà!
Croyons.

Je me répète, ô songeur, tout cela;
Mais c’est au-doute affreux que toujours je retombe;
Tant la fleur et la foudre, et l’étoile et la trombe,
Et l’homme et le sépulcre, et la terre et le ciel,
Font trembler et fléchir le rayon visuel!

Tant ce qu on aperçoit trouble ce qu’on suppose!
Tant l’effet noir voit peu directement la cause!
Tant, même aux meilleurs yeux, la brume et le rayon,
Les éléments toujours en-contradiction,
Les souffles déchaînés et les ailes captives,
Ouvrent sur l’inconnu de louches perspectives!
Tant il est malaisé de crier: Vérité!
Et tant, la certitude a d’obliquité!

Je regarde et je cherche et j’attends et je songe,
Et le silence froid devant moi se prolonge.
Par moments, dans l’espace où son fantôme a l’air
D’errer avec le vent, la nuée et l’éclair,
Je vois passer Hermès, mon prodigieux maître.
Abordant ou fuyant l’inconnu qu’il pénètre,
Il rêve, il pense, il tend ses deux bras pour prier;
J’entends alors sa voix formidable crier:
— Oh! l’être! l’être! l’être effrayant! il m’accable
Sous son nom inouï, sombre, incommunicable!
Je ne le dirai pas! Sois tranquille, infini!
Puis il passe terrible, après m’avoir béni.

Et moi je reste là, tressaillant, dans la nue.
Et l’oscillation des gouffres continue.

Oh! toujours revenir au point d’où l’on partit!
Et derrière le grand toujours voir le petit P.
J’ai beau creuser la vie et creuser la nature;
J’ai des lueurs de-tout dans ma science obscure,

Mais j’y respire un air de sépulcre; et j’ai froid.
Oh! que cet univers, s’il est vide, est étroit!
Oh! toujours se heurter aux mêmes apparences!
Oh! toujours se briser aux mêmes ignorances!
S’il existe, d’où vient qu’il se cache et qu’il fuit?
Est-il dans l’univers comme un grain dans le fruit,
Comme le sel dans l’eau, comme le vin dans l’outre?

Oh! percer la matière horrible d’outre en outre!
Faire, à travers le bien, le mal; l’onde et le feu,
L’homme, l’astre et la bête; une trouée a Dieu!
Qui le pourra? personne. Oh! tout n’est qu’ironie.
Sage celui qui doute et fort celui qui nie!

Tu cherches aussi l’Être, ô passant! je te plains.
Les firmaments d’abîme et d’abîme sont pleins.
La route est longue, va! l’éternel, parallèle
À l’infini, t’aura bien vite brisé l’aile.
Cours, vole, essaie, et cherche, et plane, et sois puni!
Moi, l’œil fixe suffit tant qu’il n’est pas terni,
Je reste où je suis. Va, monte! Et prends garde en route
Aux visions qui font qu’on s’égare et qu’on doute.
Tu trouveras peut-être à quelque seuil d’enfers
Des fantômes de feu, de pâles Lucifers,
Punis pour s’être mis au front un peu d’aurore,
Larrons de feu céleste ou d’infernal phosphore,
Noirs dénicheurs de nids d’astres dans les rameaux
D’où tombent les terreurs, les songes et les maux.
Passe, et va devant toi, sois méfiant, et rôde,
Sans croire à la clarté, dans la nuit, cette fraude;
Ne suis pas ce qu’on voit, ne suis pas ce qui luit.
À force de vouloir aveugler tout, la nuit
Finit par faire éclore une lueur athée;
Et les flamboiements sont de l’ombre révoltée.
J’en suis moi-même.

Alors le hibou frémissant
Se tourna vers la nuit, cherchant l’énorme absent.
On eût dit que sa tête et ses deux ailes grises
Dans un pesant filet invisible étaient prises;
Il tremblait, puis restait rêveur comme un vieillard.

Tout à coup il cria dans l’immense brouillard:

Profondeurs! Profondeurs! Profondeurs formidables!

Embryons éternels, atomes imperdables,
D’où sortez-vous? Substance, air, flamme, moule humain,
Terre! avez-vous été pétris par une main?
O parturition ténébreuse de l’Être!
Je veux trouver, je, veux savoir, je veux connaître!

Le vide est impossible, et tout est plein; tout vit.
Qui le sait? Le ciel croule aussitôt qu’on gravit.
Si l’univers nous dit de douter; ou nous somme
De croire, je l’ignore: Oh! que dit l’aube à l’homme?
Que dit le froid mistral et le semoun ardent?
Vision! la mer triste entrechoque en grondant,
Sous les nuages lourds que les souffles assemblent,
Ses monstrueux airains en fusion, qui tremblent!
Les flots font un fracas de boucliers affreux
Se heurtant et l’éclair sépulcral est sur eux!
Quelle est la foi, le dogme et la philosphie
Que toute cette horreur sombre nous signifie?
L’étendue, où, vaincu; mon vol s’est arrêté,
Est si lugubrement faite d’obscurité,
L’obstacle est si fatal, l’ombre est si dérisoire,
Que j’arrive à ne plus comprendre, à ne rien croire;
Et je dis à la nuit: pas un être n’est sûr
Même d’un peu de Dieu, nuit, dans un peu d’azur!
Oh! la création est-elle volontaire?
Un maître y dit-il moi? Ciel! Ciel! de quel cratère
Du vieux volcan chaos; sous l’énigme englouti,
Ce monde, éruption sinistre, est-il sorti?
Quelqu’un a-t-il soufflé sur ses torrents funèbres:
Pour en faire la pierre énorme des ténèbres?
Quelqu’un l’a-t-il vu lave avant qu’il fût granit?,
Qui donc, sur le versant monstrueux du zénith,
Figea cette coulée effrayante d’étoiles?
Est-il? S’il est, qu’il parle! Oh! dis-moi qui tu voiles;
Ciel morne! L’être est-il parce que la vue est?
Je sens sous l’infini ce fantôme muet:
Je le sens; mais est-il? Et j’ai beau le poursuivre;

L’ombre incommensurable et fuyante m’enivre.
Toute ma découverte est, cendre et chute. O deuil!
Le strabisme effrayant du doute est dans mon œil!
Le fil de l’infini devant moi se dévide.
Que la création soit une chose vide,
Cela ne se peut pas. Où serait la raison?

Mais d’un autre côté, dans le vaste horizon
Tout souffre; et tout répond aux questions: je pleure!
L’esprit comme la chair, le siècle comme l’heure,
Le colosse et l’atome infinitésimal.
O nuit! pourquoi le vide? Oui, mais pourquoi le mal?
Oh! si je trouvais Dieu! Si je pouvais, à force
D’user ma griffe obscure à saisir cette écorce,
Déchirer l’ombre! voir ce front, et le voir nu!
Ôter enfin la nuit du visage inconnu!
Mais rien! Le ciel est faux, l’astre ment, l’aube est traître!
Je n’ai qu’un seul effort, je me cramponne à l’être;

Je me cramponne à Dieu dans l’ombre sans parois;
Si Dieu n’existait pas! Oh! par moments je crois
Voir pleurer la paupière horrible de l’abîme.
Si Dieu n’existait pas? si rien n’avait de cime?
Si les gouffres n’avaient qu’une ombre au milieu d’eux?
Oh! serais-je tout seul dans l’infini hideux?
O vous, les quatre vents soufflant dans le prodige,
Est-il? est-il? est-il? est-il? Moi-même suis-je?
Ne verrai-je jamais blanchir les bleus sommets?
Et devons-nous rester face à face à jamais,
Sous l’énigme, idiote et monstrueuse voûte,
Lui qui s’appelle Nuit, moi qui m’appelle Doute!
Et rien ne répondit; et l’oiseau curieux
Et funèbre, crispant son ongle furieux,
Frémit; et, se ruant sur l’espèce de face
Qui toujours dans la brume apparaît et s’efface,
Poursuivant l’éternel évanouissement,
Tâchant de retenir le vide, le moment,

L’éclair, le phénomène informe, le problème,
Et tout ce rien fuyant qu’il ne voyait pas même,
Cherchant un pli, cherchant un nœud, faisant effort
Pour prendre l’impalpable et l’obscur par le bord,
Et pour saisir, dans l’ombre où tout essor avorte,
La nuit par le trou noir de quelque étoile morte,
Las, rauque, haletant dans l’insondable exil:
— Mais, spectre, arrache donc ce masque! cria-t-il.
Et je ne le vis plus; l’ombre avait saisi l’être
Qui voulait saisir l’ombre; et tout doit disparaître,
Et tout doit s’effacer, et tout, Rhodope, Ossa,
Athos, tout doit passer, et cet oiseau passa.

Seulement, comme un souffle a peine saisissable,
Comme un bruit de fourmi roulant un grain de sable,
Dans le gouffre où venait d’entrer l’oiseau d’Hermès,
J’entendis murmurer tout bas ce mot: jamais!
Toute l’ombre exhalait un brouillard léthifère

Et je demeurai là, ne sachant plus que faire
De mes ailes, n’osant ni chercher, ni vouloir.

III

Et je vis au-dessus de ma tête un point noir;
Et ce point noir semblait une mouche dans l’ombre.
Dans le profond nadir que la ruine encombre,

Où sans cesse, à jamais, sinistre et se taisant,
Quelque chose de sombre et d’inconnu descend,
Les brouillards indistincts, et gris, fumée énorme,
S’enfonçaient et perdaient lugubrement leur forme,
Pareils à des: chaos l’un sur l’autre écroulés.

Montant toujours, laissant sous mes talons ailés
L’abîme d’en bas, plein de l’ombre inférieure,
Je volai, dans la brume et dans le vent qui pleure,
Vers l’abîme d’en haut, obscur comme un tombeau;
J’approchai de la mouche, et c’était un corbeau.
Et ce corbeau disait:,
Ils sont deux! Zoroastre.
L’un est l’esprit de vie, au vol d’aigle, aux yeux d’astre,
Qui rayonne, crée, aime, illumine, construit;
Et l’autre est l’araignée énorme de la nuit.
Ils sont-deux; l’un est l’hymne et l’autre est la huée.
Ils sont deux; le linceul et l’être, la nuée
Et le ciel, la paupière et l’œil, l’ombre-et le jour,
La haine affreuse, noire, implacable, et l’amour.
Ils sont deux combattants. Le combat, c’est le monde.
L’un, qui mêle à l’azur sa chevelure blonde,
Est l’ange; il est celui qui, dans le gouffre obscur,
Apporte la clarté, le lys, le-bonheur pur;
Du monstre aux pieds hideux il traverse les voiles;
Sur sa robe frissonne un tremblement d’étoiles;
Il est beau! Semant l’être et le germe aux limons,
Allumant des blancheurs sur la cime des monts,
Et pénétrant d’un feu mystérieux les choses,
Il vient, et l’on voit l’aube à travers ses doigts roses;

Et tout rit; l’herbe est verte et les hommes sont doux.
L’autre surgit a, l’heure où pleurent à genoux.
Les mères et-les sœurs, Rachel, Hécube, Électre;
Le soir monstrueux fait apparaître le spectre;
Il sort du vaste ennui de l’ombre qui descend;
Il arrête la sève et fait couler le sang;
Le jardin sous ses pieds se change en ossuaire;
De l’horreur infinie il traîne le suaire;
Il sort pour faire faire aux ténèbres le mal;
Morne, en l’être charnel comme en l’être aromal,
Il pénètre; et pendant qu’à l’autre bout du monde,
Abattant les rameaux du crime qu’il émonde,
L’éblouissant Ormus met sur son front vermeil.
Cette tiare d’or qu’on-nomme le soleil,

Lui, sur l’horizon noir, sinistre, à la nuit brune,
Se dresse avec le masque horrible de la lune,
Et, jetant à tout astre un regard de côté,
Rôde, voleur de l’ombre et de l’immensité.
Grâce à lui, l’incendie éclos d’une étincelle,
Le jaguar qui dévore à jamais la gazelle,
La peste, le poison, l’épine, la noirceur,
L’âpre ciguë à qui le serpent dit: ma sœur,
Le feu qui ronge tout, l’eau sur qui tout chavire,
L’avalanche, le roc qui brise le navire,
Le vent qui brise l’arbre, étalent sous le ciel
La vaste impunité du forfait éternel.
Il se penche effrayant sur les dormeurs qui rêvent;
C’est vers lui qu’à travers l’obscurité s’élèvent
L’hymne d’amour du monstre et le feu du bûcher,
Les langues des serpents cherchant à le lécher,
Tous les dos caressants des bêtes qu’il anime,
Et les miaulements énormes de l’abîme.
Il pousse tous les cris de guerre des humains;
Dans leurs combats hideux c’est lui qui bat des mains,
Et qui, lâchant la mort sur les têtes frappées,
Attache cette foudre à l’éclair des épées.

Il marche environné de la meute des maux;
Il heurte aux rochers l’onde et l’homme aux animaux.
Chaque nuit il est près de triompher; il noie
Les cieux; il tend la main, il va saisir la proie,
Le monde; l’océan frémit, le gouffre bout,
Ses dents claquent de joie, il grince, et tout à coup,
À l’heure où les parsis, les mages et les guèbres
Entendent ce bandit rire dans les ténèbres,
Voilà que de l’abîme un rayon blanc jaillit,
Et que, sur le malade expirant dans son lit,
Sur les mères tordant leurs mains désespérées,
Sur le râle éperdu des lugubres marées,
Sur le juste au tombeau, sur l’esclave au carcan,
Sur l’écueil, sur le bois profond, sur le volcan,
Sur tout cet univers que l’ombre veut proscrire,
L’aurore épanouit son immense soutire!
Sous l’univers, hagard, lié d’un triple nœud,
Un être, qui ne sait s’il existe, se meut;
C’est l’idiot; le sombre enchaîné de la cave,
Chaos, s’il est permis de nommer cet esclave.
Stupide, il rêve là, connu des spectres seuls,
Caché sous tous les plis que font tous les linceuls,

Ébauche par en haut et par en bas décombre,
Mendiant sourdement un peu de jour dans l’ombre,
Sanglottant au hasard, formidable pleûreur,
Il tord ses deux moignons, ignorance et terreur;
Et la pluie éternelle et lugubre l’inonde.
Il rampe dans un trou; fondrière du monde;
Sans yeux, sans pieds, sans voix, mordant et dévoré,
Se heurtant aux parois des gouffres, effaré
D’éclairs pleuvant sur comme sur une cible,
Espèce d’affreux tronc ayant pour gaine horrible
La coque de l’œuf:noir d’où l’univers sortit
Son crâne sous le poids du néant s’aplatit;
Et l’on voit vaguement tâtonner dans l’informe,
Au fond de l’infini, ce cul-de-jatte énorme.

Il n’entend même pas le bruit que font en haut
Les deux principes dieux, ébranlant son cachot,
Et leurs trépignements sur sa morne demeure.
Le méchant veut qu’il vive et le bon veut qu’il meure.

Ainsi luttent, hélas!’ces deux égaux puissants;
L’un, roi de l’esprit; l’autre, empoisonneur des sens;
Les choses à leur souffle expirent ou végetent.
Rien n’est au-dessus d’eux. Ils sont seuls. Ils se jettent
L’hiver et le printemps, l’éclair et le rayon;
Ils sont l’effrayant duel de la création.
Tout est leur guerre; sont dans la flamme, dans l’onde,
Dans la terre où les monts fument, dans l’air qui gronde;
Leurs chocs font tressaillir les firmaments, et font
Trembler les soleils d’or à ce sombre plafond;
Et le nid, dans la mousse, est leur champ de bataille.
L’abîme est entr’ouvert quand Arimane bâille;
Alors l’essaim hagard des hydres se répand.
Les deux colosses, l’un planant, l’autre rampant,
S’étreignent. Où l’on voit deux cœurs qui se haïssent,
Deux dragons qui la nuit l’un vers l’autre se glissent,
Deux forces s’attaquant à grand bruit, deux guerriers
Combattant, deux poignards dont les coups meurtriers
Se croisent, et parfois deux bouches qui se baisent,
Ce sont eux. Noirs assauts qu’aucuns repos n’apaisent!
Jamais de trêve. Ils sont; et rien n’existe qu’eux.
Les éléments sont-pleins de leurs cris belliqueux.
Et partout où l’on pleure et partout où l’on chante,
Dans l’homme, dans le vent, dans la ronce méchante,
Dans la bête des bois et dans les cieux émus,
L’ombre hurle Arimane et le jour dit Ormus!

Et dans les profondeurs cette lutte s’étale;
Et l’oscillation est heureuse ou fatale,
Et le large roulis nous bere, ou son reflux
N’emporte que clameurs et sanglots superflus,
Et le boa s’enroule au tronc du sycomore,

Jérusalem voit naître à son côté Gomorrhe,
Thèbes lègue un linceul de sables à Memphis,
Nemrod luit, Marc-Aurèle a Commode pour fils,
Ou l’océan sourit, et l’abîme et l’étoile
S’entendent pour sauver une petite voile,
Le bois chante; les nids palpitent, les oiseaux
Réjouissent les fleurs en buvant aux ruisseaux,
La mère, en qui l’orgueil à l’extase se mêle,
Emplit d’elle l’enfant qui presse sa mamelle,
Et l’homme semble un dieu de sagesse vêtu,
Et tout grandit en grâce, en puissance, en vertu,
Ou dans le flot du mal tout naufrage et tout sombre,
Selon que le hasard, roi de la lutte sombre,
Précipite Arimane ou voile Ormus terni,
Et fait pencher, au fond du livide infini,
L’un ou l’autre plateau de la balance énorme.
Arimane aux yeux d’ombre attend qu’Ormus s’endorme;
Ce jour-là, le chaos et le mal le verront
Saisir dans ses bras noirs le ciel au vaste front,
Et, fouillant tout orbite et perçant tous les voiles,
De ce crâne éternel arracher les étoiles;
Ormus, tout en dormant, frémira de terreur;
L’immensité, pareille au bœuf qu’un laboureur
A laissé dans un champ ténébreux, et qui beugle,
O nuit, s’éveillera le lendemain aveugle,
Et, dans l’espace affreux sous la brume enfoui,
L’astre éteint cherchera le monde évanoui!

Et le corbeau rentra dans l’ombre formidable.

L’infini sous mes pieds reflétait l’insondable;
Des lueurs y flottaient comme dans un miroir.

IV

Et je vis au-dessus de ma tête un point noir,
Et ce point noir semblait une mouche dans l’ombre.

J’y volai. L’eau des mers, sous son flot le plus sombre,
À des monstres obscurs qui vont, seuls ou nombreux,
Et l’éther cache aussi des êtres ténébreux;

Sous les ombres on vit comme on vit sous les ondes.
Je franchis ces hauteurs lugubres et profondes,
Et cette mouche tait un vautour.

Il planait
Dans le: vide, que nul ne sonde et ne connaît, Criant
— Hé! le géant! Hé! l’homme de l’abîme!
Est-ce que tu n’es pas fatigué? de ma cime,
J’entends le craquement éternel de tes os.
Ta livide sueur pleut dans l’affreux chaos.
Es-tu bien las? Réponds. Sur ton immense épaule
Pèse l’énormité monstrueuse du pôle;
Le globe, avec les cieux, et les monts chevelus,
Avec les mers roulant les flux et les reflux,
Avec ses dieux ayant des gouffres pour ancêtres,
Avec sa fourmilière épouvantable d’êtres,
Avec ses millions-de chocs, de bruits; de pas,
Ses vivants et ses morts... c’est très lourd, n’est-ce pas?
Nulle voix ne sortit du vide pour répondre;
Et tout continua d’être horrible, et de fondre
La cécité muette avec l’obscurité.
Et le vautour me vit, et, s’étant arrêté,
Grave et hideux, me dit:
Passant, sache les choses.
Il est des dieux. Ils sont les dieux, mais non les causes.
Il poursuivit:

Je suis le grand vautour béant.
J’étais sur la montagne et j’avais un géant.
Pas l’être à qui je viens de parler, mais un autre.
Vous, hommes, votre loi, c’est d’apprendre; la nôtre,
À nous, les becs d’acier, craints même des tombeaux,
C’est d’arracher la vie et la chair par lambeaux
Il faut au dur vautour la proie ensanglantée.
La mienne me plaisait; je mangeais Prométhée;
Quand Orphée apparut, et-me dit: Viens. J’allai,
Rauque et tout frémissant, vers cet homme étoilé.
Il chantait, et son hymne était une prière,
Et, lui, marchait devant, et je volais derrière;
Et tout ce que je sais, ténèbres, c’est l’esprit,

C’est Orphée au front calme et doux, qui me l’apprit;
Stupide, j’ai suivi cette voix enchantée;
Et c’est ainsi que fut délivré Prométhée.

Écoute. En écoutant l’esprit se forme et naît.
Prométhée, à travers les, tourments, m’enseignait;
Orphée a complété l’œuvre de Prométhée;
Sache à ton tour.

Le monde est de l’ombre agitée;
L’ombre en heurtant ses flots produit le chaos noir,
D’où sort la masse informe et brute, laissant voir
Dans ses plis ces noirceurs, ces larves, ces chimères
Que la nuit sombre appelle à voix basse les Mères;
Et le père de tout, c’est le vague étoilé.

L’univers a sur lui, globe d’ombre mêlé,
Trois déesses qui sont trois aveugles terribles.
Maîtresses du réseau des forces invisibles,
Elles ouvrent sans bruit leurs bras insidieux,
Et prennent les titans, les hommes et les dieux;
L’œil partout voit surgir une sombre inconnue;

Sur la terre Vénus, la grande nymphe nue,
En bas, dans l’âpre lieu des mânes redouté,
Le spectre Hécate, en haut l’ombre Fatalité;
Vénus étreint la vie et rien ne lui résiste,
Hécate tient l’enfer, et, comme un geôlier triste,
L’ombre Destin s’adosse au grand ciel constellé.
On voit sur l’azur noir ce fantôme voilé.
Ainsi le monde, enfer, terre et cieux, plein de haines,
Est triple pour souffrir et frémit sous trois chaînes.
Tout par une noirceur vers un gouffre est conduit.
Hécate, c’est la nuit, le Destin, c’est la nuit,
Et Vénus, c’est la nuit; Vénus, fauve et fatale,
. A deux filles, la mort et la volupté pâle;
Et Mort et Volupté sont deux ombres qui font
Chacune sous la vie un abîme sans fond.

Ô déités, tenant, les noires et la blonde,
Les entrailles, le cœur et le cerveau du monde,
Et toute la nature attachée à trois fils!
Les astres sont leurs yeux, les nuits sont leurs profils.
Rien ne peut les fléchir; c’est en vain qu’on réclame;
Le sort est tigre, Hécate est sphynx, Vénus est femme.

Une cariatide immense porte tout
Tellus en deuil, Neptune amer, Pluton qui bout,
Arbres, moissons, déserts, flots confus, rocs inertes,

Fleuves laissant traîner leurs longues barbes vertes,
Hommes et champs d’où sort un bruit sourd, tournoiements
Des nuages, de jour ou d’orage écumants,
Et Pan, qui, dérangeant les branchages des ormes,
Apparaît vaguement au fond des bois énormes.

Tout est un groupe obscur d’aspects fallacieux;
Les astres font un bruit de lyres dans les cieux;
Le porche sidéral, antre du sort, gouverne
Ce monde triple, ciel, terre en fleurs, rouge Averne.

Une grâce lugubre est mêlée à l’effroi.
Partout quelque chaos, dont quelque monstre est roi,
Obéit, dans l’écume ou la flamme ou l’épine,
Aux yeux d’une Amphitrite ou d’une Proserpine
Ou de quelque Cybèle au front blond et serein.
Partout se croisent l’eau, le feu, l’autan sans frein,
Les satyres dansants, les nymphes chasseresses,
Et dans le sombre azur des essors de déesses.
Et, tour à tour, et l’un après l’autre, au plus noir
De l’antre, que blanchit l’aube et qu’ombre le soir,
On voit passer, forgeant la lumière ou la brume
Sur l’Heure, étincelante et ténébreuse enclume,
Le Jour, la Nuit, géants, cyclopes à l’œil rond,
Ayant, l’un le soleil, l’autre la lune, au front.

La Matière est au centre, au fond des sombres voûtes,
Hydre, divinité, la plus noire de toutes!
Tout cherche tout, sans but; sans trêve, sans repos.
Ces femmes qu’un dieu pousse et dont les blanches peaux
En touchant l’arbre ému, font frémir les écorces,
Ces démons composés d’ivresses et de forces,
Les Ménades aux seins de Sirène, aux yeux fous,
Passent levant leur robe au-dessus des genoux,
Mêlant les voix, le luth, la timbale et le cistre.
O monde ténébreux, éblouissant, sinistre!
La fange se soulève et veut lécher les cieux.
Les cieux n’abhorrent pas cet hymen monstrueux.
Omphale aux blonds cheveux étreint le vaste Hercule.
Tout frémit. Dans le vague et trouble crépuscule
Les temples entrevus dressent leurs noirs piliers;
Les flamboiements des yeux errent dans les halliers:
Le pâtre attend Phoebé; l’ombre qui se déchire
Laisse voir le dragon, l’elfe, l’hécatonchyre,
Tâchant de s’enlacer, de s’unir, de sentir;
La blanche vision des nymphes fait sortir
Sylvain des bois, Triton des eaux, Vulcain des forges;

Pan contemple effaré la nudité des gorges;
L’arbre est un faune ardent qu’on ne peut assoupir,
Et les antres sont pleins d’un immense soupir,
Dans l’orageux banquet des thyrses et des lyres,
Et de toutes les soifs buvant tous les délires,
Bacchus, environné de tigres, chante et rit;
Et, dégorgeant au fond des cerveaux qu’il flétrit,
Sa fumée âcre où vont et viennent des fantômes,
Spectres bleus de l’éther, larves des noirs royaumes,
Les cris, les coups, la rage et le baiser lascif,
Le vin cynique emplit les coupes d’or massif.
On fait un nid de l’ombre, un lit de la matière.
Se ruant les seins nus sur la nature entière,
Étonnés, hérissés, debout, couchés, assis,
Les mages de Cybèle et les mages d’Isis,
L’éphèbe au front charmant, les vierges, les prêtresses;
Les bacchantes livrant aux vents leurs folles tresses,
Naïades, chèvre-pieds, kabyres, aegipans,
Et les hommes chevaux et les femmes serpents,
Les prêtres qu’en passant, bouc rêveur, tu salues,
Les troglodytes roux aux poitrines velues,
Polyphème, Astarté, Cerbère, Hylas, Atys,
Toutes les passions et tous les, appétits,
S’accouplent, Évohé! rugissent, balbutient,
Et sous l’œil du destin calme et froid, associent
Le râle et le baiser, la morsure et le chant,
La cruauté joyeuse et le bonheur méchant,
Et toutes les fureurs que la démence invente;
Et célèbrent, devant l’esprit qui s’epouvante,
Devant l’aube, devant l’astre, devant l’éclair,
Le mystère splendide et hideux de la chair;
Et cherchant les lieux sourds, les rocs inabordables,
Échevelés, pâmés, amoureux, formidables,
Ivres, l’un qui s’échappe et l’autre qui poursuit,
Dansent dans l’impudeur farouche de:la nuit!

Au faîte de l’orgie et dans le bruit des coupes,

La géante qui plonge aux flots ses larges croupes,
Dont chaque mouvement pour l'homme est un fléau,
Le monstre aux millions de visages, Géo,
Sur des Alpes couchée et montagne comme elles,
Prodigue ses amours, ses lèvres, ses mamelles,
Et, s'ouvrant sans relâche aux longs embrassements,
Engouffre en ses flancs noirs tout un monde d'amants,
Le devin, le rôdeur, des monts, l'homme de l'antre,
Epicure, l'esprit, et Silène, le ventre,
Le rayon, le fumier, et tout l'impur troupeau
Des êtres vils ayant des toisons sur la peau,
L'ours, l'hyène et le tigre et la louve échauffée,
Et derrière ce groupe affreux, le pâle Orphée!
Elle se donne à tous ensemble, et, tour à tour,
Les fait rugir de haine et se tordre d'amour,
Les étreint, les ravit, les baise et les dévore.
À ses cils ténébreux elle mêle l'aurore.
L'homme la voit qui guette au milieu des roseaux.
Laissant ses cheveux d'herbe ondoyer dans les eaux.
Elle chante, appuyant à sa hanche écaillée
Ses coudes de branchage et ses mains de feuillée:
— Viens! je suis la Nature! — Et, charmés, palpitants,
Vaincus, de tous les points du monde en même temps,
Les bergers, les songeurs, les voyants, les colosses,
Les mornes dieux de l'Inde aux têtes de molosses,
Les lourds typhons d'en bas, le peuple hydre et géant,
Pullulant, fécondant, multipliant, créant,
Frémissant d'approcher peut-être de leur mère,
Fixent leurs fauves yeux sur l'obscène chimère!
Et l'écume embrassant le roc sauvage et brut,
Les baisers de l'orage et des vagues en rut,
L'entourent; et son souffle émeut la bête immonde;
Et, sans cesse, à jamais, dans l'air, la flamme et l'onde,
À travers l'éternelle et livide vapeur,
La prunelle des nuits regarde avec stupeur,
Et l'ouragan flagelle, et l'océan caresse
La prostitution de la sombre déesse!

C’est ainsi que tout vit et tout meurt, haletant.
L’astre est une étincelle et le siècle un instant.
Le souffle de la mort couvre à chaque rafale
D’ombres le fleuve Styx, d’oiseaux le lac Stymphale,
Et la guerre aux longs cris plane, et les pestes vont
S’accoupler pêle-mêle au bas du ciel profond,
Elles se dressent, sœurs du meurtre et de l’envie,
Et leurs regards de larve épouvantent la vie.
Et l’on entend, au fond des brouillards soucieux,
Hurler la bête fauve effrayante des cieux,
Le Tonnerre, et, troublés, et prêts à se dissoudre,
Les mers, les bois, les monts, sous les pas de la foudre,
Tremblent, et le vent jette à travers ses éclats
Les imprécations du portefaix Atlas.

Car tout pèse sur lui. Je te l’ai dit, le monde,
Avec l’air bleu, le feu vermeil, l’eau verte et ronde,
Avec l’éther, l’espace, et les ascensions
Splendides et sans fin, des constellations,
Oscille, soutenu sur ce vivant pilastre.
Au sommet resplendit l’Olympe, caverne astre.
L’Olympe est couronné de spectres radieux
Qui seraient des brigands s’ils, n’étaient pas des dieux;

L’Olympe a pour fleurons les douze dieux sublimes.
Leur rayonnement calme aveugle les abîmes.
Au-dessous, les Titans, les mammons, les géants,
L’hydre Glaucus gonflant-sa croupe d’océans,
Rampent, et les sylvains, les trichines, les dives,
Dans les eaux, sous les plis des algues maladives,
Serpentent avec l’orphe horrible, et l’anthia,
Et l’impur Géryon qu’Alcide châtia;
Et l’on distingue en bas la race lapidaire,
Gorgone, que la lune en tremblant considère,
Les trois parques branlant la tête sur le bruit
Du rouet où le jour est filé par la nuit,
Chronos, face à quatre yeux, Derceto pisciforme;

Et, comme lé brin d'herbe entre le cèdre et l'orme,
L'homme entre le titan et le dieu disparaît,
Les monstres sur son front faisant une forêt.
Les douze dieux, ayant triomphé, sont tranquilles
Et féroces; ils ont les temples: dans les villes,
Les forêts dans la plaine et les rocs sur les monts;
Vulcain, par les Brontès et par les Pyracmons,
Leur fait forger la foudre et le vent en armures;
Dodone les salue avec de sourds murmures;
Ils sont grands et sereins, et chacun de leurs pas
Mesure un tiers du ciel dans son vaste compas.
Toute pudeur sur tiers à leur souffle se fane;
Jupiter est tyran, Cypris est courtisane;
Phoebus est assassin; Pallas tue; et Junon
A le meurtre au regard fixe pour compagnon;
Éole fou vomit la pluie échevelée;
Neptune est la tempête et Mars est la mêlée;
Saturne abat la vie avec sa large faulx;
Parmi les dieux méchants Mercure est le dieu faux;
Le serpent le soupçonne et le renard le flaire;
.En haut, l'horrible Amour; pire que la colère,
Règne, et perçant les cœurs de flèches, diaprant
La terre de rosiers et de tombeaux, il prend
L'univers par les dieux et les dieux par la femme;
Telle est l'orgie; et l'œil va, dans ce monde infâme,
De la substance énorme à l'esprit odieux.
Les fléaux sont titans et les vices sont dieux.

On entend les dieux rire; on voit leurs vagues trônes
Resplendir-au-dessus des monts Acrocéraunes,
La vie est autour d'eux un sourd frémissement;
La prière à leurs pieds boîte; l'oracle ment;

La moitié de la-terre est un marais qui trempe
Dans le chaos, cloaque où l'être informe rampe;
Et le ciel est trop bas pour qu'Othryx le géant
Se puisse à son réveil mettre sur son, séant.

Et Tout, c’est toi, Substance!

Oui, l’ombre où Pythagore
Voit passer le triton, la nymphe et l’égrégore;
La Syrène, la nuit, quand brille le halo,
Ouvrant son chant dans l’air, ses nageoires dans l’eau,
C’est toi; c’est toi, Téthys, la femme aux mains palmées;
Ces dieux, c’est toi; c’est toi, ces monstres; ces pygmées
Et ces géants, c’est toi; tous ces masques béants,
Corybantes hurlant les cyniques paeans,
Stryges, psylles, c’est toi; c’est toi, ces myriades
De méduses, d’éons, de faunes, de dryades;
C’est toi, cette stupeur, c’est toi, ce mouvement,
Matière! bloc inerte et noir fourmillement!

Et, devant ce chaos, toute philosophie
Pousse un cri, puis se tait, rêve et se pétrifie.
Quant à l’homme, qu’est-il? Rien. Et je te l’ai dit.
Fait d’un peu de limon que Jupiter perdit,
N’ayant, sous l’affreux ciel d’où tombe la sentence,
Ni loi, ni liberté, ni droit, ni résistance,
Il n’est que le hochet des monstres.

Nu, fatal,
L’homme commet le crime et les dieux font le mal,
L’homme, face au vil souffle et bouche aux plaintes vaines,
Sent en lui, dans ses os, dans ses nerfs, dans ses veines,
Germer l’arborescence horrible du destin.
Tout-banquet est suspect; les dieux sont du festin;
Atrée offre la coupe aux lèvres de Thyeste;
Oreste est parricide et Jocaste est inceste;
Phèdre a peur, Myrrha tremble, et Pasiphaè fuit;
Hélas!.elles ont bu les philtres de la nuit!
Le sort est un bandit; la vie est une folle.
Le glaive naît du glaive. Agamemnon immole
Sa fille, et Clytemnestre, immole Agamemnon.

— Justice; crie Ajax, es-tu? — La Mort dit: Non.
Médée est ivre et rit. Oh! comme vous pleurâtes,
Cassandre, dans l’horreur des ombres scélérates!
Quoique innocents, il vont comme des criminels.
Autour d’eux à jamais se dressent éternels

Le remords, le bois triste où l’on entend des râles,
Le meurtre; et l’entourage, affreux des spectres pâles.
Apollon forcené se jette, sombre amant,
Sur Daphné; c’est Daphné qu’atteint le châtiment.
Thémis aveugle tient la balance incertaine.
Tout est dragon, serpent, hydre, polype, antenne,
Griffe, ongle, serre; et l’homme est pris dans les anneaux
‘De Géo, de Typhon, d’Éole et d’Ouranos.
Tous les arbres de l’ombre ont de fatales pommes.
Il suffit de passer dans le taillis des hommes
Pour secouer la branche exécrable des maux.
Le crime et l’équité sont deux néants jumeaux
Que dans le même abîme emporte la même aile.
Sans voir, sans regarder, sans choisir, pêle-mêle,
Le dieu d’en bas, l’inepte et ténébreux Hadès
Jette vieillards, enfants, guerriers, rois sous le dais,
À l’égout Styx, où pleut l’éternelle immondice;
Sourd; même pour Orphée, il lui prend Eurydice.
Tout est dérision. Vénus étreint Psyché.
Achille meurt par où sa mère l’a touché.
Oh! les mères! Cherchez les fils, cherchez la joie!
Niobé devient pierre et nuit; Hécube aboie.

Être chaste. À quoi bon? Vivre austère. Pourquoi?
Plus de vertu contient plus d’ombre et plus d’effroi.
Les assassins, creuseurs de fosses à la hâte,
Le voleur, écoutant à la, porte qu’il tâte,
Ne sont pas plus troublés qu’Oedipe au front pieux.
Comme le sanglier s’abat sous les épieux.
L’homme tombe percé par les carquois célestes.
Les grands sont les maudits, les bons sont les funestes.

Le ciel sombre est croulant sur les hommes; l’autel,
Calme et froid, à celui qui l’embrasse est mortel,
Une Eurydice dort sur les marches du temple;
Le meilleur, si le sort veut en faire un exemple,
N’a plus de cœur; n’a plus d’entrailles, n’a plus d’yeux,
Ploie et meurt sous le poids formidable des dieux.
Les générations s’envolent dissipées.
Les jours passent ainsi que des lueurs d’épées.
Au-dessus des vivants le sort lève le doigt.
Nul ne fait ce qu’il fait; nul ne voit ce qu’il; voit.
Nais: la main du sort s’ouvre. Expire: elle se ferme.
Nul ne sait rien de plus. Guerres sans but, sans terme,
Sans conscience, écume aux dents, et glaive au poing!
La bouche mord l’oreille et ne lui parle point
Le sourd étreint l’aveugle; on lutte, on se dévore
On se prend; on se quitte, on se reprend encore;
Et nul n’est jamais libre un instant sous les cieux;
Ce que le destin lâche est repris par les dieux;

Ce qu’épargnent les dieux fatigués, l’amour traître.
Le ressaisit; tout saigne et tout souffre, sans être.
Le penseur voit, au-bord des noirs destins venu,
Se prolonger sans fin dans le gouffre inconnu,.
Cette agitation des vagues de ténèbres.
Où sont les grands, les forts, les puissants, les célèbres?
Ils sont où la fumée est allée, où les bois
Ont envoyé les bruits, les souffles et les voix;
Et le sourd néant dit: ce n’était pas la peine.
Et maintenant, Platon,. Socrate, Callysthène,
Diogène, Zénon, Démocrite, Archytas,
Thalès, Cratès, Pyrrhon, Anaxagore, ô tas
De sages, répondez: qu’est-ce que la sagesse?
Veille ou dors, viens ou fuis, nie ou crois, prends ou laisse.
Sois immonde ou sois pur sois bon ou sois pervers;
Insulte l’aube, ou ris sous les feuillages verts;
Montre-toi, cache-toi; va-t-en,demeure, oscille;
Ignore, ou bien apprends; pense, ou sois imbécille.

Science humaine! essai de regard! louche effort
Pour faire un trou de flamme au mur brumeux du sort!
Imprécation sombre et pleine d’anathèmes!
Esprit humain! rumeur! passage de systèmes!
Place publique où vont et viennent, dans le soir,
Les projets de penser que l’homme peut avoir!
Le monde est une meule à broyer, la pensée.
Après une science épuisée et lassée,
Une doctrine vient criant: qu’est-ce que c’est?
Et passe en redisant ce que l’autre disait.
Tous répètent — Pourquoi? pourquoi? — Nul ne devine
L’obscur secret de l’ombre infernale et divine.
— Comment sortir? comment entrer? Vouloir, savoir,
Ouvrent-ils les verrous de ce dédale noir?
Essayons de la mort! Essayons de la vie!
La volonté se sent par le destin suivie.
Si nous redescendions ou si nous remontions?
Quelle est l’issue, ô nuit? — Toutes les questions
Ont des portes d’énigme et des yeux de fantôme;
Et, tristes, et courbés sous le ténébreux dôme,
Les songeurs frissonnants cherchent les sombres clefs
Dans la sereine horreur des gouffres étoilés.
Et chacun d’eux, penché sur l’ombre où tout s’achève,
Jette à qui passera ces noirs conseils du rêve:
— La prière est sans but. L’être est un fait hagard.
Ne te mets pas en frais d’amour pour le hasard.

Chante ou maudis. Qu’importe au destin que tu l’aimes?
Les pas du genre humain sont-bordés de problèmes.
La vie est l’avenue effrayante des sphinx.
L’orgueil et-la science, yeux de paon, yeux de lynx,
Aboutissent au même avortement; et l’homme.
Tremble, et sent des démons dans tous les dieux qu’il nomme.
Prométhée a voulu sortir de cette nuit,
Éclairer l’homme au fond du mystère introduit;
Labourer, enseigner, civiliser, et faire
Du globe une vivante et radieuse sphère;

Tirer du roc sauvage et des halliers épais
Les éblouissements de l’ordre et de la paix,
Défricher la forêt monstrueuse de l’être,
Et faire vivre ceux que le destin fait naître;
Il a voulu sacrer la terre, ouvrir les yeux,
Mettre le pied de l’homme à l’échelle des cieux,
Soumettre la nature et que l’homme là mène,
Diminuer les dieux de la croissance humaine,
Couvrir les cœurs d’un pan de l’azur étoilé,
Faire du ver rampant jaillir l’esprit ailé,
Tendre une chaîne d’or entre l’arbre et la ville,
Au Tartare à jamais plonger la haine vile,
Lier le mal horrible au chaos épineux,
Et fonder, dans le cœur des hommes lumineux,
Afin que la raison l’achève et le bâtisse,
Un temple; et remplacer Atlas par la justice.

Les dieux l’ont puni. Seul, vaincu, saignant, amer,
Il est tombé, pleuré des filles de la mer;
Et moi, j’ai bu le sang de l’enchaîné terrible.

Tout est mort maintenant; et, dans l’ombre inflexible,
Sous le rayonnement des boucliers divins,
Les efforts des géants et des hommes sort vains.

Toutefois, tant qu’il reste un peu d’air; l’oiseau vole.
Orphée en me quittant m’a dit cette parole:

«Être ailé; l’aile est bonne et sainte. Souviens-toi
Qu’espérer est la force et qu’atteindre est la loi.
«L’obstacle est là? passants; il attend qu’on le brise.
«Ce qu’a fait Prométhée est fait; la flamme est prise;
«Elle est sur terre; elle est quelque part; l’homme peut
«La retrouver; grandir; vivre, exister, s’il veut!
«S’il sait penser, gravir, creuser; saisir, étreindre,
«S’il ne laisse jamais le saint flambeau s’éteindre,

«S’il se souvient qu’il peut, puisque l’idée a lui,
«Allumer quelque chose en lui de plus que lui,
«Qu’il doit lutter, que l’aube est une délivrance,
«Et qu’avoir le flambeau, c’est avoir l’espérance;
«Car deux sacrés rayons composent la clarté,
«Et l’un est la puissance, et l’autre est la beauté.”

— Ô vautour, dans la nuit sans fond qui nous assiège,
Où donc est la clarté dont tu parles? criai-je.

J’attendais la réponse, il avait disparu.

Il s’était effacé sans même avoir décru.
Ainsi vient, tourbillonne et fuit la feuille morte
Au vent que la nuit fait quand elle ouvre sa porte,
À l’heure où sur les monts le pâtre vient s’asseoir.
Et je vis au-dessus de ma tête un point noir.
Et ce point noir semblait une mouche dans l’ombre.

Comme lorsque la lune au fond des brouillards sombre,
Une vague lueur flottait; l’immensité
Blanchissait.

Je repris ma course, et je montai
Dans l’air que je fendais d’une aile prompte et sûre,
Vers le point qu’on voyait dans l’espace; à mesure
Que je montais, l’objet grossissait, et, pareil
Aux figures qu’on voit croître dans le sommeil,
Il prenait une forme étrange; et cette mouche
Était un aigle au vol tournoyant et farouche.
Le vide était moins sombre et le vent moins mauvais.
Chacun des noirs oiseaux vers qui je m’élevais,
Comme jadis le mage était loin de l’apôtre,
Volait seul dans sa zone et ne voyait pas l’autre.

L’aigle criait:
Qui donc est là, gouffre hideux?

Qui donc dit: il n’est pas! Qui donc dit: ils sont deux!

Qui donc dit: — Ils sont douze, ils sont cent, ils sont mille;
Ils emplissent l’azur comme un peuple une ville;
Et le ciel serait clair, limpide et radieux,
S’il n’était obscurci du noir essaim des dieux.
Ô vents, il est! Abîme! il est seul. Seul, vous dis-je!
Ténèbres, demandez aux soleils. Le prodige, gouffres, ce serait qu’il ne fût pas. Je suis
L’aigle éclairé d’en haut qui plane au fond des nuits;
Je suis la bête à qui ressemble le génie;
J’ai dans mon œil hagard la lueur infinie;
Je suis le grand voyant et le grand inquiet.
J’étais près de Moïse alors qu’il s’écriait:
— O soleil! nourricier du monde! anachorète!
Seul au fond du grand ciel comme en une retraite!
Père de l’aube, roi du jour; maître du feu,
Écarte tes rayons, que je puisse voir Dieu!
Au pied du Sina sombre, il dit: Qui m’accompagne?
J’ai dit: moi! — J’étais là, quand, montant la montagne,
Il s’enfonça, superbe et tremblant a la fois,
Dans le nuage plein de foudres et de voix;
J’ai suivi le prophète en cette ombre livide...
   sanglots de la mère auprès du berceau vide,
   chaîne de l’esclave, ô sceptre de Néron,
Toi, peste au souffle impur, toi, guerre au fier clairon,
Éperviers qui guettez la caille à sa sortie,
Broussailles de l’horreur, ronce, aconit, ortie,
   Fatalité, spectre à l’œil morne, au pas lent,
Mal, millepieds hideux sur l’homme fourmillant,
Chimère Obscurité qui traînes tes vertèbres,
Chouette Nuit, crapaud Chaos, taupes Ténèbres,
Vieux ciel noir du néant, suaire du ciel bleu,
Vous mentez, vous mentez, vous mentez, j’ai vu Dieu!
En ce moment l’oiseau suprême et solitaire
M’aperçut; fauve, il dit:

— Quel est ce ver de terre?
De quel droit voles-tu dans l’ombre où tu rampas?
Est-e toi qui disais tout à l’heure: il n’est pas?
Si c’est toi

Je n’osais parler

Si c’est toi, sache
Qu’il se montre surtout dans tout ce qui le cache.
Qu’es-tu? Réponds. Sais-tu le but, l’objet, la loi?
Sais-tu pourquoi le taon mord la vache, pourquoi
L’oiseau mange la mouche et le ver le concombre?
Dis? où sont les poumons du vent? Connais-tu l’ombre?

Es-tu dans le secret? Et, quand il a tonné,
Sais-tu ce qu’on a dit?.As-tu questionné
Les flots, quand vers l’écueil que bat leur inclémence
Ils viennent, commentant dans leur rumeur immense
Les actes inconnus de l’onde et de la nuit?
L’univers est un texte obscur; l’as-tu traduit?
Qu’est-ce que nous voulaient les aurores enfuies?
Pourquoi le larmoiement formidable des pluies?
Comment l’arbre tient-il dans le pépin du fruit?
As-tu questionné le Gibel et son bruit,
L’Atlas et son semoun, l’Alpe et son avalanche?
Connais-tu la Jungfrau, la grande vierge blanche?
T’a-t-elle dit le fond de la virginité?
As-tu rempli ta cruche au puits éternité,
Et ta stupidité puise-t-elle à l’abîme?
Parle. Ton ignorance, homme, est-elle la dîme
Que tu viens prélever, précédé du corbeau,
Sur la science étrange et morne du tombeau,
Brume où se sont perdus tant de mages célèbres?
T’es-tu penché pour boire a, même les ténèbres?
Et t’es-tu redressé sur le vide où tu vas,
Recrachant ta gorgée et criant: Dieu n’est pas!
En est-il ainsi, brute? En ce cas, je m’afflige

De te voir. C’est Dieu seul qui règne et vit, te dis-je,
Et Dieu seul qui survit. Fais-tu le froid, le chaud,
La nuit, l’aube? Est-ce toi qui fais hurler là-haut
L’orage maniaque, et toi qui le fais taire?
Es-tu le personnage immense du mystère?
Prouve-le-moi. Voyons, homme. Quand le torrent,
Cet ouvrier terrible, inquiet, dévorant,
Sciant les rocs, traînant les terres aux campagnes,
Se met à décharner dans l’ombre les montagnes,.
Empêche-le donc! dis à l’océan à bas!
Est-ce toi qui, prenant les lions, les courbas
Si bien qu’on ne sait plus, dans leurs fuites funèbres,
Si ce sont des lions ou si ce sont des zèbres!
Es-tu de ceux qui vont dans l’inconnu sans-voir,
Qui se heurtent la nuit à l’immense mur noir,
Et qui, battant l’obstacle avec leurs sombres: ailes,
Glissent sans fin le long, des parois éternelles?
Sors-tu de quelque grotte affreuse, aux âpres flancs,
Où ton œil est resté fixe quatre mille ans,
Comme Satan dans l’ombre où Dieu le fit descendre?
As-tu l’esprit qu’avait la payenne Cassandre
Lorsqu’elle allait voyant d’avance Ajax brigand,
Comptant les grands palais en flamme, et distinguant
Dans la profonde nuit le glaive nu d’Egysthe?
Parle. Es-tu plein du gouffre? Es-tu le trismégiste,
Marches-tu de plain-pied avec les cieux, disant

Aux douze heures: venez me parler, à présent
Que vous voilà sur terre, ayant en vous chacune
La gaîté du soleil ou l’horreur de la lune?
As-tu vécu parmi les bêtes dans les bois,
Le tigre t’indiquant la source, et disant: bois!
Et, lorsque tu songeais la face contre terre,
Un ange, qu’adoraient le lynx et la panthère,
T’a-t-il jeté, de l’ombre écartant les rideaux,
Quelque effrayant manteau d’étoiles sur le dos?
Pour parler de la sorte, es-tu celui qui lie

Et qui délie? As-tu le double esprit d'Elie?
Qu'es-tu? Dis-moi ton nom. Les prophètes jadis,
À l'heure où, sur les monts par la brume engourdis;
La large lune d'or surgissait comme un dôme,
Faisaient sur l'horizon des gestes de fantôme,
Dialoguaient avec les vents, et grands, et seuls,
Ils secouaient les nuits ainsi que des linceuls;
Car le désert, prenant de graves attitudes,
Jadis parlait a l'homme, et l'homme aux solitudes;
La mer ouvrant son gouffre et l'aigle ouvrant son bec
Entendaient les devins, dans Endor, dans Balbeck,
Faire des questions aux ténèbres, et l'ombre
Donner aux noirs devins l'explication sombre.
Es-tu de ceux-la? Non! Tu serais le dernier
Que tu ne serais pas si fou de le nier.

Serais-tu par hasard, ô parleur dérisoire,
Un des grands mécontents de l'immensité noire?
Trouves-tu que les cieux sacrés vont de travers?
Peut-être étais-tu là quand Dieu fit l'univers?.
Et sans doute, en ce cas, ta peine fut cruelle
De voir que ce maçon n'avait pas de truelle,
Et qu'il bâtissait l'ombre et l'azur et le ciel,
Et l'être universel et l'être partiel,
Et l'étendue où fuit le pâle météore,
Qu'il bâtissait le temps, qu'il bâtissait l'aurore,
Qu'il bâtissait le jour que l'aube épanouit,
Les vastes firmaments bleus jusque dans la nuit,
Et les dômes profonds où vole la tempête,
Sans monter à l'échelle, une auge sur la tête!
Es-tu quelque être à qui la clarté dit: Va-t-en!
Sorti du grand flanc sombre et triste de Satan?
Non! tu n'es qu'un passant frêle et vain. Je convie
Ton esprit à songer que Dieu seul est la vie;
Tout le reste est la mort; et je l'affirme en toi
À l'homme, ce buveur de la coupe d'effroi,
Ce pâle choisisseur de redoutables routes,

Cet aveugle qui guette: et ce sourd aux écoutes!
Viens-tu braver ce Dieu que l'ombre a combattu?

Allons, parle, as-tu vu Léviathan? L'as-tu
Surpris dans l'antre où-l'eau, baigne les granits chauves,
Ou dans quelque forêt pleine de-lueurs fauves?
Peux-tu dire: j'ai vu Léviathan! voici
Comment il est! comment il rampe! il nage ainsi!
As-tu lu seulement ce qu'en dit Job? Non, certes!
Écoute alors:

«, Son corps, couvert de lames vertes,
Semble un mouvant amas de boucliers d'airain.
Son sommeil fait le bruit d'un torrent souterrain.
Quand il a soif, sa gueule, ouverte, vaste, horrible,
Boit tout un fleuve avec un aboîment terrible."

Voilà ce que dit Job, c'est effroyable, eh bien,
Moi qui l'ai vu je dis: ce que dit Job n'est rien.
Léviathan! Des poils, des crêtes, des mâchoires;
Ailes qui sont des bras, pieds qui, sont des nageoires,
Des griffes qu'on prendrait pour des herbes, des nœuds,
Mille antennes qui font un branchage épineux,
Un nombril vert; pareil à là mer qui se creuse,
C'est l'ombre faite monstre, et qui vit; chose affreuse!
Je ne sais quoi de noir et de prodigieux
Qui mord avec-des dents, qui voit avec des yeux!
La façon dont il met ses pieds l'un devant l'autre
Est horrible; le flot rugit quand, il s'y vautre;
Ainsi qu'un vase au feu sur son front la mer bout;
Il sème en se traînant ses écailles partout
Comme un cygne sa plume au moment de la mue
La foudre tomberait sur lui sans qu'il remue.
Il est l'horreur; il est l'hydre dont tout frémit;
Et quand. Léviathan crache, Satan vomit.
Que cet être affreux soit dans le monde où nous sommes
Et puisse regarder le ciel comme les hommes,

Cela trouble l’esprit et confond la raison.
Lorsqu’il passe la nuit derrière l’horizon,
La lueur de ses yeux semble l’aube; la grève
Blanchit; le voyageur dit: l’aurore se lève,
Et ne se doute pas, dans sa tranquillité,
Que c’est Léviathan qui fait cette-clarté.
Passant paisible, il songe à l’aube douce et blonde,
À la rosée, aux fleurs... Quelle terreur profonde,
Quel frisson si dans l’ombre il pouvait soudain voir
Cette forme inouïe et sombre se mouvoir!

Parfois Léviathan redescend vers le gouffre,
Et les masques ont peur au fond du lac de soufre,
Et l’enfer tremble avec son geôlier pâlissant
Quand, là-haut, sur leurs fronts, tout a coup surgissant,
Sa tête, comme un mont qui remuerait sa cime,
Se dresse épouvantable au rebord de l’abîme.

Toi qui viens dans mon ombre, iras-tu le chercher
Dans sa grande herbe verte, ou bien sous son rocher?
Iras-tu le lier de cordes sous le ventre,
Et le traîneras-tu, hideux, hors de son antre,
Pour faire dans ta cour, en plein soleil, devant
Cet être, objet nocturne, incroyable et vivant
De tant de visions et de tant d’épouvantes,
Attrouper les enfants et rire les servantes!
Eh bien! dans sa main songe à cela, vil roseau,
Dieu prend Léviathan comme on prend un oiseau!
L’aigle reprit

— Moïse était seul sous la nue;
Au fond resplendissait une face inconnue,
Et moi, je regardai; la face, c’était Dieu.
Je l’ai vu!.Je l’annonce à vous qui vivez peu,
J’ai vu l’effrayant Dieu de l’éternité sombre!
Dieu! dernier jour du temps! dernier chiffre du nombre!
Voici ce que l’esprit apprend sur la hauteur:

Avant la créature était le créateur;
Le temps sans fin était avant le temps qui passe;
Avant le monde immense était l’immense, espace;
Avant tout ce qui parle était ce qui se tait;
Avant tout ce qui vit le possible existait;
L’infini sans figure au fond de tout séjourne.
Au-dessus du ciel bleu qui remue et qui tourne,
Où les chars des soleils vont, viennent et s’en vont,
Est le ciel immobile, éternel et profond.
Là, vit Dieu. La durée, ainsi qu’une couleuvre,
Se roule et se déroule autour de lui. Son œuvre,
C’est le monde; il la fait; l’œuvre faite, il s’endort.
Alors partout s’épand comme une nuit de mort
Où les créations flottent abandonnées;
Après avoir dormi des millions d’années,
L’être incommensurable à qui rien n’est pareil,
Dont l’œil en s’entr’ouvrant luit comme le soleil,
Se réveille au milieu d’une extase profonde
Et de son premier souffle il crée un nouveau monde,

Création splendide; univers lumineux,.
Où l’atome étincelle, où se croisent des feux,
Clair, vivant, traversé par des astres sans nombre,
Qui tourbillonne autour de sa bouche dans l’ombre.
Et puis il se rendort, et ce monde s’en va.
Un monde évanoui, qu’importe à Jéhovah?
Il est, lui seul existe, et l’homme est un fantôme.
Pas plus que le soleil ne s’occupe du chaume
Après la moisson faite et les épis coupes,
L’être ne prend souci des mondes dissipés.
Il est. Cela suffit. Sa plénitude ignore.
La forme fuit, le son neurt dans l’onde sonore,
Ce qui s’éteint s’éteint, ce qui change,est changé.
Il dit: je suis c’est tout. C’est en bas qu’on dit: j’ai!
L’ombre croit posséder, d’un vain songe animée,
Et tient des biens de endre en des doigts de fumée.
Dieu-n’a rien, étant tout. Ah! malheur à-celui

Qui doute: Je vous dis que sa face m’a lui
Et que j’ai vu son œil sombre dans les tonnerres.
Les patriarches blancs et huit fois centenaires
Lui parlaient autrefois. C’est-lui! C’est le vivant.
C’est dans la grande nuit le grand soleil levant.

Rien n’existe que Dieu.

Tout le craint, tout le nomme.
La pierre du tombeau souffle sur l’homme, et l’homme
S’évanouit; ses jours n’ont pas de lendemain
Il marche quelques pas-dans un obscur chemin,
Puis son pied se dissipe et sa route s’efface;
Il meurt, et tout est mort Quoi qu’il tente ou qu’il fasse,
Il possède l’éclair, le vent, l’instant, le lieu;
Il est le rêve, et vit le temps de dire adieu.
Fantômes! vous flottez sur les heures obscures
Dans ce monde ou l’on voit passer quelques figures!
Hommes, qu’êtes-vous donc? Des visages pensifs.
Le mal descend de, vous comme le froid des ifs.
Vos desseins sont des puits d’iniquité; vous êtes
Des antres où le vie et le crime ont leurs fêtes;
Vos maisons et vos seuils et vos toits et vos murs
Portent plus de forfaits qu’un cep de raisins mûrs
Vous incrustez d’or fin vos lits de bois d’érable;
Vous tordez les haillons du pauvre misérable
Et votre pourpre est faite avec le sang qui sort;
Vous changez-en hochet le redoutable sort;

Et vous jouez aux dés, riant, perdant des sommes,
Pendant que «dans sa nuit le destin joue aux hommes;
Vos villes sont des bois; on vole, on fraude, on vend;
L’ignorant est le pain que mange le savant;
Et l’homme vautour tient l’homme taupe en sa serre,
Et l’ânier Intérêt fouette l’âne Misère;
Vous souffrez à toute heure et de tous les côtés.
À quoi bon? étant tous au néant emportés.

Vous pensez. Croyez-vous? Vos crânes sont des voûtes
Sans lampes, d'où les pleurs suintent à larges gouttes.
Vous priez. Qui? comment? pourquoi? Vous ne savez.
Vous aimez. O nuit sombre! ô cieux en vain rêvés!
Vos sens sont un fumier dont votre amour s'arrange,
Et dans votre baiser le porc se mêle à l'ange.
Et Satan a tant fait que votre abaissement
Est noirceur sur la terre et tache au firmament.

Donc il fit tout, ce Dieu! les cieux, les monts, les bêtes,
Tout, même votre bruit et l'ombre que vous faites;
Donc il ouvrit la main, le semeur éternel,
Et sema dans l'espace à tous les vents du ciel
Les étoiles, poussière ardente, cendre ignée,
Tout ce que vous voyez la nuit; cette poignée
De graines d'or, jetée au sillon de clarté,
Tombe dans l'infini pendant l'éternité.

Parfois, quand Dieu regarde, il a honte de l'homme;
Et les tigres des bois et les césars de Rome,
Les rois portant au front Mané Thécel Pharès,
Réverbèrent, parmi les vivants effarés,
Le vague flamboiement de sa colère, immense.

Hommes, sachez ceci, spectres pleins de démence
Il est, quand il lui plaît, le Dieu farouche. Il met
La marque de sa foudre à tout hautain sommet;
Lorsqu'il s'éveille, il est terrible; il frappe, il venge.
Il souffle sur la endre, il crache sur la fange;
Il livre Tyr et Suze aux onagres rayés;
Il poursuit, à travers les siècles effrayés,
Ainsi qu'on traque un loup de repaire en repaire,
Vingt générations pour le crime du père.
O passants de la nuit, marcheurs des noirs sentiers,
Hommes, larves sans nom, qui mourez tout entiers,
Dieu montre brusquement sa face à qui l'outrage;
Et quand vous l'insultez dans votre folle rage,

Comme le grand lion surgit dans la forêt,
Adonaï s’efface et Sabaoth paraît!
Saint, saint, saint, le seigneur mon Dieu! Silence, abîmes!

Et l’aigle s’enfonça dans les brumes sublimes
Pareil au grain de feu tombé de l’encensoir.

VI

Et je vis au-dessus de ma tête un point noir;
Et ce point noir semblait une mouche dans l’ombre.
J’y volai
L’âpre nuit mourait, mais sa pénombre
Mourait dans un jour gris qu’on voyait poindre aux cieux.

Et cette mouche était un griffon monstrueux
Qui faisait trembler l’ombre avec son-aile énorme.

Et le griffon cria:
Que l’aigle d’en bas dorme!
Je veille: Dieu plus haut que l’aigle m’emporta.
Tu viens du Sinaï, je viens du Golgotha;
Aigle, la foudre emplit ton oe il visionnaire
Moi, j’ai vu le gibet plus grand que le tonnerre!
Quand les bourreaux dressaient la croix, j’étais dessus;
J’ai frissonné sur l’arbre où l’on cloua Jésus;
J’ai vu cette agonie immense et solennelle;
Marc a pris pour l’écrire une plume à mon aile;
J’ai regardé Jésus saigner et s’assoupir;
Je sais tout; je suis plein de son dernier soupir.
Je sème sa parole au souffle de la bise.
Aigle, Christ en sait plus que Moïse, Moïse
N’ayant que les rayons, et Christ ayant les clous.
Non, Dieu n’est pas vengeur! non, Dieu n’est pas jaloux!
Non, Dieu ne s’endort pas, portant toute la voûte!
Non, l’homme ne meurt pas tout entier.

Aigle, écoute:
Dieu, le monde étant fait, reconnut que ela
N’était-rien, puisque rien n’y disait: me voilà;
Puisque rien n’y pensait et-n’y parlait de sorte
Que là création en-naissant était morte;
Or l’incréé voulut-engendrer l’immortel.

Il fit l’âme, et la mit dans l’homme, son autel.
L’homme seul reçut l’âme en l’univers visible.
Dieu créa pour Adam ce faîte inacessible.
Au-dessous dé l’homme, âme, intelligence, esprit,
La matière-roula dans la pierre, fleurit

Dans la plante, et hurla dans la bête, sans vivre.
Voyant qu’il avait seul une âme, Adam fut ivre;
Il voulut la science et déroba le fruit.
C’est pourquoi Dieu jeta les hommes dans la nuit.
Et depuis ce jour-là, l’urne amère est remplie.
Sous la faute d’Adam tout le genre humain plie.
Le labeur est ingrat et le sillon est dur;
L’homme naît mauvais, triste, inexorable, impur;
L’enfantement du mal déchire le flanc d’Eve.
La guerre et l’échafaud, ces deux tranchants du glaive,
Vont fauchant l’ignorant, le faible et l’innocent;
Le fratricide affreux, qui croit le père absent,
Fait peur aux cieux avec le sang qu’on lui voit boire;
Hélas! dans la forêt de l’humanité noire,
Un éternel Caïn tue à jamais Abel.
L’homme adore Moloch, Dagon, Teutatès, Bel;
Et sur les crimes rois les monstres dieux flamboient.
Les vices, meute infâme, autour de l’âme aboient.
Toute l’humanité tinte comme un beffroi.
Partout l’horreur, le râle et le rire, et l’effroi.
Toute bouche est ulcère et tout faîte est cratère.
Un bruit si monstrueux sort de toute la terre
Que la nuit, veuve en deuil, dit au jour qui rougit:
C’est le tigre qui parle ou l’homme qui rugit!
Satan à l’entour vole et plane, oiseau de proie
Des âmes. La douleur formidable est sa joie.

Et plein de feux, de pleurs, de tourments éperdus,
Et de bustes vivants dans les flammes tordus,
Pleins de cris qui s’en vont au bronze de la voûte
Et que la surdité de l’impossible écoute,

Coupole de l’abîme ayant pour pendentifs
D’affreux écroulements d’êtres noirs et plaintifs,
Geôle sans fond, sans jour, sans espoir, sous la foule
Des vivants, sous ce tas de vanité qui roule,
Sous le flot des passants de la vie et du bruit,
Sous le penseur, captif du rêve qu’il construit,
Sous les guerriers casqués et sous les femmes nues,
Sous les larges festins qui chantent jusqu’aux nues,
Sous tout ce qui s’allume et tout e qui s’éteint,
Sous tous les pas de l’homme, orgueil, science, instinct,
Sous tout être qui marche, ou chancelle, ou trébuche,
L’enfer éternel guette et s’ouvre, vaste embûche.

Noir sillon composé de tous les vils limons,
Qui reçoit des esprits et qui rend des démons,
Qui produit des moissons de spectres, et des gerbes
De monstres flamboyants, lugubres et superbes,
D’où sort tout ce qui tue, où croît tout ce qui ment,
Et qui tressaille, ému d’un long frémissement,
Chaque fois qu’il entend l’affreux-cri de la chute,
Chaque fois qu’en sa nuit descend, essaim qui lutte,
Quelque tourbillon sombre et triste où l’âme luit,
Et qu’il voit au-dessus de lui, noire et-sans bruit,
S’ouvrir l’immense main de-son semeur sinistre!
Mais le livre de vie est là, divin registre,
L’homme, c’est l’âme; l’homme est l’hôte d’un rayon,
Et la matière seule est la damnation.
Dieu pense, et la douleur lentement le désarme.
Dieu s’appelle pardon, l’homme se nomme larme;
Dieu créa la pitié le: jour où l’homme est né.
Devant lés actions de l’homme infortuné
Souvent, la, pureté des firmaments s’indigne;
Souvent l’astre aux yeux d’aigle et l’ange au vol de cygne
S’étonnent de ette ombre et de cette noirceur;
Dieu, voyant l’homme fourbe, implacable, oppresseur,
Est triste; et quand, sortant de la nuit, la Colère
Apparaît, face sombre et que la foudre éclaire,

Rappelant au Seigneur ce que l’homme lui doit,
Prête à maudire, il met sur cette bouche un doigt.
Ce doigt mystérieux-et doux, c’est la clémence.

Le pardon dit tout bas à l’homme: recommence!
Redeviens pur. Remonte à ta source. Essayons
Rentre au creuset: Ton Dieu t’offre dans les rayons,:
Pour refaire ton âme obscurcie et difforme,
Le cercueil, ce berceau de la naissance énorme.

Clémence, c’est le fond de Dieu. Dieu boit le fiel.
Dieu ne vengé pas Dieu devant l’azur-du ciel.
Il ne revomit rien sur l’homme. Secourable,
Tendre, il chasse du pied le mal, ce misérable:
Dieu, que l’homme coupable appelait, s’est penché,
Et, voyant l’univers sanglant; mort, desséché;
Et, songeant, pour lui-même et pour lui seul sévère,
Que pour sauver un monde il suffit d’un calvaire,
Il a dit: Va, mon fils! Et son fils est allé.

Rédemption! mystère! Ô grand Christ étoilé!
Soif du crucifié, d’amertume assouvie!
Linceul dont tous les-plis font tomber de la vie!
Ô gibet qui bénit Judas et Barabbas!
Qui verse à flots la sève et l’espérance en bas,

Croix, à tous les esprits, arbre, à toutes les plantes!
Sublime embrassement des grandes mains sanglantes!
Oeil mourant de Jésus dont l’éternité luit!
   pardon! ô pitié de l’azur pour la nuit!
Paix céleste qui sort de toutes les clémences!
   mont mystérieux des oliviers immenses!
Après le créateur, le sauveur s’est montré..
Le sauveur a veillé pour tous les yeux, pleuré
Pour tous les pleurs, saigné pour toutes les blessures.
Les routes des vivants, hélas! ne sont pas sûres,
Mais Christ, sur le poteau du fatal carrefour,

Montre d’un bras la nuit et de l’autre le jour!

Après lui sont venus les apôtres, ces têtes
Flamboyantes; les saints; martyrs jetés aux bêtes,
Vierges louant Jésus dans le noir tombereau,
Femmes grosses chantant pendant que le bourreau,
Effroyable, arrachait leurs enfants de leurs ventres,
Et les pères des bois et les docteurs des antres,
Et les voix des déserts et des cloîtres, criant
À l’homme en sa nuit froide: Orient! Orient!
Oh! vous l’avez cherché sans l’entrevoir, sibylles,
Ce Dieu mystérieux des azurs immobiles!
Filles des visions, toi, sous l’arche d’un pont,
Daphné; toi, guettant l’œuf que la chouette pond,
Albunée, et brûlant une torche de cire;
Toi, celle de Phrygie, épouvante d’Ancyre,
Parlant à l’astre et, pâle, écoutant s’il répond;
Celle d’Imbrasia; celle de l’Hellespont
Qui se dresse déesse et qui retombe hyène;
Toi, Tiburtine; et toi, la rauque Libyenne,
Criant: Treize! essayant la loi du nombre impair;
Toi dont le regard fixe inquiétait Vesper,
Larve d’Endor; et toi, les dents blanches d’écume,
Les deux seins nus, ô folle effrayante de Cume;
Chaldéenne, filant un invisible fil;
Sardique a l’œil de chèvre, au tragique profil;
Toi, maigre et toute nue au soleil, Érythrée,
D’azur et de lumière et d’horreur pénétrée;
Toi, Persique, habitant un sépulcre détruit, face à qui parlaient les passants de la nuit
Et les échevelés qui se penchent dans l’ombre
Toi, mangeant du cresson dans ta fontaine sombre,
Delphique; âpres esprits, toutes, vous eûtes beau
Hurler, frapper le vent, remuer le tombeau,

Rouler vos fauves yeux dans la profondeur noire,
Nulle de vous n’a vu clairement dans sa gloire

Ce grand Dieu du pardon sur la terre levé.
Sainte-Thérèse, avec un soupir, l’a trouvé.
Le pardon est plus grand que Caïn, et le couvre.
La clémence de Dieu de tous les côtés s’ouvre,
Et c’est là le seul piège où l’on tombe toujours.
La langue des muets et l’oreille des sourds,
C’est le pardon: La grâce aide clin s’abandonne.
C’est ce qui manque à tous et ce qu’à, tous Dieu donne.
Père, il sourit aux fils clin lui, Montrent le poing.
Dieu serait le puni s’il ne pardonnait point:
Son ciél est un regard clément. Toutes les grâces
Qu’il fait à chaque instant, s’envolent, jamais lasses,
Se dispersent au loin dans tous les univers,
Et, du faible au méchant, du farouche au pervers,
Errent, abeilles d’or, et butinent les âmes,
Puis reviennent, mêlant baumes, encens, dictames,
Rapportant les parfums extraits des cœurs maudits,
Emplir du miel pardon la ruche paradis.
Clémence! mot formé de toutes les étoiles!
Dieu! ciel de tous les yeux! port de toutes les voiles!
Jamais, brume ou tempête, et quel que soit le vent,
L’asile n’est fermé tant que l’homme est vivant;
Toute lèvre est reçue au céleste ciboire; .
Le sang du sauveur coule et toute âme y peut boire;
Si ténébreux que soit l’homme qui va partir,
À l’heure de la mort un cri de repentir,
Un appel de la foi que le tombeau recrée,
Un regard attendri vers la lueur sacrée,
Vers ce qu’on insultait et ce qu’on dénigrait,
Un sanglot, moins encore, un soupir, un regret
De l’âme détestant sa tache originelle,
Suffit pour qu’elle échappe à la peine éternelle,
À l’enfer qui, voyant ce que les hommes font,
Tord les chaînes sans fin dans les gouffres sans fond.
Qui que fil sois, esquif, tourne vers Dieu ta proue.
Le châtiment sans terme et sans espoir écroue,
Sous les éternités plus lourdes que les monts,

Les démons seuls et ceux qui deviennent démons.
Pour que la peine tombe immuable et tardive,
Il faut du dernier cri l'horrible récidive;
Dans l'éternité sombre, Achab, Caligula,
Borgia qu'entre tous la tiare étoila,
Philippe deux, Timour, Phalaris, Louis onze,
Néron, sont au carcan sur des trônes de bronze.

Pourquoi? parce qu'ils ont dit non! au grand moment,
Que leur âme est sortie en un vomissement!
L'homme n'a qu'à pleurer pour retrouver son père.
Le malheur lui dit: crois. La mort lui crie: espère!
Qu'il se repente, il tient la clef d'un sort meilleur.
Dieu lui remplace, après l'épreuve et la douleur,
Le paradis des fleurs par l'éden des étoiles.
Ève, à ta nudité Marie offre ses voiles;
L'ange au glaive de feu rappelle Adam proscrit;
L'âme arrive portant la croix de Jésus-Christ;
L'éternel pres de lui fait asseoir l'immortelle.
Aigle, la sainteté de l'âme humaine est telle
Qu'au fond du ciel suprême où la clarté sourit,
Où le Père et le Fils se mêlent dans l'Esprit,
Il semble que l'azur égalise et confonde
Jésus, l'âme de l'homme, et Dieu, l'âme du monde!
Et, l'œil au firmament, ne regardant plus rien,
Comme ivre de rayons, le monstre-aérien,
Lion par la crinière et l'ongle, aigle par l'aile;
Chanta:
Paix, vie et gloire à la voûte éternelle!
Il est le véritable! Il vit. Il est présent.
Comme il est l'invisible, il est l'éblouissant;
Il a créé d'un mot la chose et le mystère,
Tout ce qu'on peut nommer et tout ce qu'il faut taire.
Quand l'homme juste meurt, il lui ferme les yeux;
Le beau jardin Azur est plein d'esprits joyeux;
Ils entrent à toute heure et par toutes les portes;
Dieu fait évanouir les gonds des villes fortes;

Entre ses doigts distraits il tord le pâle éclair;
Le grand serpent lui semble un cheveu dans la mer.
Il est le grand poete, il est le grand prophète.
Il est la base, il est le centre, il est le faîte;
Il est celui qui songe, il est celui qui voit;
Il connaît l’avenir auquel tout homme a droit,
L’Éden soleil, l’abîme et ses chambres funèbres.
Ceux qui marchent sans lui s’en vont dans les ténèbres.
Il ordonne à la nuit d’envelopper le jour.
Il met la mort, archer, au créneau de la tour.
Les cèdres du Liban, pareils à de vieux prêtres,
Parlent de lui tout bas; l’ombre de tous les êtres
S’incline devant lui les matins et les soirs.
Les vierges à ses pieds, dans de purs encensoirs,
Font brûler un parfum composé des prières
De tous ceux que le monde appelle ses lumières,
De tous les saints qui sont sur terre et dans le ciel;
Cette blanche fumée enveloppe l’autel,
Et l’Incréé, caché sous des voiles de flammes,
Se penche, respirant la douce odeur des âmes.
Les colonnes des cieux s’étonnent devant lui;
Ces hauts piliers, chargés de ce dôme inouï,
Frissonnent éperdus à son souffle, et ressemblent
À leur propre reflet dans des ondes qui tremblent.
Ô Dieu! roi! père! asile! espoir du criminel!
Éternel laboureur! moissonneur éternel!
Maître à la première heure et juge à la dernière!
C’est lui qui fit le monde avec de la lumière!
Le firmament est clair de sa sérénité.
Par moments, dans l’azur splendide et redouté,
Ô mystère! il se fait des silences d’une heure;
Personne en haut ne chante et nul en bas ne pleure;
L’ange abaisse, pensif, son clairon éclatant;
Dieu médite; le ciel rêve; l’enfer attend.
Et c’est ce mot qui sort de l’ombre: Je pardonne.

Le griffon s’effaça, comme l’éclair qui tonne, Dans une brume où rien ne semblait se mouvoir.

VII

Et je vis au-dessus de ma tête un point noir;
Et ce point noir semblait une mouche dans l’ombre.

La nuit derrière moi, comme un hideux décombre,
Fuyait, et vers le point lointain, vague et vivant,
Je volai, m’enfonçant de plus en plus avant
Dans le bleu firmament doré d’une aube étrange;
Et cette mouche était un ange.
Et cet archange,
Immense, déployant sur mon front qui rêvait,
Deux ailes, l’une blanche et l’autre noire, avait
L’œil fixe, et sur son front le jour semblait éclore;
Et l’aile blanche allait se fondre dans l’aurore,
Et l’aile noire allait se perdre dans la nuit.

Dans ce ciel où mon vol profond m’avait conduit,
Mer où notre ciel noir semblait une presqu’île,
L’ange apparaissait fier, heureux, puissant, tranquille;

Si la nuit descendait et si le jour montait,
Il ne le savait pas; on eût dit qu’il était
À jamais immobile; ayant trouvé la sphère
Où l’extase n’a plus de mouvement à faire,
Et qu’il était créé, lui l’être grand et pur,
Pour ne rien regarder qui ne fût pas l’azur;
Il se tenait debout sans baisser la prunelle,
Comme s’il ne voyait qu’une chose éternelle.

Et, sentant que vers lui d’en bas quelqu’un venait,
— Qu’es-tu? dit l’ange, beau comme l’astre qui naît,
Et sans tourner vers moi ses yeux ni sa figure;
Et je lui dis: — O front voisin de l’aube pure,
Je suis l’être à qui plaît la tombe dans l’exil.
L’ange me regarda. — Demeure, me dit-il.

Puis, et je vis alors qu'il tenait une palme,
Il se mit à parler au gouffre:

— L'Être est calme.
Dieu vit. Le Oui du jour et le Non de la nuit
Sont deux larves qu'un souffle obscur forme et détruit;
Le mot noir est un grain de cendre dans la brume,
O gouffre, et le mot blanc est un flocon d'écume;
L'infini ne sait point ce qu'on murmure en bas;
Moi, j'écoute et j'entends. Shiva dit: — Dieu n'est pas,
Et du crime de tout personne n'est coupable.
Hermès dit: — L'invisible erre dans l'impalpable.
— Deux dieux, dit Zoroastre. Un désordre normal.
L'être, n'est le combat du bien contre le mal. —
Orphée au chant profond dit: — Les dieux semblent être;
Mais quand on les contemple, on les voit disparaître;
Tant la Fatalité, larve sans front, sans yeux,
Sans cœur, étreint la terre et l'enfer et les cieux.
Moïse dit: — Il n'est qu'un Dieu. Dieu crée et venge.
L'homme est une ombre, et meurt. — Et Jésus au front d'ange
Dit: — Dieu pardonne. Il rend les bons au paradis.
L'âme humaine survit à l'homme. — Et moi, je dis,
— Car, sur chaque échelon de l'échelle où meurt l'ombre,
Le verbe lumineux succède au verbe sombre;
On monte à la parole après le bégaiement
Je dis:

Dieu, c'est le vrai. Ni vengeur, ni clément;
Il est juste. Venger l'affront, c'est le connaître,
Et c'est le mériter. Être clément, c'est être
Injuste pour tous eux qu'on ne pardonne pas.
Quand tu vis Sabaoth, aigle, tu te trompas.
Griffon, qui sur ton aile as porté l'évangile,
Ecoute. Écoutez tous! Zoroastre est d'argile;
Shiva, qui n'est qu'un sage et que l'Inde croit dieu,
Est un morceau de terre; Orphée au regard bleu
A senti son squelette au sépulcre descendre;

Et le voleur du feu, Prométhée, est de cendre;
Moïse n’est pas près du Seigneur Jésus-Christ
N’est pas près du Seigneur; nul prophète n’écrit
Près de Dieu; nul archange ailé, nul personnage,
Nul saint: l’Eternité n’a pas de voisinage.
Écoutez! Gravissez le réel pas à pas.
Dieu n’est point le pêcheur qui jette des appâts
Au pauvre être fuyant que l’appétit assiège;
Et son bonheur n’est pas de prendre l’homme au piège.

Pas d’enfer éternel. Quoi, l’être aux instants courts,
Quoi, le vivant rapide enchaîné pour toujours!
Quoi, des illusions, des erreurs, des risées,
Quoi, des fautes d’un jour et d’une ombre, écrasées
Par ce roc immobile et monstrueux, jamais!
Dieu se faisant bourreau du haut des clairs sommets!
Dieu, pire que Shylock, le vil rogneur de piastres!
L’Incréé, couronné de comètes et d’astres,
Tenaillant dans sa cave un moucheron puni!
La grandeur s’acharnant aux petits! L’infini
Donnant la question à l’insecte qui pleure!
L’Éternité tordant les minutes de l’heure!
Quoi! ce juge aurait soif, quoi! ce père aurait faim
De l’angoisse sans borne et du-tourment sans fin!
Il aurait pour travail la souffrance, et pour joie
De faire écarteler, dans l’enfer qui flamboie,
L’homme, atome éperdu, sanglant, épouvanté,
Aux quatre vents de l’ombre et de l’immensité!
Chassez ce songe, vous, fantômes, qui le faites!
Quoi! ces mondes créés dans des robes de fêtes,
Quoi! la vie et le jour, l’éther, le firmament,
L’azur, l’océan perle et l’astre diamant,:
Cette resplendissante et profonde nature,
Ne seraient qu’une chambre énorme de torture!

Et dans les vastes cieux la constellation,
Du gouffre émerveillé sublime vision,

Mêlant l’étoile bleue et blanche au soleil rouge,
Éclatante, serait la chandelle du bouge!
Que quelqu’un ait rêvé cela, c’est mon ennui.

Et, comme les damnés, hier, demain, aujourd’hui,
Toujours, brûlent au feu qui ne doit pas s’éteindre;
Et, comme ce serait blâmer. Dieu que les plaindre;
Ce serait supposer qu’il peut être meilleur;
En outre, comme, étant larme, angoisse et douleur,
La pitié ferait tache au paradis; et, comme
Dieu ne doit rien cacher de sa justice a l’homme,
À l’âme, à l’ange, aux saints, et que l’éternel feu,
L’enfer, est un côté de la vertu de Dieu;
Comme, alors, les élus devant voir la géhenne,
Il faut qu’elle les charme, et que pour eux la peine
Se résolve en bonheur, et qu’avec son tourment
L’enfer soit pour le”ciel un assaisonnement,
Et que l’ange se plaise au sanglot qui s’élève;
Le paradis n’est plus qu’un balcon de la Grève,
Où l’on vient voir, avec un sourire serein,
Brûler la Brinvilliers et rouer vif Mandrin,
Où l’on vient savourer l’agonie âpre et lente,
Et voir l’effet que font l’huile et la poix bouillante
Sur Caïn, et Judas hurler, et Lucifer
Rugir à chaque coup de la barre de fer!
Il se tut; puis rouvrit ses deux lèvres vermeilles
D’où les mots s’envolaient ainsi qûe des abeilles,
Comme s’ouvre la ruche après que l’aube a lui
Personne n’est puni pour la faute d’autrui.
D’ailleurs, hommes, le fruit est fait, pour qu’on le cueille.

Le livre monde est fait pour qu’on tourne la feuille.
Savoir, c’est vivre; et vivre est le droit. Adorer,
C’est connaître; et la porte aime à voir l’âme entrer.
‘Quelle que soit la lutte ou la peine ou l’épreuve,
Chaque fois que l’homme, humble et que le doute abreuve,
Saisit un fait nouveau dans l’ombre, il a goûté

De Dieu, de la lumière et de l’éternité.

C’est bien. C’est vers le jour une marche gagnée.
À grands coups de science, à grands coups de cognée,
Les vivants ont raison, dans leur obscurité,
D’ébaucher la statue immense Vérité.
L’homme est le noir sculpteur, le mystère est le marbre.
Faites. Ève a raison de se dresser vers l’arbre;
Prométhée a raison, Galilée a raison;
Colomb, qui cueille un monde au fond de l’horizon,
Fait bien; Dante envahit la nuit cercle par cercle;
Spinosa du néant lève l’affreux couvercle;
Fulton dompte la mer que Xercès révolta;
Galvani forge et mêle, à côté de Volta,
Les fluides, force, âme, aimants, métaux, mercures;
Mesmer tressaillant touche aux frontières obscures;
C’est ton droit, homme. Eschyle et Shakespeare ont raison,
Ô terre, d’étoiler ton plafond de prison.
Roemer arrête au vol la lumière ravie;
Guttenberg fait du jour, de l’amour, de la vie
Avec le plomb fondu du vieux supplice humain;
Pythagore soumet l’ombre a son examen;
Papin attelle à l’homme, à la terre charmée,
À l’âme; au char de feu, le noir cheval fumée;
Halley de la comète est l’éclatant héraut;
Leibniz offre à l’esprit l’évasion d’en haut,
Et, tressant le calcul, la pensée et l’étude,
Jette dans l’infini l’échelle de Latude;
Harvey dit: le sang coule, et l’homme vit! Képler
Prend dans les cieux l’étoile, et Franklin prend l’éclair;
Jackson ôte l’angoisse à la chair qu’il mutile;
Ils sont tous dans le vrai, dans le beau, dans l’utile.
Allez! prenez la bêche et bêchez le jardin!
Mongolfier veut l’azur en attendant l’Éden;
Bien. Et Luther fait bien d’ouvrir l’âme, et Vésale
Éclairant le dedans de la mort colossale,
Fait bien. L’audace est sainte et Dieu bénit l’effort.

Tous les glaives de feu derrière Adam ont tort.

Monte, esprit. Dieu t’attend. Dans ses deux mains de flamme,
Équilibre, il tient l’astre, et, justice, il tient l’âme;
Et, l’univers ayant ce but: voir et savoir,
Pour l’astre et pour l’esprit rayonner est devoir.
Monte, et ne tremble pas. C’est une âpre montée.
Quelquefois l’âme hésite, à mi-côte arrêtée.
L’esprit humain qui va, voit devant lui l’écueil,
L’escarpement, l’horreur, le chaos, le cercueil;

Et le sentier toujours plus sinistre et plus roide.
Ce marcheur a le front baigné de sueur froide.
Va, marcheur! Mal et Bien portent à leurs deux bouts
L’effroi. Souvent, féroce au bonheur des hiboux,
Le, progrès, rudoyant tous les petits bien-êtres,
Vomit tous les rayons dans toutes les fenêtres.
Le bien est sans pitié. Traverse sans trembler
Tout ce que tu verras autour de toi hurler;
Le progrès a parfois l’allure vaste et fauve;
Et le bien bondissant effare: ceux qu’il sauve.
Va donc! Double le pas! L’horizon s’élargit.
Va! monte! à chaque étape une larve surgit;
C’est l’avenir debout dans sa figure étrange
L’avenir semble spectre avant d’apparaître-ange.
Marche! Qui veut aller à lui doit être prêt,
À tous les grands combats; l’homme se tromperait
S’il croyait qu’on-obtient Dieu sans; peine, et qu’on pousse
L’enfer dans le-tombeau sans lutte et; sans secousse.
L’enfantement du mieux a ses convulsions.
Tout dans les cieux se fait par révolutions.
Qu’est-ce que-le progrès? un lumineux désastre,
Tombant comme la bombe et restant comme l’astre.
L’avenir vient avec, le souffle d un grand vent.
Il chasse rudement les peuples en avant;
Il fait sous les gibets des tremblements de terre;
Il creuse brusquement sous l’erreur qu’il fait taire,

Sous tout ce qui fut lâche, atroce, vil, petit,
Des ouvertures d’ombre où le mal s’engloutit.
Va, lutte, Esprit de l’homme! il ne faut pas qu’on aille
S’imaginer le bien de facile trouvaille.
Le bien étonne; et l’âme a peur en le créant;
Il a la majesté suspecte du géant
Quand, écumant, avec une rumeur confuse,
Il sort, lion de l’antre, ou vague de l’écluse.
Oui, le, bien est une eau qui monte dans la nuit;
Il monte, il est torrent du passé qu’il détruit,
Il est le châtiment; il vient; pas de refuge;
Il monte, il est marée; il monte, il est déluge!
Sombre inondation de bonheur! ô terreur,
Dit l’homme! Et le génie, indomptable éclaireur,
Crie: O joie! — Allons, marche, esprit de l’homme! avance.
Accepte des fléaux l’énorme connivence!
Marche! Oui, souvent, douteux pour qui l’a souhaité,
Le progrès, effrayant à force de clarté,
A, quand il vient broyer le faux, l’abject, l’horrible,
Des apparitions de crinière terrible:
Sa promesse menace; et pour tout ce qui doit
Tomber, mourir, finir dans le jour qui s’accroît,
Faux dieux, faux prêtres, mage impur, juge vendable,
Son rire est le rictus de l’aube formidable.
Depuis Adam, depuis Noé, de temps en temps,
Le progrès, qui poursuit ses vaincus haletants,
Qui veut qu’on soit, qu’on marche et qu’on creuse et qu’on taille,
Pousse ses légions d’azur dans la bataille,
Ses penseurs constellés, éthérés, spacieux,
Tous ses olympiens vêtus d’un pan des cieux;
Euler le sidéral; le splendide Épicure,
Et, comme les chouans dans la Vendée obscure,
Les hommes du passé, lourds, troublés, nébuleux,
Disent en les voyant: fuyons! voici les bleus!
Et ces hommes divins, et ces hommes solaires
Font marcher leurs bienfaits aux pas de leurs colères.
Le bien saisit le mal et l’écrase à son tour.

Accepte l’incendie invincible du jour,
Homme! va! jette-toi dans ces gueules ouvertes
Qu’on nomme inventions, nouveautés, découvertes!
L’esprit humain, chercheur de Dieu, voit par moments
Les rayons s’irriter comme des flamboiements
Quand, poussant devant lui la foule coutumière,
Il va de l’hydre d’ombre à l’hydre de lumière!
N’importe! ne crains pas le progrès rugissant
Pour le sage, le bon, le juste et l’innocent!
Ne crains pas le progrès dévorant les ténèbres!
Trouvant les idéals par l’effort des algèbres!
Montant, géométrie et poésie, à Dieu!
Ne crains pas le progrès, conquérant de ciel bleu,
Sphynx qui fait vivre, archer de l’éternelle cible,
Montagnard du sublime et de l’inaccessible!
Suis ce monstre splendide, homme! car il est beau
De toutes es laideurs qu’on nomme Mirabeau,
Socrate, Camons, Cromwell, Tyrtée, Ésope;
Et, faisant le niveau du cèdre et de l’hysope;
Il apparaît, mêlé d’Homère, de Newton,
Et de Moïse, avec la face de Danton,
Et monte aux cieux portant la tête échevelée
De la nuit sombre au bout de sa pique étoilée!
C’est bien.
L’ange songeait, pareil au lys qui penche.
Il semblait ne vouloir voir que son aile blanche;
On eût dit qu’il chantait et priait tour à tour,
Et qu’il assoupissait et noyait dans le jour,
Ne se sentant plus vivre et palpiter qu’à peine;
Ses yeux demi fermés pleins de fierté sereine:
Mais l’autre aile tremblait sur son dos frémissant
Comme pour réveiller le grand esprit absent;
Il rouvrit par degrés ses yeux brillants de gloire,
Et reprit, regardant malgré lui l’aile noire:

— Oui, c’est vrai, l’ombre. — Hélas! quand donc l’Éden, l’hymen,
L’aube? ô noirs cauchemars du lourd sommeil humain!

Le crime originel! l’enfer! Ève et la pomme!
Lugubres visions! Hélas! hélas! pour l’homme,
Dieu ne se fait sentir que par sa pesanteur.
L’homme s’obstine à voir dans Dieu le tourmenteur,
Le boucher sombre, armant de tenailles tonnerres
Et de pinces éclairs ses poings tortionnaires,
Le tortureur sans frein, sans loi, sans cœur, sans but!
Il rêve dans les cieux l’effrayant Belzébuth!
Il se fait un azur, un mystère, une bible
Qu’emplit une façon d’Être Suprême horrible;
Les hommes font Dieu sombre!
Oui, quand l’immensité
Germe en religion dans leur cœur agité,
Voilà ce qu’en voyant l’absolu, leurs yeux voient!
Oui, Dieu monstre attisant les mondes qui flamboient!
L’homme voudrait au ciel arracher cet aveu!
Nous ne pouvons parler avec l’homme de Dieu
Sans mâcher quelque idée affreuse de supplice;
Démons dans le brasier, damnés sous le cilice,
Dieu borné par l’enfer sans:bornes, les pavés
De l’ombre à jamais pleins de pâles réprouvés!
Ceux-là, dans l’infini, comme tombe une pierre,
S’enfoncent, et, tremblants, ayant dans leur paupière
Le gouffre, vision et disparition,
Dévidant l’écheveau, de la damnation,
Pendent au fil sans fin d’une chute éternelle;.
Ceux-là râlent, saignant sous leur forme charnelle
Dans on ne: sait quel antre idéal et hideux!
Satan fait un coupable, et le ciel en veut deux;
Adam et l’homme. Ainsi, comme il est impossible
Que, lorsque l’innocent-dans le monde visible,
Pour la faute d’Adam est puni sans pitié,
Lui, le vrai criminel, ne soit pas châtié,
Adam aurait été conduit devant le juge,
Et là, sombre, à genoux, sans espoir, sans refuge,
Sur le ciel formidable et tendu d’un drap noir,
Lié sur une claie, affreux, terrible à voir,

Sous l’éternité morne abaissant son front blême,
Adam l’ingrat, Adam, le coupable suprême,
Ajoutant tous les maux de sa race à ses maux,
Souffrant, tronc monstrueux, dans ses mille rameaux,
Ayant pour cri le cri qui sort de tous les langes,
Serait exécuté par des bourreaux archanges!
Il serait à jamais supplicié là-haut!
Les hommes, ses enfants, auraient dans leur cachot
Pour plafond le dessous de l’échafaud du père!
Ces étoiles qu’on voit parfois, dans leur repaire,
Par des fentes du ciel s’échappant et glissant,
Tomber sur eux, seraient les gouttes dé son sang!
Ah! fais cela, toi, l’homme à qui l’horreur agrée,
Esprit de jour taché de-nuit, âme tigrée!
Homme de Louis onze et de Domitien,
Qui, dans les temps nouveaux comme dans l’âge ancien,
Mets l’âme et le cadavre à jamais en présence!
Qui t’appelles Jeffrye et t’es nommé Mézence!
O du bien et du mal amphibie effrayant,
Homme qui ne vois pas les anges s’enfuyant!
Fais-ces actions-là dans ta brume de crimes;
Mais ne les prête pas au songeur des abîmes!
Ne les impute pas au Dieu vivant!
L’esprit
S’arrêta, regarda le gouffre, puis reprit:

Cependant, dans tes jours de piété, toi, l’homme,
Tu rends hommage à Dieu; tu dis: « Je souffre. En somme, «J’ai l’âme. Ame, ici-bas je ne suis pas fini.
«Tout est bien. Je vivrai par la mort rajeuni.
«Qu’importe que mon corps se blesse et se meurtrisse!
«Mon âme ira montrer à Dieu la cicatrice.
«Dieu, le débiteur sûr, s’est: toujours acquitté.
«Je suis le créancier de la grande équité.
«Souffrir, traîner la vie est l’affaire d’une heure;
«L’astre me tire hors de l’ombre inférieure.
«Mes maux obligent Dieu; le baume après le fiel;

«Tout homme en pleurs a droit au regard éternel.
«Tous, l’esclave, le nègre aux reins ceints d’une pagne,
«Le casseur de cailloux songeant dans la campagne,
«Le vil forçat, roulant quelque horrible rocher,
«N’ont qu’à gémir pour voir Jéhovah se pencher.
«L’oubli que ferait Dieu du dernier et du moindre
«Suffirait pour ôter au jour le droit de poindre,
«Pour que l’univers ploie et tremble comme un jonc,
«Pour que l’étoile ait peur et dise: qu’est-ce donc?
«Et pour qu’au seuil de l’ombre aux profondes marées,
«Les constellations se dressent effarées!
«Oui; je souffre, mais j’ai, dans mon accablement,
«Hypothèque sur l’aube et sur le firmament,
«Sur tous les éléments que, vivants, nous subîmes,
«Sur l’équilibre immense et sombre des abîmes!
«Je suis aux fers, j’ai soif; j’ai faim, j’ai froid, j’ai chaud;
«Mais le paradis brille aux fentes du cachot.

«De ce monde si noir l’ombre est à claire-voie.
«Dieu juste ne veut pas que ma larme me noie;
«Jamais le port ne manque au pauvre matelot;
«Ma tempête aboutit à l’azur; mon sanglot
«Sourit subitement et s’achève cantique.
«Mourir, c’est naître à Dieu. Je suis Caton d’Utique,
«Je ne veux point du bât que portent les romains,
«Et je tombe indigné, poignardé de mes mains,
«Sanglant; je suis Socrate, et je bois la ciguë;
«Je suis Jean Huss, ma chair meurt dans la flamme aiguë;
«Mais j’ai l’éternité. Je suis l’atome humain,
«Mais l’enfer aujourd’hui promet le ciel demain;
«Nous luttons, nous râlons, nous gémissons, qu’importe!
«Pas un cri n’est perdu, pas un tourment n’avorte;
«Le paradis se fait de toutes les douleurs
«Qui deviennent baisers sur le front des meilleurs.
«Le deuil conquiert les cieux comme l’aigle sa proie.
«La racine malheur s’épanouit en joie
«Dans cet Éden sublime où la terre fleurit;

«Mes maux seront un jour mes biens; je suis l’esprit.
«Misère, angoisse, pleurs, tout ce que nous saignâmes
«Se retrouve en rayons dans la main de nos âmes;
«Le tombeau, que la nuit flamboyante bénit,
«Murmure: Ciel! avec ses lèvres de granit;
«Là-haut toute souffrance en bonheur est comptée;
«Dieu, ce soleil qui fait même une ombre à l’athée,
«Serait injuste et faux si c’était autrement.
«Le sépulcre n’est pas une bouche qui ment.
«J’ai la peine d’un jour, mais j’ai l’âme immortelle!”
Alors, homme, pourquoi la brute souffre-t-elle?
Pourquoi bats-tu ton âne à grands coups de bâton?
Quel est son lendemain? Ton âne est-il Caton?
Pourquoi le héron gris, qui s’enfuit dans les brumes,
Sent-il le noir faucon fouiller du bec ses plumes?
Pourquoi, troussant ta manche et tachant tes habits,
Plonges-tu les couteaux aux gorges des brebis?
Pourquoi bois-tu le sang ayant tondu la laine?
Pourquoi vas-tu traînant tes buffles dans la plaine
Par cet anneau de fer qui perce leurs naseaux?
Qu’est-ce que l’hydre doit penser au fond des eaux?
Vois ce saumon d’argent: vers ses pauvres ouïes
Les flammes du brasier montent épanouies;

Il était fait pour fuir sous l’eau des bleus ruisseaux.
Vois. Juge. Quoi! la carpe est coupée en morceaux,
Elle est jetée à l’huile ardente, toute vive!
Quoi!.l’huître vit et souffre aux dents de ton convive!
Et c’est, tout!.Te voilà satisfait dans ta chair
Quand, devant un grand tas de fagots, vif et clair,
Ta broche plie, offrant les lièvres et les cailles.
À la bûche qui rit, monstre aux rouges écailles,
Et livrant l’humble essaim qui jouait, qui volait,
Le hallier, et la sauge avec le serpolet,
L’alouette et les prés, l’étang et la macreuse,
Aux mâchoires de feu de l’âtre qui se creuse!
Les charbons dans la cendre ouvrent leurs sombres yeux.

En voyant ce brasier riche, éclatant, joyeux,
Le passant, à travers la vitre illuminée,
S’empourpre; et, contemplant ta haute cheminée,
Tu ne te doutes pas que, toi-même, tu ris
À la géhenne horrible, et que, rempli de cris,
D’engrenages hideux et de pinces rougies,
Ce beau foyer de pierre, espoir de tes orgies,
Ce réchaud où la mort frémit à pleine voix,
Où les battements d’ailes et les soupirs des bois
S’en vont, chants des vanneaux et baisers des sarcelles,
Dans la fumée affreuse en fauves étincelles,
Cet antre, où l’on entend, quand on vient s’y pencher,
Tous les pétillements du rire et du bûcher,
Où l’oiseau fume, où meurt le nid, où flambe l’orme,
Est un des trous béants de la fournaise énorme!
C’est l’autel vil du ventre et du plaisir charnel;
Et le fond communique au mystère éternel!
Cours au désert; la vie est-elle plus joyeuse?
Que d’effrayants combats dans le creux d’une yeuse
Entre la guêpe tigre et l’abeille du miel!
Va-t’en aux lieux profonds, aux rocs voisins du ciel,
Aux caves des souris, aux ravins à panthères;
Regarde ce bloc d’ombre et ce tas de mystères;
Fouille l’air, l’onde, l’herbe; écoute l’affreux bruit
Des broussailles, le cri des Alpes dans la nuit,
Le hurlement sans nom des jongles tropicales;
Quelle vaste douleur! Les hyènes bancales
Rôdent; sur la perdrix le milan tombe à pic;
La martre infâme mord le flanc du porc-épic;
La chèvre, les deux pieds de devant dans la haie,
Voit la couleuvre et bêle avec terreur; l’orfraie
S’agite dans l’effroi du problème inconnu;
Sur le crâne pelé du mont sinistre et nu
Le trou de l’aigle est plein de carnage et de fiente;
La chouette, en qui vit la nuit terrifiante,
Tout en broyant du bec le rat qu’elle surprit,

Songe; le vautour blanc lui prend sa proie, et rit;
L’éléphant marche avec un fracas d’épouvante;
L’affreux jararrara, comme une onde vivante,
Autour des hauts bambous et des joncs tortueux
Se roule, et les roseaux deviennent monstrueux;
Le museau de la fouine au poulailler se plonge;
Sur la biche aux yeux bleus le léopard s’allonge;
Le bison sur son dos emporte le couquard
Qui lui suce le sang pendant qu’il fuit hagard;
La baudroie erre et semble un monstre chimérique;
Quand le grand-duc cornu dans les bois d’Amérique
Plane, l’essaim fuyant des ramiers prend son vol.
Vois. L’oblique hibou guette le rossignol.
Le loup montre sa gueule et l’homme son visage,
Le désert frémit. Vois, les pigeons de passage
Qui vont; pillant le houx et le genévrier,
L’ours qui sort de son antre au mois de février,
Le phoque au poil luisant qui semble frotté d’huile,
Tout le fourmillement des brutes, le reptile,
L’autour, le scorpion tapi dans les lieux frais,
Le renard, le puma, ce grand chat des forêts
Qui fait en miaulant le bruit d’un bœuf qui gronde,
Le lynx, l’impur condor à la prunelle ronde,
Brigands que la nuit cache en son vaste recel,
Le jaguar à l’affût près, des sources de sel,
Les files de chameaux des horizons arabes,
L’ibis mangeur de vers; le rat mangeur de crabes;
Les musquas rongeurs pris au fond des lacs vitreux
Par la glace et l’hiver, se dévorant entr’eux,
Et les boas nageurs et les boas énygres,
Et les vipères, sœurs du crâne plat des tigres,
Le mulot, la bigaille, et, sortant du ruisseau,
L’horrible caïman à tête de pourceau,
Méduse, cachalot, orphe, requin, marbrée,
Baleine à la mâchoire infecte et délabrée,
Mouches s’engloutissant au gouffre engoulevent,
L’unau, le fourmilier traître, lent et bavant,

L’once au jurement fauve, aux moustaches roidies,
Bêtes de l’ombre errant comme des Canidies,
Tout souffre; grand, petit, le hardi, le prudent,
Tout rencontre un chasseur, une griffe, une dent!
Une sorte d’horreur implacable enveloppe
L’aigle et le colibri, le tigre et l’antilope.
L’eau noire fait songer le grave pélican.
Partout la gueule s’ouvre à côté du volcan;
Partout les bois ont peur partout la bête tremble
D’un frisson de colère ou d’épouvante; il semble
À celui qui ne voit l’être que d’un côté
Qu’une haine inouïe emplit l’immensité.

Hommes, les animaux, confuses multitudes;
Saignent dans vos cités et dans leurs solitudes;
La bête pleure, rampe, agonise. Pourquoi?.
Et si le lion dit: qu’est-ce que j’ai fait, moi?
Que pourras-tu répondre à ce montagnard triste?
Quoi! Timour est, Nemrod sûrvit, Caïphe existe;
Ils souffrent; mais leur âme est là, blanche et-rêvant,
Qui, prête pour les cieux, frémit dans l’ombre au vent,
Et l’ours et le chacal râlent sans espérance!
Et Dieu voit tout le reste avec indifférence,
Tandis que, regardant fuir Tibère envolé,
Le grand lion rugit sous le ciel étoilé!
Est-ce que cette rosse efflanquée, et qu’on tire
Par la bride au charnier, passe sans te rien dire?
Pauvre être qui s’en va, ses os trouant sa peau,
Boitant, suivi d’un tas d’enfants, riant troupeau,
Qui viennent lui jeter des pierres et qui chantent!
Est-ce que Montfaucon, ce lieu spectre que hantent
Les noirs Laubardemont, les Maillards, les Vouglans,
Ce sphynx mystérieux des abattoirs sanglants,
Devient soudain pour toi clair comme l’eau de roche,
Parce qu’il démolit sa potence, décroche
L’affreux squelette humain de son fétide étal,
Et se fait, d’étrangleur légal, royal, fatal,

Équarrisseur tuant la brute à tant par tête,
Et, de bourreau de l’homme, assassin de la bête!
Parce qu’il a changé le sang du tablier,
Tout est dit! Retournez l’effrayant sablier,
.Ou chargez-en le sable, et faites qu’il y tienne
De la cendre animale au lieu de cendre humaine,
Plus d’énigme! la bête appartient à la mort;
C’est l’ordre, et tout est bien. Ni doute, ni remord:
Quoi! partout, crocs, bouchers, égorgements, tueries!
Quoi! dans les noirs combats du bœuf des Asturies,
Ivresse populaire et passe-temps royaux,
Le cheval éperdu, marche sur ses boyaux,
Le taureau lui crevant le ventre à coups de cornes!
Quoi! vous jetez des cœurs sanglants aux coins des bornes,
Les pattes des oiseaux et leur pauvre duvet,
Des entrailles, des yeux, et tout cela vivait!
Les chênes qu’adoraient les fauves troglodytes
Sous la hache à grand bruit tombent c’est; vous le dites,
De la nature morte et l’on peut la tuer.
Le chien aux coups de fouet a dû s’habituer;
La bête doit souffrir sous le dieu qui foudroie;
Tout l’arbre qu’on abat et le pavé qu’on broie,
Tout souffre pour souffrir! C’est bien? Iniquité!
De quel droit, moi l’esprit, suis-je dans la clarté?

Pourquoi faut-il que toi, matière, tu pâtisses!
Quoi! l’astre et le caillou seraient des injustices!
Une injustice en haut! une injustice en bas!
Quoi! le porc dans l’ordure et l’âne sous les bâts,
À jamais! La souffrance à l’angoisse s’enlace;
Puis, rien! quoi, l’homme, roi! quoi, l’être, populace!
Adam seul serait graine et sa seule âme fleur!
Sabaoth vannerait dans un van de douleur
Le monde, et l’homme seul passerait par le crible!
S’il en était ainsi, tout deviendrait terrible,
L’univers fourmillant de bêtes s’emplirait
D’un long rugissement ainsi qu’une forêt,

Les pierres hurleraient: injuste! injuste! injuste!
L’arbre en convulsion, la broussaille, l’arbuste,
Se tordraient comme ceux qui sont sur un grabat;
Et la création ne serait qu’un combat
Des monstres révoltés contre Dieu, belluaire.
S’il en était ainsi, ce monde mortuaire,
Chaos infâme en proie au furieux autan,
Ne vaudrait même pas le crachat de Satan!
S’il en était ainsi, créer serait un crime;
Une exécration, sortirait de l’abîme,
Te dis-je, on entendrait les brutes gémissant,
Et le loup sans reproche, et le tigre innocent,
Devant les éléments cités en témoignage,
Devant l’infini triste où l’équité surnage,
Dénonçant Dieu, bourreau masqué du monstre obscur.
Alors, sur la sellette immense de l’azur,
L’horreur souffletterait cet accusé sinistre.
Quoi, le malheur pour œuvre et le mal pour ministre!
Quoi! ployés à jamais sous un arrêt hideux,
Tant d’êtres si nombreux qu’Adam n’est rien près d’eux!
Quoi, pas de lendemain! quoi, pas de récompense!
Quoi, l’homme seul dirait: je vivrai, car je pense!
Qu’a-t-il fait pour cela? l’être, galérien!
Fouettés, brisés, broyés, pétrifiés, puis rien!
Se tordre! et n’être plus, pour dernière aventure!
L’évanouissement au bout de la torture!
Le supplice, et c’est tout! quoi, cet être vaincu,
Quoi! cette créature innocente a vécu,
Souffert, saigné, traîné la terreur, bu la haine,
Et traversé d’un bout à l’autre la géhenne,
Tandis que je rayonne et luis, moi séraphin,
Et quand, lasse, elle tombe, agonisante enfin,
Et pose sur la nuit sa tête exténuée,
Dieu ne lui doit rien! vide, effacement, nuée,
Silence; et le néant, oreiller de l’enfer!
Ô loi dont frémirait même un livre de fer,
Qui, par Néron dictée en un éclat de rire,

Ferait pleurer le bronze où l'on voudrait l'écrire!

Quoi! je suis une bête et fais ce que je puis!
L'abîme! et puis l'abîme, et puis l'abîme, et puis
L'abîme! O désespoir! ce serait la sentence!

Mais toi, l'élu risible, l'homme à quelle-distance
Es-tu de l'animal? Le sais-tu? Ta maison
Est celle du castor; l'Égypte avait raison
D'être inquiète au seuil de la grande syringe;
Es-tu sûr de ne pas jeter l'ombre d'un singe?
Quoi! l'animal n'est rien! vaux-tu mieux par hasard?
Le flatteur sait-il mieux ramper que le-lézard?
L'envieux a-t-il plus d'esprit que la vipère?
Qui, de l'homme ou du porc, est le fils ou le père?
Vaux-tu le geai voleur que tu prends à l'appeau?
Je voudrais bien savoir ce que c'est que ta peau,
Et si les astres, pleins de sombres rêveries,
En la voyant pendue à vos écorcheries,
S'en étonneraient plus, dans le gouffre des cieux,
Que de la peau d'un bœuf aux yeux mystérieux,
Ou du cerf au poil roux jaspé de taches blanches
Dont l'œil effaré fait des lueurs dans les branches!
Plus d'un secret étrange entre le monstre et toi
Palpite; et parfois-l'homme en sent le vague effroi
Il est des êtres noirs au-dessous de la bête,
Qui, miasme, poison, peste, aquilon, tempête,
Ouvrant en bas la gueule, aveugle des fléaux,
Font à tous les vivants la guerre du chaos.
Quoique sa dent te morde et que ton bras l'assomme,
L'animal est ton frère, et la bête avec l'homme
Contre la nature hydre a souvent combattu;
Elle te communique une obscure vertu,.
Et la peau du lion aidait le grand Hercule.
Ah! tu te crois plein jour et ris du crépuscule!
La pensée est ton lot! Dieu n'a rien réussi
Hors toi! Tu te crois rare et parmi tous choisi,

Parce qu’un vent d’en haut parfois souffle en ta brise,
Et que, de temps en temps, criant: Brahma! Moïse!
Isis! ou murmurant: Lamma Sabacthani,
Relayant d’autres sœurs dont le temps est fini,
Une. Religion, dans l’ombre ou la lumière,
Paraît à ton chevet, et, nouvelle infirmière,
Vient charger l’oreiller de ton lit d’hôpital!
Toi providentiel, et le reste fatal!
Mais, voyons, raisonnons un peu; sois économe
D’extase pour toi-même, et regarde-toi.

L’homme,
Titan du relatif et nain de l’absolu,
Se croit astre, et se voit de clarté chevelu;

Homme, l’orgueil t’enivre! et c’est un vin de l’ombre.
Redescends! redescends! tout à l’heure, âpre et sombre,
L’aigle en rudoyant l’homme avait raison souvent.
Parce que je t’ai dit, moi: c’est bien! en avant!
Ne t’en va pas cogner les soleils, larve noire!
Épargne à l’infini l’assaut de l’infusoire.
Voyons, qu’es-tu? peux-tu toi-même t’affirmer?
À quoi te résous-tu? douter? haïr? aimer?
Que crois-tu? Que sais-tu? Tu n’as dans ta science
Pas même un parti pris d’ombre ou de confiance.
Tu sais au hasard. Lois que ton œil calcula,
Faits, chiffres, procédés, classements, tout cela
Contient-il Dieu? réponds. Ta science est l’ânesse
Qui va, portant sa charge au moulin de Gonesse,
Sans savoir, en marchant front bas et l’œil troublé,
Si c’est un sac de cendre ou bien un sac de blé.
Que dit l’artiste ému, le prêtre en sa chapelle,
Le vacher retournant le fumier sous sa pelle,
Le pâtre à l’œil vitreux, l’ermite, l’érudit?
Que dit l’anatomiste au trappiste? Que dit
Le plongeur du cadavre au mineur du squelette?
Que dit le médecin au géologue, athlète

Qui lutte avec la terre et tombe exténué?
Et l’algébriste exact, par l’espace hué,
Que dit-il, ce berger des chiffres indociles?
Que dit le devin, roi des stryges et des psylles,
Poussant vers l’inconnu qu’à ton vol tu soumets,
Quelque système aveugle ou boîteux qui jamais
N’arrive au bout d’un fait sans trouble et sans encombre?
Que dit le philosophe, aventurier de l’ombre?
Et le poète ami des cieux où l’aube point?
Que disent, frémissants, pâles, la pioche au poing,
Tous ces noirs fossoyeurs de la fosse Science?
Homme! ils disent tous: nuit, misère, imprévoyance,
Erreur, néant, fumée, imbécillité, deuil.
Et c’est avec cela que tu fais ton orgueil!
Jour coudoie ignorance en ton savoir hybride.
Tu ne sais pas tenir ta fantaisie en bride.
Tu vas, tu vas, tu vas! Où vas-tu?
Vanité!
Tu crois qu’en te créant Dieu t’a mis de côté,
Que ton berceau contient toutes les origines,
Et que tout se condense en toi; tu t’imagines
Qu’à mesure que tout naissait et surgissait,
L’Éternel t’en donnait quelque chose; et que c’est
Sous ton crâne que Dieu pensif traça l’épure
De ce monde qu’emplit son auréole pure.
Tu dis: j’ai la raison, la vertu, la beauté.
Tu dis: Dieu fut très las pour m’avoir inventé,

Et tu crois l’égaler chaque fois que tu bouges.
Allons! mire-toi donc un peu dans les peaux-ronges!
Que dis-tu-des Yolofs, barbouillés de roucou,
Attachant des colliers d’oreilles à leur cou,
Et des hùrons ornés de stupides balafres?
Mire-toi dans les noirs, mire-toi dans les cafres,
Dans les Yoways; trouant leurs nez, peignant leurs peaux,
Empoisonnant leur flèche aux glandes dés crapauds!
Apprends ceci, rayon apprends ceci, pensée

L’ange commence à l’homme et l’homme au chimpanzée;
L’orang-outang ton frère, est, un homme à tâtons.
Tu peux bien l’accepter, puisque nous t’acceptons!
Mire-toi d’ans tes goûts, dans tes mœurs, dans tes races!
Dans tes amours brutaux dans tes instincts voraces;
Dans l’auge où nous voyons boire tes appétits!
Ton histoire! tes lois! ton bruit! ton cliquetis!
Te figures-tu pas que tes gestes, tes guerres,
Tes cris, troublent l’azur de leurs fracas vulgaires,
Et que le jour mesure à ton pas son déclin?
Crois-tu pas que le ciel est guelfe ou gibelin,
Que l’Être est Armagnac ou Bourguignon, que l’astre
Connaît oui, non, Genève et, Rome, York et Lancastre,
Et que le monde pend à ton sacré cheveu?
Tes princes? tes sultans? tes rois? demande un peu
Ce que de ta grandeur pensent les astronomes.
Parles-en à Newton. Parce que tu te nommes
César ou Henri quatre, et qu’un beau jour Casca
Ou Ravaillac, te prit en traître, s’embusqua
Dans l’ombre, et te coupa la veine cardiaque,
Crois-tu pas déranger l’énorme zodiaque?
Et quant à tes cités, Babels de monuments
Où parlent à la fois tous les événements,
Qu’est-ce:que cela pèse? arches, tours, pyramides,
Je serais peu: surpris qu’en ses rayons humides,
L’aube les emportât pêle-mêle un matin
Avec les gouttes d’eau de la sauge et du thym.
Et ton architecture étagée et superbe
Finit par n’être plus qu’un tas de pierre et d’herbe
Où, la tête au soleil, siffle l’aspic subtil:
Ton marbre, dont tu fais des dieux, que devient-il?
Le temps court, et monnoye en courant tes statues;
Ton bronze qu’à tes rois guerriers tu prostitues,
On en fait des liards qui valent les héros.
Ton marbre, chaux et plâtre, emplit les tombereaux.
Homme, le papillon qui vit une semaine,
Le puceron qu’un jour crée et qu’un jour remmène,

L’éphémère, enviant cette longévité,
Égalent ton granit devant l’immensité.

Ah! tes œuvres, vraiment, parlons-en. Meurtre, envie,
Sang! Tu construis la mort quand Dieu sème la vie!
Et, pendant que Dieu fait les chênes sur les monts,
Les baobabs pareils à des pieds de mammons,
L’arbre a pain, le palmier splendide, les mélèzes,
D’où sort un chant pareil à la voix des falaises,
L’olivier, le figuier, le cèdre, le nopal,
Tu fais l’arbre gibet, l’arbre croix, l’arbre pal,
L’affreux arbre supplice, énorme, vaste, infame,
Cyprès dont les rameaux, faisant la nuit sur l’âme,
Sonnent lugubrement comme des enchaînés,
Dont chaque branche, hélas! porte deux condamnés,
Et penche en frissonnant deux spectres sur l’abîme;
Au soleil, du côté de l’homme, la victime,
Et du côté de Dieu, dans l’ombre, le bourreau!

Ah! tu te crois divin! tu places ton zéro
En regard de cet orbe inouï qu’emplit l’onde
De l’océan sagesse et qu’on nomme le monde!
Ah! géant! tout savoir, ce n’est pour toi qu’un jeu.
Pourquoi te contenter d’un à peu près de Dieu?
Pourquoi ne pas tirer l’abîme à clair? Colosse!
Plus haut qu’Atlas, et plus que les oiseaux véloce!
Pourquoi te contenter de tes religions?
Lorsque dans l’infini nous nous réfugions,
Pourquoi ne pas nous suivre, âme au cercueil penchante,
Et tout prendre? Pourquoi, ce que l’abîme chante,
Ne pas le déchiffrer? tu n’as qu’à le vouloir!
Si tu ne l’entends pas, tu peux du moins le voir,
L’hymne éternel vibrant sous les éternels voiles.
Les constellations sont des gammes d’étoiles;
Et les vents par moments te chantent des lambeaux
Du chant prodigieux qui remplit les tombeaux.
Allons, fais un effort, esprit plus grand que l’aigle;

Prends ton échelle, prends ta plume, prends ta règle;
Toute cette musique à l’ineffable bruit
Est là sur le registre effrayant de la nuit;
Va, monte; tu n’as plus qu’à tracer des portées
Sous les septentrions et sous les voies-lactées
Pour lire à l’instant même, au fond des cieux vermeils,
La symphonie écrite en notes de soleils!
Qu’attends-tu, dis? Va donc au fond de Dieu! va vite!
Ah! souffle du fumier que le parfum évite,
Homme, ombre! coureur vain de tous les pas perdus!
Marchand des Christs trahis et des Josephs vendus!
Va! tu sors de la fange, et ta mère malsaine,
C’est la matière infecte et la matière obscène!
Tes sombres légions vermineuses, amas,
Troupeau, tas imbécile adorant des lamas,

Avec ce qu’elles font et ce qu’elles projettent,
Entre la nourriture et l’excrément-végètent!

Mais tu te fais petit; tu changes d’argument,
Et c’est là, reprends-tu, ta plainte justement
L’homme est un désir vaste en une étreinte étroite,
Un eunuque amoureux, un voyageur qui boîte;
L’homme n’est rien la terre à chaque heure lui ment;
La vie est un à-compte au lieu d’être un paiement;
Tes sages te l’ont dit, et, dans ton humeur noire,
Toi, l’homme, tu n’es pas éloigné de le croire;
C’est trop peu d’être un homme; en naissant Dieu devait
Te donner tout l’azur dont la mort te revêt.
Ah! tu n’es pas déjà content de Dieu toi-même!
Tu voudrais sur la-terre être un être suprême;
Créancier exigeant, tu te plains d’être né
À demi, que le ciel ne t’ait pas tout donné,
Que Dieu soit en retard, que lui, lui qui médite,
Lui qui vit, ne t’ait pas, à l’échéance dite,
Fait livraison de l’ombre et de l’éternité;
Et tu voudrais encor que tout l’autre côté

De la création, misère inaperçue,
Fût à jamais plongé dans la nuit sans issue!
Mais tu dis: — Le caillou brisé, l’arbre abattu,
Ne souffrent point; la bête ignore. — Qu’en sais-tu?
Sais-tu la profondeur du soupir, et l’abîme
Du cri? pour voir le fond du gouffre, es-tu la cime?
Et s’il était des pleurs qui coulent en dedans?
Et s’il était un doigt, léché des flots grondants,
Qui sentît tressaillir la montagne plaintive,
Et pour qui le rocher fût une sensitive?
Que sais-tu? Ta morale; ô jûif, payen, chrétien,
Est une carte obscure et bizarre du bien
Et du mal, dont tu peins a ton gré les frontières.

Ce livre, dont tu fais la table des matières,
L’as-tu lu? Que vois-tu par ton trou de prison?
Portes-tu dans ton-œil l’insondable horizon?
Fermes-tu l’univers en fermant ta fenêtre?
De quel droit marques-tu des limites a l’être,
Et dis-tu, te penchant sur le monde obscurci
Et sur le flot vivant: On souffre jusqu’ici!
Eh! vois donc les douleurs de ces bêtes hagardes!

Ah! la souffrance étant l’avenir, tu la gardes!
Tu n’en veux que pour toi! tout le reste est trop vil.
Tu vois l’arbre se tordre et: tu dis Souffre-t-il?
Tu dis: — La brute meurt; son souvenir s’envole
Elle ne s’aperçoit pas même qu’on la vole.
Quoi! l’homme fils unique, et l’univers bâtard!

Quoi! tes maux seuls auraient le paradis plus tard
Qui, vrai pour toi, serait pour tout autre une fable!
La bête trouverait l’Éternel insolvable!
Quoi! les monstres auraient, songeurs silencieux,
Droit de hocher la tête en présence des cieux!
Dieu baisserait les yeux devant leur sombre lutte!
Ils pourraient lui jeter le mépris de la brute!

Quoi! devant les soleils, les astres triomphaux,
Et l’étoile, et l’aurore, ils pourraient dire: or faux!
Douleur, néant, horreur, seraient la destinée!
Quoi! la création tout entière damnée,
Rêve affreux! pas de but; l’homme seul arrivé;
Souffrir, et ne rien voir; la douleur, œil crevé;
Tout injuste, une vaste et stupide spirale
D’êtres perdus, sans jour, sans nœud, sans loi morale,
Allant on ne sait où, venant on ne sait d’où,
Et, tout au fond de l’ombre effroyable, Dieu fou!
Ce Jéhovah Moloch! que veut-on que j’en fasse?
Songe exécré! crachat de l’homme sur ta face,
Ô mon Dieu! calomnie au père universel!
Bave d’inventions qui tacherait le ciel,
Si la fange pouvait atteindre, écume vile,
Dieu, l’outragé sublime, éternel et tranquille!
Non! tous les êtres sont, et furent, et seront.
Qu’il ait sa cendre au cœur, qu’il ait sa flamme au front,
Tout être est immortel comme essence; et retrouve
Ce qui lui reste dû par la loi qui l’éprouve;
Ce n’est point un motif parce qu’on est petit
Pour ne pas être vu; nul en vain ne pâtit;
Dieu n’est pas le myope immense de l’espace.
L’aboiement de l’écueil qui-jamais ne se lasse,
Le tonnerre, le vol de l’astre échevelé,
Tous les rugissements du vent démuselé,
La trombe, le volcan, font, dans l’éternel gouffre,
Moins de bruit que ce cri d’un moucheron: je souffre!
Tous les êtres sont Dieu; tous les flots sont la mer.

Non! non! l’écrasement n’est point la loi du ver.
Non! non! toute souffrance est un sillon. Prière
Et pleurs défont toujours quelque chose en arrière
Et font, ô cieux sereins! quelque chose en avant.
Tout être se rachète ou tout être se vend.

Ô dédain de la bête et mépris de la chose!

Double faute de l’homme et son double malheur!
Si pour la vie infime il eût été meilleur,
Au lieu d’écraser tout, s’il eût fait le contraire,
Au lieu d’être bourreau, s’il se fût montré frère,
S’il eût compris l’amas vivant qui remuait,
Et l’être monstrueux, e grand souffrant muet,
L’homme, en butte à cette heure aux aboiements de l’ombre,
Eût été l’aîné roi de la famille sombre.
Cet aveugle serait devenu le voyant.
Il eût vu revenir à lui l’être fuyant.
La vie a son esprit qu’a troublé l’ignorance
Fût apparue avec toute sa transparence,
Et l’homme, sous le marbre ou le bois ou la chair,
De l’âme universelle eût vu le pâle éclair.
En s’inclinant, avec la majesté des prêtres,
Sur ces masques hagards qu’on appelle les êtres,
Calme, il eût relevé le morne abattement
Du monde terrassé qui vit sinistrement.
Sa pitié, s’émiettant aux souffrances farouches,.
Eût fait tourner vers lui toutes ces âpres bouches.
La bête eût accepté l’homme; le chêne l’eût
Accueilli dans les bois de son grave salut;
La pierre en son horreur l’eût adoré. La roche,
Morne, se fût sentie émue à son approche;
Et dans tous les cailloux il eût eu des autels.
Il eût senti sous lui de sombres immortels.
Il eût été le mage. Il eût connu lès causes.
Il aurait sur son front la lumière des choses;
Il serait l’Homme Esprit. L’aigle eût fraternisé;
Et, lui montrant le, ciel, le lion eût posé
Sa griffe sur l’épaule auguste du Génie.
Au lieu de le haïr dans leur morne agonie,
Les vivants effrayants d’en bas eussent béni
Ce grand communiant de l’amour infini.
En le voyant, la fosse eût resplendi, pareille
Aux soirs d’été qu’embrase une clarté vermeille;
La tombe aurait chanté, le spectre aurait souri.

Il eût des inconnus été le favori,
Bien et mai. La loi vient de derrière la vie
Et derrière la mort continue. Homme, envie
Ton chien; tu ne sais pas; triste maître hagard,
S’il n’a pas plus d’azur que toi dans le regard.
Tout vit. Création couvre métempsychose.

Le bien-aimé de ceux-qui sont sous, les écorces,
Sous les granits, avec les sèves et les forces,
Et, dans tous ses travaux, sans cesse, à tout moment,
Toute l’obscurité l’eût baisé doucement.
L’ombre immense serait son fauve auxiliaire.
La nature, de l’homme aurait été le lierre,
Et l’aurait, dans les pleurs, dans les chocs, dans les maux,
Dans les deuils, protégé de ses mille rameaux.
Il eût senti, du fond des insondables cuves,
Monter vers lui les vents, les parfums, les effluves,
Les magnétismes purs, les souffles, les aimants,
Et le secours profond des sombres éléments;
Les fléaux, qui lui font la guerre du désordre,
Fussent venus lécher ses pieds qu’ils viennent mordre;
Quand sa barque, le soir, se risque hors du port,
Le flot eût dit au vent: c’est lui. Souffle moins fort.
L’azur eût murmuré: paix à la voile blonde!
L’écueil eût fait effort pour se courber sous l’onde.
L’être multiple épars dans l’expiation
L’eût partout conseillé de son vague rayon;
Sentant cette belle âme humaine, bonne et tendre,
Se baisser, et toucher leur chaîne, et la détendre,
La création brute au difforme poitrail,
L’instinct, cette lueur de l’âme au soupirail,
Le grand Tout, ce flot sourd qui s’enfle et qui se creuse,
L’énormité, la chose informe et ténébreuse,
L’horreur des bois, l’horreur des mers, l’horreur des cieux,
Tout le mystérieux, tout le prodigieux,
Fût accouru, soumis, à son appel sublime,
À travers l’ombre; et l’homme eût eu pour chien l’abîme.

Il sentirait, rêveur, satisfait, ébloui,
La pénétration des étoiles en lui;
L’ange le montrerait à l’ange qui se penche;
Il serait aujourd’hui la grande tête blanche
Aperçue au-dessus du gouffre et de la nuit.

Mais il n’a rien compris, rien sondé, rien traduit,
Rien aimé, que lui-même et lui seul. L’égoïste
Vit dans sa vanité démesurée et triste,
Presque en dehors du groupe immense des vivants.
Dans ce sombre univers, monceau d’esprits rêvants,
Il voit deux êtres: lui qu’il sent, Dieu qu’il suppose.
L’étincelle de Dieu, l’âme, est dans toute chose.
Le monde est un ensemble où personne n’est seul;
Tout corps masque un esprit; toute chair est linceul;
Et pour voir l’âme on n’a qu’à lever le suaire.

La faute est le squelette et l’être est l’ossuaire.
C’est à dire, ô vivant, car pour la terre il faut
Sans cesse commenter les formules d’en haut,
Que ce monde, où Dieu met ce que des cieux il ôte,
N’est que le cimetière horrible de la faute.

Tout fait, germe: Et la vie est un flanc qui conçoit,
Quoi? la vie à venir. Tout être, quel qu’il soit,
De l’astre à l’excrément, de la taupe au prophète,
Est un esprit traînant la forme qu’il s’est faite.
Autant que dans la grâce et que dans la beauté,
L’être persiste et vit dans la difformité
Sous l’engloutissement de la matière infâme;
Autant qu’Eve au doux front, Léviathan, c’est l’âme.
La noirceur d’aujourd’hui fait la nuit de demain.
Oui, bête, arbre, rocher, broussaille du chemin,
Tout être est un vivant de l’immensité sombre;
L’homme n’est pas le seul qui soit suivi d’une ombre;
Tous, même le caillou misérable et honteux,
Ont derrière eux une ombre, une ombre devant eux;

Tous sont l'âme, qui vit, qui vécut, qui doit vivre,
Qui tombe et s'emprisonne, ou monte et se délivre!.
Tout ce qui rampe expie une chute du ciel.
La pierre est une cave où rêve un criminel,
Prends garde, esprit! recule au seuil du mal, arrête!
L'arbre t'attend, le roc te guette, esprit! La bête
Est une chausse-trape où l'homme peut tomber.
Tremble. Pas d'action qu'on puisse dérober
À Dieu, pour qui dans toi veille ta conscience.
Tout être est responsable; il croît, décroît, vit, pense,
Condamné par lui-même ou par lui-même absous;
Tout ce qu'il fait s'en va dans l'espace; et dessous
Est l'infini, compteur exact, plateau sans bornes;
Et la chute possible, et les ténèbres mornes
Où serpentent, chassés du vent qui les poursuit,
Les essaims tortueux des mondes de la nuit.
Oui, l'âme dans le mal, hélas, naufrage et sombre.

Hommes, votre lumière est faite avec de l'ombre;
Sous votre bagne il est d'autres cachots profonds;
Vous ne vous en doutez pas même; ô noirs bouffons,
Qui riez, qui chantez, qui raillez, c'est le pire,
Le monde des sanglots commence a votre rire.
En même temps la joie est au-dessus de vous;
Car, devant le regard de l'Être sans courroux,
Tout se tient; et l'extase a la douleur s'enlace.

L'ange me regardait, et, sans que je parlasse,
Il voyait ma pensée, et, dans mon âme entrant,
Son œil fixe rendait mon crâne transparent.
Il dit, levant un doigt de sa main souveraine:

— Que l'oreille d'en bas qui m'écoute, comprenne
Que l'ange ne s'est pas contredit en montrant
L'homme si vain après l'avoir montré si grand;
Tout est haut, tout est bas tout est lent, tout va vite;
Toute chose créée est splendide et petite;

Tout être a deux aspects, ténèbres et rayons;
Et la justice sort des confrontations
Du côté misérable avec la face auguste.
L'être est un hideux tronc qui porte un divin buste.
Mais à la conscience heureux qui s'est fié!
Tout, même ce tronc vil, sera glorifié.

Dieu, l'avertisseur juste, incessamment regarde
La vie, et dans les vents murmure: prenez garde!
Et suit des yeux le choc des bons et des mauvais.
Tout à l'heure, ô vivant terrestre, tu pouvais
Me répondre: Oui, le ciel est gibelin ou guelfe;
L'astre connaît Isis et Phoebus, Thèbe et Delphe,
Genève et Rome, Oedipe et Sphynx, énigme et mot;
Le météore prend fait et cause là-haut
Pour ou contre Pompée ou César, pour ou contre
Le pâle Capulet qu'un Montaigu rencontre;
Car dans toute querelle est un peu d'équité,
Et dans toute lueur un peu de vérité;
Et si la rose rouge a tort, la rose blanche
A raison. Et cela suffit pour que Dieu penche.
Le nuage, le jour; la rosée en sueur,
La comète traînant sa sinistre lueur,
Tous les êtres profonds qui passent dans l'abîme,
Sont du parti de ceux qu'on foule et qu'on opprime;
Et, luttant pour le droit et pour la vérité,
Le faible a dans les reins toute l'immensité
De là l'auguste foi du cœur simple et robuste.
Vivants, tous les cheveux de la tête du juste,
Par des fils que nul bras n'a pu briser encor,
Sont liés aux rayons de tous les astres d'or.
Vis, âme: — Oh! que Dieu soit dans ce que tu préfères!
La loi, sous ses deux noms une dans les deux sphères,
Vivants, c'est le progrès; morts, c'est l'ascension.
Toute cité, d'en bas ou d'en haut, est Sion;
Tout être, par l'effort du labeur volontaire,
Sort de l'épreuve, et rentre au bonheur; toute terre

Doit devenir Éden et tout ciel paradis.

Les gisants s'écrieront: debout! les engourdis
Remueront; l'avenir, parlant d'une voix tendre,
Dira: terre, voici le chemin qu'il faut prendre,
O terre! et l'harmonie en chantant conquerra
L'horreur du Groënland, l'horreur du Sahara,
Et le sable et la neige, et ces larves barbares,
Caraïbes, hurons, bédouins, malabares,
Peuples sourds de l'Ohio, du Thibet, du Darfour,
Que l'ombre garde assis dans son noir carrefour.
L'aube, cette blancheur juste, sacrée, intègre,
Qui se fait dans la nuit, se fera dans le nègre.
La Rome du désert naîtra de Tombouctou.
Oh! pourvu que ce soit en avant, Dieu sait où,
Va, vole! Je l'ai dit, et je te le répète,
La-bas, où l'on entend sonner de la trompette,
La-bas dans l'inconnu, là-bas dans le réel,
Dans;le vrai; dans le beau, dans le grand, dans le ciel,
Genre humain, genre humain, ouvre tes larges ailes!

En même temps la mort aux splendides prunelles
Pousse vers l'éternelle et suprême clarté
Le monstre, et l'homme au vent du sépulcre emporté,
Troupeau fuyant qu'au bord du gouffre elle dénombre.
L'aurore est un baiser qui veut les fronts de l'ombre.
Tout se meut, se soulève, et s'efforce, et gravit,
Et se hausse, et s'envole, et ressuscite, et vit!
Rien n'est fait pour rester dans l'obscurité sourde.
L'âme en exil devient à chaque instant moins lourde,
Et s'approche du ciel qui vous réclame tous.
D'heure en heure, pour ceux qui se sont faits plis doux,
La peine s'attendrit l'ombre en bonheur se change;
La bête est commuée en homme, l'homme en ange;
Par l'expiation, échelle d'équité,
Dont un bout est nuit froide et l'autre bout clarté,
Sans cesse, sous l'azur que la lumière noie,

L’univers Châtiment monte à l’univers Joie.

Et l’on y vient d’un bond, et du plus triste lieu.
Oui, l’horreur et le mal peuvent aux pieds de Dieu

Se verser tout à coup en urnes de lumière.
Oui, les plus noirs ont droit à la plus blanche sphère;
Les plus vils ont pour loi d’atteindre les plus hauts.
Tous les rayonnements puisent tous les chaos,
Vident la nuit, et font, ravissement des anges,
Des gerbes d’arcs-en-ciel avec toutes les fanges!
Point de déshérité! Non! point de paria!
Je levai les deux mains au ciel; l’ange cria:
Ô profondeurs, voilà que ce passant s’étonne!.
Puis il reprit:

— Rêveur qu’emporte un vent d’automne,
Sors de l’infirmité de ta stupeur sans yeux.
Apprends l’immensité. Guetteur obscur des cieux,
Sache, ô vivant qui viens regarder l’aube naître,
Que l’expiation va plus avant peut-être
Que tu ne descendis et que tu ne sondas,
Homme, et qu’elle peut faire un élu de Judas
Sache que Dieu, domptant même l’œil qui fascine,
Change, quand il lui, plaît, le serpent en racine,
Si bien qu’avec le temps ses desseins sont remplis,
Et que de la vipère il fait sortir un l’ys.
Qu’ont donc appris à l’homme Inde, Égypte et Chaldée,
S’il est pétrifié par cette simple idée
Que l’âme se perdra, se perd et se perdit,
Mais que Dieu peut toujours la trouver? Qui te dit
Que, le jour où, la mort enfin te fera naître,.
Tu ne verras, pas, homme, au seuil des cieux paraître,
Un archange plus grand et plus éblouissant
Et plus beau que celui qui te parle à présent,
Ayant des fleurs soleils, des astres étincelles,
Et tous les diamants du gouffre dans ses ailes,

Qui viendra vers toi, pur, auguste, doux; serein,
Calme, et qui te dira: c’est moi qui fus:Caïn?
Homme, sache que Dieu pourrait prendre un cloporte,
Un crapaud, l’acarus que ton ulcère porte,
Et lui donner l’aurore et le septentrion.
Sache que Dieu pourrait choisir un vibrion,
Un ver de terre au fond du sépulcre nocturne,
Et lui dire: — Voilà Sirius et Saturne,
Arcturus, Orion et les pléiades d’or;
Je te les donne. Prends. Et je te donne encor

Le vaste Jupiter avec ses quatre lunes.
Prends l’ouragan, le bruit, le jour bleu, les nuits brunes,
Le tropique et l’été, le pôle avec l’hiver.
Vénus, perle du soir, je te donne à ce ver.
Ver, prends Aldebaran que vit Jean, mon apôtre,
Et prends ses trois soleils qui roulent l’un sur l’autre;
Prends tous les firmaments et tous les océans,
Et le haut zodiaque aux douze astres géants,
Tournant comme une roue au fond des ombres noires.
Sache que Dieu pourrait donner toutes ces gloires
A ce vil ver de terre immonde et chassieux
Sans étonner un seul archange dans les cieux!
Et sache aussi que Dieu donnerait à cet être:
Ce que dans tous les lieux l’éternité voit naître,
Tous les astres qu’on voit, tous ceux qu’on ne voit pas,
Tout ce qui tourbillonne au souffle du trépas,
Et les mille flambeaux tremblant sur le grand voile,
Sans que l’infini fût amoindri d’une étoile,
Et qu’ayant tout donné, Dieu n’aurait rien de moins.

Et l’archange reprit: Soleils, soyez témoins,
Soyez témoins, ô cieux, que l’ilote et l’esclave,
Le goîtreux dont l’œil rêve et dont la lèvre bave
Dans ses mornes sommeils,
Et sur son lit maudit, le lépreux solitaire, cieux, sont vos égaux, et que les vers de terre

Sont vos frères, soleils!

Soyez témoins, éthers où vit l’âme ravie,
Épanouissements de splendeur et de vie,
Édens par Dieu dorés;
Paradis qui passez avec le son des lyres,
Rayons, soyez témoins, soyez témoins, sourires,
Que les pleurs sont sacrés!

Il ne tient qu à la nuit, et cela dépend d’elle,
D’être heureuse, innocente, et sincère, et fidèle,
De nous éblouir tous,
Et de voir tout à coup, clartés dans l’ombre écloses,
Des flots de colibris; sortis d’un tas de roses,
Aveugler ses hiboux!

Le méchant est un mort dont l’harmonie est veuve.
Il peut, quand il lui plaît, renaître après l’épreuve,
Et revenir, ailé,

Superbe, triomphant, sans pleurs, sans deuil, sans crainte,
Serein car tout esprit de la justice sainte
Est l’époux étoilé!

Hommes! l’orgueil en vous parfois crie et résiste,
Et vous dites, entant que votre terre est triste:
«Dieu pour nous est sans nom:
«Qu’a trouvé Ptolémée et que sait Épicure?
«Double négation «:.le ciel noir, l’âme obscure.
«L’être est Nuit, l’homme est Non.
«Le mal est notre maître et, le doute est notre hôte;
«Dieu nous montre la peine et nous cache la faute;
«Que veut ce dieu lointain?.
«Notre vie est si morne et notre âme est si noire,
«Hélas! que, par moments, nous hésitons à croire
«L’étoile du matin!
«Il semble que Dieu triste essaie à chaque aurore

«De créer un jour pur, divin, charmant, sonore,
«Par la joie expliqué,
«D’un éternel midi réchauffant la nature,
«Sans tache... et chaque soir, la nuit revient, rature
«Du jour toujours manqué!

«Qui nous dit que ce monde inique et léthifère
«Est l’œuvre de quelqu’un qui sait ce qu’il veut faire?
«Tout rampe de terreur;
«Ces monts, ces mers, ces champs où nos troupeaux vont paître,
«Ces globes, ces soleil; ces cieux ne sont peut être
«Que quelque immense erreur!”

Et vous criez, vivants sinistres de la tombe:
«L’anathème nous tient;l’horreur sur nous surplombe;
«Ce guichetier nous suit;
«L’obscurité nous couve, et la geôle âpre et lourde
«Nous guette, et chaque étoile est la lanterne sourde
«D’un spectre de la nuit!
«Nous sommes prisonniers; les ténèbres nous gardent;
«Tous les yeux de l’abîme à la fois nous regardent;
«Comment fuir? on nous voit!
«Comment nous evader?” Il suffit, pour qu’on sorte,
Qu’une bonne action pousse l’énorme porte..
Du bout du petit doigt!

Le Dieu juste, qui met à toute peine un terme
Ne veut pas que le grand sur le petit se ferme;
Il veut la liberté,
Et c’est avec l’atome, ô pauvre âme inquiète,
Que ce Dieu fait la clef de la serrure faite
Avec l’immensité.

Dieu ne permet à rien l’oppression; la brute
Et l’ange sont amis; au fond de toute chute
Dieu met de sa clarté;
De toute ascension Dieu marque le solstice;

Il crie aux quatre vents: Égalité!. Justice!
Equilibre! Équité!
Et l’un des quatre vents va le dire à l’aurore;
L’autre au couchant pourpré qu’un divin nimbe dore
Et qui s’épanouit
Le troisième le dit au midi qui s’enivre
De l’éblouissement de tout ce qu’il fait vivre;
Le dernier à la nuit.

Qu’est-ce que le rayon a de plus que la bête?
Le tigre a sa fureur, le ciel a sa tempête;
Tout est égal à tout
L’insecte vaut le globe; et, soleils, sphères, gloires,
Tous les géants, égaux à tous les infusoires,
Gisent sous Dieu debout.
Tout n’est qu’un tourbillon de poussière qui vole.
La mouche et sa lueur, l’astre et son auréole,
Cendre! apparitions!
Vie! Être! ô précipice obscur! horreurs sacrées,
Où Dieu laisse en rêvant tomber des empyrées
Et des créations!

L’infiniment petit, l’infiniment grand; songes!
Ces soleils que tu vois, ces azurs où tu plonges;
Ame errant sans appuis,
Les orbites de feu des sphères vagabondes,
Les éthers constellés, les firmaments; les mondes,
Cercles du fond du puits!

Ô citerne de l’ombre! Ô profondeurs livides!
Les plénitudes sont pareilles à des vides.
L’œil cherche le soutien.
L’être est prodigieux à ce point, j’en frissonne,
Qu’il ressemble au néant; et Tout par moments donne
Le vertige de Rien!

On revient au néant par l’énormité même,

Oui! S’il n’était pas là, lui, le témoin suprême,
Oh! comme on frémirait!

Mais ce grand front serein dans l’immensité rentre,
Et, comme un feu suffit pour éclairer un antre,
L’univers reparaît.

Ô Création, choc de souffles, bruit d’atomes,
Terre, trône de l’homme, univers, cieux, royaumes,
Rayons, sceptres, pavois,
Monde noir qui te tais et qui dors! Dieu se lève.
Ombre! il est le regard; sommeil! il est le rêve;
Silence, il est la voix!
Dieu vit. Quiconque mange est assis à sa table.
Il est l’inaccessible, il est l’inévitable;
L’athée au sombre vœu,
En se précipitant, sans foi, sans loi, sans prisme,
La tête la première; au fond de l’athéisme,
Brise son âme à Dieu!
Il est le fond de l’être. Oui, terrible ou propice,
Tout vertige le trouve au bas du précipice.
Satan, l’ange échappé,
Se cramponne lui-même au père, et l’on devine
Dans le pli d’un des pans de la robe divine
Ce noir poignet crispé.

Dieu! Dieu! Dieu! l’âme unique est dans tout, et traverse
L’âme individuelle, en chaque être diverse;
Tout char l’a pour essieu;
La tête de mort, blême au fond de l’ombre immonde,
Par un de ses deux trous, sinistre, voit le monde,
Et par l’autre voit Dieu.
Cet ensemble, où l’on voit toujours plus d’aube naître,
Et qu’on nomme le ciel et l’enfer, se pénètre;
Rayon et flamboiement;
L’un descend, l’autre monte; et Dieu dans l’ombre passe;
Et chacun d’eux éclaire un côté de sa face

Au fond du firmament.
Par moments, dans l’azur où l’archange a son aire,
Il se fait des hymens que chante le tonnerre;
L’âme épouse le ver;
Et le ciel et l’enfer, et la lumière et l’ombre,
Et le rayon splendide et le flamboiement sombre
Se mêlent dans l’éclair.

Rien n’est désespéré, car rien n’est hors de l’être.
Vivez! Le disparu peut toujours reparaître.
Le mal par vous construit,
Se place, dans la vaste et morne apocalypse,
Entre votre âme et Dieu; l’enfer est une éclipse;
Le mal passe, Dieu luit!
Transfigurations splendides et subites!
Les châtiments sont pleins de sombres: cénobites,
De bras au ciel tendus.
Parfois les lieux profonds ont des sanglots sublimes
Qui jettent tout à coup près de Dieu sur les cimes
Des monstres éperdus!

Chaque globe est un œuf hideux, sur qui se pose
La nuit triste, où l’on sent remuer quelque chose,
Couvert d’êtres maudits,
Lugubre, affreux, rongé de moisissure verte,
Qu’un jour un bec de feu brise, et d’où, l’aile ouverte,
Sort l’aigle Paradis.

Ce n’est pas le pardon c’est la justice auguste;
C’est, après le rachat, la délivrance juste;
L’équitable retour
Des hydres vers l’azur où l’on voit l’astre éclore,
Des muets vers la voix, des larmes vers-l’aurore,
Des spectres vers le jour!

Dieu n’est pas moins en bas qu’en haut; oui, la nature
Sacre l’égalité de toute créature

Devant le créateur; .
Et c’est le cœur de Dieu que sent l’être unanime
Dans ces deux battements énormes de l’abîme,
Profondeur et Hauteur.

Ces deux pulsations de la vie éternelle
Jettent l’âme innocente et l’âme criminelle,
L’une aux cieux; l’autre aux nuits;
Chacun va dans la sphère où sa pesanteur tombe.
Dieu, pour noircir l’orfraie et blanchir la colombe,
N’a:qu’à dire je suis.

La conscience est là, lueur crépusculaire.
Vous êtes avertis, vivants; le crime éclaire.
Tu tombes, tu sais où!
La drachme de Judas, par la nuit ramassée,
Rayonne et luit au fond de l’ombre hérissée;
C’est l’œil rond du hibou.

Dieu laisse à tous le poids qu’ils ont. Coupable-ou sainte,
L’action est un pied qui marque son empreinte.
. Dieu laisse au mal le mal.

Dieu, choisir! l’absolu n’a pas de préférence;
Le cercle ne peut rien sur la circonférence;
Le parfait est fatal.

Oui, Dieu, c’est l’équilibre. Êtres, Dieu pèse et crée:
À droite l’étendue, a gauche la durée;
L’évident, l’incompris;
Les éblouissements, contre-poids des désastres;
L’abîme balançant l’âme; ici tous les astres,
Et là tous les esprits.

En lui sont la raison et le centre imperdable;
Tous les balancements de l’ordre formidable
S’y règlent à la fois;

Toutes les équités forment cette âme immense;
Elle est le grand niveau de l’être; et la clémence
Y serait un faux poids.

L’absolu! l’absolu! Ni fureurs, ni faiblesses.
Impassible, étoilée, âpre, tu ne te laisses,
Au fond du ciel béni,
Violer, dans ta paix qu’aucun flot ne déborde,
Jamais, à rien, pas même à la miséricorde,
Sombre vierge Infini!

Rien ne fait vaciller l’axe, que la justice.
Chacun pèse sa vie; orgueil, sagesse ou vice.
Vivez! cherchez le mieux!
L’action pend à l’âme. Avec tout ce qu’il sème,
Chaque être a son insu se compose à lui-même
Son poids mystérieux.

La balance n’a pas le droit de faire grâce.
Elle oscille en dehors du temps et de l’espace;
Elle est la vérité;
Sous la seule équité son tremblement s’apaise.
Demande aux deux plateaux si l’immensité pèse.
Plus que l’éternité!

L’archange disparut comme, au front du Vésuve,
S’efface une fumée, ou comme, dans la cuve,
S’évanouit l’écume en tombant du pressoir.

VIII

Et je vis au-dessus de ma tête un point noir.
Et ce point noir semblait une mouche dans l’ombre.

Comme un vert rejeton sort d’une souche sombre,
Des profondeurs sortait le jour éblouissant,
Je me précipitai vers le point grandissant,
Plus prompt que les oiseaux envolés hors des branches;
C’était une lumière avec deux ailes blanches;
Et qui m’avait semblé, lorsque je l’aperçus,
Obscure, tant le ciel rayonnait-au-dessus.

Cette clarté disait:
— Pas de droite et de gauche;
Pas de haut ni de bas; pas de glaive qui fauche;
Pas de trône jetant dans l’ombre un vague éclair;
Pas de lendemain, pas d’aujourd’hui, pas d’hier;
Pas d’heure frissonnant au vol du temps rapace;
Point de temps; point d’ici, point de là; point d’espace;
Pas d’aube et pas de soir; pas de-tiare ayant
L’astre pour escarboucle à son faîte effrayant;
Pas de balance; pas de sceptre, pas:de globe;
Pas de Satan caché dans les plis de la robe;
Pas de robe; pas d’âme à la main; pas de mains;
Et vengeance, pardon, justice, mots humains.

Qui que tu sois, écoute: il est.
Qu’est-il? Renonce!

L’ombre est la question, le monde est la réponse.
Il est. C’est le vivant, le vaste épanoui!
Ce que contemple au, loin le soleil ébloui,
C’est lui: Les cieux, vous, nous; les étoiles, poussière!
Il est l’œil gouffre, ouvert au fond de la lumière,
Vu par tous les flambeaux, senti par tous les nids,

D’où l’univers jaillit en rayons infinis.
Il regarde, et c’est tout. Voir suffit au sublime,
Il crée un monde rien qu’en voyant un abîme
Et cet être qui voit, ayant toujours été,
A toujours tout créé, de toute éternité.
Quand la bouche d’en bas touche à ce nom suprême,
L’essai de la louange est presque le blasphème:
Pas d’explication donc! Fais mettre à genoux
Ta pensée, et deviens un regard; comme nous.
Pourquoi chercher les mots où ne sont plus les choses?
Le vil langage humain n’a pas: d’apothéoses.

Ce qu’Il est, est à peine entrevu du tombeau.
Il échappe aux mots noirs de l’ombre. On aurait beau
Faire une strophe avec les brises éternelles,
Et, pour en parfumer et dorer les deux ailes,
Mettre l’astre dans l’une et dans l’autre la fleur,
Et mêler tout l’azur à leur splendide ampleur,
On ne peindrait pas Dieu. Songeur, qu’on le revête
De bruit et d’aquilon, de foudre et de tempête;
Qu’on le montre éveillé, qu’on le montre dormant,
Sa respiration soulevant doucement
Toutes les profondeurs de toute l’étendue,
Remuant la comète au fond des cieux perdue,
Le vent sur son cheval, la mort sur son éclair,
Et le balancement monstrueux de la mer,
On ne le peindra pas. Lui! Lui! l’inamissible,
L’éternel, l’incréé, l’imprévu, l’impossible,
Il est. La taupe fouille et creuse, et l’aperçoit;
L’ombre dit à la taupe es-tu sûre qu’il soit?
La taupe répond: Dieu! Dieu de l’aigle est la proie.
Suppose que sur terre un seul être en Dieu croie,
Cet être, si jamais le soleil, s’éclipsait,
Remplacerait l’aurore. Et sais-tu ce que c’est
Que le fauve ouragan, tonnant et formidable?
C’est, dans les profondeurs du gouffre inabordable,
L’infini murmurant: je l’aime! à demi-voix;

Quand l’étoile rayonne, elle dit: je le vois!
Tout le cri, tout le bruit et tout l’hymne de l’homme
Avorte à dire Dieu! Le baiser seul le nomme.

J’aime!
Ici la clarté me dit:

— Si tu m’en crois,
Va-t’en. Car les rayons brûlants dont tu t’accroîs
Pourraient te consumer, frémissant, avant l’heure.
L’homme meurt d’un excès de flamme intérieure;
L’ange qui va trop loin dit: Ne restons pas là.
En voulant trop voir Dieu, Moïse chancela;
Un peu plus, il tombait du haut de cette cime,
L’œil plein des tournoiements terribles de l’abîme.

— Parle! oh! parle! criai-je à la forme de feu.

— Ô curieux du gouffre, Empédocle de Dieu,
Je parlerai, dit l’être, et même ton langage;
Car, quand dans l’infini sous vos yeux on s’engage,
Hommes, on ne peut plus toucher a ses rameaux
Sans en faire tomber vos misérables mots.

Le tout éternel sort de l’éternel atome.
De l’équation Dieu le monde est le binôme
Dieu, c’est le grand réel et le grand inconnu;
Il est; et c’est errer que dire: Il est venu.
Quoique l’impénétrable énigme le vêtisse,
Quoiqu’il n’ait ni lever, ni coucher, ni solstice,
Êtres bornés, il marque, au fond du ciel sans bord,
Vos quatre angles, levant, occident, midi, nord;
Il est X, élément du rayonnement, nombre
De l’infini, clarté formidable de l’ombre,
Lueur sur le coran comme sur le missel,
Éternelle présence à l’œil universel!
C’est lui l’autorité d’où jaillit l’âme libre;

C’est lui l’axe invisible autour duquel tout vibre,
Et l’oscillation dans l’immobilité;
Oscillation sombre, au cercle illimité,
Qui va, prodigieuse, une, inouïe, étrange,
Des oreilles de l’âne aux ailes de l’archange.
L’être sans cesse en lui se forme et se dissout;
Il est la parallèle éternelle de tout;
Il est précision, loi, règle, certitude,
Justesse, abstraction, rigueur, exactitude,
Et toute cette algèbre en tendresse se fond.
Et dans l’indéfini, l’obscur et le profond,
À travers ce qu’on nomme air et terre, flamme, onde,
Cet X a quatre bras, pour embrasser le monde,
Et, se dressant visible aux yeux morts ou déçus,
Il est croix sur la terre et s’appelle Jésus.

Hors de la terre il est l’innommé.

Chaque sphère
Le nomme en frissonnant du nom qu’elle préfère,
Mais tous les noms sur Dieu sont des flots insensés.
Quant au globe-chétif et morne où vous passez,
Hommes, l’ange a parlé d’une façon sévère;
L’homme est l’être sacré que la terre révère;
Mais l’arbre est quelque chose et la bête est quelqu’un;
La pierre et son silence, et l’herbe et son parfum;.
Vivent; l’homme, rayon, doit plaindre la poussière;
L’être est une famille où l’homme est le grand frère
Et lui, l’âme, d’en haut, il doit, dans leurs combats,
Verser tout son azur sur les âmes d’en bas;

L’homme, malgré sa haine et malgré sa démence,
Est le commencement de la lumière immense.
L’égalité dans l’ombre ébauche l’unité;
L’unité, c’est le but de la route clarté.
Âme! être, c’est aimer.

Il est.

C’est l’être extrême.
Dieu, c’est le jour sans borne et sans fin qui dit: j’aime.
Lui, l’incommensurable, il n’a point de compas;
Il ne se venge pas, il ne pardonne pas;
Son baiser éternel ignore la morsure;
Et quand on dit: justice, on suppose mesure.
Il n’est point juste; il est. Qui n’est que juste est peu.
La justice, c’est vous, humanité; mais Dieu
Est la bonté. Dieu, branche où tout oiseau se pose!
Dieu, c’est la flamme aimante au fond de toute chose.
Oh! tous sont appelés et tous seront élus.
Père, il songe au méchant pour l’aimer un peu plus.
Vivants, Dieu pénétrant en vous;-chasse le vice.
L’infini qui dans l’homme entre, y devient justice;
La justice n’étant que le rapport secret
De ce que l’homme fait à ce que Dieu ferait.
Bonté, c’est la lueur qui dore tous les faîtes;
Et, pour parler toujours, hommes, comme vous faites,
Vous qui ne pouvez voir que-la forme et le lieu,
Justice est le profil de la face de Dieu.
Vous voyez un côté, vous ne voyez pas l’autre.
Le bon, c’est le martyr; le juste n’est qu’apôtre;
Et votre infirmité, c’est que votre raison
De l’horizon humain conclut l’autre horizon.
Limités, vous prenez Dieu pour l’autre hémisphère.
Mais lui, l’être absolu, qu’est-ce qu’il pourrait faire
D’un rapport?.L’innombrable est-il fait pour chiffrer?
Non, tout dans sa bonté sombre vient s’engouffrer.
On ne sait où l’on vole, on ne sait où l’on tombe,
On nomme cela mort, néant, ténèbres, tombe,
Et, sage, fou, riant, pleurant, tremblant, moqueur,
On s’abîme éperdu dans cet immense cœur!
Dans cet azur sans fond la clémence étoilée
Elle-même s’efface, étant d’ombre mêlée!

L’être pardonné garde un souvenir secret,
Et n’ose aller trop haut; le pardon semblerait
Reproche à la prière, et Dieu veut qu’elle approche;
N’étant jamais tristesse, il n’est jamais reproche,
Enfants; et maintenant, croyez si vous voulez!

Devant le sacrifice et les cieux constellés,
Devant l’aigle effaré; devant les forêts vertes,
Devant les profondeurs dans tout être entr’ouvertes,
Hommes, on peut nier, mais l’inconvénient
C’est que l’esprit décroît et noircit en niant.
L’être fait pour l’extase et la soif infinie
Devient sarcasme, rire, ignorance, ironie;
Il n’a plus rien de saint, il n’a plus rien de cher;
Et sa tête de mort apparaît sous sa chair.
Votre t’erre niant ne serait qu’une infâme,
Et sa nuit grandirait; car retirer cette âme.
À l’univers, c’est faire un abîme au milieu.
Qui, du centre de l’être insondable, ôte Dieu,
Ôte l’Idée avec tous ses aspects, puissance,
Vérité, liberté, paix, justice, innocence;
Ôte aux êtres le droit, ôte aux forces l’aimant,
Ote la clef de voûte, et vois l’écroulement!
Je t’ai parlé ta langue, homme que je rencontre.
Et que veux-tu de plus? faut-il qu’on te le montre?
O regardeur aveugle et qui te crois voyant,
Comment te montrer Dieu, cet informé effrayant?
Comment te dire: ici finit, ici commence?
Fin et commencement sont des mots de démence.
Fin et commencement sont vos deux grands haillons.
Homme, chante ou blasphème à travers tes bâillons,;
Tu mêleras, sans dire un mot de la grande âme,
Ton blasphème à la nuit et ton hymne à la flamme:
L’idée à peine éclôt que les mots la défont.
Comment se figurer la face du profond,
Le contour du vivant sans borne, et l’attitude
De la toute-puissance et de la plénitude?

Est-ce Allah, Brahma, Pan, Jésus, que nous-voyons?
Ou Jéhovah? Rayons! rayons! rayons! rayons!
La clarté s’arrêta, comme tout éblouie.
Je m’évanouissais, et la vue et l’ouïe,
Et jusqu’aux battements du cœur s’interrompant,
S’en allaient hors de moi comme une eau se répand.

Et la clarté cria dans la profondeur noire
Où flottaient vaguement sous la brume illusoire
Ces faces de néant qu’on voit dans le trépas:

Ô Ténèbres, sachez ceci: la nuit n’est pas.

Tout est azur, aurore, aube sans crépuscule,
Et fournaise d’extase où l’âme parfum brûle.
Le noir, c’est non; et non, c’est Rien. Tout est certain.
Tout est blancheur, vertu, soleil levant, matin,
Placide éclair, rayon serein, frisson de flamme.
Un ange qui dirait: la nuit, dirait: je blâme.
Les astres ne sont pas. Ces lueurs des tombeaux
Sont fausses, et le jour ignore les flambeaux.
La constellation dans l’illusion rampe;
Le plein midi n’aurait que faire d’une lampe;
Tout rayonnement vient du centre et du milieu;
Comme il n’est qu’une aurore, il n’est qu’un soleil, Dieu,
Qui pour les yeux de chair, couverts de sombres voiles,
Pleut le jour en rayons et la nuit en étoiles.
L’âme est l’œil, il est l’astre. Elle ne voit que lui.
Tout est clarté. Le ver rampant, l’ange ébloui,
Tout, les immensités où se perdent les sondes,
Tout, ces vagues de Dieu que vous nommez les mondes,
L’apparent, le réel, vierge en robe de lin,
Homme, enfant, cieux et mers, espaces, tout est plein
D’un resplendissement d’éternité tranquille.
Comptez les milliards de siècles par cent mille,
Vous n’aurez pas dit un devant l’éternité.

Jetez toute votre ombre, ô nuits, à la clarté,
Au gouffre de splendeur que Dieu profond anime,
Et vous ne ferez pas une tache a l’abîme.
Vous n’êtes point. Au bas des cieux où nous montons,
On voit vos grandes mains qui cherchent a tâtons,
O nuits, spectres! on voit vos formes de nuées
S’approcher et grandir ou fuir diminuées,
Et le grand gouffre bleu, plein d’éblouissements,
O brumes, ne sait rien de vos écroulements,
Et le rayonnement formidable flamboie.
Ombres, vous n’êtes point. Pour être il faut qu’on voie.
Ténèbres, il n’est pas, devant les firmaments,
De ténèbres; il n’est que des aveuglements.

Des aveugles! Pourquoi? Pourquoi la loi, la-règle,
Le gland avant le chêne, et l’œuf sombre avant l’aigle?
L’aveugle est l’embryon du voyant; le voyant
Se change en lumineux; qui devient, flamboyant;
C’est la loi. Vous verrez, vous rayonnerez; ombres!
Vous serez les frontons éternels, ô décombres!
Limbes, vous serez ciel! Vous l’êtes déjà, nuit!
De même que déjà le germe, c’est le fruit;
Que déjà dans le gland, monde que l’herbe ignore,
Avec toute sa feuille éclatante d’aurore,
Avec son noir branchage où la lune blêmit,
Solide et frissonnant, le grand chêne frémit,
Plein de cris, de chansons, d’hymens et de querelles;
Et que dans l’œuf profond déjà tremblent les ailes!
Devoir être, c’est être. Oui, la fange est cristal:
Chrysalide du bien qu’on appelle le mal,
Ne te plains pas; un fil à Dieu même te noue.
Le réel, c’est la roue, et non le tour de roue.
larves, vous serez. Attendez votre tour.
Puisque le papillon qu’elle doit être un jour;
Est là-haut, ouvrant l’aile; et, joyeux, tourbillonne,
Puisque le paradis qu’il doit être-rayonne,
La chenille n’est pas, l’enfer n’existe point.

À la vie à venir le sort présent se joint.
L’être, qui n’est vivant que complet, se déploie
Composé d’aucune ombre et de toute la joie,
Ne gardant du passé que l’extase, et rempli
D’un souvenir céleste et d’un divin oubli.

L’univers, c’est un livre, et des yeux qui le lisent.
Ceux qui sont dans la nuit ont raison quand ils disent:
Rien n’existe! Car c’est dans un rêve qu’ils sont.

Rien n’existe que lui; le flamboiement profond,
Et les âmes, les grains de lumière, les mythes,
Les moi mystérieux, atomes sans limites,
Qui vont vers le grand moi, leur centre et leur aimant;
Points touchant au zénith par le rayonnement,
Ainsi qu’un vêtement subissant la matière,
Traversant tour à tour dans l’étendue entière
La formule de chair propre à chaque milieu,
Ici la sève, ici le sang, ici le feu;
Blocs, arbres, griffes, dents, fronts pensants, auréoles;
Retournant aux cercueils comme à des alvéoles;
Mourant pour s’épurer, tombant pour s’élever,
Sans fin, ne se perdant que pour se retrouver,

Chaîne d’êtres qu’en haut l’échelle d’or réclame,
Vers l’éternel foyer volant de flamme en flamme,
Juste éclos du pervers, bon sorti du méchant;
Montant, montant, montant sans cesse, et le cherchant,
Et l’approchant toujours, mais sans jamais l’atteindre,
Lui, l’être qu’on ne peut toucher, ternir, éteindre,
Le voyant, le vivant, sans mort, sans nuit, sans mal,
L’idée énorme au fond de l’immense idéal!

La matière n’est pas et l’âme seule existe.

Rien n’est mort, rien n’est faux, rien n’est noir, rien n’est triste;

Personne n’est puni, personne n’est banni.
Tous les cercles qui sont dans le cercle infini
N’ont que de l’idéal dans leurs circonférences:

Astres, mondes, soleils, étoiles, apparences,
Masques d’ombre ou de feu, faces des visions,
Globes, humanités, terres, créations,
Univers où jamais on ne voit rien qui dorme,
Points d’intersection du nombre et de la forme,
Chocs de l’éclair puissance et du rayon beauté,
Rencontres de la vie avec l’éternité,
Ô fumée, écoutez! Et vous, écoutez, âmes,
Qui seules resterez étant souffles et flammes,
Esprits purs qui mourez et naissez tour à tour:
Dieu n’a qu’un front: Lumière! et n’a qu’un nom: Amour!
Je tremblais; comme si, prêt à changer de forme,
J’eusse été foudroyé par un baiser énorme.
La clarté flamboyait, transparente et debout.
Et je criai: lumière, ô lumière, est-ce tout?

Et la clarté me dit: silence. Le prodige
Sort éternellement du mystère, te dis-je.
Aveugle qui croit lire et fou qui croit savoir!

IX

Et je vis au-dessus de ma tête un point noir.

Fragments

Que ce poème au vol de feu
Effleure le siècle où nous sommes,
Qu'il passe vite et brille peu,
Et qu'à travers l'oubli des hommes,
Sombre, il s'en retourne vers Dieu.

Fragments des Voix

Mais les mages hagards, les sages inquiets,
Les noirs explorateurs des mystérieux faîtes,
Les contempteurs soudain transformés en prophètes,
Comment ont-ils été par la foi terrassés,
Comment ont-ils crié sous l'évidence: Assez!
Demande à l'ineffable, au gouffre, au phénomène!
Qui peut le raconter dans votre langue humaine?
Ils méditaient, sondant l'inconnu, regardant.
L'espace, ici flot vague et là cratère ardent,
Le grand fond immobile et sourd, la violence
Des visions mêlée à l'éternel silence,
Rien et Tout, le roulis gigantesque des cieux
Dans on ne sait quel vent lugubre et monstrueux,
Des tours d'ombre dont l'œil ne peut compter les marches,
Des déluges roulant d'inexprimables arches,
La pluie immense au loin rayant les infinis,
Des lueurs blanchissant des masques d'Érynnis,
Des passages subits de méduses, frappées
D'une clarté pareille à des reflets d'épées,
Des ponts difformes, noirs, allant hors du réel
Sinistres, bleuissant vaguement près du ciel,
L'ascension sans but et la chute sans bornes;
Voilà ce que voyaient ces contemplateurs mornes,
Et tristes, ils disaient: « Cette ombre n'est pas Dieu."
Far moments les fléaux, dans des souffles de feu,

Survenaient, et taisaient, comme un esquif sans voiles,
Sombrer un monde au fond d’une écume d’étoiles,
La vague des chaos montait engloutissant
Quelque éden encor plein d’un sourire innocent,
Comme un groupe ennemi qui gronde et qui s’insulte,
Les éléments fuyaient avec un grand tumulte,
Tout croulait dans le vide où nul regard n’ atteint
Et rien ne vivait plus dans l’univers éteint;
Or à l’heure où, devant ces sombres catastrophes,
Voyants aveugles, saints tremblants, vains philosophes,
Ils crispaient dans l’espace horrible leur poignet,
A l’heure où la stupeur du doute les gagnait,
Éperdus, ils voyaient subitement des astres
De confirmation poindre dans ces désastres,
Ou sortir brusquement d’un nuage ébloui
Un tonnerre hurlant dans les gouffres: C’est lui!

Parmi les visions, parmi les paraboles,
Ils vont, ils vont, ils vont. Et ces sagesses folles
Cherchent Dieu, le front pâle et baigné de sueurs;
Et tout ce qu’on peut voir de farouches lueurs,
Tous les éclairs d’été d’une chaude soirée,
La trombe, tous les yeux d’une meute effarée,
Les passages subits d’astres dans la vapeur,
N’expriment pas l’effroi, le trouble, la stupeur,
De toutes ces raisons, de toutes ces pensées,
Dans cette poursuite âpre et terrible lancées.

Homme, tu sentiras, hagard, frémissant, pâle,
Dans ton être éperdu pénétrer par degrés
Les profondeurs sans fond, les cieux démesurés;
Tune trouveras plus de mots pour tes pensées;
Tu chercheras en toi les ombres effacées

De ton humanité disparue et fuyant.
Tu deviendras sinistre, impossible, effrayant;
Et tu te sentiras fumée au fond de l’ombre;
Tu voudras préciser un lieu, compter un nombre,
Et tu ne pourras plus, n’étant qu’un front rêvant,
Et qu’un sombre esprit vague arraché par le vent;
Tu seras larve et nuit; car le songeur à force
De faire avec la vie et les choses divorce,
Se dilate au delà du terrestre milieu,
Se fond dans l’infini, se décompose en Dieu,
Et mêle lentement sa lueur et sa forme?
Avec l’obscurité de la nuée énorme.

Prends garde à la recherche effrayante de Dieu!
Heureux qui se limite et sage qui s’enferme!
Ne te hasarde pas dans ce puits!
    Le plus ferme
Arrive à je ne sais quelle âpre pâmoison
De son entendement par excès d’horizon.
On dit: allons! on veut lutter, chercher, combattre
On se décide; on entre; on fait deux pas, trois, quatre,
On songe; on s’aperçoit qu’on est dans l’inconnu,
On frémit; on voudrait ne pas être venu;
Mais comment reculer? le précipice pousse.
On sent la profondeur vertigineuse et douce,
Le formidable amour de l’abîme, et l’aimant
Du ciel épouvantable, impossible et charmant;
C’est fini. L’on se jette au sans fond, au sans bornes,
On franchit des milieux mystérieux et mornes;
On traverse la nue et l’énigme et l’horreur
De l’incommensurable et monstrueuse erreur,
Et la création dans l’étendue, à l’aise,
Astre, dans cet azur, mer, sous cette falaise.
On rencontre Rousseau, de Maistre qui vous mord,

Platon évanoui, Pascal fou, Bacon mort;
On rencontre le bien, le mal, la conscience,
Un brouillard, la sagesse, une nuit, la science;
On tâche d’abriter sa raison sous sa main;
Le vent de ce voyage étrange et surhumain
Renverse de l’esprit la flamme aventurière;
Le flambeau frissonnant voudrait fuir en arrière;
Et la lampe pâlit, quel qu’en soit le porteur;
Et, quoi qu’il ait d’essor, d’audace et de hauteur,
Le chercheur quel qu’il soit, cerveau fier, raison sûre,
S’effraie, et cependant va toujours... — À mesure
Qu’il prend plus de réel et de vie, et qu’il tient
Plus d’idéal, il tremble, et, sentant qu’il devient
De plus en plus néant et de plus en plus cendre,
Aveugle de trop voir et sourd de trop entendre,
Dans l’éblouissement du ciel toujours plus blanc,
Effaré, désormais plus emporté qu’allant,
Ivre de tout ce sombre azur qui le pénètre,
Sentant l’écrasement de l’abîme sous l’être,
Respirant mal l’air vierge et fatal du zénith,
Il avance, et blanchit, et s’efface; et finit
Pat se dissoudre, avec son doute ou sa prière,
Dans une énormité de foudre et de lumière.

Quelle chimère as-tu l’audace de couver?
Pourquoi viens-tu rôder ici? Crois-tu trouver
Quelque part un Olympe, un Ararat, un Pinde,
Et refaire une Égypte, une Chaldée, une Inde?
Es-tu de ceux qui font commerce habituel
Avec un bréviaire, avec un rituel?
Dis-tu: — Le voile saint, le rideau des idées
Doit être en telle étoffe, avoir tant de coudées;
L’ange chante tel psaume en rallumant le soir
La lampe de l’étoile accrochée au ciel noir?
Dis, réponds. Te faut-il des religions faites

De livres, de docteurs, de dimanches et fêtes,
Ayant leur baïram, leur pâque, leur avent?
Crois-tu que le nuage et la foudre et le vent
Sont des diacres servant la messe des tempêtes?
Crois-tu qu'un météore, un astre sur nos têtes,
Soit un prélat de l'ombre ou bien un chambellan
Accomplissant, aux jours marqués, tant de fois l'an,
Le cérémonial énorme du prodige?
Crois-tu qu'il faut à Dieu l'étiquette qu'exige
Bronzini pour le pape ou Dangeau pour le roi?
Est-ce ce livre-là que tu viens dans l'effroi
Chercher, ô vain passant qu'un jour d'en bas éclaire?
Espères-tu trouver dans l'ombre un formulaire
Du gouffre, contenant l'heure, le temps, le lieu,
A telle page l'âme, à telle page Dieu?
Crois-tu dans notre nuit rencontrer des mêlées
De dogmes, de rayons, de choses révélées?
Es-tu, parle, un croyant de bibles? un de ceux
Qui cherchent l'éternel dans un sanscrit chanceux?
Supposes-tu que Dieu passe son temps à faire
Des testaments qu'il jette ensuite à votre sphère?
Des règlements disant: — Vis de cette façon.
Tel jour, mange la chair, et, tel jour, le poisson.
L'Amérique n'est pas, n'étant point révélée.
Qu'à jamais Josué rature Galilée! —
Dis, te figures-tu l'esprit humain ancré
Dans quelque texte au fond d'un papyrus sacré?
Bible, ou Koran? prends-tu Dieu pour un bouquiniste
Qui, pour ces fureteurs livides, Manès triste,
Moïse, Orphée errant de sommet en sommet,
Pythagore, Thalès, Socrate, Mahomet,
Etale dans un coin quelques vieux exemplaires
De l'infini, tombés des profondeurs stellaires,
Et les expose ouverts à qui veut lire, au bord
Du mystère, du ciel, du destin, de la mort,
S'informant peu, tandis qu'aux soleils il s'adosse,
Si quelque page vole et tombe dans la fosse,

Et laissant feuilleter tous ces livres, eddas,
Lévitiques, phédons, pentateuques, védas,
Sur le quai du néant par le vent de l’abîme?
Ou serais-tu quelqu’un de ces menteurs qu’anime
L’imposture, lugubre et redoutable esprit,
Qui tâchent de trouver le divin manuscrit,
Ou du moins d’en saisir au vol quelque passage,
Pour en faire, plus tard, prétextant un message.
Quelque impur code humain, dur, inique, inégal;
Et qui, selon qu’ils sont Omar ou bien Fingal,
Forgent un ciel sérail, un paradis d’épées,
Rêvant la femme nue ou les têtes coupées,
Compliquant l’infini d’un vice ou d’un climat,
Et réduisant la bible énorme à leur format?
Qui que tu sois, prends garde aux formules écrite
Sache que les autels, les cultes et les rites,
Les korans, les talmuds, ont besoin pour durer
Que nul principe faux ne les vienne altérer.
La superstition qui leur tend sa mamelle,
Les infecte et les tue; et quand l’homme se mêle
A ces religions que vous avez en bas,
Elles pourrissent vite et ne se gardent pas.

Le fond de l’être est clos par un nuage obscur,
Traversé de lueurs, aux prodiges semblable,
Voile de l’insondable et de l’incalculable,
Sans limite, sans fin, sans contour, sans milieu;
C’est ce nuage noir que l’homme appelle Dieu.
Un lugubre aquilon qui souffle en ce mystère,
Et qui vient par moments jusque sur votre terre
Des chercheurs inquiets éteindre les flambeaux,
A ce sombre nuage arrache des lambeaux,
Et ces lambeaux, épars sous les nocturnes dômes,
Flottent dans l’ombre avec des formel de fantômes;
Et Jupiter chassé par le vent et Vénus,

Moloch, Mithra, Brahma, Cybèle aux huit seins nus,
Odin, Isis, des sphynx de Thèbes saluée,
Sont les vagues flocons de l’énorme nuée.

Oui, ces spectres, de feux rougis, d’aube dorés,
Ces aspects vains, voilà ce que vous adorez;
Oui, vos religions naissent de ces passages
De vents et de brouillards dans l’esprit de vos sages;
Oui, ces arrachements du nuage sacré,
Ces fragments monstrueux du grand Tout ignoré,
Qui dans le crépuscule errent, et se déforment,
Sinistres, sur le front des hommes qui s’endorment,
Ces haillons d’infini, vus des pâles mortels,
Sont rêves dans vos nuits et dieux sur vos autels.

A de certains instants, quand on ne sait quel vent
Tourne vers l’infini l’homme, pâle vivant,
Quand cette énigme: Dieu, sur votre terre sourde
Apparaît, triste, énorme, et pour l’homme trop lourde,
Parmi tous les esprits, philosophes, songeurs,
Savants, de l’horizon épiant les rougeurs,
Entre tous les penseurs, figures inquiètes,
Ceux qu’elle émeut le plus, ce sont les noirs poètes.
Dieu! mot fatal! il luit; peut-être il va tonner,
Il flamboie, et l’on voit les bardes s’étonner
Ainsi que des lions au seuil de leur tanière,
Les poètes étant situés de manière
A sentir les premiers tous les souffles qui font
Frissonner des lueurs dans l’abîme sans fond.
Les Lucrèces, les Jobs, les blêmes Jérémies,
La lèvre émue encor de leurs strophes frémies,
Courbés sous l’épouvante, épars dans les courroux,
Ont l’air d’esquifs perdus et de navires fous,
Et l’on voit se dresser, vagues dans les décombres,
Tous ces grands effarés, porteurs des harpes sombres!

Quelques-uns, corps à corps, avec des inconnus
Luttent; et tout est l'ombre; et que sont devenus
Tant de systèmes vains, tant de cris, tant de rêves,
Tant d'écume que l'homme a jetée à ses grèves?
Et chacun interroge ou prie avec frayeur;
Et l'un parle au marin, et l'autre au fossoyeur.

Hélas, l'homme, jouet de l'élément, en proie
Au sol qui le dévore, au ciel qui le foudroie,
Fatal, débile, et né dans un accablement,
Ayant pour se guider sa raison qui lui ment
Et le peu de clarté que l'instinct lui procure,
Lutte éternellement avec la force obscure!
Vois dans le pli que fait le coude d'un rocher
Ce hameau de pêcheurs, groupant sous son clocher
Quelques vieux toits parmi des barques échouées.
La ceinture sans fin des vagues dénouées
L'enveloppe et le presse et l'étreint, noir serpent.
Il est là, seul, chétif; et sur lui se répand
L'orage monstrueux, et l'ouragan l'assiège;
Et l'océan n'est grand que pour lui tendre un piège.
Le colossal nuage où fuit l'aigle chasseur
Et que l'espace emplit de toute sa noirceur,
L'éclair, le bruit, le flot où roule le cadavre,
Toute l'ombre se heurte au mur du petit havre;
Et c'est l'immensité, c'est la nuit, c'est la mort
Qui se rouille aux anneaux de la chaîne du port.

Ce point imperceptible où, jamais assouvie,
L'onde écume et s'acharne, hommes, c'est votre vie.
Eh bien, étant si peu, quelle folie as-tu
D'escalader ce ciel par tous les vents battu,
D'ailler, toi qui, tremblant, as déjà tant de peine
A porter seulement l'aspect du phénomène,
Toi le terrassé, toi l'errant, toi le banni,

Toi, le vaincu du gouffre, attaquer l’infini!

Que veux-tu? quelle est donc cette audace insensée
De jeter comme une ancre au gouffre, la pensée?
Le spectre voilé rit de toi, le spectre nu.
Quel besoin l’homme a-t-il de sonder l’inconnu?
N’a-t-il donc pas assez déjà de se défendre
Contre l’énormité qui le couvre de cendre
Et de brume et de trouble et d’énigme et de deuil!
Naufragé, laisse-toi ruisseler sur recueil;
Cet aquilon, ce choc, cette horreur, cette pluie,
C’est l’ombre qui, terrible, à ton néant s’essuie;
C’est cet inconnu même, ô songeur, qui sur toi
Tombe avec le frisson, la souffrance et l’effroi!
Pendant que le vent roule et verse sur ta tête
Toute l’obscurité dans toute la tempête,
Toi, jeté dans l’espace et pourtant au cachot,
Recueille-toi, courbé sous ce souffle d’en haut,
Et, sans interroger l’horrible ciel sublime,
Sur tes membres glacés laisse couler l’abîme!

Quelle pensée as-tu d’allumer ton esprit
Au bord du noir problème où la raison périt?
Pourquoi ne pas laisser les grandes ailes d’ombre,
Songeur, se déployer sur cet univers sombre?
Pourquoi vouloir leurrer d’un feu follet qui fuit
L’antique Adam, errant dans l’insondable nuit?

Sous ces voûtes de brume où tourbillonne l’heure,
Où le temps filtre et coule et, goutte à goutte, pleure,
Où, minute à minute, hier, aujourd’hui, demain,
On entend dans la nuit tomber le genre humain,
Dans cette immensité de l’ombre indivisible,
Toute lampe essayée est un effort risible,
La foi meurt, la science est un sombre embarras.

Que gagneras-tu donc quand tu réussiras
A jeter des clartés farouches dans le vide?
Quand tu feras blêmir quelque Babel livide,
Ou, dans les profondeurs dont tout être est banni,
Le spectre monstrueux du pont de l’infini?
Quand tu feras glisser des lueurs sur ses arches,
Et quand, triste, au delà de la terre où tu marches,
Songeur, tu blanchiras de ton pâle flambeau
Trois ou quatre degrés du dedans du tombeau?
Va, renonce, il n’est plus de lumière possible.
Tous les prodiges sont rentrés dans l’invisible.
L’Ombre est sur tout. Qui donc, fût-il le plus aimant
Qui donc pourra lever ou faire seulement
Remuer un instant les grands voiles funèbres,
Les plis démesurés du manteau de ténèbres?
C’est la faute de l’homme, hélas, si tout est noir.
Le jour, cet obstiné qui ressemble à l’espoir,
Ne demandait pas mieux peut-être que d’éclore;
Mais tout le mal terrestre a soufflé sur l’aurore;
La blanche aurore est morte, et l’homme est dans la nuit.
Il lui restait encor, dans le temple où Dieu luit,
L’effrayant chandelier dont la flamme constante
Pendant qu’ils écrivaient, éclaira les Septante;
Mais il n’a même plus ce foyer du vrai jour;
Les sept vices de l’homme ont, chacun à leur tour,
Éteint un des flambeaux de la lampe à sept branches;
Maintenant c’est fini. L’abîme où tu te penches,
L’obscurité lugubre aux vagues épaisseurs,
Le firmament formé de toutes les noirceurs,
Cet océan de nuit où l’esprit flotte et sombre,
Rit de te voir risquer ta lanterne en cette ombre
Où dans la main de Dieu s’est éteint le soleil.

Oui, je le dis, la mort est pleine de matin;

Tout le sépulcre n’est qu’un point du jour lointain;
A l’heure où sur leurs fronts la tombe va se clore,
Le coq, l’oiseau sacré de la sereine aurore,
Est nommé par Socrate et nommé par Jésus.

Que ceux qui cherchent Dieu sachent qu’ils cherchent l’ombre,
Etreindre l’infini, c’est le songe du nombre;
Saisir l’éternité, c’est le songe du temps.
Avec vos grains de sable entasser vos instants,
Faire un monceau de vœux, de systèmes, d’algèbres,
Devant la pyramide immense des ténèbres,
Avec l’esprit humain tâter l’esprit divin,
C’est inutile et fou, c’est imprudent, c’est vain,
C’est triste; et l’impossible est là qui vous regarde.
Que cherche le devin? que demande le barde?
Qu’espère le poète? Où vont ces curieux?
Emplir d’éternité ses yeux mystérieux,
Égarer dans l’obscur son vol enthousiaste,
Être de l’inconnu le sombre Ecclésiaste,
Croire qu’on va dans l’âpre et haute région,
Puiser de quoi bâtir une religion
Qui, pure et sans erreur, sur les autres s’élève,
C’est le plus effrayant précipice du rêve.

Vivants, l’homme pour l’homme est l’être essentiel
L’homme a la terre; eh bien, qu’il laisse là le ciel.
La terre doit suffire à la race adamite.
Hommes, le limité doit vivre en sa limite;
Hommes, l’être fini doit vivre dans sa fin;
Et boire, s’il a soif, et manger, s’il a faim,
Et fuir l’ombre où l’attend la chimère exécrée.
Ce n’est point sans raison que la loi qui vous crée
Arrondit, bornant tout comme avec un compas,
L’horizon sous vos yeux, la terre sous vos pas;
Vous êtes enfermés dans un cercle, la vie.

Restez-y. Tout effort qui va trop haut, dévie.
La pesanteur vous tient par les pieds; votre chair
S’essouffle, et ne peut rien respirer hors de l’air.
O vivants, votre race est d’un monde héritière;
Vous avez à vous seuls une nature entière;
Contentez-vous-en. L’homme a les larges chemins,
Dans le front la pensée et la semence aux mains.
Ne volez pas, marchez. La charrue à la terre
Laisse un sillon vivant, fécond, solide, austère;
Le navire en fuyant laisse, déjà moins sûr,
Un sillage sur l’eau; l’aile, rien, dans l’azur.
Que l’homme creuse donc, force au vrai seul guidée,
Avec le double soc du cœur et de l’idée,
Sur son monde, par lui de moissons d’or vêtu,
Que l’homme creuse donc, force au vrai seul guidée,
Avec le double soc du cœur et de l’idée,
Sur son monde, par lui de moissons d’or vêtu,
Un sillon de science, un sillon de Vertu;
Qu’il fasse de son globe un jardin de lumière;
Le sort vous a donné la matière première,
Cette ferre à pétrir, ce bloc d’air, de feu, d’eau,
D’argile, à délivrer de l’horreur, son fardeau;
Monde, dont vous devez féconder les tempêtes,
Qui, jadis, s’est nommé le monstre, étant aux bêtes,
Et qui, repris par l’homme, apprivoisé, dompté,
Sauvé, doit s’appeler un jour l’Humanité,
Voilà l’œuvre. Restez dans cette sainte tâche.
En voulant saisir Dieu, c’est la terre qu’on lâche;
Et la terre est le but. Bornez vos pas hardis.
C’est sur terre qu’il faut chercher le paradis.
Laissez le ciel au ciel. L’homme, qui là-haut sombre,
Sur terre est de la vie et dans le ciel de l’ombre;
Qu’il reste, être réel, dans la réalité.
En marche, argile! O chair esclave, en liberté!
Debout! debout! debout! Sur la terre engourdie
Allume le progrès comme un grand incendie!
Lave l’or des limons; tire le mal du bien!

Impose un rail de fer au sable nubien;
Révolte-toi f Réplique au désert par la ville;
Les fléaux sont tyrans; fais ta guerre servile!
Les uns sont des lions, les autres sont des porcs,
Combats, nettoie! Et règne, et vis! — Creuse des ports,
Perce des rocs, conduis des eaux, bâtis des voûtes,
Sur le vieux monde pris croise un filet de routes;
Sut le globe à grands pas promène-toi, semeur
De mouvement, de bruit, de foule et de rumeur!
Entre deux coups de bec de vautour, Prométhée
A crié, par-dessus la nuit épouvantée:
«Hommes, soyez titans, et remuez les monts,
Secouez la lumière aux yeux des dieux démons!
Levez-vous, levez-vous comme l’aurore blonde,
Hommes, et, dieux vous-même, éblouissez le monde!”
C’est-à-dire, allez droit au progrès, marchez-y!
Vous avez sous vos pieds, nommes, peuple choisi,
Sous vous, sous votre esprit, sous votre destinée,
Par l’antique chaos la terre assassinée.
De cette grande morte arrachez les linceuls,
Et ressuscitez-là! Vous le pouvez, vous seuls.
Sondez la profondeur du flot qui vous submerge;
Violez la forêt, cette effrayante vierge;
Peuplez, plantez, greffez, labourez, défrichez,
Éclairez! Dédaignez, sur le grand but penchés,
La rêverie ingrate, aveuglante, énervante!
La pesanteur est reine; homme, fais-la servante;
La matière est le poids; fais-en le portefaix;
Réunis l’Atlantique au Pacifique; fais
Des baisers d’océans sous tes pieds formidables;
Coupe les isthmes; rends les neiges fécondables;
Sois partout, sur la terre et sur la mer, épars;
Vivifie et transforme; ouvre de toutes parts
Les sciences sur l’ombre ainsi que des paupières
Aux croupes du chaos attache des croupières;
Sois le vivant ayant l’idéal pour labeur,
Mais l’idéal terrestre et vrai; sois le courbeur

Terrible et rayonnant des têtes monstrueuses,
Que mordent de côté les gueules tortueuses,
Mais qui, sûr de demain qu'il tient par aujourd'hui
Dédaigne la morsure - ayant la vie en lui.
Abats l'échafaud! Rompt les fers! Brise les piquet!
Donne aux pôles l'été! Donne avril aux tropiques!
Soit le libérateur du globe enfin heureux!
Tu ne vois qu'un côté, le côté ténébreux;
La création noire, âpre, vertigineuse,
Te cache du grand Tout la face lumineuse;
Tu n'as qu'à faire un signe, et tout change; et voilà
Que ces moteurs sans nom qu'Archimède attela,
Les gaz, ces ouvriers, les aimants, ces cyclopes,
Les forces soulevant toutes les enveloppes,
Les chevaux Éléments et les Fléaux dragons
Font tourner la nature horrible sur ses gonds!
Sois le dompteur géant par qui tout s'émancipe.
Laisse Dieu. Fais le monde homme. Fais-toi principe.

Laisse Dieu dans son ciel comme il te laisse en bas
Suer tes durs labeurs, saigner tes durs combats.
Laisse l'éternité tranquille. Sois la vie.
Sois l'inquiet désir que le réel convie;
Sois, sur l'altier chemin du vrai, du bon, du beau,
Le grand coureur humain qui porte le flambeau,
Le crieur, le marcheur par qui les choses vivent,
Et que tous les progrès pêle-mêle poursuivent;
Sois le fougueux, l'ardent, l'orageux, l'agité,
Et ne t'occupe pas de la sérénité!

L'absolu vous ignore. Ignorez-le. Vous, hommes,
Avancez, travaillez; après, dormez vos sommes;
Ne vous égarez pas dans les espaces fous.
Car, s'il est à quelqu'un, le ciel n'est pas à vous.
Il est des visiteurs dont cette solitude,
Redoutable, a fini par prendre l'habitude;
L'éclair y plonge et fuit; le pur rayon vermeil,

Le temps qu’on ouvre l’œil, arrive du soleil;
L’azur a pour passant le pâle météore;
La comète d’un bond va du soir à l’aurore,
Prompte, ignorée, aveugle, épouvantablement,
Elle franchit de part en part le firmament,
Et retourne, d’un coup de sa lugubre queue,
De l’immensité noire à l’immensité bleue.
Ces farouches oiseaux sont faits pour ce grand vol.
Mais vous, je vous l’ai dit, vous portez le licol
Du globe, de la chair, de la mort, de la vie.
N’ayez donc pas de l’ombre une inutile envie.
Vivez dans ce qui germe et non dans ce qui fuit.
Ne mettez pas le pied sur l’escalier de nuit.
L’énormité, muette, aveugle, continue,
Toujours sinistrement voilée et toujours nue,
Pleine d’un inconnu dont vous ne pouvez point
Distinguer un contour, même quand le jour point,
Toute faite de nuit, de silence, d’abîme,
Sans écho, sans reflet, sans fond, sans bord, sans cime
Ouvre et forme sur vous ses gouffres étoiles,
Vit, songe, et ne sait pas ce que vous lui voulez.

Viens-tu de l’infini feuilleter le dossier?
Espères-tu trouver la glose d’un Dacier
En marge de la nue et des autres sans nombre,
Et des notes au bas de la page et de l’ombre?
Dis, te figures-tu que les éthers, remplis
De brumes et de feux mêlant leurs larges plis,
Les globes, l’étendue aux livides frontières,
Sont un livre classé par ordre de matières
Où le Très-Haut, voilé par les bleus horizons,
Prouve son existence et donne ses raisons?
Crois-tu que Dieu, — s’il est, — prévoyant dans sa sphère
Toutes les questions que tu comptes lui faire,
N’a pu se hasarder à créer l’univers,

Les espaces au vol des tourbillons ouverts,
Le vaste monde où rien n’hésite et ne dévie,
Les flots d’êtres roulant sous les souffles de vie,
L’azur reparaissant dès que la brume a fui,
Qu’en bonne forme avec les pièces à l’appui?
Crois-tu que l’inconnu se hâte de descendre
S’il s’entend appeler par toi, le grain de cendre,
Qu’il va, toi présidant, répondre à l’examen,
Et t’éclairer, tenant les documents en main,
Le but de tout, du jour, de la nuit, de toi-même?
Crois-tu que l’éternel va, sans l’azur suprême,
T’expliquer l’infini peuplé dans tes conseils,
Et te justifier les cieux et les soleils?

Quoi! t’imagines-tu, songeur, qu’on paisse avoir
Une discussion avec l’horreur sacrée?
Que l’air va te conter comment l’idéal crée?
Crois-tu que la rumeur orageuse des flots
Chicane ou complimente, entre deux noirs sanglots,
Manon sur les vedas, Moïse sur les nombres;
Et que les quatre vents, tournant leurs clairons sombres
Au nord, à l’orient, à l’occident, au sud,
Grondent pour le Phédon ou contre le Talmud?
Crois-tu que Sirius et Mars sont une glose?
Crois-tu que le semoun ne soit pas autre chose
Que le ciel qui disserte et que l’inflexion
De sa voix répondant à quelque objection?
Crois-tu que le prodige éternel se dissipe
Comme une opinion d’Orose ou d’Hégesippe?
Crois-tu que le matin va te faire un traité
De l’Être abstrait, du Verbe et de la Trinité?
Penses-tu que le bleu, le profond, l’empyrée,
Et que la vaste nuit pâle et désespérée
Tremble aux négations que tu vas lui lancer,

Et qu’avec un dilemme on puisse embarrasser
La comète, qui vient du gouffre, et qu’on réfute
Le soir triste, apportant les autres dans sa chute?

Jette de la logique à sa grève déserte,
Mais sans finir par donc ni commencer par certe.
L’ombre est un grand hymen, l’abîme est un grand lit;
L’Être emplit l’étendue et l’emplit et l’emplit;
Sans qu’on sache comment les globes se soutiennent,
Au même point des cieux les planètes reviennent;
Les mondes, monstrueux et beaux, uns et divers,
Tous les objets créés, bêtes, monts, rameaux verts,
L’homme par la pensée et la fleur par la tige,
Entrent dans le miracle et sortent du prodige;
L’air frémit, l’arbre croît, l’oiseau chante, l’eau fuit,
Et des lumières vont jusqu’au fond de la nuit;
L’illusion serait étrange, que t’en semble,
De voir dans ce splendide et redoutable ensemble,
Dans ce flot de la vie et dans ce noir torrent,
Un docteur de Sorbonne énorme pérorant.

O Dieu! problème! essence insondable! unité!
Si haute vérité qu’elle touche à la fable!
Tu veux t’imaginer, homme, cet ineffable!
Ah! tu le veux toucher et voir absolument!
Soit Édifie, avec n’importe quel ciment,
Sculpte dans les azurs, dans les brouillards funèbres,
Mets sur le piédestal monstrueux des ténèbres
Un être ayant le monde entier pour fondement;
Construis quelqu’un d’immense avec ton firmament,
Avec ton empyrée aux splendides pilastres,
Avec ta terre, avec ta mer, avec tes astres;

Espèce de colosse abîme, ouvrant des yeux
Faits de tous les rayons du ciel prodigieux,
Ayant au front l’essaim des esprits et des dives,
Et, pareil au géant que Rhodes sur deux rives
Bâtit et qui tenait dans sa main une tour,
Ayant un pied dans l’ombre et l’autre sur le jour;
Oui, mêle à ses cheveux, profusions obscures,
Les pléiades, Cancer, Vénus, les Dioscures,
Et tous ces soleils d’or qu’on voit s’enchevêtrer,
J’y consens; et je veux que tu fasses entrer
Dans la construction de la sombre figure
Tout ce que rêve l’homme et le prêtre et l’augure,
Le tonnerre, le vent, l’éclair, l’illusion,
Toute l’énormité de la création
Et de la grande nuit redoutable et muette;
Bien. Que concluras-tu de cette statuette?
Croiras-tu t’être fait une image de Dieu?

*

Et, sombre, j’attendis; puis je continuai:

— Quoi! l’homme tomberait, hagard, exténué,
Comme le moucheron qui bat la vitre blême!
Quoi! tout aboutirait à du néant suprême!
Tout l’effort des chercheurs frémissants se perdrait!
L’homme habiterait l’ombre et serait au secret!
Marcher serait errer! l’aile serait punie!
L’aurore, ô cieux profonds, serait une ironie! —

Alors, debout, levant la voix, levant les bras,
Éperdu, je criai:
— Cela ne se peut pas!
Grand Inconnu, méchant ou boni grand Invisible!

Je te le dis en face, Être! c’est impossible! —

*

Une troisième fois, dans l’effrayant ciel noir
On éclata de rire.
Et muet, sans pouvoir
Deviner d’où venait cette gaîté terrible,
Je regardai, lutteur frémissant, l’ombre horrible.

Dans l’obscurité sourde, impalpable, inouïe,
Je me retrouvai seul, mais je n’étais plus en moi;
Ou du moins, dans ma tête ouverte aux vents d’effroi,
Je sentis, sans pourtant que l’ombre et le mystère
Eussent cassé le fil qui me lie à la terre,
Monter, grossir, entrer, presque au dernier repli,
Comme une crue étrange et terrible d’oubli;
Je sentis, dans la forme obscure pour moi-même
Que je suis et qui, brume, erre dans le problème
Presque s’évanouir tout l’être antérieur;
Si bien que le fantôme et l’effrayant rieur
Et tous les êtres noirs sortis du gouffre énorme
N’étaient plut qu’un nuage en ma mémoire informe,
Et que mon souvenir en un instant perdit
Tout ce que Légion par cent voix m’avait dit.
A peine de ma vie avais-je encor l’idée,
Et ce que jusqu’alors, larve aux lueurs guidée,
J’avais nommé mon âme était je ne sais quoi
Dont je n’étais plus sûr et qui flottait en moi.
Il ne restait de moi qu’une soif de connaître,
Une aspiration vers ce qui pourrait être,
Une bouche voulant boire un peu d’eau qui fuit,
Fût-ce tu creux de la main fatale de la nuit.

III. Le Jour

Et ce point prit bientôt la forme d'un suaire.

Ses plis vagues jetaient une odeur d'ossuaire;
Et sous le drap hideux et livide on sentait
Un de ces êtres noirs sur qui la nuit se tait.

C'était de ce linceul qu'était sorti le rire
Qui m'avait par trois fois troublé jusqu'au délire.
Sans que l'Être le dît, je le compris. Mon sang
Se glaça; je frémis.
   L'être parla:

    — Passant,
Écoute. — Tu n'as vu jusqu'ici que des songes,
Que de vagues lueurs flottant sur des mensonges,
Que les aspects confus qui passent dans les vents
Ou tremblent dans la nuit pour vous autres vivants.
Mais maintenant veux-tu d'une volonté forte
Entrer dans l'infini, quelle que soit la porte?

Ce que l'homme endormi peut savoir, tu le sais.
Mais, esprit, trouves-tu que ce n'est pas assez?
Ton regard, d'ombre en ombre et d'étage en étage,
A vu plus d'horizon... — en veux-tu davantage?
Veux-tu, perçant le morne et ténébreux réseau,
T'envoler dans le vrai comme un sinistre oiseau?
Veux-tu derrière toi laisser tous les décombres,
Temps, espace, et, hagard, sortir des branches sombres?
Veux-tu, réponds, aller plus loin qu'Amos n'alla,
Et plus savant qu'Esdras et qu'Élie, au delà
Des prophètes pensifs et des blancs cénobites,
Percer l'ombre, emporté par des ailes subites?
O semeur du sillon nébuleux, laboureur
Perdu dans la fumée horrible de l'erreur,

Front où s’abat l’essaim tumultueux des rêves,
Doutes, systèmes vains, effrois, luttes sans trêves,
Te plaît-il de savoir comment s’évanouit
En adoration toute cette âpre nuit?
Veux-tu, flèche tremblante, atteindre enfin la cible?
Veux-tu toucher le but, regarder l’invisible,
L’innommé, l’idéal, le réel, l’inouï?
Comprendre, déchiffrer, lire? être un ébloui?
Veux-tu planer plus haut que la sombre nature?
Veux-tu dans la lumière inconcevable et pure
Ouvrir tes yeux, par l’ombre affreuse appesantis?
Le veux-tu? Réponds. — Oui, criai-je. — Et je sentis
Que la création tremblait comme une toile.

Alors, levant un bras et, d’un pan de son voile,
Couvrant tous les objets terrestres disparus,
Il me toucha le front du doigt.

Et je mourus.

LES ANNÉES FUNESTES

TABLE DES MATIERES

AVERTISSEMENT DE L'ÉDITEUR
I Testament littéraire. Actes et Paroles. Depuis l'exil.
II J'applique mon oreille à travers mon cachot
III Un peuple était debout,
IV CESAR
VI Le frissonnant essaim des pâles Euménides
VII. LES CHÂTIMENTS
VIII Eh bien, allons!
IX TRIOMPHE PAS DE BRUME.
X Triomphe.
XI BORD DE LAMER
XII LE TIREPOINT
XIII ENTENDU DANS LE CIEL
XIV ILS NOUS RAILLENT, DISANT..
XV Ils nous raillent, disant:
XVI Les prêtres des faux dieux
XVII QUAND DES TROUS À SES MAINS
XVIII Quand, des trous à ses mains,
XIX DES REMORDS? LUI! POURQUOI?...
XX Des remords? lui! Pourquoi?
XXI LE MAL DU PAYS
XXII Je suis de ceux qui,
XXIII Tout est bien.
XXIV Vous êtes riche,
XXV UN PRÉSIDENT
XXVI À UN ENNEMI INCONSCIENT
XXVII Est-ce mon siècle,
XXVIII Venez nous voir dans l'asile
XXIX EN CONSEIL
XXX Je ne désire pas la mort de Bonaparte
XXXI L'EMPEREUR À COMPIÈGNE

XXXII AMNISTIE
XXXIII EN PLEIN DIX-NEUVIÈME SIÈCLE.
XXXIV APPROBATION DES PRÊTRES
XXXV QU'ÊTES-VOUS? - TU LE VOIS...
XXXVI Pour le prêtre il est saint
XXXVII POUR L'ÉCRIVAIN VÉNAL...
XXXIX Vous le trouvez bon.
XL JE-SERAIS TRÈS CONTENT..
XLI APRÈS SEIZE ANS
XLII BAUDIN
XLIII CET ÊTRE EST SI PETIT..
XLIV Toi qui derrière moi
XLV LESURQUES
XLVI DEUX ARRÊTS ONT ÉTÉ RENDUS CE MOIS-CI...
XLVII EN 1869
XLVIII ON EST CE PERSONNAGE...
L AUBIN
LI QUANT A PARIS, TON POING...
LII . . MISÈRE
LIV DÉPART ET RETOUR DES RÉGIMENTS
LV Et voilà dix-sept ans
LVI ÉPIZOOTIE DANS LES HOMMES DE DÉCEMBRE
LVII Le sénateur peut être un valet
LVIII 2 JANVIER 1870
LIX À ***
LX On me dit: Courez donc
LXI Honnête homme,
LXII L'empire atroce avorte en empire plaintif.
LXIII COUPS DE CLAIRON

AVERTISSEMENT DE L’ÉDITEUR

Dans les éditions précédentes, les poésies qui composent les Années funestes ont été échelonnées de 1852 à 1870, répondant ainsi au titre même, mais à l’aide d’un classement factice. Par exemple, les vers qui ouvrent le volume sont datés dans le manuscrit: 4 juin; nous avons pu établir qu’ils sont de 1875, l’écriture et le papier employé suffisent d’ailleurs à le démontrer; mais comme cette poésie, sorte de préface aux Années funestes, a pour sujet l’arrivée en exil, on l’avait datée: 1852.

Les exécuteurs testamentaires agissaient selon la recommandation de Victor Hugo lui-même « dans l’esprit et la pensée qu’ils lui connaissaient”. Nous ne pouvons, nous, dans cette édition documentaire, nous permettre les mêmes libertés. Tout en conservant l’ordonnance du volume, nous avons reproduit exactement les dates du manuscrit, et, pour les poésies non datées, nous avons, comme dans Toute la Lyre, dressé un tableau approximatif d’après l’écriture ou d’après certaines particularités. Ce tableau suit la description du manuscrit.

I Testament littéraire. Actes et Paroles. Depuis l’exil.

J’ai dit à l’Océan: - Salut! veux-tu, que j’entre,
O gouffre, en ton mystère, ô lion, dans ton antre?
J’arrive du milieu, des. hommes asservis.
Gouffre, je ne’ sais plus au juste si je vis;
J’ai ce cadavre en moi, la conscience humaine;
Et je sens cette morte immense qui me mène.
Quoique tuée, elle est vivante encor pour moi.
Mais ai-je sur la face assez d’ombre et d’effroi
Pour être justicier, réponds, mer insondable?
Je voudrais être mort pour être formidable.
Les morts dans leur prunelle ont un tel inconnu
Que le tyran frissonne ainsi qu’un enfant nu
Quand sur lui ce regard de sépulcre s’appuie.
Mer, puisque le soldat, valet d’un traître, essuie
Une infamie avec les plis de son drapeau,
Puisque le prêtre met en vente son troupeau
Et jette on ne sait quel Te Deum 2 à l’abîme,
Horreur! puisque le juge est juge au nom d’un crime,
Puisque les trahisons remplacent les exploits,
Puisque nous n’avons plus qùe des ombres de lois,
Puisqu’on a poignardé la France entre deux portes,
Mer, j’aimerais mieux être avec les choses mortes
Qu’avec tous les vivants de ce monde âpre et vil.
Le nuage, où parfois s’ébauche un noir profil,
Prouve qu’il peut tomber un éclair d’un fantôme.
Du linceul d’Isaïe il sort un sombre psaume.
Je voudrais n’être rien qu’un aspect irrité,
Une apparition d’ombre et de vérité.
A force d’être une âme on cesse d’être un homme;
Qui suis-je? mer, dis-moi de quel nom je me nomme.

C’est par les visions que les rois sont punis.

Est-ce que ce n’est pas une ombre qu’Erynnis?
Est-ce que ce n’est pas une larve qu’Electre?

Et l’Océan m’a dit: - Sois le bienvenu, Spectre.

14 juin

II J’applique mon oreille à travers mon cachot

J’applique mon oreille à travers mon cachot
Contre la conscience énorme de là-haut.
Et j’écoute. Et, pensif, je fuis, et, solitaire,
Je m’envole. Quiconque a pour prison la terre,
A pour évasion le ciel. Là, j’ai l’effroi
De sentir comme une âme immense entrer en moi
Et j’én tremble, et j’en suis joyeux. Sévère joie!
Va, sois le Châtiment, me-dit quelqu’un. Foudroie.
La foudre est le jet noir du firmament vengeur.
Je me penche du fond d’une blême rougeur,
Et, dii seuil étoilé, comme d’une fenêtre,
Sur ta simarre, ô juge, et sur ta robe, ô prêtre,
Je vide la justice avec la vérité.
Vivez, régnez! ma strophe au sanglot irrité,
Mon vers sanglant, fumant, amer, qui, du ciel sombre,
Ainsi que. d’une bouche entr’ouverte dans l’ombre,
Jaillit; tombe, se rue, éclate, et sur les fronts
Se disperse en horreur, en tempête, en affronts,
Flétrit, submerge; noie; éclabousse et remonte,
Est le vomissement dé Dieu sur votre honte.

26 février 1870.

III Un peuple était debout,

Un peuple était debout, et ce peuple était grand.
Il marchait lumineux dans le progrès flagrant.
Lés autres nations disaient: Voici la tête!
Il avait traversé cette énorme tempête
Quatrevirigt-treize, et mis le vieux monde au tombeau;
Dans la lutte difforme il était resté béau;
Ce’ fier peuple, assailli d’évènements funèbres,
Avait fait des rayons de toutes ces ténèbres;
Il avait fait, démon, dieu, sauveur irrité,
De la combustion des siècles sa clarté.
Il avait eu Pascal, il avait eu Molière;
Il avait vu sur lui s’épaissir comme un lierre
L’amour des nations dont il était l’appui;
Et pendant soixante ans sur sa cime avait lui
Voltaire, cet esprit de flamme armé du rire,
Ce titan qui, proscrit, empêchait de proscrire,
Ce pasteur guidant l’âme, enseignant le devoir
Et chassant le troupeau des dogmes au lavoir.
Ce peuple avait en lui la loi qui développe;
A force d’être France il devenait Europe;
A force d’être Europe il était l’univers.
Il savait rester un tout en étant divers;
Chaque race est un chiffre, il en était la somme;
Et ce peuple était plus qu’un peuple; il était l’Homme.
Dans la forêt sinistre il était l’éclaireur;
Son pas superbe était le recul de l’erreur;
Il proclamait le vrai sur la terre; une lave
Sortait de son esprit qui délivrait l’esclave,
Et la femme, et le faible, et le pauvre inquiet,
Et l’aveugle ignorant, de sorte qu’on voyait
Devant sa flamme, hostile au mal, au crime, aux haines,
S’enfuir la vieille nuit traînant les vieilles chaînes.
Il était entouré des ruines du mal,
D’abus tombés, monceau formidable et fatal,

De droits ressuscités, de vertus retrouvées,
Et de petites mains d’enfants, vers lui levées.
Au lieu de dire: Grâce! il disait: Il lé faut!
Il combattait la guerre, il tuait l’échafaud.
Père et frère, il donnait la vie, ôtait les maîtres.
Guetté, mais fort, trop grand, hélas! pour croire aux traîtres,
Il marchait aussi pur que l’aube en floréal,
L’oeil fixé sur ce ciel qu’on nomme l’idéal.
Subitement, il est tombé dans l’embuscade,
Et son cadavre est là sur une barricade.
Ce trépassé, sanglant, nu, mordant son baîllon,
Pâle, n’a même plus la gloire, ce haillon,
Et ses noirs assassins, de leur main lâche et fausse,
Creusent sous lui la nuit comme on creuse une fosse.

Décembre souriant, suivi de son Sénat,
A fait hommage aux rois de cet assassinat,
Les rois ont respiré cet encensoir fétide.
Et devant Fualdès mort, le juge est pour Bastide
Et le prêtre bénit Caïn tuant Abel.
Sous ta tiare d’or qui ressemble à Babel,
Et qui, de la Sixtine illuminant les voiles,

A plus de diamants que le ciel n’a d’étoiles,
Sur ta chaire, splendide et sacré tribunal,.
Pape, tu ne vaux pas, dans ton haut Quirinal,
Qui du monde romain domine les déluges,
Rois, vous ne valez pas, vous ne valez pas, juges,
Tu ne vaux pas, César dans la pourpre élevé,
Les chiens qui vont léchant le sang sur le pavé!

IV CESAR

Il fait le mal il boit des pleurs; il boit du sang;
Partout la mort, l’exil, des veuves gémissant,
Des orphelins, des foyers vides;
C’est ainsi qu’entassant deuils, forfaits, désespoirs,
Les tyrans font téter à nos vers, dogues noirs,
La mamelle des Euménides:

Tous ces prétoriens qui l’ont fait empereur
L’entourent; Rome est calme et parle avec terreur;
On ne laisse approcher personne;
Ils gardent son palais et veillent à l’entour,
Mille à chaque barrière et cent sur chaque tour;
Le inonde tremble, et lui frissonne.

Il évoque, effaré, livide, anéanti,
Tous ses prédécesseurs, que les’ clypeati
Couvraient de leurs mâles poitrines;
Et l’histoire, témoin qu’on trouve toujours là,
Fait sortir de l’égout le dieu Caracalla
Et le dieu Néron des latrines.
Il erre en son palais. Ici tout le défend;
Ici leprêtre adore Auguste triomphant,
Ici les fronts sont dans ‘la poudre,
Ici’là terre apporte un respect assidu;
Au-dessus de sa tête il entend, éperdu,
L’éclat de rire de la foudre.

2 décembre 1869.

ÉCRIT SUR UN EXEMPLAIRE DE LA VIE D’APOLLONIUS DE TYANE
Les sages, en suivant leurs rêves nécessaires,
Ne perdent pas de vue ici-bas les misères;
L’astre les enchaîne à son char;

Ils creusent l’être, l’âme, et l’espace, et le nombre;
Un de leurs yeux profonds contemple Dieu dans l’ombre,
Mais l’autre est fixé sur César;
Les constellations énormes chue Dieu penche
Tantôt vers l’âpre nuit, tantot vers l’aube blanche,
L’ombre, les abîmes, les fleurs,
L’immense vision des choses éternelles,
Emplissent de rayons une de leurs prunelles,
Et de l’autre. il tombe des pleurs;
Leur esprit, dont la foule écoute les paroles,
Penché sur les soleils, les ondes, les corolles,
Sur l’arbre où Jésus s’endormit,
Sur les ténèbres, gouffre où la clarté se lève,
Regarde en même temps la nature qui rêve
Et l’humanité qui gémit;
De sorte qu’il arrive, - et tu le sais, Éphèse 5! -
Que, tout en expliquant lés cieux, sombre fournaise,
Septentrion, Aldebaran;
Le monde, et Dieu pensif contemplant son ouvrage,
Ils se dressent soudain ‘en s’écriant: Courage,
Stephanus! frappe le tyran!

6 avril 1854. Jersey.

VI Le frissonnant essaim des pâles Euménides

ÉCRIT SUR UN EXEMPLAIRE DES CHÂTIMENTS

Le frissonnant essaim des pâles Euménides
Met les effrois
Dans l’homme, et ne veut pas laisser les âmes vides
Et les coeurs froids;

Elles vont secouant sur nos fronts une chaîne
Avec des chants,
Leur fonction étant de nous emplir de haine
Pour les méchants;

Et ces femmes de l’ombre, éparses et volantes,
Rôdent dans l’air,
Furieuses, et font.des colères trop lentes
Jaillir l’éclair;

— Allons! réveille-toi! ne vois-tu pas Tibère?
Viens! fais un pas!
Est-ce que pour frapper la foudre délibère?
Ne vois-tu pas

Le mal partout; ici le crime et là le vice;
Judas rêvant;
Ce roi, ce juge, l’un achetant la justice
Que l’autre vend?

Frappe! - Ainsi vont grondant les gorgones sublimes;
Et leur vertu,
Sinistre, ouvre au songeur l’horizon des abîmes;
Et dis: Viens-tu?

Et le poète suit ces filles formidables.
— Monstres, j’accours!

C’est bien! Et; sur le haut des monts inabordables,
Dans les bois sourds;

Dans l’inclément désert, sur l’âpre mer sonore,
La sombre nuit
Est contente; et, plus bas, dans les prés où l’aurore
S’épanouit,

Dans l’azur, dans l’été, dans l’herbe et dans. les mousses,
Dans la chaleur,
Dans l’idylle, on entend toutes les choses douces
Qui sont en fleur,

L’églantier, le rosier plein d’une âme invisible,
Le frais buisson,
Dire en voyant passer le poète terrible.:.
Il a raison.

6 décembre.

VII. LES CHÂTIMENTS

Rester où nous sommes!
Non! puisque ces hommes;
Tes fils, Liberté;
Ne sont que des femmes,
Relever les âmes
C’est ma volonté.

Puisque tout s’écroule,
Puisque cette foule
N’est, sous ce pouvoir,
Que poussière et sable,
Être formidable
C’est le grand devoir.

La loi n’est pas morte,
La justice est forte,
On est nation,
Dieu pensif approuve;
Tant qu’Une âme cotive
L’indignation.

Il est nécessaire,
Quand tout est misère,
Opprobre, douleur,
Torpeur, frénésie,
Que la poésie,
Cette plaine en fleur,

À toutes les roses,
A toutes les choses
Du printemps serein,
Dont elle est semée,
Mêle la fumée
D’un feu souterrain.

Quand, parce qu’un homme
Est béni par Rome,
Il peut tout braver,
Ne rendre aucun compte,
Et couvrir de honte
L’aube à son lever,

Quand tout le protège,
Et quand son cortège
Rampe avec orgueil,
Tas d’hommes de proie,
Vils, ayant pour joie .
La patrie en deuil,
Quand on n’a plus d’armes,
Quand Tyrtée en larmes
Réjouit Scapin,
Quand frémit l’histoire,
Quand l’homme est sans gloire,
La femme sans pain,

Certe, il est utile
Qu’on voie en mon style
Les rois châtiés,
L’ouragan, l’outrage,
Et toute la rage
Des grandes pitiés.

Certes, je dois plaire,
France, à ta colère,
Quand je dis: Allons!
Et quand j’encourage
Au souffle, à l’orage,
Les noirs aquilons.

Et quand aux poètes,
Je dis: Gypaètes,
Faucons et vautours,

Guerre aux infidèles!
Guerre! ayons des ailes
Puisqu'ils ont des tours!

Guerre au front servile!
La lâcheté vile
Du fourbe est l'appui:
Guerre au' maître 'infâme!
Dispersons notre âme
En foudre sur lui!

Je sens que moi-même,
Furieux, je m'aime;
Et je suis content
Quand sous mon vol sombre,
Le, tyran, dans l'ombre,
Tête basse, attend.
Quel abîme creuse
Leur croissance affreuse!
On voit, radieux,
Sur la terre en cendre,
Ces démons s'étendre
Et grandir ces dieux;

Ils sont sur le faîte;
Dante les arrête
De son poing d'acier,
Et les rapetisse;
Dieu pour sa justice
Fit ce justicier.

Quand s'ouvre le gouffre,
Quand le peuple souffre
Sous d'impurs vainqueurs,
Cet énorme câble,
La haine implacàble,
Soutient tous les coeurs.

Des gueux ont des mondes;
Des Césars immondes,
Sous leurs pieds ayant
La loi, leur victime,
Ajoutent au crime
Un rire effrayant.

J’envoie à leurs fêtes
Mes hymnes tempêtes
Luire et flamboyer,
Et mon âme est haute
Quand l’éclair mon hôte
Sort de mon foyer.

Pour frapper les traîtres,
Faux dieux et faux prêtres,
Vil groupe inhumain,
Debout dans mon aire
Je montre au tonnerre
Le plus court chemin.

C’est la sainte cause.
Mon vers superpose
La justice au mal,
Jésus à Tibère,
L’idéale sphère.
Au gouffre animal.

Cette oeuvre est la vraie.
Abhorrer l’ivraie
C’est aimer l’épi.
Je trouve dans l’antre
De l’histoire, où j’entre,
Tacite accroupi;

Juvénal, ce fauve,

Eschyle au front chauve,
Me disent: C’est bien.
Sombre philosophe,
Je mets dans ma strophe
Le vent libyen.

L’ombre est mon amante;
J’aime la tourmente,
Le déchaînement;
J’aime le désordre
Des rois que vient mordre
L’ïambe écumant.

Cieux! j’aime la haine
Quand elle est sereine,
Quand elle a raison,
Et quand, comme Electre,
Elle est le grand spectre
Droit sur l’horizon.

23 avril.

VIII Eh bien, allons!

Eh bien, allons! mentant, pillant, volant, broyant,
Coalisez-vous tous! que ce soit effrayant!
Nous sommes prêts au deuil, à la mort, au martyre.
Que d’un coup de collier le genre humain s’en tire!
Frappez-nous, percez-nous! Traversons, s’il le faut,
Avec le dernier camp, le dernier échafaud!
Qu’il soit hideux, devant la terre intimidée,
Ce duel sombre où la force a terrassé l’idée!
Que le passé se rue et morde l’avenir!
Qu’Haynau vienne tuer et Mastaï bénir!
Qu’ils soient les éperviers, Seigneur, et nous les proies!
Que nos poignets gonflés saignent sous les courroies!
Qu’on nous jette à l’exil, au bagne, à la prison!
Que sur le coteau noir, tumeur de l’horizon,
L’affreux gibet, squelette aux sinistres vertèbres,
Se dresse! Que l’esprit des antiques ténèbres
Risque l’un après l’autre, et tire coup sur coup
Ses monstres de sa poche, et fasse son va-tout,
Et joue en rugissant sur sa dernière carte

IX TRIOMPHE PAS DE BRUME.

Son dernier Nicolas, son dernier Bonaparte!
Oui, crachez vos serments, hurlez vos Te Deums,
Invoquez vos Agnus, vos bons dieux, vos Mahoms!
Que les czars et les-rois et les hommes des sacres
Lancent tous les bourreaux, fassent tous les massacres!
Que nous soyons trahis, vaincus, chassés, brisés,
Et que tous les Judas donnent tous les baisers!
Finissons-en; voici nos têtes pour le glaive!
Pourvu qu'à l'orient une blancheur se lève!
Pourvu que, dans ses mains tenant tous les flambeaux,
L'éclatant avenir sorte de nos tombeaux!
Pourvu que naisse enfin la nouvelle âme humaine!
Pourvu qu'au vieil Adam Dieu par la main amène,
Après tant de douleurs, tant de sang, tant de fiel,
Cette âme, Ève d'en haut, la future du ciel!
Pourvu qu'un jour, jour saint et dont mon coeur tressaille,
Après nous; derniers morts du grand champ de bataille,
Derniers épis du; mal, derniers martyrs du fer,
On voie, en un Eden fait avec notre enfer;
Debout sur notre cendre et sur notre désastre,
L'homme-adorant la paix, l'aigle regardant l'astre!

18 octobre 1854.

X Triomphe.

Triomphe. Pas de-brume en ce splendide azur.
Marche dans tous les sens sur ton crime; il est sûr.
Danse dessus, bâtis dessus; il est solide.
Le droit divin te garde en habit d'invalide;
Le pape te bénit, le sultan te bénit.
Ta constellation resplendit au zénith;
Qu'elle est belle! Nemrod géant, Rhamsès farouche,
Charlemagne, César, ,Napoléon, Cartouche!
L'aurore, a pour toi, prince, un sourire charmant.
Le bleu du bonheur monstre ,emplit ton firmament.
Pas un plaisir, permis ou non, que. tu n'effleures
Dans l'entrelacement voluptueux des heures;
Ta journée est un long festin renouvelé.
Par chaque instant qui passe, heureux, chantant, ailé.
Que veux-tu? le, pouvoir? Sonne La France vote.
Elle est voltairienne, elle sera dévote, -
Pour te plaire. Veux-tu des palais? Prends. Choisis.
Sois chez toi. Sur quel trône est-on le mieux assis?
Prends celui de Versaille ou prends celui du Louvre.
La planche de sapin qu'un peu de velours couvre

A du bon, certe, et vaut les meilleurs piédestaux
Quand Brumaire et Décembre en sont les deux tréteaux.
Brumaire, c'est le droit, Décembre, c'est la force.
Un profil hollandais doublé d'un profil corse e,
De face, cela fait un visage français.
Veux-tu la gloire? prends son masque, le Succès.
Tu n'es plus tout à fait un jeune homme. Qu'importe!
Cupidon vient gratter doucement à ta porte;
Vénus par Bacciochi t'envoie un tendre aveu.
Pas un moment du jour, ô César, ô neveu,
Qui pour toi, comme un flot qui sur des fleurs s'épanche,
Ne soit gloire, bonheur, splendeur.

Le soir, revanche.

L’ombre n’est pas à toi. Dormir, c’est être pris.
Une main, qui saisit par l’aile les esprits,,
S’ouvre, et lâche le songe où luit la catastrophe;
Le vrai surgit; tu fais d’affreux rêves. Ma strophe
La nuit devient ta femme, et, spectre, dans tes draps
Se couche, et tu l’entends dire: - Tu ne seras
Pas même lampion; toi qui prends des airs d’astre! -
Ton destin t’apparaît. Tu te vois, ô désastre!
Ô deuil! redevenu l’aventurier gueusard,
Le prince bric-à-brac, l’altesse de hasard,
Portant pour diadème un feutre qui s’effondre,
N’ayant, ô dur retour des maigres jours de Londre,
Plus de sceptre à la main ni de bottes aux pieds;
Et tout, empire, encens, Te Deum expiés,
S’évanouit devant tes prunelles hagardes,
Tout, depuis les cent sous, hélas! jusqu’aux cent gardes!
Et tu ne comprends plus, effaré sous le vent,
Ton propre sort; tu dis: Est-ce après? est-ce avant?
Tu voudrais t’éveiller. Non. Le remords t’accable
Et te tient, et te cloue au sommeil implacable,
Et de partout sur toi, maudit, tombe l’affront,
Et tous tes forfaits vont et viennent sur ton front,
Montmartre, les fourgons cahotant les cadavres,
Les chaînes dans les forts, les pontons dans les havres,
La mitraille, Charlet, Cirasse, Cuisinier “,
Les votes; l’urne traître auprès du noir -panier,
Bidauré fusillé deux fois, Mazas, Cayenne,
Les proscrits, Lambessa que vient flairer l’hyène;
Le ruisseau de la rue au sang habitué, ‘
Baudin tué, Dussoubs tué, l’enfant tué “; ‘
Tu ne vois plus qu’horreur, billots, linceuls, tempêtes,
Têtes cherchant leurs corps et corps cherchant leurs têtes,
Et ton oreille entend, à travers l’aquilon,
Rouler dans l’avenir le boulet de Toulon.

9 juillet.

XI BORD DE LAMER

— Tenez, mon président, je vous le dis d’aplomb,
Je trouve, en vérité, que cela devient long.
Cela finit par être un triste dialogue.
Nous faisons à nous deux une lugubre églogue.
Vrai, vous me fatiguez; mon juge du bon Dieu.
Si nous renouvelions la causerie un peu?.
Parlons d’astronomie ou bien d’hippiatrique.
Oui, c’est vrai, je me suis servi de cette trique
Assomme-t-on les gens avec! des éventails?
Quand vous répéterez sans fin tous ces détails?
Après? Bon, j’en conviens, c’est affreux, c’est infâme,
Ce n’est pas bien du tout, j’ai tué cette femme;
Dans l’ombre, en guet-apens, si vous le préférez.
J’ai de ses cheveux blancs à mes souliers ferrés;
On voit ces choses-là dans tous les mélodrames.
Est-ce donc bien joli, mon juge, à dire aux dames?
Nous devrions changer de conversation.
Je l’ai mise en un trou, la belle invention!
Et j’ai pillé la caisse et débouclé la bâche.
Connu. C’est vieux! D’honneur, mon président rabâche;
Il faudrait varier dans l’intérêt de 1’art.
Vous ressassez toujours: - C’était dans le brouillard.
— En décembre.- Au sortir.d’un bois. - Un jour de pluie... -
Eh bien, je vous le dis tout net, cela m’ennuie.
Vous n’avez vraiment pas d’imagination.
Et puis, vous y mettez beaucoup de passion.
Cette femme était vieille et j’étais pauvre. En somme,
Là, ne pourrait-on pas, quand mai réjouit l’homme,
Quand les petits oiseaux chantent au fond du bois,
Quand les champs sont pleins d’ombre et d’amour et de voix,
Et puisque nous voilà dans la saison des roses,
Rire un moment, que diable! et parler d’autres choses! -

Et le juge répond, triste comme la loi

— Ta mère assassinée est là, derrière toi!

22 décembre 1854.
Le jour, chasse le vent- nocturne qui soufflait;
Le soleil dans la mer délaie-un long reflet;
; « M. Victor Hugo ne s'aperçoit donc pas qu'il dévient monotone?"

(Les Journaux de l'Empire.)
Et monte, et semble fier que le gouffre lui mette
Une traîne de flamme et le change en comète;
Les navires tremblants fendent l'onde, et ses plis
Penchent leurs noirs agrès par la brise assouplis;
Un mont de roche à pic sur la plage s'élève;
La route qui descend des plaines à la grève
Ouvre en la rencontrant les deux bras de l'Y grec
Par où les chariots vont chercher du varech;
L'eau partout se hérisse, immense hécatonchire;
L'écume à tous les vents s'effare et se déchire,
Et vole, et l'on dirait que de ces flocons blancs
Quelques-uns prennent vie et sont les goélands;
Le tumulte infini dans l'ombre au loin bégaie;
Et la légèreté des nuages égaie
Toute cette farouche et fauve profondeur;
L'aube chantante joue avec le flot grondeur;
L'océan frais et pur se fronce aux rocs arides;
La jeunesse éternelle offre toutes ses rides;
L'innocent liseron, nourri de sel amer,
Fleurit sous les blocs noirs du vieux mur de la mer,
Et la création semble une apothéose.
Comme un papillon donne un coup d'aile à la rose,
Là-bas l'aigle de mer tourne autour du récif.

Et moi qui suis assis au bord des flots, pensif,
Ne voyant même pas ces horizons sévères,
Regardant, nôir rêveur, dans la nuit des Calvaires,

Les Socrates mourants, les pâles Jésus-Christs,
J’écris ces vers au pied du Rocher des Proscrits,
Pendant qu’un hollandais, qui prétend être corse,
Met à l’esprit humain la chemise de force,
Et trône en pleine orgie, empereur des français,
Entre l’escroc Serment et la fille Succès.

XII LE TIREPOINT

Ô pauvre vieux, tu vis en paix, tu bois ta chope,
Sans feu, parfois sans pain et jamais sans sommeil,
Comme un fagot flambant gratis, dans ton échoppe,
Tu reçois le soleil.

Lorsque tu vois passer curés, bedeaux et diacres,
Toute ta politique est de gronder un peu;
Parmi les porteurs d'eau, les filles et les fiacres,
Tu ris sous le ciel bleu.

Peut-être est-ce un grand-père à toi - sais-tu l'histoire? -
Qui vit jadis entrer dans son bouge, âpre et seul,
N'ayant plus de souliers, vieux, pieds nus dans sa gloire,
Corneille, notre aïeul!

Que t'importe? tu vis au hasard, pêle-mêle,
Dans ce mondé arrivé sans. savoir trop par où,
Ajustant le cuir neuf à la vieille semelle,
Dans un coin, dans un trou.

Tu vas au cabaret savourer la litharge;
Pour toi, d'un travail lourd, monotone, inclément,
Le livre de la vie ést plein, et 'sur la marge
Tu te grises gaîment.

Sous toute autorité, juste ou non; sainte ou vile,
Tu te courbes, timide et sentant ta maigreur;
Pour toi, pauvre et chétif, dans le sergent de ville
Commence l'empereur.

Portant le joug âirisi qu'une bête dé 'somme,
Lorsqu'on se bat, qu'on voit l'émeute se ruer,
Tu dis: Je suis trop vieux. C'estbon pour un jeune homme
De se faire tuer.

Jour et nuit ton marteau résonne sur l’empeigne.
Dès le matin tu ris’; rire est.ton seul trésor;
L’aube à tes cheveux gris,’ que’ n’approche aucun peigne,
Mêle ses rayons d’or:

Entouré de. tessons, de loques, de décombres,
Laissant pendre à vingt clous sous ton plafond obscur
Un tas d’affreux souliers’ éculés dont les ombres
Dansent sur ton vieux mur,

Jasant, grâce au ‘ vin bleu, comme un moineau prolixe,
Trop petit pour sentir le despote ou le roi,
Sans voir Brutus rêveur, noir fantôme à l’oeil fixe,
Qui rôde autour de toi,

Vieux bohême chanteur sans veste et sans cravate,
Tu brandis, en criant: Venez voir mon bazar!
Ton tirepoint qui. peut, recoudre une savate
Ou défaire un césar.

15 novembre. Jersey.

XIII ENTENDU DANS LE CIEL

LE 2 MARS 1855

« Dis-moi donc ce qui se passe,
« Mer? que fait-on dans l’espace?
A quoi, grands flots azurés,
«Veut-on donc que je consente,
« Moi, la sinistre passante
« Des nuages effarés?
« Je suis la Flamme vivante;
« Je suis la haute épouvante,
« Le cri sourd du ciel serein,
« La roue aux éclairs sans nombre
« Du grand tourbillon de l’ombre;
«-Le sombre marcheur d’airain!
« Je suis la bête Tonnerre;
« J’ai broyé Cham dans son aire,
« Et Capanée 16 en son nid;
«Mes griffes se sont posées
« Sur les faces écrasées
« Des pharaons de granit.
« Je luis, je frappe, j’émonde.
« Quand Dieu veut détruire un monde,
« C’est moi qui crie: Essayons!
« C’est moi qui brûle les âmes,
« Et, pour en faire des flammes,
«Moi qui rends fous les rayons.
«Ô mer, je fends, quand j’y tombe,
« Comme une vitre, la tombe;
« Quand je touche un dieu de nuit,
«Le dieu meurt aux mains du bonze;
«Quand. je crache sur du bronze,
«Le bronze s’évanouit.
« Quand dans ma gueule je mâche
« Un méchant, un traître, un lâche,

«Le mal semble s’éclipser;
« Quand sous mes pieds je trépigne
« Quelque noir colosse indigne
« On dit: Dieu vient de passer!
« J’ai tordu dans ma fournaise
« Les géants de la Genèse,
« Les titans aux bras nerveux;
« Brûlant leur cri dans leurs “bouches,
« Je les emportais farouches,
« Mes éclairs dans leurs cheveux!

« J’ai dévoré sons leurs dômes
Les cinq rois des cinq sodomes,
« Gur, Zaïm, Henôch, Eloph,
« Bél, monstre aux mains jamais lasses... -
« Maintenant tu me remplaces,
« Talon de botte d’Orloff “!

«Orloff est, mon frère sombre;
«Tous deux, sous nos pieds, dans l’ombre,
«Débout sur le même char,
« Nous écrasons, moi l’étoile
« De Satan que la nuit voile,
« Lui les yeux crevés du czar.

«Mais qu’est-ce donc?’’à cette heure,
« Orloff lui-même est un leurre!
« Les rois monstres triomphants
« S’endorment parmi les cierges,
« Souriants comme des vierges,
« Sereins comme des enfants!

« Ces meurtriers dans leur ville
« Ont pour oreiller tranquille
« Leurs crimes inexpiés
« Leur front doucement s’y penche;
« Et Tobolsk 1e, leur chienne blanche,

« Mange un peuple sous leurs pieds!

« Tandis que, pour leurs chimères,
« Pleurent les soeurs et les mères,
« Que leur nom, fait de remord;
«D’épouvante et de huées;
« Sort du milieu des nuées
« Comme un clairon de la mort;

« Tandis que leur feu dévore,
« Et que, dû soir à l’aurore
« Et de l’aube jusqu’au soir,
« Toute la terre enflammée’
« Roule autour d’eux sa fumée
« Comme un lugubre encensoir;
« Ils font venir leurs familles;
« Ils prodiguent à leurs filles
« Leurs caresses d’Attila;
«.Puis ils bénissent le monde... -
« Et dis-moi donc, mer profonde,
« Qu’est-ce que nous faisons là?

« Puisque tu ne sais pas même,
« Mer, gonfler ton flot suprême,
« Et l’emplir de Jéhovah,
« Et prouver que Dieu t’habite,
« Et faire une hydre subite
« De la couleuvre Néva;

« Puisque l’eau que tu gouvernes
« N’ose entrer dans les cavernes,
« Que tu lui dis: Viens-nous-en!
« Puisqu’un trône est un refuge,
« Que toi, qui fus le déluge,
« Tu n’es plus que l’océan;

« Puisque la justice boîte;

« Puisque, moi, qu’en sa main droite
« Tient l’ouragan plein de bruit;
« Moi dont l’abîme est l’ornière,
« La grande raison dernière
« Du mystère et de la nuit;

« Puisque moi, la flamme ardente
« Qui sers de prunelle à Dante,
« La semeuse du trépas,
« Moi que fuit l’âme éperdue,
« Moi, la bombe inattendue
« Du mortier qu’on ne voit pas,

« Puisque je ne suis plus bonne
« Qu’à faire un bruit monotone
« Ainsi que les moucherons,
« Et que, stupide, je roule,
« Aux mains d’un joueur de boule,
« Sur le plafond des Nérons;

« Puisque Dieu ne sait qu’absoudre,
« Je m’en vais!” - Ainsi la foudre,
Dans le ciel que l’ombre emplit,
Parle à la sombre marée,
Et rugit, désespérée
Qu’un czar meure dans son lit.

18 avril 1855.

XIV ILS NOUS RAILLENT, DISANT..

J’étais dans une église, et j’entendis un homme
Vêtu du vêtement de ténèbres de Rome,
Qui disait: - Bénissons César dans le saint lieu.
La vérité qu’il tue était due à l’abîme,
Peuple, et la main du prince a frappé la victime
Que lui montrait let doigt de Dieu. -

J’étais dans une rue, et je lus cette affiche:
— De par la loi! Vous tous, grand, petit, pauvre, riche,
Silence! obéissez.. Le prince a combattu,
Le prince a triomphé; maintenant qu’il bâtisse.
Ce qu’il a fait est bien. Nous sommes la justice
De même qu’il est la vertu. -

Sache, ô prêtre, et toi, juge, apprends, qu’il est infâme
De mettre la louange à la place du blâme,
Et que, lorsqu’un massacre a souillé la cité,
On est, ô vils flatteurs agenouillés dans l’ombre,
Plus hideux pour avoir lavé ce pavé sombre
Que , pour, l’avoir ensanglanté..

10 mars.

XV Ils nous raillent, disant:

Ils nous raillent, disant:
 — Ces gens, en vérité,
Ont de bien mauvais yeux. Ils ont pris à côté
Des bons chemins, pourtant si doux et si faciles:
Où donc sont-ils allés, ces’ pauvres imbéciles?
Ils ont voulu le deuil et la misère. Ils l’ont.
Dis donc, Magnan, dis donc, Sibour, dis ‘donc, Troplong,
Il ne tenait pourtant qu’à ces idiots d’être
Comme nous riches, grands et rentés par le maître.
Les niais! ils n’avaient qu’à dire: Ainsi soit-il!
Et, le sénat s’offrant, ils ont choisi l’exil! -

Eux cependant, sans voir devant eux, vils, horribles,
Souillés, sanglants, ils vont aux ténèbres terribles,
A la honte, à la fange, à la calamité,
A Dieu qui dans la nuit les regarde irrité,
Au gouffre où court le fourbe et le traître et l’impie;
Et leur cécité rit de notre myopie.

XVI Les prêtres des faux dieux

Les prêtres des faux dieux jouant leurs comédies,
Le mal, l’erreur,
Ce Bonaparte, et toi, paysan, qui mendies
Un empereur,

Toi qui peux être un homme et veux être une brute,
Troupeaux mouvants
Sur qui s’acharne et passe et repasse la lutte
Des quatre vents,

Foule qui vas courbant des millions de têtes,
Bourgeois distraits
Qui vivez avec l’oeil plus vague que les bêtes
Dans les forêts,

Les noirs évènements sur les masses obscures,
Les talions,
Les deuils, les envieux, les serpents, leurs piqûres
Aux grands lions,

Me dire que quiconque, à Paris ou dans Rome,
Honte et remords!
Mettra l’oreille à terre, entendra de cet homme
Parler les morts,

Que tout ce qu’il a fait d’iniquités égale
La quantité
D’astres qu’on voit aux cieux quand chante la cigale,
Les soirs d’été;

Rouler dans mon esprit la sanglante besogne
Du boulevard,
Et Morny, puis. Troplong 20, aller de cet ivrogne
A ce bavard;

Puebla, Mentana; Compiègne, son opprobre,
Ses jeux, ses goûts;
Les meurtres plus nombreux que les mouches d’octobre
Dans les égouts;

Le pontife sans foi, l’apôtre sans doctrine,
Abject semeur,
C’est tout cela qui fait sortir de ma poitrine
L’âpre clameur!

C’est tout cela qui fait que ma colère gronde
Profondément,

Et que l’écueil n’est pas sous les affronts de l’onde
— Plus écumant;

C’est tout cela qui. fait que ma strophe aux cent bouches,
Pleine d’effrois, ..
Ressemble au hallier sombre où des. bêtes farouches
Mêlent leurs voix,

Je suis l’avertisseur terrible qui se dresse,,
L’avant-coureur;
Et mes vers n’ont .pas moins de haine vengeresse,
Pàs moins d’horreur

Que les filles d’Hellé chantant leur ronde austère
Dans Ipsara;
Et l’intervention d’aucun pouvoir sur terre N’arrachera

De mes mains ce tyran, ce juge, ce ministre,
Cet histrion;
Pas plus qu’un souffle humain n’éteindrait le sinistre
Septentrion.

28 novembre.

XVII QUAND DES TROUS À SES MAINS

Vous n’avez pas pris garde au peuple que nous sommes.
Chez nous, dans les grands jours, les enfants sont des hommes,
Les hommes des os, les vieillards des géants.
Oh! comme vous serez stupides et béants,
Le jour où vous verrez, risibles escogriffes,
Ce grand peuple de France échapper à vos griffes!
Le jour où vous verrez fortune, dignités,
Pouvoirs, places, honneurs, beaux gages bien comptés,
Tous les entassements de votre orgueil féroce,
Tomber au premier pas que fera le colosse!
Confondus, furieux, cramponnés vainement
Aux chancelants débris de votre écroulement,
Vous essaîrez encor de crier, de proscrire,
D’insulter, et l’Histoire éclatera de rire.

XVIII Quand, des trous à ses mains,

Quand, des trous a ses mains, des trous à ses pieds froids,
Du sang sur chaque membre,
La France, peuple-Christ, pendait les bras en croix
Au gibet de Décembre,

Quand, l’épine à son front, râlait sur le poteau
La nation pontife,
Toi, malheureux, tu vins des clous et du marteau
Complimenter Caïphe.

Il fit cortège au crime avec un front riant.
Lévite, il vendit l’arche:
Maintenant le voilà dans un livre criant:
« - Remettons-nous en marche!

« Dans la stagnation, tout rampe et dépérit,
« Et l’ombre est importune.
« Il faut le Verbe à Dieu, la parole à l’esprit,
« Aux peuples la tribune.” -

Il plaide pour le droit! Regret pur! deuil touchant!
Il ne veut plus qu’on dorme!
Ô vérité sacrée, aux lèvres du méchant
Ta louange est difforme!

Les passants qui l’ont vu du crime réussi
Grossir l’immonde escorte,
Disent en l’entendant: Pourquoi donc celui-ci
Parle-t-il de la sorte?

C’est qu’il a peur de Dieu! , c’est qu’il a peur des lois!
C’est que ce fourbe tremble!
C’est qu’il sent dans son coeur. frissonner à la fois
Tous les effrois ensemble!

C’est que, dans cette orgie où le Meurtre éhonté
Chante: Que nous importe!
Lui songe au cimetière où dort la Liberté,
La redoutable morte!

C’est que sur le festin il voit tomber le soir;
C’est qu’en ce banquet sombre,
Il songe à l’avenir, incorruptible et noir,
Qui fait des pas dans l’ombre;

C’est que la peine vient! c’est qu’il se sent plier
Comme les branches d’arbre!
C’est que, pâle, il entend monter dans l’escalier
Un visiteur de marbre!

21 janvier.

XIX DES REMORDS? LUI! POURQUOI?...

SA CONSCIENCE
— Écoutais-tu parfois ta conscience? - Certe!
— Et que t'a-t-elle dit?

— - Elle m'a dit: Déserte -
Tout sentier trop ardu, trop rude et trop étroit.
Heurte ce mot l'Honneur contre ce mot le Droit,
Et tire un son fêlé de l'un comme de l'autre.
Aie un tarif. Combien ce héros? cet apôtre?
Ce tribun? C'est tant. Paie, et sois fort. Je t'absous.
Prends les millions, jette au peuple les gros sous.
Achète aux prêtres. Dieu. Jamais Dieu ne réclame.
Sois d'abord sûr d'tin fait, c'est que tu n'as point d'âme.
C'est agréable. On est nuit, matière, animal,
Cendre, et l'on ne fait rien de bien ni rien de mal
On arrive à la mort, juste aussi responsable
Que l'hydre s'échouant dans l'ombre sur le sable.
Raille ces fous, croyant au bien, au juste, au beau,
Qui pensent qu'un palais pèse sur un tombeau.
Jouis, et ne crains pas le sépulcre. Il est vide.
Jure et mens; le serment est un fil qu'on dévidé
Jusqu'à ce qu'il se casse. Alors, guerre, terreur,
Masque jeté, carnage et mort. Sois empereur.
Touche la cible, atteins le but, gagne le quine;
Tue, éclate de rire, et règne!

— Ah! la coquine!

H.H. 12 décembre.

XX Des remords? lui! Pourquoi?

Des remords? lui! Pourquoi? Qu’a-t-il fait? Mais, Cayenne?
Le Deux Décembre? Quoi! l’on veut qu’il-se souvienne!
Ces êtres-là n’ont point de ces infirmités.
La mémoire, c’est bon pour vous autres. Luttez,
Vivez, souffrez, plaidez telle ou telle doctrine;
Si vous avez mal fait, frappez-vous la poitrine;
Le bien, le mal, le vrai, le faux, Judas, Jésus,
Cela compte pour vous, mais eux sont au-dessus.
Ils ont tué, pillé; brisé la loi détruite;
Il leur semble plaisant qu’on leur en parle ensuite;
Sitôt qu’on est vainqueur et maître, on éconduit
L’histoire, le massacre, et la mort et la nuit.
On ne veut plus savoir dans la joie et la fête
Par quelle ombre on passa pour parvenir au faîte.
D’ailleurs cela fait-il quelque chose à quelqu’un?
Vaincre est faire un charnier d’où s’exhale un parfum.
Ils ont vaincu. C’est bien. Cela doit vous suffire.
Laissons l’aurore peindre et luire, et le zéphire
Frissonner à travers les branchages profonds.
Ces êtres trouvent Dante et Juvénal bouffons.
Ce que les mécontents nomment une âme noire,
C’est de la fange ayant pour trône de la gloire.
La gloire couvre tout, et l’ensemble est vermeil.
Cherchez donc un voleur caché dans un soleil!
Ces sinistres esprits, bâtisseurs de décombres,
Qui, lâchés dans la nuit des évènements sombres,
Ont pour succès la chute effrayante de tout,
Peuple, ne savent rien, sinon qu’ils sont debout.
Cette ignorance-là, dans la toute-puissance
Et l’ombre, est une sorte affreuse d’innocence.
Ils ont, dans le scrutin qui termine tout ça,
Don Quichotte contre eux, pour eux Sancho Pança.
Régnons. Le repentir? quel est ce parasite?
Le remords pour eux, c’est un fâcheux qui visite

Mal. à propos les gens et qui fait qu'à son pas
On s'esquive, et l'on dit aux valets: N'ouvrez pas!
On dort, on est chez soi. - Qui va là,? quelqu'un sonne?
— C'est votre crime. - Bien.. Je n'y suis pour . personne.
Même quand leur destin échoue au but fatal, ,
Ces âmes-là n'ont point conscience du mal,
Et l'expiation n'est qu'une petitesse
De Dieu qui veut un peu molester une altesse.
Est-ce qu'ils ont commis des forfaits? C'est selon.
Ils se sentent à peine une épine au talon.
Leur faute, si c'est là le mot, si c'en est une,
Fait tout ce qu'elle peut pour leur être importune,
Mais, fût-elle éternelle avec des ongles noirs,
Les suivît-elle avec d'effroyables miroirs,
Ils n'en ont point souci. L'on jase, on crie, on glose,
Qu'importe! Tout cela vraiment n'est pas grand'chose.
Des épithètes; monstre, horreur, canaille. Après?
Vous leur montrez toujours, quoi? le même cyprès.
Au fond cela finit par être une chicane.
C'est du vacarmé; Rome ou Paris qui ricane.
Ils ont réponse à tout. Ne suis-je pas César?
Mané Thécel Pharès trouble peu Balthazar;
L'ardent tartare avec son four à réverbère
Peut ennuÿer, mais non déconcerter Tibère.
Faites gueuler l'Erèbe, ameutez tout le tas
Des méduses montrant le poing aux coups d'états;
Les attentats riront; la foudre. les effleure.
Si Dieu croit en frappant se prouver, il se leurre;
Il reste l'inconnu, l'énigme, le grand X..
Les Euménides sont les poissardes du Styx;
Le démon punisseur qui grince et qui s'acharne
Est un loustic montrant son masque. à la lucarne;
L'enclume sans broncher laisse cogner Vulcain;
Frédégonde en enfer dit à Satan: Taquin!

31 mars 1870.

XXI LE MAL DU PAYS

On rôde; on a la mer immense pour prison;
On n’a plus l’avenir, mais on a l’horizon;
On médite; on attend qüe l’océan s’en aille.
La mémoire, bourreau, vous tient dans sa tenaille.
Je cherche ce Paris perdu, que je défends; .
Où donc est le jardin où jouaient mes enfants
Lorsqu’ils étaient petits et lorsque j’étais jeune?
J’entends leurs fraîches voix crier: Père, on déjeune!
Où donc es-tu, foyer où je me réchauffais?
Les arbres étrangers, hélas!ne sont pas faits
Comme ceux du pays natal; l’ombre où l’on erre
Est noire et par degrés vous fait visionnaire;
Comme on avait raison de tâcher de mourir!
L’azur indifférent vous regarde souffrir;
C’est survous qüe cette eau goutte à goutte distille
Son fiel, et c’est à vous que l’écume est hostile; .
Les flots autour de vous sont comme. des archers;
On se sent vaguement haï par les rochers;
L’herbe est froide, l’épine est mêlée à la mousse;
Quoi! j’ai cru la nature hospitalière et douce!
J’ai cru les bois calmants! Comme je m’aveuglais!
On se dit par moments: la foudre parle anglais.
Oh! comment s’évader de l’âpre nostalgie!
On jette à ce chaos quelque strophe rugie
Dans l’orage, et, pensif, on dit aux quatre..vents
De la porter à Dieu par dessus les vivants.
Et l’on s’arrête, et puis on attend. Toujours l’onde.
Què la terre de France était riante et blonde!
Où donc est-elle? On rêve; et l’on a la rougeur
De la honte d’autrui. Ciel! ô ciel! un vengeur!
Où donc est Juvénal? Gouffre! où donc est Tacite?
On se rappelle tout, l’inrame’ réussite,
L’aube noire du jour monstrueux, et Paris
Pris à la gorge et ‘mis à la chaîne, et les cris,

Et les convulsions du peuple qu'on opprime,
Et tous ces affreux chefs, capitaines du crime.
«Vous allez voir comment on meurt pour vingt-cinq francs!"
Disait Baudin; les mots de la tombe sont grands.
Cela n'empêche pas un tas de misérables
De crier aux proscrits, aux vaincus mémorables
Par le devoir au fond de l'abîme liés:
— C'est bien fait. Vous étiez comme nous. Vous vouliez
Etre sénateurs, ducs, ambassadeurs, ministres... -

Oh! que la mer est sombre au pied des rocs sinistres!

20 juillet.

XXII Je suis de ceux qui,

Je suis de ceux qui, sûrs du progrès, l’âme ouverte,
Mettent l’ombre à l’essai,
Et, durs navigateurs, vont à la: découverte
Dans ce gouffre, le vrai.

Je vais sondant, pareil au navire qui rôde,
L’immense espoir amer,
Battu de l’onde, en proie aux hydres d’émeraude
De cette sombre mer.

Ces hydres au dos vert, flots vils du gouffre auguste,
Sous Socrate mourant
Hurlaient, et punissaient Thraséa d’être juste
Et Caton d’être grand.

XXIII Tout est bien.

Tout est bien. Honte et gloire. On encaisse des sommes.
Le peuple dort; dormir, c’est abdiquer; les hommes
Sont ou gisants de force ou courbés de plein gré.
L’empereur brille, d’ombre et de soleil tigré.
Pas un talent ne l’aide; et c’est là le miracle.
L’histoire n’avait pas encor vu ce spectacle
La complicité bête autour d’un crime noir.
C’est une des beautés de César que d’avoir
Seul de la profondeur dans ses sanglants, caprices,
Et que d’être un mandrin servi par des jocrisses.
Rouher, en lui venant baiser le tibia,
L’inonde de pathos, et Suin de charabia;
Grandperret, Chaix d’Estange, assassinent la langue;
Car ils ont dépassé dans le genre harangue
Même l’ancien patois bête des vieilles cours
Leur bouche vile abonde en stupides discours;
De toute ignominie ils ont les monopoles.
Ô Satan, qui créas les Séjans,- les Walpoles,,
Les Dubois, les Rùfins, jamais tu n’accouplas
A d’aussi lâches coeurs des esprits aussi plats!
Mais cette petitesse augmente Bonaparte.
Colosse à Sybaris,- on serait nain à Sparte;
Si Pygmée- est debout parmi des endormis,
Il domine, et Tom Pouce est grand chez les fourmis.

XXIV Vous êtes riche,

Vous êtes riche, heureux, souriant, point austère,
Bien mis; homme du monde et maître de la terre;
Vous êtes empereur, et de plus élégant;
Bourgeois de Suisse, ainsi que fut bourgeois de Gand
Charles-Quint, votre égal, et, sans souci de l'âge,
Vous voyez à vos pieds tout un frais vasselage
De bouches roses, d'airs aimables, de doux yeux,
De bras nus, de seins nus, ne demandant pas mieux;
Vous êtes cavalier accompli, valseur tendre;
Quoique j'habite loin de vous, je puis entendre
Les bénédictions, - les voeux, les hosannas
Qu'avec tous les clergés chantent tous les. sénats,
Et dont vous écoutez vaguement l'harmonie;
Héros si bon vous semble, et, s'il vous plaît, génie,
Clio vous donne au choix le socle et les métaux
Dans tout le bric-à-brac dè ses vieux piédestaux;
Chez vous tout est rayons, reflets d'or, parfums d'ambre,
Et, chaîne au cou, le code est huissier 'd'antichambre;
Vous possédez sur terre un coin du firmament,
Et le Louvre, et Compiègne, et Saint-Cloud si charmant
Dans la saison riante où l'hirondelle émigre,
Ô Prince, -, et vous avez des taches comme un tigre.

7 mars.

XXV UN PRÉSIDENT

UN PRÉSIDENT
Est-ce ma faute à moi s'il s'appelle Brunet?

Brunet jadis était un pître. Il rayonnait
Au-dessus des humains à force de bêtise.
Il broutait des couplets comme un bouc le ,cytise.
Son camarade était Janot aux bas chinés
Lorgnant un papillon qui tremblait sur son nez.
Ce Brunet-là charmait les foules inquiètes
Rien qu'en laissant tomber une pile d'assiettes;
Son rire absurde était un baume à tous les maux;
Il avait de gros yeux et disait de gros mots.
Peut-être était-ce un homme. Il avait- la bassesse
Pour triomphe, et l'affront d'être content sans cesse.
Il fascinait la ville, enchantait les faubourgs,
Frappait sur les lazzi comme sur des tambours,
Et se jetait parmi les rires tête-bêche.
Un éblouissement sortait de ce bobèche.
C'était, sous les clartés du manteau d'arlequin,
Le spectre de la joie en culotte nankin.
Il était le bouffon du peuple; il était l'hôte
De Tabarin, Molière etant l'hôte de Plaute;
Son souffle, son accent, son geste, était guetté
Dans la foule, si triste au fond, par. la gaîté;
Il avait ce grand don, cher aux grecs du Poecile.
L'épanouissement profond de l'imbécile.
Et quand on le voyait pensif, vide et béant,
On croyait voir zéro ricaner du néant.
C'était l'innocent fourbe et le niais cupide.
Son ahurissement faisait Paris stupide.
Ce clown fut sans égal. Ce Brunet gambadait,
Coiffé de la splendide oreille du baudet,
Roulait éperdument ses prunelles éparses,
Cassait des pots, chipait des sous, faisait des farces,

Était grotesque, était inepte, était cocu,
Chantait, et recevait des coups de pied au cul.

Maintenant il attend les soufflets de l’histoire.
Son tréteau paraît noble auprès de son prétoire.
Le Brunet d’à-présent est un juge. Il est noir.
Est-ce, le même? Oui. Non. Pourquoi pas? ,On peut voir
Des faits plus surprenants que ces métamorphoses;
Pasquin Z’ et Partarrieu prennent les mêmes poses;
Parfois dans Rhadamante on sent un galopin;
Est-ce que Mascarille est fort loin de Dupin?
Pourquoi voudriez-vous que je m’émerveillasse
Qu’on soit Jeffrye après avoir été Paillasse?
Quoi qu’il en soit, fût-il le même, un peu moisi,
Ce -Brunet, certes est bien l’homme de ce temps-ci
Où, juge, on vend le code et, prêtre, le ciboire.
Thémis -rend un arrêt et demande un pourboire.
Éaque est domestique-et Minos est agent.
Qu’est ceci? La justice. Avez-vous de l’argent?
C’est à vendre. Et ceci? C’est notre conscience.
Payez-nous-la. C’est tant. - O juges, patience!
La Justice viendra. Jugez en attendant. -
Donc Brunet de farceur est passé président.
Ce comique est tragique. Il décrète, il condamne.
Il règne. Il a toujours le même bonnet d’âne.
Mais ce bonnet rapporte énormément. Faut-il
Punir? il est auguste. Absoudre? il est subtil.
Que veut- César? Brunet obéit. Le salaire
Auquel un juge a droit, puisqu’il juge pour plaire,
Est son but. C’est pourquoi vous irez en prison.
Tel est Brunet. La loi vous prend par trahison.
Cujas est sbire au fond et juge à la surface.
Ne faut-il pas qu’enfin la police se fasse?
On est Brunet. On rend des sentences:ad. hoc.
Jadis cétait Jocrisse. A présent c’est Vidocq.

19 février 1870.

XXVI À UN ENNEMI INCONSCIENT

Désespérér de toi, valet du vestiaire?
Pourquoi? Le ciel est grand, Dieu n’a pas de frontière,
Qui sait? Peut-être, un jour, te sera-t-il donné’
D’être Saint-Paul, vers l’aube éternelle entraîné;
Car aujourd’hui féroce, ignorant et stupide,
Tu gardes les manteaux pendant qu’on nous lapide.

1e, juillet 1875.

XXVII Est-ce mon siècle,

Est-ce mon siècle, ou bien le vent? J'ai le frisson.

Du haut de mon rocher, derrière l'horizon,
J'entends confusément. des brouhahas hostiles;
Et j'écoute; et, moi-même en butte aux projectiles,
J'examine, rêveur, les insulteurs lointains.

Dans mes vers sur lesquels ont soufflé les destins
J'ai tort de me servir de ce grand mot: la Haine.
Peuple, la calomnie est aujourd'hui sereine.
Et bonne fille; -on a de nos jours inventé
La diffamation sanglante avec gaîté,
Une espèce de meurtre amusant pour les autres,
L'affront pour rire; hélas, oui, ces moeurs sont les vôtres,
Et je médite.

On sait qu'on ment, on en convient,
On en joue; on ne veut qu'un succès, on l'obtient:
Être deux ou trois jours cru par les imbéciles.
L'exil; l'ombre, le deuil ne sont plus des. asiles; °
On lapide le crêpe au chapeau d'un proscrit.
Que Jésus soit Jésus, bon! S'il devient lè Christ,
On le hue. Ah! faquin! tu veux être exemplaire!
On ajoute des clous à sa croix, sans colère:
La colère fatigue, on n'en a pas. Pourquoi?
Faut-il que le menteur dans son mensonge ait foi?

Cet homme m'est livré. Je demande sa tête,
Suis-je son ennemi pour cela? Pas si bête.
Je hurle, et crie: A bas! mort! il a trop vécu! -

Être acharné, c'est bien, mais être convaincu
C'est du luxe. On serait donc idiot soi-même.
Et d'ailleurs avoir foi, cela rend triste. On sème

La ciguë et la mort, mais on n’y goûte pas.
On est un bon enfant qui pour vivre est Judas,
Et ne prend pas la chose au sérieux. On tâche
D’être tranquillement et sans nuage un lâche.
Si l’on voyait passer l’homme qu’on va demain
Poignarder par derrière, on lui tendrait la main,
Et l’on se vanterait de ce contact auguste!
John Brown est un héros et Barbès est un juste;
On l’avoue entre soi; mais en public on dit:
Barbès est un niais, John Brown est un: bandit.
On l’affirme, et cela n’empêche pas de rire,
Ne pas le croire étant un motif pour le dire.

Çà, vivons, insultons, mais sans nous mettre en frais
D’inimitié, de bile et de fiel. Buvons frais!
Le tigre mord sans faim et Thersite “ sans haine.
Les calomniateurs ne prennent pas la peine
D’abhorrer, même un. peu, ceux qu’ils veulent tuer.
La conscience étant bonne à prostituer,
On vend sa plume ainsi que l’on vendrait sa femme.
Cela s’offre, un esprit; cela. se paie, une âme.
L’affront décolleté, fardé, riant, banal,
Rôde sur ce trottoir qu’on appelle un journal,
Car il est une presse abordable à Javotte12,
Qui, certe, a le droit d’être obscène, étant dévote.
On jette l’eau bénite et la boue au hasard;
On est indifférent, venimeux et poissard
On injurie à tant la ligne, à tant par tête;
On dit: Léonidas est vil, Voltaire, est bête,
Tant on se fie, ainsi qu’aux ténèbres d’un bois,
A la stupidité profonde des bourgeois!
Qu’ils seraient furieux, ces gérontes qui bâillent,
S’ils savaient comme ceux qui les servent, les raillent!
S’ils entendaient les gens achetés parler d’eux!
S’ils savaient à quel point par ces moqueurs hideux,
L’épaisseur de leur âme obscure est exploitée!
Tel insulteur bigot est un farceur athée;

Il est épouvantable et doux, fait son métier,
Rit, et l’encre du diable est dans le bénitier.
Ne rien aimer, ne rien haïr; être des drôles;
Comme c’est simple! avoir un masque, avoir des rôles,
Les prendre, les quitter, être froid, être chaud,
Admirer tout bas ceux qu’on déchire tout haut,
Cela ne fait de mal à personne. On enseigne
Aux badauds qu’un titan sur la montagne saigne,
Mais qu’il le fait exprès; que Caton sans espoir
N’est qu’un ambitieux; que le soleil est noir,
Que partout le droit tombe et que la force monte;
On leur fait épeler l’A B C de la honte;
On ouvre école; on montre aux goîtreux l’alphabet
Expliquant le bûcher de Jean Huss, le gibet
De Coligny, la corde au cou de Galilée’;
On suspend l’imposture à la voûte étoilée,
Et l’ombre qui descend de là change en baudets
Ceux qui viennent brûler un cierge sous ce dais;
On leur apprend qu’apprendre est mauvais, que se taire
C’est penser, et qu’un homme est leur propriétaire
S’il se nomme Habsbourg, Bonaparte ou Bourbon;
Et tout en s’écriant: Comme cela sent bon!
On leur penche le nez sur le fakir fétide;
On déclare à Prudhomme ébahi qu’Aristide
Fut un gueux, et qu’au fond Turgot est un escroc;
S’il s’étonne, on lui dit: Tais-toi. Ce serait trop,
O crétin, s’il fallait encor que tu comprisses!
On livre les Brutus au rire des Jocrisses;
On prouve la bonté du mal, du roi, du fer,
Du feu, de l’échafaud, du bagne et de l’enfer;
Et l’éducation des gens est reussie
Quand la méchanceté germe dans l’ineptie.
Puis on tend la sébile, et Pluche et Baculard”
Empochent en louchant les gros sous; et c’est l’art
D’élever les bourgeois pour s’en faire des rentes.
Le songeur voit passer des bouches murmurantes -
Qui vont balbutiant des outrages confus.

On a l’iniquité comme on a le typhus;
Elle est dans l’air, on l’a respirée; un maroufle
Quelconque nous a mis sur les lèvres ce souffle;
Vous dites ce que dit ce rhéteur de l’égout,
Et lui qui ne croit rien, il vous fait croire tout.
Oh! qui pourra jamais, plongeur mélancolique,
Sonder cet affreux puits, la bêtise publique!

Quel labeur! constater jusqu’au dernier bourgeois!
Conclure que cet âne est un âne par choix,
Qu’il s’y plaît, et qué c’est son goût d’être une brute!
Voir braire Aliboron que Zoïle recrute “!

XXVIII Venez nous voir dans l’asile

Venez nous voir dans l’asile
Où nôtre nid s’est caché,
Où Chloé suivrait Mnasyle,
Où l’Amour suivrait Psyché.

Si vous aimez la musique,
C’est ici qu’est son plein vol
Mozart n’est qu’un vieux phthisique
A côté du rossignol.

Ici la fleur, le poète,
Et le ciel font des trios.
Ô solos de l’alouette!
Ô tutti des loriots!

Chant du matin, fier, sonore!
L’oiseau vous le chantera.
Depuis six mille ans “, l’aurore
Travaille à cet opéra.,

Venez; fiers de vos présences,
Les champs, qui sont des jardins,
Auront mille complaisances
Pour vous autres citadins.

Nos rochers valent des marbres;
Le beau se fera joli
Et le moineau, sous les arbres,
Quoique franc, sera poli.

XXIX EN CONSEIL

Mai joyeux, juin frais etendre
Arriveront à propos
Pour que: vous puissiez entendre
La clochette des troupeaux.

Venez, vous verrez les guêtres
Du vieux laboureur normand;
Les mouches par vos fenêtres
Entréront éperdûmént.

Le soir, sous les vignes vierges,
Vous Verrez Dieu qui nous luit
Allumer les mille cierges
De sa messe de minuit.

Et nous oublierons ces choses
Dont on pleure et dont on rit,
L'homme ingrat, les ans moroses,
L'eau sombre où l'esquif périt,

La fuite de l'espérance,
Les coeurs faux le temps si court,
Et qu'on partage la France
Dans la Gazette d'Augsbourg.

25 juin 1859.
— Toute la question, dit-il, c'est l'ouvrier.
Que Décembre lui soit meilleur que Février,
C'est là ma politique. Écoutez, mes ministres.
Il faut sourire au peuple avec des yeux' sinistres.
Ainsi l'on règne. Ainsi l'on gouverne. J'entends
Faire adorer leur chaîne ' aux travailleurs contents.
— Sire, c'est malaisé. - C'est simple. - Comment faire
Pour loger l'ouvrier? - Je lui bâtis un square.

Il aura sa caserne ainsi que le soldat.
Ils sont frères. - C’est vrai - Leur plaire est mon mandat.
— Mais, sire, l’ouvrier veut manger. Je le gave.
L’engraissement éteint la fierté de l’esclave.
L’ouvrier veut trouver une femme au logis.
— Je le fais marier par Saint-François-Régis.
— L’ouvrier, car il fait, sire, beaucoup de rêves,
Veut être mieux payé - Je lui permets les grèves.
— L’ouvrier veut aller au spectacle - Il aura
Partout le lupanar sous le nom d’opéra.
Je lui prodiguerai des tas de femmes nues.
Je lui montre Astarté planant au fond des nues.
Je lui donne Gorju, Bobêche et Turlupin.
Je l’enchante. - Oui, voilà des cirques et du pain.
Mais du vin? - Je l’en soûle. à battre la muraille.
— Et s’il veut être libre enfin? - Je le mitraille.

Ainsi l’on parle, et moi, dans le bouge infamant,
J’entre, et je te regarde, Histoire, fixement.

20 octobre.

XXX Je ne désire pas la mort de Bonaparte

Je ne désire pas la mort de Bonaparte.
Quand cette aveugle idée arrivé, je l’écarte.
Je ne suis pas assez dans le secret du sort
Pour me croire le droit de vouloir une mort;
Mon âme en son cachot n’a pas de meurtrière
Par où laisser tomber une telle prière.
Hommes, je ne hais point, même quand je combats.
Je regarde, pensif, les choses d’ici-bas;
J’en suis blessé, mais non irrité; j’y devine
Sous le néant humain l’immensité divine,
Et je laisse Dieu faire, en l’implorant pour tous.
Celui qui, comme moi, sait qu’il faut être doux,
Et que tout à la fin se retrouve et retombe,
Ne jette jamais rien dans l’ombre de la tombe.

10 février 1861.

XXXI L’EMPEREUR À COMPIÈGNE

Cet homme est dans les fleurs; il a, s’il fuit la ville,
Saint-Cloud, Biarritz,
Compiègne, autant d’azur que l’aigle, autant d’idylle
Que Lycoris
Autour de lui les dieux rayonnent dans des marbres;
Les prés, les blés,
Les champs brillent au- loin, et-les paons sous les arbres
Sont étoilés;

En voyant ce front vil qu’aucuns remords n’émeuvent,
Cet oeil vitreux;
Que pensent les lauriers? Qu’est-ce que les lys peuvent
Sé dire entre eux?

On ne s’explique pas pourquoi le myrte encense
L’homme dé sang,
Et comment à subir une telle présence
Avril consent..

Les bois respectueux ont l’air de dire: sire!
A ce larron;
Ils ne refusent rien au maître, et s’il désire
Un liseron;

Un iris, un bleuet candide, une pervenche,
Ils les lui font;
Est-ce que la nature ignore là revanche,
O ciel profond!

Est-ce qu’il , est permis de se donner pour tâche
Le mal, l’horreur,
D’être un fourbe, un escroc, un gueux, un drôle, un lâche,
Un empereur,

De jeter sur Paris la mort fauve et hagarde,
Le faux serment,
L’effroi, sans que personne ait l’air d’y prendre garde
Au firmament,
Sans qu’un puissant témoin fasse aux étoiles signe
De moins briller,
Au mois de mai d’avoir moins de parfum, au cygne
De s’envoler,

Sans qu’on entende au loin gronder le flot sonore,
Le vent huer,
Et sans qu’on voie autour du coupable l’aurore
Diminuer;

Sans qu’au nom de l’honneur, de. l’auguste justice,
Des saintes lois,
Et du grand ciel, la ronce indignée avertisse
L’ombre des bois,
Et sans que le printemps distingue entre un faussaire,
D’où sont venus
Tous nos pleurs, tous nos maux, tous nos deuils, et Glycère,
Nymphe aux pieds nus!
Il a parfaitement oublié tous ses crimes,
Le sang versé,
Son serment, son honneur, son âme, et les abîmes
Du noir passé;

Il a saisi le peuple et la loi dans sa serre,
Joué son jeu,
Et fait la quantité de forfaits nécessaire
Pour être un dieu;

Les bonzes, les cadis, sous leur robe de femme,
Le trouvent grand;
C’est tout au plus s’il sait combien il est infâme,
Et s’il comprend;

Il est l’idole informe et vague qu’on encense;
Ses yeux font peur;
On devine qu’il est plein de toute-puissance
A sa stupeur;

Car c’est bien surprenant d’être un tel misérable,
Et que les rois
Soient petits devant vous plus qu’au pied de l’érable
L’herbe des bois.

Ah! quand un homme a fait tout ce qu’a fait cet homme,
Quand il est là,
Lui qui livra ta Rome, ô Caton, à la Rome
De Loyola,

Lui qui fit faire un pas monstrueux en arrière
A la raison,
Lui que guette la Prusse, espionne et guerrière,
A l’horizon,

Lui qui, mettant un vote imbécile à la place
Des droits trahis,
Règne contre le peuple et par la populace
Sur mon pays,

Lui par qui,. dans un jour de deuil, d’abîme et d’ombre,
Tout se perdit,
Il semble qu’il faudrait un rugissement sombre
Sur ce bandit!

XXXII AMNISTIE

Il semble que les champs devraient être lugubres
Et mécontents,
Et qu’il devrait sortir des forêts insalubres
Un faux printemps;

Eh bien, non! mai l’accepte et floréal l’accueille,
Et ce pervers
Ne fait pas perdre un nid, une branche, une feuille
Aux buissons verts’

Et l’entréeeri enfer due à ce, misérable,
C’est ce jardin,
Le lys, l’églantier, l’orme; et le cèdre et l’érable;
O lâche éderi!
chez lui.
Jamais par une phis monstrueuse ouverture
Le mal n’a lui.
Le sort est vil de nous toujours,traître et fantasque,
Il s’est jeté;
Mais jamais jusqu’ici l’on n’avait vu ce masque
Si dénoué.

Et c’est l’étonnement des prophètes moroses;
De toi, martyr,
De toi, penseur, que tant de crime à tarit de roses
Puisse aboutir.
Il s’assied sous un hêtre; il murmure J’oublie.
Oubliez. Oublions. - Douce mélancolie!-
Puis, tendre, il prend sa flûte et soupire: .

Ô proscrits!
Pyrame aima Thisbé. Céphale aima.Procris,
Je vous aime. Accourez. Bannis, je vous appelle.
Amnistie est un mot singulier que j’épelle;

Je ne sais pas très bien ce qu’il veut dire: Et vous?
Mais je vous aime. L’ombre est tiède, l’air est doux.
Il est dans le printemps; il est dans la nature
Proscrits, je songe à vous dans ma joie innocente;
Pour que je sois heureux il faut que je vous sente
Respirer le même air que moi dans les vallons.
Revenez. Je le sais, les jours d’exil sont longs.
Il est temps qu’enfin moi, vous, vos fils, vos compagnes,
Nous allions tous ensemble errer dans les campagnes
Et que nous écoutions sous les mêmes berceaux
Et sous le même ciel le même chant d’oiseaux.
Il est temps que je dise à mon Pinard fidèle
Tiens! voici le proscrit, et voici l’hirondelle!
Dieu te ramène l’une, et moi l’autre. Exilés,
Prenez la clef des champs dans mon trousseau de clés;
L’air du pays. natal plaît à l’âme des sages;
Les champs vous calmeront. Beauté des paysages!
Moi César, devant qui Béhic est à genoux,
Chers bannis, je vous rends la patrie. Aimons-nous.
Revenez. Craignez Nous que mes chiens ne vous mordent?
Non. Mon sénat est doux. Les coeurs enfin s’accordent,
Et de boucher je suis redevenu berger.
Plus de banni dehors, dedans plus d’étranger,
Je suis français. Amis, j’ai quitté mon écorce;
Car pour-être français et cesser d’être corse,
Il suffit que l’é manque ou que l’i soit ôté;
Moi je suis Bonaparte et non Buonaparté.
Conti, l’homme par qui le vrai chez moi pénètre,
Se change en monsieur Conte et Piétri 42 devient piètre.
Donc, nous serons français, vous vivrez sous mes lois.
Accourez dans mes bras. Ainsi les vieux gaulois
Se réconciliaient trinquant sous la tonnelle;
Le fond du verre était garni de pimprenelle.
Mon âme en sa beauté s’offre à vos yeux. Hélas!
Laissez-vous attendrir, proscrits. Quand Ménélas
Vit le sein nu d’Hélène, il jeta son épée.
Ma molle rêverie est de vous occupée.

Ingrats, vous détournez les yeux de mes appas.
J’ai beaucoup de Parieux, de Fialins, de Maupas,
De juges, de soldats, et de billets de banque;
Mais proscrits, vous absents, quelque chose me manque.
Je ne sais ce que j’ai, je fuis dans les forêts.
En vain le Moniteur m’arrive, humide et frais,
J’ai beau suivre aux prés. verts la vache aisée à traire,
Et songer au budget; j’ai beau pour me distraire
Laisser errer mes yeux sur lecrâne poli
Du maréchal Regnault de Saint-Jean-d’Angely;
En vain je verse Aÿ, Nuits, Sauterne, Alicante
A Rouher qui me fait l’effet d’une bacchante;
Boudet en vain me suit, poussant de longs abois;
En vain je vois Troplong sourire au fond des bois;
En vain tous mes curés sur qui vous vous trompâtes,
Tous mes évêques, gros et gras, joignent leurs pattes,
Et font un hourvari de prières; en vain.
Romieu le faune, en vain Bacciochi le sylvain
Soufflent éperdûment dans leurs buccins de cuivre;
En vain Morny, buvant; aimable, sanglant, ivre,
Sur son char attelé de tigres, passe au fond Du hallier où Dodone avec Bondy se fond;
Aux applaudissements des nymphes familières,
En vain, le thyrse en main, ventru, coiffé de lierres,
Baroche énorme et gai vient monté sur Nisard;
En vain Delangle est bête, en vain Fould est gueusard;
Je suis triste. Je sens du vague. Chaix-d’Est-Ange
M’ennuie; et par moments je me-tourne: - Qu’entends-je?
Est-ce leur pas? vont-ils revenir, mes bannis? -
Oh! revenez! Avril gazouille dans les nids,
Toutes les fleurs des bois mêlent leurs aromates,
Venez! pontons, cachots, poucettes, casemates,
Cayenne, Lambessa, j’oublierai .tout. Venez!
Quand même on me mettrait-Fould en fleur sous le nez,
Quand Suin décolleté montrerait ses-épaules,
Quand Glandaz et Leboeuf, pleureurs comme ‘deux saules,
Me chanteraient Dunois sur la muse de blé, -

Mon vide, je le sens ne serait pas comblé.
Il me faut mes proscrits, mes proscrits à moi. Certe,
Je suis grand, mais sans vous la patrie ést déserte.
Rentrez. Plus d’exil. Joie et chansons! Doux émoi!
Vous me contemplerez ayant autour de moi
Boitelle, Martinprey, Forey, Magnan et Magne;
Ainsi les’ douze pairs entouraient Charlemagne:
Vous verrez mon petit apprendre l’A’B C.
Voyons, finissons-en, liquidons le passé.
Vous étiez endormis; j’ai surpris, vos vedettes.
Si l’on n’est empereur, comment payer ses dettes?
Il le fallait Le Louvre exempte de Clichy ,
Un parvenu n’est rien s’il n’est un enrichi.
Comprenez. Vous savez, il vous passe une idée.
La Françe était en vie et je l’ai poignardée,
J’en conviens, j’ai commis ce péché véniel,
Avec Canrobert, Korte,Espinasse et Niel.
La République un jour s’éveilla désarmée,
Et me vit souriant, debout, mèche allumée;
J’ai tiré le canon, puis on s’est tenu coi;
J’avais peut-être un peu juré je ne sais quoi,
Mais à tous ces vieux faits qu’est-ce qui s’intéresse?
Ce fut un coup de force avec, un tour d’adresse;
Je fus Machiavel compliqué d’Auriol;
Vous étiez la loi, soit, et je fus le viol..
N’en-parlons plus. Je hais les choses éternelles,
Elles sont sans-pitié, l’implacable est en elles.
L’enfer dirait Toujours, mais moi je dis Assez!
Je vous ai mitraillés, traqués, bannis, chassés,
Dispersés, comme un tas de cendre dans l’espace,
Volés, assassinés... - Eh bien, je vous fais grâce!

XXXIII EN PLEIN DIX-NEUVIÈME SIÈCLE.

ROSALIE DOISE

On voulait condamner cette fille, attendu
Qu’une femme effarée, au regard éperdu,
Dont on voit le col nu que va trancher la hache,
Qui hurle, qu’à la planche effroyable on attache,
Et dont on dit: Voyez, longtemps elle se tut,
Puis parla, cela pose un jeune substitut.
On passe conseiller, président, avant l’âge,
Et l’on finit par faire un très beau mariage,
Et par avoir des champs, des femmes, un château,
En suifant la rainure où glisse le couteau.

Ne jamais gaspiller tant on se sent capable,
Son temps à distinguer l’innocent du coupable,
Ecraser l’accusé que Bergasse étouffait,
N’être point scrupuleux, se montrer si bien fait
Pour l’opprobre qu’on a l’estime de Baroche,
Etre un de ceux à qui la honte dit: approche!
Et qui viennent, - la honte aide à l’avancement, -
Eh quoi! mais c’est tout simple! et c’est ainsi, vraiment,
Que le bonnet carré se dore et se galonne,
Que du temple des lois on devient la colonne,
Et qu’on reçoit la croix d’honneur, dans la saison,
Des mains d’un accusé de haute trahison.
C’est pourquoi, lorsqu’on a tout ce qu’il faut pour plaire,
Qu’on est, par la cravate et les gants, exemplaire,
Qu’on sait être au bal jeune et vieux au tribunal,
Quand on est élégant, doctrinaire, banal,
Quand on a ce patois gn’Aulois prend pour du style,
Faire guillotiner une femme est utile.
D’une tête sanglante un juge est couronné.
N’allez-vous pas blâmer un jeune homme bien né,
Qui trouve sous sa main une obscure ouvrière,

Une fille, et qui tient à faire sa carrière,

II

De montrer à propos quelque férocité?
On est un personnage important et compté
Et que le journal’ cite en lettre majuscule,
Quand on a fait lier quelqu’un à la bascule:
Chez le préfet le soir vous prenez votre thé;
Par les meilleurs salons vous êtes accepté
Voilà ce substitut terriblè qu’on renomme!
Et l’évêque vous dit: -C’est bien. Tonnez, jeune homme!
Ah! l’herbe de Clamart donne dé beaux profits!
On est celui que montre une mère à son fils,
On fascine, étant presque un acteur sur l’affiche,
Une Agnès de seize ans, fraîche, ingénue et riche,
Qui danse avec vous rit, parle de vos succès,
Et de la femme à qui vous fîtes son procès,
Pendant qu’en son tombeau cette morte farouche
Sent fourmiller les vers de terre dans sa bouche.

Tel est le rêve fait par tous les débutants.
Ainsi songeait le frais Delangle à son printemps;
Ainsi songeait Troplong alors qu’il était rose;
Ainsi tout substitut songe en peignant sa prose,
Laubardemont en herbe et Laffemas en fleur;
Ayant derrière lui la mort; sombre soufiieur,.
Bellart jeune se dit: Soyons Jeffrye en France!
Et c’est. le front chargé de ce tas d’espérance
Qu’en son riant matin, vers le but qui lui plaît,
Chemine Grandperrette avec .son pot au lait.
Tous veulent une affaire horrible en cour d’assises.
Comme on haranguerait les faces indécises .
Des jurés, par la phrase aux meurtres entraînés!
Car la justice est bête, et par le bout du nez
On conduit où l’on veut Thémis, la vieille aveugle.
On a reçu du ciel l’éloquence qui beugle;

Si la chancellerie un jour vous remarquait,
Tout serait dit; d'emblée on arrive au parquet
De. Paris, et l'on est bourreau sous l'oeil du prince.

Or ce juge apprenti travaillait en province.

Un matin, calculant l'avenir, fatigué
Des bals de préfecture, et bâillant, et peu gai,
Ce garçon' s'était dit dans un moment lucide.
— Ah! ce qu'il me faudrait, c'est un bon parricide! -
Car en effet, en Grève; il est beau de pouvoir
Assaisonner la tête avec un. voile noir.
Il chercha. Ce fut toi qu'il trouva, misérable!

Donc on prit cette femme. Il est fort déplorable
Qu'on n'ait plus la torture. A bas Beccaria!
On fit du mieux qu'on put. On mit la paria
Dans un trou, sur un lit de paille, au fond de l'ombre.
Les geôles ont toujours quelque cabanon sombre,
Trop court pour qu'on s'y puisse étendre, trop étroit
Pour qu'on marche, et trop bas pour qu'on s'y tienne droit.
Le captif est là, seul, sous les noeuds qu'on lui forge,
Sous le poing de la nuit qui lui serre la gorge,
Et l'insomnie, en pleurs brûle ses yeux sanglants.
Cela remplace un peu le réchaud de Vouglans,
Le chevalet, l'étau de bronze, la rapière
Lardant le patient sur la tablé de pierre,
Et le bouc qui léchait un homme enduit de miel.
Là, sans point d'apptii, loin des hommes, loin du ciel,
Sentant la voix du juge ainsi qu'une piqûre,
Pendant que chaque jour grossit sa charge obscure,
Le prisonnier se dit: Je ne sais où je vais!

Personne assurément ne peut trouver mauvais
Qu'ayant besoin de faire avouer cette femme,
On l'enterrât vivante en cette crypte infâme.
C'est juste. On s'arrangea de façon qu'elle fût

Sans jour, sans air, avec le geôlier à l’affût,
Guettant ses pleurs, ses cris, sa faim, sa soif, ses rêves;
L’affreux tourment qui n’a ni relâches ni trêves,
L’étouffement, pesait sur elle. Ne pouvoir
Respirer, et râler dans l’ombre, et ne rien voir!
Ne pas dormir! Toujours dans l’immonde cellule
Quelque fourmillement effroyable pullule.
Les murs glacés ont l’air d’être vos ennemis.
Oh! les hideux cachots! il semble qu’on ait mis
Un morceau de la nuit du tombeau dans ces caves.
Mais si l’on n’avait pas ces geôles, ces entraves,
Ces gênes, tout irait fort mal, et l’accusé
Peu docile, serait à tuer malaisé.
Là du moins il est pris de tout l’on tient registre.
Il descend marche à marche un escalier sinistre;
Les juges font sur lui de lugubres essais;
Pâle, il se sent poussé par derrière un procès
Est une pente douce où l’on glisse à la tombe.

Cette fille expirait dans cette catacombe.
— C’est sa faute, disait le juge, elle se tait!
Criminelle, avouez! - Mais elle résistait,
Et refusait d’entrer dans la sombre descente,
La drôlesse, attendu qu’elle était innocente.
Et c’était là sans doute un inconvénient.
Mais le juge ne peut avoir tort: En niant,
On l’irrite. Il ‘apprit soudain qu’elle était grosse,
Et dit: Soit. Pour berceau l’enfant aura la fosse.
C’était son droit. Ne point vous ôter un cheveu,
Mais faire ce qu’il faut pour avoir un aveu.
C’est le dernier degré de l’art et de l’étude
D’être tortionnaire avec mansuétude,
Et, sans bruit, sans emprunts au vieux code gaulois,
D’employer l’agonie au triomphe des lois.

La damnée étouffait, et criait: Grâce! grâce!
Le juge lui disait - Que veux-tu que j’y fasse?

Avoue! - Elle pleurait. - De l’air! je meurs! - Tu n’as
Qu’à parler, et d’un mot tu romps ce cadenas.
Ta prison deviendra très douce. Vois, décide. °
Tu n’as qu’à t’avouer simplement parricide.
— Non! - Je te rendrai l’air et le jour. Tu pourras
Avoir des fleurs, avoir un lit, avoir des draps;
Sortir dans le préau si cela te contente;
Tu redeviendras fraîche et grasse et bien portante;
Tu seras bien logée et bien nourrie; il faut,
Femme, si tu veux vivre, accepter l’échafaud.

Et ce raisonnement touchait peu cette folle.
Force à la loi. Tout autre axiome est frivole.
Quoi, tant d’hommes savants, quoi, Treilhard, Portalis,
Quoi, Tronchet qui plaida devant les fleurs de lys,
Séguier, Berlier, auront dépensé des semaines
A souder la loi gothe avec les lois romaines;
Bigot-Préameneu, payé par le budget,
Aura consulté Mourre et consulté Target.
Ils auront fait un çode étonnant, et ces maîtres,
Ces clercs, sachant par cœur le droit de nos ancêtres,
Cas simples, cas royaux; chefs-plaids et francs-alleux,
Auront perdu leur temps! Ce serait scandaleux,
Certe; et puis à la fin l’amour-propre s’en mêle..
Quoi! la loi fléchirait devant cette femelle!
Un jeune magistrat, voyons, peut-il lâcher’
Une femme qu’il est allé très loin chercher;
Qui peut-être, après tout, quoique fort obstinée, -
Est à peu près coupable, et qui guillotinée;
Fera parler de lui chez le garde des séeaux!
Cette fille est d’ailleurs sans moeurs. Les noirs ciseaux
Sont au greffe, et bientôt mordront sa chevelure.
Il criait: Parricide! avoue. Il faut conclure! -
Elle disait: - Jamais. - L’innocence est de fer.
On dut la murer presque au fond de cet enfer.

Dans son sein cependant le pauvre petit être,

L’ange obscur, avait l’air de ne vouloir plus naître,
Et, sans savoir nos lois, nos jougs, notre secret,
Ni ce que lui faisait la justice, il mourait.
Elle en tremblait du moins. Prise entre ces murailles,
Elle épiait cette âme éclose en ses entrailles,
Elle en craignait la fuite, et dans son flanc muet
Il lui semblait parfois que. rien ne remuait;
Si bien qu’un jour, vaincue enfin, découragée,
Stupide, cette mère et cette naufragée,
Sans espoir, n’ayant plus que le choix de l’écueil,
Sentant son ventre, hélas! devenir un cercueil,
Et le doux innocent périr dans ce repaire,
Pour sauver son enfant, dit: - J’ai.tué mon père!

22 novembre.

XXXIV APPROBATION DES PRÊTRES

C’était dans un sépulcre, ou bien quartier Bréda.

J’y vis un monstre, et lui, lascif, me regarda,
Et dit, me souriant d’un vil sourire oblique:
— Je m’appelle Succès, je suis fille publique;
Je cogne à mon carreau, Mastaï m’aperçoit,
Et monte.
Oui, le succès; le succès, quel qu’il soit,
Est une gorge nue à laquelle aucun prêtre
Ne résiste, et l’on vient baiser la bouche traître.
De tous les crimes, fiers de leur flagrant délit,
Et l’on fait sa prière en couchant dans leur lit.
Rien n’égale. l’amour que chez Tartuffe excite
Une action mauvaise en pleine réussite.
C’est un massacre? Soit. Un parricide? Après?
Les sophismes, trempés d’eau bénite, sont prêts.
L’Audace heureuse est là. Devant cette sultane,
Le dogme déboutonne en riant sa soutane,
Le sermon s’attendrit, le syllabus en rut
Refait les gros soupirs de Booz avec Ruth.
Rome lèche vos pieds si vous gagnez le quine.
Le pape est le galant, la chance est la coquine;
Elle attire, on la suit dans ses obscurs chemins,
Et le fard sur le front cache le sang aux mains.
Qui fraude est orthodoxe et qui ment est biblique.
Quand ce maroufle impur brisa la République,
Le jour où l’oncle fut calqué par le neveu,
Les juges, qui s’étaient mis à juger un peu
Bonaparte; risquant sa hideuse gageure,
Ébauchaient vaguement du côté du parjure
Un agenouillement pendant qu’il triomphait.
Ce voleur a tué ce passant. C’est bien fait.
Le chêne par le coin félon s’est laissé fendre,
Tant pis pour lui. Tu meurs? il fallait te défendre.

Qui t’égorge a raison. Paix! meurs. La papauté
Est un faux poids toujours aux succès ajouté.
La Papauté pour frère a le Glaive. Elle ouate
Avec des trahisons sa douillette béate,
Cherche avant tout l’utile, et grossit d’un fardeau
D’attentats, d’infamie et d’horreur, son credo.
Elle aime Octave immonde, absout Clovis Sicambre,
Sacre un Dix-huit-Brumaire et lave un Deux-Décembre.
La justice, le droit chassé par les tyrans,
L’honneur et la vertu, lui sont indifférents,
N’ayant rien de solide et rien de saisissable,
Autant qu’au sphinx camard les tourbillons de sable
Roulés sous le ciel noir par le vent libyen.
Charles-Neuf tue. Amen. Sylla proscrit. C’est bien.
Le poignard est divin; la hache est innocente.
Pas un forfait à qui l’église ne présente
Pour s’essuyer les mains, la nappe de l’autel.

L’église est pour Gessler contre Guillaume Tell,
Pour Rossa contre Huss, pour Cauchon contre Jeanne.
Elle offre à Trestaillon la colonne Trajane.
Elle est l’auberge entrez si vous pouvez payer;
Le Te Deum sera compris dans le loyer.
Mandrin est un sauveur, Cartouche est un messie;
Qui réussit est pur. Payez. Rome associe
A l’acceptation des forfaits l’Éternel.
Monter est vertueux, tomber est criminel.
O terreur! elle fait bénir la perfidie,
L’affreux plan qu’un faussaire à loisir étudie,
Le bagne ouvert aux bons, les gueux mis au sénat,
Tous les viols, le fer, le feu, l’assassinat,
César et ses complots, l’araignée et ses toiles,
Par cette grande main sombre et pleine d’étoiles,
Sans même regarder un moment le ciel bleu,
Et sans se demander si c’est possible à Dieu!

25 février 1870.

XXXV QU’ÊTES-VOUS? - TU LE VOIS...

— Qu’êtes-vous? - Tu le vois à notre robe. - Quoi?
Les prêtres de Dieu? -Non, les prêtres de la loi.
— De quelle loi? Du maître. - Et qu’est le maître? - Un homme.
On l’appelle empereur ici, césar à Rome.
Il est aigle de droit et de race’ vautour.’
Celui-ci fut jadis un criminel. Un jour
Il fit un serment, puis il s’embusqua derrière,
Puis, comme les voleurs la nuit dans la clairière,
Il sortit `brusquement, de sa cachette, et:prit’
A la gorge l’honneur, la probité, l’esprit,
La gloire, la vertu, la pudeur, la patrie,
Et les tua. D’abord, voyant la loi meurtrie,
Nous fîmes préparer la corde et le, gibet, `
Comptant bien. l’étrangler tout pet, s’il succombait.
Mais il a réussi, la rudesse est un vice,
Et chez lui maintenant nous sommes en service;
A qui nous souffleta notre respect est dû;
Il sied qu’il soit sacré, puisqu’il n’est. pas pendu;
Nous faisons à présent pendre en son- nom les autres;
Nous sommes les appuis de l’état, les apôtres
De l’ordre, et nous lavons les pieds du maître, .emploi
Utile, et le meilleur que puisse avoir- la loi;
La clarté de cet homme éclaire notre livre;
Car il est naturel et simple qu’on lui livre
La conscience humaine et le code et Jésus,
Puisque c’est lui qui paie et qu’il a le dessus.
— Qu’est-ce que vous rendez, là, dans cette bâtisse,
Par la bouche.? - Cela s’appelle la justice.

Lorraine-Altwies, 27 août .

XXXVI Pour le prêtre il est saint

Pour le prêtre il est saint, pour le juge il est juste;
Il a raison;
Nul ne résiste; il est sacré, suprême, auguste,
Par trahison.

C’est de vin et de sang que sa lèvre est rougie.
Lourd prisonnier
De cette double ivresse, il complète l’orgie
Par le charnier.

Il a tout; les sénats lui prodiguent leur âme
Et leur fierté,
L’évêque en chape d’or la prière, et la femrne
La nudité.

Devant lui la vertu frémit, l’honneur émigre;
Pâle Psyché,
L’âme humaine voudrait s’enfuir; et par le tigre
Il est léché.

Il a par un viol possédé la victoire,
Il est prudent,
Mais guerroyeur; il compte arriver à la gloire,
Bazaine aidant.

Les peuples sur leur tête ont cette splendeur noire;
Il est debout;
César, majesté, prince,, empereur, dans l’histoire,
Et dans l’égout.

Le monde, ainsi qu’au temps de Claude et de Comnène,
Est la béant,
Contemplant ce pygée énorme, grandeur naine,
Hautain néant:

Il est le sphinx du trône; il a pour toute règle
Le crime heureux;
Il habite un fond d'ombre; il est seul comme l'aigle
Et le lépreux.

Il a l'armée, il a l'église; il est superbe,
Blême, ébloui;
Et tous les crimes sont épanouis en gerbe
Autour de lui.

Il règne, il a la joie obscure de Tibère;
Il est content;
Et pendant ce temps-là,' le destin délibère,
Et l'ombre attend;

Et, soeur de Némésis, l'implacable logique
Au front serein,
Assise à son fourneau, chauffe à son feu tragique
Le vers d'airain.

26 novembre.

XXXVII POUR L’ÉCRIVAIN VÉNAL...

Pour l’écrivain vénal il est un dur moment.
Après avoir tiré de son encre qui ment
Tout ce qu’elle contient de noirceur et de bave,
Après avoir été l’affreuse plume esclave,
Après avoir haï pour le compte d’autrui,
Soudain cet homme un jour sent que, venant de lui,
L’injure est un éloge et la louange un blâme,
Et qu’il ne peut plus nuire à force d’être infame.
Quand il est démontré, prouvé, public, patent
Qu’on a livré son âme èt qu’on a reçu tant,
Qu’on est prostitué par brevet authentique,
Qu’au trottoir du chantage. on a tenu boutique,
Qu’on s’est fait insulteur, moyennant un loyer,
Qu’on est allé chez ceux. qui peuvent bien payer
Vendre de l’imposture et de la calomnie,
Qu’on a, pour de l’argént, outragé le génie,
La probité, le droit, le courage, l’honneur,
On est mieux ‘qu’assassin, on est émpoisonneur;
On est moins qu’un bandit des bois, on est un drôle;

L’or aux mains flétrit plus que lè fer sur l’épaule.

Altwies, 18 septembre .

</pre<
== XXXVIII Qu’il vienne des coquins==
<pre>

Qu’il vienne des coquins sur la honte qu’on sème;
Qu’à propos de Monsieur Bonaparte troisième,
Morlot cite Hildebrand, Troplong Justinien;
Qu’en ce gouvernement napoléonien
Le grand Napoléon soit pris, qu’on rende Hercule
Grotesque, Achille farce et Nemrod ridicule;

Qu’on fasse du clinquant, du faux, des oripeaux,
Avec les ,grands exploits, avec les grands drapeaux,
Avec les saints chevrons des brigands de la Loire “;
Que cet empire, utile aux banques, ait pour gloire
De n’avoir point d’Eylau, d’Essling ni d’Austerlitz;
Qu’on soit des enrichis contents d’être avilis,
Que le public opprobre à la Bourse se cote;
Que l’aigle se marie avec une cocotte;
Soit. Que m’importe à moi! j’ai l’immense dédain;
Je regarde pousser les fleurs de mon jardin,
La mer chante, et je vois naître l’aube candide;
D’Austerlitz éclipsé le soleil sort splendide;
Et si César décroît, les bois me sont témoins
Que le doux mois d’avril n’a pas un nid de moins.

XXXIX Vous le trouvez bon.

Vous le trouvez bon. Soit. Moi je suis triste. Hélas!
Je pleure; et je finis, sinistre, accablé, las,
Dans ce deuil où je sens tant d'angoisse m'étreindre,
Par n'avoir qu'un besoin immense de tout plaindre;
Tout, même ce vieillard, ô ciel noir, surtout lui!
Je songe à sa pauvre âme, où jamais rien n'a lui
Qu'une fausse clarté cachant la lueur vraie;
Le crépuscule est-il la faute de l'orfraie?
Hélas! ces malheureux grands-prêtres sont plongés
Sous un tel flot de nuit, d'ombre et de préjugés!
D'Aod à Samuel, de Joad à Caïphe,
Toujours le dogme a fait chanceler le pontife;
Toujours dans cette coupe, hélas, l'homme hébété
A -bu l'erreur croyant boire la vérité.
Il a ce livre, Dieu mais il ne sait pas lire.

Ah! j'ai beau m'indigner, je ne puis pas maudire.

XL JE-SERAIS TRÈS CONTENT..

Je serais très content si j’étais Bonaparte
Qu’on me prouvât que nul n’a combattu pour Sparte,
Qu’Aristide est un mot, que Tell est inventé,
Que Spartacus fait rire, et qu’un doute est resté
Sur Thrasybule en Grèce et sur Brutus dans Rome.
Je trouverais utile et bon, si j’étais l’homme
Qui sur la France morte à cette heure est debout,
Qu’en sortant de souper avec monsieur About
Chez madame Mathilde, un beau soir, monsieur Taine
Démontrât de façon triomphante et certaine
Que personne ne peut faire ni bien ni mal,
Qu’un gueux, comme un héros, est un produit normal,
Que tout est de la fange étant de la matière,
Que le juste et l’injuste au même cimetière
Mêlent tranquillement leur phosphate de chaux,
Que Tibère à Caprée et Huss dans les cachots
Sont égaux et n’ayant d’âme ni l’un ni l’autre,
Sont le néant despote et le néant apôtre;
Car tout se vaut devant le rien universel.
La vertu c’est du sucre, et le crime est du sel 56
On secrète, sans but, et pour se mettre à l’aise,
Une bonne action, ainsi qu’une mauvaise
De la même manière, et l’homme est un ruisseau
Où le serpent vient boire aussi bien que l’oiseau.
Le louer, le blâmer, pourquoi? Louez-vous l’onde
Qu’un cygne fait charmante et qu’un ver fait immonde?

XLI APRÈS SEIZE ANS

I

L’empire est un succès. Quel beau commencement!
Paris vaut une messe et coûte un faux serment;
Ce n’est pas cher. Seize ans de gloire! une jonchée
De lauriers et de fleurs, et l’histoire est trichée.
Tant pis pour elle. Hurrah.! plus d’émeute à Roubaix.
Le sultan à la France offre huit chevaux bais;
On en attellera le carrosse du sacre.
Nul revenant ne vient rabâcher le massacre;
Les morts du Deux-Décembre ont le sommeil profond.
Les institutions de bienfaisance vont,
Et Saint-François-Régis sourit dans l’atmosphère.
Le crédit mobilier est une bonne affaire
Pour les Pereire; et Fould, quoique mort, est vivant
Dans tout ce qu’on achète et dans tout ce qu’on vend,
Compris la conscience, é’t dans les phénomènes ,
De l’enregistrement, du’ timbre et des domaines.
L’emprunt met une pièce aux déficits. Fort-bien.
Le vieux Paris, Sauvai, Du Breul, Félibien,
Se sauvent effarés devant Haussmann qui pioche.
Au bambino du ciél l’empire offre son mioche 58;
Le pape, doux parrain, donne un récépissé.
Le droit est un vieux mot, peu su, mal prononcé;
La justice est un pont qu’on passe avec péage;
Quand les Commùniqués pleuvent, c’est un nuage
De vérités qui crève, et, nôn sans quelque ennui,
Le journal se secoue, arrosé malgré lui;
L’honneur, qui pour bien vivre a plus d’une recette,
Est un fils que Tartuffe eut jadis de Macette
Quant à la probité, c’est une bague au doigt;
Ayez cet ornement, si bon vous semble. On voit
Le temps qu’il fait au juge ainsi qu’au baromètre.
Tout ce qu’un crime ‘peut au bon ordre promettre,

L’empire l’a tenu. Le peuple est au repos;
Les’Turennes manquant, on a des chassepots;
Tout rit. L’esprit humain est las; l’armée .est .forte.

II

Lui, règne.
,Mais Dieu dit: Le châtiment m’importe.
Nous l’aurons.

Vous l’avez. -Que vous faut-il de plus?
Quoi donc! ne voit-on pas commencer le reflux?
Hier triste, Aujourd’hui lugubre, et Demain pire.
Derrière ce châssis mal peint qu’on nomme empire,
Les ténèbres; un puits d’ignorance, un cachot
D’opprobre, en bas la faim, la banqueroute en haut,
Paphos pourrie offerte à ceux qui rêvaient Sparte,
Deuil, cendre, et tout au fond l’accusé Bonaparte;
Si Won tâche de voir un peu l’autre côté
Du triomphe, et l’envers de la prospérité,
On aperçoit cela. Que vous faut-il encore?
Le hibou ne croasse et Troplong ne pérore
Que la nuit. La nuit sourde est leur milieu joyeux.
Donc il fait nuit. Voyez la lueur de leurs yeux.
Sans doute on parle fort dans-les régions hautes
Des succès qu’on remporte, ici, là, sur ces côtes,
Dans ce désert, là-bas, en Cochinchine, ailleurs,
Partout; on a de quoi se railler des railleurs,
On -est vêtu de pourpre, et l’historiographe
Du manteau de César pourra dorer l’agrafe.
Bien. Soit. - Tournez la page et voyez le verso..
Le sépulcre est déjà visible en ce berceau.

Nous eûmes du bonheur au jeu; mais notre caisse
A des fêlures, fuit, penche, et son niveau baisse
Comme une eau qui se vide en d’obscurs entonnoirs;
L’azur du Livre Bleu se pique de points noirs;

Sadowa nous surprend, Luxembourg nous échappe;
Que faire? s'incliner. La Providence frappe.
La main est divine. Oui. Le soufflet est prussien.
Notre pape in petto, le petit Lucien,
A tout l'air d'un fruit sec. Du Vulturne à la Sprée,
Toute la monarchie en masse est délabrée.
Czars mal portants, sultans malades, archiducs
Peu chanceux, pape aveugle et sanglant, rois caducs.
Est-ce que ces voleurs de peuples, ces gueux princes,
Ces. grecs du trône, entr'eux s'escroquant des provinces,
N'entendent point craquer sous leurs pas le plancher?
Mané Thécel Pharès commence à s'ébaucher.
Couza fuit, François fuit, Maximilien ,tombe.
Le trône est une trappe ouverte sur la tombe..
Le dur Mexique lutte armé du talion,
Car la louve espagnole allaita ce lion,
Et sa liberté fauve ignore la clémence;
Dans cette ombre, hélas, erre une femme en démence;
Les contre-coups lointains deviennent sérieux
Et, dans on ne sait quel brouillard mystérieux
Où pleure Hécube, ou rit Cassandre, où rôde Électre,
L'empereur assassin songe à l'empereur spectre.
Il décline par où naguère il triomphait.
Que de revers!. Comptez. Qu'est-ce que, son forfait?
Un cachot sur nos fronts; sous ses pieds un abîme.
Il sent se lézarder sinistrement son crime.,
N'est-ce, pas assez?

III

Tout. Les tyrans à bas et les hommes debout.
Tout. La fin. Ce qu'il faut à notre âpre insomnie,
C'est la captivité du genre humain finie,
C'est le souffle orageux des clairons, c'est l'écho
Des trompettes jetant à terre Jéricho,
C'est le débordement des Tibres et des Rhônes,
C'est l'écroulement vaste et farouche des trônes,

C’est leur dernière armée en fuite à l’horizon!
Ce qu’il nous faut, c’est l’âme écrasant sa prison,
C’est le peuple arrachant sa chaîne avec furie,
C’est l’Amour criant: Guerre!, et la sainte Patrie
Criant: Peuples, j’abdique, et suis l’Humanité!
C’est la Paix disant: Passe avant moi, Liberté!
C’est en nos coeurs gonflés la colère profonde,:
C’est l’épée en nos mains pour délivrer le monde,
C’est l’imbécile amas des rois séditieux
A nos pieds, et l’aurore immense dans les cieux!

H. H. 2 décembre 1867.

XLII BAUDIN

La barricade était livide dans l’aurore,
Et, comme j’arrivais; elle fumait encore;
Que voulez-vous. donc?
— Tout.

Rey me serra la main et dit: Baudin est mort.

Il semblait calme et doux comme un enfant qui dort;
Ses yeux étaient fermés, ses bras pendaient, sa bouche
Souriait d’un sourire héroïque et farouche;
Ceux qui l’environnaient l’emportèrent.

Et tous,
Depuis ce jour, l’exil s’étant fermé sur nous,
Nous songeons à celui qui mourut, et dont l’âme
Luit sur Paris ainsi que dans l’ombre une flamme,
Et nous disons: Hélas! c’est toi qui fus* choisi!

Ô toi qui dors là-bas, nous qui saignons ici,
Nous t’envions. Heureux ceux que reprend la tombe!
Celui qui reste droit devant celui qui tombe
Médite, car tous deux sont, en dépit du sort,
Debout, l’un dans la vie et l’autre dans la mort.
Mais dans ce monde où passe et repasse sans cesse
Une inondation de honte et de bassesse,
Où tant d’hommes, plus vains que les mouches d’été,
Vendant leur avenir au présent effronté,
Pour-avoir plus d’orgie acceptent plus d’abîme,
Et chantent, joyeux d’être abjects, ô ciel ‘sublime,
Ciel noir! comment ne pas envier la faveur
D’une balle qui vient frapper un front rêveur!
Comment ne pas frémir devant la suite obscure
Des crimes de Néron vivant comme Epicure,
Ne s’inquiétant pas de ce que produiront

Ses forfaits, ses plaisirs, sa joie et notre affront,
Faisant avec Dieu sombre une folle gageure, .
Et vil, petit, terrible, avec son noir parjure,
Ses fraudes, son succès, sa fange, affreux ciment,
Bâtissant on ne sait quel vaste écroulement!
Comment ne pas aimer la caresse subite
De la mort, spectre auguste avec qui l’âme habite,
Et qui vous ouvre une ombre étoilée où tout luit!
La mort, c’est le matin, et l’exil, c’est la nuit.
Quand tombent les hérauts du progrès populaire,
Quand une main d’en haut, dans un jour de colère,
Leur ôte brusquement des lèvres le clairon,
Quand Botzaris périt, quand expire Byron,
Quand les quatre sergents de la Rochelle meurent,
On entend le sanglot des nations qui pleurent;
Les peuples sous ces deuils se courbent accablés
Et tristes, comme après un orage les blés.
Ces martyrs sont sacrés, et sur toutes les lèvres
Leurs noms volent, donnant aux coeurs les saintes fièvres;
Ils sont l’exemple, ils sont l’honneur, ils sont l’espoir;
Même quand tout s’éclipse on croit encor les voir;
Leur oeil fixe soutient ceux qui jamais ne cèdent;
Ils font songer l’enfant- qui s’élève, ils l’obsèdent
Du superbe besoin de leur être pareils;
Et quand la Liberté, dorant les cieux vermeils,
Reparaît, et revient sur les cimes éclore,
Leurs grands fantômes sont mêlés à cette aurore.
Mourir, c’est vaincre. Un mort brille, éclaire et conduit.

Dans les temps ténébreux où tout s’écroule et fuit,
Quand un assassin fait balbutier l’histoire,
Quand le crime finit par avoir de la gloire,
Et qu’il ôte son masque inutile à garder,
Estimant que sa honte est bonne à regarder;
Quand, lâche, et subissant cette infâme bravade,
La conscience, ainsi qu’un voleur qui s’évade,
Retient son souffle, rampe et tremble; quand les fronts

N’ont presque plus de forme à cause des affronts,
Il est bon de sentir dans l’ombre la présence
De la mystérieuse et sévère innocence
Qui vit dans les tombeaux et que les morts ont seuls,
Et de voir dans la nuit la blancheur des linceuls.
Ce qu’on appelle une ombre est une âme rentrée
Dans. l’azur, mais restée au fond de l’empyrée,
Et qui parle à voix ‘basse au peuple humilié.

Ah! les morts sont présents! L’absent, c’est l’oublié.
L’absent, c’est le proscrit.

Que fait donc la patrie?
Se dit-il. Un bandit la tient, elle est flétrie,
Elle est vendue, elle est esclave, sans appui,
Sans gloire; et l’on entend quelqu’un rire, c’est lui,
Et c’est elle.

Eh bien, soit. On est proscrit, on pense,
On saigne, avec l’oubli railleur pour récompense;
Tout est bien. Voulait-on autre chose? En avant!
Vers quoi? vers le tombeau, vers la nuit, vers le vent,
Vers l’orage et l’écueil. Pourquoi pas? Rome! Auguste
Sort d’Octave, et le vrai devient faux, et l’injuste
En perspective avec le juste se confond;
Tais-toi, proscrit.

On sent de l’ironie au fond
Du murmure des flots comme du bruit des hommes.
Dans cette brume où tous pêle-mêle nous sommes
On jette sa pensée, inutile semeur;
L’insulte est par moments distincte en la rumeur
Que fait autour de vous la vie universelle’;
On rêve; l’océan, .plus grand que vous, chancelle;
On est chez l’étranger qui, froid, libre et jaloux,
Aime chez lui le droit et le tyran chez vous’;
On regarde l’anglais admirer Bonaparte;

On voit cette Carthage où brille un peu ‘de Sparte,
Londre, à quiconque opprime autrui tendre la main.
On marche seul, on suit à pas lents son chemin
Dans ce désert, la foule... - O nostalgie amère! -
On passe regardé de travers, comme Homère.

15 juillet.

XLIII CET ÊTRE EST SI PETIT..

Cet être est si petit qu’il est presque invisible. .
Il a pour fonction’ d’être insecte et nuisible;
Et, rôdant et glissant dans la nuit de Paris,
Punaise, de piquer le sommeil des proscrits.’
Il est sorti, de là sa senteur ordinaire,
De ce vieux bois de lit appelé séminaire
Où Basile offre à ceux qui veulent sommeiller
Un grabat dont Tartuffe a fourni l’oreiller.
Impur bi-frons, il est jésuite, il est laïque;
Il arrange avec art l’ouvrage en mosaïque,
Lourd, mais bariolé, stupide, mais faquin,
Et l’on croit voir Prud’homme en habit d’Arlequin.
Il est critique; il a son tarif et sa taxe,
Et d’autant plus d’aplomb qu’il a moins de syntaxe;
Il insulté à l’honneur, au devoir accompli;
Calomnier est simple et ne fait pas un pli;
C’est ainsi que sans foi, sans probité, sans style,
Et sans talent, on est un misérable utile.
Les pouvoirs forts se font aider, témoin Sylla;
Et leur luxe est d’avoir de ces vermines-là.
Il n’a qu’un dard; les seuls vrais monstres ont des griffes.
Fausses lettres, anas tronqués, mots apocryphes,
Tels sont ses trucs, jeux vils où Fréron se souillait,
Et que contre Voltaire inventa Patouillet 62.
Il met sa lâche injure au service du prince.
Il échappe au talon. vengeur, tant il est mince.
La platitude peut braver l’écrasement.
Il a l’infecte odeur de la bouche qui ment. ..
Tel qui naît chiffonnier finit par être scribe.
Il porte sur son dos sa hotte à diatribe.
Il la charge, il l’emplit; c’est vide et c’est complet.
Il rampe. Il est si bas que c’est en haut qu’il plaît.
Quel est son nom? Cherchez. Vous trouverez peut-être.
C’est la moitié d’un cuistre et c’est le quart d’un prêtre.

L’autre quart, c’est une ombre, un doute, un gueux flétri
Qu’eût dédaigné Vidocq, mais qu’estime Piétri.

12 octobre 1869.

XLIV Toi qui derrière moi

Toi qui derrière moi vantes la guillotine,
Toi qui baves et qui, dans ta rage crétine,
Dénonces le penseur comme on dénonce un roi,
Hurle et grince des dents, je n’ai pas peur de toi,
Ni de l’ongle allongé, ni de l’oeil qui menace,
Ni de ton faux système imbécile et tenace
Qui contre le bon sens entre en rébellion,
Car je te sens chacal et je me sens lion.

XLV LESURQUES

La Chambre criminelle de la Cour de cassation...
Déclare la révision du procès Lesurques non recevable.

(Arrêt du 17 décembre 1868.)

I

Et c'est ainsi qu'un tas d'hommes à jupe rouge,
Plus vils dans leur sénat qu'un forçat dans son bouge,
Prêtres hideux du temple indigné de la loi,
Plats sous la république et rampants Sous le roi,
Culs-de-jatte du droit dont la griffe est impure,
Et dont la conscience incurable suppure,
C'est ainsi que d'abjects et cyniques robins,
Jésuites que d'un signe on ferait jacobins,
Tout prêts à se tailler des bonnets dans leurs toges,
Profils féroces, comme on en voit dans les loges
Du jardin bestial d'Anvers, et dans l'horreur
Des bois où le loup rôde et tient lieu d'empereur,
C'est ainsi que Monsieur Troplong, monsieur Delangle,
Cuistres, de Guillotin adorant le triangle,
Lourds magots variant leurs poses de sommeils,
Poussahs de la justice et de l'ennui, pareils
Aux mandarins dormant sur les coussins des jonques;
Dupins, Crispins, Scapins, Chaix d'Est-Anges quelconques,
C'est ainsi que ces gens qui disent: nous jugeons!
Durs comme le granit, souples comme les joncs,
Valetaille à genoux sous le plat de l'épée,
Ont fait rouvrir les yeux à la tête coupée!

Elle était dans le fond de la tombe, elle avait
Les pierres de la fosse infâme pour chevet;
Autour d'elle gisaient, muets sous l'herbe haute,
Tous les sinistres morts qui dorment côte à côte

Dans ce fatal Clamart dont les cercueils sont courts “;
Sans haleine, sans voix, morte, attendant toujours,
Elle était là, pensive à cause des ténèbres; ,
Ses yeux fermés, le sang collant leurs cils funèbres,
Semblaient faire un refus farouche au firmament,
Et vouloir regarder l’ombre éternellement.
L’âme espère au tombeau n’être point poursuivie.
Mais un bruit est venu du côté de la vie,
Et la tête coupée a remué, son oeil .
Plein d’un feu sombre, a fait le jour dans le cercueil,
Et morne, a regardé les hommes, chose affreuse!

Et la nature, mère énorme et douloureuse,
Hélas! s’est efforcée alors de l’apaiser;
Les moineaux ont couru près d’elle se poser,
Et la mouche, apportant la pitié de l’atome;
La rosée a lavé sa pâleur; divin baume,
La fleur l’a-parfumée, et.l’herbe.qui verdit
L’a doucement baisée,. et les corbeaux ont dit
— N’écoute pas le noir croassement des juges!

Et dans ce moment-là; cyprès, tombeaux, refuges,
Ossements, ossements, vous l’avez entendu.
Et toi, ciel étoilé, gouffre où rien n’est perdu,
Cette tête, du, fond de la fosse maudite,
A crié; dans l’horreur sacrée où Dieu médite.
— Ils ont trouvé moyen de. reboire mon sang,
Dieu juste, et de tuer deux fois un innocent!

14 décembre.

II

«... Si l’on eût réhabilité Lesurques, il eût fallu restituer à sa famille ses biens confisqués, capital et intérêts, depuis plus de soixante ans, ce qui, dit-on, dépasserait deux millions. Cette importante considération a dû gravement influer sur l’arrêt de la cour.”

(Tous les journaux. Décembre 1868.)

Deux millions, voilà l’obstacle.
Si c’était
Pour qu’en son salon rose où chante Colletet,
L’impératrice puisse inviter à Compiègne
Grandguillot, Grandperret, tous les grands de ce règne;
Si c’était pour gaver de truffes les Bourbeaux,
Pour offrir à Pinard des fêtes aux flambeaux,
Pour faire aux Nélatons quitter leurs clientèles;
Ou pour couvrir de fleurs, de bijoux, de dentelles
Les femmes de la cour aux charmes ingénus,
Essaim de nymphes, tas de belles aux bras nus,
Riant, montrant l’aisselle et laissant voir la pointe
Du sein par l’hiatus d’une gaze peu jointe;
Si c’était pour offrir des chiens au grand veneur;
Si c’était pour dorer, l’or rehaussant l’honneur,
Palikao, Failly, Leboeuf, Martinprey, Korte,
Tous les épouvantails moustachus de l’escorte;
Si c’était pour aider Rome à faire la nuit;
Si c’était pour aller au Mexique, à grand bruit,
Tambour battant, avec une nuée altière
D’étendards déployés, fonder un cimetière;
Si c’était pour forger des. chassepots meilleurs,
Si c’était pour créer des engins mitrailleurs
Appropriés au temps de progrès où nous sommes,
Afin d’abattre vite et bien des milliers d’hommes
Comme une faulx passant dans un champ de maïs,
Afin de faire, au meurtre immense du pays,
Travailler nos soldats changés en janissaires,
Afin d’assassiner les hurlantes misères,
Afin que le drapeau de France dans ses plis
Montre Ricamarie à côté d’Austerlitz,
Afin d’exterminer des pauvres, des famines,

Des détresses, vieillards, enfants, forçats des mines,
Pâles, mourant de faim, réclamant des liards;
Deux millions, c’est peu; prenez deux milliards;
Mais il s’agit de rendre à l’innocent justice,
Il s’agit de frapper un coup qui retentisse,
Et de purifier un nom infortuné;
Il s’agit de tirer de l’enfer un damné;
De dire: Apaise-toi, spectre qui te lamentes!
Et d’aller, dans l’oubli des tombes infamantes,
Chercher une Mémoire, et de mettre; à côté
D’un mensonge, en ces nuits sans fond, la vérité:
On ne peut gaspiller à ce point les finances!

Confisquer fut le droit. Les vieilles ordonnances
Sévirent sur Lesurque ainsi qu’au temps ancien.
En .lui volant sa vie; on lui vola son bien.
Les fils ont disparu, famille foudroyée;
La fille s’est jetée à la Seine et noyéé
Tout ce groupe effaré, morne, épàrs, frissonnant,
A sombré sous l’arrêt funèbre; et maintenant,
La nuit après la mort, hélas! c’est la logiqué;
On ne distingue rien dans cette ombre tragique,
Sinon des enfants nus, quelques pauvres petits
Dans l’abîme; orphelins pas ençore engloutis..
Cette détresse est là sous nos yeux, cela souffre,
Crie, appelle, et l’on voit leurs bras sortir du gouffre,
Ils pleurent, et la terre et le ciel sont témoins.
À présent, calculons. Deux. millions au moins.
Trois peut-être. Tout rendre aux fils est nécessaire.
Il faudra rembourser cette longue misère.
N’a-t-on pas plus tôt fait de dire: Toi qui fus
Innocent, reste infâme! Et c’est fini. Refus:
Tout est dit. Être juste est bien, être économe.
Est mieux.
Et puis, de quoi te plains-tu, mon brave homme?
De ce qu’on t’a coupé la tête par erreur?
Ce n’est pas notre faute à nous; et l’empereur

Doit-il, parce qu'on dit beaucoup d'impertinences
Sur cet accident-là, pâtir-dans ses finances,
Renonçer à Biarritz, vu que Lesurque est cher,
Et n'avoir plus de quoi payer monsieur Rouher?
Qu'en pensez-vous, Glandaz? Qu'en pensez-vous,.Devienne?
Président Legagneur, autant qu'il men souvienne,
Tu jugeas l'accusé Bonaparte jadis,
Et tu sers l'empereur; rends ton oracle! dis!
Allons-nous ruiner le budget, qui nous dote,
Pour recrépir à neuf une antique anecdote,
Pour raccommoder, quoi? le nom d'un homme mort,
Et pour laver au fond du code un vieux remord?
Bah! nous rencontrerions, si nous l'osions prescrire,
Le doux nenni de Magne avec son doux sourire.
Le jour où, devant l'huis du trésor, surgirait,
Enclose dans les flancs' sacrés de notre arrêt,
La justice, devoir, dette, loi des croyances,
Clarté, sommation céleste aux consciences;
Le caissier, ricanant de Lesurques plaintif,
Allumerait son poêle avec ce plumitif.
Sous l'empire on est fort; on gouverne, on décrète;
De la chose jugée on fait sa,cigarette.
D'ailleurs on est sceptique. A bas les morts gênants!
On tourne volontiers le dos aux revenants,
Surtout quand le fantôme apporte une quittance.
Le vrai vieilli n'est plus vraisemblable à distance;
Et nous ferions hausser les épaules de ceux
Qui gagnèrent le lot d'un coup d'état chanceux
Si nous venions leur dire: O succès! ô puissance!
Il existe une chose appelée innocence.

Et puis, voyons, vraiment, où s'arrêterait-on?
Que fut à son début l'empire? Un gueuleton.
S'ait: Mais si l'on persiste à faire ainsi ripaille,
L'empereur finira par être sur la paille.
Le budget fêlé fuit. Nous avons des héros,
Nous avons des sauveurs, et cela coûte gros.

On paya Bacciochi, Dieu sait pour quels services,
Magnan pour ses forfaits et Morny pour ses vices,
Va-t-on indemniser tout le monde à présent?
Hier le criminel, aujourd’hui l’innocent.’
C’est trop. Bornons les frais. La loi, qui règne et fauche, Frappa Lesurques. Bien. Complétons cette ébauche.
On a guillotiné le grand-père à tâtons;
Exécutons les fils orphelins, et mettons
Leur requête au panier, comme on y mit sa tête.

Faisons à ce sépulcre une faillite honnête;
Motivons-la si bien qu’on dise: Ils ont raison.
Remettons ce Lesurque en terre, de façon
Qu’il ne puisse, à travers la broussaille, l’ortie,
L’injustice et l’oubli, faire une autre sortie.
Les morts n’ont pas le droit d’ennuyer les vivants.
Régnons, cadis altiers, du haut de nos divans,
Dans notre pourpre ayant un linceul pour doublure.
Ne cédons point; laissons sur ce nom la souillure;
Car la démagogie en ce siècle grandit.
Finissons-en avec ce Lesurques. C’est dit.
Ne souffrons pas qu’on touche aux lois, vieille bâtisse.
Quand un homme a péri par arrêt de justice,
Correctement, au jour voulu, sur l’échafaud,
N’admettons point qu’on trouve à la hache un défaut.
Sans nous tout croulerait sous d’effrayants déluges.
Résistons; et soyons dignes d’être des juges,
Après ces vénérés antiques magistrats,
Gravement accoudés sur d’augustes fatras,
Bien payés par les rois, bien bénis par les prêtres,
Et tous morts en odeur de Montfaucon, nos maîtres!
Vous allez me trouver peut-être curieux,
Mais je voudrais savoir, si tous ces Partariieux,
Tous ces Bellarts qu’on vante et dont on nous agace,
Suin copiant Severt, Aulois singeant Bergassè,
L’un sanguinaire et vil, l’autre horrible et moqueur,
Ont quelque’ chose en eux qu’on’ puisse appeler coeur!

Décembre.

III

Et puis, songez-y donc, si l’on allait conclure
De tout cela, qu’il est parfois unefêlure
A la chose jugée, et qu’un tribunal peut
Se tromper, faire faire à la cordé un faux nœud,
Un faux coup à la hache, un faux acte au concierge
De Thémis, un faux pas à la loi; cette vierge
Qui n’a jusqu’à ce jour’guère eu d’autres époux
Que cinq ou six Bellarts et sept ou huit Maupeoux!
Reste, ô sombre innocent, dans ton opprobre inique.
Garde ce crime ainsi. que l’ardente tunique, .
Que devient la peau même et qu’on n’’arrache pas 6S
Les juges monstrueux prennent leur faux compas
Et font autour. de toi ce cercle. épouvantable.
Au banquet de César la- Justice s’attable.;
Elle n’a pas le temps d’être juste. Il te faut,
Comme Jésus sa croix, porter ton échafaud..
Reste sous ton fardeau, patient! Sur ta tombe,
Un remords qui médite, une larme qui tombe,
Tu n’as pas même, hélas! ce lugubre bonheur.
Sois pour. toujours muré dans le noir déshonneur.
On t’ enferme éperdu dans le forfait d’un autre.
Va, ton crime n’est pas ton crime, il est le nôtre!
Car, lorsqu’il râle et meurt, le fer des lois au. sein,
L’innocent a le monde entier pour assassin.
Quiconque a respiré pendant le meurtre, adhère,
Et quiconque boit, mange et dort, est solidaire;
Le ciel blâme et maudit le genre humain, passant
Sans voir que sur la foule immense il pleut du sang.
Le peuple qui, stupide, aux juges se confie,
Regardant le bourreau pendant qu’il crucifie,
Laissant enfoncer l’un après l’autre-les clous,
Est lâche, et les moutons sont complices des loups.

Le juge, à ce Lesurque où sa- rage s'attache,
Donne un coup de poignard après un coup de hache;
De féroce il devient infâme; et nous l'aidons
Par notre indifférence et par nos abandons.
Il viole un cercueil. Sous ce fatal empire,
Le prêtre est assassin et le juge est vampire!
Et nous voyons, béants, ces hommes manier
L'innocence et la loi, la tête et le panier!

Ah! la goutte de sang, plus que la goutte d'huile,
S'élargit, et la Grève éclabousse la ville 69
L'échafaud, vu de tous, est un hideux sommet.
L'attentat qu'en plein jour, nous présents, l'on commet,
Est l'égout collecteur de nos lâchetés sombres.
Du droit humain brisé nous sommes les décombres;
Nul n'est de la souillure universelle exempt;
Le grand forfait public est én nous frémissant;
Jamais l'innocent mort, qui nous trouble et nous pèse,
Dans notre conscience obscure ne s'apaise.
Deuil profond!

Protestons du moins. Si je flétris
Ces juges, par mon vers dans leur honte pétris,
Si j'ai cette huée implacable à la bouche,
Si j'ai redit vingt fois cette plainte farouche,
Peuple, c'est que ma part de crime m'étouffait.
Peuple, avoir laissé faire, hélas, c'est avoir fait!
Garde toute l'horreur de ta lugubre histoire,
Lesurques! dresse-toi, grande figure noire!
Qu'on te voie à jamais debout sur l'horizon.
Et vous, famille à qui l'on vola sa maison,
Martyrs dont la stupeur s'est changée en folie,
Veuves qu'on déshonore, orphelins qu'on spolie,
Désormais plus de plainte, et taisez-vous, proscrits.
Ah! je frémis de voir leurs prières, leurs cris,
Leurs larmes, leurs appels craintifs, leurs plaidoiries,
Leurs tremblantes douleurs par le dédain meurtries,

Leurs fronts baissés, leurs bras suppliants, quand c’est nous,
Nous tous, qui devrions nous traîner à genoux,
Joindre les mains, pleurer notre erreur insondable,
Peuple, et demander grâce au spectre formidable!

2 décembre.

IV

Pourquoi ne pas marcher un peu? Je vais rêvant,
Tâchant de disperser mon mal de tête au vent.
C’est décembre. L’eau gronde, immense, et le rivage
La repousse et la brise en son refus sauvage;
L’écume se déchire en larges haillons blancs;
Tous les arbres du-bord de la mer sont tremblants;
La nature subit l’hiver, ce noir malaise.
L’herbe est mouillée et morte; au pied de la falaise
Un tumulte d’oiseaux, mauves, courlis, plongeons,
Fourmille et se querelle au milieu des ajoncs;
Le nuage et le flot font de grands plis farouches’;
Et l’on entend, dans l’air plein d’invisibles bouches,
Le Sourd chuchotement du ciel mystérieux;
L’écueil se tait, témoin tragique et sérieux,
Qui le jour est montagne et la nuit est fantôme,
Et qui, tandis qu’au loin fuit la barque, humble atome,
Regarde vaguement dé ses yeux de granit
Les constellatibns qui rôdent au zénith;
L’infini balbutie un fragment du cantique
Que dit le Pacifique et qu’entend l’Atlantique;
Là-bas des voiles vont, Dieu sait où! dans les vents,
Les vagues, les roulis et lés fracas mouvants,
Et s’enfoncent, par l’ombre au loin diminuées,
Sous la mélancolie énorme des nuées;
L’océan m’environne avec ses chants, ses cris,
Sa brume, et moi je songe à ce gouffre Paris.

Qu’est-ce que je fais là, près des mers? Je suis triste.

Et vous vous figurez que votre arrêt existe!
Ah! nous déchirerons, nous tordrons, nous mettrons
En pièces la sentence atroce sur vos fronts!
Nous vous souffletterons avec votre justice,
Juges! Il ne se peut qu'un peuple s'abrutisse
Au point de' croire en' vous et de vous respecter!
Il faudra bien un jour te laisser confronter,
Code, avec le bon sens, et le bon sens est rude.
Juges! votre sagesse-est une vieille prude
Qui, pour cacher ses mains nialpropres, met des gants,
Et votre conscience, ô bonzes arrogants,
A laissé bien des fois César trousser sa jupe:
Sous vos crânes hautains dont le bourgeois est dupe,
Vos scrupules,- vos lois, vos textes, vos fiertés,
Vos pudeurs, vos vertus et vos austérités, "
N'ont qu'un souci, sé vendre, et sont des Rigolboches
Dansant leur danse impure au fond -de vôs-caboches.
Négocier sa voix, brocanter son serment,
Livrer au plus offrant son âme habilement
Et sans qu'il y paraisse, est votre art, et j'atteste
Troplong qui réussit le tour manqué par Teste. -
Troplong a le collier et Teste a le carcan
Au fond c'est le même homme et c'est le même encan.
Vous êtes bien les vrais successeurs des vieux cuistres
Qui peuplaient la Grand'Chambre au temps des rois sinistres,
Et qui dans leurs décrets mêlaient le vrai, le faux,

Le bien, le mal, l'horreur, la mort, les échafauds,
Lourds, et dissimulant cette pointe assassine
Par l'assaisonnement d'un latin de cuisine!

Votre sentence ira pourrir dans le vieux tas
De leurs indignités et de leurs attentats.
Vous imaginez-vous, ô sombres imbéciles,
Qu'après l'arrêt bavé par vos bouches fossiles,
Tout est dit; que c'est fait; que vous avez ôté

Du monde l’équilibre et des coeurs l’équité,
Que vous êtes, magots toussant dans vos flanelles,
Quelque chose à côté des clartés éternelles,
Et qu’il sort du bouquin légal un tel pouvoir
Que l’homme empêche Dieu de faire son devoir!

Ah!Ton pourra puiser au fond des écritoires
Les galimatias et les réquisitoires
Et la prose infamante où Broë triomphait,
Et cracher sur ce spectre, et dire: c’est bien fait!
Ah! l’on entassera tant qu’on voudra la honte;
Le juge, le bailli, le capitoul, l’archonte,
Toutes les robes d’ombre et tous les bonnets noirs,
Tous les hiboux ayant les greffes pour manoirs,
Pourront venir, pourront prodiguer leur grimoire
Et leur haine à cette humble et tragique mémoire,
Ces stercoraires sont un assez vil essaim .
Pour croasser sans cesse: assassin! assassin!
Ils pourront, tous, en foule, à l’heure où la nuit tombe,
Se percher, au-dessus de cette pauvre tombe,
Dans les hideux rameaux du code, obscur cyprès
D’où tombe cette fiente immonde, leurs arrêts;
Ils pourront épaissir leur justice fétide
Sur -ce damné, des lois morne cariatide;
Ils pourront ajouter le désespoir .au deuil,
Sous leur chose jugée accabler ce cercueil,
Faire une ignominie exprès pour cette fosse,
Déclarer le lys noir et la vérité fausse;
Paris, ce vieux Paris si petit et si grand,’
Pourra dormir, chanter, manger, boire, ignorant
A qui le droit, à qui l’opprobre, à qui la palme;
Soudain, un jour, le ciel oublié, le ciel calme,
Blanchira du côté maudit de l’horizon;
Ceux qui regarderont auront un grand frisson
Et l’attente sacrée entrera dans leur âme;
Et l’on verra, là-bas, dans l’atmosphère infâme,
Tout à coup, au-dessus du sépulcre effrayant

Que la loi,- l’Euménide inepte, en bégayant,
Monstre aveugle, a flétri dans sa toute-puissance,
Se lever lentement cet astre, l’innocence!

H.-H. 27 décembre.

XLVI DEUX ARRÊTS ONT ÉTÉ RENDUS CE MOIS-CI...

Oh! je sais maintenant pourquoi je ne pouvais .
Respirer, trouvant l’air de la terre mauvais;
Pourquoi j’avais le fiel du flot sombre à la bouche,
Pourquoi je m’agitais dans’ le sommeil farouche,
Et pourquoi dans l’espace immense, j’étouffais.
Deux meurtres viennent d’être en moins d’un mois refaits,
Recommencés, dans l’ombre où je suis, où vous êtes,
Peuple, et nous les sentons dégoutter sur nos têtes!
En ce décembre obscur, aux sépulcres pareil,
Où l’on sent plus de honte avec moins de soleil,
Les hommes préposés à. cette forfaiture .
Qu’on nomme en France loi, code et magistrature,
Prêts, devant qui les paie, à fléchir le genou, .
Jetant aux cabanons quiconque vole un sou,
Mais souriants devant un: trône qu’on dérobe,
Ont trouvé le moyen de reteindre leur robe .
Avec du rouge pris, au baquet d’es bourreaux, ..
Le sang d’un innocent et le. sang d’un héros;
Et sur eux maintenant le reflet des abîmes
Flamboie, et leur justice a l’aspect. de deux crimes!
Si bien qu’à leurs jupons, tachés par leurs arrêts,
Voyant du sang ancien qui semble encor, tout frais,
Le peuple, en qui s’accroît la colère, à mesure
Que s’élargit sur eux la double éclaboussure,
Dit en. les ,regardant avec son noir dédain:
D’un côté c’est. Lesurque,, et de l’autre, Baudin!

XLVII EN 1869

Vous me dites:

— Pourquoi cet éternel courroux?
Le ciel n’est pas autant en colère que vous.
Est-ce que ce forfait qui vous indigne, empêche
Le soleil de mûrir le raisin et la pêche
Et de verser la vie et la lumière àux bois
Pleins d’éblouissements, de parfums et de voix?
Est-ce que, renonçant à .la molle verdure,
Depuis vingt ans bientôt que cet empire dure,
Les arbres ont cessé de croître un seul instant?
Est-ce qu’en son labeur le chêne haletant,
Las d’ajouter sans fin des branches à des branches,
S’est arrêté, disant: Ramiers, colombes blanches,
Bouvreuils, allez-vous-en, je ne veux plus de vous,
J’ai fini! Quel est donc, sous le ciel calme et doux,
Le lilas qui s’abstient, le hêtre qui retire
Son murmure à Virgile et son ombre à Tityre?
Quel frêne a pris parti pour vous? quel peuplier
S’est dispensé de vivre et de multiplier?
Contre Aman.Bonaparte et pour vous Mardochée,
Quelle branche de saule ou d’ormeau s’est fâchée?
Quel marronnier, sachant que l’on ne doit pas voir
Les nids tremblants, renonce à faire son devoir,
Et refuse aux oiseaux d’épaissir son feuillage?
Tous les ans, aussi beau qu’Achille et que Pélage,
Une flamme à la main, Mai, ce libérateur,
Apparaît, cuirassé d’azur, sur la hauteur,
Rit, chasse ce tyran, l’hiver aux yeux moroses,
Redore l’aube, et met hors de prison les roses,
Et tire le verrou glacé qui retenait
Captifs l’acacia, la ronce et le genêt,
Et le fourmillement des feuilles recommence.
Qu’est-ce que Morny fait à la Dryade immense?

Est-ce qu’un seul .bouton d’églantier s’est flétri
Parce que Rouher passe appuyé sur Piétri?
L’épanouissement universel prospère;
Le tilleul qui n’est pas troublé d’une vipère,
Ignore Mérimée, et couvre les sentiers
D’un mystère où l’amour s’ajoute volontiers;
Depuis vingt ans, toujours de plus en plus charmante,
La forêt pousse, et verte, et vieille, et jeune, augmente
Son frais tumulte, au bruit d’une cité pareil. -

Je suis juste, et c’est vrai; je constate, ô soleil,
Sous ce ciel où, superbe et tranquille, tu montes,
Le lent grandissement des arbres, et des hontes.

8 août.

XLVIII ON EST CE PERSONNAGE...

On est ce personnage étrange, fait d’acier,
D’azur et d’idéal, le rêveur justicier,
Le poëte chargé de foudres, le nuage
Poussé dans la lumière et l’ombre par ce sage
Qui semble fou, le vent, assainisseur du ciel;
On a l’empire infame et pestilentiel .
Sous soi, très bas, très loin, dans une brume impure;
On voit la conscience humaine qni suppure;
Des Te Deum rampant à tâtons dans l’enfer,
Et sous ce poids; sénats de fange, lois de fer,
L’honneur las qui frémit, morne cariatide;
Mais Avril, qui refait tous les ans l’Atlantide,
Prend peu souci de l’homme; et pendant que descend
Toute l’âme d’un peuple, il monte éblouissant,
Il emplit l’horizon d’églogues et de fêtes;
On contemple, on oublie, et comme les prophètes,
Comme les mages, pleins d’orage et de douleurs,
Sombre, on se laisse aller à regarder les fleurs;
On a des yeux, on a malgré César, une âme;
On se laisse dorer par cette immense flamme,
La vie; et le printemps vous entre malgré vous
Dans le coeur, et vous fait presque paisible et doux,
Avec des grondements pourtant par intervalles;
On écoute chanter des fauvettes, rivales
Du divin rossignol, qui, lorsque l’aube luit,
Prolongent dans le jour sa chanson de la nuit;
Juvénal transparent laisse entrevoir Virgile;
Devant la Némésis la Galatée agile
Surgit, folle, et d’un geste’ aimable et souverain,
Jette en riant sa pomme au noir. masque d’airain;
Et le masque effrayant sourit. Que faire, ô lyre?
Tout est parfum, tout est rayon, tout est délire;
L’abîme est nuptial et les flots sont lascifs;
L’écume est de l’amour qui baise les récifs;

Paissez, moutons; laissez aux buissons de la laine
Pour que l’oiseau l’emploie à son nid! vaste haleine,
Souffle! Boeufs qui songez, tirez le soc fécond!
Le premier dieu, c’est Dieu, mais l’homme est le second.
Il crée après le Père, il règne après le Maître;
Faire mourir n’est pas son droit, mais faire naître
Est son devoir; la vie est à lui, non la mort.
L’arbuste tend sa feuille au chevreau qui la mord,
La rose au papillon se livre toute nue,
La violette, aussi rêve, et cette ingénue
S’offre, et partout l’idylle ouvre de vagues yeux;
O femmes, baignez-vous dans l’océan joyeux
Qui rit de ce grand rire où se mêlent des larmes;
Faites comme les fleurs, belles, mettez vos charmes
Un peu dehors; amant externa camenae
O rapide Atalante, ô fuyante Daphné,
Arrêtez-vous à temps, ne courez pas si vite;
Vous savez bien qu’on cherche un peu ce qu’on évite;
L’enfant que, vierge, on craint, mère, on l’adorera;
Ô Glycère, Aglaè, Lalagé, Nééra,.
Soyez les nudités adorables du rêve;
Homère veut Vénus et Moïse veut Eve;
Le reflet de la femme est sur tous les grands fronts;
O vivants, nous aimons parce que nous souffrons;
Donc l’amour est sacré. Sans peur, sans fin, sans nombre,
Aimez! vous tous, là-bas, tout le ciel, toute l’ombre,
Aimez; vivez, créez! Mondes, atomes, nids,
Oiseaux, soleils, soyez les amants infinis,
Car l’immensité veut être continuée!
Et voilà comme on flotte, esprit, barde, nuée.
Et voilà comme on va, tout furieux qu’on- est,
Dans l’azur, dans ce beau floréal qui renaît,
Dans l’hymen, dans l’amour, mais sans que Dante abdique,
Sans que la grande haine indignée et pudique
Cesse d’être au plus noir de. votre âme debout;
Car sans cesse à travers tout ce printemps, partout,
Toujours l’âpre devoir reparaît; et on erre

Semant sur son chemin des chutes de tonnerre.

27 juin 1875.

</pre<
== XLIX AU DESSERT==
<pre>

— Mon frère, vous avez sauvé l’ordre. - Mon frère,
Vous avez eu raison d’un peuple téméraire.
Cette Pologne était pour l’Europe un ennui.
— Mon frère, grâce à vous, tout prospère aujourd’hui.
— Vous dominez Paris et vous protégez Rome.
— J’estime Jellachich. - Mouravief est un homme.
— Vous avez Canrobèrt qui vaut mieux que Bugeaud.
— Je bois votre Tokay. - Moi votre Clos-Vougeot.
— Mon frère, nous étions en querelle naguère,
Mais je vous aime. Et moi, je’ vous ai fait la guerre
Malgré moi. - Vous ‘avez battu mes généraux.
Vous, fûtes le vainqueur, sire. - Et vous le héros.
— Votre génie est- grand. - Moins que votre bravoure.
— Mon frère, entendez-vous ces vivats? Je savoure
Ces acclamations qui s’adressent à vous.
Le peuple est sous vos. pieds. - Il est à vos genoux.
C’est mieux. - Il me respecte, oui, mais il vous adore.
— Vous avez voulu, sire, et tout à coup l’aurore
A reparu; les lois et la société
Revivent; et cela, sire, n’a rien coûté. -

L AUBIN

Causerie entre czars et rois, propos de table
Qui font rire les morts d’un rire épouvantable. .
H. H. décembre.
LE PASSANT , LA PASSANTE

— Quel âge as-tu? - Seize ans. - De quel pays es-tu?
— D’Aubin. - N’est-ce pas là, dis-moi, qu’on s’est battu?
— On ne s’est pas battu, l’on a tué. - La mine .-
Prospérait. Quel était son produit? - La famine.
— Oui, je sais, le mineur vit sous terre, et n’a rien.
Avec la nuit de plus, il est galérien.
Mais toi, faisais-tu donc ce travail, jeune fille? -
— Avec tout mon village ét toute ma famille,
Oui. Pour chaque hottée on me donnait un sou.
Mon grand-père était mort, tué du feu grisou.
Mon petit frère était boiteux d’un coup de pierre.
Nous étions tous mineurs, -lui, mon père, ma mère,
Moi. L’ouvrage était dur, le chef n’était pas bon.
Comme on, de pain, on mâchait du charbon.
Aussi, vous le voyez, monsieur, je suis très maigre;
Ce qui me fait du tort - Le mineur, c’est le nègre.
Hélas, oui! - Dans la mine on descend, on descend.
On travaille à genoux dans le puits. C’est glissant.
Il pleut, quoiqu’on n’ait pas de ciel. On est sous l’arche
D’un caveau bas, et tant qu’on peut marcher, on marche;
Après on rampe; on est dans une eau noire; il faut
Étayer le plafond, s’il a quelque défaut;
La mort, fait un grand bruit quand tout à coup elle entre;
C’est comme le tonnerre. On se couche à plat ventre.
Ceux qui ne sont pas morts se relèvent. Pas d’air.
Chaque sape est un trou dont un homme est le ver.
Quand la veine’ est en long, c’est bien; quand elle est droite,
Alors la tâche est rude et la sape est étroite:
On sue, on gèle, on tousse; on a chaud, on a froid.

On n’est pas sûr si c’est vivant. tout ce qu’on voit.
Sitôt qu’on est sous terre on devient des fantômes.
— Les pauvres paysans qui vivent sous les ‘chaumes
Respirent du moins l’air des cieux. - On étouffait.
— . Pourquoi ne pas vous plaindre aussi? - Nous l’avons fait.
Nous avons demandé, ne croyant pas déplaire,
Un peu moins de travail, un peu plus de salaire.
— Et l’on vous a donné, quoi? - Des coups de fusil.
— Je m’en souviens, le maître a froncé le sourcil.
— Mon père est mort frappé d’une balle. - Et ta mère?
— Folle. - Et tu n’as plus rien? - Si. J’ai mon petit frère.
Il est infirme, il faut qu’il vive de façon
Que j’ai mendié, mais on m’a mise en prison.
Je ne sais pas lès lois, mais on me les applique.
— Que fais-tu donc alors? - Je suis fille publique.
Reposons nos regards sur d’autres femmes.

Dieu

A mis toute la paix d’en-haut dans ce beau lieu;
C’est un palais et c’est un éden. Faste et joie.
Le rubis sur les seins, l’aube au ciel, tout rougeoie,
Tout est pourpre et splendeur, lumière et volupté.
Roses et femmes sont ouvertes, c’est l’été;
Et l’on voit dans les fleurs et l’on voit dans les âmes.
César rêve, entouré de parfums et de flammes.
Le soir, on fait errer des orchestres sûr l’eau;
Diane en marbré avec la lune en son halo
Mêlent leur regard chaste à la tiède soirée;
L-’eau par les coups de rame est ‘mollement moirée;
La voix du rossignol, la flûte dé Ttilou “,
Alternent, et l’on chante un refrain’ andalou,
L’air se tait, toute l’ombre écoute la. fanfare,
Et le daim qui buvait au lac sombre, s’effare.

H. H.

II

Soit. Entre ce deuil morne et ce joyeux azur,
La différence est grande. Oui. Mais es-tu bien sûr,
Dis, que ce ne soit pas au fond le même abîme?
Et que, dans cette cour qui croit être une cime,
Parmi ces femmes, choeur de déesses, beautés
Qui, mêlant aux rayons de César leurs clartés,
Visibles à travers de majestueux voiles,
Enferment ce soleil dans leur cercle d'étoiles,
Parmi ces déités, reines au front charmant,
Qui semblent faites d'aube et d'éblouissement,
Puisant à pleines mains dans l'or, dans la fortune,
Dans la toute-puissance, il n'en est pas plus d'une
Qui, toute rayonnante en ce royal palais,
Si tu l'interrogeais et si tu lui parlais,
Sous ton oeil froid chassant toute pensée oblique,
Répondrait, elle aussi: Je suis fille publique.

H. H. 10 décembre.

LI QUANT A PARIS, TON POING...

Quant à Paris, ton poing l’étreint. Grâce aux bâtisses,
Paris, le grand Paris des superbes justices
Qui dressait en août, en septéinbre, en juillet,
Son front où tout à coup une étoile brillait;
Ce Paris. qui, semblable au fauve dans les jungles,
Allongeait ses faubourgs comme tin lion ses ongles,
Ce Paris où Danton poussant dans le ciel noir
Ces grands chevaux ailés, Droit, Gloire, Honneur, Devoir,
A travers la tempête, à travers le prodige,
Passa comme un géant debout sur un quadrige,
Aujourd’hui ce Paris énorme est un éden
Charmant, plein de gourdins et tout constellé d’N;
La vieille hydre Lutèce est morte; plus de rues
Anarchiques, courant en liberté, bourrues,
Où la façade au choc du pignon se cabrant;
Le soir, dans un coin noir faisait rêver Rembrandt;
Plus de caprice; plus de carrefour méandre
Où Molière mêlait Géronte avec Léandre;
Alignement! tel est le mot d’ordre actuel.
Paris, percé par toi de part en part en duel,
Reçoit tout au travers du corps quinze. ou vingt rues
Neuves, d’une caserne utilement accrues;
Boulevard, place, ayant pour cocarde ton nom,
Tout ce qu’on fait prévoit le boulet de canon;
Socrate moustachu, tu fais marcher Xantippe
Ferme et droit; l’idéal a maintenant pour type
Un beau sergent de ville étendu de son long.
Phidias n’est qu’un sot auprès’ du fil à plomb.
Que c’est beau! de Pantin on voit jusqu’à Grenelle!
Ce vieux Paris n’est plus qu’une rue éternelle
Qui s’étire, élégante et belle comme l’I,
En disant: Rivoli! Rivoli! Rivoli!

L’empire est un damier enfermé dans sa boîte.

Tout, hors la conscience, y suit la ligne droite.

LII . . MISÈRE

<pre<
Partout la force au lieu du droit. L’écrasement Du problème, c’est là l’unique dénoûment. Partout la faim. Roubaix, Aubin, Ricamarie. La France est d’indigence et de honte maigrie. Si quelque humble ouvrier réclame un sort meilleur, Le canon sort de l’ombre et parle au travailleur. On met sous son talon l’émeute des misères. L’Afrique agonisante expire dans nos serres. Là tout un peuple râle et demande à manger. Famine dans Oran, famine dans Alger., - Voilà ce que nous fait cette France superbe .! Disent-ils. - Ni maïs, ni pain. Ils broutent l’herbe. Et l’arabe devient épouvantable et fou. On rencontre, une femme au fond de quelque trou, Accroupie, et mangeant avec un air étrange. . - Qu’est-ce que tu, fais là? . Hé bien, j’ai faim, je mange. - Ton chaudron sur le feu fume, qu’as-tu dedans? Ces os, que l’on entend crier entre tes dents,. Cette chair qu’en grondant ronge ta bouche amère, Qu’est-ce? C’est un enfant que j’avais, dit la mère. Les déclamations ne prouvent rien; soyons Impartiaux; cette ombre est-elle sans rayons? Vous passez votre à dire que l’on souffre Partout, et que partout on pleure, et qu’en un gouffre On gémit, comme un tas d’affamés sur l’écueil, Et vous criez: Tout est misère et tout est deuil Tout est misère et deuil? Quelle erreur- est la vôtre! Ah çà, vous ne voyez qu’un côté! Voyez l’autre.

Jouissance et splendeur. Doit-on, en vérité, Montrer l’adversité sans’ la prospérité? Ce contrepoids ôté fausse votre balance. Oui la détresse là, mais ici l’opulencé. Soyons justes. Voyez. Plaisirs, bals, volupté, Luxe, et l’hiver le Louvre, et Compiègne l’été: Oui, faites approcher vos vers les plus féroces: Oseront-ils nier ces palais, ces carrosses, Ces festins? Est-ce là de la misère enfin? Est-ce qu’en cette fête éternelle on a faim? En ‘ne montrant jamais que l’indigence, on triche. Vous étalez le pauvre, eh ‘bien, voyons ce riche. Qu’en dites-vous? Parlez. Est-il assez complet? Il a ce qu’il convoite, il fait ce qui lui plaît. Ses désirs sont noyés dans le faste lyrique. Ah! je voudrais bien voir que- votre rhétorique Contestât cette aisance auguste, et s’escrimât A prouver que ce luxe est d’un mince format, Que cette argenterie est reprochable, et manque Du poids qui la ferait recevoir à la banque, Que ces, cochers ne sont point gras, que ces jockeys Montent, mal galonnés, des chevaux peu coquets, Et que ces millions, ruisselant sur ces tables En ivresses sans fin, ne sont pas véritables? Reconnaissez qu’ici l’on ne manque de rien. On s’est fait tout-puissant pour être épicurien. On est un homme heureux. C’est doux. Pas de rebelles. On est le Jupiter d’un Olympe de belles. On a Biarritz; veut-on varier le tableau? Après la mer, les bois; on a Fontainebleau. Chasses, danses, galas, petits jeux sous les.treilles, Rougissantes beautés sous les grappes vermeilles; Puis course au bois; on fut en décembre vainqueur, Et l’on rêve, et l’on sent pénétrer dans son cœur Le pur soleil des champs, des fleurs, des prés, des vignes, L’azur des clairs étangs et la blancheur des cygnes.

H. H. Décembre.
LIII C’EST BIEN, BUVEZ, MANGEZ...==

C’est bien, buvez, mangez, rampez, courbez la tête.
Nos aïeux
Étaient les habitants hagards de la tempête
Dans les cieux.

Ils dispersaient les vents sous leurs vastes coups d’ailes,
Rayonnaient,
Donnaient des rendez-vous à la mort, et, fidèles,
Y venaient.

Ils suivaient, dans l’espace aujourd’hui sombre et vide
Qui se tait,
La Marseillaise, un ange au regard d’Euménide,
Qui chantait.

Ils faisaient alterner l’ombre et le météore; -
Hosanna!
Revanche! Et de Rosbach ces preux faisaient éclore Iéna.

L’Europe les voyait crier: Luttons encore!
Noüs vaincrons!
Et regardàit sortir on ne-sait quelle aurore
De leurs fronts.

Quand ils proclamaient Dieu seul Dieu, sans évangile

Ni Koran,
Et quand ils maniaient cette chose fragile,
Un tyran.
Leurs sabres ont chassé, secouant leur dragonne,
De Valmy,
De Fleurus, et des bois sinistres de l’Argonne,
L’ennemi!:
Devant cès preux, semant les progrès, les désastres,
Et le bruit,
Les rois disparaissaient comme des fuites d’astres
Dans la nuit.

Moi; je suis un prôscrit.. J’assiste aux mers farouches,
Aux combats
De l’ombre et de l’écume, où d’invisibles bouches
Parlent bas,

Et, tout en écoutant passer ce cri: Justice!
Dans les vents,
Je songe à la grandeur des morts qui rapetisse
Les vivants.
Il mai.

LIV DÉPART ET RETOUR DES RÉGIMENTS

— Aigles, où courez-vous?
Que c’est beau la lumière!
Que c’est beau le soleil! Dans ‘sa splendeur première,
Quand l’aurore apparut, l’aigle la contempla,
Et, s’envolant, il dit à l’astre me voilà!
Car vous avez, oiseaux que hait l’ombre éternelle,
Pour le soleil les yeux, pour la liberté l’aile.
L’aigle chasse la brume affreuse du vallon;
Il n’est qu’un souffle alors, mais s’appelle aquilon.
Les peuples ont besoin, Dieu seul étant leur règle,
D’avoir au-dessus d’eux l’immense vol de l’aigle;
Car il tombe de l’aigle un éblouissement.
L’aigle va chercher l’aube au fond du firmament,
Vole, et crie en planant dans son vaste équilibre:
Hommes, voilà comment on est quand on est, libre!
Le groupe obscur des Nuits craint cet,audacieux.
Aigles, votre coup d’aile est nécessaire aux cieux.
Tout ce qui n’est pas vie, amour, clarté, principe,
Devant votre passage. effrayant, se dissipe
Votre fier bruit d’orage épouvante le mal;
Le monde esprit succède au vil monde animal;
Partout où vous planez surgit la délivrancé,
Vous n’êtes plus la Guerre et vous vous nommez France.
Le bruit d’ailes s’éloigne. Ils s’en vont.

On dirait
Que le ciel tout à coup devient une forêt.
Dieu! quelle chute brusque et sombre de ténèbres!
Sous l’épaississement des silences funèbres,
Tout s’efface, et l’espace obscur se refroidit;
L’horizon misérable et morne a l’air maudit;
Des lueurs qui brillaient meurent l’une après l’autre;
De ces langues de feu qui tombaient sur l’apôtre,
A peine’en flotte-t-il quelques-unes, au fond

D’une-ombre où nul ne voit ce que les peuples font;
Toute la terré a pris l’aspect visionnaire;
Et dans cette noirceur roule un vague tonnerre.
Le paysage horrible est pestilentiel;
Chacun des quatré vents; aux quatre coins du ciel,
Prononce un mot sinistre, et, comme dans un rêve,
On entend sur les monts, sur la mer, sur la ‘grève,
Cette clameur: Hélas! Puebla! puis ce glas:
Hélas! Mentana! puis ces cris: Aubin! Hélas!
Hélas! Ricarnarie! Hélas! Un sombre dôme
Reluit; c’est Rome, à moins que ce ne soit Sodome.
Des silhouettes sont à terre, et c’est épars,
Nu, terrible, et le sang fume de toutes parts;
On’ entend un tumulte ailé qui se rapproche;
Et dans l’ombre, ici, là, sous l’arbre, sous la roche,
Dans les villes, au fond des bois, au pied des tours,
Partout, on voit des morts...

D’où venez-vous, vautours?

H. H., décembre.

LV Et voilà dix-sept ans

Et voilà dix-sept ans bientôt qu’ils sont à table!
Le Vol est chancelier, le Meurtre est connétable;
Ici le Bienheureux, et là le Tout-puissant;
Le prêtre et le soldat. Paie, ô France. Or et sang.
Le budget se débraille et danse une pyrrhique.
L’obéissance atteint la bassesse lyrique.
Le front haut, vers l’opprobre on marche avec élan;
C’est à qui tâchera d’être un peu chambellan,
Et d’avoir sur son dos de la honte brodée;
La France, qui jadis, fier peuple de l’Idée,
Faucha les rois ainsi qu’un moissonneur les blés,
Aboutit à des tas de valets-étoilés.
Quel festin! Tous y font liesse. Rien n’y manque.
On a l’église, on a l’armée, on a la banque.
Auguste fait asseoir Davus à son côté.
Mangeons! L’empire est pris d’un accès de gaîté.
Buvons! L’homme rayonne et la femme étincelle.
Chacun s’essaie au genre où son voisin excelle;
Dupin est scélérat. César a de l’esprit.
Dix-huit-Brumaire est mort, mais Deux-Décembre rit.
Piétri raille Maupas, Scapin berne Jocrisse,
Tout est gloire; et s’il faut parer l’impératrice
Pour les bals où bondit l’empereur encor vert,
L’écrin de la couronne est là tout grand ouvert,
On y puise; et parmi le saphir, l’émeraude,
Le rubis, la, topaze et la perle, on maraude.
L’ivresse-émeut les vieux et reflue aux enfants;
Tous les. Napoléons petits sont triomphants;
Louis traite Conneau, Nisus fête Euryale.
La cour est au balcon; la garde impériale
Défile altière, et fait, devant ces frais minois,
Sonner la grosse caisse et le chapeau chinois.
Ces belles! allez donc leur parler des famines!
Ah! comme elles riraient, ces augustes gamines!

On est le joyeux crime et le joyeux péché;
On a des aumôniers par-dessus le marché,
Payés pour ajuster à cela l’évangile.
Le soir, au fond du parc, ces dames, ô Virgile,
Sous les buissons, où glisse un bruit de taffetas,
Dans l’ombre, avec César qui devient Amyntas,
Font des églogues, presque aussi décolletées
Que tes Amaryllis et que tes Galatées.

H. H., 9 décembre.

LVI ÉPIZOOTIE DANS LES HOMMES DE DÉCEMBRE

Cela n’empêche pas le maître ,
De continuer le festin.
On a vu Mocquart, disparaître;
Espinasse est mort ce matin;
Bineau suit Fortoul qui. l’appelle;
Le fossoyeur a pris sa pelle;
Apportez les bières de plomb;
Fossoyeur, aide à les descendre,
Jette sur Morny de la cendre
Et de la fange sur Troplong.

Chacun son tour: Partez, complices.
Noir Saint-Arnaud au coeur d’acier,
Tu trébuches; Magnan, tu glisses;
Tu t’en vas, sanglant Pélissier.
Fould, la corruption est vraie,
Meurs. La mort fauche cette ivraie,
Comme les moissonneurs le blé;
Billault tombe; Delangle tombe;
Dupin vient d’entrer dans la tombe,
Les vers de terre ont reculé.

Oh! de Strasbourg jusqu’à Bayonne’
Quelle fête, et comme on est gai!
Compiègne rit, Biarritz rayonne;
Saint-Cloud de joie est fatigué.
Basile raille don Quichotte.
Un doux bruit de baisers chuchote -
Dans la molle fraîcheur des bois.
On trinque; effusion touchante!
Et le guet-apens dit: Je chante!
Et le massacre-dit: Je bois!

La table est une grandè lyre;
Tous mangent gloire aux dieux régnants!
Le vin d'où sort l'éclat de rire'
Luit dans les verres frissonnants;
Les femmes ont la gorge nue;

La fanfare dans l'avenue
Saute et bondit comme un esprit
Le bal tourbillonne en cadence;
Et maintenant, tandis qu'on danse,
Et maintenant, pendant qu'on rit,
Morts, faites vos festins funèbres,
Dressez-vous sur votre séant,
Et d'abord, mangez des ténèbres,
Ensuite mangez du néant;
Sous les ifs que le vent balance,
Mangez de l'oubli, du silence,
De l'horreur, de la surdité;
Mangez, spectres et pourritures!
Emplissez vos bouches obscures
De l'ombre dè l'éternité.

H. H., 15 juin 1870.

LVII Le sénateur peut être un valet

Le sénateur peut être un valet; le flamine
Peut être un doux bandit priant qu’on extermine;
Le juge peut avoir des faux poids plein les mains;
Tel prince fait l’effet d’un gueux de grands chemins;
On peut se demander s’il est digne, en ce rôle,
D’avoir les fleurs de lys au front, ou sur l’épaule;
La parole peut être, en flattant d’affreux rois,
Pire qu’un hurlement de bête au fond des bois;
La religion peut faire la mijaurée,
Puis se vendre, et l’honneur peut être une denrée;
Verrès peut bafouer Caton; la trahison,
Comme un pêcheur qui dit: j’ai pris bien du poisson!
Peut rentrer et le soir passer devant nos portes,
Traînant dans ses filets des consciences mortes;
La femme peut tourner ses yeux doux vers celui
Sur qui le crime, étoile épouvantable, a lui;
Tout le tas des vertus peut être une fumée;
Les docteurs, les consuls, les généraux d’armée,
Peuvent être du bois dont on fait les gibets;
Vesta lascive peut rêver: Si je tombais?
Le progrès peut marcher comme les écrevisses;
Devant le vil succès des forfaits et des vices
L’honnête homme peut être un lâche et rester coi;
La foudre peut dormir dans le ciel; c’est pourquoi
Juvénal indigné démuselle les haines
Dans ce style d’airain qui fait un bruit de chaînes.

12 avril 1870.

LVIII 2 JANVIER 1870

Nous devenons bon prince et nous changeons de sphère.
L’empire est libéral. Diable! qu’allons-nous faire
De tous les vieux grédins du coup d’état? Jésus!
Les vendre? quel rabais! comme on perdrait dessus!
Le Deux-Décembre est mort. Le Deux-Janvier l’enterre.
Ils sont tous là, Piétri, -Fleury; bon militaire,
Quentin-Bauchart, Haussmann, en pleurs, les goussets pleins.
Hélas! irons-nous perdre aux bois ces orphelins?
La forêt dé Bondy pourrait les reconnaître.
Mais eux, quel abandon! Pourquoi Dieu fit-il naître
Tous ces pauvres coquins dont pas un n’est répu,
Puisqù’il voulait jouer au crime interrompu!
L’esclave usé n’est point d’une bonne défaite:
Un vieux préfet orné de sa vieille préfète
Fait aux passants l’effet d’un ancien falbala.
On ne vend point Rouland comme on vendrait Lola.
Ferez-vous acheter bien cher par le Khédive
Suin mirant aux lacs bleus sa beauté ‘maladive?
Rouher en femme, certe, aurait beaucôup d’appas,
Mais faites-moi sultan; et je n’en voudrai pas.
Faut-il mettre au sérail ou bien mettre à la broche
Cette grasse blancheur qui s’appelle Baroche?
Pour l’oreille aussi bien que pour le traquenard,
Un reste d’Espinasse est visible en Pinard,
Le négocierez-vous? Ce sont vos odalisques;
Mais au marché d’Alep, la ville aux ‘obélisques,
Le turc obscène exige un plus joli bétail.
Quand même il cacherait derrière l’éventail
Son ceil noir enflammé d’une fureur jalouse,
Grandperret n’aura pas le flou d’une andalouse.
A vos soudards fanés, à vos vétérans saurs.
Croit-on qu’Abdul-Azis offre des huit ressorts?
Rigolboche et Toinon feraient mieux son affaire.
Où caser un héros fourbu qui se déferre?

Personne n’en voudra. Pas même un maquignon.
Ce qui fut hier chance est ‘aujourd’hui guignon.
Tel est le sort. Maupas a perdù tous’ ses charmes.
Nul ne jette un regard d’amour aux vieux gendarmes.
Alignez d’un côté du bazar un troupeau
D’anciens sabreurs sans dents en culotte de peau,
Un tas d’hommes d’état, fêlés, hors de service,
Faisant une grimace affreuse et tendre au vice,
Foreys, Palikaos, Chaix-d’Est-Anges, Marnas,
Que les bagnes un jour reprendront aux sénats,

Bavards brodés, tueurs dorés, gueux et ganaches,
Portant tous les mépris avec tous les panaches;
Puis de l’autre côté mettez un fol essaim
De jeunes belles point avares de leur sein,
Montrant leur torse ainsi qu’Astarté dans la Bible,
Et dépensant le plus de nudité possible
A l’éblouissement des passants enivrés,
Et maintenant prenez. l’homme que vous voudrez,
Je gage Persigny contre Fialin que l’homme
Offrira, quel qu’il soit, une plus forte somme
Pour les nez retroussés que pour les crânes nus,
Et, lascif, à Parieu préférera Vénus.
Aphrodite voguant blonde et rose en sa conque
Éclipsera toujours un Mimerel quelconque;
Tout le conseil d’état qu’on paie un million
Serait coté deux sous à l’hôtel Bullion,
L’empereur aurait beau leur dire à tous ma chère!
Ils réussiraient moins que Trinette à l’enchère,
Quoique le coup d’état leur ait pris le menton;
Et Zangiacomi ne vaut pas Margoton.
Habillez Gilardin en jeune mariée,
Puis essayez d’aller le vendre à la criée!
Je doute que Barnum offre un prix insensé.
Brocantez Canrobert. Quot libras in duce? 82
Nubar -l’égyptien est un mortel lubrique,.
J’y consens, mais j’ai beau tâcher d’être lyrique,

je ne vois pas d’ici Nubar faire joujou
Avec Bonjean voulant un meuble en acajou.
J’ouvre un concours, j’y mets mademoiselle Fiocre,
Boudet en maillot rose y sera médiocre,
Et Larabit fort laid, quand même Larabit
Ôterait sa culotte en gardant son habit.
Je craindrai pour l’Huys beaucoup de coeurs de roche
Et fort peu d’acheteurs, hélas, si l’on rapproche
Du frais museau d’Anna le grouin de l’Huys.
Pensez-vous qu’une foule aux regards éblouis
Ira darder sa flamme et braquer ses lorgnettes
Sur Delesvaux cambré cognant des castagnettes?
Jeanne avec son cancan fera sur un pacha
Plus d’effet que Piétri dansant la cachucha.
Entre Ida fraîche éclose et Nisard qui se gâte,
Qui donc hésiterait? Et moi qui parle, en hâte,
Certes, je donnerais, malgré leur teint bruni,
Goyon, Korte et Leboeuf pour Blanche d’Antigny.

H. H. 2 janvier 1870.

LIX À ***

Ou vous êtes naïf ou vous êtes subtil.
Une réforme! où donc? Un progrès! quel est-il?
Vous dites qu'un grand pas est fait. Quel pas? Je cherche.
A Mandrin pataugeant Jocrisse tend la perche.
Le coup d'état devient ondoyant et divers.
Nous en vîmes l'endroit, nous en voyons ,l'envers.
Je ris sans admirer. Quel spectacle! Sodome,
Brusquement transformée en Paraclet; Prudhomme
Trouvant trop rouge encor le bonnet de coton
D'Arlequin qui jadis se grimait en Caton.;.
Tom Pouce dans uh coin qui sé croit ceçôudées;
La trahison criant: Messieurs, j'ai des idées!
L'ogre au bon peuple enfant disant: Baisez papa!
Tous les sous-entendus d'un faux mea culpa;
L'empire devenu, sorte d'oison sans ailes,
Presque un pensionnat de jeunes demoiselles;
Tibère concourant pour le prix Monthyon;
Goton rose devant la moindre question;
Rouher baissant les yeux, Maupas mettant un voile;
Et toujours l'araignée au centre de sa toile!
Toujours le piège! Une ombre où grondent les fléaux!
Aujourd'hui, le néant et demain le chaos!
Un nain creusant un gouffre!

Ô Dieu. partout visible,
Sauve-moi du petit, fût-ce dans le terrible!
Jette-moi, Dieu puissant, chez quelque nation
Entrant, superbe et sombre; en révolution,
Ou sur quelque océan que la tempête éclaire!
Que j'entende, épelant ce que dit ta colère
Dans un langage obscur, mystérieux et beau,
Ou la foudre parler, ou tonner Mirabeau!

Mars 1870.

LX On me dit: Courez donc

On me dit: Courez donc sur Pierre Bonaparte.
Non. J’ai ma piste; et c’est l’Autre et je ne m’écarte
Jamais du but que rien ne me fait oublier.
Forêts! je chasse au tigre et non au sanglier.

2 avril 1870.

LXI Honnête homme,

Honnête homme, c’est bien, tu souffres, sois content.
Montre, en te tenant droit, le but auquel on tend.
Sers de cible aux méchants et sers aux bons d’exemple.
Quand César est fait dieu par le prêtre en plein temple,
Quand les Trimalcions se mettent à genoux,
Prouver sa force est grand, montrer son coeur est doux.
Le malheur, tu le veux; l’exil, tu le réclames.
La conscience est l’astre intérieur des âmes
Dont le juste en son coeur contemple le lever.
Tout est le bien venu qui vient nous éprouver.
Ce que vous appelez,, vous autres, chose triste,
Sort fatal, deuil, douleur; n’est rien, quand on persiste.
Qu’importe l’ouragan, l’éclair, la foudre, tout?
Le chêne est satisfait quand il reste debout.

20 avril 1870.

LXII L’empire atroce avorte en empire plaintif.

L’empire atroce avorte en empire plaintif.
Sénat, conseil d’état, et corps législatif,
Va, Babel! continue. Emplis-toi de harangues!
Parle neuf cents patois avec tes neuf. cents langues!
Entasse lois, projets, rêves, décrets perdus!
Bâtis avec le bien et le mal confondus,
Avec le plomb et l’or, le granit et l’argile,
Avec Dupin, Franklin, Voltaire et l’Evangile,
Ton monument que Dieu jamais ne protégea,
Pas encore édifice et ruine déjà!
Sois au maître quelconque! aboie aux hommes libres!
Du peuple douloureux froisse toutes les fibres!
Va! Dieu tient seul le peuple et seul dicte la loi.
Le soir mystérieux se fait autour de toi.
L’ombre qui vient du fond des mornes solitudes,
Et qui mêle l’espace avec les multitudes,
T’enveloppe, ô Babel, et baigne tes degrés!
Devant tes bras tendus et tes cris effarés
L’auguste conscience éternelle recule.
Tu trembles comme un arbre au vent du crépuscule,
Tandis que l’avenir approche avec le bruit
D’un déluge, ô terreur! qui monte dans la nuit.

Mars 1870.

LXIII COUPS DE CLAIRON

Soufflez-moi vos rages,
Soufflez-moi vos cris,
Justices, outrages,
Tragiques mépris,

Soufflez la huée!
Penchez-vous sur moi,
Venez, ô nuée.
Des faces d’effroi;

Raison qui M’éclaires,
Gloire au rude accent,
O dents populaires
Dans l’ombre grinçant,

Droit, force imperdable,
Sarcasme qui mords,
Rire formidable,
Plaie au flanc-des morts,

Logique implacable,
Honneur déserté,
Loi qu’un crime accable,
Et toi, Liberté,

Pâle, en proie aux fièvres
Du vil Lambessa,
Essuyant tes lèvres
Que Judas baisa;

Grands devoirs sévères
Fiers de rester seuls,
Douleurs des Calvaires,
Trous noirs des linceuls,

Haine incorruptible.
Du mal châtié,
Et toi si terrible,
O sainte pitié,

Vérités farouches
Dont tremble Néron!
Vous êtes les bouches,
Je suis le clairon.
I

Quelle est cette ville
Haute sous les cieux
Et qui semble vile,
Bien qu'énorme aux yeux?

Cette ville est celle
Qui commande ici;
Le vin y ruisselle,
Et le sang aussi.

Cette citadelle
Sur cet- horizon
Règne, et n'est fidèle
Qu'à la trahison.

Ce burg où l'on monte
Luit dans la vapeur.
Le mont en a honte,
Et l'arbre en a peur;

Car ces tours damnées,
Hostiles aux cieux,
Sont les cheminées
D'un feu monstrueux.

Vois sur la colline,
Sous les lourds barreaux,
La lueur féline
De leurs soupiraux.

Une flamme noire
Où l’honneur, les lois,
La vertu, la gloire,
Brûlent à la fois,

Dans cette bastille,
Peuple! aux yeux de tous,
Flamboie et pétille;
La cendre; c’est vous.

II

Cette cité veille
Du haut de ses forts,
Au dedans vermeille,
Sinistre au dehors.
Ses maîtres jouissent,
Brigands potentats:
Fiers, ils s’éblouissent
De leurs attentats.
Fêtes décevantes!
Heureux et hideux 1 .
Des lyres servantes
Rôdent autour d’eux.

Ces apothéoses.
Cachent des remords.
C’est un tas de roses
Sur un tas de morts.
Ils ont pour trophée.
Un glaive félon.
La tombe étouffée

Est sous leur talon.
Clameurs jusqu’aux nues,
Faux dieux évoqués;
Les femmes sont nues,
Les coeurs sont masqués.
L’affreuse prière
Du prêtre effronté
Chante et rit, dèrrière.
La horde sans culte,
Sans foi, sans laurier;
Emplit de tumulte.
L’antre meurtrier.
Il leur faut des belles,
Il leur faut des lys;
Ces tyrans rebelles,
D’un vin sombre emplis,
Font cette chimère
D’unir sous le ciel
La fleur éphémère
Au crime éternel.
Ils se prostituent;
La couronne au front,
Ils boivent, ils tuent,
Et, repus, ils ont

Dans leurs noirs refuges;
A leur vil foyer,
Leur iniquité.
La robe des juges
Pour tout essuyer.

L’homme est lâche et souple;
A leur déshonneur
Le destin s’accouple;
Et ce long bonheur

Que nul coup ne brise,

Que voit le ciel bleu,
Sera la surprise
Du réveil de Dieu.

III

Le choc de leurs verres
Sous les grands arceaux,
Fait sur les Calvaires
Remuer des os.

On voit des Électres
Dans l’obscurité.
L’oeil fixe des spectres
Est sur leur gaîté.

Dans l’ombre où leurs faces
Semblent des clartés,
On voit des audaces
Et des nudités.

On voit par la vitre
Ce flagrant délit,
Le casque et la mitre
Dans le même lit.

L’Église se livre,
Pâmée, au plus fort;
Le Sacerdoce ivre
Epouse la Mort.

Effroyables noces!
On dirait les voix
Des bêtes féroces
Chantant dans les bois.

IV

Ils vivent en hâte.
C’est l’éden enfer
Que la foudre tâte
Avec un éclair.
Le roi de Sodome
Est là, l’oeil en feu,
Et, crachant sur l’homme,
Ecume sur Dieu.

On a tant de fêtes
Sous cet empereur
Que les blancs prophètes
Frémissent d’horreur!

Dans ce crépuscule,
Brume où Dieu s’abstient,
Le lion recule
Et le serpent vient.

V

Ce tas de complices
Est en sûreté.
Hélas! dés supplices
Sort la lâchete.

Toujours fut muette:
La ville où tombait’
L’odeur du squelette,
L’ombre du gibet.

Eux, que leur importe
A ces impudents,
Puisqu’ils ont leur porte,
Barree en, dedans!,

Qu’est-ce donc - ô proie!
O fortune! ô sort -
Qui manqué à leur- joie?
Tout n’est-il pas mort?

Les créneaux sans nombre,
Le long mur dormant
Font un monceau d’ombre
Sur leur flamboiement.

Visible en ces brtimes,
L’aigle menaçant
Passe entre ses plumes
Son bec teint de sang.

Leur dédain féroce
Nargue l’ennemi.
Leur tour est colosse,
Le reste est fourmi.
Sous ce mur immense
Se mettre en arrêt!
Dieu même en démence
Y réfléchirait.

Jamais dans la Grèce,
Jamais dans Rama,
Ville ou forteresse
Si bien ne ferma.

L’écureuil qui saute
Tremblerait de voir
Une tour si haute,
Un fossé si noir.

L’entrée est oblique,
Le rempart est sûr,.
Et quiconque applique

Son oreille au mur

Jamais ne s’en vante,
Et, pâle, éperdu,
Garde l’épouvante
Du rire entendu.

J’ai la foi, la flamme,
La religion
Par laquelle une âme
Devient légion!

Qu’en mon coeur se forme
Et déborde à flot
La parole énorme
Qui semble un sanglot!

Que de mes entrailles
Sorte le grand mot
Qui court aux murailles
Et donne l’assaut!

Le mot que le bonze
Craint plus, mage impur,
Qu’un bélier de bronze
Au pied de son mur!

Le mot qu’à Florence.
Dit Dante irrité;
Le mot Espérance!
Le mot Liberté!

Que chaque vers chante
Et soit un guerrier!
Que la strophe ardente
Se mette à crier!

Que ce fier poème,
Apre, ouvrant son flanc,
Semant l’anathème,
Bondissant, mêlant

Au choc de l’épée
Le pas du lion,
Semble une épopée
En rébellion!

Que, hors de la tente,
Devant l’escadron,
L’Idée éclatante
S’allonge en clairon!

Que l’hymne s’élève,
Clair, rude, inclément,
Chanson qui s’achève
En rugissement!

Ah! la ville est forte,
Et ses lourds remparts
Pour chiens à leur porte
Ont des léopards;

La ville est fermée
Et le mur hautain
Abrite une armée
Et couvre un festin

Dans la forteresse
Rit le camp vermeil;
Ainsi la tigresse
Se lèche au soleil.

Mais les fêtes cessent
Si soudain le soir

Des clairons se dressent
Sur l’horizon noir.

Le vil prêtre avide
Jette son Koran;
Tout devient livide
Autour du tyran;

Et le maître même
Pâlit, bégayant,
Quand un cri sûprême,
Un chant effrayant

Éclôt, populaire,
Fauve et souverain,
Dans de la colère
Et dans de l’airain!

Trompettes terribles,
Chantez et sonnez!
Sur ces tours horribles,
Clairons indignés,

Clairons et trompettes,
Jetez votre bruit,
Car ces tours sont faites
De crime et de nuit!

Votre voix de cuivre,
Quand vient le moment,
Gronde et se fait suivre
Par l’écroulement.

Jetez votre insulte,
Comme un vent des cieux,
Jetez le tumulte
Des chants furieux

Sur les tours altières
Des fourbes vainqueurs,
Sur ces sombres pierres,
Sur ces affreux coeurs!

Sur Davus ministre,
Sur César Typhon,
Sur le nain sinistre,
Sur le nain bouffon,

Sur l’enfer qui grince
Et qui triomphait,
Sur le bandit, prince
De tout ce forfait!

Jetez l’harmonie
Qui hurle et hennit
Sur la tyrannie
Bâtie en granit,

Sur l’âpre muraille,
Sur le burg lascif
Où le festin raille
Le tombeau pensif!

Ils ont beau, ces traîtres,
Bénis des faux dieux
Et chers aiix faux prêtres,
Être monstrueux;

Leur alcôve obscène,
Douce à leurs sommeils,
Le matin est pleine
De rires vermeils;

Gais, ils peuvent prendre,

Bourreaux en chaleur,
Des baisers de cendre
Aux bouches en fleur;

Les prostituées
Dans leurs alhambras
Comme des nuées.
Pssent dans leurs bras;

Mathan les encense;
Ils ont, à huis clos,
Tout; l’or, la puissance,
Et la fange, à flots;

Clairons! vomitoires!
Votre acharnement
Remplace ces gloires
Par le châtiment!

Courage! couràge!
Guerre à l’antre obscur!
Que l’immense outrage
Soufflette ce mur!

Guerre au nid pirate!
Dénoncez au ciel
Cette scélérate
Qu’on nomme Babel!

Que dans l’air qui tremble
Votre hymne écumant
Vole, éclate et semble
Un déchaînement!

Votre souffle d’ombre
Déjà donne aux tours
Un penchement sombre,

Effroi des vautours,

Et fait, sous l'opprobre,
Mieux crouler les murs
Qu'un soleil d'octobre
Ne fend les fruits mûrs.

Sonnez! tout s'effare.
Sonnez, voix du sort!
De votre fanfare
Une flamme sort.

Malheur à la joie!
Au maître, au seigneur
Sous qui le sort ploie!
Malheur au bonheur!

Malheur au roc chauve,
Au donjon dès loups,
Au parapet fauve
Hérissé de clous!

Malheur aux prunelles
Du lynx, du chacal,
Et des sentinelles
Qui gardent le mal!

Malheur aux chlamydes
Des archers postés
Sur des pyramides
Autour des cités!

Malheur aux mosquées,
Aux portes des rois,
Aux tours attaquées
La nuit par des voix!

L’essaim d’hirondelles
Fuira de leur front;
Les battements d’ailes
S’évanouiront.

On verra des rides
Aux murs blancs de chaux,
Et les chambres vides
S’empliront d’échos.

Que les Babylones
Et que les Memphis;
Dressent des colonnes
Comme des défis;

Qu’on fasse une ville
A triple fossé;,
Que tout soit servile
Ou soit terrassé;

Que le roi barbare
Sorti des limons,
Mette une tiare.
De tours sur les monts;

Sur les lois qu’il foule
Il luit, foudroyant;
Il règne; et la foule
Demande, en voyant

Que tout le contemple,
Prêtres et valets,
S’il est dans un temple
Ou dans un palais.

Il est grand, superbe,
Et sous ce voleur.

L’homme est comme l’herbe;
C’est bien, mais malheur,

Malheur à ce temple,
A cette impudeur,
A ce crime, exemple
D’ombre et de grandeur;

Malheur à ce groupe
De murs factieux
Que le soir découpe
Sur le clair des cieux;

Malheur à ces fêtes,
Aux grands dômes lourds
Qui, montrant leurs faîtes
Plus hauts que les tours,

Difformes; immondes,
Noirs avec Iendeur,
Des ténébreux mondes
Semblent la rondeur;

Malheur aux armées
Jetant dans les champs,
La nuit, des fumées,
Et le jour, des chants;

Malheur à ces fastes,
Aux jeux, aux concerts,
ces palais vastes,
A ces donjons fiers,

Emplissant l’espace,
Dans l’ombre aperçus;
Si quelqu’un qùi passe
Vient souffler dessus!

Clairons! ceux qui saignent
Ont l’air de dormir,
Les âmes s’éteignent.
On n’ose frémir.

La morne patrie
Se laisse accabler.
Que votre furie.
La fasse parler!

Que toute souffrance,
Que tout droit meurtri,
Reprenne espérance
Et jette son cri!

Que l’espace immense
Soit plein de clartés,
Et d’une semence
De coeurs irrités!

Que chaque âme envoie
Son éclair sanglant!
Que dans l’ombre on voie
Jaillir, s’envolant

Sur les bois, les haies,
Les champs, le lac bleu,
Des lèvres des plaies.
Les langues de feu!

Sonnez sans relâche!
Racontez aux cieux
A quel point ce lâche
Fut audacieux!

Frappez l’homme blênie!

Faites en ce lieu
Un bruit de blasphème
En l’honneur de Dieu!

Frappez la muraille
Du crime impuni.
Que votre appel aille
Droit à l’infini!

Que ce chant s’enfonce;
Et, deuil; foudre, affront,
Force à la réponse
L’Inconnu profond!

Du soir à l’aurore
Criez au secours!
Et sonnez encore,
Et sonnez toujours!

Quand par la pensée,
Souffle aérien,
La roche est poussée,
Elle dit hé bien!

La tour la plus fière
Sous ce vent périt.
Qu’est-ce que la pierre
Peut contre l’esprit?

Qu’après la tempête
De vos sombres chants,
Le spectre, la bête,
Les mages méchants,

Demandent aux nues;
Au vent qui s’enfuit:
Que sont devenues

Les tours de la nuit?

Où donc, ô vallée,
O brume, ô mistral,
S’en est-elle allée,
La ville du mal? .

La ville ivre et fière
D’où Dieu fut banni,
Qui-choquait son verre
Contre l’infini,

Qu’on entendait rire,
Et qui sur les monts
Le soir, faisait luire
Des yeùx dé démons? -

Qu’ils cherchent, funèbres,
Ecoutant l’écho,
L’amas de ténèbres
Qui fut Jéricho!

Qu’ils cherchent les arbres,
Les chars, les pavois!
Qu’ils cherchent les marbres,
Qu’ils cherchent les voix!

Qu’ils Cherchent le maître,
Le chef, le gardien,
Le psaume du prêtre,
L’aboiement du chien!

Et les hallebardes,
Et l’encensoir d’or,
Et le pas des gardes
Dans le corridor!

Les thyrses de lierre,
Les murs teints de sang,
Et la fourmilière
Des femmes dansant!

Les belles fantasques,
A l’oeil tendre et fou,
Qui nouaient des masques
Derrière leur cou!

L’herbe et l’alouette,
Et l’aigle en son nid,
Et la silhouette
Des sphinx de granit!

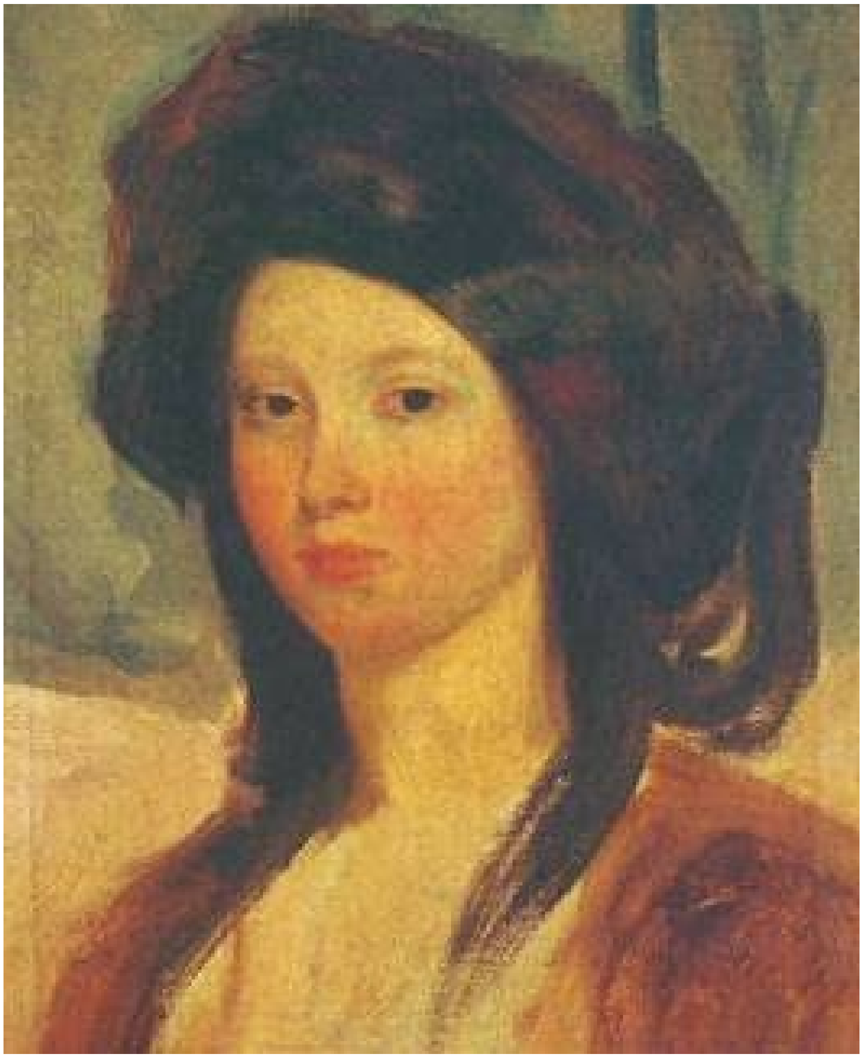
Les donjons épiques,
Les grands arsenaux!
Qu’ils cherchent les piques
Entre les créneaux!

Qu’ils cherchent les rampes,
Les jardins, les cours,
Le reflet des lampes
Aux rondeurs des tours!

Quelle nuit profonde,
O vent syrien!
Qu’ils cherchent un monde,
Et ne trouvent rien!

2 février 1870.

DERNIERE GERBE



Juliette Drouet, Hugo’s mistress for nearly 50 years

TABLE DES MATIERES

DERNIÈRE GERBE AVERTISSEMENT DE L’ÉDITEUR
I BILLET À CHARLES NODIER *
II Ami z,
III Le Hartz
IV À l’heure où je t’écris,
V Voici que la saison décline,
VI PAYSAGE
VII EN MAI
VIII Je m’arrêtai.
IX Jadis, adolescent,
X Dans les cités que troublent
XI Je ne vois,
XIII Sur les cloches d’airain
XIV Je ne demande pas autre chose aux forêts
XV En plein midi,
XVI Les bois,
XVII Après avoir souffert,
XVIII MON JARDIN
XX Charle, il faut quitter
XXI Le soir, je m’assieds, grave,
XXII CHUTE DU RHIN
XXIII Ce que j’ai sous les yeux
XXIV Voyons, d’où vient le verbe?
XXV Ô terre, dans ta course immense
XXVI Tout est doux et clément!
XXVII Un souffle rajeunit la forêt décrépite
XXVIII Là, je cause le soir
XXIX J’étais dans le clocher
XXX Mer pareille à la destinée!
XXXI La mer, ô célestes abîmes,
XXXII Un jour que mon esprit
XXXIII LA PASSION HUMAINE
XXXIV La mort est sous un toit
XXXIV Des mains,

XXXV Une clarté livide entre en ce sombre lieu
XXXVII APPARITION
XXXVIII Dans ces heures où Dieu
XXXIX Dieu.
XL L’épanouissement,
XLI Au fond du ciel serein,
XLII La solitude sainte
XLIII Conquérants, prêtres, rois.
XLIV Ô profondeur sans fond
XLV Tu seras riche, heureux, beau,
XLVI On a de chauds clients
XLVII O siècle inachevé,
XLVIII Toujours sur cette mer sauvage
XLIX Oh! que,d’amis j’ai vus
LI C’est le ciel que la tombe
LII Babel
LIV Parmi des monts,
LV Quand... au milieu de la nuit,
LVI Quand le soleil d’avril rit
LVII Oh! pour le reste de ta vie,
LVIII Figurez-vous un beau front triomphant
LIX Elle est gaie et pensive
LX N’écoutez pas, mon ange,
LXI Relève ton beau front,
LXII Janvier est revenu.
LXIII Oh! de mon ardente fièvre
LXIV Ne vous contentez pas, madame, d’être belle
LXV Âme que j’ai trouvée
LXVI Ô souvenirs!
LXVII Doux ami,
LXVIII Vent du soir!
LXIX Quand je ne serai plus qu’une cendre glacée
LXX C’était la première soirée
LXXI Ton beau front s’est penché
LXXII GUITARE
LXXIII Quand je veux savoir
LXXV À ANDRÉ CHÉNIER

LXXVI À DES BAIGNEUSES
LXXVII LUCIO
LXXVIII Vous souffrez ici-bas
LXXIX Bon! voilà son esprit qui part!
LXXX PORTRAIT
LXXXII Mes strophes sont comme les balles
LXXXIII Quiconque pense,
LXXXIV L’Inconnu,
LXXXV Le prophète et le poète
LXXXVI Poëtes, si le monde avait une âme encor
LXXXVII Voici les Apennins,
LXXXIX Ce monde, fête ou deuil,
XC Il faut que le poète,
XCI Je voudrais qu’on trouvât tout simple
XCII PLANÈTES
XCIII Comme on a hors de soi
XCIV Une sorte de vague énorme,
XCV Le sépulcre géant d’étoiles se compose
XCVI À ce point de la vie
XCVII Ô consul, toi qui peux dire
XCVIII Ô destin!
XCIX Z
CI À UN HOMME PARTANT POUR LA CHASSE
CII Je te dis qu’il travaille
CIII Le sort s’est acharné sur cette créature
CIV Au point du jour,
CV Les quatre enfants joyeux
CVI Je racontais un conte
CVII Je suis comme dans un cloître
CVIII MON PETIT-FILS
CIX Ce qui rend la vieillesse auguste
CX 25 L’oeuvre humaine
CXI La porte
CXII NOS AMUSEMENTS
CXIII J’aime ces grands esprits,
CXIV Attention. Voici Louis quatorze
CXV RACONTÉ EN RÊVE PAR LORD BYRON (PEUT-ÊTRE)

CXVI Hé, prends ton microscope,
CXVII Insondable, immuable,
CXVIII Dans les leçons qu’il donne aux esprits
CXIX RÉPONSE À L’OBJECTION: MAL
CXX Est-ce que par hasard le monde,
CXXI Crois-tu que de ceci mon rêve se repaisse
CXXII La souffrance, géante et spectre
CXXIV MÉLANCOLIE
CXXV Le juste
CXXVI Quand Jean-Jacques vivait
CXXVII Oh! je t’emporterai
CXXVIII Oui, le tonnerre éclaire
CXXIX Quand ce banni,
CXXX La terre est à l’erreur
CXXXI Oh! vers le progrès magnifique
CXXXII LE PROGRÈS
CXXXIII La cloche suspendue
CXXXIV Sombre justice inique
CXXXV Ne vous figurez pas,
CXXXVI Quoi! tu doutes de l’âme!
CXXXVIII La vision devient une réalité
CXXXIX Il a fait la colombe.
CXL Quelle religion
CXLI L’ENFER
CXLII Toute la quantité d’équité,
CXLIII Le pauvre;
CXLIV ÉPÎTRES
CXLV Je t’aime,
CXLVI Tous les hommes sont l’Homme
CXLVII À UNE STATUE
CXLVIII L’excès de la pitié
CXLIX LYRNESSI DOMUS ALTA, SOLO LA URENTE SEPULCR UM
TAS DE PIERRES

DERNIÈRE GERBE AVERTISSEMENT DE L’ÉDITEUR

Si l’on compare l’édition originale de Dernière Gerbe et celle-ci, on trouvera des différences que nous croyons utile d’expliquer.

Nous avons dû supprimer les divisions: Avant l’exil, Pendant l’exil, Depuis l’exil, divisions factices établies pour la présentation du volume en 1902, mais que ne justifie pas l’aspect du manuscrit, l’écriture de certaines poésies non datées ne correspondant pas à la période désignée. Nous avons rétabli le texte intégral partout où des coupures avaient été pratiquées; en revanche, nous avons respecté les lacunes présentées par le manuscrit, soit au début, soit à la fin, soit même au milieu d’une poésie. Ne vaut-il pas mieux, dans cette édition documentaire, laisser au texte son véritable aspect? La table même de ce volume déroutera peut-être le lecteur de l’édition originale, car bien des pièces ont été privées ici de leur titre fictif.

Six poésies figurant dans d’autres volumes ont été retirées de celui-ci, ce sont:

SWEDENBORG. - LE NAUFRAGÉ - DIALOGUE AVEC L’ESPRIT qu’on trouvera dans cette édition au Reliquat et au texte de Dieu;

OH! L’AMOUR EST PAREIL AUX PERLES DE ROSÉE: variante d’une pièce publiée dans Toute la Lyre: Vois-tu, mon ange, il faut accepter nos douleurs;

A UNE ÂME QUI NE S’APERÇOIT PAS QU’ELLE EST UNE FEMME: Chansons des Rues et des Bois (Reliquat);

LA CITÉ DÉCRÉPITE, publiée sans titre dans Toute la Lyre;

Et toute la division: SCÈNES ETDIALOGUES que nous avons restituée au Théâtre en Liberté.

Enfin, puisant dans les nombreux vers destinés à former le dernier volume inédit: Océan, nous avons enrichi cette édition de soixante- quinze poésies, et soixante-quinze pensées nouvelles sont venues grossir le Tas de Pierres.

I BILLET À CHARLES NODIER *

Je l’ai lu, ton beau poème.
Tes sept châteaux de Bohême,
C’est un legs rare et suprême
Que tu tiens, en fils pieux,
D’Yorick qui l’eut de son père
Rabelais, bâtard d’Homère, - -
Lequel était fils des,Dieux.
C’est là, Nodier; ta famille.
Moi, j’édifie en Castille.
Une bien frêle bastille
Que bientôt fera plier
Le peuple au front de bélier.
Mais qu’Hernani tienne ou croule!
Qu’importe à tes sept donjons,
Qu’en vain viendront battre en foule
Maintes ailes de pigeons!
Ils vivront. Leur garde est forte,
Ta gloire veille à leur porte.
Quoi donc! il me vient de toi,
Ce livre charmant que j’aime!
Quoi! sept châteaux de Bohême!
Don de poète ou de roi!
En échange t’offrirai-je’
Ma tour qu’un parterre assiège?
Hélas; pour tes sept châteaux
Qui du front de leurs coteaux
Dominent sur la campagne,
Moi, dont Jodelle est l’aïeul,
Je ne t’en promets qu’un seul.
Encore est-il en Espagne!

• En 1829 (octobre) on commençait à répéter Hernani au Théâtre-Français. Charles Nodier publia le Roi de Bohême et ses sept châteaux et m’envoya le livre. Je lui répondis par ce billet. (Note de Victor Hugo.)

II Ami z,

Ami z, tu m’es présent en cette solitude.
Quand le ciel, mon problème, et l’homme, mon étude,
Quand le travail, ce maître auguste et sérieux,
Quand les songes sereins, profonds, impérieux,
Qui tiennent jour et nuit ma pensée en extase,
Me laissent, dans cette ombre où Dieu souffle et m’embrase,
Un instant dont je puis faire ce que je veux,
Je me tourne vers toi, penseur aux blancs cheveux,
Vers toi, l’homme qu’on aime et l’homme qu’on révère,
Poète souriant, historien sévère!
Je repasse, bonheur pourtant bien incomplet,
Par tous les doux sentiers d’un souvenir qui plaît.
Ton Henri, - ton fils Pierre ami de mon fils Charles,
— Et ta femme, - ange heureux qui rêve quand tu parles,
Je me rappelle tout: ton salon, tes discours,
Et nos longs entretiens qui font les soirs si courts,
Ton vénérable amour que jamais rien n’émousse
Pour toute belle chose et toute chose douce!
Maint poème charmant que nous disait ta voix
M’apparaît... - Mon esprit, admirant à la fois
Tant de jours sur ton front, tant de grâce en ton style,
Croit voir un patriarche au milieu d’une idylle!

Ainsi tu n’es jamais loin de mon âme, et puis
Tout me parle de toi dans ces champs où je suis;
Je compare, en mon coeur que ton ombre accompagne,
Ta verte poésie et la fraîche campagne;
Je t’évoque partout; il me semble souvent
Que je vais te trouver dans quelque coin rêvant,
Et que, dans le bois sombre ouvrant ses ailes blanches,
Ton vers jeune et vivant chante au milieu des branches.
Je m’attends à te voir sous un arbre endormi.
Je dis: où donc est-il? et je m’écrie: - Ami,
Que tu sois dans les champs, que tu sois à la ville,

Salut! bois un lait pur, bénis Dieu, lis Virgile!
Que le ciel rayonnant, où Dieu met sa clarté,
Te verse au coeur la joie et la sérénité!

Qu’il fasse à’ tout passant ta demeure sacrée!
Qu’autour de ta vieillesse aimable et vénérée,
Il accroisse, tenant -tout ce qu’il t’a promis,
Ta famille d’enfants, ta famillé d’amis!
Que le sourire heureux, te soit toujours facile!
Doux vieillard! noble esprit! sage tendre et tranquille!

III Le Hartz

«Le Hartz est un pays de frênes et d'érables;
Nous chassions devant nous un tas de misérables,
En guenilles, fuyant: à travers les halliers;
Hommes, femmes, enfants; n'ayant pas de souliers,
Nous étions sans pitié pour les pieds nus des autres;
En guerre on dit: Chacun ses haillons, vous les vôtres,
Moi les miens; on est peu sensible, on a raison,
Et pour faire sa soupe on brûle une maison.

«Pensif, je constatais ces moeurs, sans trop m'y plaire.
On n'a pas de scrupule, on n'a pas de colère,
On sent qu'on est victime, on est des meurtriers,
On chante, on a la joie étrange des guerriers;
Et les choses qu'on fait, dans le sang et les flammes,
Sont illustres; sinon elles seraient infâmes".

IV À l’heure où je t’écris,

À l’heure où je t’écris, je suis dans un village.
Le soleil brille; octobre a jauni le feuillage;
Je vois là-bas, les toits d’un.charmant vieux   château.
Force rouges pommiers couronnent le coteau,
Si,chargés qu’on soutient par des fourches leurs branches.
Mon hôtesse est coiffée, à la mode d’Avranches
D’un immense bonnet qui lui tombe aux talons.’
Dans la cuisine où luit le cuivre des ,poêlons
Bout un vaste chaudron tout rempli d’herbe verte,
Et, passant au grand trot devant ma porte ouverte,
Un petit paysan rit sur un grand cheval.

Lé château fut bâti pour Anne de Laval
Par le beau roi François premier. Dans les mansardes
Les vieilles font sécher au vent d’affreuses hardes.
Sur la colline où mène un sentier dans les prés,
On aperçoit parmi les branchages pourprés
Un pauvre vieux clocher qui tousse et s’époumonne
A convier au prêche Alain, Claude et Simone.

V Voici que la saison décline,

Voici que la saison décline,
L’ombre grandit, l’azur décroît,
Le vent fraîchit sur la colline,
L’oiseau frissonne, l’herbe a froid.

Août contre septembre lutte;
L’océan n’a plus d’alcyon;
Chaque jour perd une minute,
Chaque aurore pleure un rayon.

La mouche, comme prise au piège,
Est immobile à mon plafond;
Et comme un blanc flocon de neige,
Petit à petit, l’été fond.

[Carnet 1861]

VI PAYSAGE

Des halliers, des tournants, des rochers et des chênes.
Quelques coteaux pierreux donnant de maigres vins;
Chaume, ardoises, hameaux tordus par les ravins,
Et des toits écaillés sur des maisons velues.
Des bibles en latin difficilement lues
Courbent autour du feu les fronts des vieilles gens,
Et, derrière la vitre aux losanges changeants,
Le soir; on aperçoit sous le plafond rougeâtre
Leurs groupes éclairés confusément par l'âtre.
[Carnet, 1862]

VII EN MAI

Une sorte de verve étrange, point muette,
Point sourde, ‘éclate et fait du printemps un poète;
Tout parle ‘et tout écouté et tout aime à la fois;
Et l’antre est une bouche et la source une voix;
L’oiseau regarde ému l’oiselle intimidée,
Et dit: Si je faisais un nid? c’est une idée!
Comme rêve un songeur le front sur l’oreiller,
La nature se sent en train de travailler,
Bégaie un idéal dans ses noirs dialogues,
Fait des strophes qui sont les chênes, des églogues
Qui sont les amandiers et les lilas en fleur,
Et se laisse railler par le merle siffleur;
Il lui vient à l’esprit des nouveautés superbes;
Elle mêle la folle avoine aux grandes herbes;
Son poème est la plaine où paissent les troupeaux;
Savante, elle n’à pas de trêve et de repos
Jusqu’à ce qu’elle accouplé et combine et confonde
L’encens et le poison dans la sève profonde
De 1a nuit monstrueuse elle tire le jour;
Souvent avec la haine elle fait de l’amour -
Elle a la fièvre et crée ainsi qu’un sombre artiste;
Tout ce que la broussaille a d’hostile et de triste,
Le buisson hérissé, le steppe, le maquis,
Se condense, ô mystère, en un chef-d’oeuvre exquis
Que l’épine complète et que le ciel arrose
Et l’inspiration dés ronces, c’est la rose.

21 janvier 1877.

VIII Je m’arrêtai.

Je m’arrêtai. C’était un ravin très étroit
Avec des toits au fond sur qui le lierre croît.
Tu sais, j’aime beaucoup ces choses: une ferme
Où se meut tout un monde et qu’un vieux mur enferme,
Des vaches dans un pré, l’herbe hàute, un ruisseau,
Un dogue sérieux allongeant le museau,,
Des enfants dans du pain mordant à pleines, joues,
Des poules; me voilà content. De vieilles roues
Dans un coin. Qu’un bouvier siffle et qu’un arbre au vent
Tremble, et je reste là jusqu’à la nuit, rêvant.
Une eau vive courait, et des fleurs sur la berge
Brillaient, et je disais: - Si c’était une auberge,
Comme j’y logerais! comme j’y mangerais
Du pain bis, de la soupe aux choux, et des oeufs frais!
Dans cette basse-cour quelles charmantes fêtes!
Comme je-passerais mes jours avec ces bêtes!
Comme je me ferais de Suzon Atala!
Comme je causerais avec ce gros chien-là!

IX Jadis, adolescent,

.
Jadis, adolescent, faisant mes premiers vers,
Sachant à peine encor, dans cette étrange escrime,
Parer les coups que porte à la raison la rime,
Dans mes vagissements croyant voir des travaux,
J’étais, ô fol enfant, avide de bravos,
De bruits et de rumeur et goulu de fumée;
Je me disais, rêvant succès et renommée:
— Qu’est-ce que c’est qu’un nom qui n’a pas retenti?
J’étais triste et pensif; j’avais pris le parti
De bouder le destin et de rester maussade
Jusqu’à ce que je visse au loin quelque façade,
De Panthéon-sortir de l’ombre exprès pour moi,
.Les femmes prononcer mon nom avec émoi,
La gloire à l’horizon poindre, et que j’aperçusse
Ma statuette en plâtre à la vitre de Susse * .
* Aujourd’hui, je suis altéré de calme et de tombeau.

X Dans les cités que troublent

Dans les cités que troublent
Tant de chars se heurtant, et tant de noirs débats,
Où rampent, pleins d’orgueil, tous les sentiiriénts bas,
Où tdut est fiel, dédain, querelle, envie infâme,
J’étouffe, et, tu le sais, à chaque instant, mon âme
Qui languit sans amour comme un cygne sans eau,
Ouvre son aile et veut s’enfuir comme l’oiseau.
Comment n’aurais-je pas jusqu’au fond de moi-même
Ces aspirations vers votre paix suprême,
Ô déserts! ô vallons! quand, fatigué de bruit,
Je médite, appuyé sur mon livre la nuit,
Et que, dans mon esprit, je compare et j’oppose
A la foule orageuse, à la ville morose,
Aux hommes durs, amers, haineux; âpres, ‘méchants,
La profonde douceur-des forêts et’ des .champs!
Une forge là-bas flamboie au pied des monts.
Vois, ces deux forgerons que le feu montre et voile.
Le fer rouge étincelle. On dirait deux - démons
À grands, coups de marteaux écrasant une étoile.

Que forgent-ils donc là, ces deux sombres forgeurs?
Font-ils une charrue ou font-ils une épée?
Leur enclume sonore incessamment frappée
Fait sur la route au loin rêver les voyageurs.

Glaive ou soc, ce qu’ils font est l’oeuvre de Dieu même.
Que ce soit l’humble fer ou l’acier belliqueux,
L’oiseau chante autour d’eux, l’eau palpite, l’ombre aime,
La nature profonde,est en paix aveç eux...

31- octobre 1840. - Route ‘d’Épernay à Château-Thierry.

XI Je ne vois,

..
Je ne vois, du sommet de la dune où je suis,
Qu’un maigre filet d’eau sous les branches d’un aulne,
Et le fond d’un ravin brûlé, torride et jaune,
Fort triste, et qu’on dirait de soleil accablé.
J’aperçois à mi-côte un chariot de blé
Tiré par trois chevaux à la pauvre crinière, .
Qui monte lentement, cahoté par l’ornière,
Penchant à droite, à» gauche à demi-soulevé,
Si chargé que. les brins traînent sur, le pavé,
Et, comme une chouette au trou- d’une muraille,
Une tête de vieille apparaît dans la paille.

XIII Sur les cloches d’airain

Sur les cloches d’airain qui frissonnent toujours,
Sur les beffrois plaintifs qui dorment dans les tours,
La nuit n’a pas encor frappé la douzième heure,
Mais son aile déjà s’approche et les effleure.

— Baoum! - Chut! voici le premier coup. - Baoum! - Deux.
J’ai vu passer dans l’air comme un masque hideux.
Trois - Quatre - Pas un astre au ciel. - Cinq - Sur ma table
Pour conjurer cette heure étrange et redoutable
J’ai des charmes écrits en hébreu. - Six - Je vois
Une vague lueur glisser le long des toits.
Sept - Huit - Neuf - Dix - J’entends l’archet d’un bal dans l’ombre.
Son gai frémissement meurt en grincement sombre.
Onze - Une porte au loin se ferme en ce moment.
Douze - Le dernier coup! Il tinte lentement,
Puis il tremble et s’éteint dans le clocher qui râle...
Minuit. - Puis tout se tait. L’ombre est plus sépulcrale.
On dirait qu’un linceul sur la ville est tombé.

XIV Je ne demande pas autre chose aux forêts

Je ne demande pas autre chose aux forêts
Que de faire silence autour des antres frais
Et de ne pas troubler la chanson des fauvettes.
Je veux entendre aller et venir les navettes
De Pan, noir tisserand que nous entrevoyons
Et qui file, en tordant l’eau, le vent, les rayons,
Ce grand réseau, la vie, immense et sombre toile
Où brille et tremble en bas la fleur, en haut l’étoile.

XV En plein midi,

En plein midi, quand l’astre est à plomb sur nos têtes,
On se sent la sueur, tiède, perler au front;
Les heures, groupe las, ne dansent plus en rond;
Tout fait la sieste; on veut la grotte, on cherche l’arbre;
La fleur se penche et dort; et les nymphes de marbre
Elles-mêmes ont chaud dans les parcs assombris
Quand l’ombre de leurs seins descend vers leurs nombrils.

XVI Les bois,

Les bois, les monts, les prés, ont pour notre pauvre âme
Un étrange pouvoir de mise en liberté.
O matin, triomphante et sereine clarté!
Délivrance de l’aube et du jour qui se lève!
Évanouissement subit de tout le rêve!
Comme les vils soucis de la terre s’en vont!
Comme on devient un être ineffable et profond!
Comme on quitte sa peau de souffrance et de haine!
Dieu bon! comme on sent bien son aile et peu sa chaîne!
On ne se souvient plus que quelqu’un est proscrit;
Les Te Deum chantés-par Satan qui sourit,
La splendeur du méchant heureux que l’un attise
Avec sa lâcheté, l’autre avec sa bêtise,
Le bien, songe avorté, le mal, fait accompli,
Oh! comme tout cela n’est plus qu’un tas d’oubli,
Comme on n’a plus dans l’âme une place meurtrie,
Comme rien n’est exil, comme tout est patrie,
Dès qu’on s’en est allé se promener aux champs,
Parmi les fleurs, au fond des rayons et des chants,
Dans la nature immense, étoilée, embrasée,
Et sitôt qu’on a mis les pieds dans la rosée!

Serk, 30 mai. La Coupée, 8 h. 1/2 du matin .

XVII Après avoir souffert,

Après avoir souffert, après avoir vécu,
Tranquille, et du néant de l'homme convaincu,
Tu dis je ne sais rien! - Et je te félicite,
O lutteur, ô penseur, de cette réussite.
Maintenant, sans regret, sans désir, humblement,
Bienveillant pour la nuit et pour l'aveuglement,
Tu médites, vibrant au vent comme une lyre;
Tu savoures l'azur, le jour, l'astre; et sans lire
Les papyrus hébreux, grecs, arabes, indous,
Tu regardes le ciel mystérieux et doux;
Et par l'immensité ton âme est dilatée
Au point d'emplir de .flamme et d'aube un monde athée.
Tes jardins sentent bon, et sont tout chevelus
De lierres, de jasmins et de convolvulus;
Mai fleurit tes lilas, août mûrit tes pommes;
Et, pendant que le tas tumultueux des hommes
Crie: abattons! tuons! exterminons! broyons!
Toi, parmi les parfums et parmi les rayons,
Voilà que tu finis et que tu te reposes,
Vieux, dans une masure, et, sage, dans les roses.

XVIII MON JARDIN

Dans le gazon qu'au sud abrite un vert rideau,
On voit, des deux côtés d'une humble flaque d'eau
Où nagent des poissons d'or et de chrysoprase,
Deux aloès qui font très bien dans une phrase;
Le bassin luit dans l'herbe, et semble, à ciel ouvert,
Un miroir de cristal bordé de velours vert;
Un lierre maigre y rate un effet de broussaille;
Et, bric-à-brac venu d'Anet ou de Versaille,
Pris à l'antre galant de quelque nymphe Echo,
Un vase en terre cuite, en style rococo,
Dans l'eau qui tremble avec de confuses cadences,
Mire les deux serpents qui lui tiennent lieu d'anses,
Et qui jadis voyaient danser dans leur réduit
Les marquises le. jour, les dryades la nuit.
...
Un rayon de soleil! une bête à bon Dieu!

Oh oui, je te comprends, printemps, tu m'insinues
Que c'est le mois des fleurs, des bois, des gorges nues,
Des billets doux ornés d'un' coeur d'où sort du feu,
Et que je pourrais voir en me penchant un peu,
Si jusqu'au bord du toit mon regard se hasarde,
Marguerite en chemise au fond de sa mansarde.
Mois de- Maïa! Lilàs, parfums, ruisseaux, bosquets,
Marquises regardant en dessous leurs laquais!
Les êtres sont poussés au péché par les choses;
Oh! la douce saison que la saison des roses!

L'homme s'écrie: Amour! et l'âne dit: hi han!
Au temps jadis, au temps du bel Esplandian
Pour être en ce moment visité dans mon bouge
Par Garlinde, j'aurais mordu dans du fer rouge,
J'eusse été frénétique autour des voluptés,
J'aurais eu faim et soif de toutes les beautés,

Pour la belle Euriante. ou la belle Fosseuse,
J’aurais au coin des murs cogné ma boîte osseuse,
Je me serais tué, je me serais damné;
Aujourd’hui, peuh! la femme! aujourd’hui j’ai dîné.
Je resterais plus froid qu’Abeilard, le vrai sage,
Lors même que Brahma viendrait dans son nuage
M’apporter sur un lit en acajou tout neuf
Berthe aux grands pieds avec Junon aux yeux de boeuf!
Je suis Platon au lieu d’être un drôle robuste.
Je tourne au marbre blanc et je deviens un buste.
C’est beau, mais assommant; c’est fort original,
Mais très fastidieux. Nodier à l’Arsenal
M’eût juché sur un cippe entre deux bôuquins jaunes.
Que Suzon dans les prés dorme à l’ombre des aulnes,
Qu’Anna, qui ravirait un faune au pied fourchu,
Fasse en penchant la tête entr’ouvrir son fichu,
Je n’en profite pas. Je reste comme un terme.
Avril ne me fait pas frissonner l’épiderme.
A la barbe du mois de mai, je suis un sot.
Lise offre le duel, mais j’évite l’assaut.
Le soir, sur mon grabat, en bâillant comme une huître,
Je m’étends sans daigner regarder par ma vitre
Si Vénus monte au ciel et Gretchen dans son lit.

XX Charle, il faut quitter

Charle, il faut quitter l’ode et descendre à l’épître;
On passe en vieillissant du trépied au pupitre;
Le feuillet sibyllin s’envole, et dans la main,
O misère, vous laisse un blême parchemin
Que la strophe, sirène, ondine, muse, almée,
Egratigne en fuyant de sa griffe palmée.
On s’accoude à son poéle au lieu d’aller rêver
Dans les champs et guetter la lune à son lever;
Les bons alexandrins vous viennent, mais sans prismes,
Sans aile, et refusant, de peur de rhumatismes,
De se mouiller les pieds dans l’herbe et dans le thym;
Et l’on n’est plus celui qui va de grand matin,
Pâle, faire sa cour à l’Aurore, et s’occupe
A regarder trembler les astres. sur sa jupe.
On. s’alourdit;, le ventre est votre souverain.
On préfère un turbot, une truite du Rhin,
Une bonne poularde accommodée en daube,
Un vin vieux, à l’oeillade enivrante de l’aube.
On murmure tout bas: jadis, quand nous aimions...
D’autres sont les Pâris et les Endymions
A qui viennent s’offrir, sous la sombre liane,
La Minerve sacrée et la grande Diane:
On ne dit plus: ma lyre; on dit: mon encrier.
On n’entend plus au bois la bacchante crier.
Votre oreille a présent jamais ne se régale
De ce que le grillon raconte à la cigale
Et de ce que redit la cigale au grillon,
L’un chantant le foyer et l’autre le sillon.
Adieu la folle immense aux chansons infinies,
L’imagination, maîtresse des génies!
Adieu l’égarement dans les espaces bleus,
L’extase, et l’idéal, ce réel fabuleux,
Et les aspects profonds du rêve! adieu la cime
Vue à travers l’écume énorme de l’abîme!

Adieu l’élan superbe et l’essor factieux!
Adieu. la joute avec les aigles dans les cieux!
Adieu les gnomes noirs aux mitres d’escarboucles,
Et les nymphes ayant des algues dans leurs boucles,
Et la fée, égrenant ses colliers de coraux!
On emploie à tracer des distiques, moraux,
Dignes d’être scandés aux écoles primaires,
Les doigts, qui caressaient la gorge des chimères.
Votre hippogriffe las demande l’abreuvoir;
Et vos rimes n’ont plus d’assez bons yeux pour voir,
Sous l’étoile agrafée aux plis blancs de la nue,
Vénus au front divin sourire toute nue.

C’est fini. L’on devient bourgeois de l’Hélicon.
On loue au bord du gouffre un cottage à balcon.
On consent bien, du haut de sa raison morose,
A .faire encor des vers, pourvu qu’ils soient en prose.
De là l’épître. Hélas, le poète à vau-l’eau
Est un Orphée éteint qui finit en Boileau.

XXI Le soir, je m’assieds, grave,

..
Le soir, je m’assieds, grave, au milieu de mes brutes,
Ainsi qu’un chancelier dans la chambre des lords,
Et mon front a parfois un pli sévère. Alors,
Ma chienne, la Chougna, qui n’est pas une bête,
Approche, et sous mes mains fourre sa grosse tête,
Et sentant qu’un sermon va venir, se tient coi.
Et je lui prends l’oreille, et je lui dis: Pourquoi
Te comportes-tu mal, Chougna, devant le monde?
Pourquoi, quand nous sortons, - il faut que je te gronde, -
Cours-tu, jappant, hurlant, à travers les buissons,
Après les jeunes chiens et les petits garçons?
Pourquoi ne vois-tu pas un coq sans le poursuivre?
Si bien que, moi, j’ai l’air d’avoir une chienne ivre!
Cela nous fait mal voir, les gens sont irrités;
Je te connais beaucoup de bonnes qualités,
Mais, vraiment, quand tu sors, tu n’es pas raisonnable!

XXII CHUTE DU RHIN

... Le Rhin tombe en hurlant
Dans le gouffre où l’écume, immense chaos blanc,
Tourne éternellement son effroyable roue;
Dans le puits inconnu que l’eau sombre secoue,
Tout bave et gronde; ainsi rugiraient des titans
Vautrés dans un abîme énorme, et combattants.
Cela frémit, cela hurle, cela blasphème.
On dirait Caliban colletant Polyphème.
On pressent, sous ce vaste et formidable bruit,
Toutes les profondeurs sinistres de la nuit.
Le fleuve à son tourment court avec épouvante.
L’âpre rondeur des eaux, glauque, aveugle et vivante,
Croule, et renaît toujours pour toujours se briser.
L’arc-en-ciel frissonnant brille et vient s’y poser;
Sur la courbe difforme il met sa courbe pure,
Et l’on croit voir Diane, au fond de l’ombre obscure,
Dressant dans ce fracas son front tranquille et fier,
Du bout de son arc vierge apaiser un enfer.

XXIII Ce que j’ai sous les yeux

27 septembre 1869.

Ce que j’ai sous les yeux et quel est ce pays,
Jugez-en:

Des terrains par la vase envahis,
Des saules, des carrés de chanvre, des passages
De voiles couleurs d’ocre au fond des paysages,
Des chariots, à foin peints, sculptés et dorés,
Des bois, et la senteur immense des grands prés;
Des essaims que la nuit même ne fait pas taire;
Des canaux à plein bord coulant à fleur de terre;
De frais enfants à qui l’on jette des gros sous
Des massifs d’arbres verts; l’eau s’enfonce dessous.
Le jonc fléchit, l’amarre ondule, le jonc plie,
Et la nature est molle à ce point qu’on oublie
Utrecht et ses tocsins, Ruyter et ses combats,
Et Delft ensanglantée, et qu’Amsterdam là-bas
Montre au pâle Océan ce que c’est que Venise.
La charrue est si près du mât qu’on fraternise;
L’aviron parle au soc et lui dit: Travaillons.
L’heure en prenant son vol rit dans les carillons;
Chaque beffroi secoue une grappe de cloches;
D’instant en instant passe, avec ses larges poches,
Un vieux coche d’osier sous sa coiffe de cuir;
De grands oiseaux de lacs et d’étangs qu’on voit fuir,
Ont les plumes du bout’ des ailes espacées,
Et l’on dirait des mains ouvertes et dressées.
Le houleux Zuyderzée est jaune à l’horizon.

Les villes sur leur porte ont un grand écusson;
Jadis leur libérté blasonna leur richesse;
Rotterdam est marqùise, Amsterdam est duchesse;
Ce qui n’empêche pas ces cités et ces champs,

Et tous ces blasons, d’être en somme des, marchands,
Et d’avoir à Ceylan, au Brésil, en Syrie,
Des comptoirs où se tient debout leur Seigneurié.
Pays riche, pays joyeux; les gras troupeaux,   .
L’herbe, l’homme, l’oiseau, le travail, le repos,
Tout rit, les paradis.succèdent aux cocagnes.;
Le Rhin, ce noir seigneur descendu des montagnes,
N’est plus qu’un bon bourgeois qui se retire aux champs;
L’humble fumée éparse autour des toits penchants
Rampe et monte à travers les frênes et les ormes;
Et d’effrayants moulins aux vastes plate-formes,
Qui tournent éperdus et sombres dans le vent
Avec on ne sait quoi d’énorme et de vivant,
Frappant l’espace avec leurs bras de sauterelles,
Mêlent l’azur, la nue et l’ombre à leurs quatre ailes.

À coup sûr ces géants, ces pourfendeurs de l’air,
Toujours enveloppés par un quadruple éclair;
Feraient mettre en arrêt la lance à don Quichotte.

Dans la cuve à houblon Gouda vide sa hotte;
Telle ville a son lait, telle autre ses fraisiers;
Telle autre sa balance à peser les sorciers.
On vogue; on reconnaît les cantons catholiques
Aux mendiants pieds nus qui baisent des reliques;
Car la châsse est dorée aux dépens des sillons;
La madone à bijoux fait la femme en haillons.
Le taillis noyé semble un miroir sous des branches;
Des marmots blonds, mordant leur pain aux larges tranches,
Regardent les bateaux dans le canal glisser.
La langue, c’est l’étang; on entend coasser
Dans le mot la consonne, et dans l’eau la grenouille.
A travérs une vitre on voit une quenouille;
C’est l’aïeule au front blanc qui guette et se tapit.

L’eau, qui devrait courir, est barrée, et croupit
On cultive le miasme, on récolte le goître;

L’affreux tabac pullule où le blé devrait croître;
Dieu fait l’endroit du monde et l’homme en fait l’envers.
L’église est jaune, l’orgue est bleu, les murs sont verts;
Ce pays est repeint par l’homme à la détrempe;
On peint le toit, le seuil, l’escalier et la rampe;
L’arbre peut-être est peint; la grue et le pigeon
Volent, de peur d’avoir leur part du badigeon.
Un démon gouailleur souffle en ces joncs fantasques.
Les meuniers ont des tours, les femmes ont des casques,
Les enfants ont leur pipe avant d’avoir leurs dents.
Où donc as-tu trouvé ton soleil, ô Jordaens?
Ce pauvre soleil gris que le brouillard fait fondre,
Et qui ne serait pas même accepté par Londre,
Clignote, et ses longs jets de lumière blafards
Entrent dans l’eau rayons et sortent nénuphars.
Les jardins, côtoyés sans bruit par le pilote,
Sont pleins de dieux mouillés, et l’Olympe y, grelotte;
Virgile frémissait de voir l’airain suer,
On tremble ici de voir le marbre éternuer,
Et l’on serait tenté d’emmailloter Pomone,
D’offrir un châle à Flore, et de faire l’aumône
D’un rayon de soleil à Phébus enrhumé.
Ici le plein midi craint le grand jour; en mai
On a novembre; avril meurt de froid; juin s’embourbe,
Et juillet en toussant souffle le feu de tourbe.

Mais qu’importe! le rire est roi dans la maison;
L’âtre est gai. Bon visage à mauvaise saison.
Le brouillard blême emplit les champs; mais la kermesse
N’en fait pas moins, après le prêche, après la messe,
Tournoyer, jupe au vent, Goton dont le jarret,
Par moments entrevu, tient Gros-Pierre en arrêt.
Car Gretchen est Goton et Pieter est Gros-Pierre.
Cette Ève et cet Adam sont partout; et la terre
N’eût point fait et meublé, sans Gros-Pierre et Goton,
Eden pour nos aïeux et pour nous Charenton.

On passe d’un méandre à l’autre et la patache,
Chaque soir, aux poteaux des berges se rattache.
L’aubergiste, bonhomme à l’air vague et chinois,
Croque le voyageur comme un singe une noix;
Lesage dans Drika saluerait Léonarde.
On boit; les pots sont grands. La Gueldre goguenarde
Fait ses cruches avec des ventres d’échevin,
Dè même que la Grèce au sourire divin,
Fait des bras de Phryné les anses de son vase.

Cependant le bateau glisse, le roseau jase,
Les nids parlent tout bas, l’eau chuchote, on s’endort;
Et voilà la Hollande.

Ami, ce peuple est fort:
N’en rions pas. C’est vrai qu’il ouvre aux vents d’automne
Une plaine sans fin, âprement monotone;
Certe, ailleurs, j’en conviens, l’aube a plus de clarté,
Et ce ne sont point là de ces champs où l’été,
Splendide et glorieux, jette à pleines corbeilles.
Les fleurs, les fruits, les blés, les parfums, les abeilles;
Sans doute quelque ennui sort de cet horizon;
Mais c’est le sol qui fut l’abri de la raison;
C’est la terre des gueux qui brisèrent les princes;
On referait l’Yssel, l’Amstel, les sept Provinces,
Pourvu que, sous un ciel de pluie, on accouplât
L’herbe au jonc, et l’eau morte avec, le pays plat;
Mais ce qu’on ne saurait refaire, c’est la flamme
Qui dans ce petit. peuple a mis une grande âme.

Juillet-août 1861

XXIV Voyons, d’où vient le verbe?

Voyons, d’où vient le verbe? Et d’où viennent les langues?
De qui tiens-tu les mots dont tu fais tes harangues?
Écriture, Alphabet, d’où tout cela vient-il?
Réponds:

Platon voit l’I sortir de l’air subtil;
Messène emprunte l’M aux boucliers du Mède
La grue offre en volant l’Y à Palamède;
Entre les dents du chien Perse voit grincer l’R;
Le Z à Prométhée apparaît dans l’éclair;
L’O, c’est l’éternité, serpent qui mord sa queue;
L’S et l’F et le G sont dans la voûte bleue,
Des nuages confus gestes aériens;
Querelle à ce sujet chez les grammairiens:
Le D, c’est le triangle où Dieu pour Job se lève;
Le T, croix sombre, effare Ezéchiel en rêve;
Soit; crois-tu le problème éclairci maintenant?
Triptolème a-t-il fait tomber, en moissonnant,
Les mots avec les blés au, tranchant de sa serpe?
Le grec est-il éclos sur les lèvres d’Euterpe?
L’hébreu vient-il d’Adam? le celte d’Irmensul?
Dispute, si tu veux! Le certain, c’est que nul
Ne connaît le maçon qui posa sur lé vide,
Dans la direction de l’idéal splendide,
Les lettres de l’antique alphabet, ces degrés
Par où l’esprit humain monte aux sommets sacrés,
Ces vingt-cinq marches d’or de l’escalier Pensée.

Eh bien, juge à présent. Pauvre argile insensée,
Homme, ombre, tu n’as point ton explication;
L’homme pour l’oeil humain n’est qu’une vision;
Quand tu veux remonter de ta langue à ton âme,
Savoir comment ce bruit se lie à cette flamme,
Néant. Ton propre fil en toi-même est rompu.

En toi, dans ton cerveau, tu n’as pas encor pu
Ouvrir ta propre énigme et ta propre fenêtre,
Tu ne te connais pas, et tu veux le connaître,
LUI! Voyant sans regard, triste magicien,
Tu ne sais pas ton verbe et veux savoir le sien!

XXV Ô terre, dans ta course immense

Ô terre, dans ta course immense et magnifique,
L’Amérique, et l’Europe, et l’Asie, et l’Afrique
Se présentent aux feux du Soleil tour à tour;
Telles,. l’une après l’autre, à l’heure où naît le jour,
Quatre filles, l’amour d’une maison prospère,
Viennent offrir leur front au baiser de leur père.

XXVI Tout est doux et clément!

Tout est doux et clément! astres ou feux de pâtres,
Tout ce que nous suivons de nos yeux idolâtres
Tient de Dieu sa clarté.
Il est dans les soleils comme il est dans les roses.
L’atome est plein de gloire, et les plus grandes choses
Sont pleines de bonté.

Ainsi l’étoile d’or, cette splendeur suprême,
Ne se contente pas de faire voir Dieu même
A l’oeil du genre humain,
Elle, prend en pitié la, nacelle qui flotte,
Se fait humble, et d’en haut souriant au pilote
Lui montre son chemin!

XXVII Un souffle rajeunit la forêt décrépite

Un souffle rajeunit la forêt décrépite.
La nature profonde autour de moi palpite;
L’étoile a des regards; le tronc d’arbre a des yeux.
Je ne sais quoi d’obscur et de mystérieux
Dans la fraîche épaisseur des herbes et des mousses,
Vit, et les bois sont pleins de voix sombres et douces.
Partout où l’ombre est calme, où les flots sont ‘dormants,
Le rêveur voit trembler et luire par moments,
Sous le roc qui se penche et l’arbre qui chancelle,
Une vague lueur de l’âme universelle.

XXVIII Là, je cause le soir

.
Là, je cause le soir avec un vieux curé,
Têtu comme un mulet, lettré comme une carpe,
Jurant par saint Pancrace et par saint Polycarpe,
Qui sait être ignorant sans faste et sans hauteur.
O derviche accompli! Ce vertueux pasteur
Ne se lave jamais et jamais ne se peigne.
II laisse, dans un tas de livres qu'il dédaigne,
Manger l'esprit humain aux rats de son grenier;
Et du fond dè son coeur croit qu'au siècle dernier
Le diable en deux morceaux étant' tombé sur terre,
L'un s'appela Jean-Jacque et l'autre eut nom Voltaire.

XXIX J’étais dans le clocher

J’étais dans le clocher, obélisque plein d’ombre,
Et mon oeil se perdait sous cet entonnoir sombre.
Le bourdon murmurait un chant mystérieux.
Pensif, je contemplais d’en bas ce cône austère;
Je croyais voir, immense et tourné vers la terre,
Un clairon embouché par quelqu’Un. dans les cieux.

XXX Mer pareille à la destinée!

15 juillet

Mer pareille à la destinée!
Mer triste au chant mystérieux!
Dis-nous quelle force obstinée,
Quel vent de la terre ou des cieux
Sur tes bords que ta vague broie,
Te prend, te jette et te renvoie
Et te précipite toujours,
Et par moments, joyeux ou sombre
Peint de rayons ou couvre d’ombre
Tes flots mêlés comme nos jours!
En sortant de Fécamp - au haut de la côte

6 heures du soir

XXXI La mer, ô célestes abîmes,

La mer, ô célestes abîmes,
Vous est égale en majesté!
Elle a ses profondeurs sublimes,
Elle est aussi l’immensité;
Ce qu’est à l’air le vent qui gronde,
Les courants le sont à son onde;
Elle a son azur éternel,
Ses météores, ses étoiles,
Et le navire ouvrant ses voiles
Est l’oiseau de cet autre ciel!

XXXII Un jour que mon esprit

Saint-Valéry-en-Caux, 17 juillet

Un jour que mon esprit de brume était couvert,
Je gravis lentement la falàise au dos vert,
Et puis je regardai quand je fus sur la cime.
Devant moi l’air et l’onde ouvraient leur double abîme.
Quelque chose de grand semblait tomber des cieux.
Le bruit de l’océan, sinistre et furieux,
Couvrait de l’humble port les rumeurs pacifiques.
Le soleil, d’où pendaient des rayons magnifiques,
A travers un réseau de nuages flottants,
S’épandait sur la mer qui brillait par instants.
Le vent chassait les flots où des formes sans nombre
Couraient. Des vagues d’eau berçaient des vagues d’ombre.

L’ensemble était immense et l’on y sentait Dieu.

XXXIII LA PASSION HUMAINE

Ombre où Brutus médite, où saigne Jésus-Christ;
Les Salomés sont là regardant les Electres;
Là, pleine de clairons, de tumultes, de spectres,
De squelettes, de rois hideux, d’hommes hagards,
De corps sans bras, de bras sans mains, d’yeux sans regards,
Sous un ciel monstrueux hennit, gronde et se cabre
La guerre, tourbillon hurlant, danse macabre.

XXXIV La mort est sous un toit

La mort est sous un toit comme sur un navire.
Tel qui dompte la mer sur la terre chavire,
Tel se perd dans les flots encor plein d’avenir.
Les uns - ô nautoniers, vos destins sont les nôtres! -
Reviennent pour ne plus repartir, et les autres
S’en vont pour ne plus révenir!

17 juillet .

XXXIV Des mains,

Des mains, à travers la nuée; -
Perçant vos ténèbres, Seigneur,
A notre soif exténuée.
Tendent dans l'ombre le bonheur;
Elles nous tendent les ivresses,
Les extases enchanteresses,
L'espoir charmant, l'amour béni;
Et sur notre terre âpre et noire,
L'âme en frémissant cherche à boire
A ces coupes de l'infini.

Quiconque aime, quiconque souffre,
Au profond mystère est uni;
Tout cerveau qui pense est un gouffre;
Tout être est plein de l'infini;
Le coeur qui s'ouvre ouvre une porte;
Les âmes, atomes qu'emporte
Un souffle d'ombre ou de clarté,
Sentent frémir, aux cieux dressées,
Dans la moindre de leurs pensées
Les ailes de l'immensité.

XXXV Une clarté livide entre en ce sombre lieu

Une clarté livide entre en ce sombre lieu;
Le jour semble y mourir, la mort y semble naître;
Lézarde, écroulement, larmier, brèche, fenêtre,
On ne sait pas quel nom donnèr aux soupiraux;
Et, cachant à demi des châssis sans vitraux,
Une guipure noire et difforme de branches
Et de feuilles frissonne aux ouvertures blanches.

XXXVII APPARITION

À force d’aspirer à ce grand but: connaître,
À force de sonder le fond sacré de l’être,
A force de fixer mes regards inquiets
Sur toi qui peux, sur toi qui vis, sur toi qui es,
A force de parler à l’inconnu sans bornes,
Au mystère où l’horreur entr’ouvre ses yeux mornes,
A force de vouloir, noir plongeur fait de jour,
Jusqu’en l’océan Nuit trouver la perle Amour,
J’ai fini, coeur où vibre une invisible lyre,
Par voir sortir de l’ombre un effrayant sourire.

XXXVIII Dans ces heures où Dieu

Dans ces heures où Dieu donne ou reprend la flamme,
Où le soleil revient ou s’en va comme une âme,
Où tout est solennel,
Où pour se transformer l’ordre éternel s’arrête,
Où le jour et la nuit luttent sur notre tête
A qui prendra le ciel;

Le monde est en suspens. Quiconque pense ou rêve
Sait que l’heure où tout change est l’heure où tout s’achève,
Que l’espoir est menteur;
Et l’esprit qui se penche alors sur la nature
Y sent de toutes parts ployer la créature
Devant le créateur!

Car on touche à la crise où tout peut se suspendre,
L’essieu peut se briser, le ressort se détendre,
Le flambeau s’éclipser.
Dans tous les coeurs se dresse un spectre affreux: PeuT-ÊTRE!
Le souffle qui passait et qui faisait tout naître
Peut ne plus repasser!

Car l’éternel concert n’en est qu’à son prélude.
Celui qui fait la loi la réforme ou l’élude.
Des cieux il est l’auteur.
Et sait-on ce que Dieu, qui trompe notre *étude,
Dans sa toute-puissance et dans sa solitude,
Fait à cette hauteur?

Qui nous répond de toi, Seigneur? Qui sait encore
Si ton souffle un matin n’éteindra pas l’aurore,
A l’heure de venir?
Le soleil est à Dieu. La terre ignore et rampe.
Qui sait si le travail qu’il fait à cette lampe
N’est pas près de finir?

Quand il aura fini Dieu l'éteindra sans doute.
Que ferons-nous alors dans l'ombré et .dans .le doute
Heurtant tous, nos essieux?
Qu'est-ce que tous ces chais qu'on appelle des mondes,
Et qui portent chacun tant de choses profondes
Deviendront dans les cieux?

Aussi quand le soleil s'est éteint sur les-cimes;
Quand l'obscurité rampe au penchant des abîmes
Et du fond. monte au bord;
Quand dans les lieux profonds la profondeur redouble;
Quand le rêve au contour monstrueux, à l'oeil trouble,
De toute chose sort;

Quand les ombres de tout par les bords se rencontrent;
Lorsqu'un réseau de brume où cent formes se montrent,
Flotte, au vent dénoué;
Quand le ciel où la nue à plis sombres se traîne
Laisse voir par endroits un peu de jour à peine
Comme un manteau troué;

Alors un mouvement se fait dans la nature;
La nuit vient; gouffre ,sombre où l'être s'aventure
De guides dépourvu! .
Car il semble qu'à l'heure où tout dort et repose
Toujours la nuit peut .faire au monde quelque chose D'horrible et d'imprévu!

XXXIX Dieu.

Dieu.
A travers ce qu’on sent confusément bruire,
C’est lui qui fait trembler, c’est lui qui fait reluire
L’oeil sous le cil baissé, l’eau sous la berge en fleurs;
Le rayon de la lune au bas des monts paisibles
Et le vague reflet des choses invisibles
Au front incliné des rêveurs.

XL L’épanouissement,

L’épanouissement, c’est la loi du Seigneur.
Il a fait la beauté, l’amour et le bonheur,
Il veut la fleur dans la broussaille.
Son âme immense, à qui l’aube sert de clairon,
Vibre à l’anxiété du moindre moucheron.
Toute douleur en Dieu tressaille.

Quand on lie un oiseau, Dieu souffre dans le nceud.
Dieu, tout objet froissé vous touche et vous émeut
Dans l’ombre où votre esprit repose;
Couché sur l’univers qu’emplit votre rayon,
Vous sentez, vous aussi, dans la création,
Le pli. d’une feuille de rose.

XLI Au fond du ciel serein,

Au fond du ciel serein, âmes supérieures,
Les astres vivent seuls; quant aux âmes d’en bas,
Ces grands isolements ne leur conviennent pas.
Il leur faut l’air, la foule et les branches voisines,
Et le croisement souple et profond des racines,
Les réponses, les bruits, les yeux, les pas mouvants,
Et la rumeur des voix dans la rumeur des vents.

XLII La solitude sainte

La solitude sainte aux faibles est fatale.

Voyez, il part, il fuit, il se cache, il s'installe
Dans un bois, dans un trou, loin de tout grand chemin.
Le voilà seul. Bonsoir! Voir un visage humain?
Pourquoi? qui? Non! plutôt, que le soleil périsse!
Vivent les ours! L'ennui le tient et le hérisse.
Il ne se peigne plus, il ne se'rase plus:
Son âme est cùl-dejatte et son coeur est perclus.
Fermez la porte. Il vit, fauve, dans sa tanière.
N'ayant pas autre chose, il prend sa cuisinière.
Il devient triste, froid, lascif, méchant, petit
Son esprit par degrés dans la chair` s'engloutit.
En lui la brute monte et gagne sa cervelle;
Le néant sous son front lentement se nivelle;
I1 boit,- il mange, il marche; autrefois ça, pensait.
Vit-il? on ne sait plus au juste ce que c'est,
Et le vieux loup Satan rit dans ses nuits funèbres
De voir cette lueur sombrer dans les ténèbres.

XLIII Conquérants, prêtres, rois.

Conquérants, prêtres, rois.

L’épée est une fauve et sinistre, lionne;
La tiare flamboie et la mitre rayonne,
Le trône, splendide escabeau,
Luit; mais Dieu gtii dans l’ombre ouvre et ferme les fosses,
Fait saisir et broyer toutes ces grandeurs fausses
Par les mâchoires du tombeau.

XLIV Ô profondeur sans fond

Ô profondeur sans fond où va tout ce qui pense!
Où l’on tombe, n’ayant que soi pour tout appui!

Cet homme était hier empereur; aujourd’hui.
Il est mort. Les canons tonnent, les clochers grondent;
Toutes les voix d’airain dans les cieux se répondent;
L’air murmure: - Il est mort! Il est mort!à genoux!
Celui qui disait: Moi! celui qui disait: Nous! -
Le maître! le héros! la majesté sacrée!
L’élu! l’homme qui règne, ombre de Dieu qui crée!
Il est au ciel, l’heureux, le superbe, le fort!
Il fut grand dans la vie, il est grand dans la mort! -
Et les foules en deuil se hâtent accourues,
Et les lourds pots-à-feu flambent le long des rues,
Et le royal convoi passe. Vingt escadrons
Ouvrent la marche; on voit venir dans les clairons
Une espèce de tombe éblouissante et fière,
Un grand sépulcre trône inondé de lumière,
Un cénotaphe immense aux panaches mouvants
Qui roule et resplendit, secouant dans les vents
L’orgueil, l’encens, la myrrhe, et, comme des crinières,
Les flammes d’or, les plis de pourpre, les bannières.
Le corbillard étale au peuple émerveillé
Toute la gloire humaine, un manteau constellé,
Une couronne, un sceptre, une épée, un cadavre.
Et la grande cité que son veuvage navre,
Et, tout autour, les champs, les hameaux, les faubourgs
Ne sont qu’une rumeur de pas et de tambours.

Écoutez maintenant. Ô vertige! peut-être,
Pendant qu’on dit: - C’est lui! c’est le roi! c’est le maître!
Celui que Dieu servait dans ce qu’il entreprit! -
Il vient de s’éveiller, morne et sinistre .esprit,
Dans un des noirs chevaux de l’attelage sombre

Qui tirent ce grand char de triomphe vers l’ombre!
Frissonnant, il bégaie: Où suis-je? Il se souvient;
Il sent derrière lui, son cadavre qui vient;
De ses portes de marbre il voit s’arrondir l’arche;
Il connaît le valet de pied qui lui dit: marche!
Il veut crier: C’est moi! le maître! Il ne le peut;
La mort le tient muet sous son terrible noeud.
Sous sa nouvelle forme effroyable, il tressaille;
Et tout en traversant son Louvre, son Versaille,
Son Kremlin, son Windsor ou son Escurial,
Couverts de ses blasons: lys, aigle impérial,
Savoie, Espagne, Autriche, ou Lorraine, ou Bourgogne,
Son cocher le fustige au nom de sa charogne.
Misérable, il est pris dans la bête au pas lent.
Ce qu’il a d’éternel en lui, puni, tremblant,
S’attelle à ce qui va rentrer dans la nature;
Son immortalité traîne sa pourriture;
Terreur! terreur! tandis que son nom dans l’azur
Brille, et qu’on voit son chiffre à tous les coins de mur
Porté par un génie ou par une victoire; .
Tandis qu’auguste et beau,. s’ouvrant à cette gloire
Comme s’ouvre au soleil le portique du soir,.
Tout Saint-Denis n’est plus qu’un sarcophage noir
Si vaste qu’on dirait qu’on a fait, sous ses porches,
Avec ses millions d’étoiles et de torches,
Entrer toute la nuit pour en faire du deuil;
Pendant que les drapeaux adorent son cercueil,
Pendant qu’un- Bossuet quelconque le célèbre,
Et l’appelle, du haut de l’oraison funèbre,
Bon, juste, glorieux, grand comme l’univers,
Son âme sous le fouet porte son corps aux vers!

XLV Tu seras riche, heureux, beau,

Le choeur.

Tu seras riche, heureux, beau, puissant, triomphant;
Tu trôneras, calife, au dos d’un éléphant;
Tu tiendras   dans ta main la pomme impériale;
Tu seras plus aimé qu’Atys ou. qu’Euryale;
Femmes dans ton sérail,   chevaux ‘dans tes haras,.
Tu posséderas tout; et, quand tu dormiras,
Des déesses, dansant avec un bruit de lyres,
Pâles, te berceront de splendides sourires;
Et les peuples, devant ton front si radieux,
Croiront te voir briller de la lueur des dieux.
C’est bien; -tu vivras fier, grand, ivre de toi-même,
Tranquille, oubliant l’heure où le sépulcre blême
S’ouvre immense, confus et noir comme la mer.

Soudain, tu sentiras passer un souffle d’air,
Et tu t’envoleras, force, orgueil, renommée,
Sans faire plus d’effet au vent que la fumée.

XLVI On a de chauds clients

On a de chauds clients et des amis nombreux;
On rit, on chante, on brave, on vit; on est heureux,
On est impie à l’aise; on triomphe; on oublie:
La mort qui se souvient, l’heure où tout se délie,
Et la submersion sombre de l’absolu. .
Mais il vient, ce moment où tout est superflu,
Où la nuit vous saisit comme un hideux reptile,
Où tout ce qu’on peut faire est une offre inutile,
Où l’on a beau prier, implorer, supplier.
As-tu vu d’aventure un riche se noyer?
Il crie à ceux qu’il voit sùr le rivage: - À l’aide!
— ... Cent francs! - ... dix mille francs! - ... tout ce que je possède!
Et la voix du noyé se perd sous le flot noir.
Ainsi, précipité, sans appui, sans espoir,
Le damné, s’attachant aux parois de la tombe,
Sent sous lui l’ouverture épouvantable, et tombe.
Il se tord, il appelle, il voit le firmament
Et la terre et le jour s’enfuir rapidement,
Et n’est plus qu’une forme indistincte qui sombre,
Et s’enfonce, et, hagard, roule à jamais sous l’ombre.

XLVII O siècle inachevé,

O siècle inachevé, plein d’angoisse et de doutes,
Où tout flotte et se mêle en un milieu diffus!
Que l’oeil avec terreur s’enfonce sous tes voûtes
Où les rois à tâtons, vont demandant leurs routes,
Car la concession perd comme le refus!

Quels bouleversements dans tes lointains sans nombre,
Que d’antres ténébreux sous tes rameaux touffus,
Redoutable avenir où le poète sombre
Voit les trônes pencher de plus en plus dans l’ombre
Sous un amas croulant d’évènements confus!

XLVIII Toujours sur cette mer sauvage

Toujours sur cette mer sauvage
La gloire à l’horizon montre son beau rivage,
Son beau port, sans récifs, sans écueils meurtriers,
Son soleil arrêté dans son ciel sans nuage,
Et ses temples dans des lauriers.

Alors on rame, on vogue, et pour dompter la lame,
Vers l’île rayonnante on laisse fuir son âme,
On s’épuise, on aspire à l’aile des oiseaux,
On ouvre toute voile, on saisit toute rame,
On remue et l’air et les-eaux!

La nuit, à l’horizon on la voit nébuleuse,
On vogue, le jour vient, et sur la mer houleuse,
Reparaît l’île heureuse et son riant gazon,
Le soir, on dit: où donc est l’île merveilleuse?
Hélas! toujours à l’horizon!

Elle trompe toujours notre poursuite avide.
Pour attirer et fuir le voyageur sans guide,
Jamais vent orageux, égaré sur les flots,
Ne fit sur une mer plus fausse et plus perfide,
Errer plus flottante Délos!

Et quand dé près enfin à vos regards s’étale,
Comme la table offerte à l’affamé Tantale,
Cette île radieuse, aux rivages si beaux,
Alors on reconnaît, dérision fatale!
Que ses temples sont des tombeaux!

XLIX Oh! que,d’amis j’ai vus

Oh! que d’amis j’ai vus à pas lents disparaître!
Que j’en ai vu quitter le chemin tour à tour,
Et sortant de la vie avant la fin du jour,
Descendre le versant de la colline noire!
Combien, dont la gaîté me faisait vivre et croire,
Dont l’oeil d’aise et d’amour semblait étinceler,
Ont cessé brusquement de rire et de parler,
Et pâles, frissonnants, tristes, la main glacée,
Sans même terminer la phrase commencée,
S’en sont allés, laissant leur destin incomplet,
Comme si tout à coup quelqu’un les appelait!
Est-ce que vous croyez que les roses - vermeilles
Ne trouvent pas moyen de suivre les abeilles,
Et que les papillons, errant dans les benjoins,
Ne sont pas dans l’azur par les parfums rejoints?
La mémoire est un souffle envoyé dans la tombe;
C’est la colombe allant s’unir à la colombe.
Non!il n’est pas d’absence, il n’est pas de tombeau;
Le pâle survivant, rallumant le flambeau,
Fait envoler son âme au delà de la terre
A la suite du mort entré dans le mystère;
L’âme revoit l’autre âme à force d’y rêver,
Et dans le ciel profond sait où la retrouver.

4 septembre 1857

LI C’est le ciel que la tombe

C’est le ciel que la tombe, aube obscure, reflète;
Le gouffre a pour barreaux les côtes du squelette;
On entend, comme ceux qui songent sur un bord,
Bruire l’infini dans le vide du crâne;
Et le Dieu qui pardonne, et le Dieu qui condamne
Luit dans les deux yeux de la mort.

La clarté du cercueil, pour nous fils des désastres,
O nuit sombre, est égale à la clarté des astres;
Comment devant les morts s’aveugler et nier?
Ce qui vécut est plein du mystère sublime;
L’immensité rayonne étoile dans l’abîme
Et cadavre dans le charnier.

LII Babel

Babel est tout au fond du paysage horrible.

Si l’épouvante était une chose visible,
Elle ressemblerait à ce faîte inouï.
Sommet démesuré dans le ciel enfoui!
Ce n’est pas une tour, c’est le monstre édifice.
Sans pouvoir l’éclairer, le jour sur elle glisse.
Des ouvertures d’ombre engouffrent dans ses flancs
Tous les vents de l’espace orageux et sifflants;
Il en sort on ne sait quelles sombres huées.
Sa spirale difforme et mêlée aux nuées
Peut-être y recommence et peut-être y finit.
L’ouragan a rongé ses porches de granit;
Son mur est crevassé du haut en bas; la brèche
Est comme un trou que fait dans la terre une bêche;
Ses rampes ont des blocs de roches pour pavés;
Sur ses escarpements lugubres sont gravés
Des maques, des trépieds, des gnomons, des clepsydres;
Ses antres, assez grands pour contenir des hydres,
Semblent de loin la fente où se cache l’aspic;
Sur les reliefs brumeux de ses parois à pic
Des forêts ont poussé comme des touffes d’herbes;
Ses faisceaux d’arcs rompus sont pareils à des gerbes;
La pierre a la pâleur sinistre du linceul.

Babel voulait monter jusqu’au zénith; Dieu seul
A son ascension pouvait mettre une .borne.
On frémit d’entrevoir son intérieur morne;
Il est si noir qu’un astre y serait à tâtons;
Des chutes de muraille ont entre les frontons
Creusé des profondeurs qui font inaccessibles
D’affreux colosses; pris par la foudre pour cibles.
Le seuil porte deux tours qui sont deux chandeliers.
Ce spectre est loin., Un dôme; un. chaos d’escaliers,

Des terrasses, des ponts, prennent vaguement forme
Dans ce blêmissement d’architecture énorme
Montant confusément derrière l’horizon.
Et comme on voit, au bord du toit d’une maison
S’abattre, à la saison des fleurs, à tire-d’aile,
Les pigeons au pied rose ou la vive hirondelle,
Sur son entablement funèbre aux trous profonds,
Viennent du fond du ciel se poser les griffons,
Les hippogriffes noirs, les sphinx volants des rêves
Dont les plumes sans plis ressemblent à des glaives,
Le dragon, sous son, ventre étouffant des éclairs,
L’aigle d’apocalypse, et les . larves des airs,
Et les blancs séraphins, qu’une aile immense voile,
Farouches, arrivant fatigués d’une étoile.
La création va,’ sombre, et démesurée;
L’étendue à jamais se meut dans la durée;
Le temps tourne au cadran du ciel
Et l’homme, pendant l’heure où disparaît son âge,
Pâle, entend remuer l’effrayant engrenage
De l’infini dans l’éternel.

Le peu de jour qu’on voit passe entre des vertèbres;
Les blancheurs sont le deuil autant que les ténèbres;
Rien ne rayonne, rien n’est sûr;
Le penseur, attentif aux mystères sans nombre,
A travers l’amas noir de ces rouages d’ombre,
N’aperçoit qu’un lugubre azur.

LIV Parmi des monts,

Parmi des monts, épars comme un tas de décombres,
L’horizon ébauchait avec des pourpres sombres
Une aube monstrueuse, et j’en étais témoin;
L’ombre était vaste, un gouffre était béant au loin;
J’entendais chuchoter des voix exténuées,
Et je voyais passer dans les blêmes nuées
Des fantômes mêlés aux visions des airs;
Le vent sur la montagne au milieu des éclairs
Tordait les cheveux gris d’un prophète terrible.

LV Quand... au milieu de la nuit,

Quand... au milieu de la nuit,
Surpris par un mari chez une belle, Horace
S’enfuit, en laissant choir ses grègues sur sa trace,
Et conte l’aventure à son valet mignon
Dans des vers que Boileau lisait à Lamoignon,
Il ne se doute pas, en riant avec Dave,
Lui, le sage, qui traite en ami son esclave
Et qui parle en égal à Jupiter tonnant,
Il ne se doute pas qu’il touche en badinant
Au problème insondé de l’homme et de la femme;
Qu’il est des droits profonds que l’avenir réclame;
Que tout marche, et qu’un jour l’inquiet genre humain,
De l’amour mieux’ compris faisant sortir l’hymen,
Osera secouer la vieille chaîne noire
Du coeur, libre d’aimer comme l’esprit de croire.

LVI Quand le soleil d'avril rit

Quand le soleil d'avril rit à travers les feuilles,
Quand, d'un regard charmant, joyeuse, tu, m'accueilles,
Je sens un feu divin dans mon coeur s'allumer;
Sans l'amour, sans la foi, notre âme serait, noire.
Dieu ne l'a pas voulu. La nature fait croire,
La femme fait aimer.

Il avril 1843.

LVII Oh! pour le reste de ta vie,

Oh! pour le reste de ta vie,
Qu’on nous plaigne ou qu’on nous envie,
Tant que nos coeurs se comprendront,
Puisse une sereine pensée,
A ton chevet toujours fixée,
Poser ses ailes sur ton front!

LVIII Figurez-vous un beau front triomphant

Figurez-vous un beau front triomphant,
Un frais sourire en une- fraîche bouche,
Un oeil limpide, innocent et farouche
Dont la paupière en amande se fend..
Elle était gaie et rose, grande et belle.
Je respirais à peine devant elle,
Tout fier d’être homme èt tout sot d’être enfant.

LIX Elle est gaie et pensive

Elle est gaie et pensive; elle nous fait songer
A tout ce qui reluit malgré de sombres voiles,
Aux bois pleins de rayons, aux nuits pleines d’étoiles.
L’esprit en la voyant s’en va je ne sais où.
Elle a tout ce qui peut rendre un pauvre homme fou.
Tantôt c’est un enfant, tantôt c’est une reine.
Hélas! quelle beauté radieuse et sereine!
Elle a de fiers dédains, de charmantes faveurs,
Un regard doux et bleu sous de longs cils rêveurs,
L’innocence, et l’amour qui salis tristesse encore
Flotte empreint sur son front comme une vague aurore,
Et puis je ne sais quoi dé calme et de vainqueur!
Et le ciel dans ses yeux met l’enfer dans mon coeur!

LX N’écoutez pas, mon ange,

N’écoutez pas, mon ange, en votre rêverie,
Paris aux mille voix qui là-bas pleure et crie.
Entends plutôt mon coeur qui parle à ton côté.
Ecoute-le chanter pendant que tu reposes.
Va, les soupirs d’un coeur disent bien plus de choses
Que les rumeurs d’une cité!

14 mai 1834. Butte Montmartre,
5 heures après midi.

LXI Relève ton beau front,

Relève ton beau front, assombri par instants;
Il faut se réjouir, car voièi le printemps:
Avril, saison dorée où parmi les zéphyres,
Les parfums, les chansons, les baisers, les sourires,
Et tous ces doux propos qu’on tient à. demi-voix,
L’amour revient au coeur comme l’ombrage au bois.

13 janvier 1839.

LXII Janvier est revenu.

Janvier est revenu. Ne crains rien, noble femme!
Qu’importe l’an qui passe et ceux qui passeront!
Mon amour toujours jeune est en fleur dans mon âme;
Ta beauté toujours jeune est en fleur sur ton front.
Sois toujours grave et douce, ô toi que j’idolâtre;
Que ton humble auréole éblouisse les yeux!
Comme on verse un lait pur dans un vase d’albâtre,
Emplis de dignité ton coeur religieux.

Brave le temps qui fuit. Ta beauté te protège.
Brave l’hiver. Bientôt mai sera de retour.
Dieu, pour effacer l’âge et pour fondre la neige,
Nous rendra le printemps et nous laisse l’amour.

1, janvier 1842.

LXIII Oh! de mon ardente fièvre

Oh! de mon ardente fièvre
Un baiser peut me guérir.
Laisse ma lèvre à ta lèvre
S’attacher pour y mourir.

Ta bouche, c’est le ciel même.
Mon âme veut s’y poser.
Puisse mon souffle suprême
S’en aller dans un baiser!

LXIV Ne vous contentez pas, madame, d’être belle

Ne vous contentez pas, madame, d’être belle.
Notre coeur vieillit mal s’il ne se renouvelle.
Il faut songer, penser, lire, avoir de l’esprit.
Être, pendant dix ans, une rose qui rit,
Cela passe.. - La vie est une triste chose,
Un travail de ruine et de métamorphose
Qui fait d’une beauté sortir une laideur.
Fixez votre oeil charmant, parfois un peu boudeur,
Sur les deux termes sûrs d’une vie achevée,
Sur le point de départ et le point d’arrivée,
Chemin que parcourront, hélas! vos pas tremblants,
— Dents blanches, cheveux noirs; - dents noires, cheveux blancs!
Moi, j’estime la femme, humble et sage personne,
Qui ne s’éblouit pas, belle, veut être bonne,
Songe à la saison dure ainsi que les fourmis,
Et qui fait pour l’hiver provision d’amis.
Vieillir, c’est remplacer par la clarté la flamme;
Le coeur doit lentement rentrer derrière l’âme.

LXV Âme que j’ai trouvée

Âme que j’ai trouvée ainsi qu’un diamant!
O noble esprit, jaloux, chaste, superbe, aimant!
Vous que l’amour fait reine et la beauté déesse,
Qui souffrez cependant et qui doutez sans cesse,
Qui vous cachez, plaintive et cruelle à la fois,
Et, comme les lions, fuyez au fond des bois,
Madame, en même temps si charmante et si rude!
Oh! si des profondeurs de votre solitude,
De ces vastes forêts où vous songez en vain,
Votre regard pensif, défiant et divin,
Pouvait comme un rayon pénétrer dans mon âme,
Si vous la pouviez voir telle qu’elle est, madame,
Dieu le sait, ô bel ange à qui manque la foi,
Tu ne trouverais rien dans cette ombre que toi!
Que toi, toujours bénie et toujours adorée,
Ton image, d’amour et d’orgueil entourée,
Ton nom, ton souvenir vivant,’sacré, vainqueur,
Et mon coeur sombre et doux brisé par ton grand coeur!

10 mars.

LXVI Ô souvenirs!

Ô souvenirs! beaux jours, douces heures passées!
Rappelle-toi ce ciel, ces mers, ces grands tableaux,
Quand nous laissions errer, confondant nos pensées,
Nos pas sur lés rochers, nos âmes sur les flots!

Saint-Valéry-sur-Somme, 1849.

LXVII Doux ami,

— Doux ami, quand j’aurai quitté la chair mortelle,
Ne me fais remplacer par personne! dit-elle.
Pas d’autre amante! - Et grave, elle ajouta ce mot,
Les yeux levés au ciel: Car j’en mourrais là-haut.

LXVIII Vent du soir!

Vent du soir! dont le vol nous courbe tous ensemble,
Respecte le blé d’or plein des rayons du jour,
Respecte tous les coeurs où quelque flamme tremble,
Mais jette où tu voudras, emporte où bon te semble
La paille sans épi, la femme sans amour!

LXIX Quand je ne serai plus qu’une cendre glacée

Quand je ne serai plus qu’une cendre glacée,
Quand mes yeux fatigués seront fermés au jour,
Dis-toi, si dans ton coeur ma mémoire est fixée:
Le monde a sa pensée,
Moi, j’avais son amour!

LXX C’était la première soirée

I

C’était la première soirée
  Du mois d’avril.
Je m’en souviens, mon adorée.
  T’en souvient-il?

Nous errions dans la ville immense,
  Tous deux, sans bruit,
À l’heure où le repos commence
  Avec la nuit!

Heure calme, charmante, austère,
  Où le soir naît!
Dans cet ineffable mystère
  Tout rayonnait,

Tout! l’amour dans tes yeux sans voile,
  Fiers, ingénus!
Aux vitres mainte pauvre étoile,
  Au ciel Vénus!

Notre-Dame, parmi les dômes
  Des vieux faubourgs,
Dressait comme deux grands fantômes
  Ses grandes tours.

La Seine, découpant les ombres
  En angles noirs,
Faisait luire sous les ponts sombres
  De clairs miroirs.

L’oeil voyait sur la plage amie
  Briller ses eaux

Comme une couleuvre endormie
  Dans les roseaux.

Et les passants, le long des grèves
  Où l’onde fuit,
Étaient vagues comme les rêves
  Qu’on a la nuit!

Je te disais: - « Clartés bénies,
  Bruits lents et doux,
Dieu met toutes les harmonies
  Autour de nous!

Aube qui luit, soir qui flamboie,
  Tout a son tour;
Et j’ai l’âme pleine de joie,
  Ô mon amour!

Que m’importe que la nuit tombe,
  Et rende, ô Dieu!
Semblable au plafond d’une tombe
  Le beau ciel bleu!

Que m’importe que Paris dorme,
  Ivre d’oubli,
Dans la brume épaisse et sans forme
  Enseveli!

Que m’importe, aux heures nocturnes
  Où nous errons,
Les ombres qui versent leurs urnes
  Sur tous les fronts,

Et, noyant de leurs plis funèbres
  L’âme et le corps,
Font les vivants dans les ténèbres
  Pareils aux morts!

Moi, lorsque tout subit l’empire
  Du noir sommeil,
J’ai ton regard, j’ai ton sourire,
  J’ai le soleil!

Je te parlais, ma bien-aimée;
  Ô doux instants!
Ta, main pressait ma main charmée.
  Puis, bien longtemps,

Nous nous regardions pleins de flamme,
  Silencieux,
Et l’âme répondait à l’âme,
  Les yeux aux yeux!

Sous tes cils une larme obscure
  Brillait parfois;
Puis ta voix parlait, tendre et pure,
  Après ma voix,

Comme on entend dans la coupole
  Un double écho;
Comme après un oiseau s’envole
  Un autre oiseau.

Tu disais: « Je suis calme et fière,
  Je t’aime! oui!”
Et je rêvais à ta lumière
  Tout, ébloui!

Oh! ce fut une heure sacrée,
  T’en souvient-il?
Que cette première soirée
  Du mois d’avril!

Tout en disant toutes les choses,

Tous les discours
Qu’on dit dans la saison des roses
Et des amours,

Nous allions, contemplant dans l’onde
Et dans l’azur
Cette lune qui jette au monde
Son rayon pur,

Et qui, d’en haut, sereine comme
Un front dormant,
Regarde le bonheur de l’homme
Si doucement!
II

Tu disais: « Ô soleils sans nombre!
Nuit! ciel en feu!
Dans vos clartés et dans votre ombre,
Tout monte à Dieu.

Rien ne se perd! Cendre, étincelle,
Ramier, vautour,
Le moindre battement d’une aile
Ou d’un amour,

Le chant du nid qui sous la feuille
Va s’assoupir,
Du coeur pensif qui se recueille
Chaque soupir,

Les rêves de l’âme enivrée,
Du front qui bout;
La nature immense et sacrée
Retrouve tout!

Car tout suit sa loi grave et douce!
Tout à la fois!

L’herbe verdit, la branche pousse
  Au fond des bois,

La nuit endort les champs, la foule,
  Les mers, les monts,
Le vent fuit, l’astre luit, l’eau coule,
  Et nous aimons!

Nous aimons parce que nous sommes!
  C’est notre voeu!
Aimer, c’est vivre loin des hommes
  Et près de Dieu!

C’est s’ouvrir à la clarté pure,
  Comme la fleur!
C’est sentir toute la nature
  Vivre en son coeur!

C’est accomplir le code auguste
  D’Éden naissant
Que suivait devant le ciel juste
  L’homme innocent!

Soyons heureux, ô toi que j’aime!
  Bravons le sort!
Car seuls à cette heure suprême,
  Seuls quand tout dort;

Dédaignant d’un monde où tout tremble
  Les bonheurs vains,
Sûrs d’être en paix avec l’ensemble
  Des faits divins,

Comme en un temple où l’ombre rampe
  Devant nos pas,
On suit la lueur d’une lampe
  Qu’on ne voit pas,

Nous sentons sur notre âme fière,
  Tout en rêvant,
L’oeil sans sommeil, l’oeil sans paupière
  Du Dieu vivant!

Va, dans mon coeur rien ne chancelle.
  Sois mon époux.
La conscience universelle
  Est avec nous!

Donnons-nous à l’amour! - Écoute,
  Soupirs, concerts,
Pervenche du bord de la route,
  Perle des mers,

La mousse en avril épaissie
  Des bois dormants,
Les sourires, la poésie,
  Les pleurs charmants,

Le bleu du ciel, le vert de l’onde,
  L’éclat du jour,
Les belles choses de ce monde
  Sont à l’amour!

C’est l’amour qui tient tolite chose,
  Et fait d’un mot
Épanouir ici la rose,
  L’astre là-haut.

C’est lui qui veut qu’on ne commande
  Qu’à deux genoux!
C’est lui qui fait la femme grande
  Et l’homme doux!

Ainsi tu parlais, et sans doute,

Dieu t’inspirait;
Car j’écoutais comme on écoute
Dans la forêt,

Quand Dieu se mêle à la nature,
Au bruit des vents,
Quand il parle dans le murmure
Des bois vivants!

Août 1844.

LXXI Ton beau front s’est penché

Ton beau front s’est penché comme une fleur froissée;
J’ai senti tressaillir ta pauvre âme blessée;
Oh! dors, et songe à moi, doux ange au coeur profond!
Pendant que ta veilleuse argente tdn plafond,
Laisse passer devant tes paupières baissées
Les rêves souriants, ombres de mes pensées,
Et demain, quand le ciel ramènera le jour,
Tourne tes yeux vers l’aube et ton coeur vers l’amour!

Minuit. En rentrant.
9 novembre.

LXXII GUITARE

Vous avez, madame, une grâce exquise,
Une douceur noble, un bel enjouement,
Un regard céleste, un bonnet charmant,
L’air d’une déesse et d’une marquise.

Vos attraits piquants, fiers et singuliers,
Dignes des Circés, dignes des Armides,
Font lever les yeux même aux plus timides
Et baisser le ton aux plus familiers.

La nuit, quand je vois, dans les cieux sans voiles,
Les étoiles-d’or, mon coeur songe à vous;
Le jour, jeune belle aux regards si doux,
Lorsque je vous vois, je songe aux étoiles.

30 septembre 1844.

LXXIII Quand je veux savoir

Quand je veux savoir vos douleurs secrètes,
Vous dites, ô belle aux yeux adorés:
— « Je ne puis sortir des lieux où vous êtes;
Vous êtes mon maître!” - Et puis vous pleurez.

Et vous reprenez: «Quoi! sans récompense
Mes jours près de vous s’usent à souffrir!
Je veux vous quitter, mais, lorsque j’y pense,
Je ne sais pourquoi je me sens mourir!”

Le même esclavage, ô belle, est le nôtre;
De vous jusqu’à moi la chaîne revient;
Nous ne sommes pas libres l’un ni l’autre;
Je vous tiens; madame, et le sort me tient.

Vous êtes à bord, et je suis, la barque:
Oui, comprends-moi bien, mes discours sont vrais,
Cet homme qui t’aime, esclave et monarque,
Est un dur navire aux sombres agrès.

Il emporte au loin votre coeur, votre âme;
Il est emporté par le gouffre amer!
Vous ne pouvez pas en sortir, madame,
Et lui ne peut pas sortir de la mer.

Il subit l’autan, le nord, l’hiver, l’onde;
Souvent sur l’écueil on le croit perdu
L’eau s’en joue, et quand la tempête gronde,
Dans l’oragè noir il passe éperdu!

Il lutte; les vents n’épargnent-personne.
En se rappelant maint naufrage ancien,
S’ur les vastes mers il flotte, il frissonne.
Il est votre maître et n’ést: pas le sien.

11 novembre 1847.

Vivre, aimer, tout est; là, le reste est ignorance;
Et la création est une transparence;
L’univers laisse voir toujours le même:sceau,
L’amour, dans le soleil ainsi que-dans l’oiseau;
Nos sens sont des conseils: des voix sont dans les choses;
Ces voix disent: Beautés, faites comme les roses;
Faites comme les nids, amants! Avril vainqueur
Sourit. Laissez le ciel vous entrer dans le coeur.

LXXV À ANDRÉ CHÉNIER

.
Tout à coup j'entendis s'éveiller ma voisine.
J'avais seize ans, bel âge où tous les chérubins
Rôdent, tâchant de voir par les vitres des bains,
Où la soutane est lourde et brûle les lévites,
L'âge que vous aviez, mon André, quand vous vîtes
Un beau matin, du fond de son réduit obscur,
Grâce à ces accidents de terrain ou de mur
Que le hasard nous offre avec quelque avarice,
Sortir du lit Myrrha, qui s'appelait Clarisse;
Bref, je fis comme vous, mon doux André Chénier,
Et j'appliquai mon oeil aux fentes du grenier.
Elle bâillait, laissant entrevoir ses épaules;
Puis, comme une naïade ondoyant sous les saules,
Par je ne sais quel brusque et naïf mouvement,
Rapide, elle écarta son drap si vaguement
Que l'oeil ne savait pas si ce charmant manège
Découvrait de la chair ou montrait de la neige.
L'aube, à côté de nous, dorait le vieux portail;
Elle regarda l'aube; - ici, Muse, un détail.
Soit qu'elle ignorât l'art de l'exquise indécence;
Soit qu'étant gens voisins de l'antique innocence
On n'eût point fait alors ce progrès triomphal
D'avoir plus de dentelle encore au lit qu'au bal;
Soit que la pauvre enfant n'eût pas même un centime
Dans son chétif budget pour la parure intime;
Soit manque d'idéal; soit enfin qu'Alizon,
Simple, n'eût pas prévu ces trous à la cloison;
Soit pour toute autre cause, à votre choix, poète,
Sa toilette de nuit était fort peu coquette.
Un cordon lui serrait le cou lugubrement;
On devinait son sein divin, son dos charmant,
Mais mon vers, obligé de peindre, se désole
De les empaqueter dans une camisole;

Un serre-tête plat lui pressait les cheveux;
Et je dois confesser, pour clore ces aveux,
Que son bras, qu’eût chanté la nymphe de Sicile,
Se dérobait aux-yeux sous un linge imbécile:

LXXVI À DES BAIGNEUSES

Ô femmes, la pudeur, c’est la honte sacrée:
Le lieu sombre et divin qui rayonne et qui crée,
Cette chair sous laquelle on aperçoit l’esprit,
Le ventre qui féconde et le sein qui nourrit,
Sont des mystères pleins d’épouvante et de charme.
C’est pourquoi votre oeil roule une céleste larme;
C’est pourquoi vous cherchez, loin des pas et des voix,
Ô baigneuses, l’abri silencieux des bois.
La nature sauvage et profonde vous couvre.
Votre robe inquiete en tressaillant s’entr’ouvre,
Puis tombe, et vous avez, le dernier voile ôté,
Peur de votre lumièré et de votre beauté.
Si quelqu’un me voyait! dit la nymphe ingénue..
Comme c’est effrayant d’être une aurore nue!
Et vous avez raison, belles, de vous cacher..
Vos corps exquis, plus frais que la fleur du pêcher,
Frémiraient du regard d’un passant, faune. infâme
Qui cherche la matière au lieu de chercher l’âme.
A toute belle chose il-faut un vêtement.
L’oeil de l’homme toujours guette en quoi se dément
La beauté, la vertu, le génie, et s’attache,
Sinistre, à la splendeur pour y trouver la tache.
Toute clarté, pour fuir l’offense de nos yeux,
S’enveloppe d’un pli chaste et mystérieux,
Et l’on se sent farouche alors qu’on est suprême
Et voilà pourquoi Dieu, sachant que l’astre même
A sa pudeur, et veut un voile auguste et pur,
Met sur la nudité des étoiles l’azur.

15 juillet 1876

LXXVII LUCIO

Plaire à deux yeux charmants, c’est le but de ma vie.
Pour toute ambition; j’ai cette douce envie.
Je souhaiterais tout à la fois dans les cieux.

Oui. Mais au fond, pourquoi? pour plaire à deux beaux yeux.
Descendre du vieux Cid ou d’Amadis de Gaule;
Briller à l’oeil-de-boeuf faire sur son épaule
Ondoyer une étoile aux plis de son manteau;
Avoir chevaux, piqueurs, chiens, carrosse, château;
Etre beau, jeune, riche et grand par la naissance,
Patrice de Venise ou duc et pair de France;
Etre homme de génie au front large et sacré,
Calomnié de tous et de tous admiré;
Que sais-je! être empereur! - tout cela, sur mon âme,
Représente pour moi le regard d’une femme.

LXXVIII Vous souffrez ici-bas

Vous souffrez ici-bas mille maux nuit et jour,
Sans cesse, et pauvres gens, vous dites: c’est l’amour.
Erreur. L’amour n’est pas le mal, c’est le remède.
Toujours de quelque belle, et souvent, que Dieu m’aide!
De plusieurs à la fois je suis le prisonnier.
Je vis au carnaval deux filles l’an dernier.
L’une était ragusaine et l’autre bergamasque.
Leur rire épanoui rayonnait sous leur masque,
Et l’on voyait flamber des yeux sous leurs deux loups,
Dont les charbons ardents eussent été jaloux.
Quel éblouissement de voir ces créatures!
Leurs regards étoilés étaient pleins d’aventures;
Leurs petits doigts semblaient jouer, doux et moqueurs,
D’un clavier invisible où vibraient tous les coeurs.
Le satin était bure auprès de leurs épaules.
Les plus hardis faquins et les plus joyeux drôles
Leur parlaient un moment, sans y songer du tout,
Et devenaient rêveurs et bêtes tout à coup.

LXXIX Bon! voilà son esprit qui part!

..
Bon! voilà son esprit qui part! - Ô cavaliers,
Piquez des deux! Marins, faites force de voiles!
Vive araignée, étends tes plus subtiles toiles!
Aigles chasseurs, volez aussi prompts que l’éclair!
Bien! hâtez-vous! allez! - Ni dans l’eau, ni dans l’air,
Vous ne pourrez jamais, quoique vous alliez vite,
Suivre, atteindre, saisir et ramener au gîte
La raison d’une- femme alors qu’elle s’en va!

LXXX PORTRAIT

Foin de cet orateur, pédant enchifrené
De qui l’esprit ne sort qu’en passant par son né!
Son éloquence humide abonde en longs filandres.
Quand ce bavard, pour mettre un terme à nos esclandres,
Paraît, blême et bouffi d’un ennui colossal,
A la tribune, orné de son courroux nasal,
Vous attendez qu’il tonne et moi qu’il éternue.
Quoi! du nasillement l’heure est-elle venue!
Oh! le puissant tribun qui fait que les partis,
Quand il parle, oubliant griefs, voëux, appétits,
Et toi, Liberté sainte, aujourd’hui prisonnière,
Pensent à leur mouéhoir et non à leur bannière!
Soit; émerveillez-vous! Fort bien, criez: bravo!
Moi je n’admire pas ce rhumé de cerveau..
Certes, ce coryza, je l’avoue, est énorme,
Stupéfiant, tenace à rendre un nez difforme,
Monstrueux, magnifique, horrible, point bénin;
Le rhume est d’un titan, mais le cerveau d’un nain.
Vous n’êtes pas sensible à la prose, jeune homme.
Il vous faut le vers. Soit. L’art s’accommode en somme
De la prose aussi bien que du vers, et Pascal.
Vaut Corneille. Pourtant le vers, pontifical, ..
Monte dans plus d’âzur et sur un plus haut faîte,
Et le penseur en prose, en vers devient prophète.
Donc préférons le vers: C’est un plus fier démon.
Mais la prose, Tacite, Arouet, Saint-Simon,
Est plus humaine étant moins divine, et, superbe,
Est la Parole, alors que la strophe est le-Verbe.
Aimons l’esprit humain complet, et l’art entier.

LXXXII Mes strophes sont comme les balles

Mes strophes sont comme les balles
Aux coups meurtriers et fréquents.
Mes deux rimes sont deux cymbales
Qui sonnent sur le front des camps.
Lorsqu’on les entend, tout tressaille;
Le soldat rêve la bataille;
L’éclair sort des bronzes tonnants;
Les cavaliers à l’oeil austère
Sentent sous les housses de guerre
Trembler leurs chevaux frissonnants.

LXXXIII Quiconque pense,

Quiconque pense, illustre, obscur, sifflé, vainqueur,
Grand ou petit, exprime en son livre son coeur.
Ce que nous écrivons de nos plumes d'argile,
Soit sur le livre d'or comme le doux Virgile,
Soit comme Alighieri sur la bible de fer,
Est notre propre flamme et notre propre chair.
Le livre est à ce point l'auteur, et le poëme
Le poëte, notre oeuvre est tellement nous-même,
Nous la sentons en nous si mêlée à nos pleurs,
A notre sang, si bien faite de nos douleurs
Et si profondément dans nos os pénétrante,
Que lorsqu'il arriva qu'en l'an mil huit cent trente
Mademoiselle Mars, Firmin et Joanny
Pour la première fois jouèrent Hernani,
J'eus un frémissement de pudeur violée.
Jusqu'à ce moment-là, dans une ombre étoilée,
Ruy, Carlos, le bandit, le cor de la forêt,
Doua Sol pâle, étaient mon rêve et mon secret;
Je leur parlais au fond des extases farouches, ,
Je voyais remuer distinctement leurs bouches,
Je vivais tête-à-tête, ému d'un vague effroi,
Avec ce monde obscur qui se mouvait en moi.
La foule s'y ruant me parut un supplice.
Il me sembla quand, seul derrière la coulisse,
Je vis Faure crier au machiniste: Va,
Et lorsqu'en frissonnant la toile se leva,
Que devant tout ce peuple immense aux yeux de flamme
Je sentais se lever la jupe de mon âme.

Jersey, septembre 1852.

LXXXIV L’Inconnu,

L’Inconnu, ce quelqu’un qu’on distingue dans l’ombre,
Prend les poètes, joue avec leur âme sombre,
Emplit leurs yeux profonds de la lueur des soirs,
Et donne à, deviner à ces OEdipes noirs
Le bien, le mal, l’enfer, Dieu, l’amour, les désastres;
Ce mystérieux sphinx, dont les yeux sont deux astres,
Mêle l’immense énigme au clavier de leurs vers,
Les ouvre ou les referme ou les laisse entr’ouverts,
Et pose en souriant ses griffes contractiles
Sur le spondée auguste et sur les frais dactyles,
De sorte qu’on les sent pleins d’un charme hideux;
Et, voyant le problème horrible trop près d’eux,
Craignant d’être emportés sur de trop rudes faîtes,
Les poètes ont peur de devenir prophètes.

LXXXV Le prophète et le poète

Le prophète et le poète
Affirment l’être au néant;
La terre écoute inquiète
Cet archange et ce géant;
La foule aux vils dialogues,
Ce tas de loups et de dogues
Qui, rôdent sous le ciel bleu,
Tout ce noir troupeau qui nie
Aboie après le génie
Interlocuteur de Dieu.

Toute la sombre cohue
Des errants et des vivants
Craint les penseurs; elle hue
Ces grands fronts, battus des vents;
Elle s’écrié en sa haine:
«D’où vient qu’ils n’ont pas de chaîne,
Et planent quand nous fuyons?
D’où vient que leurs coeurs flambôient?
Qu’est-ce donc que leurs yeux voient,
Pour avoir tant de rayons?”

Quand les grands aigles fidèles
Dans l’âpre nuit sans amour .   -
Vont, donnant de fiers coups d’ailes
Du côté du point du jour,
L’ombre aveugle, l’ombre athée,
Invective, épouvantée,
Ces passants à l’oeil vermeil
Qui troublent sa solitude
Avec leur vieille habitude
De regarder le soleil.

1 janvier 1854,

LXXXVI Poëtes, si le monde avait une âme encor

Poëtes, si le monde avait une âme encor,
Sur vos lèvres sereines
Reviendraient se poser ou des abeilles d’or
Ou des baisers de reines!

Vous verriez, comme l’aigle au front du mont grondant,
S’ouvrir pour votre extase
Les deux chevaux ailés, ou l’Hippogriffe ardent,
Ou l’effrayant Pégase.

LXXXVII Voici les Apennins,

Voici les Apennins, les Alpes et les Andes.
Tais-toi, passant, devant ces visions si grandes.
Silence, homme! histrion! Les monts contemplent Dieu;
Ils regardent, penchés au bord du gouffre bleu,
Comme des spectateurs sur un gradin sublime,
Le drame formidable et sombre de l’abîme,
L’entrée et la sortie étrange de la nuit,
Ces personnages noirs, le vent, l’éclair, le bruit,
La comète, ange obscur dont vous voyez le glaive,
Le rideau de l’azur qui pour le jour se lève,
Les chutes, les terreurs, les chocs, les dénouements
Des mondes engloutis dans les chaos fumants,
Et les astres masqués, et les apocalypses
Des grands spectres du ciel, des aubes, des éclipses.
Pour eux ce que la terre et ses fantômes font
N’est qu’un peu de fumée et dans l’ombre se fond;
Pour eux l’homme n’est pas, un peuple s’évapore.
De la lave éternelle effrayant madrépore,
Vésuve ignore Naple; Etna qu’un feu détruit
Ne connaît pas Messine et parle avec la nuit;
Olympe ne voit pas Athènes, pour Soracte
Des grandeurs de là-haut Rome n’est que l’entr’acte;
Balkan, sans .voir Stamboul, chante son noir salem;
Sina voit l’infini, mais non Jérusalem.
Tout homme est un grain de poussière.
Pourquoi suivre des yeux chaque atome incertain?
De l’humanité tout entière,
Rêveur, je sonde le destin.
Sans condamner le pire et sans railler le moindre,
Je contemple ce qui va poindre,
J’observe ce qui va finir.
Comme la plaine au soir s’emplit d’ombres énormes,
Je vois dans ma pensée errer toutes les formes
Du vague et lointain avenir.

LXXXIX Ce monde, fête ou deuil,

Ce monde, fête ou deuil, palais ou galetas,
Est chimérique, faux, ondoyant, plein d’un tas
De spectres vains, qu’on nomme Amour, Orgueil, Envie.
L’immense ciel bleu pend, tiré sur l’autre vie.
Le vrai drame, où dejà nos coeurs sont rattâchés,
Les personnages vrais, hélas! nous sont cachés
Par ce ciel dont la mort est le noir machiniste.
Le sage sur le sort s’accoude, calme et triste,
Content d’un peu de pain et d’une goutte d’eau,
Et, pensif, il attend le lever du rideau.

15 octobre 1854.

XC Il faut que le poète,

Il faut que le poète, en sa dignité sainte,
Comme un dieu-boit le fiel sache boire l’absinthe,
Qu’il marche’gravement par son oeuvre absorbé,
Comme le laboureur sur le sillon courbé,
Oubliant les frelons dont l’essaim l’environne,
Et les insectes noirs qui mordent sa couronne.
Il sied que le poète, à toute heure obsédé,
Sur le jaloux rhéteur à sa chaire accoudé,
Sur l’obscur pamphlétaire accroupi dans son bouge,
Imprime son dédain quoiqu’il ait un fer rouge!
Mais il est bon parfois qu’entouré d’envieux,
Il songe aux ennemis d’un maître illustre et vieux,
Qu’il tire de l’oubli qui sur leurs fronts retombe
Tous ces vils Bavius 1s enfouis dans la tombe,
Et que sa main, tardive ainsi que le remords,
Fasse pour les vivants un exemple des morts!

XCI Je voudrais qu’on trouvât tout simple

Je voudrais qu’on trouvât tout simple qu’un rêveur,
Las des faux biens, qui n’ont qu’une ingrate saveur,
Cherche l’ombre et devienne une face tournée
Vers l’inconnu dont est pleine la destinée.
Je ne m’explique point qu’on ne comprenne pas
Qu’un homme, après avoir pris ses quatre repas,
Bu, mangé, dormi, dit des choses inutiles,
Goûté dans vingt journaux à tous les mauvais styles,
Et refait tous les riens que les gens graves font,
N’est point pour cela quitte avec le ciel profond.
Souvent, j’ai dit, pensif, les coudes sur ma table,
Qu’une chose appelée honneur est véritable,
Que l’âme est, et qu’il faut sur terre avant tout voir
Non le bonheur, ô noirs vivants, mais le devoir.
Et puisque vous parlez de rêveurs, sachez, hommes,
Qu’entre la libre Sparte et les lâches Sodomes,
Nous laissant le choix, calme, invisible, écoutant,
Dans l’abîme un songeur immense nous attend.
A l’homme la souffrance, à lui la patience.
J’affirme qu’une haute et juste conscience
Met tout en mouvement dans ces grands flots du sort
Dont nous sommes battus quand notre barque sort.
Sans cette probité suprême qui gouverne,
Le monde ne serait qu’une affreuse caverne
D’ombre, de vents, d’écueils, de démence et de bruit,
Et nous devons tâcher d’élever, dans la nuit,
L’âme humaine au niveau de cette âme divine.
Lier ce qu’on démontre avec ce qu’on devine,
Chercher l’aube à travers les mornes épaisseurs,
Telle est la fonction sévère des penseurs.
Au-dessous d’eux les noirs événements se brisent.
Et quant à ce que font, et quant à ce que disent
Tous ceux qui de régner commettent l’attentat,
Rois, empereurs, valets de la raison d’état,

Chefs d’armée ou de peuple, imans, vizirs, ministres,
Princes, tas monstrueux de tout-puissants sinistres,
Considérant les coeurs, les haines, les effrois,
Les faits; chaos farouche et plein d’obscures lois,
Et le flux et reflux formidable où nous sommes,
J’estime que l’effort énorme de ces hommes
Laisse à peu près la trace, en nos destins amers,
Que laisse un cri d’oiseau dans la rumeur des mers.

3 septembre 1872.

XCII PLANÈTES

Dans nos noirs firmaments, cieux des mondes maudits,
Sombre loi, les enfers pèsent aux paradis.
Chacun de ces foyers que l’ombre a dans ses voiles,
Qui de près sont soleils et de loin sont étoiles,
A des fourmillements de globes ténébreux,
Terres, lunes, anneaux, mondes noirs et nombreux,
Mêlés aux longs fils d’or de sa vaste lumière.
Morne expiation d’une faute première!
Tous ces grands chevelus des feux et des rayons,
Les soleils à la face énorme, ces lions
De l’abîme, accroupis au seuil des bleus pilastres,
Dans leur crinière immense ont des vermines d’astres.

XCIII Comme on a hors de soi

Comme on a hors de soi ce prodigieux monde
Tournant autour d’un centre où la lumière abonde,
Et d’où sortent la vie, et l’aurore et la loi,
Et comme en même temps. on porte un centre en soi
Autour duquel le monde intérieur gravite,
Pour peu qu’on réfléchisse et pour peu qu’on médite,
On sent l’identité de l’âme et du soleil.

XCIV Une sorte de vague énorme,

Une sorte de vague énorme, errante et souple,
Nous enveloppe, et tout dans cette onde s'accouple.
C'est, à travers ce flot qu'on entrevoit au loin
L'oeil fixe et lumineux de Pan, sombre témoin.
C'est le chaos, j'y tremble; et c'est l'ordre, j'y pense.
J'y sens du châtiment et de la récompense.
Et je vais le plus droit que je peux devant moi.
Je crois. C'est en amour que se dissout l'effroi.
Dans cet ensemble, vrai quoique visionnaire.
Tout a sa place; un cèdre, un brin d'herbe; un tonnerre
Passe, et n'a pas le droit de faire taire un nid
Qui, comme lui, comprend l'abîme et le bénit.
Nul du concert sacré n'est exclu. On écoute.
La nature au milieu de l'ombre parle toute;
L'effet rend témoignage à la cause; penché
Sur tout ce vaste hymen qu'on nomme à tort péché,
L'homme songe; il entend les êtres et les choses,
Les monstres chevelus, les oiseaux aux becs roses,
Tous, terribles, charmants, pêle-mêle, en tout lieu,
A toute heure, à la fois, chanter ou rugir Dieu.
Un hymne immense sort de cet immense rêve;
L'alouette l'ébauche et le lion l'achève.

18 juin 1870.

XCV Le sépulcre géant d’étoiles se compose

Le sépulcre géant d’étoiles se compose.
Poète, tu l’as dit, la mort n’est autre chose
Qu’un formidable azur d’astres illuminé.
O poète, toi-même as jadis deviné
Que nous, les noirs gardiens des espaces sans borne,
Nous livrions aux morts leur sérénité morne,
Et que, dans le dedans du cercueil, nous faisions
Pendre les lustres d’or des constellations.
Oui, la fosse contient tous les astres du rêve;
Meurs et vois! De la nuit le couvercle se lève.
Sombre éblouissement! Les morts mystérieux
Laissent de sphère en sphère errer leurs vagues yeux,
Et dressent, effarés, leur regard taciturne’
Dans les dômes sans fond du grand palais nocturne;
La mort, c’est l’ouverture effrayante des cieux;
L’immense firmament, tranquille et monstrueux,
Où vibre d’astre en astre un hymne séraphique,
Emplit de ses soleils la tombe magnifique.

XCVI À ce point de la vie

À ce point de la vie où je suis arrivé,
L’insulte offense peu; cette chose qu’on nomme
Le laurier d’un poète ou la gloire d’un homme
Dépend de l’avenir, non des contemporains.
Les louanges, ayant les affronts pour refrains,
Sont trop près d’un tombeau pour y faire grand’çhose.
Et désormais ce bruit, injure, apothéose,
Doit par le penseur calme et grave, être écouté
Dans les lointaines voix de la postérité;
Car l’avenir seul dit le mot superbe ou sombre
Qui détrône une idole ou fait un dieu d’une ombre.

XCVII Ô consul, toi qui peux dire

Ô consul, toi qui peux dire: - J’ai dans l’histoire
Ce hasard, c’est que, j’ai le pouvoir sans la gloire,
Nul destin n’est pareil au mien, et j’ai vécu
Assez pour gouverner Rome, étant un vaincu;
Car ce sont lès vainqueurs qui règnent, d’ordinaire;
Et moi qui dans mes mains fis rater le tonnerre,
Je n’en suis pas moins dieu. - L’on t’admire, consul.
Rome, devant qui tremble Anubis, Irmensul,
Le Jéhovah des juifs, le Jupiter de Grèce,
Le Pont, la Perse, et l’Inde, et l’Afrique tigresse,
Tu la tiens sous tes pieds. Et l’on s’écrie: Honneur!
Nous te faisons cortège, ô consul, chef, seigneur!
Et pour te saluer, quand le Sénat te nomme,
Tous ceux à, qui plaît l’aube éternelle de Rome,
Son passé, son vieux mont par la foudre choisi,
Son histoire, sont là. - C’est vrai, j’y suis aussi;
Et, vieux romain, je dis, pendant que tes esclaves
T’entourent, quelques-uns vêtus de laticlaves,
Quand tu digères, seul sur ton lit de vermeil,
Lourd de toute-puissance et de demi-sommeil
Dans la salle splendide et sonore où tu dînes:
— Notre histoire me plaît, moins les Fourches Caudines.

5 avril 1874

XCVIII Ô destin!

Ô destin!
Toi par qui nous tombons et toi par qui nous sommes!
Grandes fatalités qui brisez les grands hommes!
Évènements qu’on voit dans l’ombre à tout moment
Broyer tout, séparant la paille du froment,
Mus par un vent dû ciel qui jamais ne repose,
Sans relâche occupés à moudre quelque chose,
Machine aux mille essieux, travaillant jour et nuit,
Dont je vois tourner l’aile et dont j’entends le bruit,
Ce hameau ne craint pas vos rouages difformes.
Le grain de mil échappe à vos meules énormes.

XCIX Z

(ÉPÎTRE.)
..
Il s’agit d’une fête à célébrer. C’est bon.
Comment s’y prendre afin d’avoir beaucoup de joie?
On a de l’argent bien; mais il faut qu’on l’emploie.
Vous avez une idée excellente: - Parbleu,
Illuminons la ville. Ayons tout au milieu
Un gros feu d’artifice avec des ifs superbes,
Des serpenteaux faisant de grands zigzags, des gerbes.
Comme ce sera beau! le ciel sera très noir. -
Vous ne songez qu’au feu que vous allez avoir;
L’eau se fâche, et voilà qu’il pleut sur vos fusées;
Vos lampions fumants empestent vos croisées.
Vos gerbes sous l’averse ont l’air de lumignons.
C’est fort beau tout de même en dépit des grognons
Qui bougonnent: « J’ai froid. C’est manqué. Ça m’assomme” .
Une autre bonne idée est de donner la somme
Entière, avec l’espoir que Dieu dira merci,
Aux pauvres; et notez cet avantage-ci,
C’est que le mauvais temps ne gâte point la fête.
Pour que l’humanité soit complète et divine,
C’est peu qu’elle triomphe, il faut qu’elle ait raison;
Heureux celui qui plaint les vaincus! il devine
Ce que pense quelqu’un derrière l’horizon.
Les vaincus d’on ne sait quelle guerre inconnue
Ce sont les animaux; vénérons leur malheur;
La victoire par trop d’orgueil se diminue,
Et l’on n’est le plus fort qu’en étant le meilleur.

D’ailleurs connaissons-nous les horizons de l’ombre?
Et nous, qui sommes-nous? Nos ports sont nos écueils.
Songeons au ciel; tâchons que cette aurore sombre
Si noire en nos berceaux, soit blanche en nos cercueils.

CI À UN HOMME PARTANT POUR LA CHASSE

Oui, l’homme est responsable et rendra compte un jour.
Sur cette terre où l’ombre et l’aurore ont leur tour,
Sois l’intendant de Dieu, mais l’intendant honnête.
Tremble de tout abus de pouvoir sur la bête.
Te figures-tu donc être un tel but final
Que tu puisses sans peur devenir infernal,
Vorace, sensuel, voluptueux, féroce,
Échiner le baudet, exténuer la rosse,
En lui crevant les yeux engraisser l’ortolan,
Et massacrer les bois trois ou quatre fois l’an?
Ce gai chasseur, armant son fusil ou son piège,
Confine à’ l’assassin et touche au sacrilège.
Penser, voilà ton but; vivre, voilà ton droit.
Tuer pour jouir, non. Crois-tu donc que ce soit
Pour -donner meilleur goût à la caille rôtie
Que le soleil ajoute une aigrette à l’ortie,
Peint la mûre, ou rougit la graine du sorbier?

Dieu qui fait les oiseaux ne fait pas le gibier.

CII Je te dis qu’il travaille

Je te dis qu’il travaille et travaille toujours,
Et que, rien qu’en vidant son verre dès l’aurore,
Et. qu’en le remplissant pour le vider. encore,
En riant, en chantant, en narguant tout devoir,
En se laissant rouler sous la table le soir,
Aidé sans le savoir par le dèstin qu’il raille,
Il construit, sans marteau, sans clous et sans tenaille,
Par un travail certain, infaillible et fatal,
Le brancard qui le doit porter à l’hôpital!

CIII Le sort s’est acharné sur cette créature

Le sort s’est acharné sur cette créature.
C’était peu Aue cet être eût la prunelle obscure,
L’oeil éteint, le front bas, le cri rauque, et des noeuds
D’opprobre et de misère à ses genoux cagneux;
Qu’il fût difforme, abject, vil; il fallait encore
Que, battu, fouetté, maigre, et marchant dès l’aurore
Sous un fardeau trop lourd pour sa force, il courbât
Son échine sàignante aux boucles de son bât.
Et cependant l’ortie, à ses pieds, sur la routé,
Liée au sol tandis qu’il va, vient, passe et broute,
Muette, ne pouvant fuir ni changer de lieu,
Tremblante sous la dent de l’âne, le croit dieu.
Et plus bas, car la brume a la nuit pour voisine,
Seul dans la terre aveugle et noire, sans racine,
Sans germe, sans lien avec quoi que ce soit,
Le caillou, sourd, stérile, informe, .inerte, froid,
Sent au-dessus de lui la plante frémir, vivre,
Fleurir dans la clarté dont l’infini s’enivre,
Et croître, et s’abreuver au souffle universel,
Et, dur, triste, envieux, dit: L’ortie est au ciel!

Descends; tu trouveras des jaloux de la pierre.
Les zones sont sans fin dans cette fondrière!
Monte; monte aussi haut que peut s’élever l’oeil;
Où l’azur t’apparaît, tu trouveras le deuil.

Vois: ce génie ayant pour épouse la grâce,
Cet être à qui la femme en souriant s’enlace,
Cet élu de la force et de la majesté,
Par l’aigle et le lion à peine contesté,
Ce front craint des serpents qui rampent sur leurs ventres,
Cet éblouissement des bêtes dans les antres,
Ce souverain de l’eau, de la terre et du feu,
Grand,-fier, obéissant pourtant à son milieu,

Pris par la pesanteur, loi de sa sphère, et chaîne
De son globe qui passe avec un bruit de haine,
L’homme, avec ses besoins de la chair et des sens,
Avec ses appétits du fumier renaissants,
De la honte secrète incurable piqûre,
Rappel perpétuel à la bassesse obscure,
Avec son sang fatal, âcre et noir, dont ses moeurs,
Ses croyances, ses dieux, ses lois sont les tumeurs,
Avec le doute affreux que son regard reflète,
Et ses fièvres, ses maux, ses pleurs, et son squelette,
Spectre qui vaguement se dessine à son flanc,
Et son vil alambic d’entrailles, distillant
Le cloaque, et, hideux, souillant même la fange,
L’homme, roi pour la brute, est un forçat pour l’ange.

De là toutes vos soifs d’idéal et de beau,
Et l’aspiration des jtistes au tombeau.
Et l’ange, ce gardien des races planétaires,
Lumineux visiteur de lunes et de terres;
Comme vous d’une terre,’ habitant d’un soleil,
Ayant pour vol l’éclair de son rayon vermeil,
Pour domaine l’azur qu’il échauffe, et pour borne
Le point où ce rayon s’éteint dans l’éther morne,
L’ange, errant dans vos cieux comme dans une mer,
Est lui-même la nuit, l’inférieur, l’enfer,
Pour l’immense archange ivre et ruisselant d’aurore,
Espèce d’aigle monde et d’oiseau météore!

CIV Au point du jour,

Au point du jour, souvent en sursaut, je me lève,
Eveillé par l’aurore,. ou par la fin d’un rêve,
Ou par un. doux oiseau qui chanté, ou par le vent.
Et vite je me mets au travail, même avant
Les pauvres ouvriers qui près de moi demeurent.
La nuit s’en va. Parmi les étoiles qui meurent
Souvent ma rêverie errante fait un choix.
Je travaille debout, regardant à la fois
Eclore en moi l’idée et là-haut l’aube naître.
Je pose l’écritoire au bord de la fenêtre
Que voile et qu’assombrit, comme un antre de loups,
Une ample vigne vierge accrochée à cent clous,
Et j’écris au milieu des branches entr’ouvertes,
Essuyant par instants ma plume aux feuilles vertes.

CV Les quatre enfants joyeux

Les quatre enfants joyeux me tirent par la manche,
Dérangent mes papiers, font rage, c’est dimanche;
Ils s’inquiètent peu si je travaille ou non;
Ils vont criant, sautant, m’appelant par mon nom;
Ils m’ont caché ma plume et je ne puis écrire;
Et bruyamment, avec de grands éclats de rire,
Se dressant pàr-dessus le dos du canapé,
Chacun vient à son tour m’apparaître, drapé
Dans un burnous arabe aux bandes éclatantes;
Et je songe à l’Afrique, aux hommes sous les tentes,
A la Mecque, au désert formidable et vermeil;
On part avant le jour, de crainte du soleil;
La file des piétons et des chameaux s’allonge,
Passe confusément, chemine, et semble un songe;
La nuée au vent flotte ainsi qu’une toison;
Et les vagues de sable, emplissant l’horizon,
Les ravins où jadis rêvait le patriarche,
Font dans l’ombre onduler la caravane en marche.

30 novembre 1862.

CVI Je racontais un conte

.
Je racontais un conte
À quatre ou cinq marmots, auditoire choisi,
Et j’en étais, je crois, à l’endroit que voici:
«... Dans un instant où Dieu tournait le dos, le diable
« Se glissa, sans rien dire et d’un air amiable,
« Ce qu’il fait très souvent, derrière le bon Dieu;
« Il coupa dans le ciel un morceau de drap bleu,
« Et, polir cacher le trou, mit dessus un nuage...”
Jeanne m’interrompit. - Allons, Jeanne, sois sage,
Dit George, intéressé par le diable et par Dieu,
Nous écoutons, tais-toi. - Jeanne s’en troubla peu.
— Je croyais que le ciel; dit-elle, était en soie.

CVII Je suis comme dans un cloître

Je suis comme dans un cloître;
On dit de moi: « D’où vient-il?”
Je sens à chaque heure croître
Le froid profond de l’exil;
Je ne vois plus ma patrie;
Toute ma joie est flétrie;
J’ai blanchi, vieil affligé;
La tombe, amis, me réclame;
Comme il gelait dans mon âme,
Sur ma tête il a neigé.

CVIII MON PETIT-FILS

Oui, ce petit, c’est l’aube, et moi je suis le soir.
Il naît. Que va-t-il voir? Je meurs. Que vais-je voir?
Tous deux nous ignorons. Son jour vient, ma nuit tombe.
Il essaie à tâtons le berceau, moi la tombe.

CIX Ce qui rend la vieillesse auguste

..
Ce qui rend la vieillesse auguste et vénérable,
Ce n’est point la lenteur des pas froids et pesants,
La blancheur des cheveux ni le nombre des ans,
Non, c’est la bienveillance et l’absence de haine,
C’est la douceur qui fait vers la vertu sereine
Monter de toutes parts les bénédictions,
C’est cette majesté des bonnes actions
Qui dans l’oeil du vieillard met une pure flamme,
Et que la longue vie ajoute à la grande âme!

CX 25 L’oeuvre humaine

L’oeuvre humaine est l’écho de la chose divine.
Astre ou pensée, on sent errer le même mot
Du- chef-d’oeuvre d’en bas au chef-d’oeuvre d’en haut.
Shakspeare, Dante, Job, Eschyle, vos génies
Sont eux-mêmes, devant l’azur, des harmonies;
Ils contemplent le inonde et l’ombre et le ciel bleu
Et l’être; et ce qu’ils font est leur réponse à Dieu.
Ils prennent l’idéal dans leurs vastes poursuites.
Vois. Dieu fait l’Océan; l’homme fait Hamlet. Quittes.

CXI La porte

La porte
Céda. Je tâtonnai du bout de mon bâton;
J’entrai; tout était noir; à peine pouvait-on Distinguer, à travers les ombres étouffantes,
Le jour qui des volets rayait les blêmes fentes.
Tout sembla s’éveiller quand la porte bâilla.
Nul’ depuis soixante ans n’avait pénétré là.
Les meubles de santal, de citronnier, d’érable,
Dormaient sous la poussière épaisse et vénérable;
Les miroirs détamés semblaient sur les dressoirs
Des morceaux de ciels blancs tout piqués de trous noirs,
Et me multipliaient en faces fantastiques
A travers des essaims d’immobiles moustiques;
Au tremblement d’un pas dans cette ombre perdu,
Le lustre, avec un bruit de squelette pendu,
Au-dessus de ma tête entre-choquait ses prismes;
Les vieux gonds de la porte avaient des rhumatismes,
Les lampas décloués, aux angles du plafond,
S’éploraient et flottaient tels que les vers les font;
Les murs étaient tendus de toiles d’araignées;
Les portraits noirs avaient des mines indignées;
Tous ces objets tremblaient dans un vague rayon,
Et prenaient par degrés un air de vision
Comme si l’on eût vu bouger et parler presque
Des personnages peints sur quelque sombre fresque;
Une espèce de vieux, en habit d’Apollon,
Trônait, encadré d’or, au milieu du salon;
C’était Louis, portant l’auréole qu’agrafe
Au front de tout césar tout historiographe,
Peint à l’âge, où prenant l’ennui pour compagnon,
Le grand roi, devenu Monsieur de Maintenon
Gagnant de la perruque et perdant du panache,
Étant encor soleil, était déjà ganache.

Toute la salle avait gardé ce dernier pli,
Lugubre et froid, que fait en s’en allant l’oubli;
La cheminée était comme un tas de décombres;
On ne sait quelle horreur sortait des fauteuils sombres
Où des spectres semblaient avoir passé la nuit.
Au fond de ce silence on entendait un bruit
Faible comme le pas des larves sur les cendres:
Des médaillons de dieux, d’Hercliles, d’Alexandres,
Luisaient parmi des sphinx étrangement groupés;
Sculptée au dossier d’or des. larges canapés, ,
Cléopâtre montrait dans leur rondeur princière
Deux seins que modelait vaguement la poussière;
Et sur la devanture informe des bàhuts
Tityrus devisait avec Meliboéus.

J’eus peur, et je sentis comme une sombre lutte;
Car ces vieilles splendeurs étonnent dans leur chute,
Les figures de l’ombre ont de sinistres yeux,
La ruine est terrible, et les mornes aïeux
Semblent jeter des cris avec leurs pâles bouches
Dans le délabrement de leurs luxes farouches.

CXII NOS AMUSEMENTS

NOS AMUSEMENTS AVEC LAMARTINE, SOUMET, VIGNY, LES DEUX DESCHAMPS, SAINTE-BEUVE ET NODIER, VERS 1827

Amis; j’ai vu des morts le festin mémorable,
Ils parlaient à grand bruit, ils mangeaient du lapin;
Leur appétit s’aiguise en leur lit de sapin,
Leur dent s’attaque à tout, aùx cuises, même au râble.
Mais ils parlaient! c’était un bruit, dans le quartier!
Hélas, l’homme qui fait ce malheureux métier
De fantôme vivant parle peu, mais; mort; hâble.

CXIII J’aime ces grands esprits,

J’aime ces grands esprits, j’aime ces grandes oeuvres,
J’aime Jean La Fontaine ami de Jean Lapin,
Corneille sans souliers fils d’Homère sans pain,
Et tous ceux qu’on oublie, et même ceux qu’on loue,
Retz, Pascal, Sévigné, Saint-Simon, Bourdaloue.
Toi surtout, le rieur qui saigne, Poquelin!

J’aime de ces beaux noms ce beau Versailles plein,
Mais, j’en conviens, le sang ruisselant aux Cévennes,
La femme au ventre nu dont on ouvre les veines,
Les dragons rôtissant l’enfant à petit feu,
La roue et le gibet, me gâtent quelque peu
Ce grand siècle qui met l’épaisseur d’une prude
Entre toute splendeur et toute turpitude,
Et, sur la Maintenon mêlant Dave et Néron,
Courbe Louis quatorze à l’auge de Scarron.

CXIV Attention. Voici Louis quatorze

Attention. Voici Louis quatorze. Gare
Le grand siècle! j'en parle, ami, comme je peux.
O Boileau Despréaux, satirique pompeux!
Régnier, affreux vaurien, plus tendre que Racine,
Tenant sous ses deux bras Goton et Mnémosyne,
Menait au cabaret la poésie en rut.
Enfin Despréaux vint, enfin Boileau parut,
Lequel à coups de fouet chassa cette drôlesse.
Louis fait l'amour, fait la guerre, se confesse
Et meurt. Roi, qu'il est grand! Homme, qu'il est petit!
Beaux jours! l'espèce humaine en masse s'engloutit
Sous l'immense toison qui lui couvre la nuque.
La périphrase alors naquit de la perruque.
La crinière aux longs flots pénétra dans les moeurs.
D'horribles faux cheveux hérissaient les rimeurs,
Et de tous ces cerveaux la pensée immortelle
Sortait en emportant la perruque avec elle.
De là tous ces grands vers qui n'ont plus rien d'humain
Et vont frisure en tête et la canne à la main.

CXV RACONTÉ EN RÊVE PAR LORD BYRON (PEUT-ÊTRE)

Nous étions, John Beauclerck et moi, deux jeunes lords.
L’église de Harrow, vieux bric: à-brac d’alors,
Avait sous son portail un Jupiter de pierre
Où les chrétiens faisaient volontiers leur prière.
Un jour que nous quittions la classe pour le jeu,
John donne un coup de carine à l’idole, et me crie,
A moi qui m’indignais, plein de respect du lieu:
— Je ne sais. Je suis pair. Et c’est par seigneurie.
— Oh! dis-je. Et pair aussi, je crachai sur le dieu.

Nuit du 5 au 6 novembre 1862.

CXVI Hé, prends ton microscope,

Hé, prends ton microscope, imbécile! et frémis.

Tout est le même abîme avec les mêmes ondes.
L’infiniment petit contient les mêmes mondes
Que l’infiniment grand. Qué vas-tu’contempler
Le ciel noir quand il plaît aux nuits de l’étoiler,
Le groupe constellé, le globe, la planète,
Orion; Sirius que ,grossit ta lunette;
L’anneàu de celui-là, les lunes de ceux-ci?
La fourmi sous sa patte a des sphères aussi;
L’intervalle que font les ailes d’une mouche
Contient tout un azur où se lève et se couche
Un soleil invisible, éblouissant au loin
De profonds univers qui n’ont pas de témoin:
Montez ou descendez; tout s’ouvre sans rien clore;
On trouve au fond d’un puits un autre puits encore;
La limite n’est pas dans la nature; elle est
Dans l’instrument grossier, dans l’organe incomplet;
Votre prunelle est moins un moyen qu’un obstacle;
Tu n’as qu’à grandir l’oeil pour grandir le spectacle;
Le petit, c’est l’immense. En ta main, ô passant.
Prends la mer bleue ainsi ‘qu’un vèrre grossissant,
Et, courbé sur là vie, abîme dont la lampe
Est un soleil qui brille ou bien tin ver qui rampe,
A travers l’océan regarde un puceron;
Tu pâliras ainsi qu’Amos, Élie, Aaron,
Devant les visions de l’incompréhensible,
Et tu ne sauras pas si cet être impossible,
Formidable, aperçu par toi confusément,
N’est pas le chaos même, horrible, en mouvement
Dans l’éther qu’il obstrue avec sa forme immonde,
Et si tu vois un monstre ou si tu vois un monde!

Oui, l’aube le matin emplit ton corridor

Des constellations de la poussière d’or;
La toile d’araignée en ses mailles nocturnes
A des. gouffres où vont et viennent des Saturnes;
Une création passe entre chaque fil;
Tout homme, le dernier, le moindre, le plus vil,
L’esclave, le forçat de Brest, le juif qui rogne
Un liard, le voleur de grand chemin, l’ivrogne,
Le grec qui triche au jeu dans un bouge aux eaux d’Aix,
Broie un astre en fermant son pouce et son index.

Il ne faut pas que l’âme humaine s’assoupisse
Au bord de l’atome, ombre, abîme, précipice;
Homme, il n’est pas d’esprit qui, s’il se penche un peu
En bas, sur le petit, l’autre côté de Dieu,
Ne frissonne devant l’élargissement sombre
Du néant, du caché, de l’espace, du nombre!
II suffit que, demain, un ouvrier savant,
Inventant un cristal plus clair et plus vivant,
Pose sur l’inconnu des lentilles puissantes,
Pour que, si ton regard s’en approche, tu sentes
Le vertige du trou d’une aiguille, et la peur
De tomber dans ton souffle, effrayante vapeur!
Le point n’a pas de fond. Homme, l’inaccessible
Est dans le grain de sable, à jamais divisible;
L’imperceptible est fait de la même grandeur
Que les cieux qui n’ont pas encore eu de sondeur.
Un pou dè l’infini contient en lui la somme;
Tu serais Dieu le jour où tu pourrais, toi l’homme,
Voir le commencement et la fin d’un ciron.
Pendant qu’un maringouin sonne de son clairon,
Homme, des millions de mondes peuvent naître
Et mourir; à l’instant où je parle peut-être,
Des peuples ignorés, vague fourmillement
Qu’un infusoire couvre ainsi qu’un firmament,
Regardent s’étoiler le ventre d’un volvoce;
Sourds, obscurs, adorant quelque idole féroce,
Noirs, enfouis dans l’être, ensevelis dessous,

Invisibles, perdus.; et peut-être est-ce vous!

CXVII Insondable, immuable,

.
Insondable, immuable, éternel, absolu;
Face de vision; être qui toujours crée;
Centre; rayonnement d’épouvante sacrée;
Toute-puissance ayant des devoirs let des lois;
Présence sans figure et sans borne et sans voix;
Seul, pour prunelle ayant l’immensité sereine;
Regardant du même oeil ce qu’un puceron traîne,
Ce que dévore un ver, ce qu’un-ciron construit;
Et le fourmillement des soleils dans la nuit;
Volonté, d’où le monde en jets vivants s’élance,
Qui pour matériaux a la nuit, le silence,
Le vide, le néant, rien; et pour canevas
L’infini reflétant de vagues Jéhovàhs
Pensée aboutissant, lumineuse, aux prodiges`;
Moi gouffre où tous les moi tombent; pris de vertiges;
Essence inexprimable en qui tout se confond;
Tourbillonnement d’ombre et de lueur au fond
D’on ne sait quoi de grand, de splendide et de sombre;
Espèce de forêt de facultés sans nombre;
IL est là, formidable, unique, illimité,
Stupéfiant les cieux de son énormité;
Et, sous le porche immense et brumeux de l’abîme,
Au’ degré le -plus noir du chaos, sur la cime,
Tous les êtres créés, en haut, en bas, partout,
Astres, globes, édens, enfers dont lé flot bout,
Les rochers, les volcans, les monts, les mers houleuses,
Les âmes, les esprits, les foules nébuleuses,
La bête dans les bois, l’ange dans l’éther bleu,
Se courbent effarés devant l’horreur de Dieu.

CXVIII Dans les leçons qu’il donne aux esprits

.
Dans les leçons qu’il donne aux esprits comme aux yeux
L’abîme, dont la tombe est la blême fenêtre,
N’est pas exact, précis et clàir; quoique peut-être
Il en sache aussi long qu’Ulysse -Aldrovandus
Par qui veut écouter les cieux, sont entendus;
Mais croire qu’ils vont tout dévoiler, c’est un rêve.
Jé n’imagine pas que le mystère lève .
Son capuchon sinistre au fond de l’infini
Comme un religieux du Corpus domini;
Je doute que l’Etna, sous sa crête- fumante,
Prêche, expose, débatte, examine, argumente
Je doute que la mer où planent les autans;’ .’
Mêle sous son écume à ses bleus habitants,
Et roulé, et dans- le tas de ses hydres confonde
Une théologie errânt dans l’eau profonde;
Sans doute l’Océan, miroir du firmament,
Est un grand syllogisme, âpre, amer, écumant;
Chaque fois qu’il endort son flot glauque, il apaise
De l’analyse en lutte avec de la synthèse,
Mais son Verbe n’est pas le jargon d’un pédant.
Son gouffre, de clarté farouche débordant,
Jette de la logique à sa grève déserte,
Mais sans finir par donc ni commencer par certe.
L’ombre est un grand amour, l’abîme est un grand lit;
L’Etre emplit l’étendue et l’emplit et l’emplit;
Sans qu’on sache comment, les globes se soutiennent;
Au même point des cieux les planètes reviennent,
Les mondes, monstrueux et beaux, uns et divers,
Tous les objets créés, bêtes, monts, rameaux verts,
L’homme par la pensée et la fleur par la tige
Entrent dans le miracle et sortent du prodige.;
L’air frémit, l’arbre croît, l’oiseau chante, l’eau fuit,
Et des lumières vont jusqu’au fond de la nuit;

L’illusion serait étrange, que t’en semble,
De voir. dans le splendide et redoutable ensemble,
Dans le flot de la vie et dans le noir torrent
Un docteur de Sorbonne énorme pérorant.

CXIX RÉPONSE À L’OBJECTION: MAL

...
— Ah! puisque c’est ainsi, je ne veux pas de Dieu!
Je ne veux pas de Dieu! - Voilà ton cri morose.
Ayant trouvé le mal au bout de toute chose,
Ayant, trouvé le fond amer, -l’homme manqué
Par l’incompréhensible et fatal ananké,
Tu dis: - Je hais le dieu, si c’est cela le monde!
Pour juger l’ouvrier, sur son oeuvre on se fonde;
Or l’ouvrage est mauvais, donc l’auteur est méchant,
Et je hais ce Dieu! - Puis, un remords te touchant,
Tu dis: - Mais j’ai peut-être erré; l’ombre est profonde;
Peut-être n’est-ce pas dans Dieu que va ma sonde;
Peut-être, ô vain chercheur, Dieu m’a-t-il échappé;
Si je m’étais trompé?

Tu ne t’es pas trompé.
Ta sonde est bien tombée à l’abîme suprême;
Oui, tu viens de jeter ton esprit dans-Dieu même;
Oui, c’est ce précipice énorme de rayons,
C’est Dieu.

Jette une éponge à l’Océan, voyons;
Reprends-la. Qu’as-tu? Rien. Un verre d’eau salée.
Quant à la mer, profonde et terrible mêlée,
Quant à l’immensité des écumes, des bruits,:
Des flots, incessamment détruits et reconstruits,
Quant au chaos dés chocs, des trombes,. des tempêtes,
Dont l’ouragan hagard sonne les sombres fêtes,
Plein de’ monstres sans nom qui rôdent engloutis,
Cachant des oasis et des O-Taïtis
Où des idylles vont et viennent toutes nues;
Quant à cette tourmente insondable de nues,
D’ondes, d’écueils, d’azur flottant, d’azur qui luit;
Quant à ce gouffre où naît le matin, où la nuit

Trempe sa robe d’ombre et son manteau d’étoiles;
Quant à ce rendez-vous des- souffles et des voiles;
Quant à cet infini, noir, fauve, éblouissant,
Crois-tu que tu le tiens dans ta main? A présent
S’il te plaît de porter à ta bouche ce verre,
S’il te plaît de tremper ta lèvre à l’eau sévère,
Et si ton estomac frémit en la buvant,
Si ton viscère abject-se soulève, trouvant
Une saveur amère à la chose sublime,
Est-ce que tu diras qu’ayant goûté l’abîme;’
Tu viens, toi qui ne vis que si bas et si peu,
De revomir la mer et de recracher Dieu?

CXX Est-ce que par hasard le monde,

Est-ce que par hasard le monde, sous nos yeux,
Se défait, se déjette, et périt? d’aventure,
Est-ce que nous voyons se rider la nature,
Et disparaître, au fond de l’ombre, en proie aux vers,
Sous une moisissure énorme, l’univers?
Le zodiaque est-il branlant dans sa charpente
Au point que les saisons s’écroulent sur sa pente?
L’été meurt-il de froid? l’hiver meurt-il de chaud?
L’astre se couvre-t-il de poussière là-haut?
Siriùs: s’éteint-il, faute d’huile? Persée
Est-il tombé, sa chaîne étant vieille et cassée?
Aperçoit-on, parmi les gouffres inconnus,
Des toiles d’araignée entre Mars et Vénus?
Le grand ciel s’en va-t-il par plaques? l’empyrée
A-t-il à l’orient sa teinte dédorée?
Le zénith n’est-il plus qu’un faux plafond mal joint?
L’aurore noircit-elle? en est-on à ce point
Que l’azur se détache et tombe de vieillesse?
Est-ce parce qu’il voit les vents qu’il tient en laisse,
Phtisiques et poussifs, s’arrêter haletants,
Et la rose manquer son entrée au printemps,
Et tout se disloquer au ciel et dans l’abîme,
Que l’Auteur continue à garder l’anonyme?

CXXI Crois-tu que de ceci mon rêve se repaisse

Que je sois satisfait, que je sois une espèce
De bienheureux, louant à toute heure, en tout lieu;
Que j'aie entre les dents un dithyrambe à Dieu;
Que je trouve tout grand, complet, parfait, sublime;
Que je dise: il ne manque à rien un coup de lime!
Tout est beau! que je sois un faiseur d'embarras,
Que je crie à la nuit: fais ce que tu voudras!
Que j'aille acceptant tout, et que je contresigne
Aveuglément le lys, le paon, l'aigle, le cygne,
Homme? et que je constate, en me pâmant, le pré,
La source, la forêt, le buisson diapré,
L'aube sur un vieux mur dorant les giroflées,
L'ouragan noir chassant les vagues essoufflées?
Non, non, ce n'est pas moi qui, tout joyeux devant
Le problème muet, sourd, obscur, décevant,
M'obstine à voir dans tout des marques d'alliance.
Homme, ce n'est pas moi qui vis de confiance,
Ce n'est pas moi qui vais béant aux paradis
Quand l'âpre énigme est là. Ce n'est pas moi qui dis:
L'univers n'est pas clair; non, mais il est splendide.
Ce n'est pas moi qui suis l'adorateur candide,'
Qui félicite l'être effrayant d'être noir,'
Qui fais le sphynx camus avec mon encensoir!
Qu'a-t-elle donc de beau cette création,
Et de pur, de charmant, d'heureux, pour qu'on l'admire?
Quoi donc! devant Adam faut-il brûler la myrrhe,
Louer ses passions, ses vices, sa laideur,
Ses vils instincts qui, font décroître la pudeur
Dans la femme, et qui font croître en l'homme la honte?
Et si je plonge au bas du gouffre, ou si je monte
Dans ce faux éiel béat bâillant plus qu'il ne rit,
Que veux-tu que je pense, homme, quand mon esprit,
Comparant le démon rampant que l'enfer noie,
Et l'ange coassant dans son marais de joie,

Va de ce saurien à ce batracien?

CXXII La souffrance, géante et spectre

La souffrance, géante et spectre, sur le monde
Se dresse; un long cri sort de sa bouche profonde
Et remplit l'infini mystérieux et sourd.
Et la femme aux bras blancs, le vieillard au pas lourd,
Partout, sous tous les cieux et sous tous les tropiques,
Londres, Rome, Paris, ces cavernes épiques,
Le laboureur courbé, forçat des verts sillons,:
L'éclatant capitaine au front des bataillons,
Et les rois.sur leur trône et le pauvre en son bouge,
Les branches de la ronce où la vipère bouge,
Ceux qui disent: priez, ceux qui disent: aimons,
L'algue au fond de la mer et l'arbre au haut des monts,
L'eau roulant le caillou, la faux coupant la gerbe,
Le tigre se traînant sur le ventre dans l'herbe,
Le doux oiseau tordant la mousse, de son nid, -
Le navire et l'écueil, le jonc et le granit,
Le martyr, le bourreau, le conquérant, l'apôtre, .
Ne font que répéter d'un bout du monde à l'autre,
Même l'enfant qui rit, même la vierge en fleur, -
Les gestes désolés de l'immense douleur.

13 juillet 1854.

.
Même avant le cercueil, la matière vous quitte;
Votre âme sur la terre est bien longtemps en deuil
De vos jeunes amours, de votre jeune orgueil;
Après les bals, les jeux, les cris, et les orgies
Du vil plaisir jusqu'à soixante ans élargies,
Et la danse brutale et stupide des sens,
Votre argile agonise au souffle froid des ans;
La chair est une bête infirme, horrible, morte;
Le vieillard est un spectre; - où l'âme vit? - Qu'importe!
Les cheveux noirs sont morts et les dents ne sont plus,

L’appétit est gisant dans l’estomac perclus,
Les roses de la joue ont passé, le front ploie,
Rien n’est resté vivant de ce corps plein de joie
Qui faisait fête au monde et sonnait du clairon.
Songeur, qu’est-ce que l’âme? Une veuve Scarron.
L’hymen royal l’attend dans le mystère sombre.
Son trône est le tombeau. Sa grandeur est de l’ombre.

CXXIV MÉLANCOLIE

Le père est mort hier, l’enfant joue aujourd’hui.
L’ombre peut-être est là, pleine d’un sombre ennui.
L’enfance est froide, hélas! Son oeil bleu qui nous charme
Nous glace. O deuil! le temps d’essuyer une larme,
Le chagrin de l’enfant s’en va, vide et subtil.
Hier! Qu’est-ce qu’hier? Un mort! où donc est-il?
Pourquoi n’y sont-ils plus, ceux qu’on voyait? les choses
Disparaissent la nuit. Vois donc les belles roses!
L’enfant rit. Sa pensée est une mouche. Il rit.
Nul souvenir ne reste en ce rapide esprit,
Nul reflet dans cette eau dont vacille la moire;
Chaque souffle qui passe emporte sa mémoire.
Qu’est-il? rose lui-même en attendant qu’il soit
Quelqu’un de grandissant que le sort aperçoit.
Voyez-le dans l’aurore avec les autres plantes
Comme lui faites d’ombre et comme lui tremblantes,
Il n’est rien qu’un parfum comme elles; frais, vermeil;
La pénétration charmante du soleil
Le dore, et fait qu’on voit au fond d’une auréole
Sa petite âme ouverte ainsi qu’une corolle;
De pleurs et de rayons l’aube vient le baigner,
Et c’est la seule fleur qui doive un jour saigner.

19 Xbre 1853.

CXXV Le juste

Le juste de ses fers subit l’indigne poids;
Il souffre, il saigne, il va, tout l’accable à la fois;
Le jour est dur, la nuit est pire;
Mais, dans ce noir sentier du ‘deuil et de l’affront,
Calme, il voit resplendir au-dessus de son front
La libre mort au doux sourire.

Les pervers sont joyeux; faux prêtres, rois méchants,
Ils ont- tous les bonheurs, la pourpre et l’or, lés chants,
Les fruits vermeils, les belles femmes;
Ils marchent, fiers, puissants, poussant dans le chemin
A coups de pique, à coups dé fouet, le genre humain,
Noirs bouchers’ du troupeau des âmes;

Mais, comme dernier terme au voyage qu’ils font,
S’enfonçant pas à pas dans le crime profond,
Faisant mentir Korans et Bibles,
Ils peuvent voir, au fond de l’ombre où tout s’enfuit,
Un sépulcre sur qui se croisent dans la nuit
On ne sait quels barreaux terribles.

CXXVI Quand Jean-Jacques vivait

Quand Jean-Jacques vivait, l’homme à qui dans les âges
Jamais le genre humain ne paîrâ ce qu’il doit,
Les passants le huaient et le montraient du doigt.
Ce penseur, coeur saignant, front triste, âme’meurtrie,
Se cachait, fugitif dans sa propre patrie;
Et les petits enfants, hélas! qu’il aimait tant,
Le poursuivaient, à coups de pierres, lui, jetant
A la tête en détail sa future statue.

CXXVII Oh! je t’emporterai

Oh! je t’emporterai si haut dans les nuées,
Vipèré, que. la bourbe où la nuit t’engendra,
La plaine et le marais, les cris et les huées,
Les voix, les pas, le bruit, tout s’évanouira!

Je briserai tes dents dans ta bouche, ô vipère!
En vain tu te tordras, reptile épouvanté,
En vain tu te tordras, cherchant des yeux la terre,
Tu ne verras plus rien qu’une immense clarté!

Rien que le ciel profond, éternel, immobile,
Que les êtres créés sentent au-dessus d’eux
Et qui dans sa splendeur implacable et tranquille
Pèse de toutes parts sur les monstres hideux!
Et ce ne sera pas, pour l’oiseau dans la nue,
Un médiocre effroi de voir cet être impur,
Cette chose difforme au soleil inconnue,
Qui, faite pour la fange, expire dans l’azur!
Si ceux qui t’admiraient - car, vipère, on t’admire, -
Te cherchent au cloaque où tu crois t’abriter,
Il sortira de l’ombre une voix pour leur dire:
Un aigle a passé là qui vient de l’emporter.

23 mai 1850.

CXXVIII Oui, le tonnerre éclaire

..
Oui, le tonnerre éclaire et gronde sous mon front,
J’ai sous mon crâne obscur le gouffre et la tempête,
Et l’indignation du flot que rien n’arrête;
J’ai dans mon coeur le roc et toute sa fierté;
Et je jette dans l’air un cri de liberté,
J’insulte le brouillard des préjugés sans nombre,
Je souffle un tourbillon de vérité sur l’ombre,
Je lâche au vent mon. âme, et certes, j’ai ce droit,
Puisque l’oiseau de mer vient voler sur mon toit.

CXXIX Quand ce banni,

Quand ce banni, jadis perdu dans les brouillards
Et dans les flots, parut parmi ces durs vieillards,
Ils frémirent, ainsi que l’herbe au pied de l’arbre.
Son souffle fut terrible et les fit tous de marbre.
Il les pétrifia rien qu’en passant sur eux:
Ces hommes qu’emplissaient le passé ténébreux,
Et dont plusieurs, étaient courbés sous de vieux crimes,
Gardèrent l’attitude obscure des abîmes,
Et pâles, se sentant saisis par ce regard,
N’osèrent même plus lever leur front hagard.
Leur immobilité faite de violence
Se taisait. Et, tragique, accablant leur silence
Du sombre et formidable orage de sa. voix,
Il semblait, au milieu de ces faiseurs de lois
Plus aveugles encore, hélas! que sanguinaires,
Une apparition secouant des tonnerres.
Tel surgirait, dans l’Ombre où, sans geste et sans bruit,
Les larves du néant, les formes de la nuit
Sont assises, de brume et de rêve vêtues,
Un spectre qui viendrait parler à des statues.

23 mai 1876.

CXXX La terre est à l’erreur

...
La terre est à l’erreur, au vertige, à l’absurde.
O démence éternelle! ô noir diapason,
Hommes, de la folie avec votre raison!
En Perse, le muezzin, toujours; c’est la loi sainte,
Est un vieillard pour qui la lumière est éteinte.
Et ce veilleur sans yeux est debout sur sa tour;
Et que fait cet aveugle? il annonce le jour.

CXXXI Oh! vers le progrès magnifique

Oh! vers le progrès magnifique
Guidez les générations!
Malheur à l’âme qui trafique
De son soufflé ét de ses’ rayons!
Que le supplice vous attire!
Précipitez-vous au martyre!
De peur qu’il ne voie, dans les harems.
Penseurs! pour vaincre il faut souffrir.
L’homme, qui ne peut rien connaître,
Marche de cette énigme: naître,
Jusqu’à cet abîme: mourir.

Sur son berceau naît son étoile.
Comme il ouvrait l’oeil, elle a lui.
Comme Isis sous le triple voile.
La conscience habite en lui.
Elle l’éclaire quand il doute;
Elle lui, montre sur sa route
Tout ce. que la raison trouva;
Elle est pareille à la glaneuse;
Il est libre, elle est lumineuse;
Il dit: Que suis-je? elle dit: Va.

Il sent qu’il contient le mystère,
Qu’il a la bêche et le jardin,
Qu’il doit, condamné de la terre,
Avec Babel refaire Eden.
Apre ouragan ou brise douce,
II sent qu’il est le vent qui pousse
Les battants du seuil éternel,
Et que les vertus et les crimes
Font tourner sur ses gonds sublimes
La porte invisible du ciel.

D’où vient-il? où va-t-il? il songe.
Evitera-t-il Dieu lointain?
Il est maître de son mensonge,
Un autre est maître du destin.
Il tremble; il se sent responsable
Pour un pas risqué sur le sable,
Pour un souffle sur un flambeau.
O nuit sombre où nous portons l’arche’!
La liberté de l’homme marche
Entre la crèche et le tombeau!

4 septembre 1854.

CXXXII LE PROGRÈS

L’Utile fait tenir tour à tour son flambeau
Par son frère le Laid, par son frère le Beau;
Nul n’est trop bas et nul n’est trop haut pour l’Utile;
Seul il sait la façon dont chaque être est fertile;
Dans la foudre qui passe il voit une clarté.
Le Progrès, qui s’appelle aussi nécessité,
Ploie invinciblement à son oeuvre les hommes,
Les derniers des hameaux et les premiers des . Romes,
Les grands et les petits, et noue au même fil.
Ce qui paraît auguste et ce qui semble vil;
Il fait jaillir l’éclair de la poudre, étincelle .
Où s’évanouira le passé qui chancelle,
De la profonde nuit d’ün cerveau monacal,;
Pour faire une brouette il dépense Pascal;
A son but, à sa loi, tout concourt, tout se range,
Tout obéit; l’Utile a cette force étrange
De se faire à la fois servir par l’ignorant
Et par l’altier génie au fond des cieux errant;
Le moulin d’un côté tire à lui mir la-rotite
L’âne abject qui se traîne à pas lents et qui broute,
Et de l’autre à son aile il mêle l’ouragan.

CXXXIII La cloche suspendue

La cloche suspendue attend l’heure terrible.
Autour d’elle, échappés dans les cieux infinis,
Mais rentrant au clocher, ruche immense de nids,
Tous les oiseaux de l’air, hirondelles; mésanges,
Placés entre les bruits de l’homme et ceux des anges,
Le moineau, qui du peuple aimant les alentours,
Se perche aux buissons verts sans dédaigner les tours,
La cigogne qui vient du Gange ou du Caÿstre;
Planent en tournoyant sur le beffroi sinistre
Comme autour d’un écueil rôde le cormoran,
Et disent à l’esclave énorme du cadran:
— Cloche, l’homme bourdonne et la foule se rue,
Tout le peuple fourmille et parle dans la rue,
Les ponts sont pleins de voix, de rires et de pas;
O cloche, quelle est donc cette heure que tu vas
Sonner dans ta lugubre et sublime demeure?
Et la cloche répond: - Je vais sonner une heure.
Je ne sais rien de plus.

CXXXIV Sombre justice inique

Sombre justice inique! ô code terroriste!
Sépulcre ouvert par l’homme! il semble au songeur triste
Dont l’oeil, au plus profond des choses introduit,
Voit tous les êtres vivré et sentir dans la nuit,
Que la loi meurtrière et fratricide effraie
Jusqu’aux gibets, hantés par la louve et l’orfraie;
Oui, que c’est à regret que les pals, les poteaux,
La piqûre des clous, la lourdeur des marteaux,
Les tenailles, les crocs, les carcans, sont complices
Des tortures, des çris, des sanglots, des supplices;
Et que devant le juge et l’assassin légal,
Et l’horrible balance au poids jamais égal,
Et la goule Thémis, vieux spectre parasite,
Le couperet proteste et la potence hésite.
Au poids de Rylesef la corde se cassant,
Marie au premier coup ruissélante de sang,
Jeanne montrée, au pied de la charpente infàme,
Toute nue aux bourreaux par la première flamme,
Sont comme des avis que de sa propre horreur
La peine de mort donne aux codes en fureur.
Tout l’affreux code humain, sourd brouillard, brume épaisse,
Apparaît au regard pensif comme une espèce
De soir mystérieux et de chute du jour,
Où Babel laisse voir confusément sa tour;
Et l’on dirait parfois qu’en ce noir crépuscule
L’échafaud frémissant devant l’homme recule.

CXXXV Ne vous figurez pas,

Ne vous figurez pas, ténèbres, que je tremble
Parce que vous venez le soir murer les cieux;
J’entends des voix parler tout bas dans l’ombre ensemble
Et je sens des regards sur moi sans voir des yeux;

Mais j’ai foi! L’Arimane a peur du Zoroastre;
Plus l’obscurité vient, plus le sage aime et croit,
Et devant la grandeur lumineuse que l’astre
Donne au prophète bon, le dieu méchant décroît.

Vous êtes malgré vous de rayons traversées;
L’espérance est mêlée à vos blêmes effrois;
Vous ne nous troublez point sous vos ailes dressées
Pas plus que les corbeaux n’ébranlent les beffrois.

Ô ténèbres, le ciel est une sombre enceinte
Dont vous fermez la porte, et. dont l’âme a la clé;
Et la nuit se partage, étant sinistre et sainte,
Entre Iblis, l’ange noir, et Christ; l’homme étoilé.

23 novembre 1876.

CXXXVI Quoi! tu doutes de l’âme!

.
Quoi! tu doutes de l’âme!
Et c’est l’astre qui brille, et c’est l’aube qui point!
Et que verras-tu donc si tu ne la vois point?
L’âme! elle est dans le cri. L’âme! elle est dans le verbe;
Elle sort de la foule ainsi qu’un lys de l’herbe;
Elle empêche Caton pensif de se courber.
Quand Danton, formidable et noir, laissait tomber
Ce grondement du haut dé la, tribune austère: .
— ‘La Révolùtion, ô mâitres de la terre,
ô despotes, c’est l’heure où le lion a faim. -
Quand Cicéron disait: - Jusqués à quand enfin
Abuseras-tu, donc de notre patience,
Catilina? - Quand Job sentait sa conscience
S’indigner contre l’ombre, et, s’écriait Assez!
Je souffre. Ayez pitié de moi, vous qui passez!
Tous ces hommes jetaient le sombre éclair de l’âme.
Ni Bible, ni Koran, ni Talmud. Je voudrais
Que l’homme renonçât à montrer les dictées
Faites à Pierre, à Paul, aux Christs, aux Prométhées.
Je voudrais laisser Dieu tranquille. Ce grand ciel,
Temple immense auquel nuit le temple officiel,
Suffit à ce grand Dieu. Je rêve le chômage
Du prêtre,,de l’abbé, du druide, du mage.

CXXXVIII La vision devient une réalité

La vision devient une réalité
Et le fait prend l’aspect mystérieux du songe;
L’impossible devient le possible, et s’allonge
Jusqu’aux détails qui sont la vie, et se répand,
Oiseau, sur les enfers, et sur l’éden, serpent;
Est-il Jésus? Est-il Satan? il est le rêve;
Il est le fait douteux qui sans raison, sans trêve,
Sans but, sort triomphant du juste assassiné
Et sous lui deux mille ans tient le monde étonné,
Raillé des sages, craint des foules, dramatique,
D’autant plus accepté qu’il est moins authentique.

CXXXIX Il a fait la colombe.

Il a fait la colombe. Et qui fit le serpent?
Lui. Le même.
En combien d'usages se répand
L'eau qui sort de la source et qui va. dans les plaines!
Elle lave, elle noie; et cristal aux fontaines,
Elle est fange aux égouts. Ainsi, dans les esprits,
Ce qui fait saints les Jobs, ce qui fait dieux les christs,
Ce que cherchait Orphée en cherchant Eurydice,
Le vrai, mêlé d'erreur comme l'eau d'immondice,
L'idéal, l'absolu, se décompose et fuit;
Le dogme plein de jour coule et s'emplit de nuit;
La torsion du mal enveloppe et féconde
Le bien, et Jéhovah que le démon seconde
Subit l'affreux baiser du monstre filial;
Dieu qui part d'Hélios arrive à Bélial;
Toute religion finit par être un crime;
Tout commence en éden et s'achève en abîme;
Et le ciel, d'où toujours un enfer déborda,
Blanc chez Jésus, devient noir chez Torquemada.

CXL Quelle religion

Quelle religion cherche aujourd’hui les astres?
Le catholicisme âpre et transformant en piastres
Des morceaux de liards et de maravédis,
N’est plus qu’un négrier marchand de paradis,
Qui vend le ciel et qui des âmes fait la traite.
Du globe émancipé capitale en retraite,
Rome est caduque, et n’a, son âge l’accablant,
Qu’un aigle aveugle et triste et de vieillesse blanc,
Plus de mémoire, plus de rayons, plus de gloire,
Plus de dents, quoiqu’elle ait encore une mâchoire.
Elle laisse crouler ses héros et ses dieux, .
Ne se rappelle plus son passé radieux,
Et n’en sait, l’idiote et pauvre douairière,. .
Que ce qu’il faut pour faire en latin sa. prière,
Et dans le Capitole où César triomphait,
Mange la pension que le monde lui fait.

CXLI L’ENFER

L’expiation rampe au plus profond de l’être.
Qu’est-elle? Énigme triste et que nul ne pénètre
Et qui fait quereller les sages ténébreux!
Une vapeur qui sort de ce mystère affreux
Filtre lugubrement à la surface obscure
Des dogmes, sur qui plane Azraël ou Mercure,
Et que traduit, au peuple. aveugle qu’il soumet,
Tantôt Tirésias et tantôt Mahomet.
Aux vivants effarés cette vapeur qui monte
Révèle vaguement le lieu d’ombre et de honte.
— C’est l’enfer! disent-ils, la peine, le tourment!
Et l’on en voit l’étrange et hideux flamboiement
Trembler au noir sommet des religions sombres.

L’Hadès où les titans râlent sous des décombres,
Le Ténare, eau qui brûle et dont le flot rongeur
Jette aux porches de l’ombre, une fauve rougeur,
Le Phlégéton. l’Averne au funèbre cratère;
Sont les trous monstrueux qu’à travers cette terre
L’homme fait en tremblant du côté de la nuit,
Et la forme, qu’au fond du gouffre où rien ne luit,
Sa superstition, sa crainte ou sa démence.
Donne aux noirs soupiraux, du châtiment immense.

L’antique enfer payen tombe et croule aujourd’hui;
Il est vide; on ne sait dans quel néant ont fui
Ses mânes au long voile et ses mégères nues;
On n’en répare plus les blêmes avenues,
Et le prêtre en dédaigne aujourd’hui l’entretien;
La terre maintenant croit à l’enfer chrétien;
La foi des hommes s’est par degrés retirée
Du Tartare où s’éteint l’épouvante sacrée;
Leur peur quitte Pluton et passe à Lucifer;
Leur mobilité va jusqu’à changer d’enfer;

L’abandon épaissit sa ronce parasite
Dans tous ces gouffres morts, Styx, Achéron, Cocyte;
L’homme n’y sent plus rien d’hostile et de puni;
Un reste de fumée au fond de l’infini
Noircit à peine encor, ces vieilles cheminées.

CXLII Toute la quantité d’équité,

...
Toute la quantité d’équité, de raison,
Et de fraternité que nous pouvons admettre,
Monte et baisse en nos coeurs comme en un thermomètre,
Suit les flux et reflux du. temps prompt à changer,
Croît, si nous n’y voyons pour l’instant nul danger,
Et, dès que notre peur grandit, se rapetisse;
Et mieux que tous ces mots plus ou moins creux, justice,
Droit, devoir, liberté, progrès, nous comprenons
La vérité qui sort des bouches des canons.

CXLIII Le pauvre;

Le pauvre; là-dessus l’accord est unanime,
Souvent vole le riche. Eh bien, de son côté
Le riche peut voler le pauvre, en vérité.
Il ne s’en doute pas, triste engeance ignorante!

Écoute et songe. Hier, j’ai touché de ma rente
Une somme, et je tire un franc de mon gousset.
Le voici. Maintenant je demande à qui c’est.
Ce franc, certe, est à moi le riche, à moi le maître.
Il est à moi si peu, que si, par la fenêtre,
Je le jette à la mer, je le vole. A qui donc?
Aux pauvres. Oui, quiconque en notre enfer sans fond,
Plein de fièvres, de soifs, et de faims innombrables,
Perd ce qu’il peut donner, le prend aux misérables.
Qui souffre attend, et c’est un droit que le malheur.
Le prodigue est voleur et l’avare est voleur.
Car avoir c’est devoir; car celui qui dissipe
Ou thésaurise, fait une plaie au principe;
Car, ayant tout, il a commis, entends-tu bien,
L’affreux crime d’avoir volé ceux qui n’ont rien.

CXLIV ÉPÎTRES

Je n’ai pas de besoins. Pour m’épanouir l’âme,
Entendre un enfant rire est assez. Je n’ai point
D’horreur pour un vieux feutre ou pour un vieux pourpoint,
Je vivrais d’un morceau de pain et de fromage.
Si j’avais un palais, moi, ce serait dommage.
Qu’on me donne un grenier, j’y serai comme un roi.
Il me suffit de voir la joie autour de moi;
Et quand je sais autrui content, je m’en contente.

CXLV Je t’aime,

Je t’aime, avec ton oeil candide et ton air mâle,
Ton fichu de siamoise et ton cou brun de hâle,
 — Avec ton rire et ta gaîté,
Entre la Liberté, reine aux fières prunelles,
Et la Fraternité, doux ange ouvrant ses ailes,
Ma paysanne Égalité

CXLVI Tous les hommes sont l’Homme

Tous les hommes sont l’Homme; et pas plus que les cieux
Le droit n’ a de rivages;
Ma sombre liberté sent le poids monstrueux
De tous les esclavages.
Avec tout prisonnier je me sens enfermé;
Ses chaînes sont les nôtres;
Guerre aux rois! Délivrance! Un seul peuple opprimé
Opprime tous les autres.

CXLVII À UNE STATUE

Non, tu n’es pas la grande et sainte République!
Celle que l’homme attend, que l’évangile explique,
Qui se composera de tous les bons instincts
Allumés et vivants, et des mauvais, éteints;
Qui s’enveloppera d’une paix magnifique,
Fera sortir des coeurs un hymne séraphique,
Pénétrera les lois de lumière et de jour,
En ôtera la mort pour y mettre l’amour,
Fera, sur les versants même les plus contraires,
Libres tous les esprits et tous les peuples frères,
Nous réchauffera tous autour du même feu,
Sera sur tous les fronts comme un ciel toujours bleu,
Et qui, comme si Dieu, dans sa bonté profonde,
Rendait visible aux yeux la grande âme du monde,
Mettra, vaste et sublime épanouissement,
Toute l’humanité dans son rayonnement!

Tu n’es pas même, non, tu n’es pas la déesse,
La déesse terrible, étrange, vengeresse,
Qui tua le vieux monde et créa le nouveau,
Broya peuples et rois sous son fatal niveau,
Vainquit l’Europe armée, et qui, dans la fournaise,
Après quatrevingt-neuf jeta quatrevingt-treize,
Comme en son moule ardent le fondeur souverain
Mêle le plomb à l’or quand il fait de l’airain!
Non, tu n’es pas la grande et sainte République!
O fantôme à l’oeil louche, à l’attitude oblique,
Tu n’as pas su donner l’honneur à nos drapeaux,
Au peuple le travail, au pays le repos;
Tu n’as point reconnu le droit des misérables;
Tu n’as point su toucher à leurs maux vénérables!
Tu pouvais, en suivant un élan immortel,
De l’échafaud brisé te bâtir un autel,
Et tu ne l’as point fait. Tu n’as rien su comprendre

Au peuple qui, pour être heureux, superbe et tendre,
Ne veut qu’un peu de gloire avec un peu de pain.
Tu n’as, comme les rois, qu’un tréteau de sapin,
Et tu n’as su montrer, triomphante et rapace,
Que la voracité d’un étranger qui passe.
Tu troublas les palais sans calmer les greniers;
Tu n’as point eu pitié des pauvres prisonniers,
Et tu n’as pas eu même un instant ,de clémence.
Tes pères, nains chétifs, qui mesuraient; démence!
La pensée à l’équerre et le coeur au compas,
T’ont faite à leur image avec ce qu’ils n’ont pas;
Des sourds t’ont dit: entends! des boiteux t’ont dit: marche!

La patrie est un temple et tu n’en es point l’arche;
Car l’éclair d’en haut manque à ton code impuissant,
Car Dieu n’est pas visible où le peuple est absent!

Fille des courts instants et des heures troublées,
Éclose au dur cerveau des sombres assemblées,
Parmi les rires vains, les rumeurs,. les refus
Des sages,- et les cris dans les groupes confus,
Qui donc t’a mise ici, dans un jour d’ironie,
Près de la pierre auguste où revit le génie
°Des temps évanouis et: des peuples anciens;
Énigme dont rêvaient les sphinx égyptiens,
Sinistre et du manteau des siècles revêtue?
Qui donc ainsi t’adosse, ô fragile statue,
A l’obélisque empreint du doigt de Sésostris?
La pluie âpre et chassant les feuillages flétris,
Inonde le quai morne et les Champs Élysées,
Et ce pavé, témoin des royautés brisées;
Que viens-tu faire, à. l’heure où l’automne finit,
Spectre de plâtre au pied du géant de granit?

12 novembre 1848.

CXLVIII L’excès de la pitié

L’excès de la pitié, c’est une. erreur auguste.
Je plains jusqu’au tyran quand il meurt. Même juste,
J’ai l’expiation, en horreur. Je n’ai pas
L’âpre haine et le goût des sévères trépas.
C’est pourquoi je frémis devant quatrevingt-treize.
Mais du moins, dans ces jours dont le spectre nous pèse,
On gardait le front haut, sans pâlir, sans bouger,
Devant la guillotine et devant l’étranger;
Ceux qui régnaient avaient une grandeur horrible;
Saint-Just était puissant, Marat était terrible;
Sur la haute tribune on s’entredévorait;
Et l’Europe tremblait d’un tremblement secret
Quand Danton hurlant, fier, le feu dans la paupière,
Mordait Collot d’Herbois ou mâchait Robespierre.
Ces temps étaient affreux, ils n’étaient pas petits.
Mais aujourd’hui, quels sont ces êtres aplatis
Qui tous autour de moi vont la tête courbée?
Hélas! le front baissé trahit l’âme tombéé.
Comme on oublie orgueil, fierté, devoir, mandat!
Comme on lèche humblement la botte du soldat!
Comme on presse en tremblant ses genoux! comme on flatte
Son caban africain à la ganse écarlate!
Comme à son moindre mot, ordre, grâce, refus,
On adore, on éclate en jappements confus!
Comme autour de ce banc où l’oeil soumis s’attache,
On attend qu’un sourire entr’ouvre sa moustache!
Il dit Venez! on vient. Comme à chaque moment
Avec l’avidité de l’avilissement,
Devant ce sabre obscur qui n’est pas même un glaive,
On se couche à plat ventre!... - Ah! mon coeur se soulève,
Vers le passé hideux je tourne un oeil jaloux,
Et quand je vois ces chiens, je regrette les loups!

25 novembre . En séance

CXLIX LYRNESSI DOMUS ALTA, SOLO LAURENTE SEPULCR UM

Livrée à tous les vents qui descendent du pôle,
Mon île est au milieu de la mer, et la Gaule
S’y fait chêne et granit;
Elle est la grande roche altière et combattante;
Et le tonnerre y vient comme un roi dans sa tente,
Comme un aigle à son nid.

Jeté là par l’exil, mon vieil ami sévère,
Regardant l’éclair luire aux cieux que je’ révère
Comme un âpré ataghan,:
J’ai souvent fait ce rêve: avoir -ma sépulture
Dans cette formidable et farouche nature;
Dormir dans l’ouragan.

Mais aujourd’hui qu’un souffle inconnu me rapporte
Dans ce Paris qui voit la bataille à sa porte
Et qui se tient debout,
Dans ce Paris où tout frémit, où rien ne tremble,
Qui s’emplit d’une pourpre immense, et qui ressemble
A l’urne où l’airain bout,

Je voudrais bien mourir sur ces remparts célèbres,
Afin qu’un jour je puisse, à travers les ténèbres,
Murmurer: « O guerriers!
J’ai ma haute maison où s’abat la colombe,
Où vient l’aigle, au pays des chênes, et ma tombe
Au pays des lauriers.

Paris Décembre 1870.

TAS DE PIERRES

Un coeur peut, comme un monde, avoir eu son désastre;
Alors, dans le passé, sans trouble et sans frayeur,
Le pâle souvenir creuse, âpre fossoyeur;
De la fosse qu’il rouvre il fait sortir un astre.
[1864-1866.]

Forêt Noire
Le jeune chevrier rit dans les monts antiques;
Et, traînant deux à deux des chariots rustiques,
Des boeufs inégaux vont sous les grands sapins verts,
Tristes d’être accouplés la tête de travers.
Album de voyage, 1840.

Voici que le matin, dont l’haleine est remplie
De brises qu’il répand sur la forêt qui plie,
Enfant vêtu de pourpre au sourire immortel,
Sur les étoiles d’or, flambeaux du grand autel,
Se hâte de souffler, comme un jeune lévite
Qui les éteint, de peur de les user trop vite.
[1834-1836]

MI ALMA
Si jamais vous venez regarder dans cette âme,
Vous n’aurez pas de peine à vous y voir, Madame,
Car votre souvenir rayonne en cette nuit;
Dans l’ombre de ce coeur votre front charmant luit;
Et mon âme limpide et profonde et sans voiles
Reflète les amours comme un lac les étoiles.

Là, roule un torrent...
Sur, la rive escarpée un- grand chêné se dresse.
Les feuilles, verts amas que la brise caressé,
Couvrent sa large tête, abri des passereaux,

Et son tronc, que jamais ne touche la cognée,
Et l’uii de ses bras noirs en tient une poignée
Qu’il tend d’un bord à l’autre -ux avides chevreaux.
[1834-1836]
[1870-1872]

Gros-Claude en bourgeron de toile, et la Thomasse
Aùx cheveux gras, aux mains rouges, à l’air homasse,
S’appellent aujourd’hui Fernand et Malvina.
Car les noms de roman dont nagère on s’orna
Ont quitté les salons jadis. pleins d’andalouses,
Et portent maintenant des sabots et des’ blouses.
[1836-1840]

ÉPÎTRES

Une fleur en prison chez soi, quelle folie!
Le pot est bien plus laid que la fleur n’est jolie.
[1872-1873]

VÉNUS

Ô Dieu, soyez béni pour cette belle étoile!

MAGLIA - PAYSAGE

Le beau soleil couchant, dans la nue élargi,
Semble un grand bouclier dans la forge rougi,
Et des mêmes rayons dore au coin du bois sombre
Le poète qui chasse à la rime dans. l’ombre,
Et le voleur pensif qui rêve au noeud coulant.
Les charrettes de foin, dans les chemins roulant,
Laissent leurs cheveux verts et flottants, à poignées,
Aux branches qui les ont au passage peignées.
[1857-1859]

Pied à pied, front sur front, et les rangs dans les rangs,
Sourds, furieux, pressés, l’un à l’autre adhérents

Comme la hache au bloc de chêne qu’elle entaille,
Uné pelouse drue avec des arbres bas,
Un gros clocher de pierre au milieu du feuillage,
Des toits à fleur de champ laissant voir des grabats,
Des mares, du fumier, des coqs: c’est le village
Les régiments épais se heurtent; la bataille
Hurle, et d’égorgements le glaive se repaît;
On jette aux flots les morts du haut du parapet;
Et, tandis que le fleuve écume, et que la plaine,
Livrée aux chocs sanglants, s’emplit d’une âpre haleine,
Au centre du combat, sur le ciel clair du soir,
On voit dans la mêlée un cavalier tout noir ,
Qui sonne, du clairon sur un pont couvert d’hommes.
Carnet, 1862.

Dans l’église de...
L’orgue commence, voix profonde!

Un éclair, d’harmonie éclate et disparaît.
Puis, comme en la mêlée et comme en la forêt,
Le bruit monte, tremble, s’écroule,
Et se redresse ainsi qu’un combattant debout,
Et comme dans une urne embrasée où l’eau bout,
Les sombres voix croissent en foule.

Il semble qu’on ne sait quel attendrissement,
Devant la terre, champ de bataille fumant,
Où tant de douleurs se lamentent,
Ait saisi tout à coup l’airain farouche et froid,
Et qu’il veuille apaiser l’âme humaine, et l’on croit
Entendre des canons qui chantent.
Carnet, 1867

Comédie - L’IDÉAL ET LE CHARNEL

Thérèse, votre amour montait aux cieux, le mien
Brûlait mes os. Était-ce un mal? était-ce un bien?

Sur de telles amours, on ne peut s’y soustraire,
La même cause amène un double effet contraire:
Nos deux cœurs sont changés. Hélas! je me soumets.
Vous n’aimez plus, et moi, j’aime plus que jamais.
C’est fini. Nous brûlions différemment, Thérèse;
Le souffle éteint la flamme et ranime la braise.
[1852-1853]

On cite de mémoire, on rit, on s’embarrasse,
On se défie à qui sait le mieux son Horace,
On parie, et, chacun à son tour, nous disons
Un des six premiers vers de l’Epître aux Pisons.

Vous avez déployé grammaires et lexiques,
Et nous pouvons chanter notre De Profundis.
Vous êtes forts, Messieurs les professeurs classiques!
Vous nous avez battus, défaits, abasourdis!
Quel poids ont vos discours! ô logique inflexible!
Nous gisons écrasés devant vos arguments,
Et nulle résistance à présent n’est, possible.
De nous, les assommes, à vous, les assommants!
Album, 1843

Tu brilles au milieu des évêques; doux prêtre;
Tous, l’oeil fixé sur toi, chantent:’Libera nos!
Mais ton humilité souffre et -s’attriste d’être
Un des point cardinaux.
Les blancheurs que Dieu crée amusent la noirceur.
Satan regarde avec une sinistre joie
La vertu, cette sotte, et le cygne cette oie.
[1855-1856]

C’était un bon enfant,
C’est-à-dire un gaillard bruyant, gai, triomphant,
Jovial en dessus, fin ‘en dessous, en somme,
Très fort; le bon enfant plus tard fait le bonhomme;
Défiez-vous-en.

...Un rossignol faisait visite à des chouettes
Si souvent qu'à la fin, notez ceci, poètes,
Les chouettes disaient: « Le vilain animal!
Comme il est ennuyeux et comme il chante mal!"
28 avril 1847

Que de nuit dans ta gloire; ô Versailles!
O siècle de Louis, mêlant sur son pavois
La splendeur de Molière aux crimes de Louvois!
Règne pompeux, rongé de lèpre et de vermine!
Une femme empoisonne, une femme extermine;
La Maintenon est spectre après la Brinvilliers.
[1856-1858]

Je compare à nos espérances,
A nos rêves, à nos regrets,
Ces lueurs et ces transparences
Qu'on voit le soir dans les forêts.
[1859-1860]

Guerre! le tambour bat. Guerre! on entend les cuivres
Et les clairons chanter comme des bouches ivres,
Et les tocsins sonner;
On voit sur les cités, dont leur ongle étreint l'âme,
Le lion incendie et la crinière flamme
Rugir et frissonner.

[1858-1859]
[1859-1860]
GUERRE
Rien de plus juste, il faut payer les aumôniers,
Peuples, un éternel au pied de paix volts coûte
Moins cher qu'un Tout-Puissaùt au pied de guerre. En route,
Canons, mortiers, drapeaux, et vous, psaumes blindés
Couvrant les rois pendant qu'on joue un peuple aux dés,
Te Deum cuirassés, encensoirs de bataille!
Près des tambours-majors dressant leur haute taille,

Que les Agnus Dei fassent la grosse voix!

Le vautour se prépare à dépecer les morts.
Il entend les chevaux hennir, rongeant le mors,
Et les casques sonner ainsi que des enclumes,
Et passe, frissonnant, son bec entre ses plumes.
La vieille bougonnait dans sa barbe; les mômes
Grognaient, petit tas noir de Pierres et de Jeans;
Le gîte était immonde à faire fuir les gens;
Près du feu qui mettait son suif à la torture,
Une chandelle en deuil pleurait dans la friture.
[1858-1859]

LE CROQUEMORT, titubant.
   Après m'avoir soûlé
De son vin de Surêne abject et peu salubre,
Cet être m'a lâché ce calembour lugubre:
   Ami, tu portes bien la bière, et mal le vin.
Carnet, 1856.

Ouragans Visions
Dans les nuages noirs pareils à des marées,
Flottent des yeux ardents, des faces effarées,
De vagues cheveux sur des fronts;
Les vents tumultueux tournent comme des roues;
On peut voir dans les cieux des gonfléments de joues
Ajustés à de grands clairons.
[1872-1874.]

Dieu montre le bonheur et ne le donne pas.
[1832-1834
]
Euripide naissait le jour de Salamine:
Trophée où luit Sophocle, et qu'Eschyle domine.
Carnet, 1856

Le progrès tue les bêtes de la nuit, le mal et l’impur.
La porte de clarté sur notre monde noir
Ouvrira ses battants splendides, sans savoir
Si, tandis qu’elle épand l’aube à nos fronts difformes,
Le cloporte écrasé meurt, daris ses gonds énormes.
[1870-1872]

À UN CRITIQUE

Un aveugle a le tact très fin, très net, très clair;
Autant que le renard des-bois, il a le flair;
Autant que le chamois des monts, il a l’ouïe;
Sa sensibilité, rare, exquise, inouïe,.
Du moindre vent coulis lui fait un coup de poing.
Son oreille est subtile et délicate au point
Que.lorsqu’un oiseau chante, il croit, qu’un.taureau beugle.
Quel flair! quel tact! quel goût! Oui, mais il est aveugle.
Octobre 1866

À QUOI MAGLIA RÉPLIQUE PAR CE DOUBLE QUATRAIN:

Vous me trouvez- monotone
Avec mes quatrains, vraiment!
A mon tour si je m’étonne,
C’est de votre étonnement.

Sans que rien les puisse abattre,
Pour aller vous supplier,
Mes vers toujours quatre à quatre
Monteront votre escalier.
[1836-1840]

Que de religions profondément creusées
Pour t’enfouir, rayon que cherchent nos pensées!
Je veux, te voir au fond de l’ombre, je ne puis;
Dieu fit la vérité, mais l’homme a fait le puits.
[1857-1858]
Je frissonne en songeant

Combien la destinée est trouble, obscure, amère,
Et que-c’est, triste énigme! en parlant à sa mère
Que Jésus; Christ du - monde et maître de la loi,
Dit: - Qu’est-il de commun, femme, entre vous et moi?
[1858-1860]

Idée! art, science, mystère,
O souffle de Delphe ou d’Endor,
Courbe toi, poésie austère,
Sous la royauté du sac d’or.
L’intérêt te fouette attelée
A sa charrette, ô muse ailée!
Il rit dé toi, le ventre plein;
Il te broie en ses mains félonnes,
Et du disque de tes colonnes
Fait la meule de son moulin.
[1872-1874]

Oui, nos illusions s’éteignent flamme à flamme.
Et pourtant, que la gloire ou l’oubli le réclame,
Au matin de ses ans, au déclin de ses jours,
Chacun n’a-t-il pas dans son âme
Un songe qu’il rêve toujours?

Les prophètes sont pleins d’un jour mystérieux;
Ils songent, et l’on voit des lueurs dans leurs yeux,
Et c’est par leur clarté que se font reconnaître
Ces hommes transparents que l’avenir pénètre
[1875-1877]

Ecoutez ce que dit le ,voluptueux sombre:
— Le mal d’autrui s’ajoute à vos plaisirs dans l’ombre;
Il est doux, quand le vent trouble, le gouffre amer,
D’être sur terre alors. qu’un autre, est sur la mer.
Carnet, 1861.

Les grands hommes plus tard sont vengés par l’histoire.

Mais c’est quand ils sont morts qu’on dit: ils sont vivants.
Tant qu’ils sont là, la haine acharnée à leur gloire
Poursuit cette fumée et la disperse aux vents.
[1848-1850]

Toute haute figure un jour est abattue.
Le peuple brise un homme après l’avoir porté.
Le piédestal finit par haïr la statue,
Car il en sent le poids sans en voir la beauté.
[1848-1850]

Venise. Palais des doges.
L’escalier des géants (où les doges sont proclamés, où Faliero a été décapité).
Au bas de l’escalier,
  Sur deux socles, parmi les roses et les trèfles,
L’architecte a sculpté deux paniers pleins de nèfles
Pour faire entendre au peuple, enfant aux mille cris,
Que les hommes d’état ne   sont bons que’ pourris.
[1857-1858]

Avez-vous vu parfois dans le soleil lévant,
Tournoyer, cendre d’or, les atomes du vent,
Étoilant le néant, faisant dans la lumière
Avec des grains de cendre et des grains de poussière
Des constellations d’infiniment petits?

Des soldats mèdes sont rangés encercle aùtour
De cette tente ayant la forme d’une tour;
Leurs boucliers sont faits de peau de nasicorne;
Ils ont le sabre nu, la mître au front, l’air, morne,
L’oeil triste, et sur les mains du sang jamais lavé.
Le trône, formidable et lourd, fait d’un pavé,
Est sur un drap de pourpre, au centre de la tente.
[1870-1871]

Progrès de la science.
Astronomie (17° siècle.)
Le réseau des soleils, des mondes et des cieux,’ Entrevu= malgré l’ombre et dérrière la nue,
Filet où l’âme humaine est prise et retenue,
Et qui croise sés fils vertigineux dans l’air,
Se défait maille à maille autour du pâle Euler.
Le même vent d’en haut courbe les foules pâles,
Et ces hommes, géants des ténèbres fatales,
Qui fâ.uchent l’homme sans remord,
Et qui, soldat, bourreau, mufti, sultan, ministre,
Quand elle va monter sur son cheval sinistre,
Tiennent l’étrier,à la mort.
[1859-1861]

Un jour, pensif, tourné vers l’obscur horizon,
Debout, parlant du haut de la colline verte
A tout un peuple ému près d’une fosse ouverte,
J’ai dit: La mort n’a rien dont tremble la raison.
Les sages n’ont pas peur des ombres éternelles.
Ils savent que le corps y trouve une prison,
Mais, que l’âme y trouve des, ailes!
[1848-1850]

Ô mes petits-enfants, ayez pitié des’ âutres.
Anges là-haut, soyez en bas d’humbles apôtres,
Plaignez tous ces pieds nus meurtris aux durs pavés.
Georges, Jeanne, donnez touf ce que vous avez.

[1875-1877]

Être frère aux souffrants, être père aux petits.
[1872-1874]

Riche, donne ton bien; pauvre, donne ton coeur.
[1878-1880]

De qui donne sa vie et son or aux plaisirs,
Aux femmes, aux chevaux, au jeu, l'aumône est rare:
Un prodigue toujours est doublé d'un avare.
Carnet, 1874

Je ne suis pas un saint, je tâche d'êtrè un justé.
[1875-1877]

En riant de la chair dans la chanson obscène,
L'âme est comme un forçat qui joue avec sa chaîne.
[1859-1860]

La douleur qui s'en va passe en jetant des cris.
Soupirs, larmes, sanglots, deuil rapide et prolixe,!
Le désespoir au front sévère, au regard fixe, .
Se tait, sans oublier et sans se, résigner.
L'oeil qui ne pleure pas laisse le coeur saigner.
[1843-1844]

La douleur se mesure à la grandeur du coeur.
Carnet, 1864

L'enfant ne meurt qu'une fois, mais le père!
Il mourra tous les jours jusqu'à ce qu'on l'enterre.
Le premier serviteur du père, c'est le fils.
Carnet, 1862.

L'esclave prosterné s'avilit et m'éclaire.
Quelquefois on échoue où l'on croit débarquer.
[1840-1844]
[1875-1877]
[1856-1858]

Qui change en y perdant change par conscience.
Carnet, 1867

Tel imbécile prend le dégoût pour le goût.

La vie est un remords quand elle est inutile.
[1866-1868]
Ma destinée étant de mourir en exil,
Je me.suis arrangé sous un rocher farouche
Mon tombeau. Comme on fait son sépulcre, on se couche.
[1863-1864]

Quoique d’air inondé, quoique plein de lumière, .
Le penseur solitaire au désert est pareil;
Sombre malgré l’espace et malgré le soleil.

Ainsi 1 ‘écrivain turc, dans la cour des mosquées,
Au devant du passant et du premier venu,
Se rue, et ses haillons troués montrent à nu,
Pendant qu’offrant son style il s’acharne à vous suivre,
Son flanc maigre que bat l’écritoire de cuivre.
[1858-1860]

Je préfère à Paris, au Louvre, aux Tuileries,
Aux grands carrosses d’or couronnés de laquais,
Aux spectacles, aux. bals, aux fêtes, aux banquets,
Au cirque éblouissant où plane l’écuyère,
Les chansons qu’on entend. le soir dans le bruyère.
Carnet, 1861

Tas d’esclaves! histoire! Ah!,quel troupeau. nous sommes!
Tas de tyrans! l’un chasse aux oiseaux, l’autre aux hommes;
Ils s’ébattent; chacun dans son genre.est complet;
Chacun s’en va chasser la chasse qui lui plaît,
Marchant, l’un dans le sang, l’autre dans la rosée;
Et chacun porte au poing sa bête apprivoisée:
Louis treize un faucon, et Richelieu le roi.
[1838-1840]

L’avare qui dans l’ombre enfouit loin du jour
Son trésor qui lui pèse,
Et qui croit toujours voir s’amonceler autour
La foule aux yeux de braise.

[1838-1840]

C’est un sage, dites-vous?

Et moi, je vous le dis, il fera cent folies.
C’est un homme amoureux? C’est un homme nouveau.
L’amour, dont les chaleurs nous Montent au cerveau,
A bien vite, troublé 1a raison éclipsée.
Cent chimères qui font vacillèr la pensée;
Un brouillard qui remplit l’esprit d’illusions;
Un tourbillon confus de folles actions;
Sortent de ce brasier dont l’âme est consumée.
D’un feu qui brûle au coeur la tête a la fumée

[1840-1844]

Le fleuve se recourbe à nos pieds dans la plaine
Comme un grand fer forgé pour un cheval géant.
Album, 1836.

Les perles de rosée et les pleurs des tempêtes
Sont des gouttes des mêmes eaux;
Le petit cri des nids répond aux flots sublimes;
Le même pied remue, ô Dieu, tous les abîmes
Et balance tous les berceaux.

LE REMORDS
Si vous êtes bon, juste et doux, vos actions
Volent dans votre nuit comme des alcyons;
Le souvenir vous baise au front dans tous vos rêves;
Si vous êtes bandit, si vous heurtez les glaives,
Si vous faites’ le mal, le souvenir vous mord

Dans l’ombre, avec les dents d’une tête de mort.
Carnet, 1856.

Le faux peut quelquefois n’être pas vraisemblable 54.
Je crois à la prière et je crois à mes fautes.
Carnet, 1874.

L’encens
Qui monte à Dieu du fond des lys reconnaissants.
[1838-1840]

Les forces de la nuit sont joyeuses des peines
Qui tombent par instants sur les têtes-humaines.

Et quand la terre a vu quelque grand châtiment,
Quelque tyran tombé sur son trône fumant,
Les tonnerres, vers l’ombre où songe l’Invisible,
Reviennent en chantant leur fanfare terrible.
Loin dans l’obscurité, battu d’affreuses. grêles,
Hérissant de gibets le toit de ses tourelles,
Plus noir que le vol du corbeau,
Vague, confus, brumeux, perdu dans l’insondable,
L’édifice du mal apparaît formidable.
Comme le spectre d’un tombeau.
[1859-1861]

L’enseignement mystérieux est nécessaire.
Songeurs du lac et du rocher,
Bardes, mages, hommes des voiles,
Il faut de plus en plus pencher
Le genre humain vers les étoiles.
[1869-1872]

Je l’ai cueillie au bord d’une eau cachée et lente,
Elle est bleue et demain on la verra jaunir.
La fleur du, souvenir n’est pas bien. ressemblante,

Car la fleur passe et meurt, et non le souvenir.
Carnet, 1861.

L'ORAGE

Quel monstre que la foudre! et qu'est-ce donc, abîme,
Que ce vent qui remue avec un bruit sublime
Tout l'effrayant plafond du ciel, et qui produit
L'énorme craquement des poutres de la nuit?
Carnet, 1857.

Àu-dessus du vieux lit, moisissait dans un cadre
Un portrait d'un, aïeul quelconque, en chef d'escadre,
Qui, dans un golfe ayant la courbure d'un G,
Bombardait un grand-turc, par les mites rongé.

Le temps mène le deuil de nôtre destinée;
La terre est un sépulcre, et la lugubre année,
Gardienne pâle des tombeaux,
Autour du cénotaphe où gît, couvert de voiles,
Le genre humain couché sous le drap des étoiles,
Allume ses douze flambeaux.
La bise fait le bruit d'un géant qui soupire;
La fenêtre palpite et la porte respire;
Le vent. d'hiver glapit sous les tuiles des toits;
Le feu fait à mon atre une pâle dorure;
Le trou de ma serrure
Me souffle sur les doigts.

SOMMEIL

Ô pesanteur formidable
De la paupière qui dort!
L'âme est dans l'ombre insondable,
Et l'oeil ténébreux est mort..

[1860-1862]

Le lys est la coupe de l’âme.

Quand le coeur. est malade, il cherche à se guérir.
Il se rappelle alors, triste jusqu’à mourir,
Par quels secours le ciel calme notre souffrance;
Et c’est de souvenir qu’est faite l’espérance.
[1834-1836]

Enfant! n’ayons jamais de haine pour les hommes.
Lorsqu’ils sont malheureux, tous; hélas! nous le sommes,
Plains-les, ne donne pas ton bon coeur à moitié,
Et lorsqu’ils sont méchants, ajoute à la pitié!

Le méchant souffre plus, donc il faut plus le plaindre.

Ô ciel, éternel rêve
Des chaldéens, des grecs, des guèbres, des hébreux!
Quelle est donc la moisson du grand champ ténébreux?
Sur quels grains merveilleux, sur quels épis sublimes
Tourne-t-il donc, au fond des sinistres abîmes,
Ce zodiaque obscur, meule de l’infini?
[1859-1862]

On n’arrache pas Dieu des coeurs facilement.
[1874-1876]

La terre est belle, amis, quoique pleine de tombes;
Dehors sont les jardins, les roses, les colombes,
Les filles aux seins nus, les rayons; et dedans
Les morts silencieux qui tiennent dans leurs dents
Un denier pour payer à Caron leur passage.
[1862-1864]

L’encre, cette noirceur d’où sort une lumière.

Eh! quoi! vous affamez les nations, tyrans?
Imbéciles! la faim est un loup; prenez garde
A la faim; la misère est sinistre et hagarde;
Ah! baîllonnez du moins le peuple avec du pain!
[1868-1869]

Fais passer ton esprit à travers le malheur.
Comme le grain du crible, il sortira meilleur!
20 janvier 1835.

LES IVRESSES

La vigne gaie et verte et de grappes chargée,
Rit au seuil des maisons et grimpe jusqu'au toit;
Le houblon est joyeux sur la terre et l'où voit
Dans les larges tonneaux où trempe sa guirlande
Mousser l'ale d'Ecosse ou le porter d'Irlande.
Carnet, 1861.

Il est bon d'être ancien et mauvais d'être vieux.
[1832-1836]

Pour cheveux blancs, cheveux gris c'est jeunesse 55
[1834-1836]

L'amour...
[1840-1842]

L'océan, vieux guerrier, vieux sabreur des rochers.
Son écume, est de neige et sa vague est de nuit.
Il a la barbe blanche et la moustache noire.
[1857-1858.]

Quiconque est envieux s'avoue inférieur.
Mettez en prière l'enfant,
Nous sommes accablés par la Toute-Puissance,

Faites intercéder pour nous cette innocence,
Mère, employez votre ange à désarmer le ciel.
[1862-1864]

Sa bonne humeur énorme est une plénitude;
Il est hilare, il est folâtre, il est serein;
Et jamais un soupir, un nuage, un chagrin,
Un regret, un souci, ne comprime et n’étrique
Son rire olympien et sa joie homérique.
[1862-1864]

Et dans le clair-obscur court la rivière étroite;
Parfois le paysage étrange qui miroite
Ressemble à ces dessins qu’on voit dans l’acajou.
Un vieux château, bâti par les comtes d’Anjou,
Dresse sur l’horizon sa silhouette noire.
Heureux l’homme
Que ce feu brûle encore à l’âge où tout s’éteint

[1864-1866.]
Dieu, qui créa la nuit, ne peut punir l’erreur.
Toi qui t’es seulement trompé, sois sans terreur.
L’homme un jour contre.lui, dans ces ombres si hautes,
N’aura pas ses erreurs, mais il aura ses fautes.
[1874-1876]

On distingue, malgré son mystère et ses voiles,
Dieu par la claire-voie immense des étoiles.
[1873-1874]

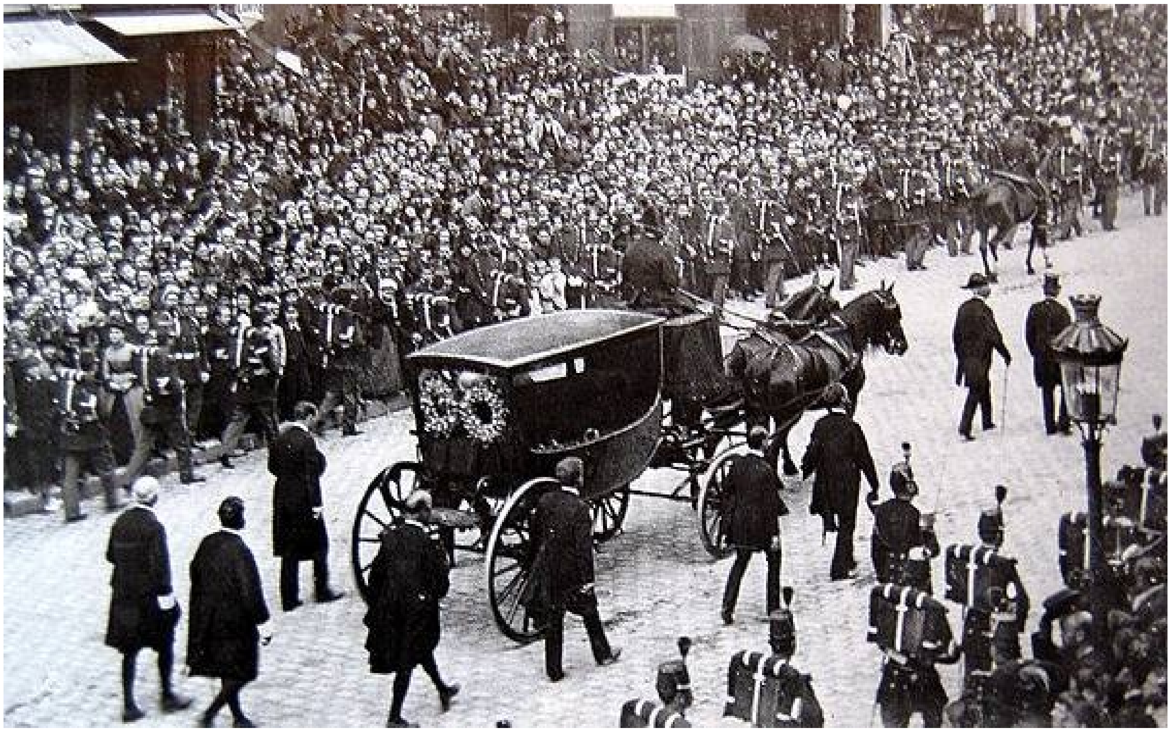
Tous les hommes sont l’Homme, et tous les dieux, c’est Dieu.

Ô folie! ô génie! effrayants voisinages!
La forme du bonheur change avec les années.
L’homme scande ici-bas le vers qu’il chante au ciel.
La vie est un torchon orné d’une dentelle.

POÈMES UNCOLLECTED

TABLE DES MATIERES

À MADAME LA GENERALE LUCOTTE
LE RETOUR DE L’EMPEREUR
I.
II.
III.
IV.
LE 15 DÉCEMBRE 1840.



Victor Hugo’s funeral march, 1885

À MADAME LA GENERALE LUCOTTE

Pour le 1er janvier 1814

Madame, en ce jour si beau
Qui vous annonce un an nouveau,
Je vous souhaite de bonnes années,
Des jours de soie et d’or filés,
Et surtout en votre vieillesse
De bons enfants et des richesses.
Ainsi, madame, pour en finir,
C’est avec bien du plaisir
Que je vous présente en ce jour
Et mon hommage et mon amour.

Par son serviteur,
VICTOR HUGO.

LE RETOUR DE L’EMPEREUR

1840

Dors! nous t’irons chercher! — Ce jour viendra peut-être!
Car nous t’avons pour dieu sans t’avoir eu pour maître;
Car notre œil s’est mouillé de ton destin fatal,
Et, sous les trois couleurs comme sous l’oriflamme,
Nous ne nous pendons pas à cette corde infâme
Qui t’arrache à ton piédestal.

Oh! va, nous te ferons de belles funérailles!
Nous aurons bien aussi peut-être nos batailles,
Nous en ombragerons ton cercueil respecté.
Nous y convierons tout, Europe, Afrique, Asie,
Et nous t’amènerons la jeune poésie
Chantant la jeune liberté.
Ode à la Colonne, Octobre 1830.

I.

Après la dernière bataille,
Quand, formidables et béants,
Six cents canons sous la mitraille
Eurent écrasé les géants;
Dans ces jours où caisson qui roule,
Blessés, chevaux, fuyaient en foule,
Où l’on vit choir l’aigle indompté,
Et, dans le bruit et la fumée,
Sous l’écroulement d’une armée,
Plier Paris épouvanté;

Quand la vieille garde fut morte,
Trahi des uns, de tous quitté,
Le grand empereur, sans escorte
Rentra dans la grande cité.
Dans l’ancien palais Elysée
Il s’arrêta, l’âme épuisée;
Et, n’attendant plus de secours,
Repoussant la guerre civile,
Avant de sortir de sa ville,
Triste, il la contempla trois jours.

Sa tête enfin était courbée.
Plus de triomphes! plus de cris!
Sa popularité tombée
Couvrait sa gloire de débris.
Partout l’abandon ou la haine!
Le soir, quelque passant à peine,
S’arrêtant, mais sans approcher,
Dans le palais cherchant le maître,
A travers la haute fenêtre
Regardait son ombre marcher

Durant ces heures solennelles,
Tandis qu’il sondait son malheur,
L’œil des muettes sentinelles
L’interrogeait avec douleur.
Soldats toujours prêts pour la lutte,
Hélas! ils comptaient de sa chute
Chaque symptôme avant-coureur;
Et, comme un jour qui se retire,
Ils voyaient s’effacer l’empire
Dans le regard de l’empereur!

Adieu ses légions sans nombre!
Adieu ses camps victorieux!
II se sentait poussé vers l’ombre
Par un souffle mystérieux.
La nuit, sa fièvre était sans trêves;
II voyait flotter dans ses rêves
Le spectre d’un rocher lointain;
Déjà, l’âme d’angoisses pleine,
II entrevoyait Sainte-Hélène
Dans les brumes de son destin.

Le jour, en proie à la pensée,
L’œil fixé sur le sol sacré,
Le front sur la vitre glacée,
Il disait: « Oh! je reviendrai!
Je reviendrai! toujours le même,
Seul, sans pourpre et sans diadème,
Sans bataillons et sans trésors;
Je veux, proscrit, chassé, qu’importe?
Choisir, pour rentrer, cette porte,
Cette porte par où je sors.

«Une nuit, dans une tempête,
Rapporté par un vent des cieux,
Avec des éclairs sur la tête,
Je surgirai, vivant, joyeux!

Mes vieux compagnons d’aventure
Dormiront dans la brume obscure,
Et tout à coup, à l’orient,
Ils verront luire, ô délivrance!
Mon œil, rayonnant pour la France,
Pour l’Angleterre flamboyant!

«J’apparaîtrai dans les ténèbres
A ce Paris qui m’adora;
Le jour succède aux nuits funèbres,
Et mon peuple se lèvera!
Il se lèvera plein de joie,
Pourvu que dans l’ombre il me voie
Chassant l’étranger, vil troupeau,
Pâle, la main de sang trempée,
Avec le tronçon d’une épée,
Avec le haillon d’un drapeau!”

*

Sire, vous reviendrez dans votre capitale,
Sans tocsin, sans combat, sans lutte et sans fureur,
Traîné par huit chevaux sous l’arche triomphale,
    En habit d’empereur!

Par cette même porte, où Dieu vous accompagne,
Sire, vous reviendrez sur un sublime char,
Glorieux, couronné, saint comme Charlemagne
    Et grand comme César!

Sur votre sceptre d’or, qu’aucun vainqueur ne foule,
On verra resplendir votre aigle au bec vermeil,
Et sur votre manteau vos abeilles en foule
    Frissonner au soleil.

Paris sur ses cent tours allumera des phares;
Paris fera parler toutes ses grandes voix;

Les cloches, les tambours, les clairons, les fanfares,
Chanteront à la fois.

Joyeux comme l’enfant quand l’aube recommence,
Emu comme le prêtre au seuil du lieu sacré,
Sire, on verra vers vous venir un peuple immense,
Tremblant, pâle, effaré;

Peuple qui sous vos pieds mettrait les lois de Sparte,
Qu’embrase votre esprit, qu’enivre votre nom,
Et qui flotte, ébloui, du jeune Bonaparte
Au vieux Napoléon.

Une nouvelle armée, ardente d’espérance.
Dont les exploits déjà sèmeront la terreur,
Autour de votre char criera: Vive la France!
Et vive L’Empereur!

En vous voyant passer. ô chef du grand empire!
Le peuple et les soldats tomberont à genoux;
Mais vous ne pourrez pas vous pencher pour leur dire
Je suis content de vous!

Une acclamation douce, tendre et hautaine,
Chant des cœurs, cri d’amour où l’extase se joint,
Remplira la cité; mais, ô mon capitaine!
Vous ne l’entendrez point.

De sombres grenadiers, vétérans qu’on admire,
Muets, de vos chevaux viendront baiser les pas;
Ce spectacle sera touchant et beau; mais, sire,
Vous ne le verrez pas.

Car, ô géant! couché dans une ombre profonde,
Pendant qu’autour de vous, comme autour d’un ami,
S’éveilleront Paris, et la France, et le monde,
Vous serez endormi!

Vous serez endormi, figure auguste et fière,
De ce morne sommeil, plein de rêves pesants,
Dont Barberousse, assis sur sa chaise de pierre,
    Dort depuis six cents ans.

L’épée au flanc, l’œil clos, la main encore émue
Par le dernier baiser de Bertrand éperdu,
Dans un lit où jamais le dormeur ne remue,
    Vous serez étendu.

Pareil à ces soldats qui, devant cent murailles,
Avaient suivi vos pas, vainqueurs, toujours debout,
Et qui, touchés un soir par le vent des batailles,
    Se couchaient tout à coup.

Leur attitude grave, altière, armée encore,
Ressemblait au sommeil, et non point au trépas;
Mais la diane, hélas! cette voix de l’aurore,
    Ne les réveillait pas.

Si bien que, vous voyant glacé, dans son délire,
Et tel qu’un dieu muet qui se laisse adorer,
Ce peuple, ivre d’amour, venu pour vous sourire,
    Ne pourra que pleurer.

Sire, en ce moment-là, vous aurez pour royaume
Tous les fronts, tous les cœurs qui battront sous le ciel
Les nations feront asseoir votre fantôme
    Au trône universel.

Les poètes divins, élite agenouillée,
Vous proclameront grand, vénérable, immortel,
Et de votre mémoire, injustement souillée,
    Redoreront l’autel.

Les nuages auront passé dans votre gloire;

Rien ne troublera plus son rayonnement pur;
Elle se posera sur toute notre histoire
    Comme un dôme d’azur.

Vous serez pour tout homme une âme grande et bonne,
Pour la France un proscrit magnanime et serein,
Sire, et pour l’étranger, sur la haute colonne,
    Un colosse d’airain,

Vous cependant, — tandis qu’une pompe sacrée
Mènera par la ville un cortège inouï,
Et que tous croiront voir revivre à votre entrée
    Un monde évanoui;

Tandis qu’on entendra, près du dôme ou des ombres
Gardent tous les grands noms dont Paris se souvient,
Rugir les vieux canons comme des dogues sombres
    Quand le maître revient;

Tandis que votre nom, devant qui tout s’efface,
Montera vers les cieux, puissant, illustre et beau, —
Vous sentirez ronger dans l’ombre votre face
    Par le ver du tombeau!

*

Sombres événements, hérauts aux noirs messages!
Masques dont le Seigneur connaît seul les visages,
Que vous parlez parfois un langage effrayant!
Oh! n’arrachez-vous pas au livre de Dieu même
Ces feuillets ténébreux, pleins d’un vague anathème,
    Que vous nous jetez en fuyant?

Rien n’est complet; à tout il manque quelque chose;
L’homme a le pilori, l’ombre a l’apothéose.
Ces héros sont trop grands! un même sort les suit.
Hélas! tous les Césars et tous les Charlemagnes

Ont deux versants ainsi que les hautes montagnes;
D’un côté le soleil, et de l’autre la nuit.

Et quel temps fut jamais plus grave et plus sévère!
Le Christ déraciné tremble sur le Calvaire.
Oh! que d’écroulements! tout chancelle à la fois,
Tout plie et rompt, les grands sous la charge des haines,
Les rois sous le fardeau du sort, les lois humaines
    Sous le poids des divines lois!

Rien de ces noirs débris ne sort — que toi, pensée!
Poésie immortelle à tous les vents bercée!
Ainsi, pour s’en aller en toute liberté,
Au gré de l’air qui souffle ou de l’eau qui s’épanche,
Teinte à peine de sang, la plume chaste et blanche
Tombe de l’oiseau mort et du nid dévasté.

II.

Sainte-Hélène! — leçon! chute! exemple! agonie!
L’Angleterre, à la haine épuisant son génie,
Se mit à dévorer ce grand homme en plein jour;
Et l’univers revit ce spectacle homérique;
La chaîne, le rocher brûlé du ciel d’Afrique,
    Et le Titan — et le Vautour!

*

Cependant ces tourments, cette auguste infortune,
Cette rage punique, implacable rancune,
Faisant saigner d’en bas le grand crucifié,
Ces affronts, qui tombaient sur toute âme hautaine,
Comme un vase profond où coule une fontaine,
Emplissaient lentement le monde de pitié.

Pitié des nobles cœurs! cri de toute la terre!
Qui t’irritaient dans l’ombre, ô geôlier d’Angleterre!
Car l’admiration, de son feu souverain,
Endurcit l’homme vil, amollit la grande âme.
Hélas! où pleure un brave, un lâche rit, La flamme
    Sèche la fange et fond l’airain.

*

Lui, pourtant, restait fier comme un roi chez son hôte.
On l’entendait parler dans son île à voix haute.
Il rêvait; il dictait d’illustres testaments;
Il repoussait l’oubli dont l’exil s’enveloppe;
Et, quand son œil parfois se tournait vers l’Europe,
Il en venait encore de grands rayonnements.

Un jour — Lanne assoupi tressaillit sous son dôme; —

Les quatre aigles pensifs de la place Vendôme
Frémirent en voyant passer un noir corbeau.
On regarda. La nuit était sur Sainte-Hélène.
Un guichetier anglais sous son impure haleine
    Avait éteint le grand flambeau.

*

Vingt ans il a dormi dans cette île lointaine!
Dans les monts, près d’un saule, au bord d’une fontaine,
    Sans affront, sans honneur,
Vingt ans il a dormi sous une dalle obscure,
Seul avec l’océan, seul avec la nature,
    Seul avec vous, Seigneur!

Là, dans la solitude, après tant de tempêtes,
Tandis que son esprit revivait dans nos têtes,
Que l’Europe indignée exécrait sa prison,
Et que les rois, tremblant jusque dans leurs entrailles,
Voyaient le tourbillon de toutes ses batailles
Gronder confusément encore à l’horizon;

Durant les nuits, à l’heure où l’âme dans l’espace
N’entend que l’eau qui fuit, le cormoran qui passe,
    Le flot des flots heurté,
L’air balayant les monts que la nuée encombre,
Et ce que dit tout bas à l’éternité sombre
    La sombre immensité;

Quand la forêt frissonne au front de la colline,
Quand le ciel lentement vers l’océan s’incline,
Lorsque, brisant sa vague aux nocturnes rayons,
La mer, où vont plongeant des étoiles sans nombre,
    Semble écumer dans l’ombre
Au choc étincelant des constellations;

Dans ces heures de paix, les déserts, les vallées,

Les vents, les bois, les monts, les sphères étoilées,
    Chantant un divin chœur,
Couvrant d’oubli sa tombe aux bruits humains murée,
Ensemble accomplissaient la fonction sacrée
    De calmer ce grand cœur.

III.

Jadis, quand vous vouliez conquérir une ville,
Ratisbonne ou Madrid, Varsovie ou Séville,
Vienne l'austère, ou Naple au soleil radieux,
Vous fronciez le sourcil, ô figure idéale!
Alors tout était dit. La garde impériale
    Faisait trois pas comme les dieux.

Vos batailles, ô roi! comme des mains fatales,
L'une après l'autre, ont pris toutes les capitales;
Il suffit d'Iéna pour entrer à Berlin,
D'Arcole pour entrer à Mantoue, ô grand homme!
Lodi mène à Milan, Marengo mène à Rome,
    La Moskova mène au Kremlin!

Paris coûte plus cher! c'est la cité sacrée!
C'est la conquête ardue, âpre, démesurée!
Le but éblouissant des suprêmes efforts!
Pour entrer dans Paris, la ville de mémoire,
Sire, il faut revenir de la sombre victoire
    Qu'on remporte au pays des morts!

Il faut avoir forcé toute haine à se taire,
Rallié tout grand cœur et tout grand caractère,
S'être fait de l'Europe et l'âme et le milieu,
Et, debout dans la gloire ainsi que dans un temple,
Etre pour l'univers, qui de loin vous contemple,
    Plus qu'un fantôme et presque un dieu!

Il faut, soleil du siècle, en éclipser les astres;
Il faut, héros accru même par les désastres,
Dépasser Lafayette, effacer Mirabeau,
Sortir du fond des mers où l'autre ciel commence,
Et mêler la grandeur de l'océan immense

A la majesté du tombeau!

IV.

Oh! t’abaisser n’est pas facile,
France, sommet des nations!
Toi que l’idée a pour asile,
Mère des révolutions!
Aux choses dont tu fais le moule
Tout l’univers travaille en foule;
Ta chaleur dans ses veines coule;
Il t’obéit avec orgueil;
Il marche, il forge, il tente, il fonde;
Toi, tu penses, grave et féconde... —
La France est la tête du monde,
Cyclope dont Paris est l’œil!

Te détruire? — audace insensée!
Crime! folie! impiété!
Ce serait ôter la pensée
A la future humanité!
Ce serait aveugler les races!
Car, dans le chemin que tu traces,
Dans le cercle où tu les embrasses,
Tous les peuples doivent s’unir;
L’esprit des temps à ta voix change;
Tout ce qui naît sous toi se range! —
Qui donc ferait ce rêve étrange
De décapiter l’avenir?

Te bâillonner? — Rois! Dieu lui-même
Pourra vous le prouver bientôt,
Ce siècle est un profond problème
Dont la France seule a le mot.
Ce siècle est debout sur la rive,
D’une voix terrible ou plaintive,
Questionnant quiconque arrive,

Tribuns, penseurs, — ou rois, hélas!
Il propose à tous, dès l'aurore,
L'énigme inexpliquée encore,
Et, comme le sphinx, il dévore
Celui qui ne le comprend pas!

T'insulter? — mais, s'il se rencontre
Des rois pour courir ce danger,
Vois donc les choses que Dieu montre
A ceux qui voudraient t'outrager!
Vois, sous l'arche où sont nos histoires,
Wagram, les mains de poudre noires,
Ulm, Essling, Eylau, cent victoires,
Défiler au bruit du tambour!
Dieu, quand l'Europe te croit morte,
Prend l'empereur et te l'apporte,
Et fait repasser sous ta porte
Toute ta gloire en un seul jour!

T'insulter! t'insulter! ma mère!
Mais n'avons-nous pas tous, ô ciel!
Parmi nos livres, près d'Homère,
Quelque vieux sabre paternel?
Nos pères sont morts, France aimée!
Mais de leur foule ranimée
Peut-être on ferait une armée
Comme on en fait un Panthéon!
Prêts à surgir au bruit des bombes,
Prêts à se lever si tu tombes,
Peut-être sont-ils dans leurs tombes
Entiers comme Napoléon!

*

Toi, héros de ces funérailles,
Roi! génie! empereur! martyr!
Les temps sont clos; dans nos murailles

Rentre pour ne plus en sortir!
Rentre aussi dans ta gloire entière,
Toi qui mêlais, d’une main fière,
Dans l’airain de ton œuvre altière
Tous les peuples, tous les métaux;
Toi qui, dans ta force profonde,
Oubliant que la foudre gronde,
Voulais donner ta forme au monde
Comme Alexandre au mont Athos!

Tu voulais, versant notre sève
Aux peuples trop lents à mûrir,
Faire conquérir par le glaive
Ce que l’esprit doit conquérir.
Sur Dieu même prenant l’avance,
Tu prétendais, vaste espérance!
Remplacer Rome par la France
Régnant du Tage à la Néva;
Mais de tels projets Dieu se venge.
Duel effrayant! guerre étrange!
Jacob ne luttait qu’avec l’ange,
Tu luttais avec Jéhova!

Nul homme en ta marche hardie
N’a vaincu ton bras calme et fort;
A Moscou, ce fut l’incendie;
A Waterloo, ce fut le sort.
Que t’importe que l’Angleterre
Fasse parler un bloc de pierre
Dans ce coin fameux de la terre
Où Dieu brisa Napoléon,
Et, sans qu’elle-même ose y croire,
Fasse attester devant l’histoire
Le mensonge d’une victoire
Par le fantôme d’un lion?

Oh! qu’il tremble, au vent qui s’élève,

Sur son piédestal incertain,
Ce lion chancelant qui rêve,
Debout dans le champ du destin!
Nous repasserons dans sa plaine!
Laisse-le donc conter sa haine
Et répandre son ombre vaine
Sur tes braves ensevelis!
Quelque jour, — et je l’attends d’elle! —
Ton aigle, à nos drapeaux fidèle,
Le soufflettera d’un coup d’aile
En s’en allant vers Austerlitz!

LE 15 DÉCEMBRE 1840.

Écrit en revenant des Champs-Élysées

Ciel glacé, soleil pur. — Oh! brille dans l’histoire,
Du funèbre triomphe impérial flambeau!
Que le peuple à jamais te garde en sa mémoire,
    Jour beau comme la gloire,
    Froid comme le tombeau!

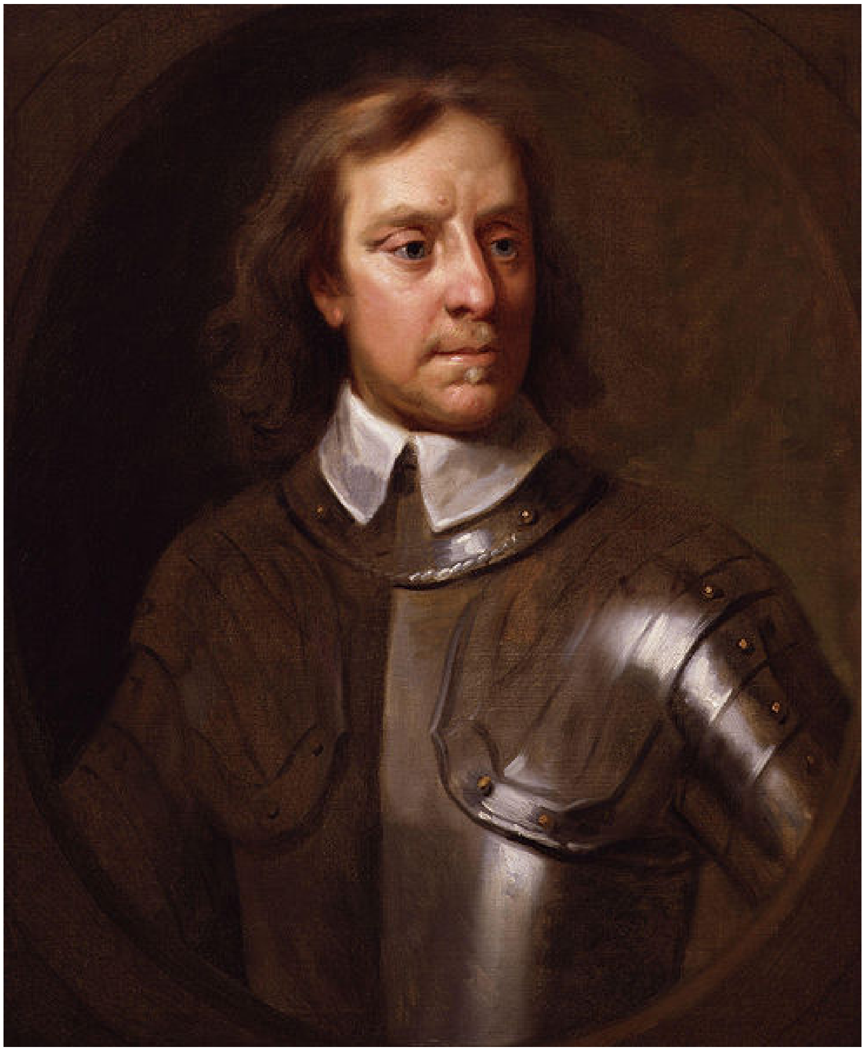
The Plays

4e ARR
PLACE
DES VOSGES
6

‘La maison de Victor Hugo’ — a museum in Paris

CROMWELL

Hugo’s first play was written in 1827. At the time Hugo belonged to a literary circle that identified itself as Romanticist, taking Shakespeare as their model dramatist rather than the Classicist models of Jean Racine and Pierre Corneille, who were supported by the French Academy. This historical play was Hugo’s attempt to present a play that aspired to the beliefs of the Romantic movement, but sadly it was never performed on stage. It tells the story of Oliver Cromwell’s internal disputes in being offered the crown of England. The play is notable for its preface, which is now considered to be the manifesto of the Romantic movement.



Oliver Cromwell (1599-1658)

CROMWELL

CONTENTS

PREFACE
DRAMATIS PERSONS
SCENE I.
SCENE II.
SCENE III.
SCENE IV
SCENE V.
SCENE VI.
SCENE VII.
SCENE VIII.
SCENE IX.
SCENE X.
SCENE XI.
ACT II.
SCENE I.
SCENE II.
SCENE III.
SCENE IV.
SCENE V.
SCENE VI.
SCENE VII.
SCENE VIII.
SCENE IX.
SCENE X.
SCENE XI.
SCENE XII.
SCENE XIII.
SCENE XIV.
SCENE XV.
SCENE XVI.
SCENE XVII.
SCENE XVIII.

SCENE XIX.
SCENE XX.
SCENE XXI.
SCENE XXII.
SCENE XXIII.
ACT III.
SCENE I.
SCENE II.
SCENE III.
SCENE IV.
SCENE V.
SCENE VI.
SCENE VII.
SCENE VIII.
SCENE IX.
SCENE X.
SCENE XI.
SCENE XII.
SCENE XIII.
SCENE XIV.
SCENE XV.
SCENE XVI.
SCENE XVII.
ACT IV.
SCENE I.
SCENE II.
SCENE III.
SCENE IV.
SCENE V.
SCENE VI.
SCENE VII
SCENE VIII.
SCENE IX.
ACT V.
SCENE I.
SCENE II.
SCENE III.

SCENE IV.
SCENE V.
SCENE VI.
SCENE VII.
SCENE VIII.
SCENE IX.
SCENE X.
SCENE XI.
SCENE XII.
SCENE XIII.
SCENE XIV.

PREFACE

The drama contained in the following pages has nothing to commend it to the attention or the good will of the public. It has not, to attract the interest of political disputants, the advantage of the veto of the official censorship, nor even, to win for it at the outset the literary sympathy of men of taste, the honour of having been formally rejected by an infallible reading committee.

It presents itself, therefore, to the public gaze, naked and friendless, like the infirm man of the Gospel — solus, pauper, nudus.

Not without some hesitation, moreover, did the author determine to burden his drama with a preface. Such things are usually of very little interest to the reader. He inquires concerning the talent of a writer rather than concerning his point of view; and in determining whether a work is good or bad, it matters little to him upon what ideas it is based, or in what sort of mind it germinated. One seldom inspects the cellars of a house after visiting its salons, and when one eats the fruit of a tree, one cares but little about its root.

On the other hand, notes and prefaces are sometimes a convenient method of adding to the weight of a book, and of magnifying, in appearance at least, the importance of a work; as a matter of tactics this is not dissimilar to that of the general who, to make his battle-front more imposing, puts everything, even his baggage-trains, in the line. And then, while critics fall foul of the preface and scholars of the notes, it may happen that the work itself will escape them, passing uninjured between their cross-fires, as an army extricates itself from a dangerous position between two skirmishes of outposts and rear-guards.

These reasons, weighty as they may seem, are not those which influenced the author. This volume did not need to be inflated, it was already too stout by far. Furthermore, and the author does not know why it is so, his prefaces, frank and ingenuous as they are, have always served rather to compromise him with the critics than to shield him. Far from being staunch and trusty bucklers, they have played him a trick like that played in a battle by an unusual and conspicuous uniform, which, calling attention to the soldier who wears it, attracts all the blows and is proof against none.

Considerations of an altogether different sort acted upon the author. It seemed to him that, although in fact, one seldom inspects the cellars of a building for pleasure, one is not sorry sometimes to examine its foundations. He will, therefore, give himself over once more, with a preface, to the wrath of the feuilletonists. Che sara, sara. He has never given much thought to the fortune of his works, and he is but little appalled by dread of the literary what will people say. In the discussion now raging, in which the theatre and the schools, the public and the academies, are at daggers drawn, one will hear, perhaps, not without some interest, the voice of a solitary apprentice of nature and truth, who has withdrawn betimes from the literary world, for pure love of letters, and who offers good faith in default of good taste, sincere conviction in default of talent, study in default of learning.

He will confine himself, however, to general considerations concerning the art, without the slightest attempt to smooth the path of his own work, without pretending to write an indictment or a plea, against or for any person whomsoever. An attack upon or defence of his book is of less importance to him than to anybody else. Nor is personal controversy agreeable to him. It is always a pitiful spectacle to see two hostile self-esteems crossing swords. He protests, therefore, beforehand against every interpretation of his ideas, every personal application of his words, saying with the Spanish fablist: —

Quien haga aplicaciones
Con su pan se lo coma.

In truth, several of the leading champions of “sound literary doctrines” have done him the honour to throw the gauntlet to him, even in his profound obscurity — to him, a simple, imperceptible spectator of this curious contest He will not have the presumption to pick it up. In the following pages will be found the observations with which he might oppose them — there will be found his sling and his stone; but others, if they choose, may hurl them at the head of the classical Goliaths.

This said, let us pass on.

Let us set out from a fact. The same type of civilization, or to use a more exact, although more extended expression, the same society, has not always inhabited the earth. The human race as a whole has grown, has developed, has matured, like one of ourselves. It was once a child, it was once a man; we are now looking on at its impressive old age. Before the epoch which modern society has dubbed “ancient,” there was another epoch which the ancients called “fabulous,” but which it would be more accurate to call “primitive.” Behold then three great successive orders of things in civilization, from its origin down to our days. Now, as poetry is always superposed upon society, we propose to try to demonstrate, from the form of its society, what the character of the poetry must have been in those three great ages of the world — primitive times, ancient times, modern times.

In primitive times, when man awakes in a world that is newly created, poetry awakes with him. In the face of the marvellous things that dazzle and intoxicate him, his first speech is a hymn simply. He is still so close to God that all his meditations are ecstatic, all his dreams are visions. His bosom swells, he sings as he breathes. His lyre has but three strings — God, the soul, creation; but this threefold mystery envelopes everything, this threefold idea embraces everything. The earth is still almost deserted. There are families, but no nations; patriarchs, but no kings. Each race exists at its own pleasure; no property, no laws, no contentions, no wars. Everything belongs to each and to all. Society is a community. Man is restrained in nought. He leads that nomadic pastoral life with which all civilizations begin, and which is so well adapted to solitary contemplation, to fanciful reverie. He follows every suggestion, he goes hither and thither, at random. His thought, like his life, resembles a cloud that changes its shape and its direction according to the wind that drives it. Such is the first man, such is the first poet. He is young, he is cynical. Prayer is his sole religion, the ode is his only form of poetry.

This ode, this poem of primitive times, is Genesis.

By slow degrees, however, this youth of the world passes away. All the spheres progress; the family becomes a tribe, the tribe becomes a nation. Each of these groups of men camps about a common centre, and kingdoms appear. The social instinct succeeds the nomadic instinct. The camp gives place to the city, the tent to the palace, the ark to the temple. The chiefs of these nascent states are still shepherds, it is true, but shepherds of nations; the pastoral staff has already assumed the shape of a sceptre. Everything tends to become stationary and fixed. Religion takes on a definite shape; prayer is governed by rites; dogma sets bounds to worship. Thus the priest and king share the paternity of the people; thus theocratic society succeeds the patriarchal community.

Meanwhile the nations are beginning to be packed too closely on the earth’s surface. They annoy and jostle one another; hence the clash of empires — war. They overflow upon another; hence, the migrations of nations — voyages. Poetry reflects these momentous events; from ideas it proceeds to things. It sings of ages, of nations, of empires. It becomes epic, it gives birth to Homer.

Homer, in truth, dominates the society of ancient times. In that society, all is simple, all is epic. Poetry is religion, religion is law. The virginity of the earlier age is succeeded by the chastity of the later. A sort of solemn gravity is everywhere noticeable, in private manners no less than in public. The nations have retained nothing of the wandering life of the earlier time, save respect for the stranger and the traveller. The family has a fatherland; everything is connected therewith; it has the cult of the house and the cult of the tomb.

We say again, such a civilization can find its one expression only in the epic. The epic will assume diverse forms, but will never lose its specific character. Pindar is more priestlike than patriarchal, more epic than lyrical. If the chroniclers, the necessary accompaniments of this second age of the world, set about collecting traditions and begin to reckon by centuries, they labour to no purpose — chronology cannot expel poesy; history remains an epic. Herodotus is a Homer.

But it is in the ancient tragedy, above all, that the epic breaks out at every turn. It mounts the Greek stage without losing aught, so to speak, of its immeasurable, gigantic proportions. Its characters are still heroes, demigods, gods; its themes are visions, oracles, fatality; its scenes are battles, funeral rites, catalogues. That which the rhapsodists formerly sang, the actors declaim — that is the whole difference.

There is something more. When the whole plot, the whole spectacle of the epic poem have passed to the stage, the Chorus takes all that remains. The Chorus annotates the tragedy, encourages the heroes, gives descriptions, summons and expels the daylight, rejoices, laments, sometimes furnishes the scenery, explains the moral bearing of the subject, flatters the listening assemblage. Now, what is the Chorus, this anomalous character standing between the spectacle and the spectator, if it be not the poet completing his epic?

The theatre of the ancients is, like their dramas, huge, pontifical, epic. It is capable of holding thirty thousand spectators; the plays are given in the open air, in bright sunlight; the performances last all day. The actors disguise their voices, wear masks, increase their stature; they make themselves gigantic, like their roles. The stage is immense. It may represent at the same moment both the interior and the exterior of a temple, a palace, a camp, a city. Upon it, vast spectacles are displayed. There is — we cite only from memory — Prometheus on his mountain; there is Antigone, at the top of a tower, seeking her brother Polynices in the hostile army (The Phoenicians); there is Evadne hurling herself from a cliff into the flames where the body of Capaneus is burning (The Suppliants of Euripides); there is a ship sailing into port and landing fifty princesses with their retinues (The Suppliants of Aeschylus). Architecture, poetry, everything assumes a monumental character. In all antiquity there is nothing more solemn, more majestic. Its history and its religion are mingled on its stage. Its first actors are priests; its scenic performances are religious ceremonies, national festivals.

One last observation, which completes our demonstration of the epic character of this epoch: in the subjects which it treats, no less than in the forms it adopts, tragedy simply re-echoes the epic. All the ancient tragic authors derive their plots from Homer. The same fabulous exploits, the same catastrophes, the same heroes. One and all drink from the Homeric stream. The Iliad and Odyssey are always in evidence. Like Achilles dragging Hector at his chariot-wheel, the Greek tragedy circles about Troy.

But the age of the epic draws near its end. Like the society that it represents, this form of poetry wears itself out revolving upon itself. Rome reproduces Greece, Virgil copies Homer, and, as if to make a becoming end, epic poetry expires in the last parturition.

It was time. Another era is about to begin, for the world and for poetry.

A spiritual religion, supplanting the material and external paganism, makes its way to the heart of the ancient society, kills it, and deposits, in that corpse of a decrepit civilization, the germ of modern civilization. This religion as complete, because it is true; between its dogma and its cult, it embraces a deep-rooted moral. Arid first of all, as a fundamental truth, it teaches man that he has two lives to live, one ephemeral, the other immortal; one on earth, the other in heaven. It shows him that he, like his destiny, is twofold: that there is in him an animal and an intellect, a body and a soul; in a word, that he is the point of intersection, the common link of the two chains of beings which embrace all creation — of the chain of material beings and the chain of incorporeal beings; the first starting from the rock to arrive at man, the second starting from man to end at God.

A portion of these truths had perhaps been suspected by certain wise men of ancient times, but their full, broad, luminous revelation dates from the Gospels. The pagan schools walked in darkness, feeling their way, clinging to falsehoods as well as to truths in their haphazard journeying. Some of their philosophers occasionally cast upon certain subjects feeble gleams which illuminated but one side and made the darkness of the other side more profound. Hence all the phantoms created by ancient philosophy. None but divine wisdom was capable of substituting an even and all-embracing light for all those flickering rays of human wisdom. Pythagoras, Epicurus, Socrates, Plato, are torches: Christ is the glorious light of day.

Nothing could be more material, indeed, than the ancient theogony. Far from proposing, as Christianity does, to separate the spirit from the body, it ascribes form and features to everything, even to impalpable essences, even to the intelligence. In it everything is visible, tangible, fleshly. Its gods need a cloud to conceal themselves from men’s eyes. They eat, drink, and sleep. They are wounded and their blood flows; they are maimed, and lo! they limp forever after. That religion has gods and halves of gods. Its thunderbolts are forged on an anvil, and among other things three rays of twisted rain (tres imbris torti radios) enter into their composition. Its Jupiter suspends the world by a golden chain; its sun rides in a four-horse chariot; its hell is a precipice the brink of which is marked on the globe; its heaven is a mountain.

Thus paganism, which moulded all creations from the same clay, minimizes divinity and magnifies man. Homer’s heroes are of almost the same stature as his gods. Ajax defies Jupiter, Achilles is the peer of Mars. Christianity on the contrary, as we have seen, draws a broad line of division between spirit and matter. It places an abyss between the soul and the body, an abyss between man and God.

At this point — to omit nothing from the sketch upon which we have ventured — we will call attention to the fact that, with Christianity, and by its means, there entered into the mind of the nations a new sentiment, unknown to the ancients and marvellously developed among moderns, a sentiment which is more than gravity and less than sadness — melancholy. In truth, might not the heart of man, hitherto deadened by religions purely hierarchical and sacerdotal, awake and feel springing to life within it some unexpected faculty, under the breath of a religion that is human because it is divine, a religion which makes of the poor man’s prayer, the rich man’s wealth, a religion of equality, liberty and charity? Might it not see all things in a new light, since the Gospel had shown it the soul through the senses, eternity behind life?

Moreover, at that very moment the world was undergoing so complete a revolution that it was impossible that there should not be a revolution in men's minds. Hitherto the catastrophes of empires had rarely reached the hearts of the people; it was kings who fell, majesties that vanished, nothing more. The lightning struck only in the upper regions, and, as we have already pointed out, events seemed to succeed one another with all the solemnity of the epic. In the ancient society, the individual occupied so lowly a place that, to strike him, adversity must needs descend to his family. So that he knew little of misfortune outside of domestic sorrows. It was an almost unheard of thing that the general disasters of the state should disarrange his life. But the instant that Christian society became firmly established, the ancient continent was thrown into confusion. Everything was pulled up by the roots. Events, destined to destroy ancient Europe and to construct a new Europe, trod upon one another's heels in their ceaseless rush, and drove the nations pell-mell, some into the light, others into darkness. So much uproar ensued that it was impossible that some echoes of it should not reach the hearts of the people. It was more than an echo, it was a reflex blow. Man, withdrawing within himself in presence of these imposing vicissitudes, began to take pity upon mankind, to reflect upon the bitter disillusionments of life. Of this sentiment, which to Cato the heathen was despair, Christianity fashioned melancholy.

At the same time was born the spirit of scrutiny and curiosity. These great catastrophes were also great spectacles, impressive cataclysms. It was the North hurling itself upon the South; the Roman world changing shape; the last convulsive throes of a whole universe in the death agony. As soon as that world was dead, lo! clouds of rhetoricians, grammarians, sophists, swooped down like insects on its immense body. People saw them swarming and heard them buzzing in that seat of putrefaction. They vied with one another in scrutinizing, commenting, disputing. Each limb, each muscle, each fibre of the huge prostrate body was twisted and turned in every direction. Surely it must have been a keen satisfaction to those anatomists of the mind, to be able, at their debut, to make experiments on a large scale; to have a dead society to dissect, for their first "subject."

Thus we see melancholy and meditation, the demons of analysis and controversy, appear at the same moment, and, as it were, hand-in-hand. At one extremity of this era of transition is Longinus, at the other St. Augustine. We must beware of casting a disdainful eye upon that epoch wherein all that has since borne fruit was contained in germs; upon that epoch whose least eminent writers, if we may be pardoned a vulgar but expressive phrase, made fertilizer for the harvest that was to follow. The Middle Ages were grafted on the Lower Empire.

Behold, then, a new religion, a new society; upon this twofold foundation there must inevitably spring up a new poetry. Previously — we beg pardon for setting forth a result which the reader has probably already foreseen from what has been said above — previously, following therein the course pursued by the ancient polytheism and philosophy, the purely epic muse of the ancients had studied nature in only a single aspect, casting aside without pity almost everything in art which, in the world subjected to its imitation, had not relation to a certain, type of beauty. A type which was magnificent at first, but, as always happens with everything systematic, became in later times false, trivial and conventional. Christianity leads poetry to the truth. Like it, the modern muse will see things in a higher and broader light. It will realize that everything in creation is not humanly beautiful, that the ugly exists beside the beautiful, the unshapely beside the graceful, the grotesque on the reverse of the sublime, evil with good, darkness with light. It will ask itself if the narrow and relative sense of the artist should prevail over the infinite, absolute sense of the Creator; if it is for man to correct God; if a mutilated nature will be the more beautiful for the mutilation; if art has the right to duplicate, so to speak, man, life, creation; if things will progress better when their muscles and their vigour have been taken from them; if, in short, to be incomplete is the best way to be harmonious. Then it is that, with its eyes fixed upon events that are both laughable and redoubtable, and under the influence of that spirit of Christian melancholy and philosophical criticism which we described a moment ago, poetry will take a great step, a decisive step, a step which, like the upheaval of an earthquake, will change the whole face of the intellectual world. It will set about doing as nature does, mingling in its creations — but without confounding them — darkness and light, the grotesque and the sublime; in other words, the body and the soul, the beast and the intellect; for the starting-point of religion is always the starting-point of poetry. All things are connected.

Thus, then, we see a principle unknown to the ancients, a new type, introduced in poetry; and as an additional element in anything modifies the whole of the thing, a new form of the art is developed. This type is the grotesque; its new form is comedy.

And we beg leave to dwell upon this point; for we have now indicated the significant feature, the fundamental difference which, in our opinion, separates modern from ancient art, the present form from the defunct form; or, to use less definite but more popular terms, romantic literature from classical literature.

“At last!” exclaim the people who for some time past have seen what we were coming at, “at last we have you — you are caught in the act. So then you put forward the ugly as a type for imitation, you make the grotesque an element of art. But the graces; but good taste! Don’t you know that art should correct nature? that we must ennoble art? that we must select? Did the ancients ever exhibit the ugly or the grotesque? Did they ever mingle comedy and tragedy? The example of the ancients, gentlemen! And Aristotle, too, and Boileau, and La Haipe Upon my word!”

These arguments are sound, doubtless, and, above all, of extraordinary novelty. But it is not our place to reply to them. We are constructing no system here — God protect us from systems! We are stating a fact. We are a his torian, not a critic. Whether the fact is agreeable or not matters little, it is a fact. Let us resume, therefore, and try to prove that it is of the fruitful union of the grotesque and the sublime types that modern genius is born — so complex, so diverse in its forms, so inexhaustible in its creations, and therein directly opposed to the uniform simplicity of the genius of the ancients, let us show that that is the point from which we must set out to establish the real and radical difference between the two forms of literature.

Not that it is strictly true that comedy and the grotesque were entirely unknown to the ancients. In fact, such a thing would be impossible. Nothing grows without a root, the germ of the second epoch always exists in the first. In the Iliad Thersites and Vulcan furnish comedy, one to the mortals, the other to the gods. There is too much nature and originality in the Greek tragedy for there not to be an occasional touch of comedy in it. For example, to cite only what we happen to recall, the scene between Menelaus and the portress of the palace. (Helen, Act I), and the scene of the Phrygian (Orestes, Act IV) The Tritons, the Satyrs, the Cyclops are grotesque, Polyphemus is a terrifying, Silenus a farcical grotesque.

But one feels that this part of the art is still in its infancy. The epic, which at this period imposes its form on everything, the epic weighs heavily upon it and stifles it. The ancient grotesque is timid and forever trying to keep out of sight. It is plain that it is not on familiar ground, because it is not in its natural surroundings. It conceals itself as much as it can. The Satyrs, the Tritons, and the Sirens are hardly abnormal in form. The Fates and the Harpies are hideous in their attributes rather than in feature; the Furies are beautiful, and are called Eumenides, that is to say, gentle, beneficent. There is a veil of grandeur or of divinity over other grotesques. Polyphemus is a giant, Midas a king, Silenus a god.

Thus comedy is almost imperceptible in the great epic ensemble of ancient times. What is the barrow of Thespis beside the Olympian chariots? What are Aristophanes and Plautus, beside the Homeric colossi, Aeschylus, Sophocles, Euripides? Homer bears them along with him, as Hercules bore the pygmies, hidden in his lion’s skin!

In the idea of men of modern times, however, the grotesque plays an enormous part. It is found everywhere; on the one hand it creates the abnormal and the horrible, on the other the comic and the burlesque. It fastens upon religion a thousand original superstitions, upon poetry a thousand picturesque fancies. It is the grotesque which scatters lavishly, in air, water, earth, fire, those myriads of intermediary creatures which we find all alive in the popular traditions of the Middle Ages; it is the grotesque which impels the ghastly antics of the witches’ revels, which gives Satan his horns, his cloven foot and his bat’s wings. It is the grotesque, still the grotesque, which now casts into the Christian hell the frightful faces which the severe genius of Dante and Milton will evoke, and again peoples it with those laughter-moving figures amid which Callot, the burlesque Michelangelo, will disport himself. If it passes from the world of imagination to the real world, it unfolds an inexhaustible supply of parodies of mankind. Creations of its fantasy are the Scaramouches, Crispins and Harlequins, grinning silhouettes of man, types altogether unknown to serious-minded antiquity, although they originated in classic Italy. It is the grotesque, lastly, which, colouring the same drama with the fancies of the North and of the South in turn, exhibits Sganarelle capering about Don Juan and Mephistopheles crawling about Faust.

And how free and open it is in its bearing! how boldly it brings into relief all the strange forms which the preceding age had timidly wrapped in swaddling-clothes! Ancient poetry, compelled to provide the lame Vulcan with companions, tried to disguise their deformity by distributing it, so to speak, upon gigantic proportions. Modern genius retains this myth of the supernatural smiths, but gives it an entirely different character and one which makes it even more striking; it changes the giants to dwarfs and makes gnomes of the Cyclops. With like originality, it substitutes for the somewhat commonplace Lernaean hydra all the local dragons of our national legends — the gargoyle of Rouen, the gra-ouilli of Metz, the chair sallée of Troyes, the drée of Montlhéry, the tarasque of Tarascon — monsters of forms so diverse, whose outlandish names are an additional attribute. All these creations draw from their own nature that energetic and significant expression before which antiquity seems sometimes to have recoiled. Certain it is that the Greek Eumenides are much less horrible, and consequently less true, than the witches in Macbeth. Pluto is not the devil.

In our opinion a most novel book might be written upon the employment of the grotesque in the arts. One might point out the powerful effects the moderns have obtained from that fruitful type, upon which narrow-minded criticism continues to wage war even in our own day. It may be that we shall be led by our subject to call attention in passing to some features of this vast picture. We will simply say here that, as a means of contrast with the sublime, the grotesque is, in our view, the richest source that nature can offer art. Rubens so understood it, doubtless, when it pleased him to introduce the hideous features of a court dwarf amid his exhibitions of royal magnificence, coronations and splendid ceremonial. The universal beauty which the ancients solemnly laid upon everything, is not without monotony; the same impression repeated again and again may prove fatiguing at last. Sublime upon sublime scarcely presents a contrast, and we need a little rest from everything, even the beautiful. On the other hand, the grotesque seems to be a halting-place, a mean term, a starting-point whence one rises toward the beautiful with a fresher and keener perception. The salamander gives relief to the water-sprite; the gnome heightens the charm of the sylph.

And it would be true also to say that contact with the abnormal has imparted to the modern sublime a something purer, grander, more sublime, in short, than the beautiful of the ancients; and that is as it should be. When art is consistent with itself, it guides everything more surely to its goal. If the Homeric Elysium is a long, long way from the ethereal charm, the angelic pleasureableness of Milton’s Paradise, it is because under Eden there is a hell far more terrible than the heathen Tartarus. Do you think that Francesca da Rimini and Beatrice would be so enchanting in a poet who should not confine us in the Tower of Hunger and compel us to share Ugolino’s revolting repast? Dante would have less charm, if he had less power. Have the fleshly naiads, the muscular Tritons, the wanton Zephyrs, the diaphanous transparency of our water-sprites and sylphs? Is it not because the modern imagination does not fear to picture the ghastly forms of vampires, ogres, ghouls, snake-charmers and jinns prowling about graveyards, that it can give to its fairies that incorporeal shape, that purity of essence, of which the heathen nymphs fall so far short? The antique Venus is beautiful, admirable, no doubt; but what has imparted to Jean Goujon’s faces that weird, tender, ethereal delicacy? What has given them that unfamiliar suggestion of life and grandeur, if not the proximity of the rough and powerful sculptures of the Middle Ages?

If the thread of our argument has not been broken in the reader’s mind by these necessary digressions — which in truth, might be developed much further — he has realized, doubtless, how powerfully the grotesque — that germ of comedy, fostered by the modern muse — grew in extent and importance as soon as it was transplanted to a soil more propitious than paganism and the Epic. In truth, in the new poetry, while the sublime represents the soul as it is, purified by Christian morality, the grotesque plays the part of the human beast. The former type, delivered of all impure alloy, has as its attributes all the charms, all the graces, all the beauties; it must be able some day to create Juliet, Desdemona, Ophelia. The latter assumes all the absurdities, all the infirmities, all the blemishes. In this partition of mankind and of creation, to it fall the passions, vices, crimes; it is sensuous, fawning, greedy, miserly, false, incoherent, hypocritical; it is, in turn, Iago, Tartuffe, Basile, Polonius, Harpagon, Bartholo, Falstaff, Scapin, Figaro. The beautiful has but one type, the ugly has a thousand. The fact is that the beautiful, humanly speaking, is merely form considered in its simplest aspect in its most perfect symmetry, in its most entire harmony with our make-up. Thus the ensemble that it offers us is always complete, but restricted like ourselves. What we call the ugly, on the contrary, is a detail of a great whole which eludes us, and which is in harmony, not with man but with all creation. That is why it constantly presents itself to us in new but incomplete aspects.

It is interesting to study the first appearance and the progress of the grotesque in modern times. At first, it is an invasion, an irruption, an overflow, as of a torrent that has burst its banks. It rushes through the expiring Latin literature, imparts some coloring to Persius, Petronius and Juvenal, and leaves behind it the Golden Ass of Apuleius. Thence it diffuses itself through the imaginations of the new nations that are remodelling Europe. It abounds in the work of the fabulists, the chroniclers, the romancists. We see it make its way from the South to the North. It disports itself in the dreams of the Teutonic nations, and at the same time vivifies with its breath the admirable Spanish romanceros, a veritable Iliad of the age of chivalry. For example, it is the grotesque which describes thus, in the Roman de la Rose, an august ceremonial, the election of a king: —

“A long-shanked knave they chose, I wis,
Of all their men the boniest.”

More especially it imposes its characteristic qualities upon that wonderful architecture which, in the Middle Ages, takes the place of all the arts. It affixes its mark on the façades of cathedrals, frames its hells and purgatories in the ogive arches of great doorways, portrays them in brilliant hues on window-glass, exhibits its monsters, its bull-dogs, its imps about capitals, along friezes, on the edges of roofs. It flaunts itself in numberless shapes on the wooden façades of houses, on the stone façades of châteaux, on the marble façades of palaces. From the arts it makes its way into the national manners, and while it stirs applause from the people for the graciosos of comedy, it gives to the kings court-jesters. Later, in the age of etiquette, it will show us Scarron on the very edge of Louis the Fourteenth’s bed. Meanwhile it decorates coats of-arms, and draws upon knight, shields the symbolic hieroglyphs of feudalism. From the manners, it makes its way into the laws, numberless strange customs at test its passage through the institutions of the Middle Ages. Just as it represented Thespis, smeared with wine-lees, leaping in her tomb it dances with the Basoche on the famous marble table which served at the same time as a stage for the popular farces and for the royal banquets. Finally, having made its way into the arts, the manners, and the laws, it enters even the Church. In every Catholic city we see it organizing some one of those curious ceremonies, those strange processions, wherein religion is attended by all varieties of superstition — the sublime attended by all the forms of the grotesque. To paint it in one stroke, so great is its vigour, its energy, its creative sap, at the dawn of letters, that it casts, at the outset, upon the threshold of modern poetry, three burlesque Homers: Ariosto in Italy, Cervantes in Spain, Rabelais in France.

It would be mere surplusage to dwell further upon the influence of the grotesque in the third civilization. Every thing tends to show its close creative alliance with the beautiful in the so called “romantic” period. Even among the simplest popular legends there are none which do not somewhere, with an admirable instinct, solve this mystery of modern art. Antiquity could not have produced Beauty and the Beast.

It is true that at the period at which we have arrived the predominance of the grotesque over the sublime in literature is clearly indicated. But it is a spasm of reaction, an eager thirst for novelty, which is but temporary, it is an initial wave which gradually recedes. The type of the beautiful will soon resume its rights and its role, which is not to exclude the other principle, but to prevail over it. It is time that the grotesque should be content with a corner of the picture in Murillo’s loyal frescoes, in the sacred pages of Veronese, content to be introduced in two marvellous Last Judgments, in which art will take a just pride, in the scene of fascination and horror with which Michelangelo will embellish the Vatican, in those awe-inspiring represervations of the fall of man which Rubens will throw upon the arches of the Cathedral of Antwerp. The time has come when the balance between the two principles is to be established. A man, a poet-king, poeta soverano, as Dante calls Homer, is about to adjust everything. The two rival genii combine their flames, and thence issues Shakespeare.

We have now reached the poetic culmination of modern times. Shakespeare is the drama; and the drama, which with the same breath moulds the grotesque and the sublime, the terrible and the absurd, tragedy and comedy — the drama is the distinguishing characteristic of the third epoch of poetry, of the literature of the present day.

Thus, to sum up hurriedly the facts that we have noted thus far, poetry has three periods, each of which corresponds to an epoch of civilization: the ode, the epic, and the drama. Primitive times are lyrical, ancient times epical, modern times dramatic. The ode sings of eternity, the epic imparts solemnity to history, the drama depicts life. The characteristic of the first poetry is ingenuousness, of the second, simplicity, of the third, truth. The rhapsodists mark the transition from the lyric to the epic poets, as do the romancists that from the lyric to the dramatic poets. Historians appear in the second period, chroniclers and critics in the third. The characters of the ode are colossi — Adam, Cain, Noah; those of the epic are giants — Achilles, Atreus, Orestes; those of the drama are men — Hamlet, Macbeth, Othello. The ode lives upon the ideal, the epic upon the grandiose, the drama upon the real. Lastly, this threefold poetry flows from three great sources — The Bible, Homer, Shakespeare.

Such then — and we confine ourselves herein to noting a single result — such are the diverse aspects of thought in the different epochs of mankind and of civilization. Such are its three faces, in youth, in manhood, in old age. Whether one examines one literature by itself or all literatures en masse, one will always reach the same result: the lyric poets before the epic poets, the epic poets before the dramatic poets. In France, Malherbe before Chapelain, Chapelain before Corneille; in ancient Greece, Orpheus before Homer, Homer before Aeschylus; in the first of all books, Genesis before Kings, Kings before Job; or to come back to that monumental scale of all ages of poetry, which we ran over a moment since, The Bible before the Iliad, the Iliad before Shakespeare.

In a word, civilization begins by singing of its dreams, then narrates its doings, and, lastly, sets about describing what it thinks. It is, let us say in passing, because of this last, that the drama, combining the most opposed qualities, may be at the same time full of profundity and full of relief, philosophical and picturesque.

It would be logical to add here that everything in nature and in life passes through these three phases, the lyric, the epic, and the dramatic, because everything is born, acts, and dies. If it were not absurd to confound the fantastic conceits of the imagination with the stern deductions of the reasoning faculty, a poet might say that the rising of the sun, for example, is a hymn, noon-day a brilliant epic, and sunset a gloomy drama wherein day and night, life and death, contend for mastery. But that would be poetry — folly, perhaps — and what does it prove?

Let us hold to the facts marshalled above; let us supplement them, too, by an important observation, namely that we have in no wise pretended to assign exclusive limits to the three epochs of poetry, but simply to set forth their predominant characteristics. The Bible, that divine lyric monument, contains in germ, as we suggested a moment ago, an epic and a drama — Kings and Job. In the Homeric poems one is conscious of a clinging reminiscence of lyric poetry and of a beginning of dramatic poetry. Ode and drama meet in the epic. There is a touch of all in each; but in each there exists a generative element to which all the other elements give place, and which imposes its own character upon the whole.

The drama is complete poetry. The ode and the epic contain it only in germ; it contains both of them in a state of high development, and epitomizes both. Surely, he who said: “The French have not the epic brain,” said a true and clever thing; if he had said, “The moderns,” the clever remark would have been profound. It is beyond question, however, that there is epic genius in that marvellous Athalie, so exalted and so simple in its sublimity that the royal century was unable to comprehend it. It is certain, too, that the series of Shakespeare’s chronicle dramas presents a grand epic aspect. But it is lyric poetry above all that befits the drama; it never embarrasses it, adapts itself to all its caprices, disports itself in all forms, sometimes sublime as in Ariel, sometimes grotesque as in Caliban. Our era being above all else dramatic, is for that very reason eminently lyric. There is more than one connection between the beginning and the end; the sunset has some features of the sunrise; the old man becomes a child once more. But this second childhood is not like the first; it is as melancholy as the other is joyous. It is the same with lyric poetry. Dazzling, dreamy, at the dawn of civilization it reappears, solemn and pensive, at its decline. The Bible opens joyously with Genesis and comes to a close with the threatening Apocalypse. The modern ode is still inspired, but is no longer ignorant. It meditates more than it scrutinizes; its musing is melancholy. We see, by its painful labour, that the muse has taken the drama for her mate.

To make clear by a metaphor the ideas that we have ventured to put forth, we will compare early lyric poetry to a placid lake which reflects the clouds and stars; the epic is the stream which flows from the lake, and rushes on, reflecting its banks, forests, fields and cities, until it throws itself into the ocean of the drama. Like the lake, the drama reflects the sky; like the stream, it reflects its banks; but it alone has tempests and measureless depths.

The drama, then, is the goal to which everything in modern poetry leads. Paradise Lost is a drama before it is an epic. As we know, it first presented itself to the poet’s imagination in the first of these forms, and as a drama it always remains in the reader’s memory, so prominent is the old dramatic framework still beneath Milton's epic structure! When Dante had finished his terrible Inferno, when he had closed its doors and nought remained save to give his work a name, the unerring instinct of his genius showed him that that multiform poem was an emanation of the drama, not of the epic; and on the front of that gigantic monument, he wrote with his pen of bronze: Divina Commedia.

Thus we see that the only two poets of modern times who are of Shakespeare's stature follow him in unity of design They coincide with him in imparting a dramatic tinge to all our poetry, like him, they blend the grotesque with the sublime, and, far from standing by themselves in the great literary ensemble that rests upon Shakespeare, Dante and Milton are, in some sort, the two supporting abutments of the edifice of which he is the central pillar, the buttresses of the arch of which he is the keystone.

Permit us, at this point, to recur to certain ideas already suggested, which, however, it is necessary to emphasize. We have arrived, and now we must set out again.

On the day when Christianity said to man "Thou art twofold, thou art made up of two beings, one perishable, the other immortal, one carnal, the other ethereal, one enslaved by appetites, cravings and passions, the other borne aloft on the wings of enthusiasm and reverie — in a word, the one always stooping toward the earth, its mother, the other always darting up toward heaven, its fatherland" — on that day the drama was created. Is it in truth, anything other than that contrast of every day, that struggle of every moment, between two opposing principles which are ever face to face in life, and which dispute possession of man from the cradle to the tomb?

The poetry born of Christianity, the poetry of our time, is, therefore, the drama, the real results from the wholly natural combination of two types, the sublime and the grotesque, which meet in the drama, as they meet in life and in creation. For true poetry, complete poetry, consists in the harmony of contraries. Hence, it is time to say aloud — and it is here above all that exceptions prove the rule — that everything that exists in nature exists in art.

On taking one's stand at this point of view, to pass judgment on our petty conventional rules, to disentangle all those scholastic labyrinths, to solve all those trivial problems which the critics of the last two centuries have laboriously built up about the art, one is struck by the promptitude with which the question of the modern stage is made clear and distinct. The drama has but to take a step to break all the spider's webs with which the militia of Lilliput have attempted to fetter its sleep.

And so, let addle-pated pedants (one does not exclude the other) claim that the deformed, the ugly, the grotesque should never be imitated in art; one replies that the grotesque is comedy, and that comedy apparently makes a part of art. Tartuffe is not handsome, Pourceaugnac is not noble, but Pourceaugnac and Tartuffe are admirable flashes of art.

If, driven back from this entrenchment to their second line of custom-houses, they renew their prohibition of the grotesque coupled with the sublime, of comedy melted into tragedy, we prove to them that, in the poetry of Christian nations, the first of these two types represents the human beast, the second the soul. These two stalks of art, if we prevent their branches from mingling, if we persistently separate them, will produce by way of fruit, on the one hand abstract vices and absurdities, on the other, abstract crime, heroism and virtue. The two types, thus isolated and left to themselves, will go each its own way, leaving the real between them, at the left hand of one, at the right hand of the other. Whence it follows that after all these abstractions there will remain something to represent — man; after these tragedies and comedies, something to create — the drama.

In the drama, as it may be conceived at least, if not executed, all things are connected and follow one another as in real life. The body plays its part no less than the mind; and men and events, set in motion by this twofold agent, pass across the stage, burlesque and terrible in turn, and sometimes both at once. Thus the judge will say: “Off with his head and let us go to dinner!” Thus the Roman Senate will deliberate over Domitian's turbot. Thus Socrates, drinking the hemlock and discoursing on the immortal soul and the only God, will interrupt himself to suggest that a cook be sacrificed to Aesculapius. Thus Elizabeth will swear and talk Latin. Thus Richelieu will submit to Joseph the Capuchin, and Louis XI to his barber, Maître Olivier le Diable. Thus Cromwell will say: “I have Parliament in my bag and the King in my pocket”; or, with the hand that signed the death sentence of Charles the First, smear with ink the face of a regicide who smilingly returns the compliment. Thus Caesar, in his triumphal car, will be afraid of overturning. For men of genius, however great they be, have always within them a touch of the beast which mocks at their intelligence. Therein they are akin to mankind in general, for therein they are dramatic. “It is but a step from the sublime to the ridiculous,” said Napoleon, when he was convinced that he was mere man; and that outburst of a soul on fire illumines art and history at once; that cry of anguish is the résumé of the drama and of life.

It is a striking fact that all these contrasts are met with in the poets themselves, taken as men. By dint of meditating upon existence, of laying stress upon its bitter irony, of pouring floods of sarcasm and raillery upon our infirmities, the very men who make us laugh so heartily become profoundly sad. These Democrituses are Heraclituses as well. Beaumarchais was surly, Molière gloomy, Shakespeare melancholy.

The fact is, then, that the grotesque is one of the supreme beauties of the drama. It is not simply an appropriate element of it, but is oftentimes a necessity. Sometimes it appears in homogeneous masses, in entire characters, as Daudin, Prusias, Trissotin, Brid'oison, Juliet's nurse; sometimes impregnated with terror, as Richard III, Bégears, Tartuffe, Mephistopheles; sometimes, too, with a veil of grace and refinement, as Figaro, Osric, Mercutio, Don Juan. It finds its way in everywhere; for just as the most commonplace have their occasional moments of sublimity, so the most exalted frequently pay tribute to the trivial and ridiculous. Thus, often impalpable, often imperceptible, it is always present on the stage, even when it says nothing, even when it keeps out of sight. Thanks to it, there is no thought of monotony. Sometimes it injects laughter, sometimes horror, into tragedy. It will bring Romeo face to face with the apothecary, Macbeth with the witches, Hamlet with the grave-diggers. Sometimes it may, without discord, as in the scene between King Lear and his jester, mingle its shrill voice with the most sublime, the most dismal, the dreamiest music of the soul.

That is what Shakespeare alone among all has succeeded in doing, in a fashion of his own, which it would be no less fruitless than impossible to imitate — Shakespeare, the god of the stage, in whom, as in a trinity, the three characteristic geniuses of our stage, Corneille, Molière, Beaumarchais, seem united.

We see how quickly the arbitrary distinction between the species of poetry vanishes before common sense and taste. No less easily one might demolish the alleged rule of the two unities. We say two and not three unities, because unity of plot or of ensemble, the only true and well founded one, was long ago removed from the sphere of discussion.

Distinguished contemporaries, foreigners and Frenchmen, have already attacked, both in theory and in practice that fundamental law of the pseudo-Aristotelian code. Indeed, the combat was not likely to be a long one. At the first blow it cracked, so worm eaten was that timber of the old scholastic hovel!

The strange thing is that the slaves of routine pretend to rest their rule of the two unities on probability, whereas reality is the very thing that destroys it. Indeed, what could be more improbable and absurd than this porch or peristyle or ante-chamber — vulgar places where our tragedies are obliging enough to develop themselves; whither conspirators come, no one knows whence, to declaim against the tyrant, and the tyrant to declaim against the conspirators, each in turn, as if they had said to one another in bucolic phrase —

Alternis cantemus, amant alterna Camenae.

Where did anyone ever see a porch or peristyle of that sort? What could be more opposed — we will not say to the truth, for the scholastics hold it very cheap, but to probability? The result is that everything that is too characteristic, too intimate, too local, to happen in the ante chamber or on the street-corner — that is to say, the whole drama — takes place in the wings. We see on the stage only the elbows of the plot, so to speak; its hands are somewhere else. Instead of scenes we have narrative, instead of tableaux, descriptions. Solemn-faced characters, placed, as in the old chorus, between the drama and ourselves, tell us what is going on in the temple, in the palace, on the public square, until we are tempted many a time to call out to them: “Indeed! then take us there! It must be very entertaining — a fine sight!” To which they would reply no doubt: “It is quite possible that it might entertain or interest you, but that isn’t the question; we are the guardians of the dignity of the French Melpomene.” And there you are!

“But,” someone will say, “this rule that you discard is borrowed from the Greek drama.” Wherein, pray, do the Greek stage and drama resemble our stage and drama? Moreover, we have already shown that the vast extent of the ancient stage enabled it to include a whole locality, so that the poet could, according to the exigencies of the plot, transport it at his pleasure from one part of the stage to another, which is practically equivalent to a change of stage-setting. Curious contradiction! the Greek theatre, restricted as it was to a national and religious object, was much more free than ours, whose only object is the enjoyment, and, if you please, the instruction, of the spectator. The reason is that the one obeys only the laws that are suited to it, while the other takes upon itself conditions of existence which are absolutely foreign to its essence. One is artistic, the other artificial.

People are beginning to understand in our day that exact localization is one of the first elements of reality. The speaking or acting characters are not the only ones who engrave on the minds of the spectators a faithful representation of the facts. The place where this or that catastrophe took place becomes a terrible and inseparable witness thereof; and the absence of silent characters of this sort would make the greatest scenes of history incomplete in the drama. Would the poet dare to murder Rizzio elsewhere than in Mary Stuart’s chamber? to stab Henri IV elsewhere than in Rue de la Ferronerie, all blocked with drays and carriages? to burn Jeanne d’Arc elsewhere than in the Vieux-Marché? to despatch the Duc de Guise elsewhere than in that chateau of Blois where his ambition roused a popular assemblage to frenzy? to behead Charles I and Louis XVI elsewhere than in those ill-omened localities whence Whitehall or the Tuileries may be seen, as if their scaffolds were appurtenances of their palaces?

Unity of time rests on no firmer foundation than unity of place. A plot forcibly confined within twenty-four hours is as absurd as one confined within a peristyle. Every plot has its proper duration as well as its appropriate place. Think of administering the same dose of time to all events! of applying the same measure to everything! You would laugh at a cobbler who should attempt to put the same shoe on every foot. To cross unity of time and unity of place like the bars of a cage, and pedantically to introduce therein, in the name of Aristotle, all the deeds, all the nations, all the figures which Providence sets before us in such vast numbers in real life, — to proceed thus is to mutilate men and things, to cause history to make wry faces. Let us say, rather, that everything will die in the operation, and so the dogmatic mutilators reach their ordinary result: what was alive in the chronicles is dead in tragedy. That is why the cage of the unities often contains only a skeleton.

And then, if twenty-four hours can be comprised in two, it is a logical consequence that four hours may contain forty-eight. Thus Shakespeare’s unity must be different from Corneille’s. ’Tis pity!

But these are the wretched quibbles with which mediocrity, envy and routine has pestered genius for two centuries past! By such means the flight of our greatest poets has been cut short. Their wings have been clipped with the scissors of the unities. And what has been given us in exchange for the eagle feathers stolen from Corneille and Racine? Campistron.

We imagine that someone may say: “There is something in too frequent changes of scene which confuses and fatigues the spectator, and which produces a bewildering effect on his attention; it may be, too, that manifold transitions from place to place, from one time to another time, demand explanations which repel the attention; one should also avoid leaving, in the midst of a plot, gaps which prevent the different parts of the drama from adhering closely to one another, and which, moreover, puzzle the spectator because he does not know what there may be in those gaps.” But these are precisely the difficulties which art has to meet. These are some of the obstacles peculiar to one subject or another, as to which it would be impossible to pass judgment once for all. It is for genius to overcome, not for treatises or poetry to evade them.

A final argument, taken from the very bowels of the art, would of itself suffice to show the absurdity of the rule of the two unities. It is the existence of the third unity, unity of plot — the only one that is universally admitted, because it results from a fact: neither the human eye nor the human mind can grasp more than one ensemble at one time. This one is as essential as the other two are useless. It is the one which fixes the view-point of the drama; now, by that very fact, it excludes the other two. There can no more be three unities in the drama than three horizons in a picture. But let us be careful not to confound unity with simplicity of plot. The former does not in any way exclude the secondary plots on which the principal plot may depend. It is necessary only that these parts, being skilfully subordinated to the general plan, shall tend constantly toward the central plot and group themselves about it at the various stages, or rather on the various levels of the drama. Unity of plot is the stage law of perspective.

“But,” the customs-officers of thought will cry, “great geniuses have submitted to these rules which you spurn!” Unfortunately, yes. But what would those admirable men have done if they had been left to themselves? At all events they did not accept your chains without a struggle. You should have seen how Pierre Corneille, worried and harassed at his first step in the art on account of his marvellous work, Le Cid, struggled under Mairet, Claveret, d’Aubignac and Scudéri! How he denounced to posterity the violent attacks of those men, who, he says, made themselves “all white with Aristotle!” You should read how they said to him — and we quote from books of the time: “Young man, you must learn before you teach; and unless one is a Scaliger or a Heinsius that is intolerable!” Thereupon Corneille rebels and asks if their purpose is to force him “much below Claveret.” Here Scudéri waxes indignant at such a display of pride, and reminds the “thrice great author of Le Cid of the modest words in which Tasso, the greatest man of his age, began his apology for the finest of his works against the bitterest and most unjust censure perhaps that will ever be pronounced. M. Corneille,” he adds, “shows in his replies that he is as far removed from that author’s moderation as from his merit.” The young man so justly and gently reproved dares to protest; thereupon Scudéri returns to the charge; he calls to his assistance the Eminent Academy; “Pronounce, O my Judges, a decree worthy of your eminence, which will give all Europe to know that Le Cid is not the chef-d’oeuvre of the greatest man in France, but the least judicious performance of M. Corneille himself. You are bound to do it, both for your own private renown; and for that of our people in general, who are concerned in this matter; inasmuch as foreigners who may see this precious masterpiece — they who have possessed a Tasso or a Guarini — might think that our greatest masters were no more than apprentices.”

These few instructive lines contain the everlasting tactics of envious routine against growing talent — tactics which are still followed in our own day, and which, for example, added such a curious page to the youthful essays of Lord Byron. Scudéri gives us its quintessence. In like manner the earlier works of a man of genius are always preferred to the newer ones, in order to prove that he is going down instead of up — Melite and La Galerie du Palais placed above Le Cid. And the names of the dead are always thrown at the heads of the living — Corneille stoned with Tasso and Guarini (Guarini!), as, later, Racine will be stoned with Corneille, Voltaire with Racine, and as to-day, everyone who shows signs of rising is stoned with Corneille, Racine and Voltaire. These tactics, as will be seen, are well-worn; but they must be effective as they are still in use. However, the poor devil of a great man still breathed. Here we cannot help but admire the way in which Scudéri, the bully of this tragic-comedy, forced to the wall, blackguards and maltreats him, how pitilessly he unmasks his classical artillery, how he shows the author of Le Cid “what the episodes should be, according to Aristotle, who tells us in the tenth and sixteenth chapters of his Poetics"; how he crushes Corneille, in the name of the same Aristotle "in the eleventh chapter of his Art of Poetry, wherein we find the condemnation of Le Cid"; in the name of Plato, "in the tenth book of his Republic"; in the name of Marcellinus, "as may be seen in the twenty-seventh book"; in the name of "the tragedies of Niobe and Jephthah"; in the name of the "Ajax of Sophocles"; in the name of "the example of Euripides"; in the name of "Heinsius, chapter six of the Constitution of Tragedy; and the younger Scaliger in his poems"; and finally, in the name of the Canonists and Jurisconsults, under the title "Nuptials." The first arguments were addressed to the Academy, the last one was aimed at the Cardinal. After the pin-pricks the blow with a club. A judge was needed to decide the question. Chapelain gave judgment. Corneille saw that he was doomed; the lion was muzzled, or, as was said at the time, the crow (Corneille) was plucked. Now comes the painful side of this grotesque performance: after he had been thus quenched at his first flash, this genius, thoroughly modern, fed upon the Middle Ages and Spain, being compelled to lie to himself and to hark back to ancient times, drew for us that Castilian Rome, which is sublime beyond question, but in which, except perhaps in Nicomede, which was so ridiculed by the eighteenth century for its dignified and simple colouring, we find neither the real Rome nor the true Corneille.

Racine was treated to the same persecution, but did not make the same resistance. Neither in his genius nor in his character was there any of Corneille's lofty asperity. He submitted in silence and sacrificed to the scorn of his time his enchanting elegy of Esther, his magnificent epic, Athalie. So that we can but believe that, if he had not been paralyzed as he was by the prejudices of his epoch, if he had come in contact less frequently with the classic cramp-fish, he would not have failed to introduce Locuste in his drama between Narcisse and Neron, and above all things would not have relegated to the wings the admirable scene of the banquet at which Seneca's pupil poisons Britannicus in the cup of reconciliation. But can we demand of the bird that he fly under the receiver of an air-pump? What a multitude of beautiful scenes the people of taste have cost us, from Scudéri to La Harpe! A noble work might be composed of all that their scorching breath has withered in its germ. However, our great poets have found a way none the less to cause their genius to blaze forth through all these obstacles. Often the attempt to confine them behind walls of dogmas and rules is vain.

Like the Hebrew giant they carry their prison doors with them to the mountains.

But still the same refrain is repeated, and will be, no doubt, for a long while to come: “Follow the rules! Copy the models! It was the rules that shaped the models.” One moment! In that case there are two sorts of models, those which are made according to the rules, and, prior to them, those according to which the rules were made. Now, in which of these two categories should genius seek a place for itself? Although it is always disagreeable to come in contact with pedants, is it not a thousand times better to give them lessons than to receive lessons from them? And then — copy! Is the reflection equal to the light? Is the satellite which travels unceasingly in the same circle equal to the central creative planet? With all his poetry Virgil is no more than the moon of Homer.

And whom are we to copy, I pray to know? The ancients? We have just shown that their stage has nothing in common with ours. Moreover, Voltaire, who will have none of Shakespeare, will have none of the Greeks, either. Let him tell us why: “The Greeks ventured to produce scenes no less revolting to us. Hippolyte, crushed by his fall, counts his wounds and utters doleful cries. Philoctetes falls in his paroxysms of pain; black blood flows from his wound. Oedipus, covered with the blood that still drops from the sockets of the eyes he has torn out, complains bitterly of gods and men. We hear the shrieks of Clytemnestra, murdered by her own son, and Electra, on the stage, cries: ‘Strike! spare her not! she did not spare our father,’ Prometheus is fastened to a rock by nails driven through his stomach and his arms. The Furies reply to Clytemnestra’s bleeding shade with inarticulate roars. Art was in its infancy in the time of Aeschylus as it was in London in Shakespeare’s time.”

Whom shall we copy, then? The moderns? What! Copy copies! God forbid!

“But,” someone else will object, “according to your conception of the art, you seem to look for none but great poets, to count always upon genius.” Art certainly does not count upon mediocrity. It prescribes no rules for it, it knows nothing of it; in fact, mediocrity has no existence so far as art is concerned; art supplies wings, not crutches. Alas! D’Aubignac followed rules, Campistron copied models. What does it matter to art? It does not build its palaces for ants. It lets them make their ant-hill, without taking the trouble to find out whether they have built their burlesque imitation of its palace upon its foundation.

The critics of the scholastic school place their poets in a strange position. On the one hand they cry incessantly: “Copy the models!” On the other hand they have a habit of declaring that “the models are inimitable”! Now, if their craftsman, by dint of hard work, succeeds in forcing through this dangerous defile some colourless tracing of the masters, these ungrateful wretches, after examining the new refaccimiento, exclaim sometimes: “This doesn’t resemble anything!” and sometimes: “This resembles everything!” And by virtue of a logic made for the occasion each of these formulae is a criticism.

Let us then speak boldly. The time for it has come, and it would be strange if, in this age, liberty, like the light, should penetrate everywhere except to the one place where freedom is most natural — the domain of thought. Let us take the hammer to theories and poetic systems. Let us throw down the old plastering that conceals the facade of art. There are neither rules nor models; or, rather, there are no other rules than the general laws of nature, which soar above the whole field of art, and the special rules which result from the conditions appropriate to the subject of each composition. The former are of the essence, eternal, and do not change; the latter are variable, external, and are used but once. The former are the framework that supports the house; the latter the scaffolding which is used in building it, and which is made anew for each building. In a word, the former are the flesh and bones, the latter the clothing, of the drama. But these rules are not written in the treatises on poetry. Richelet has no idea of their existence. Genius, which divines rather than learns, devises for each work the general rules from the general plan of things, the special rules from the separate ensemble of the subject treated; not after the manner of the chemist, who lights the fire under his furnace, heats his crucible, analyzes and destroys; but after the manner of the bee, which flies on its golden wings, lights on each flower and extracts its honey, leaving it as brilliant and fragrant as before.

The poet — let us insist on this point — should take counsel therefore only of nature, truth, and inspiration which is itself both truth and nature. “Quando he,” says Lope de Vega,

“Quando he de escrivir una comedia,
Encierro los preceptos con seis llaves.”

To secure these precepts “six keys” are none too many, in very truth. Let the poet beware especially of copying anything whatsoever — Shakespeare no more than Molière, Schiller no more than Corneille. If genuine talent could abdicate its own nature in this matter, and thus lay aside its original personality, to transform itself into another, it would lose everything by playing this role of its own double. It is as if a god should turn valet. We must draw our inspiration from the original sources. It is the same sap, distributed through the soil, that produces all the trees of the forest, so different in bearing power, in fruit, in foliage. It is the same nature that fertilizes and nourishes the most diverse geniuses. The poet is a tree that may be blown about by all winds and watered by every fall of dew; and bears his works as his fruit, as the fablier of old bore his fables. Why attach one’s self to a master, or graft one’s self upon a model? It were better to be a bramble or a thistle, fed by the same earth as the cedar and the palm, than the fungus or the lichen of those noble trees. The bramble lives, the fungus vegetates. Moreover, however great the cedar and the palm may be, it is not with the sap one sucks from them that one can become great one’s self. A giant’s parasite will be at best a dwarf. The oak, colossus that it is, can produce and sustain nothing more than the mistletoe.

Let there be no misunderstanding: if some of our poets have succeeded in being great, even when copying, it is because, while forming themselves on the antique model, they have often listened to the voice of nature and to their own genius — it is because they have been themselves in some one respect. Their branches became entangled in those of the near-by tree, but their roots were buried deep in the soil of art. They were the ivy, not the mistletoe. Then came imitators of the second rank, who, having neither roots in the earth, nor genius in their souls, had to confine themselves to imitation. As Charles Nodier says: “After the school of Athens, the school of Alexandria.” Then there was a deluge of mediocrity; then there came a swarm of those treatises on poetry, so annoying to true talent, so convenient for mediocrity. We were told that everything was done, and God was forbidden to create more Molières or Corneilles. Memory was put in place of imagination. Imagination itself was subjected to hard-and-fast rules, and aphorisms were made about it: “To imagine,” says La Harpe, with his naive assurance, “is in substance to remember, that is all.”

But nature! Nature and truth! — And here, in order to prove that, far from demolishing art, the new ideas aim only to reconstruct it more firmly and on a better foundation, let us try to point out the impassable limit which in our opinion, separates reality according to art from reality according to nature. It is careless to confuse them as some ill-informed partisans of romanticism do. Truth in art cannot possibly be, as several writers have claimed, absolute reality. Art cannot produce the thing itself. Let us imagine, for example, one of those unreflecting promoters of absolute nature, of nature viewed apart from art, at the performance of a romantic play, say Le Cid. "What's that?" he will ask at the first word. "The Cid speaks in verse? It isn't natural to speak in verse."— "How would you have him speak, pray?"— "In prose." Very good. A moment later, "How's this!" he will continue, if he is consistent; "the Cid is speaking French!"— "Well?"— "Nature demands that he speak his own language; he can't speak anything but Spanish."

We shall fail entirely to understand, but again — very good. You imagine that this is all? By no means: before the tenth sentence in Castilian, he is certain to rise and ask if the Cid who is speaking is the real Cid, in flesh and blood. By what right does the actor, whose name is Pierre or Jacques, take the name of the Cid? That is false. There is no reason why he should not go on to demand that the sun should be substituted for the footlights, real trees and real houses for those deceitful wings. For, once started on that road, logic has you by the collar, and you cannot stop.

We must admit, therefore, or confess ourselves ridiculous, that the domains of art and of nature are entirely distinct. Nature and art are two things — were it not so, one or the other would not exist. Art, in addition to its idealistic side, has a terrestrial, material side. Let it do what it will, it is shut in between grammar and prosody, between Vaugelas and Richelet. For its most capricious creations, it has formulas, methods of execution, a complete apparatus to set in motion. For genius there are delicate instruments, for mediocrity, tools.

It seems to us that someone has already said that the drama is a mirror wherein nature is reflected. But if it be an ordinary mirror, a smooth and polished surface, it will give only a dull image of objects, with no relief-faithful, but colourless; everyone knows that colour and light are lost in a simple reflection. The drama, therefore, must be a concentrating mirror, which, instead of weakening, concentrates and condenses the coloured rays, which makes of a mere gleam a light, and of a light a flame. Then only is the drama acknowledged by art.

The stage is an optical point. Everything that exists in the world — in history, in life, in man — should be and can be reflected therein, but under the magic wand of art. Art turns the leaves of the ages, of nature, studies chronicles, strives to reproduce actual facts (especially in respect to manners and peculiarities, which are much less exposed to doubt and contradiction than are concrete facts), restores what the chroniclers have lopped off, harmonises what they have collected, divines and supplies their omissions, fills their gaps with imaginary scenes which have the colour of the time, groups what they have left scattered about, sets in motion anew the threads of Providence which work the human marionettes, clothes the whole with a form at once poetical and natural, and imparts to it that vitality of truth and brilliancy which gives birth to illusion, that prestige of reality which arouses the enthusiasm of the spectator, and of the poet first of all, for the poet is sincere. Thus the aim of art is almost divine: to bring to life again if it is writing history, to create if it is writing poetry.

It is a grand and beautiful sight to see this broad development of a drama wherein art powerfully seconds nature; of a drama wherein the plot moves on to the conclusion with a firm and unembarrassed step, without diffuseness and without undue compression; of a drama, in short, wherein the poet abundantly fulfills the multifold object of art, which is to open to the spectator a double prospect, to illuminate at the same time the interior and the exterior of mankind: the exterior by their speech and their acts, the interior, by asides and monologues; to bring together, in a word, in the same picture, the drama of life and the drama of conscience.

It will readily be imagined that, for a work of this kind, if the poet must choose (and he must), he should choose, not the beautiful, but the characteristic. Not that it is advisable to “make local colour,” as they say to-day; that is, to add as an afterthought a few discordant touches here and there to a work that is at best utterly conventional and false. The local colour should not be on the surface of the drama, but in its substance, in the very heart of the work, whence it spreads of itself, naturally, evenly, and, so to speak, into every corner of the drama, as the sap ascends from the root to the tree’s topmost leaf. The drama should be thoroughly impregnated with this colour of the time, which should be, in some sort, in the air, so that one detects it only on entering the theatre, and that on going forth one finds one’s self in a different period and atmosphere. It requires some study, some labour, to attain this end; so much the better. It is well that the avenues of art should be obstructed by those brambles from which everybody recoils except those of powerful will. Besides, it is this very study, fostered by an ardent inspiration, which will ensure the drama against a vice that kills it — the commonplace. To be commonplace is the failing of short-sighted, short-breathed poets. In this tableau of the stage, each figure must be held down to its most prominent, most individual, most precisely defined characteristic. Even the vulgar and the trivial should have an accent of their own. Like God, the true poet is present in every part of his work at once. Genius resembles the die which stamps the king's effigy on copper and golden coins alike.

We do not hesitate — and this will demonstrate once more to honest men how far we are from seeking to discredit the art — we do not hesitate to consider verse as one of the means best adapted to protect the drama from the scourge we have just mentioned, as one of the most powerful dams against the irruption of the commonplace, which, like democracy, is always flowing between full banks in men's minds. And at this point we beg the younger literary generation, already so rich in men and in works, to allow us to point out an error into which it seems to have fallen — an error too fully justified, indeed, by the extraordinary aberrations of the old school. The new century is at that growing age at which one can readily set one's self right.

There has appeared of late, like a penultimate branching-out of the old classical trunk, or, better still, like one of those excrescences, those polypi, which decrepitude develops, and which are a sign of decomposition much more than a proof of life — there has appeared a strange school of dramatic poetry. This school seems to us to have had for its master and its fountain-head the poet who marks the transition from the eighteenth to the nineteenth century, the man of wearisome description and periphrases — that Delille who, they say, toward the close of his life, boasted, after the fashion of the Homeric catalogues, of having made twelve camels, four dogs, three horses, including Job's, six tigers, two cats, a chess-board, a backgammon-board, a checker-board, a billiard-table, several winters, many summers, a multitude of springs, fifty sunsets, and so many daybreaks that he had lost count of them.

Now, Delille went into tragedy. He is the father (he, and not Racine, God save the mark!) of an alleged school of refinement and taste which flourished until recently. Tragedy is not to this school what it was to Will Shakespeare, say, a source of emotions of every sort, but a convenient frame for the solution of a multitude of petty descriptive problems which it propounds as it goes along. This muse, far from spurning, as the true French classic school does, the trivial and degrading things of life, eagerly seeks them out and brings them together. The grotesque, shunned as undesirable company by the tragedy of Louis the Fourteenth's day, cannot pass unnoticed before her. It must be described, that is to say, ennobled. A scene in the guard-house, a popular uprising, the fish-market, the galleys, the wine-shop, the poule au pot of Henri Quatre, are treasure-trove in her eyes. She seizes upon this canaille, washes it clean, and sews her tinsel and spangles over its villainies; purpureus assuitur pannus. Her object seems to be to deliver patents of nobility to all these roturiers of the drama; and each of these patents under the great seal is a speech.

This muse, as may be imagined, is of a rare prudery. Wonted as she is to the caresses of periphrasis, plain-speaking, if she should occasionally be exposed to it, would horrify her. It does not accord with her dignity to speak naturally. She underlines old Corneille for his blunt way of speaking, as in, —

"A heap of men ruined by debt and crimes."

"Chimène, who'd have thought it? Rodrigue, who'd have said it?"

"When their Flaminius haggled with Hannibal."

"Oh! do not embroil me with the Republic."

She still has her "Tout beau, monsieur!" on her heart. And it needed many "seigneurs" and "madames" to procure forgiveness for our admirable Racine for his monosyllabic "dogs!" and for so brutally bestowing Claudius in Agrippina's bed.

This Melpomene, as she is called, would shudder at the thought of touching a chronicle. She leaves to the costumer the duty of learning the period of the dramas she writes. In her eyes history is bad form and bad taste. How, for example, can one tolerate kings and queens who swear? They must be elevated from mere regal dignity to tragic dignity. It was in a promotion of this sort that she exalted Henri IV. It was thus that the people's king, purified by M. Legouvé, found his "ventre-saint-gris" ignominiously banished from his mouth by two sentences, and that he was reduced, like the girl in the old fabliau, to the necessity of letting fall from those royal lips only pearls and sapphires and rubies: the apotheosis of falsity, in very truth.

The fact is that nothing is so commonplace as this conventional refinement and nobility. Nothing original, no imagination, no invention in this style; simply what one has seen everywhere — rhetoric, bombast, commonplaces, flowers of college eloquence, poetry after the style of Latin verses. The poets of this school are eloquent after the manner of stage princes and princesses, always sure of finding in the costumer's labelled cases, cloaks and pinchbeck crowns, which have no other disadvantage than that of having been used by everybody. If these poets never turn the leaves of the Bible, it is not because they have not a bulky book of their own, the Dictionnaire de rimes. That is the source of their poetry — fontes aquarum.

It will be seen that, in all this, nature and truth get along as best they can. It would be great good luck if any remnants of either should survive in this cataclysm of false art, false style, false poetry. This is what has caused the errors of several of our distinguished reformers. Disgusted by the stiffness, the ostentation, the pomposo, of this alleged dramatic poetry, they have concluded that the elements of our poetic language were incompatible with the natural and the true. The Alexandrine had wearied them so often, that they condemned it without giving it a hearing, so to speak, and decided, a little hastily, perhaps, that the drama should be written in prose.

They were mistaken. If in fact the false is predominant in the style as well as in the action of certain French tragedies, it is not the verses that should be held responsible therefore, but the versifiers. It was needful to condemn, not the form employed, but those who employed it: the workmen, not the tool.

To convince one's self how few obstacles the nature of our poetry places in the way of the free expression of all that is true, we should study our verse, not in Racine, perhaps, but often in Corneille and always in Molière. Racine, a divine poet, is elegiac, lyric, epic; Molière is dramatic. It is time to deal sternly with the criticisms heaped upon that admirable style by the wretched taste of the last century, and to proclaim aloud that Molière occupies the topmost pinnacle of our drama, not only as a poet, but also as a writer. Palmas vere habet iste duas.

In his work the verse surrounds the idea, becomes of its very essence, compresses and develops it at once, imparts to it a more slender, more definite, more complete form, and gives us, in some sort, an extract thereof. Verse is the optical form of thought. That is why it is especially adapted to the perspective of the stage. Constructed in a certain way, it communicates its relief to things which, but for it, would be considered insignificant and trivial. It makes the tissue of style finer and firmer. It is the knot which stays the thread. It is the girdle which holds up the garment and gives it all its folds. What could nature and the true lose, then, by entering into verse? We ask the question of our prose-writers themselves — what do they lose in Molière’s poetry? Does wine — we beg pardon for another trivial illustration — does wine cease to be wine when it is bottled?

If we were entitled to say what, in our opinion, the style of dramatic poetry should be, we would declare for a free, outspoken, sincere verse, which dares say everything without prudery, express its meaning without seeking for words; which passes naturally from comedy to tragedy, from the sublime to the grotesque; by turns practical and poetical, both artistic and inspired, profound and impulsive, of wide range and true; verse which is apt opportunely to displace the caesura, in order to disguise the monotony of Alexandrines; more inclined to the enjambement that lengthens the line, than to the inversion of phrases that confuses the sense; faithful to rhyme, that enslaved queen, that supreme charm of our poetry, that creator of our metre; verse that is inexhaustible in the verity of its turns of thought, unfathomable in its secrets of composition and of grace; assuming, like Proteus, a thousand forms without changing its type and character; avoiding long speeches; taking delight in dialogue; always hiding behind the characters of the drama; intent, before everything, on being in its place, and when it falls to its lot to be beautiful, being so only by chance, as it were, in spite of itself and unconsciously; lyric, epic, dramatic, at need; capable of running through the whole gamut of poetry, of skipping from high notes to low, from the most exalted to the most trivial ideas, from the most extravagant to the most solemn, from the most superficial to the most abstract, without ever passing beyond the limits of a spoken scene; in a word, such verse as a man would write whom a fairy had endowed with Corneille’s mind and Molière’s brain. It seems to us that such verse would be as fine as prose.

There would be nothing in common between poetry of this sort and that of which we made a post mortem examination just now. The distinction will be easy to point out if a certain man of talent, to whom the author of this book is under personal obligation, will allow us to borrow his clever phrase: the other poetry was descriptive, this would be picturesque.

Let us repeat, verse on the stage should lay aside all self-love, all exigence, all coquetry. It is simply a form, and a form which should admit everything, which has no laws to impose on the drama, but on the contrary should receive everything from it, to be transmitted to the spectator — French, Latin, texts of laws, royal oaths, popular phrases, comedy, tragedy, laughter, tears, prose and poetry. Woe to the poet whose verse does not speak out! But this form is a form of bronze which encases the thought in its metre beneath which the drama is indestructible, which engraves it more deeply on the actor's mind, warns him of what he omits and of what he adds, prevents him from changing his role, from substituting himself for the author, makes each word sacred, and causes what the poet has said to remain vivid a long while in the hearer's memory. The idea, when steeped in verse, suddenly assumes a more incisive, more brilliant quality.

One feels that prose, which is necessarily more timid, obliged to wean the drama from anything like epic or lyric poetry, reduced to dialogue and to matter-of-fact, is a long way from possessing these resources. It has much narrower wings. And then, too, it is much more easy of access; mediocrity is at its ease in prose; and for the sake of a few works of distinction such as have appeared of late, the art would very soon be overloaded with abortions and embryos. Another faction of the reformers incline to drama written in both prose and verse, as Shakespeare composed it. This method has its advantages. There might, however, be some incongruity in the transitions from one form to the other; and when a tissue is homogeneous it is much stouter. However, whether the drama should be written in prose is only a secondary question. The rank of a work is certain to be fixed, not according to its form, but according to its intrinsic value. In questions of this sort, there is only one solution. There is but one weight that can turn the scale in the balance of art — that is genius.

Meanwhile, the first, the indispensable merit of a dramatic writer, whether he write in prose or verse, is correctness. Not a mere superficial correctness, the merit or defect of the descriptive school, which makes Lhomond and Restaut the two wings of its Pegasus; but that intimate, deep-rooted, deliberate correctness, which is permeated with the genius of a language, which has sounded its roots and searched its etymology; always unfettered, because it is sure of its footing, and always more in harmony with the logic of the language. Our Lady Grammar leads the one in leading-strings; the other holds grammar in leash. It can venture anything, can create or invent its style; it has a right to do so. For, whatever certain men may have said who did not think what they were saying, and among whom we must place, notably, him who writes these lines, the French tongue is not fixed and never will be. A language does not become fixed. The human intellect is always on the march, or, if you prefer, in movement, and languages with it. Things are made so. When the body changes, how could the coat not change? The French of the nineteenth century can no more be the French of the eighteenth, than that is the French of the seventeenth, or than the French of the seventeenth is that of the sixteenth. Montaigne's language is not Rabelais's, Pascal's is not Montaigne's, Montesquieu's is not Pascal's. Each of the four languages, taken by itself, is admirable because it is original. Every age has its own ideas; it must have also words adapted to those ideas. Languages are like the sea, they move to and fro incessantly. At certain times they leave one shore of the world of thought and overflow another. All that their waves thus abandon dries up and vanishes. It is in this wise that ideas vanish, that words disappear. It is the same with human tongues as with everything. Each age adds and takes away something. What can be done? It is the decree of fate. In vain, therefore, should we seek to petrify the mobile physiognomy of our idiom in a fixed form. In vain do our literary Joshuas cry out to the language to stand still; languages and the sun do not stand still. The day when they become fixed, they are dead. — That is why the French of a certain contemporary school is a dead language.

Such are, substantially, but without the more elaborate development which would make the evidence in their favour more complete, the present ideas of the author of this book concerning the drama. He is far, however, from presuming to put forth his first dramatic essay as an emanation of these ideas, which, on the contrary, are themselves, it may be, simply results of its execution. It would be very convenient for him, no doubt, and very clever, to rest his book on his preface, and to defend each by the other. He prefers less cleverness and more frankness. He proposes, therefore, to be the first to point out the extreme tenuity of the thread connecting this preface with his drama His first plan, dictated by his laziness, was to give the work to the public entirely unattended el demonio sin las cuernas, as Yriarte said It was only after he had duly brought it to a close, that at the solicitations of a few friends, blinded by their friendship, no doubt, he determined to reckon with himself in a preface — to draw, so to speak, a map of the poetic voyage he had made, to take account of the acquisitions, good or bad, that he had brought home, and of the new aspects in which the domain of art had presented itself to his mind Someone will take advantage of this admission, doubtless to repeat the reproach already uttered by a critic in Germany, that he has written “a treatise in defence of his poetry.” What does it matter? In the first place he was much more inclined to demolish treatises on poetry than to write them. And then, would it not he better always to write treatises based on a poem, than to write poems based on a treatise? But no, we repeat that he has neither the talent to create nor the presumption to put forth systems “Systems,” cleverly said Voltaire, “are like rats which pass through twenty holes, only to find at last two or three which will not let them through.” It would have been, therefore, to undertake a useless task and one much beyond his strength What he has pleaded, on the contrary, is the freedom of art against the despotism of systems, codes and rules It is his habit to follow at all risks whatever he takes for his inspiration, and to change moulds as often as he changes metals. Dogmatism in the arts is what he shuns before everything God forbid that he should aspire to be numbered among those men, be they romanticists or classicists, who compose works according to their own systems, who condemn themselves to have but one form in their minds, to be forever proving something, to follow other laws than those of their temperaments and then natures. The artificial work of these men, however talented they may be, has no existence so far as art is concerned. It is a theory, not poetry.

Having attempted, in all that has gone before, to point out what, in our opinion, was the origin of the drama, what its character is, and what its style should he, the time has come to descend from these exalted general considerations upon the art to the particular case which has led us to put them forth. It remains for us to discourse to the reader of our work, of this Cromwell; and as it is not a subject in which we take pleasure, we will say very little about it in very few words.

Oliver Cromwell is one of those historical characters who are at once very famous and very little known. Most of his biographers — and among them there are some who are themselves historical — have left that colossal figure incomplete. It would seem that they dared not assemble all the characteristic features of that strange and gigantic prototype of the religious reformation, of the political revolution of England. Almost all of them have confined themselves to reproducing on a larger scale the simple and ominous profile drawn by Bossuet from his Catholic and monarchical standpoint, from his episcopal pulpit supported by the throne of Louis XIV.

Like everybody else, the author of this book went no further than that. The name of Oliver Cromwell suggested to him simply the bare conception of a fanatical regicide and a great captain. Only on prowling among the chronicles of the times, which he did with delight, and on looking through the English memoirs of the seventeenth century, was he surprised to find that a wholly new Cromwell was gradually exposed to his gaze. It was no longer simply Bossuet's Cromwell the soldier, Cromwell the politician; it was a complex, heterogenous, multiple being, made up of all sorts of contraries — a mixture of much that was evil and much that was good, of genius and pettiness; a sort of Tiberius-Dandin, the tyrant of Europe and the plaything of his family; an old regicide, who delighted to humiliate the ambassadors of all the kings of Europe, and was tormented by his young royalist daughter; austere and gloomy in his manners, yet keeping four court jesters about him; given to the composition of wretched verses; sober, simple, frugal, yet a stickler for etiquette; a rough soldier and a crafty politician; skilled in theological disputation and very fond of it; a dull, diffuse, obscure orator, but clever in speaking the language of anybody whom he wished to influence; a hypocrite and a fanatic; a visionary swayed by phantoms of his childhood, believing in astrologers and banishing them; suspicious to excess, always threatening, rarely sanguinary; a strict observer of Puritan rules, and solemnly wasting several hours a day in buffoonery; abrupt and contemptuous with his intimates, caressing with the secretaries whom he feared, holding his remorse at bay with sophistry, paltering with his conscience, inexhaustible in adroitness, in tricks, in resources; mastering his imagination by his intelligence; grotesque and sublime; in a word, one of those men who are “square at the base,” as they were described by Napoleon, himself their chief, in his mathematically exact and poetically figurative language.

He who writes these lines, in presence of this rare and impressive ensemble, felt that Bossuet's impassioned sketch was no longer sufficient for him. He began to walk about that lofty figure, and he was seized by a powerful temptation to depict the giant in all his aspects. It was a rich soil. Beside the man of war and the statesman, it remained to draw the theologian, the pedant, the wretched poet, the seer of visions, the buffoon, the father, the husband, the human Proteus — in a word, the twofold Cromwell, homo et vir.

There is one period of his life, especially, in which this strange personality exhibits itself in all its forms. It is not as one might think at first blush, the period of the trial of Charles I, instinct as that is with depressing and terrible interest; but it is the moment when the ambitious mortal boldly attempted to pluck the fruit of that monarch's death; it is the moment when Cromwell, having attained what would have been to any other man the zenith of fortune — master of England, whose innumerable factions knelt silently at his feet; master of Scotland, of which he had made a satrapy, and of Ireland, which he had turned into a prison; master of Europe through his diplomacy and his fleets — seeks to fulfil the dream of his earliest childhood, the last ambition of his life; to make himself king. History never had a more impressive lesson in a more impressive drama. First of all, the Protector arranges to be urged to assume the crown: the august farce begins by addresses from municipalities, from counties; then there comes an act of Parliament. Cromwell, the anonymous author of the play, pretends to be displeased; we see him put out a hand toward the sceptre, then draw it back; by a devious path he draws near the throne from which he has swept the legitimate dynasty. At last he makes up his mind, suddenly; by his command Westminster is decked with flags, the dais is built, the crown is ordered from the jewelers, the day is appointed for the ceremony. — Strange dénouement! On that very day, in presence of the populace, the troops, the House of Commons, in the great hall of Westminster, on that dais from which he expected to descend as king, suddenly, as if aroused by a shock, he seems to awaken at the sight of the crown, asks if he is dreaming, and what the meaning is of all this regal pomp, and in a speech that lasts three hours declines the kingly title.

Was it because his spies had warned him of two conspiracies formed by Cavaliers and Puritans in concert, which were intended, taking advantage of this misstep, to break out on the same day? Was it an inward revolution caused by the silence or the murmurs of the populace, discomposed to see their regicide ascend the throne? Or was it simply the sagacity of genius, the instinct of a far-seeing, albeit unbridled ambition, which realizes how one step forward changes a man's position and attitude, and which dares not expose its plebeian structure to the wind of unpopularity? Was it all these at once? This is a question which no contemporaneous document answers satisfactorily. So much the better: the poet's liberty is the more complete, and the drama is the gainer by the latitude which history affords it. It will be seen that here the latitude is ample and unique; this is, in truth, the decisive hour, the turning-point in Cromwell's life. It is the moment when his chimera escapes from him, when the present kills the future, when, to use an expressive colloquialism, his destiny misses fire. All of Cromwell is at stake in the comedy being played between England and himself.

Such then is the man and such the period of which we have tried to give an idea in this book.

The author has allowed himself to be seduced by the childlike diversion of touching the keys of that great harpsichord. Unquestionably, more skillful hands might have evoked a thrilling and profound melody — not of those which simply caress the ear — but of those intimate harmonies which stir the whole man to the depths of his being, as if each key of the key-board were connected with a fibre of the heart. He has surrendered to the desire to depict all those fanaticisms, all those superstitions — maladies to which religion is subject at certain epochs; to the longing to "make playthings of all these men," as Hamlet says. To set in array about and below Cromwell, himself the centre and pivot of that court, of that people, of that little world, which attracts all to his cause and inspires all with his vigour, that twofold conspiracy devised by two factions which detest each other, but join hands to overthrow the man who blocks their path, but which unite simply without blending; and that Puritan faction, of divers minds, fanatical, gloomy, unselfish, choosing for leader the most insignificant of men for such a great part, the egotistical and cowardly Lambert; and the faction of the Cavaliers, featherheaded, merry, unscrupulous, reckless, devoted, led by the man who, aside from his devotion to the cause, was least fitted to represent it, the stern and upright Ormond; and those ambassadors, so humble and fawning before the soldier of fortune; and the court itself, an extraordinary mixture of upstarts and great nobles vying with one another in baseness; and the four jesters whom the contemptuous neglect of history permitted me to invent; and Cromwell's family, each member of which is as a thorn in his flesh; and Thurloe, the Protector's Achates; and the Jewish rabbi, Israel Ben-Manasseh, spy, usurer, and astrologer, vile on two sides, sublime on the third; and Rochester, the unique Rochester, absurd and clever, refined and crapulous, always cursing, always in love, and always tipsy, as he himself boasted to Bishop Burnet — wretched poet and gallant gentleman, vicious and ingenuous, staking his head and indifferent whether he wins the game provided it amuses him — in a word, capable of everything, of ruse and recklessness, calculation and folly, villainy and generosity; and the morose Carr, of whom history describes but one trait, albeit a most characteristic and suggestive one; and those other fanatics, of all ranks and varieties: Harrison, the thieving fanatic; Barebones the shopkeeping fanatic; Syndercomb, the bravo; Garland the tearful and pious assassin; gallant Colonel Overton, intelligent but a little declamatory; the austere and unbending Ludlow, who left his ashes and his epitaph at Lausanne; and lastly, "Milton and a few other men of mind," as we read in a pamphlet of 1675 (Cromwell the Politician), which reminds one of "a certain Dante" of the Italian chronicle.

We omit many less important characters, of each of whom, however, the actual life is known, and each of whom has his marked individuality, and all of whom contributed to the fascination which this vast historical scene exerted upon the author's imagination. From that scene he constructed this drama. He moulded it in verse, because he preferred to do so. One will discover on reading it how little thought he gave to his work while writing this preface — with what disinterestedness, for instance, he contended against the dogma of the unities. His drama does not leave London; it begins on June 25, 1657, at three in the morning, and ends on the 26th at noon. Observe that he has almost followed the classic formula, as the professors of poetry lay it down to-day. They need not, however, thank him for it. With the permission of history, not of Aristotle, the author constructed his drama thus; and because, when the interest is the same, he prefers a compact subject to a widely diffused one.

It is evident that, in its present proportions, this drama could not be given at one of our theatrical performances. It is too long. The reader will perhaps comprehend, none the less, that every part of it was written for the stage. It was on approaching his subject to study it that the author recognized, or thought that he recognized, the impossibility of procuring the performance of a faithful reproduction of it on our stage, in the exceptional position it now occupies, between the academic Charybdis and the administrative Scylla, between the literary juries and the political censorship. He was required to choose: either the wheedling, tricky, false tragedy, which may be acted, or the audaciously true drama, which is prohibited. The first was not worth the trouble of writing, so he preferred to attempt the second. That is why, hopeless of ever being put on the stage, he abandoned himself, freely and submissively, to the whims of composition, to the pleasure of painting with a freer hand, to the developments which his subject demanded, and which, even if they keep his drama off the stage, have at all events the advantage of making it almost complete from the historical standpoint. However, the reading committees are an obstacle of the second class only. If it should happen that the dramatic censorship, realizing how far this harmless, conscientious and accurate picture of Cromwell and his time is removed from our own age, should sanction its production on the stage, in that case, but only in that case, the author might perhaps extract from this drama a play which would venture to show itself on the boards, and would be hissed.

Until then he will continue to hold aloof from the theatre. And even then he will leave his cherished and tranquil retirement soon enough, for the agitation and excitement of this new world. God grant that he may never repent of having exposed the unspotted obscurity of his name and his person to the shoals, the squalls and tempests of the pit, and above all (for what does a mere failure matter?) to the wretched bickerings of the wings; of having entered that shifting, foggy, stormy atmosphere, where ignorance dogmatises, where envy hisses, where cabals cringe and crawl, where the probity of talent has so often been misrepresented, where the noble innocence of genius is sometimes so out of place, where mediocrity triumphs in lowering to its level the superiority which obscures it, where one finds so many small men for a single great one, so many nobodies for one Talma, so many myrmidons for one Achilles! This sketch will seem ill-tempered perhaps, and far from flattering; but does it not fully mark out the distance that separates our stage, the abode of intrigues and uproar, from the solemn serenity of the ancient stage?

Whatever may happen, he feels bound to warn in advance that small number of persons whom such a production might attract, that a play made up of excerpts from Cromwell would occupy no less time then is ordinarily occupied by a theatrical performance. It is difficult for a romantic theatre to maintain itself otherwise. Surely, if people desire something different from the tragedies in which one or two characters, abstract types of a purely metaphysical idea, stalk solemnly about on a narrow stage occupied only by a few confidents, colourless reflections of the heroes, employed to fill the gaps in a simple, unified, single-stringed plot; if that sort of thing has grown tiresome, a whole evening is not too much time to devote to delineating with some fullness a man among men, a whole critical period: the one, with his peculiar temperament, his genius which adapts itself thereto, his beliefs which dominate them both, his passions which throw out of gear his temperament, his genius and his beliefs, his tastes which give colour to his passions, his habits which regulate his tastes and muzzle his passions, and with the innumerable procession of men of every sort whom these various elements keep in constant commotion about him; the other, with its manners, its laws, its fashions, its wit, its attainments, its superstitions, its events, and its people, whom all these first causes in turn mould like soft wax. It is needless to say that such a picture will be of huge proportions. Instead of one personality, like that with which the abstract drama of the old school is content, there will be twenty, forty, fifty, — who knows how many? — of every size and of every degree of importance. There will be a crowd of characters in the drama. Would it not be niggardly to assign it two hours only, and give up the rest of the performance to opera-comique or farce? to cut Shakespeare for Bobèche? — And do not imagine that, if the plot is well adjusted, the multitude of characters set in motion will cause fatigue to the spectator or confusion in the drama. Shakespeare, abounding in petty details, is at the same time, and for that very reason, imposing by the grandeur of the ensemble. It is the oak which casts a most extensive shadow with its myriads of slender leaves.

Let us hope that people in France will ere long become accustomed to devote a whole evening to a single play. In England and Germany there are plays that last six hours. The Greeks, about whom we hear so much, the Greeks — and after the fashion of Scudéri we will cite at this point the classicist Dacier, in the seventh chapter of his Poetics — the Greeks sometimes went so far as to have twelve or sixteen plays acted in a single day. Among a people who are fond of spectacles the attention is more lively than is commonly believed The Mariage de Figaro, the connecting link of Beaumarchais’s great trilogy, occupies the whole evening, and who was ever bored or fatigued by it Beaumarchais was worthy to venture on the first step toward that goal of modern art at which it will be impossible to arrive in two hours, that profound, insatiable interest which results from a vast, lifelike and multiform plot. “But,” someone will say, “this performance, consisting of a single play, would be monotonous, would seem terribly long” — Not so. On the contrary it would lose its present monotony and tediousness. For what is done now? The spectator's entertainment is divided into two or three sharply defined parts. At first he is given two hours of serious enjoyment, then one hour of hilarious enjoyment, these, with the hour of entr' actes, which we do not include in the enjoyment make four hours What would the romantic drama do? It would mingle and blend artistically these two kinds of enjoyment. It would lead the audience constantly from sobriety to laughter, from mirthful excitement to heart breaking emotion, "from grave to gay, from pleasant to severe." For, as we have already proved, the drama is the grotesque in conjunction with the sublime, the soul within the body, it is tragedy beneath comedy. Do you not see that, by affording you repose from one impression by means of another, by sharpening the tragic upon the comic, the merry upon the terrible, and at need calling in the charms of the opera, these performances, while presenting but one play, would be worth a multitude of others? The romantic stage would make a piquant, savoury, diversified dish of that which, on the classic stage, is a drug divided into two pills.

The author has soon come to the end of what he had to say to the reader. He has no idea how the critics will greet this drama and these thoughts, summarily set forth, stripped of their corollaries and ramifications, put together currente calamo, and in haste to have done with them. Doubtless they will appear to "the disciples of La Harpe" most impudent and strange. But if perchance, naked and undeveloped as they are, they should have the power to start upon the road of truth this public whose education is so far advanced, and whose minds so many notable writings, of criticism or of original thought, books or newspapers, have already matured for art, let the public follow that impulsion, caring naught whether it comes from a man unknown, from a voice with no authority, from a work of little merit. It is a copper bell which summons the people to the true temple and the true God.

There is to-day the old literary régime as well as the old political régime. The last century still weighs upon the present one at almost every point. It is notably oppressive in the matter of criticism. For instance, you find living men who repeat to you this definition of taste let fall by Voltaire: "Taste in poetry is no different from what it is in women's clothes." Taste, then, is coquetry. Remarkable words, which depict marvellously the painted, moucheté, powdered poetry of the eighteenth century — that literature in paniers, pompons and falbalas. They give an admirable résumé of an age with which the loftiest geniuses could not come in contact without becoming petty, in one respect or another; of an age when Montesquieu was able and apt to produce Le Temple de Gnide, Voltaire Le Temple du Goût, Jean-Jacques Le Devin du Village.

Taste is the common sense of genius. This is what will soon be demonstrated by another school of criticism, powerful, outspoken, well-informed, — a school of the century which is beginning to put forth vigorous shoots under the dead and withered branches of the old school. This youthful criticism, as serious as the other is frivolous, as learned as the other is ignorant, has already established organs that are listened to, and one is sometimes surprised to find, even in the least important sheets, excellent articles emanating from it. Joining hands with all that is fearless and superior in letters, it will deliver us from two scourges: tottering classicism, and false romanticism, which has the presumption to show itself at the feet of the true. For modern genius already has its shadow, its copy, its parasite, its classic, which forms itself upon it, smears itself with its colours, assumes its livery, picks up its crumbs, and, like the sorcerer's pupil, puts in play, with words retained by the memory, elements of theatrical action of which it has not the secret. Thus it does idiotic things which its master many a time has much difficulty in making good. But the thing that must be destroyed first of all is the old false taste. Present-day literature must be cleansed of its rust. In vain does the rust eat into it and tarnish it. It is addressing a young, stern, vigorous generation, which does not understand it. The train of the eighteenth century is still dragging in the nineteenth; but we, we young men who have seen Bonaparte, are not the ones who will carry it.

We are approaching, then, the moment when we shall see the new criticism prevail, firmly established upon a broad and deep foundation. People generally will soon understand that writers should be judged, not according to rules and species, which are contrary to nature and art, but according to the immutable principles of the art of composition, and the special laws of their individual temperaments. The sound judgment of all men will be ashamed of the criticism which broke Pierre Corneille on the wheel, gagged Jean Racine, and which ridiculously rehabilitated John Milton only by virtue of the epic code of Père le Bossu. People will consent to place themselves at the author's standpoint, to view the subject with his eyes, in order to judge a work intelligently. They will lay aside — and it is M. de Chateaubriand who speaks— "the paltry criticism of defects for the noble and fruitful criticism of beauties.” It is time that all acute minds should grasp the thread that frequently connects what we, following our special whim, call “defects” with what we call “beauty.” Defects — at all events those which we call by that name — are often the inborn, necessary, inevitable conditions of good qualities.

Scit genius, natale comes qul temperat astrum.

Who ever saw a medal without its reverse? a talent that had not some shadow with its brilliancy, some smoke with its flame? Such a blemish can be only the inseparable consequence of such beauty. This rough stroke of the brush, which offends my eye at close range, completes the effect and gives relief to the whole picture. Efface one and you efface the other. Originality is made up of such things. Genius is necessarily uneven. There are no high mountains without deep ravines. Fill up the valley with the mountain and you will have nothing but a steppe, a plateau, the plain of Les Sablons instead of the Alps, swallows and not eagles.

We must also take into account the weather, the climate, the local influences. The Bible, Homer, hurt us sometimes by their very sublimities. Who would want to part with a word of either of them? Our infirmity often takes fright at the inspired bold flights of genius, for lack of power to swoop down upon objects with such vast intelligence. And then, once again, there are defects which take root only in masterpieces; it is given only to certain geniuses to have certain defects. Shakespeare is blamed for his abuse of metaphysics, of wit, of redundant scenes, of obscenities, for his employment of the mythological nonsense in vogue in his time, for exaggeration, obscurity, bad taste, bombast, asperities of style. The oak, that giant tree which we were comparing to Shakespeare just now, and which has more than one point of resemblance to him, the oak has an unusual shape, gnarled branches, dark leaves, and hard, rough bark; but it is the oak.

And it is because of these qualities that it is the oak. If you would have a smooth trunk, straight branches, satiny leaves, apply to the pale birch, the hollow elder, the weeping willow; but leave the mighty oak in peace. Do not stone that which gives you shade.

The author of this book knows as well as any one the numerous and gross faults of his works. If it happens too seldom that he corrects them, it is because it is repugnant to him to return to a work that has grown cold. Moreover, what has he ever done that is worth that trouble? The labor that he would throw away in correcting the imperfections of his books, he prefers to use in purging his intellect of its defects. It is his method to correct one work only in another work.

However, no matter what treatment may be accorded his book, he binds himself not to defend it, in whole or in part. If his drama is worthless, what is the use of upholding it? If it is good, why defend it? Time will do the book justice or will wreak justice upon it. Its success for the moment is the affair of the publisher alone. If then the wrath of the critics is aroused by the publication of this essay, he will let them do their worst. What reply should he make to them? He is not one of those who speak, as the Castilian poet says, "through the mouths of their wounds."

Por la boca de su herida.

One last word. It may have been noticed that in this somewhat long journey through so many different subjects, the author has generally refrained from resting his personal views upon texts or citations of authorities. It is not, however, because he did not have them at his hand.

"If the poet establishes things that are impossible according to the rules of his art, he makes a mistake unquestionably; but it ceases to be a mistake when by this means he has reached the end that he aimed at; for he has found what he sought,"— "They take for nonsense whatever the weakness of their intellects does not allow them to understand. They are especially prone to call absurd those wonderful passages in which the poet, in order the better to enforce his argument, departs, if we may so express it, from his argument. In fact, the precept which makes it a rule sometimes to disregard rules, is a mystery of the art which it is not easy to make men understand who are absolutely without taste and whom a sort of abnormality of mind renders insensible to those things which ordinarily impress men."

Who said the first? Aristotle. Who said the last? Boileau. By these two specimens you will see that the author of this drama might, as well as another, have shielded himself with proper names and taken refuge behind others' reputations. But he preferred to leave that style of argument to those who deem it unanswerable, universal and all-powerful. As for himself, he prefers reasons to authorities; he has always cared more for arms than for coats-of-arms.

October, 1827.

DRAMATIS PERSONS

THE LORD MAYOR.
THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT.
THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT.
A Town Bailiff.
THE HIGH SHERIFF.
THE CHAMPION OF ENGLAND and his Suite.
DOCTOR LOCKYER.
Town Crier, Servants of the Town, Lords and Noblemen, Workmen, Bodyguards of the Protector, Archers, Halberdiers, Partisans, Pages, Sergeants-at-Arms, Citizens, the Parliament, the crowd.

LONDON, 1657.

CROMWELL.

ACT I.

THE CONSPIRATORS.

SCENE. — Inn of the Three Cranes. Tables, chairs of rough wood. In the background a door leading out into a square. Interior of an old house of the Middle Ages.

SCENE I.

LORD ORMOND, disguised as a Roundhead, hair cut very close, tall hat with large brim, black coat, breeches of black serge, high boots; he is seated at a table in a dark corner of the room. LORD BROGHILL, elegant morning costume of a Cavalier, hat with feathers, breeches and doublet of satin, slashed; small boots.

LORD BROGHILL (enters by the door in the back, which remains half open, disclosing the Square and the old houses lighted up by the dawn. He holds an open letter in his hand and reads it attentively). " To-morrow, on the twenty-fifth of June, Year sixteen hundred fifty-seven, one Whom Lord Broghill once cherished tenderly Will be at the Three Cranes at early morn And wait for him near the wine market, at The corner of the streets."
[He looks around.] This is the tavern, — The same place that Charles, whom God forsook At Worcester, in great stress to save his head, Chose, here in London, to escape Cromwell.
[He turns to the letter again. Whence comes this letter I received last night? The writing —

LORD ORMOND (rising). May God keep Lord Broghill!

LORD BROGHILL (examining him from head to foot with a contemptuous air).
What!
‘T is you, my friend, who cause me to leave home For this smoke-smothered hole? What is your name? Whence come you? Why? From whom? What do you want? I’ve seen that fellow somewhere!

LORD ORMOND.
Lord Broghill!

LORD BROGHILL. Well, answer, can’t you? Knaves like you were made To ply your tricks for servants at our door. That’s all the honour, sirrah, to pay you well, Which your degree in life can claim from ours. I find you bold!

LORD ORMOND. Without displeasing you, Do words like these become a mighty lord, The friend of Cromwell?

LORD BROGHILL.
The old Puritan, Should you rouse him by chance at such an hour, Would let you hang some twenty cubits high Till you had changed the colour of your thoughts.

LORD ORMOND (aside).
I hope to make him sleep, not waken him!

LORD BROGHILL. When Cromwell’s firmly seated on the throne, He will know how to punish insolence.

LORD ORMOND. His throne’s a scaffold, and his robes are blood. False servant of the Stuarts, you forget —

LORD BROGHILL. That look, that tone — Who are you?

LORD ORMOND.
Broghill asks!

Have you forgot the Irish wars, my lord? Together, in those days, we served the King.

LORD BROGHILL. Lord Ormond, my old friend— ‘t is you!
[Taking his hand affectionately.
In London, And you come here the evening of that day When Cromwell’s to be crowned. A price is on Your head. Ah, if this visit should be known — What brings you here, unhappy man?

LORD ORMOND.
My duty!

LORD BROGHILL. How is it possible I knew you not? That gloomy look, that ministerial dress, The years — You are so changed!

LORD ORMOND.
Less changed than you! You’ve bent the knee to Cromwell, Lord Broghill! You bow low down before this regicide. I’ve changed my clothes; you’ve changed your heart and soul. Can it be you, our mighty warrior! You soared so high only to fall so low!

LORD BROGHILL. Proscribed, I honour you; vanquished, I pity. But such words —

LORD ORMOND.
They are less severe than just. However, you can make amends for all: Serve me —

LORD BROGHILL With Cromwell! Willingly. I fly! Your life I can save, for it is proscribed.

LORD ORMOND. Hold, friend ‘ Ask me to save your head instead. Your insolent support, protector, king, Your Cromwell is more near his fall than I.

LORD BROGHILL.
What do I hear?

LORD ORMOND.
This truth: consumed by sadness, Weary of petty titles, such as highness Or lord protector, Cromwell wants to be Hailed on a royal throne as Majesty. Among the spoils, of which each claims his share, He asks the bloody heritage of Charles. He shall receive it all, — his throne; his shroud.
The kingly regicide in that proud hour Shall learn that crowns are heavy and although They may be seized by treachery, their weight Oft bends the head which wears them to the earth.

LORD BROGHILL.
What's this?

LORD ORMOND. To-morrow just as Westminster Shall open to this king, by hell's will crowned, Upon that throne which his mad pride usurps He'll fall a bloody corpse beneath our swords.

LORD BROGHILL. Rash man ' The army's with him. He ne'er moves Without this living wall of iron for Defence. Know you the number of his guards? Break through three rows of halberds, if you can; Through heavy foot-guards, heralds, esquire beadles, Through his red cuirassiers, black musketeers!

LORD ORMOND.
They 're ours!

LORD BROGHILL. With what vain hope you drug yourself, To see Roundheads unite with Cavaliers!

LORD ORMOND. Here, in an instant, will come Royalists To mix with men of Parliament. It is Fanaticism which rules Puritans. They want no more of Oliver than Charles. If Cromwell makes himself a king, he dies. Lambert, his rival and their chief, is ours. He dares to think he can take Cromwell's place. That will be settled later. Spanish gold And Flemish gold have made us many friends Within these walls. In short, the time is ripe, The chances good, and we throw down the dice.

LORD BROGHILL. Cromwell is skilful; you will risk your head.

LORD ORMOND. God knows to whom to-morrow will bring joy. Our plot, Broghill, is certain of success. This morning Rochester will bring Sedley, Lord Clifford, Jenkins, Davenant the poet, Which last is charged with secret message from The King. To the same meeting will come Carr, Sir Richard Willis, Harrison.

LORD BROGHILL.
But they Are all in prison; they ‘re his enemies, Whom Cromwell has imprisoned in the Tower.

LORD ORMOND. One word will answer that. Among our friends, All urged by different motives, but all bent On crushing Cromwell, we have gained Barkstead, The Regicide, the keeper of the Tower, Whom hope of pardon brings upon our side. See, with what art the plot has been matured. Within a giant net-work Cromwell’s caught. He’ll not escape; all parties have conspired To dig this precipice beneath his throne. ‘T is this which brings me from the Continent. I want to save you. In the name of Charles, My master, do you choose to die a traitor Or live a faithful subject?

LORD BROGHILL.
What say you?

LORD ORMOND. Return beneath the royal standard!

LORD BROGHILL.
Ah, I was a loyal subject once, my friend.
In civil wars I’ve captured many castles;
I have defended cities for our king.
Hard fate has changed the soldier of the Stuarts To Cromwell’s courtier. Well, let it be so.
Leave a deserter to his gloomy fate.
But you, in your turn, listen; be my judge.
It was during the war with Parliament.
I had come here to arm a regicide,
And like yourself, a price was on my head.
I had a visit from an unknown man.

‘T was Cromwell; and my life was in his hand.
He saved me. I forgot all things for him.
He took possession of me. I became Rebellious, sacreligious like himself.
I gave my arm to his republicans;
And brought up for my king, I fought against him.
Cromwell, in turn, made me one of his peers,
Lieutenant-general of artillery, Lord of his high court and his private council.
Lifted by his protection to such power,
If he should fall, I must go down with him.
And since against my king legitimate I have rebelled, however great the love I bear unto his house, I can’t return Into its service without treachery.

LORD ORMOND. Sad consequence of private griefs. Alas! On what foundation public virtues rest! How many owe mistakes to cruel fate! How many are accounted noble who Are only fortunate! Broghill, throw off This yoke which crushes us! Prove your repentance

LORD BROGHILL.
By added crimes? Oh, no! To you, Ormond, Though not accomplice, I can be a friend, A confident, and, neutral in this fight, Endure your triumph or soften your fall. Whoever be the victor, true to all, — With Cromwell die, or pardon win for you!

LORD ORMOND. Keep silence, and not act? Ah, you will be Untrue to Cromwell without helping us. Be faithful friend or faithful enemy; Do not be satisfied to stand half-way. Denounce me, rather!

LORD BROGHILL (proudly).
Were you not proscribed, I would have satisfaction for that speech.

LORD ORMOND (extending his hand to him). Your pardon! An old soldier, dear Broghill. For twenty years I’ve served my king. My battles and my services are written Upon my body in enduring scars. More than one expert chief instructed me, Montrose among the number, and Prince Rupert

I have commanded without pride, obeyed Without reluctance. I’ve grown grey beneath My helmet and grown old within my armour.
I have seen Strafford die and Derby too.
Seen Dunbar, Tredagh, Worcester, and Naseby, —
Those giant arms which of themselves could shake The throne of England or could hold it up;
I saw it fall at last, crushed by the camps.
I’ve fought with ranters, preachers, saints; my hand In ceaseless slaughter exercised, well knows How many cuts it takes to blunt a sword.
Well, I have reached the end of my hard fight.
Cromwell is doomed! Our turn has come at last.
But ‘midst our joy must poison steal its way?
Must our success cost a dear friend his life?
Remember, comrade, we have bathed our swords In the same blood and sinelled the fire of the Same battles. For the second time, — the last, In name of our dear master, I ask you Will you live faithful, or disloyal die?
Reflect! Ormond gives you one hour to choose!
[He writes some words on a paper and gives it to BROGHILL.
My name assumed and my secret address.

LORD BROGHILL (rejecting the paper). Don’t give it me! I know too much already. The same tent hath protected both of us For years, my friend; I know it well. But now I must fulfil my destiny. Farewell! Informer or accomplice I’ll not be. I will forget, at once, what I have heard. But are you certain, friend, of your success? Nothing escapes this Cromwell. His bold glance Is over Europe: he sees everything. He holds all destinies within his hand. E’en when your arm seeks where to strike him best Perhaps he holds the string which moves the arm! Beware, my friend.

LORD ORMOND (offended).
Leave me, I beg of you! I kiss your lordship’s hands.
[LORD BROGHILL exits through the door at the back, which closes after him.

SCENE II.

LORD ORMOND (alone).
I’ll think no more About it.
[.He sits and seems to reflect profoundly; while he is dreaming, a voice is heard, drawing nearer by degrees, which sings the following verses to a gay air: —

THE VOICE.
A surly soldier in a rage One night arrests a pretty page, — A page with roguish eye.
O — page, O page, my beauty, Why rush so quickly by!
To sleep is the world’s duty And you in satin. Fie!
Good soldier, since you curious are, I — I — bear a sword and a guitar Concealed beneath my gown.
I ‘m going to a love-tryst, sir, And dread the husband’s frown, The sword for him, the song for her, When sweet my dame looks down.
[The singing stops. Some one knocks at the door in the back, then the voice resumes its song: —
But the black sentinel on high Rolling his eye-balls furiously Cries from the dizzy tower, “ We don’t believe you, pretty page;
Love wakes not at this hour.
It looks more like a tryst of war
Than hying to love’s bower.”
[.Louder knocking.

LORD ORMOND (rising to open the door). Who is singing thus? Some fool, Or else it’s Rochester!
[He opens door and looks out into the street. ‘T is he; scribbling Upon his knee!
[LORD ROCHESTER enters gaily, a pencil and paper in his hand.

SCENE III.

LORD ORMOND; LORD ROCHESTER, very elegant costume of Cavalier, covered with jewels and ribbons, over which he wears a Puritan cloak of heavy grey cloth, large Roundhead hat. His black skull-cap hardly conceals his blond curls, which creep out under his ears, according to the fashion adopted by the young Cavaliers of the day.

LORD ROCHESTER (with a slight salutation).
Forgive me, my lord count.
I ‘m writing my new song. I must tell you —
[Begins to write upon his knee.
God save your Grace! Faith, I can hardly see.
You ‘re waiting for our men? How is this air? [Singing.
A surly soldier in a rage One night arrests a pretty page —
Exile can teach us many things. I learned That old French air in Paris.

LORD ORMOND (shaking his head).
I ‘m afraid The soldier will arrest the pretty page, In truth.

LORD ROCHESTER (looking at his song). The rest is at the bottom of The sheet. — [Giving his hand to LORD ORMOND.
You ‘re first, as always, at the post. Where are our friends? My lord, should you have liked If I had written thus, —
A soldier with a surly lace Stops, as he hurries past the place, A page with roguish eye.
Instead of this:
A surly soldier in a rage, Arrests one night a pretty page, — A page — et cetera?
The repetition of “ a page “ has charm, It seems to me. The French —

LORD ORMOND.
Pray pardon me! My mind’s not formed to judge this sort of talent.

LORD ROCHESTER. Indeed, my lord, your judgment’s excellent. To prove it to you, I will read you here A quatrain which is new.
[.Draping his cloak around him and reciting with animation.
“Egeria!—”
[Interrupting himself. Imagine, please, to whom this is addressed.

LORD ORMOND. It seems to me the hour for jests is passed. [Aside.] Charles is more mad than he to send him here.

LORD ROCHESTER. But this is serious; perhaps it is The best of all my quatrains. And besides, The object is so charming, — Frances Cromwell!

LORD ORMOND.
Frances Cromwell?

LORD ROCHESTER (assenting with his head). I'm in love with her!

LORD ORMOND. With Cromwell's youngest daughter?

LORD ROCHESTER.
She's divine!
Oh, God! she is an angel.

LORD ORMOND.
In Heaven's name Lord Rochester in love with —

LORD ROCHESTER.
Frances Cromwell. Does it surprise you? 'T is because you have Not seen her radiant beauty. Seventeen, Black hair, proud air, white skin, hands exquisite. A sylph, a nymph, a fairy, royal queen. I saw her yesterday; her hair ill-dressed, — What matter? Everything becomes that face. They say, she has been here only a month; That, far from Cromwell, brought up by her aunt, At heart she cherishes the royal cause And dearly loves the King.

LORD ORMOND.
Nonsense, my friend! Where saw you this fair one?

LORD ROCHESTER.
At Westminster. They gave a royal banquet to old Cromwell Yesterday. May God confound him! I Was curious to see the great Protector; But when I reached his high platform And saw this Frances, modest as a flower, Absorbed and motionless I saw no more. In vain the crowd pushed me on every side, My eyes turned not an instant from her face. When I had left the feast, I did not know If Cromwell lifts his head or holds it down, If his forehead is high or nose too long, If he is sad or gay, or blond or black, Ugly or handsome. I saw nothing there But this sweet woman, and, upon my soul! I'm mad about her.

LORD ORMOND. I believe you, sir!

LORD ROCHESTER. This is the madrigal, in latest form —

LORD ORMOND. 'T is all the same to me.

LORD ROCHESTER.
You don't mean that! Shakspeare is a barbarian, — that, of course, You know, — and Yithers is a genius. Can You find a single love-song in Macbeth? The English taste yields to the French; the charm —

LORD ORMOND (aside). The devil take your English or French taste! Your quatrain too. This folly will be fatal! [Aloud.] Pray pardon me, my lord. To be quite frank, 'T would be more to the purpose at this hour To give me information where we stand, How many nobles are to meet us here, If Lambert can be truly counted on, Than to sing quatrains to fair enemies.

LORD ROCHESTER. My lord is hasty. 'T is no treachery To fall in love.

LORD ORMOND. In love with father too?

LORD ROCHESTER. You are incensed! Wherefore, I do not see. The story, I am sure, would please the King. My love for daughter makes new war upon The sire. Besides, I do not mind him much.
We never met, I think; but we shared once A charming mistress, Lady Dysert, who Reforms at present and weds Lauerdale.

LORD ORMOND. I never thought to hear him slandered thus. Cromwell is chaste; wherefore deny the fact? He is austere, as true reformers are.

LORD ROCHESTER (laughing). He? This austerity hides mysteries. By more than one act this old hypocrite Proves Puritans lack not humanity. But come back to our quatrain, if you please!

LORD ORMOND (aside). St. George! he stuffs his quatrain down my throat. [Aloud and solemnly.] Lord Wilmot, Earl of Rochester, hear me.
You ‘re young, while I am almost an old man. I know the legends of true chivalry, And that is why I dare to tell you now These quatrains, madrigals and foolish songs Which fill the Paris idlers with delight, By truly noble minds are much despised And counted fit for only common men; Small lawyers make them, but your equals, Lord, Would blush to write down madrigals. Your family is noble, of great date. Upon your shield, if I remember well, You bear the crown of earl and cloak of peer; Above, this legend: “Aut nunquan aut semper.” Latin is not my strong point, I admit, But in plain English this is what it means: “ Support your king, defend your feudal rights, But don’t compose rondeaus and verses; that Belongs to common people.” Peer of England, Have more respect for your high rank; refrain From what the smallest baronet, the most Ignoble country squire would scorn to do. Make no more verses.

LORD ROCHESTER.
Hear my lord’s decree. I will admit my fault is great; but then Among these rhymesters of base, common stock I have Armand du Plessis Richelieu, The cardinal-poet, for a colleague. Why Not speak the truth? If on my crest there stood The royal lion and the unicorn, I still would write my verses and my songs. [.Aside.] The old man has the temper of a bear.
[.Looking out of the door he exclaims Ah, come and change our conversation, please! Hail, Davenant’
[DAVENANT enters: simple black costume, long coat, and large hat.

SCENE IV

LORD ORMOND, LORD ROCHESTER, DAVENANT.

LORD ROCHESTER (rushing to D.YVENANT). Dear poet, we await Your presence to recite a quatrain.

DAVENANT (saluting the two lords).
Nay, Another matter brings me here. May God Be with you both!

LORD ORMOND. From Germany you bring Us orders?

DAVENANT. From Cologne. I’ve just arrived.

LORD ORMOND.
You saw the King?

DAVENANT. No, but I spoke with him.

LORD ORMOND. I do not understand you.

DAVENANT.
I’ll explain. Before permitting me to go away, Lord Cromwell sent for me. He made me give My word of honour not to see the King. I gave it, but when I had reached Cologne I recollected tricks of Gascony: I wrote and asked an audience of the King By night, in an unlighted chamber.

LORD ROCHESTER (laughing).
Good!

DAVENANT (to LORD ORMOND). His Majesty consented, talked with me, Gave me an order to transmit to you. Thus I was faithful to a double task; I did not see the King, yet talked with him.

LORD ROCHESTER (laughing still more heartily). Ah, Davenant! The ruse was well contrived; ‘T is not the least droll of your comedies.

LORD ORMOND (low to ROCHESTER). ‘T would not be wise to cavil at this point, And to a poet’s oath one pins no faith; But subtleties like this bear other names, And no true noble would descend to them. [To DAVENANT.] Where is the order of the King?

DAVENANT.
I bear It in a velvet bag, hid in my hat. ‘T is safe; I’m sure no one would seek it there. [He draws from his hat a red velvet bag, takes out of it a sealed ‘parchment which he hands to LORD ORMOND, who receives it on his knees and opens it after having kissed it respectfully.

LORD ROCHESTER (low to DAVENANT). While he is reading I want you to hear The verses —

LORD ORMOND (half aloud, half to himself).
“To John Butler, faithful, worthy Earl and Marquis of Ormond: Unto Cromwell at White-Hall Rochester must go.”

LORD ROCHESTER. He wants me to seduce the daughter? Good! [To DAVENANT.] My quatrain celebrates her radiant charms.

LORD ORMOND (continuing to read). “ The wine he drinks at table must be drugged. When he’s asleep, surround him in his bed And bring him to me here, alive. We will Avenge ourselves. Have faith in Davenant. It is our will. Consider this as final. CHARLES, King.”
[He returns the royal letter with the same ceremony to DAVENANT, who kisses it and replaces it in the velvet bag and hides it in his hat.
That is much easier said than done. How, under heaven, introduce this man Into the palace? It needs skill —

DAVENANT.
I know An old doctor of law who lives with him As secretary and interpreter, — John Milton; he is blind. Good clerk enough, But a distressing poet.

LORD ROCHESTER. Who? this Milton, The friend of regicides, — the man who wrote The “ Iconoclast “ and other senseless things? Obscure antagonist of great Saumaise!

DAVENANT. I’m glad enough to be his friend to-day. They need a chaplain there, I have been told.
[.Indicating ROCHESTER. Milton can get the place for Rochester.

LORD ORMOND (laughing). Make Rochester a chaplain! Droll disguise.

LORD ROCHESTER. Why not, my lord? I’ve played in comedies — I played a thief, you know, [To DAVENANT.] In “ Woodman King;” Now I will play a doctor puritan. One only needs to preach to get one’s self Afloat, then always talk of golden calf, Of dragons, caves of Endor, flutes of Jezer. To get to Cromwell is an easy thing.

DAVENANT (sitting at the table and writing). John Milton, at my wish, will recommend You to his Satanship; and chaplain to The devil you shall be.

LORD ROCHESTER. Frances, my love! [He advances his hand eagerly for the letter.

DAVENANT.
Pray, let me fold it.

LORD ROCHESTER. I will see Frances!

LORD ORMOND (to LORD ROCHESTER). No follies with the little one — I hope.

LORD ROCHESTER.
Oh, no!
[Aside.] Just get my quatrain to her eye! A quatrain often helps things on.
[Aloud to DAVENANT.] When I Am there, what must I do?

DAVENANT (giving him a phial).
Behold!
A strong narcotic is contained in this. Each night they bring the future sovereign Some hippocras with sprig of rosemary. Put in some of this powder and buy up The guard of the park gate.

[Turning to LORD ORMOND.] The rest is in Our hands.

LORD ORMOND. Why carry Cromwell off to-night When he's to die to-morrow? His own people Have decreed it.

DAVENANT. That is just the reason. From Puritans the King delivers him. He wants to do without them; and besides, 'T is good to hold a living enemy For hostage.

LORD ROCHESTER. Where's the money?

DAVENANT.
On the Thames A brig bears a large sum destined for us.
In any urgent need, Manasses, Jew, Will give us all we want at eight per cent.

LORD ORMOND.
Good!

DAVENANT.
We must keep the Roundheads on our side. We strike an oak whose roots sink very deep; We want their help, that if the wily fox Escape our net, he'll fall beneath their swords.

LORD ROCHESTER. Well said, dear Davenant. What splendid words! You make a poet's use of metaphor. Cromwell is oak and fox at the same time. A splendid thought! a fox stabbed to the heart. You are the torch on England's Pindus, sir, And I appeal, O master, for judgment —

LORD ORMOND (aside). The quatrain surges to the top once more!

LORD ROCHESTER. Upon some verses, which I wrote last night.

LORD ORMOND. My lord, is this the place?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).

What petty minds Have these great noblemen. If a poor lord Has just by chance a little sense, he loses Caste.

DAVENANT (to LORD ROCHESTER). When Charles the Second sits at Windsor-Lodge You can recite your verses, and we'll have Vithers, Saint-Albans, Waller, to attend. Will you permit me to abstain just now?

LORD ORMOND. Let us conspire in peace.
[To DAVENANT.] You've spoken like A prince, my lord.
[Aside.'] Wilmot should die of shame. The poet Davenant is much less mad Than he.

LORD ROCHESTER (to DAVENANT). You will not listen?

DAVENANT.
No! I think Lord Rochester himself will pardon me. We've many points to settle for our plot.

LORD ROCHESTER. My lord thinks that my quatrain is not good Because I've done no tragi-comedies Nor masquerades. So be it.
[Low to LORD ORMOND.] Rhapsodies! 'T is jealousy, if he defends himself.

DAVENANT.
My lord's not angry?

LORD ROCHESTER.
Devil take you! Let Me be!

DAVENANT. I did not think to wound you, sir.

LORD ORMOND.
I beg, my lord —

LORD ROCHESTER (turning away). What pride!

DAVENANT.

My lord, I beg —

LORD ROCHESTER (repulsing him).
And envy!

LORD ORMOND (impatiently). Gentleness is not my forte. A drop of water makes the vase o'erflow! The greatest dandy who in Paris struts, The silliest fop who haunts the Place Royale, With all his feathers flying on his hat, His bands of lace, his ribbons tied in bows, His fluted wig and wide extended boots Has much less rubbish in his head than you, My lord.

LORD ROCHESTER (furious). You 're not my father, Lord Ormond! In vain your grey hairs would redeem your speech. Your words are young and equalize our years! You'll give me satisfaction for this wrong?

LORD ORMOND. Most willingly! Let fly your sword, my spark!
[They both draw their swords. Faith! To my eyes 't is but a flimsy reed.

DAVENANT (placing himself between them). My lords, what are you thinking of? Have done! Upon the instant, peace!

LORD ROCHESTER (fighting). Your peace Is good: our war is better, friend!

DAVENANT (trying to separate them).
What if The crier hears you? — [Knocking at the door.
Some one knocks, I think I
[Louder knocking.
In name of Heaven, lords! — [They still fight.
In the King's name! [The two adversaries stop and drop their swords. Knocking. All may be lost! Perhaps that is the guard. Peace:
[The two lords replace their swords in the scabbard, put their large hats on their heads and wrap their cloaks around themselves. More knocking. DAVENANT opens the door.

SCENE V.

The same. CARR, complete costume of Roundheads. He pauses solemnly on the threshold and salutes the three Cavaliers with his hand, without taking off his hat.

CARR.
Is not this the meeting-place of saints? DAVENANT (returning his salutation).
It is.
[Low to LORD ORMOND.] That's what these damned old humbugs call Themselves.
[Aloud to CARR.] In this conventicle, you 're welcome, Brother. — [CARR approaches them slowly.

LORD ORMOND (low to LORD ROCHESTER). Our quarrel was ridiculous. Let us abandon it. I was the first At fault. Be friends.

LORD ROCHESTER (bowing).
Command me, Lord Ormond.

LORD ORMOND. We will think only of our king whose wrongs Demand that your hand should unite with mine.

LORD ROCHESTER. It is my duty and my happiness, My lord! — [They clasp hands.
And is it not enough, good God! To have exile, proscription, hurled at us, Death-sentences, a price put on our heads, With how much more, the fruits of wretched war, [Indicating by gesture his disguise. Without these fearful felt hats and cloth cloaks!

CARU (takes a few steps forward slowly, joins his hands upon his breast, lifts his eyes to heaven, then turns them from, one to the other of the Cavaliers). Go on, my brothers; when I come to church I am the humblest guest at the great feast. Let no one rise for old man Carr. I see This war of words, which in the street I heard, Was but the noise of spiritual fight.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
The deuce!

CARR (continuing). These strifes are common things to me. Resume the combats which sustain the soul.

LORD ROCHESTER (low to DAVENANT). Or overcome it.

DAVENANT (same tone). Peace, my lord.

CARR (continuing).
‘T is written “ Wander throughout the world and preach my words.”

LORD ROCHESTER (low to DAVENANT). This is a study for my chaplain’s part.

CARR (after a pause). I won the hatred of Long Parliament. For seven years the Tower has held me fast. I’ve wept for liberty by Cromwell slain;
This morning when the jailer oped my door He said, “ Seek the Three Cranes: they wait for you.
There Israel is gathering its tribes.
Cromwell and his abuses are to die.
Go forth!” I went, and came unto this door, As Jacob to Mesopotamia came In ages past. My salutation, friends!
My soul is waiting for your words of cheer, As waits the parched earth for Heaven’s rain.
The curse defies me and envelops me.
With hyssop purify me, make me clean;
For if your eyes don’t turn their flames on me, I’m like a dead man going to the tomb.

LORD ROCHESTER (low to DAVENANT). What gibberish is this?

DAVENANT (low to LORD ROCHESTER). Apocalypse.

CARR.
My soul seeks light.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Remove, then, the eclipse.

LORD ORMOND (low to DAVENANT). I gather from his “ buts “ and “ thens “ and “ fors “ He’s from the Tower, and that his name is Carr. ’Tis a conspirator whom Barkstead sends. He’s a sectarian, an old bird of prey. Assisted by Strachan in the late war, He separated his camp from the camp Of Parliament. They put him in the Tower; But (this will be a great surprise to you)
He hates Cromwell because, through treachery, He wrecked the Parliament which put him there.

DAVENANT (low). Is he one of the ordinary sort, — A ranter, a socinian?

LORD ORMOND (low). No, he is Millennialist; thinks the saints will rule O’er all the earth one thousand years. The saints —
They are the Friends.

CARR (who has been absorbed in a sombre ecstasy).
Brothers, I’ve suffered much. I was forgotten in the gloom, as are The dead, a century old, in their dark tomb. The Parliament, which to my grief I wronged, Was overthrown by Cromwell; in my cell I wept o’er England as the pelican Weeps by a lake deserted. Then I wept Over myself; for by the fires of sin My brow was branded, withered was my arm, Accursed by the God whom I proclaim. I was like wood, when half consumed by fire. I’ve wept so much, lambs of the holy flock, That my poor bones are rotted in my flesh. At last the Lord has mercy, lifts me up; Upon the temple’s stone he whets my axe. Cromwell he strikes, and far from Zion sends This desolation and pollution!

LORD ROCHESTER (low to DAVENANT).
Zounds!
Harangues like his are damned original.

CARR.
I will resume my raiment virginal.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Indeed!

CARR.
Guide in the narrow path, my steps, And glorify yourselves whose hearts are strong. The thousand years are come! The saints will rule From Gog to Magog as God hath ordained. You are the saints.

LORD ROCHESTER (politely).
You flatter us, I'm sure.

CARR (with enthusiasm). The stones of Zion to the Lord are dear!

LORD ROCHESTER.
Well said.

CARR.
Unless God moves me unto speech, I'm like a dumb man, and my lips are mute. My heart will always hang upon your words, For in them a celestial manna lies.
[Indicating LORD ORMOND. It seems to me you were not quite agreed. Upon what text arose your wise disputes?

LORD ROCHESTER. When you were knocking, sir? About a verse, [Aside.] 'Sdeath! my quatrain, it might please his taste! He listens with unequalled ardour now. What poet, worthy of the name, would fail To launch his verses at that gaping ear. I'll risk the madrigal, let come what may! We'll make him drink first. Even Puritans Relax their wrinkles when the cups are full. [Aloud.] You 're thirsty?

CARE.
Never thirsty, sir, nor hungry; For I eat ashes as I would eat bread.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). If that's his dinner, let him eat alone! No matter!
[Aloud.] Landlord — boy!

[A tavern boy appears. Bring us a jug Of muscadine, some wine, some hippocras. [The boy places jugs and two pewter mugs on a table. CARR and LORD ROCHESTER sit down. CARR pours out wine first, and offers it to the Cavalier, who continues: —
You asked us — I thank you — upon what text We were disputing a short time ago. It was a quatrain, sir —

CARR. A quatrain?

LORD ROCHESTER.
Yes!

CARR.
What is a quatrain?

LORD ROCHESTER.
Certain kind of psalm.

CARR.
Ah, sir, I listen.

LORD ROCHESTER. Tell me what you think. “ Egeria the Fair,” — the one to whom These verses are addressed, — Frances is called. But that’s a vulgar name and at the end Of dainty love-songs would be out of place. I changed it, hesitating long between Griselidis and Parthenolicy. I chose the sweet name of Egeria! She was wise Numa’s cherished nymph, you know. He was law-giver; I’m in Parliament; That seemed in keeping. Have I chosen well? Judge you! This is the amorous epigram.
[With a gallant and languorous air. “ Egeria the Fair: you burn my soul! Your eyes, where Cupid lights a conquering flame, Are like two glowing mirrors which reflect The fires consuming me!” What do you say to that?
[CARR who listened at first with attention and then with sombre disapproval, rises, furious, and overturns the table.

CARR.
Damnation! devils! Ye Saints and Heaven, pardon if I swear! But can one calmly listen to a flood Of bold obscenity at one’s own side? Away! Back!

Edomite, Amalekite, Madianite!

LORD ROCHESTER. Good Lord! What rhymes in “ ite “! He’s more original than Ormond is.

CARR (indignant). Like Satan, you have led me to a mount; And you have said, “ You’ve finished a long fast; You ‘re thirsty. At your feet I place the earth.”

LORD ROCHESTER. I only offered you a cup of wine.

CARR.
I listened as if to a sainted soul. My heart opened itself to his false lips, As rose of Sharon opens to the dew! Instead of holy treasures of the mind He shows me a vile sore!

LORD ROCHESTER.
A sore? My quatrain

CARR.
A fearful sore, which reeks with popery, With love, voluptuousness and heresy, Episcopacy! Horror! A vile plague Which holds the filth of Moloch, Cupid, and Astarte.

LORD ROCHESTER. Pardon! Not Astarte, sir.
Egeria!

CARR.
Your lips are venom which Infect my soul. Go back from me, you doers Of iniquity; you fornicators — back! You dry my bones e’en to the marrow, sir. The saints will triumph! Your accursed brood Will not crush them as if they were but reeds.

The floods will burst o’er you, but will not reach The level of their holy feet I

LORD ROCHESTER.

You rave!
What use will be your tall boots to you then? If it won’t rain on you, why wear big hats?

CARR (with bitterness). Such words become a son of Zerviah. At this instant LORD ROCHESTER’S cloak opens and discloses his rich costume, covered with bows, precious stones, and love-knots. CARR casts a look of horror upon it and continues. Look! A magician! Sphinx with a man’s face, Dressed and adorned in Sodom’s latest style. Satan’s own doublet is not different: He also struts with cuffs upon his wrists, Covers his cloven foot, to hide it well from view, With silken stockings and rosettes on shoes; He wears his garter up above his knee; Has rings and jewels sacred to Wishnon, — All amulets of Nabo, idol vile! And that hell may be satisfied withal, Behind his ears he hangs in shameless way That rank abomination, a love-tress!

LORD ORMOND.
What fools!

CARR (beside himself with indignation).
No! These vile creatures are not saints.

LORD ROCHESTER (laughing). You give us up?

CARR.
It is a club of demons; A Papist vigil: These are Cavaliers. Let me go hence!

LORD ROCHESTER. Farewell, excited friend!

CARR (going to door). My feet are treading on hot coals of hell.

SCENE VI.

The same. COLONEL JOYCE, MAJOR-GENERAL HARRISON, BAREBONE the currier, LIEUTENANT-GENERAL LUDLOW, COLONEL OVERTON, COLONEL PRIDE, SYNDERCOMB, soldier, MAJOR WILDMAN, deputies GARLAND, PLINLIM- MON, and other Puritans. Wrapped in their cloaks they enter in form of a procession, hats pulled down, tall boots, long swords which lift up the lower end of their cloaks.

JOYCE (stopping CARR).
What is the matter? Going as we come?

CARR.
Joyce, you ‘re deceived. Come not to Nineveh.
Leave this vile place. Barebone and Harrison, These men are Cavaliers; they are not saints.
We are betrayed!

JOYCE (low to CARR).
These men belong to us.
Since we’ve no others, we must use their help.
These are allies.

CARR.
Death to the Royalists!
No union with the sons of Belial.

JOYCE (to OVERTON).
He’s simple yet.
[To CARR.] Come, Carr, stay here with us.

CARR (with gloomy resignation).
To keep you from vile contact, I will stay.
[The three Cavaliers have seated themselves around a table on the right: the Puritans, grouped on the left, talk among themselves in low tones and every now and then cast glances of hatred toward the Cavaliers. During all the scenes which follow, it must be supposed there is space enough between the two groups to make the conversation of the one inaudible to the other.

CARR is the only one who watches the Cavaliers unceasingly. He holds himself somewhat apart from the Roundheads.

LORD ORMOND (low to DAVENANT).
That coward Lambert does not seem to come.
He must have dreamed of scaffolds this last night.

LORD ROCHESTER (low to the two others).
Our saintly friends have a most sombre look.
We ‘re only three, and they are numerous.
St. George! — [Looking toward the door.
Here comes a reinforcement. Clifford, Sedley, Roseberry, and Lord Drogheda!

LORD ORMOND (rising).
Illustrious Jenkins whom the tyrant loves Yet persecutes, because he fears his virtue!

SCENE VII.

The same. SEDLEY, LORD DROGHEDA, LORD ROSEBERRY, SIR PETERS DOWNIE, LORD CLIFFORD, Cavaliers in Puritan cloaks and wearing Puritan hats. DOCTOR JENKINS, an old man dressed in black, and other Royalists. The Cavaliers enter pell-mell; DOCTOR JENKINS alone preserves a dignified and solemn gait.

LORD ROSEBERRY (gaily). Lord Ormond, Davenant, and Rochester, It’s warm!

CARR (aside in a comer). Lord Ormond — Rochester!

LORD ORMOND (low, and with a vexed look, to LORD ROSEBERRY).
Please speak Our names a trifle lower —

LORD ROSEBERRY (low, and looking toward the Roundheads).

Ah, those crows!
I didn’t see them.

LORD ORMOND (low to LORD ROSEBERRY). Have a care, my lord, Not to become their prey.
[The Cavaliers go to the table where ORMOND, ROCHESTER, and DAVENANT, were seated. They notice the table and the pewter mugs which CARR overturned.

LORD CLIFFORD (gaily).
A table turned Already? Who began the fray? ‘Sdeath!
Two cups for three? Which one of you keeps fast? We’ll straighten this disorder!
[He picks up the table, calls a boy of the inn, who places new jugs of beer and wine upon the table; the young Cavaliers quickly seat themselves around it.
I am hungry, And thirsty too.

CARR (aside with indignation).
They’ve mouths only to bite, These Pagans! Hunger, thirst, — eternal cry! They ‘re buried in their carnal appetites.

SCENE VIII.

The same. SIR RICHARD WILLIS, costume of the old Cavaliers; white hair, appearance of great suffering.

LORD ORMOND.
Sir Richard Willis!
[All the Cavaliers arise and go to meet him; he seems to walk with difficulty. ROSEBERRY and ROCHESTER each offer an arm to help him.

SIR RICHARD (to the Cavaliers who surround him). From his weary chain Freed for an instant, Richard drags himself To you. Alas! my feebleness and pain Come from the persecutions I endure. My eyes have lost the habitude of light, Cromwell has used such skill in torturing me.

LORD ORMOND.
My poor old friend —

SIR RICHARD.
Ah, do not pity me, If, dragging one foot in the grave, my arm Wounded with chains but strong with zeal, I come To help restore the throne legitimate. I glory in the cause; and if God wills, I'll shed with joy my heart's blood for my king.

LORD ORMOND.
Oh, loyalty sublime!

LORD ROCHESTER. Devotion rare!

SIR RICHARD. I am of least importance 'mongst you all. I have no other pride than to have been Of all his servitors the most oppressed.

DOCTOR JENKINS. What a grand model of fidelity!

SIR RICHARD (With gesture of humility'). Whom wait you for? The Roundheads are all here.

LORD ORMOND. Lambert is lacking: cowards all come late.

LORD ROCHESTER (drinking. to LORDS ROSEBERRY and CLIFFORD).
Look! with their black felts turned into a tower, Are not our saints ridiculous?

SIR RICHARD (to LORD ORMOND).
Who are All these sectarians?

LORD ORMOND. Down there are Ludlow And Plinlimmon, — members of Parliament. That one, who's watching us with hate, is Carr. Then that inspired currier, damned Barebone.

SIR RICHARD.
Who is this Barebone?

DAVENANT (low to SIR RICHARD).
An uncommon man. Declared an enemy to tyrant power, He’s currier to saints, upholsterer To Lord Cromwell; he prays at double altars, And ties double strings unto his bow. With one hand he prepares a massacre, And with the other ornaments a feast. His voice proscribes the head of Cromwell, crowned And makes a bargain for the coronation. This great man, bound unto opposing ends, Sings hymns to God while working Satan’s will. Obliging merchant and a heartless saint, Fanatically fond of Noll, yet sells Unto the highest bidder dear Noll’s throne.

SIR RICHARD. Was not his brother speaker of the House?

DAVENANT.
Of the late Parliament; and Barebone was A member too.

SIR RICHARD (to LORD ORMOND). The others?

LORD ORMOND.
Harrison, A regicide, and Garland, regicide, And Overton, a regicide.

LORD CLIFFORD. Is’t known Which of the three is Satan?

LORD ORMOND.
Peace, my lord. There speaks the ravisher of kingships, — Joyce.

LORD ROSEBERRY.
Accursed race!

LORD ROCHESTER. What pleasure I would take In jostling those Roundheads against each other As they go on their sacrilegious way. I’d crop their ears still shorter, for reward — That they might bask in pure rotundity. How many pleasant things I’d find to do Unto these wretches, were they not our friends!

SCENE IX.

The same. LIEUTENANT-GENERAL LAMBERT, simple costume of the Roundheads; long sword with copper guard. On LAMBERT’S arrival all the Roundheads bow with great deference.

LORD ORMOND. At last, Lambert is come!

CARR (aside).
Strange mystery!

LAMBERT.
A greeting to old England’s oldest friends.

LORD ORMOND (to his followers). The hour has come to risk the fatal stroke. Let us conclude the bond and settle all.
[He advances toward LAMBERT, who comes to meet him. Jesus the crucified —

LAMBERT.
For man’s redemption.
We are ready!

LORD ORMOND. At my command I have Three hundred noblemen; these are the chiefs. When shall we strike the curséd one?

LAMBERT.
When he Is king!

LORD ORMOND. To-morrow!

LAMBERT.

We will strike to-morrow.

LORD ORMOND.
It is said!

LAMBERT.
‘T is said!

LORD ORMOND.
The hour — Speak!

LAMBERT.
At noon.

LORD ORMOND.
The place!

LAMBERT. At Westminster.

LORD ORMOND.
Alliance.

LAMBERT.
Friendship. [They grasp hands. [.Aside.] I will possess the diadem. When you Have served my turn, the scaffold of Capell Will not be worm-eaten too much to hold A block for your proud head.

LORD ORMOND (aside).
He thinks to mount A throne; he’ll mount the gallows in its place.
[A pause.

LAMBERT (aside). I’ve compromised myself. I’m chosen chief. Why did I suffer it? No matter! On! My fears are useless; and when one retreats Then, least of all, can one see clear the way. I’ll speak!
[He crosses his arms upon his breast and lifts his eyes to heaven. The Puritans take their attitudes of ecstasy and prayer. The Cavaliers are seated at the table, the young men drinking joyously. ORMOND, WILLIS, DAVENANT, and JENKINS are the only ones who appear to listen to LAMBERT'S speech.

My pious friends, 't is known to us That, in defiance of this people's right, A man who calls himself the Lord Protector Intends to claim the title of our king. That reason brings us now to you, to ask If 't is not fitting we rebuke his pride, If you will help us to avenge our wrongs, Regain our rights of franchise now usurped, And pass death-sentence on the serpent head Of Oliver Cromwell of Huntington.

ALL (except CARR and HARRISON). Death unto Cromwell!

ROUNDHEADS.
Traitor, you shall die.

CAVALIERS.
Strike the usurper!

OVERTON. We will have no king!

LAMBERT.
We'll have no master.

HARRISON. I most humbly beg Permission to present a thought. Suppose He were an instrument in Heaven's hand! Although a tyrant, he is free of heart. Perhaps it is his fate Daniel foretells, When in his prophecy he says, " The saints Shall take the kingdom of the world, and will Possess it."

LUDLOW. Yes, the text is plain; but yet The prophet will console your troubled mind, For elsewhere, general, great Daniel says, " Unto the saints the kingdom shall be given For my designs." Now, one has not the right To take it, ere't is given.

JOYCE. Then, the saints!
We are the saints!

HARRISON. I yield unto your wisdom. But, although I confess I'm vanquished, friend, [To LUDLOW.] I am not satisfied these texts mean just

What you attribute to them. By and by We will confer together on these things, Which are prohibited to minds profane. Unto ourselves we'll add some pious friends Who, with their lights, will help to clear our doubts.

LUDLOW.
With all my heart. We'll call it Friday next.
[HARRISON bows in sign of acquiescence.

LAMBERT (aside, as if absorbed in his reflections). What I've just said, in truth, is very bold.

JOYCE (pointing out to LAMBERT a group of Roundheads, who until now have held themselves apart in the background).
Three new conspirators are there. They feel Most loath to come into the vineyard late, But they present themselves to you in faith, Since it is written, " Equal salary To all."

LAMBERT (sighing). Bid them approach.
[The group advances to LAMBERT. What are your names?

ONE OF THE NEW CONSPIRATORS. What-ever-the-unrighteous-may-conspire Against-you-Praise-God-Pimpleton.

LAMBERT.
And you?
A SECOND CONSPIRATOR. Death-to-sin-Palmer.
A THIRD.
Live-for-resurrection Jeroboam-of-Emer.

LORD ROCHESTER (low to LORD ROSEBERRY). Pray, what is that?

LORD ROSEBERRY (low to LORD ROCHESTER). They have a crazy way of winding up Their names in verses of the Bible.

LAMBERT (holding an open Bible toward them).
Will You swear?

PRAISE-GOD-PIMPLETON. We? Swear?

DEATH-TO-SIN-PALMER.
Away from us all oaths.

LITE-FOR-RESURRECTION-JEROBOAM-OF-EMER. Hell only hears, while Heaven denounces them.

PRAISE-GOD-PIMPLETON.
May faith deliver us from Pagan sins.

LAMBERT.
Then, will you promise — hand upon the Book —
[He hesitates.
To strike down Cromwell?

ALL THREE (hands on Bible). Yes!

LAMBERT (more forcibly).
To lend us help, Keep silence, and to act?

ALL THREE.
We promise — yes.

LAMBERT.
Be welcome here!
[The three conspirators take seats among the Puritans.

OVERTON (low to LAMBERT).
All things move prosperously. Have courage: all looks well.

LAMBERT (aside).
To-morrow night I'll wear an added crown, or lack my head.

OVERTON (indicating the conspirators, to LAMBERT). Look! all these friends, my lord.

LAMBERT (aside).
And witnesses.

SYNDERCOMB (in the group of conspirators). Die, Oliver Cromwell!

CARR (to Roundheads).
After your axe Has cut off Cromwell from his gorgeous dream, After this Baal, men adore, is down, What will you do?

LUDLOW (thoughtfully).
In truth, what will we do?

LORD ORMOND (aside).
I know!

LAMBERT (embarrassed). We'll form a council numbering ten. [.Aside.] And which will have one head.

HARRISON (warmly).
Ten members, Lambert? Ten are too few. Let us have seventy, As in the Hebrew Sanhedrim; it is The sacred number.

CARR.
But the rightful power Is the Long Parliament, dissolved by crime.

JOYCE.
A council made of officers?

HARRISON (becoming excited).
I'm right. To govern well we must be seventy.

BAREBONE. For England no salvation's possible Unless, according to the Bible laws, We claim from merchants from their higher gains Support for temple and the chosen ones. Give up Chaldea, Egypt, for dear Zion, Resolving foot to palm and brace to cubit.

GARLAND.

That is most sensible.

JOYCE. Is Barebone mad? Is he a fool to see naught but his hole? Does he mistake his counter for the throne, His cap for crown, and his yard-stick for sceptre?

PLINLIMMON (to JOYCE indicating BAREBONE). Pray, do not jest. God oft inspires him. [To BAREBONE.] My friend, I think with you!

BAREBONE (air of great importance).
To do things well From every country we must take the best.

JOYCE (with a contemptuous laugh). That means the curriers.

BAREBONE (bitterly to JOYCE).
You are polite. I thank you! But before you got so proud Were you not a tailor, Mr. Mob-cap?
[JOYCE makes a gesture of anger. BAREBONE continues. I, whom the city counts among its notables — [JOYCE menaces him with his fist, and is about to rush upon him.

OVERTON (placing himself between them). Come, come!

LORD ROSEBERRY (to Puritans. He rises rolls his eyes devoutly, puts on an air of compunction, and heaves a great sigh).
The law of the twelve tablets, sirs, — The tables of the law —
[The Puritans become attentive. CARR.
What does he mean?

LORD ROSEBERRY. Demand not death by hunger nor by thirst. I vote for a good meal; my stomach groans. [The Roundheads turn away with indignation. The servants of the inn set the table of the Cavaliers.

CARR (contemplating the Cavaliers who eat). How mad for flesh and wine these Satans are!

BAREBONE.
These Pagans!

CARR (to Puritans). Ere we go too far, let’s talk. Is it so sure that Cromwell wants the crown?

OVERTON.
Too sure! To-morrow a base Parliament Will place the hateful thing upon his head.

ALL (except CARR). Death to his mad ambition!

HARRISON.
I don’t see What pushes Cromwell to this fatal step. He must be mad indeed to want the throne. Of all the crown’s possessions none are left. For public moneys we sold Hampton Court, Woodstock’s destroyed, and Windsor destitute.

LAMBERT (low to OVERTON). Old plunderer! who on the brow of kings Sees nothing but the rubies of a crown. And in a throne, the goal of Cromwell’s hope, He sees but yards of velvet to re-sell. Parched with a thirst for gold which naught can quench, He loves the sceptre for the goldsmith’s art. And if some crown by chance should tempt his soul, He’d rather steal than win it.

BAREBONE (with ecstasy).
Ah, wherefore To the despair of holy men has God Turned Jacob’s lion to a scapegoat? Once, This Oliver, clothed with the robes of truth. Appeared to walk on the right hand of God. He was a ripened sheaf in our wheat-fields; He wore the Judah armour, battle-proof; And when he stood before their awe-struck eyes The Philistines retreating cried, “ ‘T is he! “ He was the pillow unto Israel’s bed. But honey changed to poison on her lips. He made himself a Tyrian; Edom’s sons Laughed loud at her abandonment. The Amorrheans trembled with delight To see the demons pushing him their way.
Inflamed by the unrighteous Abishag He wants to be a king like David. Well! He shall be one like Agag.

SYNDERCOMB.
Death to him.’

LAMBERT.
He’s filled his measure to the top with crimes.

LORD DROGHEDA. Drogheda reeks yet with his victims’ blood.

LIVE-FOR-RESURRECTION-JEROBOAM-OF-EMER. Children of Tyre, Gomorrah, haunt his court

LORD ORMOND. Blood of the martyr king has stained his hands.

HARRISON.
To detriment of those who fought his wars He gives back to the Cavaliers their lands.

DEATH-TO-SIN-PALMER. At that vile banquet, in the city’s name Which the lord-mayor gave him yesterday, He was presented with a sword, which he Returned.

LAMBERT. Thus aping royalty.

JOYCE.
We’re slaves!

DOCTOR JENKINS. He judges, taxes, pardons, punishes, Without appeal.

SIR RICHARD.
He murdered Lord Capell, Lord Holland too: this tiger’s prey they were!

BAREBONE. He boldly flaunts a fine doublet of silk.

OVERTON.
He has refused us things which are our rights. He exiled Bradshaw.

LORD ROCHESTER.
Bradshaw was not hung.

PRAISE-GOD-PIMPLETON. In spite of Holy Writ, he tolerates The rites of popery, and prelateship.

DAVENANT.
He has profaned the tombs of Westminster.

LUDLOW.
He buried Ireton by torches' light.

CAVALIERS.
A sacrilege!

ROUNDHEADS. Idolatrous!

JOYCE.
My friends, No mercy!

SYNDERCOMB (drawing his dagger). He must die!

ALL (lifting their daggers).
Exterminate The tyrant and his race.
[At this moment some one knocks violently on the door of the tavern; the conspirators pause: silence of terror and surprise. Knocking is repeated.

LORD ORMOND (going to door).
Who is it? Speak!

LAMBERT (aside).
The deuce!
A VOICE (outside). A friend.

LORD ORMOND.
What do you want?

VOICE.
By heaven!
I say, a friend! Open the door!

LORD ORMOND.
Your name?

VOICE.
I’m Richard Cromwell.

ALL THE CONSPIRATORS.
Richard Cromwell!

LORD ORMOND.
Son Of the Protector!

LAMBERT.
We have been betrayed LORD ROSEBERRY.
We must open the door!
[He opens the door. RICHARD CROMWELL enters.

SCENE X.

The same. RICHARD CROMWELL, costume of the Cavaliers. Upon RICHARD’S entrance all the Puritans fold their cloaks around them and pull down their hats.

RICHARD CROMWELL.
Well, my good friends, I never saw so fortified a den. No stronghold is defended half so well. Clifford, without your voice and Roseberry’s, Which rose above the din of bottles, faith! Poor Richard would have given up the fight.
[Saluting the conspirators around him. Good-day, sirs!. Whose good health were you about To drink? Unto your wishes, I add mine.

LORD CLIFFORD (embarrassed). Dear Richard, we were saying —

LORD ROCHESTER (laughing).
Heaven bless you!

RICHARD CROMWELL. Of me? You talked of me? You are too kind!

BAREBONE (aside). May hell burn out its cinders in your throat!

RICHARD CROMWELL. I ‘m not intruding?

LORD ROSEBERRY (stammering).
You? No. On the contrary — We are much pleased. Some business brings you here

RICHARD CROMWELL. Yes; the same sort of business which brought you.

CARR (aside). Can he be one of them?

SIR RICHARD (aside).
What! Richard, too?

RICHARD CROMWELL (raising his voice). Ah, gentlemen! You — Sedley, Clifford, Downie, And Roseberry — I cry you treason!

LORD ROSEBERRY (startled).
What? LORD CLIFFORD (anxious). Dear Richard — [.Aside.] Damn my soul! he knows it all.

SEDLEY (with anguish). I swear to you — we —

RICHARD CROMWELL.
Hear me out, I beg, Then justify yourselves if possible.

LORD ROSEBERRY (low to others). We are found out.

DOWNIE.
The fact is evident.

RICHARD CROMWELL. For near ten years we’ve been the best of friends, We’ve shared all things in common until now, — Balls, hunts, delights forbidden or allowed, Our purse, our joys, our griefs, our mistresses. Your dogs were mine, my falcons were your own; And we sought the same balconies by night. Although my name dragged me in different paths, I’ve looked on you as if you were my brothers. But now, in spite of this close comradeship, You have a secret. What a secret, too!

LORD ROSEBERRY. All’s lost! What shall I say?

RICHARD CROMWELL
Question your soul! Should I expect this? It is infamous!

SEDLEY.
Believe, dear Richard —

RICHARD CROMWELL.
Search for reasons, yes! Have I not done unnumbered things for you? Who was your resource, in those direful days, ‘Gainst money-lenders, worse than Roundheads? Yes! Why did I pay the Jew Manasses those Five hundred nobles, and for whom?

LORD CLIFFORD (confused).
I know —
I won’t deny! Accursed Jew!

RICHARD CROMWELL.
Downie, A bill struck down your banished family; Who was your surety when they came for you?

DOWNIE (embarrassed).
You were!

RICHARD CROMWELL (to ROSEBERRY). Who kept in jail for you, for crime Of libel, on a certain night, the husband Of your dear one?

LORD ROCHESTER (low to DAVENANT).
He looks like a good fellow!

BAREBONE (low to CARR). The shameless Herod, lending despotism To lechery.

LORD ROCHESTER (to DAVENANT). He has a ready way Of improvising widows.

LORD ROSEBERRY (to RLCHARD CROMWELL). I have had Innumerable proofs of your good-will —

RICHARD CROMWELL (folding his arms across his chest). And for this friendship, dangerous to me, I am repaid by all — with treachery.

LAMBERT (aside).
With treachery?

LORD CLIFFORD. What! treachery?

SEDLEY.
Just God!

CARR (astonished). What do they mean?

RICHARD CROMWELL (earnestly).
You come to drink, and don’t Ask me!

LORD ROSEBERRY. I breathe again.
[Low to Cavaliers.] The motive of This meeting has escaped him. He has seen The bottles, not the daggers.
[To RICHARD CROMWELL. Richard, we —

RICHARD CROMWELL. High treason, I tell you! If you but knew How this base deed of yours goes to my heart! Think of it — to get drunk and not tell me! What have I done? Am I not good-for-nothing, Like yourselves? To drink without me — ah, ‘T was wrong! You think I cannot hold my tongue? That you should keep it from the Puritans, Disguise yourselves beneath those horrid hats, And hide beneath their cloaks, — that is all right; But to conceal such things from me, when I Was first to laugh at sumptuary laws And sober Solons, whose despotic bills Fixed tavern reckonings at a crown per head. Is this an act of comradeship, my friends? Have I held back from any of your schemes? Am I less seen, in spite of stringent rules, At cock-fights or at races? Have I not Gone to the limit of your recklessness, And taken part in comedies with you?

BAREBONE (indignant).
The Sadducee!

RICHARD CROMWELL. I’m ready for them all! Gay feasts or duels, tricks of any sort. With what can you reproach me?

LORD CLIFFORD.
Naught, indeed!
Your qualities, of an exalted sort, Are dear to us.

RICHARD CROMWELL. I may deceive myself; Our eyes are none too keen to see our faults, And we look only on the brightest side. I may have failings.

SEDLEY.
No!

RICHARD CROMWELL.
Please point them out.

LORD ROSEBERRY.
Richard —

RICHARD CROMWELL. You do me that much justice, sure, To think I hate these cursed Puritans As much as you do!

BAREBONE.
We?

RICHARD CROMWELL
That's what I said. My God! how can one stand these stupid men, Who stain their holy books with bloody thoughts, Who murder every one, and worship God, Preach endless sermons and then cheat at cards?

CARR (under his breath). Play cards, — you lie, you son of Herod, you!

RICHARD CROMWELL. I'm croaking quite as much as they. No more! To prove I dread not being compromised, How truly my desires accord with yours, How much I love the cause on which your hopes Are bent, — [He fills a glass and raises it to his lips.
I drink the health of your King Charles.

ALL THE CONSPIRATORS (surprised) King Charles!

RICHARD CROMWELL. Why all this terror? We 're alone.

CARR (aside). I had suspected Israel was a dupe. At heart, it's for the Stuarts they come here. We'll see!

SIR RICHARD. And he is Cromwell's son! Well, well! If he has joined this plot, he is most rash. [At this moment the sound of a trumpet is heard outside; renewed silence of astonishment and anxiety.
A LOUD VOICE (outside). Open this inn in name of Parliament.
[Movement of terror among the conspirators.

LORD ROCHESTER (to DAVENANT). This is the time we 're caught in our own tomb, Like Cacus.

LAMBERT (low to JOYCE). This means our arrest, by Cromwell.

JOYCE (LOW). He knows all! This time there is no mistake.

OVERTON (low). We'll have to cut a passage with our swords.

LAMBERT (low). What's to be done? Of course the square is filled With guards.
[The sound of the trumpet is heard again.

RICHARD CROMWELL. The devil! To disturb us now!

VOICE (outside). Open this inn in name of Parliament.

BAREBONE.
Let us obey! — [He goes to open door.

LAMBERT (aside). My head begins to turn Upon its shoulders, ready for its fall! [BAREBONE opens the inn door; the other conspirators lift off the blinds and the back drop appears, in which are large grated windows. Through these windows the urine-market place is visible; it is filled with people. In the centre of the stage THE TOWN-CRIER is seen on horseback, surrounded by four Town-servants in livery, armed with pikes, and by a guard of Archers and Halberdiers. THE CRIER holds a trumpet in one hand and an unfolded parchment in the other.

SCENE XI.

The same. THE TOWN-CRIER, Town-servants, Halberdiers, Archers, Populace. The conspirators range themselves on the right and on the left of the stage.

TOWN-CRIER (after having blown his trumpet). Silence! This must be listened to by all. " His Highness—"

HARRISON (low to GARLAND). Soon his Majesty.

TOWN-CRIER.
“The Lord Protector Oliver Cromwell, unto All citizens, all military subjects And all civilians, this makes known—”

OVERTON (low to LUDLOW).
The word Subject returns.

TOWN-CRIER. “ To learn God’s holy will, Touching the recent motion which was made In Parliament by a most honoured man, —
Pack, alderman and cavalier, — to wit, That the aforesaid Lord Protector be Proclaimed king—”

LUDLOW (low to OVERTON). Now, the usurper lifts The mask!

TOWN-CRIER. “ Moreover, to protect this people From miseries which the eclipse foretells, And to entreat God to be merciful, The Commons sitting now in Parliament, On motion of those doctors whom all love Decree this day to be a day of fast; Enjoining every citizen to make Examination of his crimes and sins.” It is decreed.

TOWN-SERVANT. Amen!

TOWN-CRIER.
And now — God bless The English nation evermore.

THE CHIEF OF ARCHERS.
According Unto this bill of Parliament we bid All sutlers, landlords, innkeepers close up Their taverns and their shops upon the instant, Under the pain of twenty deniers fine.

LAMBERT (aside). I’ve got off with a fright this time! Well done!
[Low to Puritan conspirators. Until to-morrow we must separate.

GARLAND (low). When shall we meet again’!

BAREBONE (low).

In the great hall Of Westminster. Before the fatal hour I’ll place you close beside this wicked throne, Which I, his own upholsterer, have raised. [The conspirators, grouped around BAREBONE, grasp his hand in sign of fidelity.

OVERTON.
Good! Without mystery, now separate.

TOWN-CRIER AND TOWN-SERVANTS. God bless the English nation evermore!

PURITAN CONSPIRATORS (low). Death unto Cromwell! — [They go out.

RICHARD CROMWELL (to the Cavaliers who are about to go out).
It’s a stupid thing To be pursued by fasts at such a time. This is sure proof my father is not young. I wouldn’t pay a fast to get a throne.
[He goes out with the Cavaliers.

ACT II.

THE SPIES.

SCENE. — *Banquet hall at White-Hall. In the background one sees the casement through which Charles I. passed to his execution. On the right stands a large gothic arm-chair beside a table covered with a velvet cloth on which are still distinguishable the initials C. R. (Carol us Hex). The same letters, gilt on a blue ground, cover the walls, although they are half effaced. As the curtain rises, the stage is Jilted with numerous groups of courtiers in gala dress, which appear to be talking together in low tones. The ambassadors from Spain ami from France, with their Suites, are in front. The Spanish Ambassador is on the left, surrounded by pages, squires, court magistrates, alguazils; a herald of the council of Castile bears the chain of the order of the Golden Fleece on a black velvet cushion. The French .*Ambassador is on the right, surrounded by pages and noblemen. MANCINI stands near him; behind him stand two noblemen, one bearing on a cushion a magnificent sword, with a gold-wrought handle, the other bearing a letter, to which is suspended a great seal of red wax, also on a velvet cushion. The Spanish Ambassador wears the costume of a knight of the Golden Fleece; his Suite are dressed in black velvet and satin. The French Ambassador wears the costume of a knight of the Holy Ghost, his Suite displaying a great variety of costumes, uniforms, and liveries. Behind these two principal groups are groups of Swedish, Piedmontese, and Dutch Envoys, all remarkable for their divers costumes. In the back, a final group of English lords, among whom one distinguishes HANNIBAL SESTHEAD, a young Banish lord, by his suit of gold brocade, and by two pages who follow him. Two Puritan sentinels, with musket and halberd on their shoulders, walk up and down before a large gothic door in the back of the hall.

SCENE I.

DUKE DE CREQUI, ambassador from France, MANCINI, nephew to Cardinal Mazarini, and their Suites; DON LUIS DE CARDENAS, ambassador from Spain, and his Suite; FILIPPI, envoy from, Christina, and his Suite; three Deputies from Vaud; six Envoys from the Dutch Republic; HANNIBAL SKSTHEAD, cousin to the King of Denmark, and two pages; Lords and English noblemen; two sentinels.

DON Luis DE CAEDENAS (to one of his pages). What time is it?

THE PAGE (looking at a large watch which he carries at his side). ‘T is noon, my lord.

DON LUIS DE CARDENAS.
Then by St. James the elder, I have waited here Two hours. However great he be, I know ‘T is necessary for his fame to keep A proud Castilian chafing at his door; But by the virgin! he keeps me too long.

THE PAGE.
Most worthy master, while your Highness deigns To wait the pleasure of Don Cromwell here, He’s holding council —

DON LUIS DE CARDENAS (severely, with a side glance at CRÉQUI).
Peace! Who questioned you!

MANCINI (low to DUKE DE CRÉQUI). What an amusing thing, to see a Spaniard Begging the favour of a look from England. How pride and shame are struggling to possess His countenance.

DON LUIS DE CARDENAS (aside).
How will he take my message?

DUKE DE CRÉQUI (to MANCINL). What hall is this, in which we stand, my lord?

MANCINI.
We ‘re in the banquet-hall, your Grace; which serves As general court. Of slaughtered Charles one sees The monogram forgotten on the walls. To reach the scaffold, he passed out this way. ‘T was just one step out from his natal home; And now a regicide, sectarian —

[The great folding-door is thrown open.

AN USHER (announcing with very loud voice). The Lord Protector!
[All uncover, and bow with great respect. CROMWELL enters, his hat on his head.

SCENE II.

The same. CROMWELL, in simple military dress; a close buff coat, a broad cross-belt embroidered with his arms, to which hangs a long sword. WHITELOCKE, lord commissioner of the Seal, long black satin robe bordered with ermine, large wig. EARL OF CARLISLE, captain of the Lord Protector's Guards, dressed in his own particular uniform; STOUPE, secretary of State for foreign affairs. During all this scene THE EARL OF CARLISLE stands behind the Protector's arm-chair, holding his sword unsheathed; WHITELOCKE stands to the right; STOUPE to the left, with an open book in his hand. As CROMWELL enters, the assembly ranges itself in two rows and. remains with bowed head until the Protector has reached his seat.

CROMWELL (standing beside his arm-chair).
Peace and greeting to All well-disposed hearts. Since each of you Is sent as deputy to us, in name Of England's people we accord you welcome.
[He sits, removes his hat, then puts it on again. Duke de Créqui, speak!
[THE DUKE DE CREQUI, followed by MANCINI and his embassy, approach CROMWELL with the same salutations they would make to a king. The other people retire to the back of the hall, out of hearing distance.

DUKE DE CRÉQUI.
My Lord Protector, The alliance, of whose enduring loyalty His most Christian majesty hereby sends you Assurance, is drawn closer by new ties To-day. My Lord Mancini will read you The letter his illustrious uncle sends. [MANCINI approaches, kneels, presents the Cardinals letter upon the cushion. CROMWELL breaks the seal and returns it to MANCINI.

CROMWELL (to MANCINL). It is from Cardinal Mazarini. Read!

MANCINI (unfolds the letter and reads).

TO HIS HIGHNESS MY LORD PROTECTOR OF THE REPUBLIC OF ENGLAND.

MY LORD, — The glorious share which your Highness' troops performed in the present war between France and Spain, and the useful help which they are lending to my master's arms in the campaign of Flanders, redouble the gratitude which his Majesty feels for an ally as illustrious as yourself, and for one who so efficiently aids him in repressing the aggressiveness of the house of Austria.

It has therefore been the King's good pleasure to send the Duke de Crequi as ambassador extraordinary to your Court, charging him to acquaint your Highness with the fact that the strong city of Mardyke recently captured by our troops is placed at the disposition of the generals of the English Republic, awaiting the hour when Dunkirk, which still holds out, shall be surrendered to them, according to treaty. Monsieur the Duke de Crequi is moreover charged with the duty of begging your Highness to accept a gold sword, which the King of France sends you as a token of his esteem and his friendship. Monsieur de Mancini, my nephew, will make you acquainted with the contents of this letter, and will also place at your feet a small present which I venture to add in my own behalf to that of the King; it is a tapestry of the new royal manufactures, called the Gobelins. I trust that this expression of my devotion may prove agreeable to your Highness. If I were not ill at Calais, I should go to England myself in order to pay my respects to one of the greatest men who ever lived, the one whom I should have been most ambitious to serve after my king. Deprived of that honour and gratification, I send the nearest to me in blood, to convey to your Highness all the veneration I feel for your person and the assurance that it is my resolve to preserve an eternal friendship between you and my master.

I have the temerity to subscribe myself, with passion, the very obedient and very respectful servant of your Highness, GIUXIO MAZARINI, Cardinal of the Holy Roman Church.

[With a profound obeisance MANCINI hands the letter to CROMWELL, who passes it to STOUPE; upon a sign from THE DUKE DE CRIIQUI, the pages in royal livery place the cushion which bears the sword upon CEOMWELL'S table; and upon a sign from MANCINI, the pages in MAZARINI'S livery unroll a rich piece of Gobelin tapestry at the feet of the Protector.

CROMWELL (to DUKE and to MANCINI). For these rich presents which are now received, Pray give my thanks unto the Cardinal. Tell him England will be sister to France. [Low to WHITELOCKE.] This priest who flatters me on bended knee, Shouts forth, " Great man! " and whispers," Lucky fool!"
[Turning abruptly to the deputies from Vaud. What do you want?
[The men from Vaud advance respectfully.

ONE OF THE DEPUTIES.
With dire oppressed heart We come to ask assistance.

CROMWELL.
Who are you?

DEPUTY.
We 're deputies sent unto you from Vaud.

CROMWELL (with kindly tone).
Indeed!

DEPUTY.
Oppressive laws have laid upon Our lives a cruel yoke; we 're Calvinists, Our prince is Roman Catholic. Our cities Have been o'erwhelmed with fire and sword To force us to accept his faith. In grief Our country sends us here to beg for help.

CROMWELL (with indignation). Who dares oppress you thus?

DEPUTY.
Duke of Savoy!

CROMWELL (to DUKE DE CRÉQUI). Ambassador from France, do you hear this? Entreat your cardinal for love of us To help these people in their direful straits. This most high duke is in the hands of France. Force him to yield. ’Tis ‘gainst all law divine To persecute for faith. Besides, I like This Calvin. — [DUKE DE CRÉQUI bows.

MANCINI (low to DUKE). To write “ public tolerance “ He dipped his hand in holy Catholic blood!

CROMWELL (to the Swedish Envoy). Your name!
[Turning to the Deputies from Vaud, who are about to retire to the back of the hall.
Count on us always, men of Vaud.

ENVOY FROM SWEDEN (bowing). Filippi, and I come from Terracine. It is my privilege to place this gift Sent by my royal mistress, Queen Christina At your proud feet.
[He places a small casket, surrounded with rings of polished steel, before CROMWELL, and hands a letter to him which the Protector passes to STOUPE. [Low to CROMWELL.] This letter tells you why And by whose order Monaldeschi was Assassinated close to Fontainebleau.

CROMWELL. At last she has avenged herself, has she?

THE ENVOY (still with low voice). The Cardinal allowed my outraged queen To strike this man e’en in the heart of France.

CROMWELL (low to WHITELOCKE). To grant a hospitality to crime!

THE ENVOY (continuing). My queen, who from her throne exiles herself, Bess shelter near the Lord Protector.

CROMWELL (surprised and displeased).
Here?

Near me? I cannot give you answer now. In this land we’ve no palaces for queens.

DON LUIS DE CARDENAS (aside). But they will have to find one for a king.

CROMWELL (to FILIPPI, after a moment’s silence). Let her remain in France, for London air Is fatal to dethroned kings.
[Low to WHITELOCKE.] Bring here This royal courtesan, this woman without Morality, who will expose herself To every shaft of public hate!
[As he turns he observes the Envoy still standing beside him in the attitude of one waiting for something. With surprise.
What now?

FILIPPI (lowing and, indicating the casket). My task is not completed yet. The casket Has not been opened!

CROMWELL.
What does it enclose?

FILIPPI (bowing more ‘profoundly). Pray, deign to look, my lord!

CROMWELL.
Amazing thing!
What is the mystery?

FILIPPI (presenting a golden key). Here is the key, My lord.

CROMWELL. Give it to me.
[He takes the key. FILIPPI places the casket on the table; CROMWELL prepares to open it; WHITELOCKE stops him.

WHITELOCKE (low to CROMWELL).
Beware, my lord. More than one traitor by his master sent To work the ruin of a mighty man Has brought him poison or destroying fire In just such golden coffers as this is. Discovery kills the victim. Have a care; You’ve enemies. This man is marked with crime. Beware of him. That casket may contain Some artifice which threatens you with death.

CROMWELL (low to WHITELOCKE). You think so? It may be. Well, open it Yourself.

WHITELOCKE (stammering with fright). I am devoted to your service — [Aside] Heavens!

CROMWELL (with a smile).
I know it, and make use of it. [Aside.] I'll test it now! — [Giving him the key.

WHITELOCKE (aside).
What courage it requires To be a courtier! Cruel circumstance! To have to choose between disgrace and death. Disgrace is but another name for death.
[He approaches the casket and with trembling hand places the key in the lock. Let us die gracefully!
[He opens the casket with the extreme carefulness of one who expects a violent explosion, casting a terrified look within, he exclaims:
A crown!
[The Swedish Envoy assumes a radiant look.

CROMWELL (astonished).
A crown?

WHITELOCKE (drawing a royal crown out of the box and placing it on the table. Aside). Another sort of trap!

CROMWELL (frowning).
What does this mean?

FILIPPI (bowing with satisfaction).
My sire!

CROMWELL (indicating the crown). Is it good gold?

FILIPPI (hurt).
You doubt it, sire?

CROMWELL (aloud to WHITELOCKE). Good! Have it melted. I'll present it to The hospitals of London.
[To FILIPPI, stupefied.] Nothing better Can I do with jewels, — royal play things! For these women's trinkets, I have no use.

DON LUIS DE CARDENAS (aside). Intends he to remain Protector, then?

MANCINI (low to DUKE DE CREQUI). He might have sent her back a royal head In fair exchange.

DUKE DE CREQUI (low to MANCINL). So bold a present would Most fittingly unite a queen assassin Unto a vassal regicide.

CROMWELL (dismissing FILIPPI with a gesture of displeasure). Farewell, My Swedish lord, native of Terracine!
[Low to WHITELOCKE.] Filippi and Mancini! What strong chains Have always bound Italians to intrigue! These bastard sons of ancient Rome, who know Not law nor honour, are degraded heirs Of the great masters of the earth, who bore Aloft the battle sceptre. This strange race Still rules the earth, but 't is from underneath.
Rome governs Europe, just as then she did;
But now the lynx creeps where the eagle soared.
The chain which fettered twenty different lands Is worn into a thread invisible, Which jerks and pulls vile jumping-jacks.
Oh, dwarffed progeny of giants, foxes Conceived of wolves, you 're known o'er the broad earth By your smooth tongues, — Filippi, Mazarini, Torti, Mancini. When the devil makes A visit to this earth, I 'm very sure He chooses names that end in i.
[After a moment of silence, to the Flemish Envoys.
What wait You for? The truce is at an end.

CHIEF OF THE DUTCH ENVOYS. States general of the United Provinces, Free people, Protestants like you, ask peace.

CROMWELL (roughly). It is too late. Moreover, Parliament Finds you too worldly in your politics, And will not sign fraternal treaties with Allies so vain and carnal-minded.
[.He makes a gesture and the Flemish Envoys retire; then he appears to perceive for the first time DON LUIS, who until this moment has been making ceaseless efforts to attract his attention.
Ah, My lord ambassador from Spain, good-day! We did not see you.

DON LUIS DE CARDENAS (concealing his mortification with a profound obeisance).
God be with your Highness! We come, for lofty interests of state, To beg of you a private interview. We are divided by the Flemish war, But you will find our king can treat with you. He feels for you a most profound esteem, In sign of which he sends the Golden Fleece.
[The pages bearing the Golden Fleece approach.

CROMWELL (rising with indignation). What words are these which you dare speak to me, The chief of England's old republicans? That I should desecrate this contrite heart With such a Pagan symbol of earth's lust? Upon the breast of one who conquered Sodom You would fasten a Grecian idol and Rome's rosary? Away, abominations, — Base vanities and pomps! Balthasar and Cromwell are not allies!

DON LUIS DE CARDENAS (aside).
The heretic!
[Aloud.] The Catholic king was first to welcome you As chief of the Republic.

CROMWELL (interrupting him).
Did he think By recognizing Cromwell's strength, to change A tower of Zion to a sepulchre? The Golden Fleece to me? Idolaters! I'll leave to them their temple-theatres, Their puppet-priests. In grim hell let them seek Their gods and their salvation. Hell-fire keep Their Golden Fleece as well as golden calf.
[He pauses a moment, easting a haughty glance over the entire Spanish Embassy, after which he continues warmly:
But I? Am I to be affronted thus?

Does this great brother save his envoy from My wrath? How does your master dare insult Me to my face by his ambassador!
‘T would be a great mischance for him. Now go;
You are dismissed.

DON LUIS DE CARDENAS (furiously).
Farewell! Then it is war! War to eternity! — [He goes out with his Suite.

MANCINI (low to DUKE DE CRÉQUI). Spain rubbed him wrong.

DUKE DE CRÉQUI (aside, looking at the Golden Fleece, which the pages are bearing away). That insult I sued humbly for!

CROMWELL (low to STOUPE).
Since France Was here, I had to break with Spain, in public. Go, follow Cardenas, appease him, try To learn what are the plans which brought him here. [STOURE exits. The great folding-doors are opened and an Usher appears.

USHER.
My lady Protectress!

CROMWELL (aside).
It is my wife! [Dismissing those present by a gesture.
Farewell, Sir Duke and gentlemen.
[All make profound obeisances and go out through a side door. THE EARL OF CARLISLE and WHITELOCKE. re-conduct the Ambassador of France with great ceremony. While they are going out, ELIZABETH BOURCHIER, wife of CROMWELL enters, accompanied by MISTRESS FLEETWOOD, LADY FALCOXBRIDGE, LADY CLEYPOLE, and LADY FRANCES, her daughters. They make deep courtesies to their father.

SCENE III.

CROMWELL. ELIZABETH BOURCHIER, MISTRESS FLEETWOOD, both in black, the latter affecting a Puritan simplicity; LADY FALCONBRIDGE, dressed with great elegance and richness; LADY CLEYPOLE wrapped up like a sick person — a very languid manner; LADY FRANCES, a very young girl, in white, with a veil.

CROMWELL (to the Protectress).
Good-day.
You are not looking well. Did you sleep ill?

ELIZABETH BOURCHIER. I did not close an eyelid until dawn. ‘T is certain I am not a friend to fasts. The queen’s room, where I sleep, is much too large; That bed with crests of Stuarts and of Tudors, Its canopy of silver, posts of gold, Tall plumes, and that high railing which shuts me A prisoner within my royal cell, The velvet furniture, the golden vases, —
They are horrible dreams which kill my sleep. Besides, to know this palace is an art. I never shall learn how to walk about; I’m always lost, here in this grand White-Hall, And in a royal chair I can’t sit well.

CROMWELL. Your fortune is a burden hard to bear! Each day a new complaint.

ELIZABETH.
It wearies you, — I know it; but it’s true. I’d rather be In our old house at Cock-Pit than live here. [To MISTRESS FLBETWOOD.] Ten thousand times we would prefer our home At Huntingdon, my daughter, would we not? [To CROMWELL.] Those happy days! To get up with the sun, Then go into the orchard or the park, To let the children play out in the fields; And you and I go to the brewery.

CROMWELL.
Hush!

ELIZABETH. Happy days when Cromwell was no one When I was comfortable and slept well.

CROMWELL. Forget those common tastes.

ELIZABETH.
No; they are mine! My infancy prepared me not for this;
Grandeur and I are not congenial friends, And your long trains are troublesome. At the Lord Mayor’s banquet yesterday, I wept. What pleasure to eat dinner with all London? You looked unhappy too, my friend. Alas! We used to sup so gaily at Cock-Pit.

CROMWELL.
My present rank —

ELIZABETH. Think of your mother. How this strange, gloomy grandeur troubled her; Those thoughts, not years, laid her within her grave. Counting the perils which surrounded you, While you climbed up, her heart measured your fall Each time that you had gained new victories And London celebrated your success, If to her deadened ear the wild sounds came, The cannon, bells, the march of soldiery, The people shouting in their mad delight, She would jump up and lift her anxious head, And turn to horror all the sounds of joy By shrieking, “ Mercy, God! My son is dead!”

CROMWELL.
She sleeps within the tomb of kings to-day.

ELIZABETH.
Great satisfaction! Sleeps one better there? Knows she if you will ever reach her side? God grant it may be long ere then!

LADY CLEYPOLE (with feeble voice).
‘T is I
Who will precede you there, my father.

CROMWELL (to LADY CLEYPOLE).
Always These thoughts of death, and always ill.

LADY CLEYPOLE.
Yes, father.

The strength I had is almost gone I need the air and sunshine of the fields. This gloomy palace is a grave to me. Through these long corridors and the vast halls The chill of misery appals my soul. I’ll soon die here.

CROMWELL (kissing her forehead).
Ah, no, my child, not that! Soon we will find your pleasant fields for you. Just wait a short time longer for me here.

MISTRESS FLEETWOOD (sharply). Time to complete your plans and gain your throne. That is your purpose! Frankly, is it not? Fleetwood, my husband, will prevent it though.

CROMWELL.
My son-in-law?

MISTRESS FLEETWOOD. He wants no crooked lines. In a republic he will have no king. And I agree with him upon that point.

CROMWELL.
My daughter, too.

LADY FALCONBRIDGE (to MISTRESS FLEETWOOD). A curious thing to say! Is not our father free? His throne is ours!
Why not become a king, if’t is his will. And why deny us the extreme delight Of royal highness and princess of blood.

MISTRESS FLEETWOOD. Such vanities do not appeal to me! My heart is fixed on saving of lost souls.

LADY FALCONBRIDGE. I love the Court, and see no reason why, Since I’ve a lord for husband, I can’t have A father for a king.

MISTRESS FLEETWOOD. Eve’s pride, my sister, Destroyed the first man.

LADY FALCONBRIDGE (turning away with scorn).
‘T is easy seen Her husband is no lord!

CROMWELL (vexed).
Be silent. Hush! For both of you, it would be sensible To copy your young sister's gentleness. [To FRANCES, who stands absorbed, with her eyes fixed on the casement of Charles I. What are you thinking of, my child?

LADY FRANCES.
Ah, me!
My heart grows heavy in this sacred place. Your sister, in whose care I've always lived, Taught me respect for — the unfortunate. And ever since I've lived within these walls, I've felt sad shadows passing close by me.

CROMWELL
What shadows, child?

LADY FRANCES. Our Stuarts!

CROMWELL (aside).
Ah, that name, No matter where I go, reaches my heart.

LADY FRANCES. 'T was here the martyr died.

CROMWELL.
Alas! my child.

LADY FRANCES (indicating the casement at the back). That is the window, father, is it not, Through which the king, whom England had disowned, Passed, when he left White-Hall for the last time?

CROMWELL (aside). My innocent young daughter, how you hurt Your father ' — [Enter THURLOE.]
Thurloe comes!

SCENE IV.

The same. THURLOE, bearing a portfolio marked with the arms of the Protector; Puritan costume.

THURLOE (bowing).
‘T is pressing work, My lord.

CROMWELL (to his wife). Your ladyship will pardon me? Your Highness, I would be alone.

ELIZABETH. Speak you?

CROMWELL. Unto your Highness!

ELIZABETH.
Oh’ to me? I must entreat your pardon. In this grandeur My poor self is obliterated. Yes, I’m lost in all this turmoil; much I fear These borrowed titles and my simple name Will never mix. My lady Protectress Will never find a friend in Mistress Cromwell. [SHE goes out with her daughters; CROMWELL signs to the two Musketeers on duty to retire.

SCENE V.

CROMWELL, THURLOE. While THURLOE spreads the papers out on the table, CROMWELL appears to be absorbed in a sad reverie; at last he breaks the silence with a great effort.

CROMWELL.
I am not happy, Thurloe!

THURLOE.
These ladies To whom Adore your Highness.

CROMWELL. But five women — five! I’d rather rule by absolute decree Five cities, counties, — nay, five kingdoms more.

THURLOE.
What! You who govern England, Europe too?

CROMWELL.
Mate a good house-wife with a master-mind! I am a slave, my friend.

THURLOE.
You might, my lord — CROMWELL.
No! Of my fate the equilibrium’s spoiled. Europe is on one side; upon the other Is my wife.

THURLOE. If I could change my place For yours, a wife —

CROMWELL (severely).
You are extremely bold To have such thoughts.

THURLOE (terrified).
My lord, believe me, I —

CROMWELL.
Enough; dismiss the subject! Come, what news?
[He sits in the arm-chair.

THURLOE (taking up the papers). From Scotland: the grand Provost will surrender. The entire North submits to the Protector.

CROMWELL.
Well

THURLOE.
From Flanders: Spaniards now are ready To capitulate. Dunkirk ere long will be Delivered to the Lord Protector.

CROMWELL.
Well!

THURLOE.

From London: twelve flat boats are lying in The Thames; they ‘re loaded with the millions which Blake won from Portuguese on three galleons.

CROMWELL.
Go on!

THURLOE.
The Duke of Holstein begs acceptance Of eight horses from Fresland, grey.

CROMWELL.
Go on!

THURLOE.
To show that if he welcomed Rupert, he repents, His Grace, the Duke of Tuscany, whom Blake Has seen, gives you the pay for twenty mules In golden sequins.

CROMWELL. Well!

THURLOE (taking up another parchment, to which a seal hangs by a green silk thread).
The clerks of Oxford, Your rivals, have named you for Chancellor Of University.
[.Presenting a parchment to the Protector. Here’s the diploma.

CROMWELL
Well!

THURLOE (searching among the papers). The Russian Emperor implores A public sign of your good-will.

CROMWELL.
Go on!

THURLOE (holding a letter with an anxious manner). My lord, I am informed by secret means, There is a plot to murder you to-morrow.

CROMWELL.
Well!

THURLOE. Concerned in the conspiracy Are military chiefs and Cavaliers.

CROMWELL (interrupting him with impatience). Go on!

THURLOE.
Do you not wish to know the details Of their plans?

CROMWELL. No, it is some fable. What Remains?

THURLOE (continuing). The marshal of the Polish diets —

CROMWELL (interrupting him again). Indeed! No letters from Cologne?

THURLOE (seeking among the dispatches).
Yes, one.

CROMWELL.
From whom?

THURLOE.
Your agent, Manning, who's near Charles. CROMWELL.
Give it to me.
[Takes the letter and breaks the seal hastily. The fifth. How slow they are! It takes these letters twenty days.
[Reads, and exclaims while reading. Ah, ha!
Sir Davenant, the fraud was delicate. At night, the lights extinguished; how could one More honourably break one's word? It takes A Papist for that sort of thing! What's this? A royal message hidden in his hat! A wise precaution, but I 'm curious. Tell Mr. Davenant I wish to see him. He's lodging at The Siren, London Bridge.
[THURLOE goes out to execute the order. We'll see which one his artifice will wreck. Malevolents! The darkness where you plot, And which you think so safe, is lighted by My torch, which nothing can extinguish.

[THURLOE re-enters. [To THURLOE.] Well, What did the Spanish envoy say?

THURLOE.
He offers Calais, if you will help him at Dunkirk.

CROMWELL (reflecting). Spain offers Calais, France gives me Dunkirk. What lessens much the value of their gift Is that Dunkirk belongs to Spain, and Calais Is part of France. Each king most royally Gives me a city in his foe's domains; And that I may appreciate the gift, Gives me the chance of winning it myself. With France's king we must remain at peace. Wherefore betray? The other offers less.

THURLOE (continuing his report).
The Protestants of Nismes implore your help, As lately did the deputies from Yaud.

CROMWELL.
We'll write the cardinal-minister for them. When will this Mazarin be tolerant?

THURLOE (continuing). The Catholic town of Armagh has been seized By Devereux \ the chaplain Peters sends This letter, evangelic, on the victory. He writes, " Jehovah this day showed himself Most friendly to the arms of Israel. Armagh is taken; with the sword and fire We have exterminated old and young; Two thousand at the least are dead, and blood Flows everywhere. I've come from church, where I Gave thanks to God."

CROMWELL (with enthusiasm).
Peters is a great saint.

THURLOE.
Shall those remaining of this race be spared?

CROMWELL.
Wherefore? No mercy to the Papists! No! Among this hateful people let us be A burning torch within a field of wheat.

THURLOE (bowing).
It is decreed.

CROMWELL. There is a pulpit vacant In Armagh. Peters shall fill it, for his words Are eloquent.

THURLOE (bows again, continuing his report). The Emperor wants to know Wherefore you keep new armaments afloat, Which are so well equipped?

CROMWELL (sharply).
Bid him attend To festivals and leave warfare to me. He has his auld council and an eagle With double head. What does he want of me? To frighten me perhaps! Good Emperor, Because he carries round on gala days A painted globe of wood and says it is The world? His thunder's always rumbling, but It never strikes. — [He signs to THURLOE to continue.

THURLOE. From Colonel Titus, who Was seized for libel.

CROMWELL. Yes; what does he want?

THUELOE.
He wants his liberty; for nine long months he's lain Forgotten on his prison bed of straw.

CROMWELL.
Nine months! That is impossible.

THUELOE.
They seized Him in October, we are now in June. Count it yourself, my lord!

CROMWELL (counting on his hand).
Yes, you are right.

THUELOE.

In direst want the wretched man has lived, Alone, naked and frozen, all this time.

CROMWELL.
Nine months! How fast time flies! — [A silence.
What is the mind Of Parliament’s secret committee on The present project?

THUELOE.
Nicholas, Goffe, Pride, Purefoy, and Garland above all have spoken Against you.

CROMWELL (angrily). Yes, Garland the regicide.

THURLOE.
But they have fought their bitter fight in vain. Majority of votes are ours; and Pembroke, That ancient peer who trims to every wind, Declares the crown belongs to you.

CROMWELL (with contempt).
Dull man

THURLOE.
There’s only one, John Birch, who hesitates; Although he leans to the majority, Some Bible scruple holds him back, and keeps The matter still unsettled.

CROMWELL.
Something’s due Him at the Excise Office; speedy payment Will relieve his mind, — above all, if The clerk should make an error in his favour. But as for you, speak more respectfully, I beg you, of the holy Bible.

THURLOE (after lowing humbly). Fagg Says your ambition moves him to oppose you.

CROMWELL. I will make him sergeant of the city.

THURLOE.

And Trenchard is discontented too.

CROMWELL.
A tithe Of the estates of Montrose shall be his.

THURLOE.
Sir Gilbert Pickering, whom all can buy, Is obstinate.

CROMWELL. Make him Lord of Exchequer.

THUELOE.
Leave the rest unto me. I will attend To all. To-day you will be humbly begged, In name of Parliament, to wear the crown.

CROMWELL. At last, elusive sceptre, you are mine! I've climbed the mountain huge of shifting sands; My feet are on the top.

THUELOE.
You've reigned already Many years.

CROMWELL. I have had authority, But I've not had the name. You smile, Thurloe; But you don't know the cavern which ambition Digs in the depths of human hearts, nor how She goads us on through grief and work and peril Unto an end which seems a petty thing. It's hard to leave one's fortune incomplete. Then there's a lustre, which no eye resists, About a king; since ancient days the words King, majesty, have been magicians. How Can one be arbiter of earth and not Be king? The thing without the name! The power Without the title! Empty show! Trust me, Rank and dominion travel hand-in-hand. You cannot understand the rankling hurt Of climbing from the gutter to the top To there find something which eludes the grasp. Though but one word, that word is everything. [Here, CROMWELL, who has forgotten himself so far as to lean his elbow familiarly on THURLOE'S shoulder, suddenly turns around, as if awakening from a dream, to see a door concealed by tapestry, slowly opened; MANASSES-BEN-ISRAEL appears and pauses upon the threshold, casting a scrutinizing look around the room, then bows profoundly.

SCENE VI.

CROMWELL; THURLOE; MANASSES-BEN-ISRAEL, old Jewish rabbi, grey, ragged robes, hump-backed, keen eye under long grey eyebrows, broad and wrinkled forehead, twisted beard.

MANASSES (bowing profoundly).
God keep you, my good master, to the end.

CROMWELL.
It is the Jew Manasses.
[To THURLOE.] Finish your Dispatches, Thurloe.
[THURLOE sits at the large table. CROMWELL goes near to the Rabbi and speaks in a low voice.
What brings you?

MANASSES (low).
Fresh news!
A Swedish vessel filled with caroluses Sent to the friends of ancient exiled kings Is anchored at this moment in the Thames.

CROMWELL. The flag is neutral. If you can contrive To let me confiscate it skilfully, One half the booty shall belong to you.

MANASSES.
In truth? Then is the vessel yours, my lord. Give me the help of a strong hand, if needed.

CROMWELL (writes a few words on a paper, which he hands to the Jew).
Here is your talisman, my sorcerer; Make haste! Come back and tell me the effect

MANASSES. Another word, my lord!

CROMWELL. Go on!

MANASSES.
I ought To tell you your son Richard is conspiring With the Cavaliers

CROMWELL.
My son! Richard!

MANASSES.
He has Paid Clifford’s debts; that is sufficient proof.

CROMWELL (laughing). Your strong-box tells you tales of every one. My son is foolish; he makes thoughtless friends; That’s all.

MANASSES. To pay, and never count pistoles;
‘T is serious.

CROMWELL (shrugging his shoulders). Go, now!

MANASSES.
In mercy, sire, Since in my humble way I’ve served you well, For recompense, open our synagogues, Revoke the law against astrologers —

CROMWELL (dismissing him with a gesture). We’ll see!

MANASSES (bowing to the earth). We humbly kiss your feet.
[Aside.] Vile Christians

CROMWELL.
Depart in peace!
[Aside] Base Jew, fit to string up Between two dogs!
[MANASSES goes out by the small door, which closes after him.

SCENE VII.

CROMWELL, THURLOE.

THURLOE. Will not your Highness trust Me now? This foreign ship, this money which It brings to malcontents, the Jew’s strange news, — Is not all this in keeping with my words? Will you not see?

CROMWELL. See what?

THURLOE.
These wicked plots, Of which a friendly warning gives me clew. I tremble at the little which we know.

CROMWELL. If every time such news had come to me, I’d racked my brains about it, spent my time In ferreting the mystery, my days, My nights, my life, would not have half sufficed!

THURLOE.
This case seems threatening, my lord.

CROMWELL.
For shame!
Blush, Thurloe, at your foolish fright. I know Full many think my yoke is tyrannous, And certain generals will be loath to see In their equal to-day their future king. But friend, the army’s mine! As to the gold This Jew discovered, ‘t is a present sent By Charles, and is most welcome at this hour, When we need much a coronation fund. Be easy! Think of all the false alarms Which have tormented our poor brains. These plots Are but the tricks of jealous malcontents, Whose power’s reduced to making fun of us.
[Noise of footsteps. CROMWELL looks out through a side gallery.
The courtiers come, shining with festive looks. I’m going out. I’ll leave you here to cope With them.
[He goes out through the small door.

SCENE VIII.

THURLOE, WHITELOCKE; WALLER, poet of the day; SERGEANT MAYNARD, in his robes; COLONEL JEPHSON, in uniform; COLONEL GRACE, in uniform; SIR WILLIAM MURRAY, ancient court dress; MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL, formerly Speaker of Parliament; LORD BROGHILL, in court dress; CARR. CARR arrives the last, and pauses in the background, casting a scandalized glance around; the others talk without perceiving him.

WHITELOCKE (to THURLOE).
His Highness is away?

THURLOE.
He is.

MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL (to THURLOE).
I wanted to remind him of my rights.

SERGEANT MAYNARD (to THURLOE). I came for something most important.

COLONEL JEPHSON (to THURLOE).
Weighty Affairs have brought me here!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (to THURLOE).
This petition which I here present his lordship begs an office In his future court.

WALLER (to THURLOE).
It has been long my rule Not to molest his Highness, but — [They speak with great rapidity and all together; THURLOE tries in vain to make himself heard and to free himself from their importunities.

CARR (in a loud voice, his eyes raised to the ceiling).
Behold The new made Sodom!

What strange animal [All turn with surprise and fix their eyes upon CARR, who stands motionless, his arms folded across his breast.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
Is this?

CARR (solemnly). It is a man. I realize His face is unfamiliar in this den, Which Baal lords with his vile countenance. Here Pagans, actors, drunkards, wolves, and hawks, Winged serpents, dragons with a thousand heads Blasphemers, vultures, basilisks abound!

WALLER (laughing). If you mean these to be our portraits, thanks, Sir man!

CARR (becoming animated). You boon-companions of the devil, Ashes are hidden in the apple — eat! Dead are the people; curse of Israel, Devour their flesh, — flesh of the saints elect; Flesh of the strong, the warriors of the lord; Flesh of the steeds!

WALLER (laughing more heartily). It is no vulgar meal. We are o’erwhelmed with honour to be told That we are basilisks and eat horse-flesh.
[General laugh among the courtiers.

CARR (furious).
Laugh, hellish lips!

WALLER (ironically).
Politeness is so pleasant!

ALL.
Put him outside!

MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL (going up to CARR and trying to lead him out). Good fellow, if his Highness — [They all try to get him out; CARR resists.

CARR.
If he should come, I would not have to go. You would!

WHITELOCKE. He is a saint.

WALLER.
He is a fool.

CARR.
You all are drunk, — drunk with vain pride and sin, Drunk with the dregs of wine; and it is you Who call my wisdom folly!

LORD BROGHILL.
His Highness Will soon appear.

CARR. It is for him I wait.

LORD BROGHILL. Wherefore, in Heaven's name?

CARR.
I have some words To tell this Ichabod who's called " Highness."

LORD BROGHILL. You'd better leave your message, sir, with me; I will deliver it. My power at Court — I'm Lord Broghill.

CARR (Utterly). How Oliver is changed! An old republican's a blot upon His retinue. Broghill, a Cavalier, Protects me at his court.

THURLOE (who has watched CARR with attention, aside).
I know this man; His words lack sense, but though he seems a fool I think the Tower of London more than Bedlam Is his affair. I'll find his Highness. — [He goes out.

SCENE IX.

The same, except THURLOE.

LORD BROGHILL (with protecting manner to CARR).
Yes, I'll answer for you, friend, but how — CARR (with a sad smile).
At Zion, 'T was thus the devil bribed the Son of Man.

WHITELOCKE.
He is unmanageable.

WALLER. Yes, past cure.

ALL.
Well, never mind. Let's put him out. [They advance again toward CARR, who looks at them firmly.

CARR.
Go back!
I tell you, I must speak to him, this man, This Judas Maccabaeus who became Judas Iscariot.

LORD BROGHILL. You fool!

WALLER.
That is A clever phrase to indicate Cromwell.

CARR.
Ere Heaven's fire consumes this Sodom, I, An angel, have been sent to exhort Lot.

WALLER (laughing). You dare to say God's angels are as sheared As you!

COLONEL JEPHSON (laughing). I'm glad to see you are promoted, friend; From man you've climbed to angel.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (to CARE, pushing him).
Come, sir, come; You can't annoy his Highness with your visions. [To the others.] He will distract him from our own affairs.

[Rudely to CARR.
Come, now, get out!

COLONEL JEPHSON. Go out!

SERGEANT MAYNART).
Out, sir!

ALL.
Come, come;
Move on!

CARR (gravely). Cease troubling me with words like these.

SERGEANT MAYNARD. His lordship will command you to the Tower.
[CARR looks at him and shrugs his shoulders.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (indicating CARE'S Puritan costume). Wear you a costume which befits the Court?

MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL. His lordship would demean himself to talk To you.

ALL.
Go out!
[They throw themselves upon CARR and try to drag him out.

CARR (struggling, with loud lamentation). God of our warriors! O Sabbath, cast down thine eyes on me!

ALL (pushing him)
Go out!

CARR (continuing his invocations and lifting his eyes to heaven). I struggle with Leviathan In thy behalf.
[CROMWELL enters, accompanied by THURLOE: all pause, uncover, and bow to the earth. CARR replaces his hat, which fell off in the struggle, and re-assumes his austere and ecstatic attitude.

CROMWELL (looking at CARR with surprise). 'T is Carr, the independent. [To the others with a disdainful gesture. Retire at once! [Aside.] Oh, mystery! [They are all amazed, and go out after making profound obeisances. CARR remains motionless.

WALLER (low to MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL, indicating CARR).
He said It would be so. We'll leave Lot with the angel.

SCENE X.

CARR, CROMWELL. CROMWELL, alone with CARR, looks at him for some time in silence, with a severe and, threatening expression. CARR, calm and fearless, with his arms folded across his chest, looks the Protector full in the eyes, without flinching. At last CROMWELL speaks haughtily.

CROMWELL. Long Parliament put you in prison; what Has brought you out?

CARR.
Treason has brought me out.

CROMWELL (astounded and alarmed). What do you say?
[.Aside.] No doubt his mind is gone.

CARR (dreamily).
I grieved the high assembly of the saints. Now we are all proscribed beneath thy law. I, culpable, by them: they, innocent, By you.

CROMWELL. Since you approve your punishment, Who broke your chains?

CARR (shrugging his shoulders).

I tell you, treachery! They dragged me, blinded, to another crime; I saw the trap in time.

CROMWELL. What trap?

CARR.
Baal Is born again.

CROMWELL. Explain!

CARR (seats himself in an arm-chair).
Attend me well:
A dark plot is afoot.
[To CROMWELL, who has remained standing and uncovered. Put on your hat:
[Pointing to THURLOE'S stool.
Sit down.
[CROMWELL hesitates a moment with vexation, then covers his head and sits on the stool.
Above all, do not interrupt.

CROMWELL (aside). These airs, my friend, would cost you dear enough, At any other time.

CARR (with solemn gentleness). Although Cromwell Keeps no account of crimes, although he feels For scores of victims no pang of remorse, Though ceaselessly he joins, in these dark days, Hypocrisy to schism, ruse to rage —

CROMWELL (indignantly, rising).
Sir —

CARR.
You are interrupting s [CROMWELL re-seats himself with an air of enforced resignation; CARR continues.
Yes, although He lives with Moabites in Egypt-land, With Babylonians, Pagans, Arians;

Though he does all for self, for Israel naught;
Though he repels the saints, and gives himself To Amalekites, to Ammonites, to Edomites;
Although he worships Dagon, Astaroth, And Elim; though the ancient serpent be His dearest friend; although defying God He boldly trod on people's rights, dispersed The Parliament which Zion had evoked, And to Christ's brethren shouted " Bacca!" No, In spite of all these crimes I cannot think He has so hard a heart or black a soul, Is so far lost from grace, that he'll refuse To openly avow in Israel's sight That for this English nation, bleeding, torn, Upon Job's dung-hill dragging out its sores, The greatest blessing it could ask of fate, The noblest joy it e'er could hope to feel, Would be your death, Cromwell!

CROMWELL (starting back).
My death, you say?

CARR (with great gentleness). You interrupt me all the time. Come, come! The incense of a corrupt world drugs you! Judge not all things by selfish interest. Let's argue without anger. A great good, A wondrous benefit your death would be; Admit it.

CROMWELL (with rapidly increasing anger). What temerity!

CARR (imperturbably). I am So well convinced of it myself, that in This aim I always carry underneath My cloak this dagger, waiting for your time To come.
[He draws a long dagger from his breast and presents it to the Protector.

CROMWELL (starting back with horror). A dagger! An assassin! Ho!
What ho!
[To CARR.] At least, good Carr —
[Aside.] Thank God! I wear A stout cuirass.

CARR (replacing the dagger under his coat).
Fear nothing. Do not call.

CROMWELL (terrified).

Hell-fire’

CARR.
The man who kills a tyrant does Not show his knife; your hour is not yet come. Be easy: I have come to save your head From vengeful daggers much less pure than mine.

CROMWELL (aside). What is he driving at?

CARR.
Sit down again. Your life’s more sacred at this hour to me Than is the flesh of swine to thirsty hind, Than were the bones of Jonah to the whale, Whose gaping jaws preserved him from the flood. [CROMWELL returns and seats himself, casting a look of deep defiance and curiosity at CARR.

CROMWELL (aside). The shortest way will be to let him talk.

CARR.
Conspiracy assails you! Understand, If you alone were to be sacrificed I would not waste my breath in warning you;
I hope you do me greater justice still, And feel I would assist the saints with pride.
But Israel is what I want to save.
And if you must be saved as well, Amen!

CROMWELL.
Is this plot earnest? Know you where they meet?

CARR.
I come from them.

CROMWELL. Who freed you from the Tower?

CARR.
Prepare to tremble; ‘t was Barkstead.

CROMWELL.

The traitor! And yet he signed the sentence of the King.

CARR.
The hope of pardon won him back.

CROMWELL.
‘T is to Restore the Stuarts?

CARR.
When I went at dawn To meet these people, I confess I hoped Deliverance to Israel meant death To you.

CROMWELL.
Thanks!

CARR.
‘T would give back to Parliament The power your despotism had destroyed. But hardly there, I saw a Philistine, In velvet doublet slashed with satin. Three There were of these. The chief of the cabal Sang quatrains to me, briefs and bulls.

CROMWELL.
Sang quatrains

CARR.
Yes, a new name for Pagan psalms. Soon came The saints and pious citizens; but they, bewitched By all this heathen glamour, smiling looked Upon the demons, who with angels moved. The demons cried, “ Death unto Cromwell!” loud, And in low tones said, “ Profit by their wars; Gomorrah shall give place to Babylon, The roofs of sycamore to cedar wood, Bricks unto stones; Dor shall succeed to Tyre, The yoke follow the bit; to brazen rod Succeed the iron sceptre.

CROMWELL.
Charles the Second After Cromwell — eh, friend?

CARR. It is their dream. But Jacob will not let them kill his ox With his own axe unless he gets his share! He’ll not have Cromwell slaughtered for the Stuarts. No! However bad you are, you ‘re not so bad As is this Herod, royal debauchee, ‘ This parasital mistletoe torn from Our ancient oak! Frustrate, therefore, their plot, Which I reveal to you.

CROMWELL (striking him on the shoulder).
I’m grateful, friend!
Your words are timely.
[Aside.] Thurloe was not wrong. [To CABE, with caressing tone.] The factions of the King and Parliament Are leagued against me: name the Royalists.

CAEE.
Think you I kept account of them? I care For these accursed Satans just as much As for the straw I slept on seven years However, I remember Ormond’s name, And Rochester’s.

CROMWELL (seizing eagerly a paper and pen).
You ‘re sure? In London! They! [To CARR.] Please make another effort. [He places himself opposite to CARR and interrogates him with look and gesture.

CARR (slowly and after much reflection).
Sedley.

CROMWELL (writing).
Good

CARR.
Lord Drogheda, and Clifford. Roseberry — CROMWELL (writing).
The libertines!
[.Approaching CARR with increased gentleness and friendliness.
What popular chiefs were there?

CARR (starting back indignantly). No more! Think you I would deliver up Our saints, the sinews of our heart? Not if You offered me ten thousand golden shekels, As to the Witch of Endor did King Saul; Not if you commanded eunuchs to essay The sharpness of their swords upon my neck; No, not if you should place me for refusing Like Daniel in the lion's den; not if You should kindle a fire bituminous Ten times more ardent than has ever glowed, And I, like Ananias, should behold The lurid flames rise, tower-like, around, Gilding the inundated homes of vice, And over-topping scaffolds to the height Of cubits, thirty-nine —

CROMWELL.
Pray, calm yourself.

CARR.
No, never! should you give the plains of Thebes, And those near by, the Tigris, Lebanon, Tyre with the golden gates, Ecbatana Built of well squared stones, a thousand oxen, Lemons from the Egyptian Nile, a throne, The magic art which makes fire leap from floods, And with one call brings from the ends of earth Across the open sky and its blue seas The fly from Egypt and the Assur bee! Not if you made me colonel of the army!

CROMWELL (aside). A fatal thing, to open mouths long shut. Oh, try it not!
[To CARR, extending his hand.] Carr, we have long been friends.
God placed us like two mile-stones in his field.

CARR.
You, for a mile-stone have moved fast.

CROMWELL.
To-day, You've saved me from a danger imminent. I'll not forget it. Cromwell's rescuer!

CARR (abruptly). Do not insult me; I saved Israel.

CROMWELL (aside). Sectarian arrogant, I'll deal with you! On my heights must I kiss the hand which wounds? [Very humbly, to CARR.] What am I? But a worm upon the earth.

CARR.
Yes, we agree on that. In sight of God You ‘re nothing but a worm, like Attila. For us, you are a serpent, since you wish The crown.

CROMWELL (with tears in his eyes). How you misjudge me! Pity me. This purple decks an ulcerated heart.

CARR (laughing bitterly).
O — God of Jacob, hear this Nimrod wail!

CROMWELL (with an air of great grief).
I — I — merit condemnation from the saints.

CARR.
Fear not; through your own flesh you will atone.

CROMWELL (surprised). What do you mean by that?

CARR (triumphantly).
There’s one more name Which you can add unto your list. But why Reveal it? Crime is disciplined by vice. [CROMWELL, whose suspicions are aroused by this reticence, approaches CARR eagerly.

CROMWELL.
What name? Tell me this name! For this last word You can demand what price you will.

CARR (as if suddenly inspired with an idea).
In truth!
You’ll keep your promise?

CROMWELL.
Sacred as an oath.

CARR.
For certain price I can reveal this sore.

CROMWELL (aside, with scornful satisfaction). To him who flatters them, or him who pays, All these Republicans at heart belong. Their virtues made of wax melt near my sun. [Aloud] What do you ask, my brother? Title, grade, Domain?

CARR.
Hein?

CROMWELL.
Speak! What can I do for you?

CARR.
This: abdicate!

CROMWELL (aside). Incorrigible man!
[Aloud, after an instant's reflection. To abdicate, my friend? Am I a king?

CARR.
A subterfuge! You will not keep your word!

CROMWELL (confused).
Why not?

CARR.
You see yourself, you hesitate.

CROMWELL (sighing). Alas! what violence I've done myself To keep this power; it has been my cross.

CARR (shaking his head). You don't improve. 'T is easier for a camel To travel through a needle's eye, or through An eel's throat for Leviathan to slip, Than for the great and rich to enter heaven.

CROMWELL (aside).
What a fanatic!

CARR (aside). Hypocrite! [To CROMWELL.] YOU waste Your strength in captious words like these.

CROMWELL (with contrite air).
Then hear!
I own my power is arbitrary, wrong, But in all Judah, Gad, and Issachar There's no one whom it crushes like myself.
I hate these vanities enough to fly To catacombs, these words as vacuous As tombs, this throne, this sceptre, these vain honours Which Charles has left behind him, these false gods Which are not Alpha and not Omega.
But am I right to cast back selfishly This burden on a nation which I love?
To yield, before the four and twenty old Men come to rule with the four animals?
Go find St. John and Selden, jurisconsults, Judges and doctors of religion; ask Of them to form a plan of government Which will allow me to retire at once.
Are you content?

CARR (shaking his head).
Not too much so. These doctors Give but vexing answers to one's prayers. I hate to leave you, though, unsatisfied.

CROMWELL (with eagerness). Reveal the other enemy. Tell me His name.

CARR.
'T is Richard Cromwell.

CROMWELL (sadly).
Mine own son!

CARR (imperturbably). Himself. Are you content?

CROMWELL (absorbed in painful reflection).
Thus, blasphemy And vice have led him on to parricide. The Jew was right!
'T is Heaven's punishment. I was my king's assassin; now my son Turns on his father!

CARR. Yes, it is the law. The viper breeds a viper. It is hard To recognize a felon in one’s son. To be no David, yet have Absalom. As to Charles’ death, which you call your great crime, It is your one act saintly, grand, and true, By which you have redeemed your sinful ways. It is the noblest part of your whole life.

CROMWELL (without hearing him). My son, whom I thought frivolous and weak, Light as a bird who sings and flies away, — He plots my death!
[.Earnestly to CARR, grasping his hand.] My friend, are you quite sure ‘T was Richard?

CARR.
He was with the rest to-day.

CROMWELL. Where was this meeting?

CARR.
Inn of the Three Cranes.

CROMWELL.
What did he say?

CARR.
Things faded from my mind. He sang, laughed a great deal, and swore he’d paid Lord Clifford’s debts.

CROMWELL (aside).
Thus said the wretched Jew.

CARR.
But — this you’ll not believe — I saw him drink To Herod’s health!

CROMWELL.
What Herod?

CARR.
Yes, Balthasar.

CROMWELL.
What?

CARR.
To Pharaoh.

CROMWELL. Will you be plain?

CARR.
The anti-Christ, who's called the King of Scotland, — To Charles the Second.

CROMWELL (thoughtfully).
What debauchery! To drink his health was drinking to my death. A festival of noisy laughs and songs; Not one regret! O wanton parricide! Some day, on your pale brow will it be Cain Or Sardanapalus that is written?

CARR.
Both.
[THURLOE enters; he approaches CROMWELL with an air of mystery.

THURLOE (low to CROMWELL). Sir Richard Willis waits, my lord.
[As soon as he perceives THURLOE, CROMWELL resumes his serene expression.

CROMWELL.
'Tis well.
[Aside] He will explain all this to me.
[To THURLOE.] I go.

THURLOE (indicating the large door through which the courtiers passed out). These gentlemen who wait about the door, May they not enter?

CROMWELL.
Yes, since I go out. [Aside] Compose yourself; serenity repays. My heart is flesh, but let my brow be bronze. [The courtiers re-enter conducted by

THURLOE; they salute CROMWELL, who returns their greeting by a gesture, and addresses himself to CARR.

CROMWELL (taking CARR’S hand). My thanks to you, but not farewell. Join us. A place of honour will be found for you. My power is limitless in its good-will.
[He goes out with THURLOE; all bow except CARR.

CARR (remaining alone, in front). ‘T is in this fashion that he abdicates. Thrice damned usurper!

SCENE XI.

CARR, WHITELOCKE, WALLER, SERGEANT MAYNARD, COLONEL JEPHSON, COLONEL GRACE, SIR WILLIAM MURRAY, MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL, LORD BROGHILL. All the courtiers watch CROMWELL’S exit with disappointment, and gaze upon CARR with envy and surprise.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (to the other courtiers in the back).
With what graciousness His Highness spoke to that man. What great favour. He has shown him.

CARR (alone at front of stage). Rascality!

MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL.
He deigned To smile —

CARR.
Insulting!

COLONEL JEPHSON.
What an honour!

CARR.

Shame!
Where shall I find revenge?

WALLER.
Some favourite.

CARR.
I am his victim. This base tyrant strikes At every one, — even at me.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
‘T was all For him!

CARR.
He wants my riches, wants my virtue! A servant to Nebuchadnezzar? I? Live at his court? What, like a linen fine, Once snow-white, but stained by temple-venders With their saffron, purple, and indigo, Shall I, called Carr, change to Abednego?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (examining CARR). He has a certain air of nobleness: Our judgment was at fault.

CARR.
A satrap, I? What does this Cromwell think of me?

MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL (to SIR WLLLIAM MURRAY).
He’s high In favour.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (to Mr.WLLLIAM LENTHALL). Yes, a noble, certainly, — Although his costume is not quite correct.

CARR.
The traitor!

MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL (aside).
Such great friendliness might serve Petitioners whom he would second. Ah, If he would use his power for me! Why not? He has the master’s ear. My lord, [.Approaching CARR with a profound salutation.

Oh, deign, Out of your unexampled graciousness To speak for me, to him whom we both know, One of those charming words you speak so well. I ought to be a lord. I ‘in master of The roles; and if your condescending heart —

CARR (opening his astonished eyes). Upon the willows I have hung my harp. I do not sing my country’s holy songs To Babylonians who’ve invaded us [As soon as they perceive LENTHALL’S purpose, all the courtiers rush precipitately upon CARR and surround him.

SERGEANT MAYNARD. To our petitions —

MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL (discouraged to MAYNARD). He bears us ill-will.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (breaking through the crowd). His lordship cannot recommend us all. Be my protector. We ‘re to have a king, And I can be of greatest use to him. I am a noble Scotchman; in my youth I was much honoured by the Prince of Wales. Each time, surrendering to an evil thought His royal Highness did commit a sin, ‘T was I who had the glorious privilege Of bearing all the blows which were his due.

CARR (with concentrated indignation). Poor sycophant, who doubly criminal, Vile with the Stuarts, is with Cromwell vile. Like Mephibosheth, crooked on both legs.

WALLER (presenting a paper to CARR). I’m Waller, please your lordship; I have made A poem on the galleons won from Spain.

CARR (between his teeth). For gold you wrote, and you are paid by gold. Poor worshipper of Noll.

COLONEL JEPHSON (to CARR).
Pray, speak my name Unto his Highness. Colonel Jephson, please. My mother was a countess. I would be A member of the House of Peers.

SERGEANT MAYNARD.

Inform His lordship how much I have lost for him. George Cony, victim of illegal tax, Chose me for counsel. I am very poor, Yet I refused.

CARR (aside). All their discourse is filled With venom of the asp and dragon’s gall.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (to CARR). Grant me your name at bottom of this page.

CARR (rudely). Go ask Beelzebub to sign your scrawl.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. My lord is vexed —
[To the others.] ‘T is you who importune him.

WALLER (to CARR). I much desire an office, please your lordship.

CARR.
In the lunatic asylum.

COLONEL GRACE. Good! enough! That is the place for poets.
[To CARR.] Please indorse My application —

CARR. No, sir, I will not. In Noah’s ark were not more animals.

COLONEL JEPHSON. ‘T was I who first proposed in Parliament To make our Cromwell king —

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
Your words, my lord

CARR (furious). My lord — your lordship — What bedlam of speech! The clank of chains is sweet compared to this. A jailer’s pleasanter than Baal’s priests, The Tower of London better than this Babel. I will go back to prison. Hell confound These men!
[He forces a way through the crowd of courtiers and exits.

SCENE XII.

The same, except CARR, afterward THURLOE.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. He spoke about the towers of London And of Babel.

SERGEANT MAYNARD. What! The Protector’s friend Says he is going back to prison!

WALLER.
Fool. —
That’s all he is.

MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL.
Why does his Highness treat With so much kindness a demoniac?
[THURLOE enters.

THURLOE (bowing). The Lord Protector sends this word to you: His levee can’t be held to-day.

COLONEL JEPHSON.
‘T is strange He can receive this fool and no one else. [They go out with a discontented air; as soon as they have all left, the door concealed by draperies, opens. CROMWELL enters and gazes carefully around.

SCENE XIII.

CROMWELL, SIR RICHARD WILLIS.

CROMWELL (turning to the opened door). They ‘re gone; come in. Since you must not be seen You can go out this way.
[SIR RICHARD WILLIS appears; he is enveloped in a cloak, and wears a hat which conceals his face; there is no longer any appearance of suffering or of lameness about him. CROMWELL and he start to cross the stage. CROMWELL stops abruptly.

CROMWELL (clasping his hands).
I cannot doubt —
My eldest son!

SIR RICHARD.
He drank Charles Stuart's health. E'en the conspirators, his bosom friends, Your enemies, called it fool-hardy.

CROMWELL.
Strange!
When to a throne I've raised his destiny. Repeat the names of the false Puritans.

SIR RICHARD.
First, Lambert.

CROMWELL (with a scornful laugh).
That's a rankling thought to me; To plot so well, and choose so base a chief! By chance more oft than genius, empire goes. Vitellius many times; a Caesar once. Amazing that a crowd's degraded hands Must always on its great achievements Place some petty mark. Rome had for standard What? A stack of hay.
[To WILLIS.] GO on!

SIR RICHARD.
Ludlow.

CROMWELL. A simple man who'll not go far; a brute And not a Brutus.

SIR RICHARD. Syndercomb, Barebone — [As WILLIS speaks the names, CROMWELL follows them on a list which he holds.

CROMWELL. I think he's my upholsterer. A fool.

SIR RICHARD.
Joyce —

CROMWELL
Clown!

SIR RICHARD. And Overton.

CROMWELL.
The wit.

SIR RICHARD.
The next Is Harrison.

CROMWELL.
A thief.

SIR RICHARD.
And Wildman.

CROMWELL.
Dolt, Who dictates well turned phrases against me Unto his valet. This seems like a farce.

SIR RICHARD.
A certain Carr —

CROMWELL. I know him.

SIR RICHARD.
Plinlimmon, And Garland.

CROMWELL. Plinlimmon, you say?

SIR RICHARD.
And Barkstead, One of the King’s executioners.

CROMWELL (with a violent start). Whom are you speaking to?

SIR RICHARD (lowing with great confusion).
Your pardon, sire, The habit's old, — acquired in other days. Such words cannot affect your Majesty.

CROMWELL (aside). His flattery adds venom to the sting. An awkward man.
[.Aloud.] Enough.
[,Showing the list] Are these the names Of all the Puritans?

SIR RICHARD. Yes, sire.

CROMWELL (aside).
We'll make Inquiries.
[To WILLIS.] NOW the Cavaliers.

SIR RICHARD.
My sire, It was agreed I should not give their names. They are old friends; I cannot ruin them. Besides, they are all watched; they can't escape.

CROMWELL.
'T is well. [Aside] All traitors have their scruples.
[Aloud] Yes;
Respect the secrets of your comrades —
[Aside] Since I have their names. What very different men Have made these lists! Willis gave Puritans; Carr gave the Rovalists.

SIR RICHARD. You'll not condemn Them, sire, to death. You promise? On my honour, My remorse would be too burdensome.

CROMWELL (aside).
His honour!

SIR RICHARD. For I am doing them a service, sire, And in advance entreat your clemency. I have revealed their plot; ‘t is so unwise! But if I play the traitor, ‘t is because I am their friend.

CROMWELL. Your salary is raised Two hundred pounds.
[Between his teeth.] Of your own party’s blood, Which you now shed for me, that is the price. O tiger cat, who flatters, then devours, And sells his friends out of humanity.

SIR RICHARD (who only hears the last word). Yes, sire, humanity.

CROMWELL (opening his portfolio and taking out a paper which he gives to him). Here is the draft.

SIR RICHARD (receiving it with a low bow). Upon the privy purse as usual, sire?

CROMWELL (making an affirmative sign). Yes. By the way, did you see Davenant, — Under the Stuarts, laureat. He comes From Germany.

SIR RICHARD. I saw not such a man, My prince.

CROMWELL. He brought a letter — from some one, To Ormond.

SIR RICHARD. I saw nothing given to The marquis, yet I kept a faithful watch. He was not one of the conspirators.

CROMWELL (aside). Weak instrument! I will see Davenant Myself.
[ROCHESTER appears in the background, wearing the costume of a Puritan minister.

SCENE XIV.

CROMWELL, SIR RICHARD WILLIS, LORD ROCHESTER.

LORD ROCHESTER (at the back of the hall). I ‘m here. Let me repeat my lesson. When one comes from Milton one must apply A double dose of Puritanic style. So far so good; thanks be to Davenant, And Milton whom he fools, I’ll be Noll’s chaplain Within an hour. If Satan calls me home To-day, he’ll take no less a personage Than Oliver’s own chaplain. Here begins The tragi-comedy, Wilmot, my friend. Thrust thy bold head into the lion’s jaws, And without murmuring, wear for thy King This hat, and these cloth stockings which offend The skin. You shall see Frances.
[He here perceives CROMWELL and WILLIS, who while he has been talking, have been absorbed in private conversation.
Who are these?

SIR RICHARD (to CROMWELL). A Swedish brig transports the money here; The chancellor assured me in his letter That a Jew has promised them large credit

LORD ROCHESTER (in the background). What! They correspond with my Lord Hyde? Might they —

CROMWELL (to RLCHARD WLLLIS).
Return unto the Tower of London, Lest we should arouse suspicion.

LORD ROCHESTER (still in the same place).
What is that?
This is most curious!

SIR RICHARD (to CROMWELL). Your Majesty Knows the extent of my devotion.

LORD ROCHESTER (still unseen).
Strange!
“Your Majesty “—” devotion.” Cavaliers! The faithful here?

CROMWELL (to WILLIS, as they go towards the door). Look out for sentinels. If you are seen all will be compromised.
[They go out.

LORD ROCHESTER (alone). Most wonderful! It is — it must be true! King Charles's friends are rash to come To such a place as this to talk affairs, Conspire in Cromwell's home. Audacity!
[Looking out into the gallery. Now one is coming back. I'll frighten him. I'll make him feel how he exposes us. I'll hide.
[He hides behind one of the pillars of the hall. CROMWELL re-enters.

SCENE XV.

LORD ROCHESTER, CROMWELL.

CROMWELL (without seeing ROCHESTER). Man plans and God accomplishes. I thought I was in port, calm, sheltered, safe, And here I am amidst a raging sea Of treachery. My head is on the dice Once more. Come, courage! Face the final storm. Strike one last blow to paralyze thy foes. Crush all resistance. England needs a king.

LORD ROCHESTER (from behind the pillar). Upon my soul, a rampant Royalist!

CROMWELL.
Cast nets around them, follow in their tract, Surround their feet with chains invisible, Delude them, watch them; they shall not escape.

LORD ROCHESTER. He dooms Cromwell and all his family.

CROMWELL.
Let them all die!

LORD ROCHESTER. Except his daughter, please.

CROMWELL (plunged in a sombre reverie). What dost thou want, Cromwell? A throne? What for?
Art Bourbon, Stuart, or Plantagenet? Art one of those strange mortals who are born, Thanks to a troop of ancestors, to view One part of earth as their own sovereign right? What sceptre has not shivered ‘neath thy weight, Thou warrior, and what crown is big enough For thy broad brow? Thou son of destiny, A king? The future races would account Thy reign as one of thine adventures, and Thy house, — it would be called thy dynasty

LORD ROCHESTER. He’s for the house of Stuart, certainly.

CROMWELL (continuing). A king of Parliament! Dead bodies For ascending steps! Is that the way One mounts a throne legitimate? Art thou Not tired of walking on so far, my friend? This sceptre, does it hide some magic charm? Behold! the universe obeys thy law; It lies in thy right hand, and it is naught. The chariot of thy fortune rolls in strength, And splashes sovereigns with royal blood; In war triumphant, powerful in peace, — All this is nothing, since thou hast no throne! Oh, base ambition!

LORD ROCHESTER. He treats Cromwell ill.

CROMWELL.
And when thou hast this English throne and ten More thrones, what wilt thou do with them? On what Will thy next fancy fall? Must one Not have some object for his hopes, always, Poor fool!

LORD ROCHESTER. If the Protector heard these things!

CROMWELL.
What is a throne? A stage beneath a dais, — Some roughhewn boards, which catch the public eye. It changes names according to its cloth. ‘T is black, — a scaffold! Velvet,— ‘t is a throne.

LORD ROCHESTER.
A wise man!

CROMWELL. And is that thy great desire, O Cromwell? Just a scaffold! Ah, that word Fills me with horror. Let me have some air! My head is burning!
[Approaching the casement of Charles I. The warm sun, the wind, Will dissipate my gloom.

LORD ROCHESTER.
He’s free enough! He acts as though he were at home.

CROMWELL (tries to open the window; it resists).
‘T is opened Rarely and the lock is full of rust.
[Starting back with a motion of horror. It is not rust. It is the blood of Stuart. Yes, ‘t was from here he mounted to the skies.
[Walks thoughtfully to the front. If I were king, it might have opened easier.

LORD ROCHESTER.
Faith! he is not fastidious.

CROMWELL.
If all crimes Are expiated, tremble Cromwell, for This was an impious wrong. A nobler brow Ne’er graced a royal crown, — a just, kind prince.

LORD ROCHESTER. A loyal subject, this!

CROMWELL. But could I check Their murderous fury? Did I spare myself In fasts, in prayers, in vigils, penances? Did I leave aught undone to save him? No! In heaven already was his warrant signed.

LORD ROCHESTER. And signed by Cromwell, too, who falsified The scales, and while you prayed, in darkness schemed, The honest man!

CROMWELL (with profound dejection).
How oft these walls have seen Me weep the fate of this great Englishman!

LORD ROCHESTER (wiping away a tear). Dear friend, you touch my heart.

CROMWELL.
How much remorse This royal head has caused me!

LORD ROCHESTER.
Be more just Unto yourself. Regrets, perhaps, but why Remorse?

CROMWELL (eyes bent upon the ground). What do these dead men think of us, I wonder?

LORD ROCHESTER. Grief is affecting his poor head.

CROMWELL. What unknown misery a crime reveals! To give back life to you, King Charles, how oft I would have shed my blood!

LORD ROCHESTER.
He speaks too loud. He might be overheard; that would be bad.
Such sentiments, in low tones, I approve; But to proclaim them boldly, this is not The place. I'll frighten him.
[He comes out from his hiding-place and advances suddenly upon CROMWELL.
Hello, my friend!
What are you doing here?

CROMWELL (surprised, eyeing him from head to foot).
Whom is this fellow Speaking to?

LORD ROCHESTER. To you!
[Aside] He said the “ fellow”! Good! Then I do look like a saint. So much The better. I will boldly act my part.
[Aloud and with an air of cleverness. Know you, my good man, where you are?

CROMWELL
And you, Do you know, knave, to whom you speak?

LORD ROCHESTER.
St. George!
[Aside] Hold on! I mustn't swear.
[Aloud] I know full well.

CROMWELL (aside). He may be an assassin, paid by Charles. [Drawing a pistol from his breast and pointing it at ROCHESTER. [Aloud] You rascal, come no nearer!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Prudence. All Conspirators are armed unto the teeth.
I won’t fight with a brother for Cromwell. [.Aloud.] I do not want to ruin you.

CROMWELL (surprised, disdainfully).
Indeed!

LORD ROCHESTER. No; on the contrary, I want to give You good advice. Your words were most seditious For such a place.

CROMWELL.
My words?

LORD ROCHESTER.
Yes, yours, my friend.
Go out, or I will call for help.

CROMWELL (aside).
He’s mad.
[Aloud.] What sort of man are you to talk like this?

LORD ROCHESTER. Remember you are at the Lord Protector’s.

CROMWELL.
Well! who are you?

LORD ROCHESTER.
His humblest servant, sir.
I am his chaplain.

CROMWELL. You? You lie with strange Audacity! My chaplain? You?

LORD ROCHESTER (terrified, aside).

My God!
It’s Cromwell. We’ve a traitor in our midst.

CROMWELL.
You ought to crawl upon the ground, you bold, You impious impostor.

LORD ROCHESTER. Pardon me, Your Highness — [Aside.] Should I say “ your Highness “ or “ Your Grace “?
[Aloud.] Excuse me. From excess of zeal Against your enemies, I’ve erred. Some words Half understood —

CROMWELL. Why did you tell this lie?

LORD ROCHESTER. Intense devotion realized my dream. I’ve dared to beg the post of chaplain Unto your Highness.

CROMWELL. Are you doctor, by good right?
What is your name?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Zounds, my poor memory! What is my saintly name, for heaven’s sake? [Aloud.] Of humble state —

CROMWELL.
Your name! The spring can burst From cavern depths.
[ROCHESTER, confused, appears to recollect something of importance, suddenly; he feels hastily in his pocket and draws out a letter which he presents to CROMWELL with a profound obeisance.

LORD ROCHESTER.
This note will tell your Highness Who I am.

CROMWELL (taking the letter). From whom is it?

LORD ROCHESTER.
Mr. John Milton.

CROMWELL (opening the letter). A worthy man. Blind — very sad. [Reads a few lines.
Your name Is Obededom.

LORD ROCHESTER (bowing, aside). God forbid! That name? [Aloud.] My lord has said it.
[Aside.] Obed — Obededom — Zounds! A name to make the devil run. Accursed Davenant. One can't pronounce This name without a frightful grimace.

CROMWELL (re-folding the letter).
'T is A saintly name. This Obededom was Of Geth. Within his home he welcomed once The ark when it was travelling. My friend, Prove yourself worthy of this noble name.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). So much for Obededom!

CROMWELL.
A great saint, John Milton, council clerk, vouches for you.
[Aside] He seems, in fact, a most devoted man, His violence was hearty proof of it. [Aloud] But't is my duty to examine you, And see that you have rigid views of faith, Before I name you chaplain, sir.

LOUD ROCHESTER (lowing).
Amen!
[Aside] This is the moment critical.

CROMWELL.
Tell me When Solomon began to build his temple.

LORD ROCHESTER. In Zio, second month of sacred year.

CROMWELL.
When did he finish it?

LORD ROCHESTER.
The month of bull.

CROMWELL. Had Thara not three children? Where?

LORD ROCHESTER.
Chaldea.

CROMWELL. Who will appear to purify this earth?

LORD ROCHESTER. The saints, who are to reign a thousand years.

CROMWELL.
By whom are saintly duties best fulfilled?

LOUD ROCHESTER. Believers bear within sufficient grace! To preach, one mounts unto the desk and says, Inspired by Carmel's light, not ABC, But Aleph, Beth, and Ghimel.

CROMWELL.
'T is well said. Continue, friend; spread out your sails.

LORD ROCHESTER (with enthusiasm).
The Lord Reveals his spirit to each human soul. One can receive from Heaven the fecund light, Yet not be priest or minister.
[Aside] Call the light Sunshins.
[.Aloud] Without faith, man grovels: watch, Illuminate your soul with this white lamp. Each soul's a sanctuary and each man A priest: bring to the common hearth your fire. The prophets preached in public places, and The holy temple had its darkened rooms. [Aside] Now, Obededom Wilmot, may you hang If any words of yours I understand.

CROMWELL (aside). An anabaptist. In his logic strong, But in his doctrine demagogic Well!

LORD ROCHESTER (continuing with ardour). The gift of languages comes unto those Who speak often and much.
[Aside] I'm proof of that! [Aloud] With prayer and vigilance one can become A Levite. Then can one o'ertake Satan, Although he travels fast, and in one day Despite his cloven foot, goes from Beth-Lebaoth Unto Beth-Marchaboth.

[Aside.] It’s going well: God’s love! Keep on! Now for the ecstasy!

CROMWELL (interrupting him). Sufficient! You have built your edifice Upon a false foundation. We will speak Of that hereafter. Name the animals Impure.

LORD ROCHESTER. All herons, ostriches, and bitterns, The ibis, banished from the ark — [Aside.] And Cromwell. [Aloud] Everything which flies or walks.

CROMWELL.
Which ones Are safe to eat?

LORD ROCHESTER. The attacus, my lord, The bruchus and the serpent, please your honour!

CROMWELL.
But you forget the grasshopper, my friend.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). The deuce! Who wants those beasts inside his stomach?

CROMWELL. You have neglected this important word: “ To touch dead bodies renders one impure Till evening.”
[Aside] Never mind. He’s learned. One Can’t ask such universal thoughts as mine. [Aloud] A final word. Does it become a saint To wear long hair or short?

LORD ROCHESTER (boldly).
Extremely short. [Aside] Rejoice, Roundhead!

CROMWELL.
Which leads one to believe —

LORD ROCHESTER (warmly). Our hair is naught but sinful vanity. Was Absalom not hung by his long hair?

CROMWELL.
Truly; but Samson died when he was sheared.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside, biting his lips). The devil!

CROMWELL. To elucidate this thought I'll seek the Bible's penetrating light.
[He goes out.

SCENE XVI.

LORD ROCHESTER (alone). The first attack I have sustained with glory. Although a Puritan, he is no fool. I fear instead — Who can this traitor be? A confident of Cromwell and of Hyde! Ah, but I've duped the old arch-demon well!
In what sermonic style he questions one, And cross-examines with his canting eye.
[Examining himself from head to foot. I 'in a vile-looking fellow, thank the Lord! A cross between a knave and regicide. He took me for a robber at the start. [Laughing.] This preaching soldier, brigand patriarch, Can have no respite; he must always go Armed to the teeth, e'en in his palace walls. Of psalms and pistols he makes constant use, So that on all sides, he can hold his own.

SCENE XVII.

LORD ROCHESTER, RICHARD CROMWELL.

LORD ROCHESTER (perceiving RICHARD, who is coming towards him). ‘T is Richard Cromwell! Zounds! I must be off. If he should recognize me, — rope or fire! Then Obededom’s Greek would not avail.

RICHARD CROMWELL (examining ROCHESTER). I think I’ve seen that countenance somewhere.

LORD ROCHESTER (putting on a gloomy Puritan expression; aside). The fox doth smell the counterfeit.

RICHARD CROMWELL.
I’m sure!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Hard luck!

RICHARD CROMWELL (still looking at LORD ROCHESTER). He’s anything but Puritan. He drank wine with the Cavaliers to-day. Ah, now I know who’t is! The scamp!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Confound him!
I never was in such a hole as this, — No, not since that vile tête-à-tête, when I Kissed Lady Seymour, aged fifty years.

RICHARD CROMWELL (aside). Why should he doubt a man with whom he drinks?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). What hateful looks!

RICHARD CROMWELL (aside).
One of my father’s spies, And will, no doubt, give full report of me. He’ll tell him I carouse in taverns with Men who conspire against his government. That is a crime worthy imprisonment, My father thinks, — lèse-majesté, high treason! I must try to bribe him, try to stem the storm.
[.Feeling in the pocket of his vest. I have some nobles in my purse.

LORD ROCHESTER (watching his action, aside).
He means Attack. He carries pistols too.
[He draws back with some anxiety.

RICHARD CROMWELL.
So long As they are paid, what matters it to them Who pays?
[Approaching LORD ROCHESTER, with a smiling and affable manner.
Good-day to you.

LORD ROCHESTER (troubled).
God keep your Grace. [Aside] With an infernal smile he nears his prey. [Aloud] An humble prop of the Church-Militant Am I: my prayers are yours.

RICHARD CROMWELL.
I've heard you, far From praying, swear most lustily.

LORD ROCHESTER.
My lord, You are mistaken. Heard me swear?

RICHARD CROMWELL.
I did, —
First by St. George, then by St. Paul, then by — LORD ROCHESTER.
In mercy! I —

RICHARD CROMWELL.
Swear that you did not swear!

LORD ROCHESTER.
I?

RICHARD CROMWELL. Come, my reverend, why can't you be frank?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
The deuce!

CROMWELL.

RICHARD CROMWELL. You ‘re not at all what you appear. You hide a traitor’s eye beneath the mask Of saint.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside, with consternation). I’m lost!

RICHARD CROMWELL. Is it not true?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Damnation!

RICHARD CROMWELL. Yes, I know all! Look here; do not denounce me!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside, with surprise). What! I had the same prayer upon my lips. What does he mean?

RICHARD CROMWELL.
I have a reckless nature, — I make friends everywhere. This morn I drank With Cavaliers, like you, my Puritan. What use is it to tell my father that, — To tell him that his son clinked glasses there? And for a little wine (I hardly drank) Get me repudiated by the tribe?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
I ‘in saved!
r

RICHARD CROMWELL. Of course my father wants to know All that is done and seen and thought; but then, ‘T is not with plots that we amuse ourselves.
For I know you, my friend; you are a spy. I’ve guessed your secret.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Yes, and guessed it well. I’ve made a hit tremendous in this part; I’ve grasped so well the colour of the sect That I can pass for robber or for spy.
[Aloud to RICHARD, with low bow. You honour me by far too much, my lord.

RICHARD CROMWELL Spare me my father’s morbid discipline. Give me your word — I swear I’m rich enough — That from the Lord Protector you’ll conceal What you have seen this morning.

LORD ROCHESTER.
Willingly.

RICHARD CROMWELL (offering him a large purse, embroidered with his arms). Accept my purse. I’m not ungrateful, sir.

LORD ROCHESTER (accepting it after a moment’s hesitation). [Aside] Why not? ‘T is a resource. Conspirators Need money. And moreover, avarice Is part of my disguise. [Aloud] You ‘re generous, my lord!

RICHARD CROMWELL Take it, my friend, and get a drink.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). This ends much better than I dared to hope.

RICHARD CROMWELL.
How much does such a trade as yours bring in, — Not counting gallows?

LORD ROCHESTER.
I mean as spy.
Doctor of the faith?

RICHARD CROMWELL.

LORD ROCHESTER. My lord confers a name.

RICHARD CROMWELL. Your kind of business needs philosophy. Why should you blush?

LORD ROCHESTER.
My lord —

SCENE XVIII.

The same. CROMWELL.

CROMWELL (holding a Bible marked with his arms).
Hark to this verse, Sir Obededom; ‘t is about Dabir, The King of Edom. [Perceiving his son.] Ah!
[To LORD ROCHESTER.] Leave us alone!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). What now? How he resumes his haughty air’ The tyrant takes the place of pedagogue. [He goes out.

SCENE XIX.

RICHARD CROMWELL, CROMWELL. CROMWELL goes close to his son. Stands with his arms folded, and looks at him fixedly.

RICHARD CROMWELL (bowing profoundly). My father, whence this unexpected gloom? What means this cloud upon your brow, my lord? On what shall fall the thunder it prepares, Whose lightning flashes now within your eyes? What is it? What’s been done? What do you fear? What grief strikes you ‘midst universal joy? To-morrow the republic dies; and as It joins the ashes of departed kings, Bequeaths three kingdoms unto you. To-morrow Beholds your grandeur lifted to the throne. To-morrow Westminster proclaims your right; And throwing his hereditary glove At all your rivals, this armed champion Of ancient England shall defy the world In Cromwell’s name, who now is made a king To roaring cannon and to ringing bells. What do you lack? Europe and England, London And your entire family obey Your will. If I dared name my humble self, My father and my master, I would say I have no wish but for your happiness, Your health, your safety —

CROMWELL (who has not taken his eyes from off his son’s face).
How is his Majesty, Charles Stuart?

RICHARD CROMWELL (stupefied). Oh, my lord!

CROMWELL.
Another time Choose mess-mates with more care, my son.

RICHARD CROMWELL
My lord, May I be cut in pieces! oh, may I Be viler than the pavement in the streets, If I —

CROMWELL (interrupting him). Drink they good wine at the Three Cranes?

RICHARD CROMWELL (aside). That damned spy had already told.
[Aloud.] I swear —

CROMWELL.
You seem abashed! Is it such grievous wrong To gather a gay crowd around a jug Of muscadine? You drank it to my health, Of course?

RICHARD CROMWELL (aside). He knows of that accursed toast. [Aloud] My lord, this meeting was most innocent. Upon my soul, it was.

CROMWELL (with a voice of thunder). Infamous wretch! It was my son who drank with Cavaliers His portion of my blood, in a wild feast.

RICHARD CROMWELL.
My father!

CROMWELL. Drink with Pagans whom I hate! Drink to King Charles’s health! A fast day, too!

RICHARD CROMWELL. I swear, my lord, I did n’t know it was!

CROMWELL.
Reserve your oaths to give your Tyrian king. Don’t come here, you blasphemous parricide, To flaunt your baseness in my very eyes. Some hellish wine has overpowered your mind, — That was a poison which you drank to Charles. My vengeance, on the watch, observed your crime. Although a son, my victim you shall be. The tree will fire itself to kill its fruit.

[.He goes out.

RICHARD CROMWELL (alone). For one small glass of wine, what a great noise! Drink on a fast day, — that's the crime! That makes One traitor, parricide, blasphemer, fiend. It costs much less, although a banquet's good, To fast with saints than to carouse with fools. I never had perceived, until to-day, That very precious truth! My father's lost His senses. — [Enter LORD ROCHESTER.

SCENE XX.

RICHARD CROMWELL, LORD ROCHESTER.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). Richard seems to be distressed.

RICHARD CROMWELL (perceiving ROCHESTER as he crosses the back of the stage). Ah, there's my spy! The liar! He had told! Like a Scotch fox, I'll cross him on his path.
[Advancing toward RICHARD with menacing air. I have you, traitor!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
What! a new attack? I thought we had sworn peace.
[Aloud.] What have I done?

RICHARD CROMWELL. This time for jesting is inopportune. You think you can conceal your perfidy? I saw my father, fool, and he knows all.
[Seeing that ROCHESTER stands motionless and confused. Reflect upon what answer you can make.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). It's true one of our men is Cromwell's spy. Do they know me?

RICHARD CROMWELL.
He’s laughing in his sleeve.

LORD ROCHESTER.
My lord!

RICHARD CROMWELL. Think you a wretch escapes me twice? Your treachery has been at last revealed. My father’s wild.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Then I’ve been recognized. Well, let us face the storm!

RICHARD CROMWELL.
You coward!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Time, To put forth courage and drop artifice —
[.Aloud.] Since, Mr. Cromwell, I am known to you, I beg the honour of a duel. Both Of us have injuries which claim redress.
Arrange the hour, the place, the arms. I leave All choice to you. I hold myself a champion Most worthy of your sword.

RICHARD CROMWELL.
I fight a spy!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). He’s not got over that? Then all is well.

RICHARD CROMWELL. You, in your serpent’s skin, your churchly dress, — You talk of duels? Do you hold yourself Less vile than is a Jew? Pray, do yourself More justice, recreant.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). A civil man!

RICHARD CROMWELL. To secretly betray me, when I’d paid; Take a man’s purse and sell its owner, quick!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). What does he mean?

RICHARD CROMWELL.
At least, give back the gold.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). The deuce! To Ormond I have sent the purse.

RICHARD CROMWELL.
What shall Will you give it back, you wretched thief?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
I do?
[Aloud.] The sum is not so very large —

RICHARD CROMWELL. Indeed! It was too small! Upon your bones, Your flesh, you'll pay it back at a good price.
[Drawing his sword.
Come, come, my purse!

LORD ROCHESTER (retreating).
He means to kill me, Heaven!
Accursed be that purse!

SCENE XXI.

The same. EARL OF CARLISLE, accompanied by four halberdiers. RICHARD CROMWELL recovers himself. THE EARL OF CARLISLE makes him a profound obeisance.

EARL OF CARLISLE.
Lord Richard Cromwell, In the Lord Protector's name, give me your sword.

RICHARD CROMWELL (surrendering his sword to THE EARL).
For punishing a traitor 't was in use. You've come a bit too soon.

LORD ROCHESTER (with loud voice and an air of inspiration).
Oh, blessed chance. God saves Eleazar from Antiochus.

EARL OF CARLISLE (to RICHARD CROMWELL). Your honour will please pass into your room: Two archers I must station at the door.

RICHARD CROMWELL (to LORD ROCHESTER). This is where I am brought by your deceit.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). ‘T is most astounding! What! I am accused Of getting Cromwell’s son made prisoner? And when with rage this son threatens my life ‘T is Cromwell who preserves me from his sword. Yet I am doing all I can to hurt The father, while I’ve never wronged the son.

RICHARD CROMWELL. Dare you still face me with your insolence, You coward?
[To EARL OF CARLISLE.] DO not trust this man, my lord. He’s double-faced. I would not have complained If I had paid him back as he deserved. A double-face demands four kicks, my lord!
[RICHARD CROMWELL exits, surrounded by halberdiers.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). That’s what it costs to pass for a Roundhead.

SCENE XXII.

EARL OK CARLISLE, LORD ROCHESTER, THURLOE.

THURLOE (to LORD ROCHESTER). My lord appreciates your learning, sir, And chaplain of his household has named you. You will deliver prayers at morn and night, You’ll preach a sermon to his body-guards, You’ll speak a benediction o’er his food, And bless the hippocras he drinks at night.

LORD ROCHESTER (bowing low, aside). That is our object — thanks!

THURLOE.

Such are your duties.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). Rochester to pray for Cromwell! Good! enough! A devilet pronouncing benediction On a devil.

THURLOE (to EARL OF CARLISLE, handing him a parchment). A conspiracy's afoot For Westminster, to-morrow.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
That's not all.

THURLOE (to CARLISLE).
Seize Rochester!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). Yes! Find him first.

THURLOE (continuing).
And Ormond.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). If he received the message that I sent, He will have changed his name and rooms ere this.

THURLOE.
As to the others, watch them close! Trust them To throw themselves into our nets, in time.
[They go out.

SCENE XXIII.

LORD ROCHESTER (alone). Our stratagem will bring to naught their plans: To-night will place King Cromwell in our hands. All things are moving well. Although betrayed By some, we still are strong for Stuart's cause. For their sake, we'll brave ridicule and rage, Their pistols, sword-thrusts, biblical debates. In fox's skin protected from these wolves, We'll be impromptu chaplain, saint of luck, On hand for catechism, skirmishes; By day Ezekiel, Scaramouche by night.

[He goes out.

ACT III.

THE FOOLS.

SCENE. — The Painted Chamber at White-Hall. To the right a large gilded arm-chair, placed at the top of several steps, covered with the Gobelin tapestry sent by Mazarin. A semi-circle of tabourets opposite to the arm-chair. Near to the latter, a large table with velvet cover and a folding-chair.

SCENE I.

CROMWELL'S FOUR FOOLS. TRICK, first fool, dressed in motley of yellow and Hack, hat similar in colour, pointed, with golden bells; the arms of the Protector embroidered in gold on his breast. GIRAFF, second fool, motley yellow and red, cap similar, bordered with silver bells; the Protector's arms in silver on his breast. GRAMADOCH, third fool, and train-bearer to his Highness, motley red and black, square cap similar, with gold bells; the Protector's arms in gold on his breast. ELESPURU (pronounced Elespourou), fourth fool, costume entirely black; black three-cornered hat with silver bell at each corner; the Protector s arms in silver on his breast. All four carry at the side a small sword with big handle and a wooden blade. TRICK has a fool's-cap in his hand. They gambol on to the stage.

ELESPURU (sings).
Hear this, nor mock: I went to hell. Moloch, Sadoch, Threw me pell-mell In the red loch.
My linen flamed, My doublet burned. May none be blamed. Great Satan turned Me monkey named And my race spurned.
[Hums.
Great Satan turned —

GIRAFF (gravely). He let you go? Who, think you, is Cromwell, Our temporal king and spiritual chief?

GRAMADOCH (to GLRAFF). Can one be Satan just by wearing horns? At this rate devils must be limitless.

ELESPURU.
Can one suspect Elizabeth Cromwell?

GRAMADOCH.
Hark to this stanza which a Frenchman made: [He sings.
“In Paris through two portals All dreams must pass in state: Through ivory ones to lovers Through horn to lawful mate.”
Lord Cromwell makes me bear his train. All right. His wife makes him wear horns.

TRICK.
Have done! For shame! Such words as those deserve the gallows, sir. I’m cavalier of Dame Elizabeth; ‘T is Cromwell’s and mine honour I defend. Oh, I will vouch for her, — a homely thing!

GRAMADOCH.
That’s true. I’ll not deny it, friend. I lied.
Where there is nothing new, we must invent.
I’m horribly afraid of ennui. Faith!
It makes me sick. I’ll go and sing a ballad To Mistress Echo. — [He sings.
Why such a plight, Carmelite? Has Rose betrayed you? Hi!
Why so much rage, Pretty page? Are you her lover? Aye! Why so morose, Dainty Rose! The husband comes, Sad.
To bed where passion Took possession, He’s returning Mad.
Your ear so keen Strains, I ween, To catch the hoof Near.
Now ends the life Of faithless wife. Tremble! He is Here.
The priest and page Quick engage To leave the place. Fly!
Under the walls, Laughter falls. “ Ho! you are caught; Die!”
The high words flash, Thunders clash: “ For vulture’s food — Swing.
“From the great top Let them drop. Crows o’er them, — Sing.”
To sinful mirth Open earth; Marriage haters — Grin!

When he started, Broken-hearted, She knew not guilt — Sin!
Nor page nor priest Shared love's feast. Her chaste lips— "No!"
When he returned Twenty burned At her feet.
Oh!

TRICK (to GRAMADOCII). Hear my legend now! — [He sings.
Strange century! Job, Lazarus Wrapped in gold; Lacedemon Offers alms To King Croesus. Era strange; Medley queer; Angel is devil, Black is white; Maidens are Virgins pure, Or profess to be; Easy beauties, Docile husbands; Silly fools, Whom Lucretias None too fierce Change to Vulcans; Democrite8, Hypocrites; Kings who please; Heraclites, Heteroclites; Thinking fools; Halberds bold For argument; Tender lovers Drink tisane; Wolves and mules And glow-worms; Courtesans, Courtiers. Women loved; Headsmen kind; Gentle nuns Unconfined; Chiefless armies, Heathen clerks, Pygmy titans; Giant dwarfs, — That's my age. Nothing lives In this whirl But the scourge. Bad to worse Goes the earth;
Caesars great Lizards small; Cyclopes are Myopes; Brutus proud Plutus is; Orpheus makes Morpheus. Our Jupin Is Scapin. Silly age, Crazy days. Hercules Always off. One climbs, Two fall; And Olympus Is a howl.

GRAMADOCH. 'T is bad; form tights, and slaughters reason.

ELESPURU.
Mine! [He sings.
You unto whom each night Hell grins with all its might, Angus and Errol sorcerers! Oh, you who know the ways, And in your gloomy maze Keep owls for nightingales. Undines beneath your falls Renounce their parasols. Of sylphs the cavalcades Surmounting barricades Jump from the great Orcades To spire of St. Paul's; Bad hunters Tyrolese, Whose packs scamper at ease Through every woody turn; Clerks Argant, troops of Roll Hung to the halter's pall Quick at the witchs' call Let your old dust reburn. Pistol and Caliban, Macduff, Zingaris ran In murder's ghastly van; Which is the devil, pray, Old Nick or Noll? come, say. Which of the snakes of earth To which Satan gave birth Thinks he of the most worth, The asp or viper, eh! The asp or basilisk, Old Noll or the old Nick? His left eye is old Nick, But old Noll is his right. Old Nick can skilful be, Old Noll's as smart as he; Beelzebub is cute, and he Holds both in his grim might. When this great couple ride, Death follows at their side, And hell relay provides. Each one holds to his own; The broom-handle for Nick, For Noll the hatchet's stick, And to conclude this quick, Before he's hermit grown, I wish, for virtues great I might see Noll, in state, Hauled off by Nick the Great, Or else in his own place, See Nick's angelic face Appear, and with due grace Wring old Noll's neck.

[The Fools applaud with great bursts of laughter and repeat in chorus: —

Or else in his own place See Nick's angelic face Appear, and with due grace Wring old Noll's neck.

TRICK.

Know you strange things are passing hereabouts, — Enough to furnish texts for parodies?

GIRAFF.

Yes, Cromwell makes himself a king. The devil Wants to become a god.

GRAMADOCH.

I hear it said Two plots have almost spoiled his game.

ELESPURU.

'T is true.

The army is dissatisfied; the people Have begun to talk.

TRICK. Should he renounce His armour for a crown, alas for him! An unprotected heart's an easy goal For daggers pointed by avenging hands.

GIRAFF.

This mad turmoil is greatly to my taste.

I'd like to set the dogs upon the wolves!

If Satan would present to Oliver A red-hot sceptre on a massive grill, Use Cavaliers for his disgraceful nags, And play at nine-pins with the Roundheads — eh?

TRICK.

What think you, brother, of the chaplain who Blessed us to-day with such a knowing look?

ELESPURU.
Hum!

GIRAFF.
Deuce!

GRAMADOCH.
The devil.

TRICK.
So! We think alike, I see.

GRAMADOCH.
Friends, I’ll unfold a tale to you!
[.All draw near to him. You know he haunts the park for archery, — This Obededom, — shooting near the gate Where stand the guards, to whom he talks, and feigns To edify their minds with texts, yet makes Them drunk and gives them money, and one time When they were close around him, said, “ To-night. To enter, White-Hall and Cologne will be The password.”

GIRAFF (clapping his hands with jog).
Then he’s working for King Charles!

ELESPURU.
No! Cromwell’s spy, if what our master’s son Said in his rage against the saintly scamp Be true. You know ’twas Obededom’s words Which locked poor Richard up.

GIRAFF (laughing).
That’s true. How droll Richard, who soon will be condemned, desired To kill his father. What rare fun!

TRICK.
I’ve something Funnier yet.

GRAMADOCH.

Indeed!

GIRAFF. Not possible.

TRICK (showing a roll of parchment tied with a pink ribbon)
Look here!

ELESPURU.
Well, what is that?

TRICK.
This parchment fell From the black doctor's pocket in my hands.

GRAMADOCH. It is some sermon, terrible and long, Opening with hell and ending with the devil. Come, let's see it. quick! It is essential That fools should master Puritanic cant.
[Unfolding the roll which TRICK has given him. This chaplain seems to be as mad as we. He ties his thunder with pink ribbon. Hear! [He casts a glance on the open parchment and bursts into a great fit of laughter. GIRAFF takes the parchment, looks at it, and laughs louder yet. ELESPURU, to whom he passes it, laughs also, and. TRICK, as he watches the other two, laughs still more heartily.

ELESPURU (laughing). A pretty devil wrote this sermon — eh?

TRICK (laughing). What think you of it?

ELESPURU (reading).
"Quatrain to my love: Egeria the fair, you burn my soul!"

GIRAFF (snatches the parchment and reads " Your eyes, where Cupid lights a conquering flame—"

GRAMADOCH (snatching the parchment in his turn). "Are like two glowing mirrors — TRICK (taking it from. GRAMADOCH.

“Which reflect The fires consuming me.”
[All burst into fits of increasing laughter

ELESPURU.
These verses fell from pockets Puritan, Oh, fie!

GIRAFF. The giddy man!

GRAMADOCH (as if struck with an idea).
Of course, that’s it, — I’m sure of it! — [Drawing the rest towards him.
You know Dame Guggligoy, — The Lady Frances’ governess?

TRICK.
Of course.

GRA.MADOCH. I saw the chaplain whispering in her ear, And he gave her a purse.

TRICK. What did she do?

GRAMADOCH.
She said, “ This night, my handsome fellow, you Shall be alone with her. I sang a song. — [He sings.
The witch said to the pirate, Lord of the nipping air, “ I will not be ungrateful;
Go, take your lady fair.
But give me, as my wage, Some pretty, merry page Who will ignore my age And kiss for fun.
And add to that, for peace, Two sheep with their white fleece, A good whale’s bones and grease, Caineleon one, An idol, charm of tin, Six asps, a weasel’s skin, Of your men the most thin To be my skeleton.”
My faith! the Guggligoy should go for less; She is an active skeleton herself. But it is fair, I take it, to conclude This sheared seducer of the guards and maids Is here for neither Charles nor Noll, but Frances.

ELESPURU.
My mind is still more muddled than before. What does it mean?

GIRAFF.
I don’t know; but it’s droll.

GRAMADOCH. This man who deems himself master of all, Might do much worse than borrow his fools’ eyes. Suppose we tell him?

GIRAFF.
Tell him? We? Oh, no! No, Gramadoch; you ‘re mad. It’s naught to us. Why are we hired by Noll? To make him laugh. Well, let us hold ourselves within our sphere. He keeps us, and perhaps he pays us, more To cheer his days than to defend his life. Let them abduct his child, or force his door, Shear him or choke him, what is it to us?

GRAMADOCH.
He’s right.

ELESPURU.
That’s true.

TRICK.
Each one to his own trade. He rules, we laugh. Let him be cut in quarters, Be burned or flayed, he can’t find fault with us So long as we don’t fail to laugh for him.

ELESPURU.
Our vengeful laughter will repay his scorn. How his buffoons will jeer the failure king.

GRAMADOCH. At bottom this false chaplain is like us, For fools and lovers do go hand-in-hand. His name of Obededom seems expressly Fashioned to fit with Trick, Elespuru, Giraff, and Gramadoch.

TRICK.
But he conspires. We must defend ourselves. If Charles comes back, He’ll have us hung.

ELESPURU. Hang four poor fools? For what?

TRICK.
Oh, just to see our grimace when we swing. Men of our trade can’t beg for mercy. No. It’s too much fun to see the jumping-jacks Upon the string.

GIRAFF.
Hang us, — the innocents? Oh, never fear! Should Charles the Second come, He will need fools; and we are on the field. Where could he find profounder jesters, sir? The common sort are fools by instinct, we By principle. Don’t be afraid. A fool Can always jump the falling bridge. To live To old age here, where all is fugitive, One studies folly, — wisdom after all.

TRICK.
Moreover, Cromwell’s tiresome. Charles is gay.

ELESPURU. The tyrant’s eagle eye, is it so tired? Is’t possible, we know what he knows not; We hold the thread he does not even see, — We, Cromwell’s fools?

GRAMADOCH.
Oh, no, Elespuru. We ‘re his buffoons; but he, — he is our fool. He thinks we are his puppets: he is ours. Has he deceived us with his liturgies, Or terrified us with the thundering voice, The pious eye-winks, which subdue the world?
He cannot look at us without a smile.
His secret policy and profound schemes Impose on all the world except four fools.
His reign, so fatal to the people it destroys, Is but a stupid drama to our eyes.
Yes, watch. We’ll see, passing before our gaze, Some twenty actors, merry, awkward, sad:
We stand aside, we, the philosophers, And laugh at points, applaud at climaxes.
Let us leave Charles and Cromwell the whole fight For our amusement they can rend themselves.

We hold the key to this strange mystery, But we say nothing to the master.

ELESPURU.
No!
Let him find out!

GIRAFF. Let us keep still and laugh.

TRICK.
We triumph everywhere. Satan has made These tyrants for amusement to buffoons; While all earth trembles ‘neath the despots frown, We take his sceptre for our hobby-horse.

SCENE II.

The same. CROMWELL; JOHN MILTON, Hack coat, white hair, rather long, Hack cap, chain of the secretaryship of the Council around his neck. He is assisted by a young page who wears the livery of the Protector. WHITELOCKE; PIERPOINT; THURLOE; LORD ROCHESTER; HANNIBAL SESTHEAD.

CROMWELL.
Here are my fools. ‘T is a good time to be Diverted.
[THURLOE enters. THURLOE (to CROMWELL). Parliament awaits your lordship In the throne-room.

CROMWELL (impatiently). Well! Let it wait!

THURLOE (low to Protector).
It bears The Humble Address, which is a desire From all the people to make the Protector King.

CROMWELL (radiant).
At last!

[.Aside.] Are they not dull?
[To THURLOE.] ‘T is well! I will attend to them, but after council. I must look at the Fresland horses which The Duke of Holstein sends to me. Distract them, My friend; inflaming their great zeal, suggest Discussion of a text until I come.

GRAMADOCH (low to TRICK). Yes, in the book of Kings, for instance.
[THURLOE goes out. LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
What!
Oh, Charles! oh, martyred king, you are avenged! What a base rod succeeds to thy bright sceptre.

CROMWELL (pointing out his Fools to LORD ROCHESTER). Since we are all alone, I want to laugh. These are my fools, Doctor. I present you.
[LORD ROCHESTER and the Fools bow to each other. When times are good, they are a merry set. We all make verses. Even my old Milton Takes a hand, too. — [Indicating MILTON.

MILTON (with vexation).
“Old Milton “! I beg you — I am nine years less old than you, my lord.

CROMWELL
Have it your way.

MILTON. You come from ninety-nine, I come from sixteen hundred eight.

CROMWELL.
Remembrance Has an eternal youth.

MILTON (impatiently).
You might treat me More civilly. I am a lawyer’s son, One who was alderman in his own town.

CROMWELL.
Be calm. I know much better who you are; You ‘re Milton, great theologian and good poet, — Next unto Vithers and to Donne. Beware God keeps account of all he gives —

MILTON (as if talking to himself). Come next to them? Alas! what cruel words. We must be patient. In good time they'll know What gifts I had. The future is my judge.
Posterity will comprehend my Eve, Who falls like a sweet dream on night of hell; Good, guilty Adam; the arch-angel great And dauntless, proud of any reign eternal, Noble in his despair, wise in his madness, Arising from the lake of fire, which his Huge wing chastises. Yes, within my soul A genius travails: great, mysterious dreams Keep floating through my brain, when all is still. I live within my thoughts, and Milton finds Sweet consolation there. Oh, in my turn, In emulation of almighty God, I want to make a world, somewhere between The earth, the sky, and hell.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
What's that? The deuce!

HANNIBAL SESTHEAD (to Fools). A ludicrous enthusiast.

CROMWELL (looks at MILTON and shrugs his shoulders). You wrote A noble thing in the " Iconoclast." But as for your great devil, meant to be A new Leviathan, — he's very bad. — [Laughing.

MILTON (under his breath, indignant). 'T is Cromwell laughing at my Satan! Well!

LORD ROCHESTER (approaching MILTON). Pray, Mr. Milton —

MILTON (without hearing him, continues looking at CROMWELL). 'T is all jealousy.

LORD ROCHESTER (to MILTON, who listens with an absent air).
You do not comprehend true poetry. You have some wit, but scarcely any taste. The French excel us all in everything. Go study Racan. Read his pastorals. Let Tircis with Aminta haunt your fields Leading a gentle lamb with a blue ribbon. But for your Eve, your Adam, and your hell, Your lake of fire, — all that is hideous. Your naked Satan with his scorchéd wings! It might be done if he were clothed in silk And wore a golden helmet on his wig, A rich aurora jacket, Florence cape, As once I saw, if I remember well, The Sun dressed, at the opera in France, When all the Court was there.

MILTON (astonished).
What worldly talk To come from a saint's mouth.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside, biting his lips).
Another slip! He listened ill, for my good luck. Beware! You play this Obededom sorry tricks, My lord.
[Aloud to MILTON.] I was but jesting, sir.

MILTON.
Bad jest.
[Aside, and still turned toward CROMWELL. How Cromwell treats me. What great thing is it To govern Europe? Nothing but child's play.
I'd like to see him making Latin verses As I do.
[During these speeches, CROMWELL has been talking with WHITELOCKE and, PIERPOINT. HANNIBAL SESTHEAD with the Fools.

CROMWELL (gruffly). Come, somebody, sirs, must laugh. Fools, find some idiotic thing to say. Sir Hannibal —

HANNIBAL SESTHEAD (with an offended air). I beg to be excused. I 'in not your fool; I'm cousin to a king, — King of an ancient race, who rules Denmark.

CROMWELL (aside, biting his lips). I comprehend. That is an insult. Why Cannot my anger crush him now? [.Rudely to Fools] Come, laugh!

FOOLS (laughing).
Ha! ha!

CROMWELL (aside). Their laughter is sardonic. [Aloud; angrily to Fools.] Hush! [The Fools are silent, CROMWELL continues with impatience.
It's Milton, that infernal poet, who Upsets us all with his Satanic visions.

[MILTON turns proudly on CROMWELL, who continues. [Aside.] Calm thyself!
[Aloud.] Well! what were we discussing? Trick, order beer and pipes.

TRICK.
I go at once!
My lord desires to smoke.
[He goes out, and returns in a moment followed by two servants, bearing a table laden with pipes and mugs.

CROMWELL.
I want to be Diverted. Do you hear? I want to laugh. [.Aside.] Betrayed by mine own son! [Silence. CROMWELL seems to surrender himself to gloomy thoughts. The others sit in silence, their eyes fixed on the ground. LORD ROCHESTER and the Fools are the only ones who appear to observe the gloomy countenance of the Protector. Suddenly CROMWELL becomes conscious of the embarrassed attitudes of his companions, and rousing himself from his reverie, addresses the Fools.
How many verses Have you composed since I constructed those Replying unto Colonel Lilburne’s sonnet?

TRICK.
Hippocrene is most miserly, Yet this —
[Presenting a rolled parchment to the Protector.

CROMWELL.
Read it.

TRICK (unfolding the parchment).
“A quatrain “ (verses bad) “ To my loved one: Egeria the Fair—”

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). My God! My quatrain.
[He rushes to TRICK and snatches the parchment from his hand.
Devil and damnation!
My lord, pray pardon me —
[.Bowing to CROMWELL.] If I have sworn! But where’s the blood that’s sanctified enough To hear this torrent of obscenity Break forth at one’s own side?

[To TRICK, who is laughing heartily. Go, Edomite! Fly hence, impure Madianite! Avaunt — [Aside.] I have forgot that other name in “ ite.” My quatrain! Oh, those devils robbed my pocket!

CROMWELL (to LORD ROCHESTER). I fully understand the scorn you feel.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Not scorn.

CROMWELL. But this is not a church, my friend. I want to read what scandalizes you. Give it to me.

LORD ROCHESTER. A song from hell!

CROMWELL (impatiently).
Give quickly!

LORD ROCHESTER.
But —

CROMWELL (imperiously). Obey me, sir.
[ROCHESTER lows and hands the parchment to CROMWELL who casts his eyes over it, and says, as he gives it lack: —
Indeed, these verses Are most detestable.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). Detestable? You lie, detestable old regicide! Cromwell a judge of verses? Bah!

CROMWELL.
This quatrain Is truly stupid.

LORD ROCHESTER (casting a glance on the parchment). Yes, of such vile songs All authors are condemned; yet to my mind The verses are most aptly turned.

TRICK (low to the other Fools).
He is The author, never fear.
[Aloud.] I made those rhymes; But I admit, Apollo should inflict Me with a fourfold chastisement, they are So bad.

LORD ROCHESTER (giving a side glance at the Fools; aside).
Go on; jeer to your heart’s content, You monkeys of a leopard, popinjays To the great vulture!

CROMWELL. Learned Obededom, It is not in your line to criticise Such gallant, drowsy quatrains.

LORD ROCHESTER (putting the quatrain in his pocket; aside).
Frances may Look at my efforts with a friendlier eye.

TRICK (making LORD ROCHESTER an ironical salutation). My lord is much too flattering.

LORD ROCHESTER.
Flatter you? I’d like to beat you while God’s damning you, And ride you through the streets of London backwards Upon a mule.

TRICK.
You think the author merits Such grievous punishment?

LORD ROCHESTER (perplexed).
I don’t say that.

TRICK.
Do you suppose I would conceal his name?

LORD ROCHESTER (whose anxiety increases). Enough!

TRICK.
I am not undertaking his Defence; he well deserves the lash.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
The fool!

TRICK (laughing; low to the other Fools). I've mixed him well.
[Enter EARL OF CARLISLE.
Deuce take my Lord Carlisle! He's coming to upset our fun.

LORD ROCHESTER (breathing freely).
At last!
[CROMWELL draws the EARL OF CARLISLE hastily into a corner of the stage; the rest all retire, but cease not to watch CROMWELL and CARLISLE.

CROMWELL (low to EARL OF CARLISLE, who makes a profound obeisance).
Lord Ormond?

EARL OF CARLISLE. He has changed his lodging-place.

CROMWELL.
And Rochester?

EARL OF CARLISLE. Cannot be found. He's hiding.

CROMWELL.
Richard?

EARL OF CARLISLE.
He still persists in his denials. The torture might perhaps force out the truth.

CROMWELL (severely). Your head shall answer the least scratch on him. You know my horror of these tortures! What! My son upon the rack? Oh, no, my lord; That shall be saved for his accomplices. Where's Lambert?

EARL OF CARLISLE.
Gone back to his summer home, Where he is diligently growing flowers.

CROMWELL (bitterly). A touching occupation! All escape. At least I hold the crown safe in my hands.

EARL OF CARLISLE. To Westminster all London throngs. The soldiers And all the people boldly execrate The name of king that’s offered unto you!

CROMWELL. Weigh well your words!

EARL OF CARLISLE.
Your Highness will forgive.

CROMWELL (aside).
All’s going wrong.
[Aloud and with vexation. I bade you to be gay! What are you thinking of!
[Aside.] They ‘re listening, The varlets!
[Low to EARL OF CARLISLE. Place a double guard, my lord, Around this palace.
[EARL OF CARLISLE, exits. Well! the quatrain; come! [Aside] I suffocate with rage.
[THURLOE re-enters

THURLOE (to CROMWELL).
The sect of Ranters, Whom the Holy Ghost inspires, have come to you To ask for light upon a point of faith. They wait, my lord.

CROMWELL.
Let them come in at once [THURLOE exits. [Aside] If I were born a king, I’d send them back. A popular chief is doomed to lead the crowd By satisfying it.
[THURLOE re-enters, introducing the Ranters who are dressed in black, with blue stockings, large grey shoes, large grey hats, on which a small white cross is distinguishable. They keep their hats on.

CHIEF OF THE DEPUTATION (with solemnity). To Oliver, Captain and Judge in Zion, we are come. The saints who now in London congregate Holding your wisdom as a vase designed To overflow, we ask must they be burned Or hung, those men who speak not as St. John, — Those who say Sibboleth not Shibboleth?

CROMWELL (meditating). The question is important and demands Much thought. To speak it Sibboleth is to Commit idolatry and merit death, Which doth delight Beelzebub. But torment Ought to pursue a twofold object, and Humanity must claim its right. To give The body up should be to save the soul. Well, which is better, rope or fire, to win The soul of sinners back unto their God? Fire purifies —

LOED ROCHESTER (aside). Ropes strangle.

CROMWELL.
It is true, Daniel grew pure within the scorching flame, But gallows have their virtues too. A gibbet Was the cross.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). In all this I admire The way this Cromwell glides ‘mongst all these tortures With the assured air of one at home. He talks of this kind now of that, and goes From halter to the fagot, and from gallows Unto the stake without so much as winking. And out of them he draws a thousand charms.

CROMWELL (still reflecting). With what great care the truths are hid from us. It is an arduous task, and this one case I place amongst the most profound and delicate. [After a moment’s silence, turning abruptly to LORD

ROCHESTER. Clerk, you pronounce the verdict.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Pilate’s method. CROMWELL (to the Ranters, indicating LORD ROCHESTER). He is another Cromwell.

LORD ROCHESTER (bowing low).
Words divine.

CHIEF OF THE RANTERS (to LORD ROCHESTER). If any one should fall into this sin, Must it be rope or fire?

LORD ROCHESTER (firmly). The gallows, sir! And with him, ‘neath the same anathema Shall die his Amorrhean father and His mother Cethean.

CHIEF OF THE RANTERS (gravely).
The gallows, — why?

LORD ROCHESTER (embarrassed). Wherefore? Because — the ladder leads to it; That is the reason. God revealed unto A shepherd; by a ladder one ascends The sky.
[Aside.] ‘T is with great effort I refrain From laughing in their faces.

CROMWELL (looking at LORD ROCHESTER with satisfaction).
He is wise, Our chaplain.

CHIEF OF THE RANTERS (grasping ROCHESTER’S hand in thanks).
You have argued well. They’ll hang.
[They go out.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). Here are some wretches justly judged, my faith!

CROMWELL (to LORD ROCHESTER). I’m pleased with you.

LORD ROCHESTER (with an obeisance).
Your Highness is most gracious.

GIRAFF (to the other Fools). Even we could not have cut the knot With better grace.
[Re-enter THURLOE.

THURLOE (to CROMWELL).
The privy-council waits.

CROMWELL.
‘T is well.

THURLOE.
Your lordship knows the object?

CROMWELL (quickly).
Yes, I know; let them come in.

TRICK (low to Fools).
Come, merry-wits, To the magicians let us yield our place.
[Upon a gesture from CROMWELL the buffoons, LORD ROCHESTER, HANNIBAL SESTHEAD go out; two lackeys bear off the table laden with mugs, beer, and pipes. THURLOE introduces the privy-council, who advance in two rows, and stand each before a horse-shoe seat, while CROMWELL mounts to his arm-chair, and MILTON guided by his two pages, approaches the folding-chair and the table. WHITELOCKE, STOUPE, and the EARL OK CARLISLE take their respective places beside the Protector, upon the platform steps.

SCENE III.

CROMWELL, EARL OF WARWICK; LIEUTENANT-GENERAL FLEETWOOD, son-in-law of CROMWELL; EARL OF CARLISLE; LORD BROGHILL; MAJOR-GENERAL DESBOROUGH, brother-in-law of CROMWELL; WHITELOCKE; SIR CHARLES WOLSELEY; MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL; PIER- POINT; THURLOE; STOUPE; MILTON. Each of these personages wears the suit appropriate to his office. CROMWELL sits and puts on his hat; all sit, but remain uncovered.

CROMWELL (aside). Well! we must stand the chatter of these birds. [Aloud.] Sir councillors of my government, be seated All, and let us pray.
[He kneels; all the councillors do the same. After a few instants of meditation the Protector arises and re-seats himself. All follow his example. He continues, with a profound sigh.
For government, Alas! good sirs, I have no talent, but, Our God, whom my disinclination chafes Has moved the Parliament to force on me An overwhelming increase of my power. That is the object of our meeting here.

I must confer, discuss this o’er, with you. Is it desirable to have a king? Am I the one to choose? On these two points Give me your judgment absolute. Each one, In turn, reveal to us his thought, and speak As frankly, as I’m speaking now to you. The Earl of Warwick is most eminent Among you; let him be the first. Pray listen, Mr. Milton.

EARL OF WARWICK (rising).
There is naught on earth To equal your ability, your truth, Your character; and if you needed more, You are related by maternal side Unto the Warwicks; on your crest you bear The selfsame helmet. Since we need a king In every kingdom, surely your great self Is more desired than some poor king of chance. Why can’t a Rich as well as Stuart reign?
[Reseats himself.

CROMWELL (aside). One needs but luck to own a family. Cromwell unknown was nothing: on the throne The Riches are his cousins, ancestors, — My noble ancestors, inherited About four years ago!
[A loud.] Now, Fleetwood, you!

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL FLEETWOOD (rising). My lord, I vote republic! Father-in-law, I speak to you in all sincerity. For the republic we built Stuart’s scaffold. We have made war for it; we need it now. Let God alone wear the true diadem. Not Oliver the First, nor Charles the Second, Do we desire. No king! — [Re-seats himself.

CROMWELL.
You are a child, My son-in-law. Now you, Carlisle.

EARL OF CARLISLE.
My lord, Your broad, triumphant brow was made to fit A crown. — [Re-seats himself.

CROMWELL.
Broghill!

LORD BROGHILL (rising). My lord, I ask Permission to give utterance to my thoughts In private.

[.Aside.] Ormond's plot disturbs my mind. In this bold drama, what a part is mine! The councillor of Cromwell, confidant Of Charles. If silent, I'm a traitor; and A traitor if I speak.

CROMWELL. What reasons?

LORD BROGHILL.
State.
[CROMWELL signs to him to approach. STOUPE, THURLOE, WHITELOCKE, and CARLISLE, withdraw from them.

LORD BROGHILL (low to CROMWELL). Why don't you try to treat with Charles, — propose Your daughter's hand?

CROMWELL (surprised).
What? To — to the — young man?

LORD BROGHILL. Yes, Lady Frances' hand.

CROMWELL.
His family?

LORD BROGHILL. You 're crowned under the name of Oliver. You are both kings.

CROMWELL. And January thirtieth!

LORD BROGHILL. You give a father to him.

CROMWELL.
Give — but not Give back.

LORD BROGHILL. He will forget.

CROMWELL (with scornful laughter).
My crime? Oh, no! His mind will never comprehend it, nor His eye discern the goal on which my heart Was bent. He dissipates too much to pardon.

No! Your plan is mad.
[LORD BROGHILL returns to his place; the grand officers return to theirs. Speak, Desborough!

MAJOR-GENERAL DESBOROUGH (rising). Your plans are daring, my dear brother-in-law. What! Face again the woes of royalty? No king whatever! Soldiers will acclaim You Cromwell, and will curse you Oliver. Let courtiers, doctors, and let systems die.

CROMWELL.
You wage your war against a word, a name. If this good people want a king, why not? This name of king, proscribed by your cheap pride, What is it to a soldier? — but a plume Upon his helmet.
[He signs to WHITELOCKE to speak. WHITELOCKE arises and DESBOROUGH sits.

WHITELOCKE (aside, looking at DESBOROUGH). That plough-man to be questioned before me! [Aloud] My lord! I will be truthful, whate’er comes.
No people without laws: no laws without A king. Hear me, the argument’s worth while.
[Aside.] Before me, Desborough! homuncio! dolt.
[Aloud.] The king was always legislator called.
Lator, bearer, legis the law; whence comes That prince to law is as Adam to Eve.
No people sans a king, I say once more;
And, to confirm my theory, refer To Moses, Aaron, Glynn, St. John, Fountaine, And Selden, third book, chapter on “Abuse:”
“Quid de his censetur modo codicibus.”
You are decreed to reign, “ Dixi.” [lie-seats himself.

CROMWELL (complimenting him by look and gesture). How well does Latin season a discourse! Let us hear Wolseley.

SIE CHAELES WOLSELEY (rising). Without artifice I’ll undeceive your Highness in my turn. The chief of a free people, prophets say, “ Tanquam in medio positus,” not top. This chief, on whate’er seat he may be placed Is major singulis, minor universis; Therefore, king’s title hurts our privilege. “ Rex violat legem.” — [Re-seats himself.

CROMWELL. ‘T is college wit. I ‘m not familiar with your Latin words. Bad reasons. [To PIERPOINT.] You!

PIEEPOINT (rising).
Proud staff of Israel, Which through you dominates the earth to-day, These are my words. This English nation whose High Parliament is called imperial, Holds the right immemorial and grand To have a king for chief; its dignity Requires it. Deign, your Highness, to accept A title which offends you. ‘T is your duty Unto the people. ‘T were a grievous wrong To them to reign and not to be a king. [Re-seats himself.

CROMWELL.
You, Mr. Lenthall.

MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL (rising). Parliament commands The nation in which royalty resides. It rules the smallest as it rules the great. A Parliament proclaims you king, you should, Conformably to Roman law and to The decalogue, obey the Parliament And reign.

CROMWELL (aside). An artful courtier.

MR. WILLIAM LENTHALL (aside).
He’ll consent. I hope he’ll put me in the House of Lords.

THURLOE (low to CROMWELL). My lord, the Parliament is waiting still.

CROMWELL (low and impatiently).
Be silent!

THURLOE (same).
But —

CROMWELL (low to TLIURLOE). Before accepting it I must reflect.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL FLEETWOOD (rising). Ah, yes! my lord, refuse! For you — for your own honour — I —

CROMWELL (dismissing them with his hand).
Go, all.
And seek the Lord in prayer.
[All go out slowly in processional form. MILTON, who goes out last, pauses on the threshold of the door, lets them all depart, then leads his guides back to CROMWELL, who has left his arm-chair and is seated at the front of the stage.

SCENE IV.

CROMWELL, MILTON.

MILTON (aside).
I can’t refrain;
I must open my heart.
[Walking straight to CROMWELL. Look at me well! [He folds his arms; CROMWELL turns around and fixes a surprised and haughty glance upon him. I know your eyes flash angrily. You think How dare this Milton speak without my leave! I have no place ‘mongst your wise councillors; If some one sought my face amid the crowd, They’d tell him: “ These are orators beloved. This Warwick, Pierpoint; and that dumb man there, That’s Milton.” Well, since he belongs to you, What part give you to him? The part of silence!
That is his measure! I, whom worlds shall hear Some day, have not a voice in Cromwell’s council.
I, alone! But to be blind and dumb, That is too much to-day. Do you not see They ‘re luring you to death with that gold crown?
I’ve come to plead against yourself, my brother!
Cromwell wants to become a king! He says, “ For me the people were victorious;

The goal of all their combats, all their prayers, Their pious labours and their vigils brave, Their flowing blood and all their bitter tears, —
I was the goal of all that misery.
I reign, and they are satisfied. Why not Be happy, since at cost of priceless toil They’ve changed their kings, renewed their heavy chains.”
At such a thought, I blush e’en to my soul.
Oh, hear me, Cromwell; you are most concerned.
Thus, all the leaders of our civil wars, Vane, Pym, who at a word roused every town, The martyr of our rights, great Ireton, Your son-in-law, whom your vain pride exiles Within a royal sepulchre, and Sydney, Hollis, Martyn, Bradshaw, the mighty man Who read his death-warrant to Charles the First, And Hampden, young descended to the tomb, —
All worked for Cromwell and are now forgot.
‘T is you who ordered losses on each side, And robbed the dead upon the battle-field.
Rebellious only in your interest, For fifteen years we’ve played at liberty.
In this grand purpose you saw but a chance, And in the King’s death but a heritage!
I have no wish to humble you, my lord;
No one but you could have eclipsed yourself.
The mighty man of thought and man of sword, You, only, filled the measure of our dreams.
In all of Israel I loved you best, My hero; and none placed you nearer to God’s throne than I. Now, for a title, just A word as empty as it ringeth loud, The hero, saint, apostle vilifies Himself. Of his gigantic enterprise This was the end, — the purple, a soiled rag;
The sceptre, bawble for a silly child.
Thrown by the storm upon the heights of fate, Drunk with your destiny, you seek to bind This faded tinsel round your brow. Beware!
None is so blind as he whose eyes are dazed.
Of Oliver we ask, Where is Cromwell?
Where is his glory, which you’ve turned to shame?
Old man, where is the virtue of your youth?
Perhaps you say, ‘t is good when one is tired To fall asleep to murmurs of devotion Upon a throne, to be a king, to fill The towns with images of one’s proud self, To have one’s rising an event, to ride In chariots to Westminster, to pray At Temple Bar, to lord it through a servile Crowd, to be harangued by city clerks, To add some flourish to one’s crest! Oh, Cromwell!

Can that be all? Remember Charles the First!
Dare you pick up that crown from out his blood, And take his scaffold to rebuild a throne?
You want to be a king? Think of it well!
Have you no fear, draped as before with crape, This White-Hall where your reckless grandeur struts, Shall ope its fatal window once again?
You smile, but in your star have you such faith?
Think of Charles Stuart! Recollect! Reflect!
When this king died, when the sharp axe was raised, It was a headsman masked who struck the blow.
A king, he died in sight of all his people, And none afforded help; nor did he know What hand it was that robbed him of his life!
The road you travel leads to that same spot.
Your fate is also shrouded with a mask.
Fear lest the same veiled spectre waits for you Upon the scaffold which your acts have raised.
Oh, sad catastrophe of dreams so proud!
There’s but one side from which one mounts the throne;
On all the others yawns a precipice.
If you must grasp the tattered purple, dread To see assembled in this chamber here Another court, some day, where you’ve no place.
For it is possible, at last alarmed By your rebellious sword to sceptre changed, The people whom you have impressed so long Shall see your kingship, not your regicide.
You shrink not? Ah, for pity cast aside This painted sceptre and this mask of king.
Maintain the equilibrium of the world.
Be Cromwell! O’er the earth let a free nation Rule. Don’t fetter it. Respect its liberty.
How often this proud commonwealth has blushed To see you begging from the Parliament A little tyranny in change for gold.
Belie your base traducers! Stand aloft, Pure, incorruptible. Judge, legislator, Conqueror, apostle, — how much more Than king are these! Unto this pristine glory Re-ascend. One word created light.
Let Milton’s voice now re-create Cromwell!

[He throws himself at CROMWELL’S feet.

CROMWELL (bidding him rise, with a scornful gesture). The fellow speaks to me in wondrous style. I fear, John Milton, secretary and Interpreter of the State Council, you Have too much of the poet ‘bout your mind. You have forgotten, in your rhapsody That I am called your Highness and my lord. This flimsy title much humiliates me, But for the people I do sacrifice; And since it reigns, who honours, must obey. I have resigned myself; do you the same.
[MILTON rises proudly and goes out in silence. [.Alone.] At heart, he’s right. Yes, but he vexes me! Forever Charles the First! Yes, you are blind. Kings like King Oliver do not die thus. Fanatics stab them, but they are not judged. I’ll think about it though. A gloomy choice.

SCENE V.

CROMWELL, LADY FRANCES.

CROMWELL (perceiving LADY FRANCES, who enters). Ah, Frances! One might think she felt my woes, And came, a radiant joy, to banish grief. My fair young star, illuminating fate, Come hither, child. My human angel, come! What sweet instinct draws you most near to me When I’m most sad? Is it because you know I’m always happy when I see your face? Your brilliant eye, your pure and gentle voice, Have magic ways of bringing back my youth. With your dear arms give to your sire new life.
You, who know naught of all the sins of life, Embrace me. You ‘re my favourite child.

LADY FRANCES (embracing him joyfully).
My father, Tell me, is it the truth you will restore The throne?

CROMWELL. ‘T is said; I will.

LADY FRANCES.
Oh, joyful day! England will owe her happiness to you.

CROMWELL. Her happiness has been my only aim.

LADY FRANCES. My father and my lord, how pleased she'll be, — Your good, kind sister! We are then to see, After eight years of waiting, our King Charles.

CROMWELL (astonished). What do you say?

LADY FRANCES.
You are so just and good!

CROMWELL. 'T is not a Stuart who will be the king.

LADY FRANCES. Who then? A Bourbon. They've no lawful right Unto the throne of England.

CROMWELL.
No, they've not.

LADY FRANCES. Who, then, would dare to touch the sacred sceptre?

CROMWELL (aside). How to answer her! My name hangs heavy Upon my lips: to speak it seems a crime. [Aloud.] New days, my girl, demand new governments. Could you not think of one to fill the place?

LADY FRANCES.
Of whom?

CROMWELL (gently). Why not your father, — not Cromwell?

LADY FRANCES (quickly). For such a thought God would have punished me.

CROMWELL (aside).
Alas!

LADY FRANCES. I — do my father such a wrong? I — name my father an usurper? No!

CROMWELL. You over-estimate my virtue, child.

LADY FRANCES. That you have clothed yourself with transient power Is a misfortune of the times you keenly feel; But from the martyr king to steal the crown, Become one of his executioners, Reign by his murder! Oh!

LADY FRANCES. I do not know; then, I was young, alone. I wept for him, but did not understand.
What?

CROMWELL. In the King's trial did you never read The list of courtiers, judges, list of —

LADY FRANCES.
The regicides?

CROMWELL. Yes, Frances, — regicides!

LADY FRANCES. No, sir, I never heard their fearful names. I nothing knew but hatred of their crimes. Their names were never mentioned where we lived.

CROMWELL.
Who caused his death?

CROMWELL. My sister never spoke to you of me?

LADY FRANCES. Of you, oh, yes. I learned to love you there.

CROMWELL.
I hope so. Then you hate, with all your heart Those daring men who sentenced him to death?

LADY FRANCES. I hate them! May they be accursed — all!

CROMWELL.
All, Frances?

LADY FRANCES. Yes, sir, all.

CROMWELL (aside).
Ah, retribution! By my sweet daughter cursed and by my son Betrayed.

LADY FRANCES. May each one share the fate of Cain.

CROMWELL (aside). Implacable are innocence and virtue! And yet men think I go unpunished! Ah! This dearest daughter and my last-born child Is a relentless conscience in my path. The sweetness of her youthful eye and voice Abash this Cromwell who defied the world. Before her purity I have no strength. Shall I go on? Dare I attain the goal? Prostrate beneath the weight of my firm throne, The world will hold its peace. What will she say? What will her eyes say, in their eloquence, — Those winsome eyes which stab me to the heart. With what abhorrence will she learn the truth That I, a regicide, have dared to be A king. We'll send her back to her old home. Success demands the sacrifice of joy. I will renounce the light of my last years. Reality shall never sadden her. No! I'll not undeceive the only heart Which in the whole wide world believes in me. Pure angel! my dark fate shall not blight yours. We will be king, but you shall know it not.
[Aloud to FRANCES.] Keep your white heart; I love you thus, my child. — [Goes out.

LADY FRANCES (looking after him). What is it? In his eyes I saw a tear. Good father! How he loves me!
[DAME GUGGLIGOY and LORD ROCHESTER enter.

SCENE VI.

LADY FRANCES, LORD ROCHESTER, DAME GUGGLIGOY.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (to LORD ROCHESTER, in the background).
There she is, Alone!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). What magic lies in gold doubloons! They've gained a grim duenna's complaisance And won the saints who act as musketeers. The dame succumbed immediately; I feared At first Mount Tabor's pillars would not yield; But when gold touches these apostles' palms, The round heads whirl at a tremendous speed. They 're tired of Cromwell, who oppresses them. To Ormond I've sent word that the park gate Will be surrendered to our men to-night. Now, for fair Frances. My heart's mad with love, And I've some sovereign methods of success, — I've quatrains, and I've gold doubloons to spend. Let's try our fate.
[He approaches LADY FRANCES, who does not see him; she seems absorbed in a deep reverie.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (looking at the purse which she holds in her hand). A sum by no means small. [Aside, looking at LOUD ROCHESTER. He's really handsome, this young nobleman. To be disguised, dare everything for love, Young men are mad. Alas! each has his turn. Thus Amadis of Gaul had done, I'm sure. Should I permit it? Am I doing right? This Cavalier said not one word to me. He only gave me money.
[Stopping LORD ROCHESTER, who is about to address LADY FRANCES.
If you please, One instant, sir.

LORD ROCHESTER (turning around). For what?

DAME GUGGLIGOY (leading him to the other corner of the stage).
Only a moment. LORD ROCHESTER.
Why?

DAME GUGGLIGOY (smiling at him). You have no more to say to me?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). The purse was heavy and should have sufficed.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (aside). I hope he'll not humiliate me by offering More doubloons.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside, feeling in his empty pockets). I've not another sou. Let's play upon the weakness of old age And stop her ears with gallantries.
[.Aloud.] What tongue Could ever say all that it wished to you? Ah, if no weightier cares had brought me here —

DAME GUGGLIGOY (stepping back). My lord, I fear you 're flattering me.

LORD ROCHESTER.
Oh, no!
My time, alas! is short.
[Takes a step towards LADY FRANCES; DAME GUGGLIGOY stops him.

DAME GUGGLIGOY.
You've only eyes For my young mistress, that's the truth.

LORD ROCHESTER.
I swear That you are charming. If I had to choose — [Aside.] Does she intend to keep me till I mould?

DAME GUGGLIGOY (aside). He has good taste. I am worth looking at, When I've had time to ornament myself. Indeed, I am no subject for one's scorn In my pink petticoat and farthingale; When I've my love-knots and my gorgeous sleeves And my two panniers well poised on my hips. [Aloud] You think so?

LORD ROCHESTER (turning to FRANCES).
Suffer me —

DAME GUGGLIGOY (holding him back).
I feel remorse!
Sir, 't is my duty to protect this child.

LORD ROCHESTER. Your eyes, believe me, madame, in their prime, Would have made Galaor faithless, Esplandian Himself inconstant.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (still keeping him).
Oh, I feel so culpable! If any one should come!

LORD ROCHESTER.
Oh, Sir Pandarus Of Troy had burned to wear your colours.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (aside). How grand he talks!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Are n't we ridiculous, We two?

DAME GUGGLIGOY. Yes, on my soul, I swear that now I feel such scruples they congeal my blood.
[Taking his hands.

LORD ROCHESTER. Your hands are velvet — [Aside] Must I waste on her, This old hag dried up even to her claws, All that love's daintiest fancy has devised? What will remain for Frances?

DAME GUGGLIGOY.
Let me be!

LORD ROCHESTER.
For Guggligoy, Mars would have quitted Venus.

DAME GUGGLIGOY. I suffocate! Surely, this must be love! [Aloud] None but a husband must address me so.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). She wants a husband! God! I pity him. And as for flattery, she'll get no more From me. The obstinate old fool! In Spain Alone, 'mid mules and old duennas will She find her like.

DAME GUGGLIGOY. You seem to me a man Of noble taste; I want your frank opinion.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
My blood boils!

DAME GUGGLIGOY (indicating LADY FRANCES). Pray, what is there about Those giddy things to please —

LORD ROCHESTER.
There is, you know

DAME GUGGLIGOY. Explain how they can rouse ardours of love. What charm about that pretty, vapid face?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). She asks, with her Chinese complexion! Oh!

DAME GUGGLIGOY. They've youth, I grant; but that's not very much. Just devil's beauty —

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
While his ugliness You've got. The deuce! How to get rid of her? [Aloud] Let me converse two moments with your charge, And afterwards, my radiant rosebud, we — Faith of a Cavalier! I'll find for you Things which you do not even dream about. [Aside] A door to Bedlam.

DAME GUGGLIGOY.
Good! I will wait near.

LORD ROCHESTER (sighing with relief).
At last!

DAME GUGGLIGOY. Be careful. What e'er else you do, Do not betray me. I'd be burned alive.

LORD ROCHESTER. Be easy! Now walk off a little way.
[Aside, watching her go off. I'm sure her bones are dry enough to burn.

SCENE VII.

LADY FRANCES, LORD ROCHESTER.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). I'm free of her. For love I'll now dare all.
[.Looking at FRANCES, who sits motionless and thoughtful. What features and what grace! Oh, my fair soul! I'll walk around before I make attack. A young girl is a fort, I have observed. The eye-winks and the charm one puts in dress, The gentle cares and tender words are trenches Made in zigzag shape; the declaration, — That is the assault; and on the quatrain A full surrender follows quick. I can't Do things quite systematically here, So I will cut preliminaries short.
[Advancing to FRANCES. Aloud with a profound salutation.
My lady — miss —

LADY FRANCES (turns with an astonished air). Sir!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
I am all confused.

LADY FRANCES (smiling). Ah, you 're the chaplain!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Yes, accursed garb, I can put on the gayest airs I please, — She'll only see a parson and Roundhead.

LADY FRANCES. Give me a benediction, holy man! On what text will you speak?

LORD ROCHESTER.
On passion, please.

LADY FRANCES. Your zeal inspires attention in my heart. A humble sinner stands before your eyes, My father.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). " Father "! My disguise is good. [.Aloud.] My daughter, listen.

LADY FRANCES.
Yes, with great respect.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Respectability’s a damned thing.
[Aloud] My daughter, listen. ‘T is not kind of you To strew disaster broadcast in your path.

LADY FRANCES (astonished).
I?

LORD ROCHESTER. Yes; one look destroys a hundred souls.

LADY FRANCES.
Oh, you are wrong!

LORD ROCHESTER. Indeed, I ‘m not.

LADY FRANCES.
Explain.

LORD ROCHESTER. One of your victims stands before you now.

LADY FRANCES. What have I done to you? If I’ve wronged you, I’ll go and ask my father —

LORD ROCHESTER (stopping her).
Do not grieve. Of all this sorrow you ‘re quite innocent

LADY FRANCES. I do not understand you.

LORD ROCHESTER.
Candid soul!

LADY FRANCES. If I unconsciously have done you harm, I must make reparation.

LORD ROCHESTER (placing his hand on his heart). Ah!

LADY FRANCES.
It is My duty so to do.

LORD ROCHESTER. What words are these? You might be exorable to prayers of mine? With joy you daze me, my adored princess.
[He tries to take her hand; she moves away.

LADY FRANCES.
I am no princess. One adores but God.
You frighten me! — [Starting to go away.

LORD ROCHESTER.
Ah! Frances, do not go!

LADY FRANCES. With what familiar tone he speaks! [.Approaching LORD ROCHESTER with a compassionate manner.
Perhaps He's suffering with his head.

LORD ROCHESTER.
No, with his heart.

LADY FRANCES.
Poor man!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). Now let us scale the walls. She pities, Therefore love lags not far behind that state. [Aloud,.'] Give back my life —

LADY FRANCES.
Yes, you shall have a doctor. This is a sudden fever, certainly.

LORD ROCHESTER. For four years now I've hung upon your steps. [Aside] Lies are effective —

LADY FRANCES.
What is it you want?

LORD ROCHESTER. To die! Your eyes alone can heal my wounds.

LADY FRANCES (moving lack). He terrifies me much.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). That’s flattering. [Aloud, and clasping his hands with an air of supplication. My queen, my deity, my nymph, my all!

LADY FRANCES. How many names! I have but one, — Frances.

LORD ROCHESTER. I’m all a-fire and all a-chill for you. For love of you I came in this disguise. I am no chaplain; I’m a Cavalier. Had I but India’s wealth to offer you! Oh, to a love which lasts for twelve long years, Will you be cold and cruel, with your gentle eyes, As Ophis, priestess was to Tiridates? For your beauty, I would have crossed Asia. You fly from me, alas! and do not speak. Then must I die of this great pain of love! Just one small word, my splendid tigress, speak! That word will make you to this humble slave The most celestial object of earth’s love.

LADY FRANCES (opening wide and astonished eyes). What mean such words?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
She stands in ecstasy. It must be, for I’ve spoken word for word, Text of “ Ibrahim or Bassa the Great,” — There, where Lysander, Turk, speaks to Zulmis. It is pure Scudery. I will go on! [Aloud] Ungrateful woman!
[Holding back LADY FRANCES, who seeks to go.
Stay, or I will drown Myself in the Euphrates.

LADY FRANCES (laughing).
The Euphrates?

LORD ROCHESTER. Instead of that, fulfil your first design. Yes, take this sword and pierce my throbbing heart. [Puts his hand to his side, searching for his sword; aside. No sword! With this damned costume, how can one Affect to kill himself, which must be done; How to continue in this gallant strain? We have a quatrain, though, if not a sword. If she succumbs not now, God take my soul! [Aloud] Give ear unto your slave, my sovereign.

[Presenting a rolled parchment tied with a pink ribbon. The picture of my heart is painted here. It would have been destroyed by fire and flood, If fire had not dried up my tears, madame, And if, in turn, tears had not quenched the fire. Take, read, and judge of my most ardent love.
[Throwing himself at LADY FRANCES’ feet.

LADY FRANCES (throwing his parchment to the floor and stepping back with dignity). I understand you. You are insolent. You’ve dared to force an entrance to this house.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). This little maid is not so easy won.

LADY FRANCES. Rise, or I’ll call for help.

LORD ROCHESTER (still on his knees).
No; I stay here.

LADY FRANCES. You will repent your insolence with grief, If my —

SCENE VIII.

The same. CROMWELL.

CROMWELL (■’perceiving LORD ROCHESTER at LADY FRANCES’ feet).
What brings you to my daughter’s knees?

LORD ROCHESTER (aghast, without changing his position; aside).
I’m lost. ‘T is Cromwell! For this trifling sin I’ll hate to hang! Caught in the very act. He’ll find no punishment too great for me.

CROMWELL. Well done, my chaplain!

LADY FRANCES (aside).
Pity, one should have For a poor fool.

CROMWELL (to LORD ROCHESTER, stupefied). My vengeance you forgot.

LADY FRANCES (aside). My father will annihilate this man.

CROMWELL.
This idiot has dared to love my daughter; And my Eve harkkd to the serpent's wily tongue. Oh, Frances, you allowed —

LADY FRANCES (embarrassed).
My father, no!
'T was not of me this gentleman was speaking.

CROMWELL.
Upon what theme was he required to kneel?

LADY FRANCES. He spoke in ardent terms of love, 't is true; But't was to win me to assist his suit. He loves one of my women.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside, rising with astonishment).
What is this?

CROMWELL.
Which one?

LADY FRANCES (smiling). Dame Guggligoy.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
For shame!

CROMWELL (appeased).
That alters all.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). And I must choose between The gallows or the old duenna! Zounds! She might have left selection unto me.

CROMWELL (to LORD ROCHESTER). Why did you not speak out at once, my friend, Since joys of flesh do yet appeal to you?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). Flesh? Yes, — enough to stick a set of bones Into an old duenna’s shape.

CROMWELL.
Your wish Shall be fulfilled. I like not to be feared. I’m pleased with you. I’ll give your beauty’s hand.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). My beauty? — an old spectre to be damned; A body to repel carnivorous beasts, A face to make witches miscarry.

CROMWELL (aside).
True, I thought him, first, a man of better taste. [Aloud.] I wish you to be married.

LORD ROCHESTER (bowing).
You ‘re too kind, My lord.

CROMWELL. All your desires shall be fulfilled.
[DAME GUGGLIGOY enters.

SCENE IX.

The same. DAME GUGGLIGOY.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (aside, terrified). The lovers and the father are together! All is lost!

CROMWELL (perceiving DAME GUGGLIGOY). ‘T is you, good woman!

DAME GUGGLIGOY (aside).
Oh, My knees bend under me.

CROMWELL.
You ‘re wanted here.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (with terror). I — I — my lord?
Heaven!

CROMWELL. You knew the chaplain loved you?

DAME GUGGLIGOY.

CROMWELL. And you approved?

DAME GUGGLIGOY.
I knew — approved? I — oh, my lord, I swear to you —
[.Aside.] He’s told — The little traitor! It is easy seen By his dark looks that something has occurred.

CROMWELL.
I know the truth.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (aside). Indeed, I thought you did. [A pause. DAME GUGGLIGOY appears stupefied; LADY FRANCES smilingly watches LORD ROCHESTER, who turns his disappointed eyes from the young girl to the duenna.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). The change is unexpected and most rude.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (throwing herself at CROMWELL’S feet). Have mercy on me! Mercy — oh, my lord!

CROMWELL (turning away). She acts the part of prude. [Signing to her to get up.

Come, come, arise. This Master Obededom is our friend. His heart holds nothing which is not allowed.

DAME GUGGLIGOY. May he aspire, then, to the one he loves?

CROMWELL. Whom does he love so high up? You?

DAME GUGGLIGOY.
What, I?

CROMWELL. You are the one, — ask him.
[To ROCHESTER.] IS it not true?

LORD ROCHESTER (embarrassed).
I confess —

DAME GUGGLIGOY. Is it, in truth, for me you burn?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
As if I were in hell.
[Aloud] Madame —

CROMWELL.
Come, come, Let all the ardours of your love burst forth. I give permission. Tell Dame Guggligoy That on your knees you asked my daughter's help —

DAME GUGGLIGOY (to LORD ROCHESTER, who is speechless). For that then, you abominable man — Without my own consent —

LORD ROCHESTER (easting a glance of reproach at LADY FRANCES, who is laughing).
I know I've done Unpardonable things.

DAME GUGGLIGOY.
Audacious wretch! My anger — dread it, sir!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).

With her grey hair, Which formerly was red.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (aside).
A charming man! [Aloud] My little upstart, you’re in love with me?

LORD ROCHESTER. I cannot say the contrary to you! [Aside] Oh, Wilmot, how thy straits would please the King!
‘Twixt Lady Seymour and Dame Guggligoy!

DAME GUGGLIGOY.
You love me?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). If Cromwell heard not my words! I must he tender under pain of death. [Aloud] I love you!

DAME GUGGLIGOY (lackadaisically). ‘T is too much!

LORD ROCHESTER.
I’m of your mind.

DAME GUGGLIGOY. You wish to marry me?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside, biting his lips).
Ah, there’s the rub!
[Aloud, with embarrassment.
I do not say —

DAME GUGGLIGOY (indignant at his hesitation).
Know you that’t is an honour! Insolent! concupiscence, for shame! — [Weeping.

CROMWELL (to LORD ROCHESTER). Console her, since you want her for your wife.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Good God!

Consent.
[Aside.] Old leather burnt with temper.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (sighing, and dropping her eyes). I will sacrifice myself.
[Extending her hand to him, which he takes with loathing.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). And so will I!

DAME GUGGLIGOY. I'm kind, and I consent to be embraced.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). A favour? Give me gallows and exemption! [DAME GUGGLIGOY presents her cheek to him. himself to place a kiss and a grimace upon

DAME GUGGLIGOY. I'll turn to you also the other cheek.

LORD ROCHESTER.
A thousand thanks!

DAME GUGGLIGOY. You 're sulking.

LORD ROCHESTER.
I am not.

CROMWELL.
He forces it.
No scandal here. We'll end the matter now. You shall be married on the spot. Your joys Are not well suited to a long delay. I will content you both at once.

LORD ROCHESTER.
But I —

CROMWELL.
Love is impatient. I know that. What ho!
[Three Musketeers enter.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). Who would believe this is my wedding day?

CROMWELL (to Chief of Musketeers). Cham Biblechan, one of our Scottish seers Must marry instantly, by Holy Book, Sir Obededom and Dame Guggligoy.
[To LORD ROCHESTER and DAME GUGGLIGOY. He will conduct you.
[TO LORD ROCHESTER.] Cham's an Anabaptist, Like yourself.

LORD ROCHESTER (bowing respectfully, aside). What thoughtfulness!

CROMWELL.
I know You are a dogmatist.

LADY FRANCES (smiling, and looking sidewise at LORD ROCHESTER as he bows to her, aside).
Well caught, young man!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). She's played me a fine trick. I like her, though. I love that ruse and innocence well mixed. Her childish malice and her kindly heart Defends from sire and gives me to the maid. She's found a way to punish and to save.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (to LORD ROCHESTER). Come, come, my love! How motionless you stand!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside, sighing deeply). I follow Sibyl into hymen's hell.
[.He goes out with DAME GUGGLIGOY and the Musketeers.

CROMWELL (to LADY FRANCES). I leave you, to attend a sermon preached By Lockyer upon Rome and Ammon's priests.
[He goes out.

SCENE X.

LADY FRANCES, alone.

LADY FRANCES. He cut a sorry figure, the poor man! I fear the punishment was too severe, — Thus to be wedded, without knowing why. And to be forced to love Dame Guggligoy. I half repent! I did him wrong. But then, My father would have treated him still worse. [Perceiving the rolled parchment which has remained on the floor.
There is his note. I wonder what he said. I will not read it.
[Looking at the parchment with curious and eager eyes. Shall I not forgive? No pity for him? Yes, I'll read his words. No harm is done if I replace them quick. I owe it to him, he endured so much. [Picks up the parchment hastily, unfastens it, unrolls it, and pauses.
'T is wrong! Shall I, since all is ended now?
Come, let me read! — [Reading.
"My lord " — my lord? Strange man! He called me object, princess, nymph, queen, angel; And now he says, " my lord "! A lunatic!
[Continuing to read. " All has worked well;" he writes just as he talks. No one can understand. " All has worked well" — What has? Let us go on. — [Reading.
"To-night, at midnight, At the gate, present yourself." In love With me — He meant to take me off! — [Reading.
"I have Seduced the guard." That's it: the fool was sure He could not be refused. " The password's given, And our success is sure." A modest man! [Continuing. " You are to say ' Cologne;' they'll say the rest." Less clear. — [Reading.
"You can, thanks to their friendly aid, Seize Cromwell, whom I shall have put to sleep. " The Devil's Chaplain."
Ah! what have I read? What light breaks on my horror-stricken eyes? It is my father that this villain wants!
[Examining the paper carefully. What is the address? " Bloum, Rat House, The Strand." The traitor handed this note by mistake. I must go warn my father of the plot. Some one is coming. Let me hurry, quick! It may be the assassin.
[Rushes off hastily, taking the parchment with her. DAVENANT enters.

SCENE XI.

DAVENANT, afterwards LORD ROCHESTER.

DAVENANT (alone). The Protector Has sent for me. I wonder why he did. Oh, nothing! Just pure curiosity. [Enter ROCHESTER. [.Perceiving ROCHESTER.] Who is this hypocrite? God, what a sight! A saint, of course; some holy Puritan.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside, without perceiving DAVENANT). Alas! it's done. I am a married man.
[Advancing to the front and recognizing DAVENANT. Why, Davenant!

DAVENANT (aside). He knows my name!
[Aloud] Well, sir — Do I not recognize Lord Rochester?

LORD ROCHESTER. Be silent! — [They grasp hands.

DAVENANT (indicating disguise). You 're a master-hand at this. I think, if you were married, your own wife Would hardly know you under this disguise.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside, with profound sigh). God grant it!
[Aloud] Davenant, no pleasantries.

DAVENANT. Your lordship never has refused before To crack a joke at husbands.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Different now! Can any one be married and still laugh? I'd like to see that sort of man.
[Aloud.'] Enough! What chance has brought you to our house? Your face Quite startled me!

DAVENANT (laughing). “ Our house “! You speak with ease. My lord has soon acclimatized himself. Fear nothing. Cromwell always bids me here When I return from foreign journeyings. How do you like your life with him?

LORD ROCHESTER.
Full well.
Since Milton is my sponsor, he’s most kind, And does me many favours in his way.
[.Aside.] I’d gladly have dispensed with the last one.
[Aloud.] You know, of course, I came here just in time.
A traitor, unknown spy within our ranks, Has told this Cromwell everything; but thanks To my discovery, Ormond disappeared, and I Concealed myself at Cromwell’s.

DAVENANT.
Dastard spy! Sir Richard wished to have him flayed alive. We’ve charged him to unearth the villain.

LORD ROCHESTER.
Well!
We’re fortunate to have the counter-mine.
[<Showing his vest.
I have your vial here. All terminates To-night.

DAVENANT. Naught is suspected by Cromwell?

LORD ROCHESTER.
No. Only three of us prepared the plan.

DAVENANT.
The guards are won?

LORD ROCHESTER. They are.

DAVENANT.
‘T was difficult?

LORD ROCHESTER. Not so. Puritanism is dying fast. Gold renders saints quite docile.

DAVENANT.
You are sure Old Noll has no suspicions about me?

LORD ROCHESTER. You’d be arrested if he had your name.

SCENE XII.

DAVENANT, LORD ROCHESTER, DAME GUGGLIGOY.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (to LORD ROCHESTER). What, sir? You fly already from your love?

DAVENANT (starting back). Whom is she after?

DAME GUGGLIGOY (to LORD ROCHESTER). I lament in vain, I call, I weep, I languish, and I die; I wail enough to melt a rock to tears, But you come not. Abandoned wife am I. Oh, is your passion so soon spent, my lord? Behold my grief! My heart to water turns.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside, turning away his eyes). The awful creature! Is this sad or droll?
[Low to DAVENANT, indicating DAME GUGGLIGOY. What do you think of her?

DAVENANT (same).
What spectre is’t?

LORD ROCHESTER (same low tones). It is my wife.

DAVENANT (laughing). Your wife?

LORD ROCHESTER.
Yes, on my word. Come, poet, an epithalamium, quick!

DAVENANT.
My lord is jesting!

LORD ROCHESTER. Nothing is less droll.

DAME GUGGLIGOY. Where are your ardent vows, you traitor?

DAVENANT (low to LORD ROCHESTER).
Faith!
Your mistress is of most uncommon sort. My compliments upon such rare good luck.

LORD ROCHESTER (low to DAVENANT). Luck? She's my wife, — that's all. No insults, please.

DAME GUGGLIGOY. Superfluous are my tears. He heeds me not!

DAVENANT.
While she is raving, please explain to me.

LORD ROCHESTER (low to DAVENANT). Lord Cromwell gave me, out of his kind heart, The woman and her dowry.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (pulling LORD ROCHESTER'S sleeve).
My dear husband —

DAVENANT (low to LORD ROCHESTER, who is trying to keep DAME GUGGLIGOY off).
How —

LORD ROCHESTER (low to DAVENANT). I will tell you by and by. Just now This Sibyl has a right to use that name. We did it; in a chapel made of guards, A drum rolled out the sermon, and we were United by a corporal. I feared We might be forced by martial law to use A camp-bed for a nuptial couch; but no, That we escaped.

DAVENANT (laughing). I wish I could have seen The soldier marry this duenna to Our almoner.

LORD ROCHESTER (low). That is the way we do.

DAVENANT.
Such weddings make a grand conclusion to Dramatic work. The corporal joins the beauty Unto the lover. All is said.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (sharply).
Of whom Speak you in those low tones? He flies from me! Did fate ordain I should descend to this, — I, not bad-looking, who have safe and sound Two hundred jacobuses bright as new!

DAVENANT (to LORD ROCHESTER). You've gained, my friend, a great inheritance, — Two hundred jacobuses and three teeth.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (to LORD ROCHESTER). You treacherous man, who gave me such fair words!

LORD ROCHESTER (to DAVENANT). She dreamed that.
[To DAME GUGGLIGOY.] I beg you, leave us in peace, And may God damn you, madame. [Pushing her off.

DAME GUGGLIGOY.
All alike!
They 're tender to their loves, hard to their wives;
Cats before marriage, tigers afterwards.
[To LORD ROCHESTER.] Barbarous man, to change myrtle to Cyprus! Ah! Abandon your young wife!

LORD ROCHESTER.
Hush, you old witch! Were Satan dead, you 'd be his dowager.

DAME GUGGLIGOY. What language for a saint!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Yes, I forgot. [Aloud] O woman, I have made a vow —
[Aside] Come forth, My parson air!
[Aloud] Of chastity.

DAME GUGGLIGOY.
Of what?

LORD ROCHESTER. In vain you do entreat, “ Come sleep with me.” I have renounced voluptuousness.

DAME GUGGLIGOY.
Indeed!
You drive me from our couch connubial?

LORD ROCHESTER. No, madame, you can stay long as you please. ‘T is only mine own self I must exile.

DAME GUGGLIGOY. This outrage! Serpent, monster, adder, wretch, Beware of my revenge!

LORD ROCHESTER (drawing back).
Look out for eyes. This fairy has hooked nails.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (weeping).
Yet hear me! Since A husband’s rights have come to you —

LORD ROCHESTER.
Oh, rage!

DAME GUGGLIGOY. What ice has come to chill your former fire? Why fly? What demon holds you in his power?

LORD ROCHESTER.
You ask me that?

DAME GUGGLIGOY. Come here; sit down by me.
I long for you!

LORD ROCHESTER (hurrying off). What shall I do to-night?

DAME GUGGLIGOY (running after him). Ungrateful wretch! — [Goes out after him.

DAVENANT (alone, shrugging his shoulders).
Wilmot must be insane. What folly's this? Unite to tragedy This masquerade!
[Goes to the back of stage and watches them off. CROMWELL enters.

SCENE XIII.

DAVENANT, CROMWELL.

CROMWELL (holding LORD ROCHESTER'S parchment in his hand; without seeing DAVENANT and without being seen by him).
Behold! another trap, In which I almost fell. From mine own palace They would abduct me! All their madness may Mean triumph in the end. Without my daughter, A simple child, the kings had lost their master. Oh, fools, who dare not face the light of day, To come to London to abduct Cromwell! How could I have foreseen this madman's plan? I vainly seek instruction from this note. But fortunately, they are all insane. To court the daughter and dethrone the sire! Go to his den to set the lion's trap, And frolic with his whelps before his eyes! Were they not madmen, they'd be idiots. The " Devil's Chaplain." Ah, you double face! This Obededom is a saint — outside. Who is he? Some young chief of Cavaliers. Which? Wilmot Rochester or Buckingham? A gallant at the Court — apostle here! It must be either Wilmot or Villiers. My soldiers won! Then I am loved no more! We'll see! I have already made my plan. But yet, to tempt them better to the bait, I wish I knew the rest of the password. However, I am ready for them all, — Ormond, and his Episcopalians too.

[DAVENANT, coming to the front, perceives CROMWELL.

DAVENANT (aside).
‘T is Cromwell!
[Aloud, bowing.] Highness —

CROMWELL (with an air of agreeable surprise). .
You’ve arrived in time, Good Davenant.

DAVENANT (with another profound obeisance). Entirely at your service.

CROMWELL (smiling). Are you still lodging at The Siren, sir?

DAVENANT.
I am, my lord.

CROMWELL.
A comfortable place. How is your health, by grace of God?

DAVENANT (bowing).
My health Is excellent.

CROMWELL. You had a pleasant journey? Were you quite satisfied?

DAVENANT. I was, my lord.
[Aside.] Mere words!

CROMWELL.
You had some object in your travels? Business or pleasure?

DAVENANT.
For my health, my lord.

CROMWELL.
Your health?
[Aside.] I doubt if that improved it, sir. [Aloud] ‘T is well to make a change of domicile And breathe new air. What places did you visit?

DAVENANT (embarrassed). The north of France, my lord —

CROMWELL.
Too small a place; The borders of the Rhine are better far. I’ve always longed to visit them myself. Did you go there?

DAVENANT (with increasing embarrassment). I did.

CROMWELL.
And you did well. You saw Frankfort and Maintz and Freves, of course; Cologne?

DAVENANT (aside). His smiling manner frightens me. [Aloud.] I did, my lord.

CROMWELL.
Cologne, — city of wisdom! The land of sainted Bruno and Agrippa!

DAVENANT (anxiously to himself). Let us make haste to leave Cologne.
[Aloud.] I went To Bremen, stopped at Spa —

CROMWELL.
Suppose we tarry At Cologne.
[Aside.] He’d like to be in Bremen now. [Aloud] The University? What century?

DAVENANT.
Fourteenth.

CROMWELL. A very interesting place Unto a cultured mind. You saw it?

DAVENANT (aside).
God!
Can he suspect?
[Aloud.] I? No! See what, my lord?

CROMWELL.
The great cathedral! ‘T is the lateral door Which is the most admired.

DAVENANT.
He does not know. [Aloud.] Yes, but the whole effect is in bad taste.

CROMWELL.
Bad taste? That’s such an easy thing to say. It is an noble edifice, and ought To be admired. There’s naught to mar its beauty Except the thought that heathens worshipped there.
[After a pause.
So, in the city, you saw nothing more?

DAVENANT.
Nothing, my lord.

CROMWELL (smiling).
You did not even make A courteous visit to a certain Stuart?

DAVENANT (aside, stupefied).
An unexpected blow!
[Aloud.] I swear to you I saw him not, my lord.

CROMWELL.
I know how faithful Are all true Papists to their vows. Who then Put out the candles? Was it Lord Mulgrave?

DAVENANT (aside).
He must know all.

CROMWELL. I’ve confidence in you, And do believe you did not see the King. You wear a hat of a most curious shape, Will you not kindly make exchange with mine?

DAVENANT (aside).
I am betrayed!

[Aloud] My lord —

CROMWELL (snatching the hat from him).
Give it to me.
I thank you.
[He feels inside of the lining and draws out the royal message, which he reads with eagerness. He breaks out into expressions of triumph while reading it.
It is well. The “ Devil’s Chaplain.” Is my Lord Rochester. ‘T is well arranged, — Quite wonderful. It seems a simple thing To pull wool o’er my eyes, deceive me, drug me, To carry me away! A splendid plan! [To DAVENANT.] Your tragi-comedies can have no peers If they are equal to your perfidies. [To THURLOE, who enters.] See that this man’s conducted to the Tower.
[THURLOE goes out, and comes back accompanied by six Puritan musketeers, between whom DAVENANT places himself without resistance. CROMWELL dismisses him with a bitter and ironical laugh. Charles Stuart coiffed you; I give you a home. God keep you well!

DAVENANT (aside). Oh, sad catastrophe!
[Goes out with guards.

THURLOE (to CROMWELL).
The Parliament, your Highness, which has been Exhorted by a saint, at your command, Brings divers bills for sanction unto you, And notably the Humble Address or law Offering the crown to you.

CROMWELL.
Let them come in. [Alone.] A gloomy project this. And they must fall By their own artifice. I want to catch Them in the trap which they’ve prepared for me. [Looking first at ROCHESTER’S parchment, then at DAVENANT’S message. Now, I hold everything in my own hands.
[Making a gesture of shutting the two hands together. There’s nothing left to me but to crush them.
God has declared for me. Behold! here comes The Parliament.
[The Parliament, conducted by THURLOE, enter in their dress of ceremony. At the head of the members marches THE SPEAKER, in robes, followed by the clerks of the Parliament; he is preceded by the sergeants of the House, the mace-bearers carrying their maces, and the usher, with the black rod. CROMWELL mounts to his protectoral chair and the Parliament pauses a few steps away from him, outside of the circle of stools.

SCENE XIV.

CROMWELL, the Parliament, EARL OF CARLISLE, WHITELOCKE, STOUPE, THURLOE. Upon a sign from CROMWELL, CARLISLE and THURLOE draw near to the Protector.

CROMWELL (low to THE EARL OF CARLISLE).
My lord, see that the soldiers Who are stationed at the park gate for this night Be all arrested on the instant.
[EARL OF CARLISLE bows and goes out. Low to THURLOE, while handing him ROCHESTER'S parchment.
This Must go at once to Bloum, upon the Strand.
[Indicating the superscription on the letter.
You'll find there his address, — or better still, Sir Richard Willis shall be messenger.
Go!

THURLOE (bows, and takes parchment).
Yes, my lord. — [Goes out.

CROMWELL (aside).
This Bloum conceals Ormond, Whom my star now gives up to me.
[Seats himself, and puts his hat on. Ah, yes!
[WHITELOCKE and STOUPE take their places at his side; aloud.
We give you our attention, gentlemen.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT (standing, and uncovered, as are all those who accompany him). My lord, we bear the bills of Parliament. Your Highness will perceive in its designs Our strong allegiance to the good old cause. Deign to confirm our laws.

CROMWELL.
We’ll see anon.

THE SPEAKER (turning to THE CLERK). Your duty, clerk of Parliament.

THE CLERK OF PARLIAMENT (with loud voice, holding open the record of deliberation).
“This day June twenty-fifth, ninth year of liberty Which God has given us. These are the bills, Last voted on in Parliament. Primo: Considering we may sin imprudently As Noah did, from love of vintage fruit, And swear by saints’ names not maliciously, Aforesaid Parliament declares its will To soften penalties upon these points, And limits punishment unto the lash For drunkards, rope for those who swear.”

CROMWELL.
Too mild!
He who blasphemes the God to whom we pray Is equal to assassins and actors. Why a less punishment? These laws are transient; We do consent.
[THE SPEAKER and members of Parliament make a profound obeisance.

THE CLERK (continuing to read). “ Secundo: Victories Which Robert Blake, our admiral, has won Are to be honoured by a general fast. The House, having long searched the holy books, Presents a diamond worth five hundred pounds To him. Moreover it decrees his triumph Shall be immortalized in its report.”

CROMWELL.
To that We give consent [All bow profoundly. THURLOE re-enters and takes his place beside the Protector.

THURLOE (low to CROMWELL). ‘T is done.

THE CLERK (continuing).

“Tertio: In York The mobs, excited by the malecontents, Have filled with great affright all English hearts, So that aforesaid Parliament decrees York rebels to be placed outside the law, And to that end places quo warranto Upon their city charters.”

CROMWELL (low to THURLOE).
Twenty soldiers Would do more than hundred quo warranto. But I will manage that.
[.Aloud.] We do consent. [All bow again.

THE CLERK (continuing). “Quarto: The House decrees in order to Replenish the exhausted treasury, Each Englishman who would atone past crimes Shall fast one day per week at profit of The State, — a method authorized to saints, To save one’s soul and help the treasury.”

CROMWELL.
We do consent. — [All bow again.

THE CLERK (continuing with a louder voice). “Quinto: Humble Petition, and Advice unto the warrior of Zion.
[All the members of Parliament malce a profound obeisance to CROMWELL, who answers by a sign of the head. Considering that it is an ancient mode To close domestic wrangling by a king; That God himself, when giving his wise laws Changed desks to thrones and judges into kings; Having heard the speakers for and those against, To the Protector Parliament affirms The nation needs an individual chief, To whom the name of king shall be restored. And she begs Cromwell to accept the crown, With all hereditary rights.”

THE SPEAKER (to CROMWELL).
My lord, I beg to speak.

CROMWELL. Speak on!

THE SPEAKER.
In every age, My lord, times present and times far remote, Kings have directed the affairs of earth. The primal book in which all truths abound Has written everywhere, Reges gentium. We meditate on Gibeon, Actium, And see, wherever has been civil war It is a sword which cuts the gordian knot. That sword becomes a sceptre, and is proof, That every question's settled by a king. I know of scholars it has been the thought That Christ, assisted by his saints, might reign. But the lord of eternal destinies Cannot appear as king to carnal eyes. Kingdoms of earth need human sovereigns, — Rex substantialis, as the precepts say. Such arguments one cannot well refute. Republics are, of all conditions, worst. The people need to lean upon a king; For they, my lord, no matter what is said, Are like the heron, who sleeps on one foot. The sleeping heron, is he crippled? Well, The people are this heron. Has it wars? The army is its beak, the Houses wings. But when the bark is anchored once again, Let it sleep on, Stans pede in uno. This thought is much too clear for argument. Then let your Highness over Europe stretch The sword of Judah and great Aaron's rod. Be King of England; be the heron's foot. We make appeal to laws common to earth. Dixi quid dicendum, — we speak for all.

[THE SPEAKER ceases, and CROMWELL, absorbed in his thoughts, remains silent for a few moments; finally he lifts his eyes to heaven, folds his arms across his breast, and sighs profoundly.

CROMWELL.
We will consider the request. [General astonishment.

THE SPEAKER (aside).
What's this?

WHITELOCKE (low to THURLOE). Does he refuse? What does he say?

THURLOE.
He fears Some peril, and he hesitates.

CROMWELL (low to THURLOE).
I must.
Let us delay this. 'Gainst the Cavaliers 'T will serve to neutralize the Puritans.
We must not, in this coming struggle, place Two burdens on our back, two thorns upon Our feet. No! let us first destroy the net Which Ormond casts about me. There is time To seize upon the crown when we get through.

‘T will calm the Puritans, if I avoid This honour. — [Aloud to those present. Go in peace and seek God’s grace. [All, excepting THURLOE, go out with profound obeisances and signs of great astonishment.

SCENE XV.

CROMWELL, THURLOE.

THURLOE (aside). Something has happened here within the hour.

CROMWELL (aside). Until to-morrow let this act deceive. [Both stand silent and motionless for a moment; CROMWELL, leaning on the arm of his chair, seems to le thinking deeply. THURLOE advances to him and bows.

THURLOE.
‘T is late, my lord.

CROMWELL (abruptly). Then let them ring The curfew bell.

THURLOE. Do you not need some rest?

CROMWELL. I do; but I have now no wish to sleep.

THURLOE.
Where will you sleep to-night, my lord?

CROMWELL (aside).
Hard life, —
To hide as if I were a criminal! Be sovereign, to change one’s bed each night! Forever, everywhere death lurks for me.
[Aloud to THURLOE.
Make my bed here.

THURLOE.
The Painted Chamber? No!
Charles' judges —

CROMWELL (aside).
Ah, forever that one thought!

THURLOE.
T was here they came to meet together.

CROMWELL.
Well?
[Aside.] This Charles!
[Aloud] Your memory is too good, my friend.
Obey.
[THURLOE bows, exits, comes back followed by servants, who arrange a bed and bring two candles. CROMWELL, who has remained silent, goes up to THURLOE when the servants have gone out.
Besides, when everything is dark, If spectres haunt this room they'll not see me.
[Grasping THURLOE'S hand and pointing to the bed. This bed is not for me.

THURLOE (surprised). For whom?

CROMWELL (whispering).
Speak low.
The one for whom this bed is made fears not King's phantoms — no, nor headless ghosts.

THURLOE.
What means —

CROMWELL.
Hush! Do my will, and you will understand Hereafter.

THURLOE (aside). I am all amazed. ‘T is thus That he makes use of us. Forever mute! Do all he bids and never know wherefore. Be dumb and deaf and blind, when he commands, Then have a hundred eyes, a hundred arms, A hundred voices if need be.
[Aloud to CROMWELL.] My lord, Your pardon, if I venture — Danger threatens? Whence comes it? — [.Indicating bed.
And who is he who takes your place?

CROMWELL.
Be silent. Is not our good chaplain late? [Aside, walking hastily to and fro at the front of the stage.
How proud they are! They think they hold me now! On one side Ormond laughs, and Rochester Laughs on the other. Good! Their genius has A chance to match itself with mine. My grave They’ve dug; but ‘t is a narrow one, And matches them in size.
[Pausing before a table on which two candles are burning, as if disturbed by their light, and says rudely to THURLOE: —
Why so much light? One candle is enough. Economy In my affairs, I beg you. [Blows out one of the candles.
Thus we may Extinguish enemies. A breath! — all’s done. Well, where’s my chaplain?
[LORD ROCHESTER enters accompanied by a page, who bears a golden salver; on it is a golden goblet in which floats a sprig of rosemary.

THURLOE.
Here he comes, my lord. CROMWELL.
At last! — [Rubbing his hands with joy.

SCENE XVI.

The same. LORD ROCHESTER.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). The goblet’s full! Old Noll must drink It all, and then, my faith! he will sleep well. I emptied the whole phial. A good turn I do him, for I tear him from remorse. He’ll not have slept so well for a long time. [Taking the salver from the page, who goes out, he presents it to CROMWELL with a humble obeisance. [Aloud] My lord —

[Aside] Our final ceremonious act. [Aloud] Pray drink this liquor which my hands have blessed.

CROMWELL (sneeringly). So you have blessed it?

LORD ROCHESTER.
Yes.
[Aside] The frightful look!

CROMWELL. It ought to benefit me, don’t you think?

LORD ROCHESTER. Yes, hippocras contains the wondrous power of bringing sleep, my lord.

CROMWELL.
Then drink yourself. [Takes the goblet from the salver and presents it suddenly to LORD ROCHESTER.

LORD ROCHESTER (drawing back with terror). I — drink?
[Aside] A thunder clap!

CROMWELL (with a dubious smile).
You hesitate? Habituate yourself to favours, sir! We have yet greater ones in store. Take this; Throw off the awe which seems to trouble you, And drink.
[Forces LORD ROCHESTER, who is consternated, to take the goblet.
You know not how you ‘re cherished here, Nor how your blessings will come home to roost.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
I’m stupefied.
[Aloud] My lord —

CROMWELL
I tell you, drink!

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). Something most wonderful has happened here. [Aloud] I swear to you!

CROMWELL.
Drink first, then you can swear.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). What will become of our great plot, and all Our clever preparations?

CROMWELL.
Won't you drink?

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). Old Noll is more malicious than we are.

CROMWELL.
You need much urging.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
Let me drink it down.
[Drinks.

CROMWELL (with a sardonic laugh). How does it taste?

LORD ROCHESTER (placing the goblet on the table).
May God protect the King! [Aside] At least, I'm saved from Madame Guggligoy. Old Noll can do whate'er he will to me. My new-made wife was waiting at the door. This time my shipwreck's fortunate; I fall From Charybdis to Scylla, — from her arms To Cromwell's. One puts you to sleep by force, The other forces you to fight all night. I've changed my torturer, and that is all. I yawn — already — down on one of the folding-chairs.

THURLOE (to CROMWELL). Was it poisoned?

LORD ROCHESTER
Humph!

That’s flattering to Cromwell and to me.

CROMWELL (low to THURLOE).
We’ll see!

THURLOE (aside, looking at LORD ROCHESTER). Poor man!

LORD ROCHESTER (yawning).
My head is turning round.
[Yawning again.
When one has played a comedy all day, Has preached so much, and sworn so little, prayed And fasted, worn a saintly countenance, And borne a Hebrew name; when one has been Examined — on the Bible — by old Noll —
To go to sleep [yawns’] just as the climax comes —
Is hard —— [Yawning again.
I hope I shall not wake up, hung. Alas! poor Ormond will go down with me. That’s all that I regret. Away, bad dreams!
[Yawning.
Oh, hellish drink! I cannot raise my head. Good-night, Mr. Cromwell — God save the King!
[His head falls on his shoulder, and he sleeps.

CROMWELL (eyes fixed on LORD ROCHESTER).
That is devotion. Who’d do that for me?
[To THURLOE.] We’ll place him on the bed.
[They take up LORD ROCHESTER and carry him to the bed on which they place him without awakening him. At this moment some one knocks at a low door leading to one of the side corridors of the Painted Chamber.

THURLOE (anxiously to CROMWELL).
Some one is knocking At that door.

CROMWELL.
I know. Go open it.

THURLOE (opening the door).
The rabbi.

SCENE XVII.

CROMWELL, THURLOE, MANASSES-BEN-ISRAEL; LORD ROCHESTER, asleep.

CROMWELL (to MANASSES, who prostrates himself on the threshold). Well, what does the Jew bring me? [MANASSES rises and draws near to CROMWELL with a mysterious air.

MANASSES (low to CROMWELL).
Some gold —
[Opens his robe and reveals a heavy bag, which he carries with difficulty.

CROMWELL (to THURLOE). Go out. [Low.] But do not go too far.
[.THURLOE bows and goes out.

MANASSES (to CROMWELL). The Swedish brig is taken, and I come Immediately to bring your lordship's share.

CROMWELL (examining the bag). What jest is this? My share?

MANASSES (biting his lips).
My lord, I mean A first instalment.

CROMWELL. That is better, sir! [Takes the bag and puts it on the table beside him.

MANASSES (aside).
No thing on earth escapes that lynx's eye! The Cavaliers, thank God, are easy fooled. I take their ship, and let them use my bank. Thanks to my care, they 're destitute of gold; And I, according to the bargain made, Sell back at eight per cent all that I steal. To steal from Christians is no sin at all.

CROMWELL. What news have you, my purgatory face?

MANASSES. Nothing, save that in London it is said They've hung at Dover an astrologer.

CROMWELL.
Then they did well. You 're an astrologer Yourself, I think.

MANASSES (after a moment's hesitation).
Bear not false witness, says The decalogue. 'T is true, I know this book, Obscure to devils, read by Solomon And spelled by Zoroaster. Yes, I can Bead in the skies your trials and your joys.

CROMWELL (aside, eyes fixed on the Jew). Strange destiny! To watch mankind and stars: Up there astrologer; down here a spy.

MANASSES (with eagerness, approaching an open window: in the lack of the room, through which one sees the star- besprinkled heavens). Look! Wonderful! Look, beside Scorpion — there! Strange! at this moment I can see —

CROMWELL.
See what?

MANASSES (without taking his eyes from the sky). Your star. — [Turning solemnly to CROMWELL.
Yes, from your future I can lift The veil.

CROMWELL (thrilled). You can? oh, no! you lie, old man. Are n't you afraid to tempt a dagger's point?

MANASSES (solemnly). If't is a lie, may Death, who waits for all, Close instantly these eyes, which read the truth.

CROMWELL (aside, thoughtfully). Why not? To pluck away the veil from destiny; Far in the heavens read a far-off fate; Decipher every life and every soul; To hold the key to all the mysteries Which a supreme, an unseen hand Has traced upon heaven's surface by these suns, — Oh, what a power! 'T is sharing God's own crown! And I was satisfied with a small throne: Proud to ascend it after petty kings. I scorned this Jew. Beside him what am I? What is my power when compared to his? How humble my attempts, beside the goal Which he has won! His kingdom is the world, And no horizon marks its end. But no! It can't be true. Our reason must forbid — Our reason? Cavern into which we throw All that we have, and which gives nothing back. Blind doubt denying everything It cannot understand. Oh, yes! the fool Quotes reason, then he laughs. It's easy done. Whence might this power come from, after all? God has assigned a goal to every one. Of all these beings circling Nature's breast Each has his centre, each his place and sphere. Beasts know not men. Man knows not God. The skies Keep their own secrets, just as we keep ours. Can souls from this world into others look? Bring to the living, torches from the dead? Must they stay always this side of the tomb? Once dead, cannot they leave the catacombs, Or living penetrate the sealed tombs? Who knows? Must we deny all things we do Not see? Does death break every bond? Have not Things terrible and strange been seen on earth?

But man to scan the heaven's flaming page!
Who knows what God puts in a new-made soul?
And yet this man, this Jew, this varlet, wretch, Can he interpret earth in its grand sense?
To Holy of Holies can his base look pierce?
Why not? What do we know? All things are strange, —
A reason why, perhaps. If to my mind He could explain the language of my star, Tell when this struggle which I wage, shall cease!
We are alone — no witnesses. I'll try.
[Aloud to MANASSES.
Jew!

MANASSES (who has not ceased his contemplation of the heavens, turns and bows).
Lord!

CROMWELL. If it is true these rays of light Illuminate your soul with mystic force, And lend your eye the gleams of prophecy —

[Pausing and appearing to hesitate.

MANASSES.
What does the master of his servant ask?

CROMWELL (lowering his voice). I want the future.

MANASSES (rising, and drawing himself up proudly). Dare you aim so high? Uncircumcised, you lift your eyes to this? Your soul, in spite of barriers of flame, Would see the stars, the gold, the diamond dust, Which firmaments roll in their bottomless Abyss. The heavens you would penetrate, Behold the sanctuary with its gloom, The fiery laboratory where He stands, The great Jehovah, holding in his grasp Pivot and compass of eternity?
You'd pierce the flames, the ether, and the seas, The triple veil of heaven, triple wall Of earth, to learn what suns are they which burn Their words of fire on God's white diadem?
You read the future! Could you, heart profane, Support the glory of this mystery?
You, always buried in the cares of earth, Have you spent nights and days unto this end?
What marvels have you grasped? What trials stood?
Behold my pallid brow! Tobias' age Is mine. I've passed through this delusive life And never turned my gaze from that great world.
Think — in a century — no hour, no day!
And many times at night I've left my home To go and listen at the door of tombs, To find but worms devouring putrid flesh.
How happy was I, king of the dark realms, When I could change a corpse into a ghost, And make some dead man from the gallows cut Breathe just a word of the great alphabet.
The dead revealed the mystery of worlds;
And my weak eyes almost obtained a glimpse Of the Great Being in his awful home, Who on the heaven's orbit, as upon The folds of every shroud, inscribes his name, —
His fatal name, known unto him alone.
But for your eyes, blind in their first dark night, The constellations are but smouldering fires.

Absorbed in contemplation of these sights, Has your hair fallen, has your beard turned white?
Ah! Tell me, have you passed your weary days As did the old magicians, in despair, Despised, proscribed ‘mongst men?

CROMWELL (interrupting him impatiently).
Enough! I pay You for your services.

MANASSES. ‘T is a mistake? Man can indeed subserve himself to men. While I am living my ignoble life, While flesh covers my skeleton, in truth, I am the servant of your haughty plans; But when, my lord, did I agree to spy Upon the heavens?

CROMWELL (aside). This is no hypocrite. He’s loyal to his science, and proscribed, He honours it. — [Aloud, and with violence.
Discover if my planet Is propitious. I command you!

MANASSES.
I cannot.

CROMWELL.
I wish it.

MANASSES. Do you wish it?

CROMWELL (quickly grasping his dagger).
That will make You speak, or this will make you dumb.

MANASSES (after hesitating).
What if I add to heaven, hell; by the Koran The Talmud place? Will you not shrink?

CROMWELL.
Not I.

MANASSES.

The spirit yields to sword: unto the tyrant The magician yields. Speak on, my son!

CROMWELL To my astounded soul, reveal, I beg, The secret of my life and destiny. While yet a child I had a vision strange: Because of humble birth, I'd been sent forth From those fair lawns, of which proud Oxford boasts, And which are trod by none but noble-born. When I regained my cell, with bursting heart I wept and cursed the rank which branded me. Night came: I slept not, sitting by my couch. A breath that chilled me to the very soul Passed by, and near to me I heard a voice Which said, " All honour unto Cromwell — king! " This voice, which was almost inaudible, Was menacing, yet full of pathos too. Pale, seized with terror, in the gloom I rose. I sought the place from whence the sound had come. I found it. There a trunkless head stood bathed With livid light, in that dark spot. A halo, A blood-coloured halo, decked the brow, And to it hung the remnants of a crown. There, motionless, — old man, I tremble yet, — It watched me with a leer upon its lips, And murmured, " Honour unto Cromwell — king!"
I took one step, — all disappeared, and left Except upon my frozen heart, no trace. " All honour unto Cromwell!" — what think you, Manasses, of this vision? What was meant? At night! those ghastly vapours of the air! A hideous head, the shreds of a grim spectre Pledging me kingdoms with its taunting laugh! Oh, it was horrible! was't not, old Jew? That head, I saw it once again, — one day In winter, when I faced a maddened crowd; Then it was dumb, — but from the headsman's hand 'T was hanging!

MANASSES (reflecting). Well! Ezekiel, son-in-law To Jethro, had some visions, much less strange, Belshazzar's warning at the festival Was not equal to this; Toldos Jeschut Gives us no history resembling yours. To see the head of a still living king ' 'T was strange.

CROMWELL. Nothing could be more horrible.

MANASSES (reflecting). Perhaps — but no! The ghosts I have in mind Claimed vengeance for crimes past, but yours Concerned the future. You were not asleep?

CROMWELL.
No.

MANASSES. Vision without parallel: for if You had been sleeping, it was but a dream, And I know many that are worse than that.
[.Resuming his reflections.
The only spectre that rose not from graves. In my long life I've nothing seen like that!
[Turning to CROMWELL. What odour did its absence leave behind?

CROMWELL (abruptly). No matter. Tell me what my vision means. Was it a truth or an illusion? Speak! " All honour unto Cromwell! " Come, reveal My destiny. Shall I be made a king?

MANASSES (fixing his eyes on the heavens). I see it, yes! From zenith to the nadir I would always recognize that star. 'T is fixed, And seems to grow while one is watching it. 'T is brilliant, but a spot is in its heart.

CROMWELL (impatiently). Your eyes have been turned up there long enough. Shall I be king?

MANASSES. In vain I'd flatter you; Upon the firmament one reads no lies. I can't withhold the fact that in its course Your star forms not the triangle mystic With the stars Jod and Zain.

CROMWELL.
Triangle! Come, What matters that? Out on you, son of Cain! Tell me the meaning of the trunkless head! Am I to be a king? Answer me that!

MANASSES. No king, except a miracle transpires.

CROMWELL (rudely). What mean you by a miracle?

MANASSES.
I mean —

CROMWELL.

Well, what?

MANASSES. A miracle.

CROMWELL.
And what am I?
Am I a miracle?

MANASSES (thoughtfully). Perhaps.

CROMWELL.
It is a throne You promise me?

MANASSES. I cannot, for your sake, Change the replies of heaven.

CROMWELL.
Can you not! What was the vision then, — a mockery Of death? Oh, as for you astrologers, I think you are impostors, — all of you ‘ Working these planets for your private ends.

MANASSES (seriously). Do not blaspheme, my son. Give me your hand. [CROMWELL, apparently subjugated by the authority of the astrologer, gives his hand. MANASSES seizes it, examines it, and sings in a monotone, without taking his eyes from it.
Avaunt! all workers of untruth And sorcerers restored to youth By magic philters venomous; All dragons, spirits luminous; And all the centenary kind Who cannot run for lack of wind.
Avaunt! all phantoms robed in white; The asp, who robs with grim delight The mad crows of their putrid prey; All demons hunting souls away; All monstrous dwarfs, and fires which blaze Around the tombs in wild amaze.
The patriarchal robe put on; The belt zodiacal now don; Gold rings put on your fingers all, The Amess, mitre conical; The purple ephod, tunic red Which twice in strong dye has been spread. [A loud to CROMWELL, after a moment of silence. A danger threatens you!

CROMWELL. What sort?

MANASSES.
Your death. If you accept a crown your death is sure!

CROMWELL.
My death is sure?

MANASSES (pointing to CROMWELL'S heart).
The wound, it will be there.

CROMWELL (placing his hand on his heart).
Here?

MANASSES (with an affirmative gesture). There!

CROMWELL.
Speak! When?

MANASSES.
To-morrow.

CROMWELL.
Lie you not?

MANASSES.
O son of Ammon! Lie? Shall I call up Your demon? To control him, you must speak With me eight lines, each one beginning with The self-same letter — [CROMWELL appears to hesitate at this proposition. At this moment LORD ROCHESTER turns on his bed and sighs.

MANASSES (troubled).
Some one listens — [Draws near to the bed and perceives LORD ROCHESTER asleep.
Yes!
The charm is broken; he has heard it all.

CROMWELL.

You think he can have heard us?

MANASSES.
Without doubt.

CROMWELL.
Then he must die!
[Draws his dagger and approaches LORD ROCHESTER, who is still asleep.

MANASSES. Yes, strike! You could not do A nobler deed.
[Aside.] Yes, let a Christian's hand strike down A Christian —

CROMWELL. He has heard the interview Between the Jew and Cromwell! Let him die!
[liaises his dagger, and then pauses.
But yet he sleeps!

MANASSES (pushing his arm). Well, well!

CROMWELL (still undecided).
He is so young.

MANASSES. It is the Sabbath day. Then strike!

CROMWELL (starting).
Alas!
A day of fast, of vigil, and of holy rest. I to commit a murder, lend my ear To this astrologer! — [Throwing aside dagger.
[To MANASSES.] Jew! get you hence!
[Calling.] Thurloe!

THURLOE (running in).
My lord!

MANASSES (astonished). Your Highness —

CROMWELL (to MANASSES).
Leave me, I tell you!

MANASSES (aside). What vertigo has sudden seized his mind?

CROMWELL (in low tone to Jew). Go; if you speak one word of what's passed here, Consider yourself doomed to death. Now go!
[Jew prostrates himself and goes out. [To THURLOE.] Oh, save me from this Jew and from myself, Thurloe!

THURLOE (anxiously). What is the matter, my good lord?

CROMWELL (composing himself). I — nothing! Nothing! Thurloe, I love you.

THURLOE.
You said — and you appear so troubled — CROMWELL.
What?
Did I say anything?

THURLOE.
My lord, you said —

CROMWELL (abruptly). No, I said nothing. Hush! and follow me.

THURLOE. How pale you are, my lord!

CROMWELL.
It is the light Of these sepulchral candles. Come! I need you; Come, follow me!
[THURLOE follows CROMWELL; he pauses, while passing, at LORD ROCHESTER'S bed.

THURLOE. He sleeps!

CROMWELL.
Yes, a hard sleep, —

One much resembling death.
[They go out.

ACT IV.

THE SENTINEL.

SCENE. — The park gate at White-Hall. To the right, groups of trees; in the background groups of trees, above which the gothic projectures of the castle are outlined on the dark sky. To the left, the park gate, a small door under a deep arch, and very much ornamented with sculpture.

SCENE I.

CROMWELL, disguised as a soldier, heavy musket on his shoulder, a huff cuirass, hat of high conical shape with large brim, tall boots. He walks up and down in front of the gate after the manner of a guard. Some instants after the curtain has risen, one hears the cry of a distant sentinel.

SENTINEL.
All's well!
Do you keep watch?

CROMWELL (resting his musket on the ground, repeats).
All's well! Do you keep watch?
A THIRD SENTINEL (in the distance).
All's well! Do you keep watch?

CROMWELL (after a moment's silence).
I watch for all.
Cromwell, whom a wise Providence sends here, Will open to his murderers the door.
[Noise of footsteps and voices in the distance.
Already? No, midnight has not yet tolled:
It is some passer-by. — [Indistinct singing is heard.

What! Singing songs? The fellow has not kept his fast to-day. [The voice approaches, and one hears these words sung to a monotonous air.

Towards setting sun, Oh, you who run To seek fortune, beware! Don’t slip, don’t fall, Beneath night’s pall: Darkness is everywhere.

Treacherous sea With mystery Covers the downs at night;

As far as eye Can earth descry, Not any house in sight.

Thieves come behind. At night you’ll find They follow every one. The forest dame Oft gives us blame For what we have not done.

They wander wide, Oh, woe betide Whoever meets them there! The goblins light, With mad delight, Dance in the moonbeams’ glare. [The voice approaches nearer and nearer, and then ceases.

CROMWELL. ‘T is one of my own fools. Elespuru, I think.

SCENE II.

CROMWELL, TRICK, GIRAFF, ELESPURU, GRAMADOCH. The Fools, led by GRAMADOCH, enter cautiously, on tip-toe.

ELESPURU (humming).
The goblins light, With mad delight, Dance in the moonbeams’ glare.

GIRAFF (low to ELESPURU). Elespuru, be still! You ‘re mad.

GRAMADOCH (to the others, indicating a turf bank behind a hedge).
Let us hide there.

CROMWELL (without seeing them). My fool is coming home.
[The four Fools sit on the turf bank.

GRAMADOCH (low to his comrades). At this point all the action concentrates. Here we’ll see everything.

TRICK (low).
With a clerk’s eye! See? It is lighter in the devil’s kiln.

ELESPURU (low). If any of these actors see our face, This spectacle will cost us a round sum.

GRAMADOCH (low). We ‘re here in time. Naught has been yet begun.

GIRAFF (LOW*).*
Be silent, will you?
[All are silent and remain motionless. CROMWELL.
Yes, the fool’s gone by! He knew not that this place, where he sung loud, Would see an empire’s fate decided soon. A happy man, this fool. E’en in White-Hall He carries with him his ideal world. He has no subjects, has no throne; he’s free! He has no aching fibre in his heart. He does not wear upon his careless breast A steel cuirass! Wherefore? Who wants his blood? What need has he of court or retinue Or guard? He laughs, he sings, he passes by; None heeds. About the future, what cares he? He’ll always find some velvet rags to wear In winter, and some jokes to pay for bread. He sleeps at night, and fears no traitor’s snares. He has no frightful dreams; he wakes and smiles And has no memories. Thrice happy man! His speech is noise; his life is but a dream. When he attains that point where all things end, Death’s scythe, which is a terror unto all, Will be a bawble to this worn-out child. Meanwhile, his voice will always laugh or weep, Give any sound you wish or any cry, Will talk on everything, and sing when bid. His flippancy conceals eternal rest, A plaything of the world, void, resonant, Whose words are water that evaporates, Responsive to each touch, and easier moved Than are the silver bells upon his cap. This fool would never do so mad a thing As try to hold the world in his small brain.
No weighty words, no thoughts surcharged with sighs, Come from his heart as from volcano’s fire;
His soul — has he a soul? — can always sleep.
To-day he knows not what he did last night;
Remembering naught! Alas! how fortunate.
Ah, never, harassed by relentless thoughts, Fears he, in passing by some gloomy spot, To look behind, lest he a spectre see.
He does not pray his name may be forgot, Nor wish the thirtieth of January Had never been. Oh, enviest thou thy fool, Great Cromwell? Thou art the all-powerful, Yet with thy life, what hast thou done? To reign?

Prevail against a world aghast with fear?
For such vain glamour what a price thou’st paid.
All parties have abandoned thee; the people Have disowned thee, and thine own family Are in continual strife against thy hopes;
They make their wishes a rude law to thee, And torture thee with taunts at thy kingship.
Thy son himself — I’m hated everywhere!
O’er all the earth my foes implacable Wait to o’erwhelm me; yes, and elsewhere too, —
At bottom of the tomb! Good days must come, Some better days, at last! What do I say?
For fifteen years life’s been a miracle.
What wish had I that has not been fulfilled?
The nations underneath my yoke are bent;
With but one word, to-morrow, I am king.
What more foreshadowed my ambitious dreams?
Reformer, judge, a conqueror, potentate, —
Have I not all my joy? The great result, To be a watchman here, paid by the night!
What pomp outside; what festering sore within!
[A pause.
It is a freezing night, almost the hour, — Yes, hour, — when spectres from their coffins rise And show to murderers, with their blood-red hands, Their wounds which always gape and bleed a-fresh, Their shroud all covered with its loathsome stains. Oh, hideous thought! Because I am alone, Am I a child? Alas! I wish I were. That damnéd Jew has chilled me to the heart With all the visions he aroused to-night. I’m shaken, and I tremble — with the cold. To neutralize these sacrilegious thoughts I’ll speak some verses against sorcery.
[.Midnight begins to toll from the belfry; he starts. That noise! The belfry! The expected hour!
[Listening.
I never heard it at this time before.
‘T is like a knell, — a human voice that weeps.
[Stops and listens again. That tolled the last hour of a martyr, once.
[After the last strokes of the bell. Midnight! Alone! I will invoke the saints.

[Sound of footsteps behind the trees. I’m reassured. Here my assassins come.

SCENE III.

The same. LORD ORMOND, LORD DROGHEDA, LORD ROSEBERRY, LORD CLIFFORD, DOCTOR JENKINS, SEDLEY, SIR PETERS DOWNIE, SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. The Cavaliers enter stealthily, LORD ORMOND and LORD ROSEBERRY at the head. They -wear large hats, pulled over their eyes, and great black cloaks, lifted up by their swords; they speak together in low tones. CROMWELL replaces his musket on his shoulder and stands before the arched gate.

LORD ROSEBERRY (to the others).
‘T is here.

LORD ORMOND. Yes, here. I recognize the place. [Indicating the gate whose shadow conceals CROMWELL from them.
Through that gate used the royal hunt to pass.

CROMWELL (musket on his shoulder, aside). ‘T is they! At last I know with whom I deal.

SIR PETERS DOWNIE (to LORD ORMOND). Should Wilmot not await us here?

CROMWELL (aside, shrugging his shoulders).
He’s sharp.

LORD DROGHEDA (to DOWNIE). How can he? He has duties to perform; Think you his halter is so very loose?

CROMWELL (aside). Assassins, you shall have a like one soon. And Haman’s gibbet’s none too high for you.

LORD ORMOND (to Cavaliers). He would most likely spoil the whole affair. If they have kept him, I for one, am glad.

CROMWELL (aside).
And I, for two.

LORD ORMOND.
Wilmot is dangerous. But let us end this.

CROMWELL (aside). End is the right word.

LORD ORMOND (to Cavaliers). To see how far this madman's folly goes, Hear this: Old Noll a pretty daughter has. Wilmot's in love with her; that's naught to me.

CROMWELL (aside).
What insolence!

LORD ORMOND (continuing). He writes a madrigal About her. Rochester a rhymester! Shame! Still worse; forgetting what is due my age And rank, he wants to read the verse to me. That insult I received in fitting way. But here, just now, while I was waiting, lo! There came a letter, an important one. Impatiently I broke the seal — and found The quatrain to his little Cromwell!

CROMWELL (aside).
Knave!
To speak of her, before me, in this way.

LORD ROSEBERRY (laughing, to LORD ORMOND). Your persecution was most rigorous.

SIR PETERS DOWNIE (laughing). His verses must be read! Quite like a king! Ah, that's a poet's style!

LORD ORMOND.

There is yet more. After these verses, sealed with so much care, A second messenger from Wilmot came. That was the word which told us to be here; But this time ‘t was a parchment, rolled with grace, And tied with a pink ribbon.

ALL THE CAVALIERS.
Is that true?

LORD ORMOND. See how that idiot betrays our cause!

LORD CLIFFORD. It’s frightful! Does he think such jests are droll?

LORD ORMOND.
This last to Willis was confided; but It might have fallen in disloyal hands.

LORD ROSEBERRY. Then we would need nothing so much as wings.

DOCTOR JENKINS. Upon what frail support we rest our faith! ‘T is terrible to think of all the things Which fate holds trembling o’er a poor fool’s head. At the least noise, the slightest change of wind, The frightful structure totters, and by night Thrones, nations, worlds vanish for evermore.

SEDLEY.
It seems to me that Davenant’s not here.

LORD ORMOND. The poet Davenant! The mountebank! He’s hiding. Who would count on such a clown?

DOWNIE.
Our good friend Richard, the usurper’s son, Is now in prison. Did you know, some spy —

LORD DROGHEDA.
Alas, poor Richard!

CROMWELL (aside). The poor parricide!

LORD ROSEBERRY.
Such a good fellow!

CROMWELL (aside).
Yes?

SEDLEY (to LORD ROSEBERRY).
His father learned Of his too loyal toast this morning?

LORD ROSEBERRY.
Yes.

CROMWELL (aside).
The traitor!

LORD ORMOND (to Cavaliers). Shall we waste our time in words?
Let us begin.

CROMWELL (aside). Now let their plot unfold. To these Egyptian rats, these royal souls, Let's open White-Hall as we would a trap. Lord Rochester's the bait, Cromwell's the trap, Which, once it closes, will let nothing out

LORD ORMOND (low to Cavaliers). Let's try the soldier. [Aloud, approaching CROMWELL Hem!

CROMWELL (presenting his musket to him).
Who goes there?

LORD ORMOND (low to CROMWELL).
Friend!
Cologne!

CROMWELL (aside). I've not the password! What to do?

LORD ORMOND.
Cologne!

CROMWELL (aside). What shall I say? [LORD ORMOND, astonished at the sentinel's silence, steps lack with an air of mistrust.

LORD ROSEBERRY (to LORD ORMOND).
What is it? Speak!

LORD ORMOND (indicating CROMWELL). He's silent.

LORD ROSEBERRY. What if Cromwell should suspect? What if he'd changed the palace guard to-night?

LORD ORMOND (to Cavaliers, who gather uneasily around him).
When one has entered on a plot like this, To go back is to lose. Let us advance.
[Approaches CROMWELL again.

CROMWELL (aside).
To be too easy would excite their doubts.
[To LORD ORMOND, who is advancing. Who goes there? Speak!

LORD ORMOND.
Cologne!

CROMWELL (aside).
How to cheat them? How catch them without help of this password?

LORD ORMOND (low to Cavaliers, who have retired to a corner of the stage on the right).
Still silent!

LORD CLIFFORD (low and eagerly). Let us kill this sentinel!

DOCTOR JENKINS (low to LORD CLIFFORD). What? Send a soul to God without the time To make one prayer?

LORD CLIFFORD (low to DOCTOR JENKINS).
What matters that to us?

LORD ORMOND (low to LORD CLIFFORD). What? Strike him from the back?

LORD CLIFFORD (low to LORD ORMOND).
We must pass on.
I'm sorry for the man.

ALL (low to ORMOND).

Yes; kill him, quick!

DOCTOR JENKINS (low to Cavaliers). Stained with his sins, to send him to his judge?

ALL (low to DOCTOR JENKINS). It must be. He must die.

CROMWELL (aside).
What do they say? [The Cavaliers draw their daggers and advance on WELL. SIR WILLIAM MURRAY stops them.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. You ‘re wrong. I'm sure that man belongs to us, Else when he saw us grouped against this wall He would have given the alarm at once. A little gold, I think, will make him speak. There is no danger, save to money, here. If he is silent, ‘t is for more doubloons; If to your password a deaf ear he turns, ‘T is but the greedy nature Puritan. ‘T is easier to pay for a passport Than kill for one, which is a noisy way.

LORD ROSEBERRY. ‘T is true. The boor won't hesitate to call For help if we attack him.

LORD CLIFFORD (sighing).
Well, then we Will pay our ransom.

SIR PETERS DOWNIE.
Gold is very scarce With us, unfortunately.

SEDLEY. Because he, That robber Cromwell, stole our brig from us. Oh, that this thief should sit on England’s throne!

LORD ORMOND. Manasses, that old rat who gnaws at crowns, Lent me some money, but it is all spent. Wait — there’s a purse I got from Rochester.
[Feels in his coat.
Yes, here it is.
[Draws a purse from his pocket and shows it to the Cavaliers.

LORD ROSEBERRY. A providential help.

LORD CLIFFORD (indicating CROMWELL). It’s hard to pay that hypocrite with gold, When a good dagger-thrust would do as well.

LORD ORMOND (handing the purse to SIR WILLIAM MURRAY).
Go, William Murray and negotiate;
You know more of their saintly ways than we.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (taking the purse). Count upon me.

CROMWELL (aside, seeing SIR WILLIAM MURRAY approach him slowly). They’ve held their council! Why? Just for a word, a nothing, all this fuss. They want to enter: I desire it too. We ought to come to terms.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (aside).
I must arrange This matter skilfully.

CROMWELL (to SIR WILLIAM MURRAY, who is approaching).
Stop! Who goes there?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. A saint, my brother.

CROMWELL (aside). Hypocrite!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
A blessing On the steel which girds you —

CROMWELL (aside).
I am rich To get a blessing from these Royalists.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (aside). In their own tongue one must address these fools.
[Aloud to CROMWELL. On Zion’s tower, my brother, archers stood And watched, and called each other night and day; You are their counterpart.

CROMWELL.
My thanks to you.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
The night is cold.

CROMWELL.
It is.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
The birds do sleep Within their nests, the ox sleeps in his stall: All rest; you watch.

CROMWELL. It is my destiny.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. You would be better off in a good bed.

CROMWELL (aside).
Say, rather, you!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. Alone, on frozen ground, A heavy musket to encumber you, You keep the watch; and he whose cross you bear, Your Cromwell, sleeps in full content.

CROMWELL.
Does he?

Not so: he never sleeps when I keep watch.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. With those illusive words he drugs your ear.

CROMWELL.
You think he sleeps?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
I know he does. To you He owes this gentle calm, this dreamless sleep. He takes the pleasure, leaves the toil to you.

CROMWELL.
That’s acting ill.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (aside).
Ah, we have won him now!
He is dissatisfied.
[Aloud.] You do so much For him. This great man, does he know your name?

CROMWELL.
I think so.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (shrugging his shoulders). You ‘re an honest simpleton.

CROMWELL (aside).
He’s clever — he!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
And from his splendid throne Think you he’ll ever cast a look at you? Oh, no, my friend; he does not know your name, I ‘m sure.

CROMWELL (aside). Sure of all things, except your head. ‘T would seem, he had made me!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
You ‘re honest, but About these things you think yourself too wise.

CROMWELL.
That’s wrong.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. We lived at court of the late king.

CROMWELL (aside). The idiot, he forgets. He drops his mask, And to the Puritan adds Cavalier.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. My friend, all courts at heart are just the same. Of course, you don’t know that.

CROMWELL (aside).
How wise he is!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. You sacrifice your life to Cromwell?

CROMWELL.
Yes.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. Well, for him shed your blood too, drop by drop, He’ll care about it just as much, my man, As he cares for the water clear or foul That runs beneath his bridges.

CROMWELL.
No I think My matters go much nearer to his heart.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (laughing). A simple mind you have. What does he care If you are dead or living?

CROMWELL.
As for that, What do you know about it?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
Does your life Touch his in any way?

CROMWELL (aside).
It touches closer Than you conceive, for your misfortune, friend

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. Have you not right to ask for recompense? What are you? But a guard. The crying shame! I dare say you have stood by him through all.

CROMWELL.
I have.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. You've shared in all his battles?

CROMWELL.
Yes.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. Many are sergeants who have done much less.

CROMWELL (aside). To win me over, that is a good card. [Aloud] You flatter?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
No. Why show you such disdain Is he so great a captain, pray, himself?

CROMWELL (aside).
Impertinence!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. To have his palaces, His carriages of state, his guards, his men, Who is this Cromwell you adore so much? A soldier like yourself.

CROMWELL
That's all he is.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (aside). Our way is won!
[.Aloud.] He's nothing more than you.

CROMWELL
That’s true!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. Why serve him, then, upon your knees?

CROMWELL
I don’t do so.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (aside). He’s stepping in my net. [Aloud.] Why not usurp that place as well as he?

CROMWELL. There’d be no incongruity, in truth.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. Not any. Soldier for a soldier — good! How can you fill your arduous duties here? For this hard labour what’s your salary?

CROMWELL.
I am not paid.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. Not paid? Upon my soul! Thus to abandon an old soldier; shame! I pity you.

CROMWELL (aside). He pities me!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
No pay!
This Cromwell is a tyrant.

CROMWELL (aside).
He arrives.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
A righteous anger chokes me.

CROMWELL (aside).
Touching thing!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (taking his hand). I want to comfort, aye, avenge you, too.

CROMWELL.
Avenge me?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. Yes, on Cromwell. [Whispering in his ear.] Ope the gate. Judith by Holofernes shall be slain.

CROMWELL. You mean Judith slay Holofernes — eh? Don’t quote the Bible wrong.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
A just rebuke.

CROMWELL.
For Judith, friend, your beard is pretty black.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (aside). Why did I meddle with this history? Of course Judith’s a woman. Never mind! [Aloud.] Let us surprise your sleeping general, And ‘t will be well for you.

CROMWELL.
You think so, sir?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. What matter if six men pass through this gate? ‘T is fortune creeping in its sleep to you.

CROMWELL.
It’s sleep?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (giving him a purse). Accept this on account. You have No other duty than to say “ White-Hall,” When others say “ Cologne.”

CROMWELL (aside).
White-Hall’s the word!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. Here, take the money. Men of our sort pay.

CROMWELL (aside). And men of my sort, too.
[Aloud, to SIR WILLIAM MURRAY, taking the purse. This is a debt Which I contract with you, my friend.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
You'll watch For us, while we complete our task?

CROMWELL
I will.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. 'T is well. — [Offering his hand.
Touch hands. By heaven, you are a man!

CROMWELL.
When you've got Cromwell, what do you propose To do with him?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. I think — it seems to me — We'll kill him, — that is all.

CROMWELL
That is not much.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. We'll be contented with an easy death. We are not cruel.

CROMWELL (aside). Neither will I be.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
It is agreed

CROMWELL. You've said the word.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (to the Cavaliers, who have been waiting in a corner of the stage).

Come! Haste!
The temple we can enter if we pay The priest. I knew it would be so.

LORD ORMOND (to SLR WLLLIAM MURRAY).
‘T is done?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
It is.

LORD ORMOND (to Cavaliers). Let us move on. [The Cavaliers form themselves in a double line and advance to CROMWELL, who presents his musket.

CROMWELL.
Stop! Who goes there?

LORD ORMOND.
Cologne!

CROMWELL.
White-Hall! Pass on!

LORD ORMOND (aside).
Well done!

CROMWELL.
[Watching the Cavaliers as they pass through the gate.
That’s right.

LORD ORMOND (low to SLR WLLLIAM MURRAY). You’d better stay, my lord, and watch that man. [To CROMWELL.] Where’s Cromwell to be found?

CROMWELL.
He’s sleeping in The Painted Chamber.

LORD ORMOND (to CROMWELL).

Night obscures our steps, But keep strict watch.

CROMWELL. Be satisfied; pass on.

LORD ORMOND (joyfully). At last I touch the goal; my final years Are to be crowned with a triumphant joy. I have him; I will seize him ‘neatli the dais! God grants the boon that I have prayed for long. I hold this Cromwell, sleeping, in my hand. Kind Heaven abandons him to me.

CROMWELL (aside, watching him as he goes off).
What one Asks heaven vainly for, hell sometimes gives. [LORD ORMOND hurries through the gate, which the Cavaliers have already passed, with the exception of SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.

SCENE IV.

CROMWELL, SIR WILLIAM MURRAY; THE FOUR FOOLS, still in their hiding-place.

CROMWELL (his eyes fixed on the gate through which the Cavaliers have passed).
At last!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (rubbing his hands). We have achieved it, by the rood! This Cromwell who on earth has had no peer, This famous general, statesman astute, To whom all Europe chants eternal praise, This master for whose kingship men have deemed The throne too narrow, the sceptre too light, — Is taken like a bird without its wings, By eight fools: not two brains among them all, —
For mine’s the only brain that has served here. Without me nothing had been done. A tramp, This Cromwell, — not even a nobleman; A poor adventurer — to reign o’er kings As Caesar did o’er Rome! A lesson rare We give to royalty. He, whose dominion Oppressed them all, has been captured by us In his own home, — an ignominious fate. Yet fifteen years he’s been a genius. Ha!

[Turning to CROMWELL, who listens imperturbably. Can you conceive a reason? Just because He won some battles —

CROMWELL (aside).
Where you were not seen!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (continuing). Because with fine grimaces, words, and sounds He knows enough to draw the multitude, Behold! all Europe kneels when she should hiss A boor, who cannot even make a bow.

CROMWELL (aside). Perhaps he can't, but he can teach the rest

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. It's true: his manners are almost like yours.

CROMWELL.
Almost?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. You have the manners for your place. You never have aspired to lofty rank. Your attitudes befit a trooper Swiss Who leads the charge and drills.

CROMWELL.
You 're much too kind.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. Each man unto his trade, my friend. I'm sure You'd not be such a fool as ask the world To watch you, strutting to an usurped throne. This Cromwell's just about your calibre. Imagine how grotesque the sight must be To see him hoisted on a royal throne. This life of his is destiny's debauch; His levee proved him awkward as a lout.

CROMWELL.
You went there — eh?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
Not so familiar, please; We are not travelling at an equal gait. I am a noble Scottish lord, while men Of your estate should run before my coach. Know you I bear a wolf upon my crest? And that, under King James the First, I had The honour to be whipped for young Prince Charles?

CROMWELL.
You ‘re right. Our station has been different.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. I’m glad you understand it.

CROMWELL.
Pray return To Cromwell’s levees. So you do attend This man’s receptions, whom you so despise?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
To see what I can get. One can’t be fighting Forever, like Montrose.

CROMWELL.
Yes, beg a place While you are waiting to betray the man, In favour of your king.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
How blunt you are

CROMWELL I have no gift for the poetical.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (aside).
Plebeian!

CROMWELL. How did Cromwell welcome you? I wager he refused —

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. No, he did not.

CROMWELL (aside).
The liar!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. He received me courteously; He felt the honour I accorded him, And gave me choice of places in his gift.

CROMWELL (aside). A choice between the door and window, yes! [Aloud.] Why do you then conspire against his power?

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. I have reflected. Can one serve a boor? A man who rules like corporal of the guard? A dunce who wants to smile and show his teeth, Who can't make any but a knock-kneed bow?

CROMWELL.
I understand.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. I heard his fall was near.

CROMWELL.
Then you bethought you of the Stuarts' rights.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. The Stuarts' rights and Cromwell's clumsiness, My friends who urged me, and our sure success Won me unto the plot.

CROMWELL.
Good reasons, all.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. You understand. These are my principles. The Norman William violated them, But he atoned by marrying his son To Princess Maude of Scotland; and from them, And from the Athelings, the Stuarts came. So Charles the Second in his person blends The rights of Norman and of Saxon blood.

CROMWELL.
'T is clear.
[Aside] I do not grasp his reasoning.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
I'll make you judge.

CROMWELL (aside).
His choice is excellent!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. The rights of our young king are manifest.

CROMWELL.
Doubtless.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. And they are what Cromwell contests. Is't not unheard of that this vulture cock Should leave his cellar for the eaglet's lair? If he had genius, yes! But I tell you It's falling Jericho without the drums.

CROMWELL (aside).
Well said!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. His fate stalks on in royal state, But't is a phantom crumbling at one's touch.

CROMWELL (ironically). An idol with gold head and waxen feet.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. I've always thought him a fine counterfeit. No reputation dazzles me, my man. I judged this Cromwell. It would be a king! In what an age we live! It does not know How to frustrate a plot, foresee a snare. You have yourself a thousand-fold more wit Than has that fool they 're taking from his bed.

CROMWELL (aside). If he but knew what truth he spoke!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
Does he Think reigning is an easy matter? King? I would n't even have him for a courtier.

CROMWELL
You would be right.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
He may have sense enough To brew good beer, but has he even right To don the greaves or to shoulder the gun? Well, just about. Provincial family, — His name's not even equal to Milton's.

CROMWELL (aside).
What insolence!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
He might have been a brewer Of excellent repute; instead of that He wants to act the great man, play the hero, Cut down the tyrants. Oh, these little squires! Are n’t they ridiculous? Distilling cider Has taught him how to curb the populace, Vanquish the hydra, govern all the earth!

CROMWELL (aside).
The fool!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. Because fortune abetted him, He thinks himself a Caesar, Moses, a Capet! What most amazes me is that Warwick Should condescend to cousin with this cheat.

CROMWELL (aside). Cameleon! This man grovelled at my feet But yesterday.

SIE WILLIAM MUEEAY (as if seized with an idea). I am a simpleton!

CROMWELL.
Indeed! Why so?

SIR WILLIAM MUEEAY.
While our hawks snatch their prey, They’ve left me here, that when the pay goes round, As it must do, they can keep all themselves.

CROMWELL (aside).
Poor sharper!

SIR WILLIAM MUEEAY. Will they give my honest share? What I, old hawk, shall I wait idly here? No! I’ll deserve his Majesty’s reward.

CROMWELL. You will not be forgotten, trust to me.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. I want my hand on the old devil too.

CROMWELL (aside).
Then go.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (grasping his hand). Your help has been invaluable. When we shall settle up the whole account, You'll have your share. I'll make you corporal.
— [Goes out.

CROMWELL (alone, shrugging his shoulders). The court dwarf, who rates me at his size! Go, cackling goose, to hiss the eagle's flight.
[MANASSES enters cautiously, holding a dark-lantern.

SCENE V.

CROMWELL, MANASSES.

MANASSES (without seeing CROMWELL). The Puritans, the Cavaliers, Cromwell, And Charles the Second, — they are Christians all.

CROMWELL (perceiving MANASSES, on whom the gleam of the lantern falls. The odious Jew! How now! What brings him here? Comes he out of a tomb?

MANASSES (without seeing CROMWELL, who listens to him).
What matters it Which of the rival factions falls? 'T is but The blood of Christians vile which shall be shed. That's the advantage of conspiracies. If Cromwell die, or Ormond's plot be foiled, 'T is here their fate must soon decided be. I want to see it. All's against Cromwell —

CROMWELL (aside).
The traitor!

MANASSES (continuing, with eyes lifted to heaven). All, except the heavenly signs. He seems to be advancing to his doom, Yet shines his star with undiminished light. In vain I note the lines upon his palm. I see no danger there, until to-morrow.

CROMWELL (aside). What says he? Do these damned astrologers Cheat even when communing with themselves?

MANASSES (continuing). What matter? One of them must be destroyed. They mean to kill each other.
[Watching the star-covered sky. What a night!

CROMWELL (aside). First, the glib courtier, then this impious Jew. The loathsome crow replaces the magpie. Without disgust or pity or remorse, He comes to get his share of death's decay.

MANASSES (pointing his glass to the sky).
While waiting here for our conspirators, Let me observe the curves which are described By satellites of He in Thou's orbit; With holy vane I'll strike on heaven's door.
[Places his eye to the glass, then interrupts himself. At eight per cent! In such a time as this I might have charged him double rates.

CROMWELL (aside). Banker to Cavaliers; to Cromwell, spy.

MANASSES (looking through the glass). Into a ram's horn has the line been turned (I've got the caroluses from Cologne, And caroluses bring, e'en when they 're chipped), From this I think that the eclipse is sure. (Eleven, when they are dollars; ducats, nine!) Yes, Cromwell, Ormond, I've deceived them all. [.At this moment he hears the periodical cry of the distant sentinel.

SENTINEL.
All's well! Do you keep watch?

CROMWELL (impatiently, aside).
Why break they in Upon us now? Their cry but frightens owls. I must reply.
[Aloud.] All's well! Do you keep watch?
[At the sound of this voice the Jew turns suddenly.

MANASSES (aside). Jacob! I did not see this sentinel. What a thick veil has age hung o'er my eye!

SENTINEL (in the distance). All's well! Do you keep watch?

MANASSES (approaching CROMWELL respectfully).
Good-evening, friend.

CROMWELL (aside). Unlucky cry to change his train of thought. How he revealed himself!
[Aloud.] Good-evening, Jew!

MANASSES (with another bow). You 're stationed by Lord Ormond there?

CROMWELL.
Why should You, prophet's son, be answered? Yes.
To see your triumph. Cromwell falls at last, And I congratulate you.

CROMWELL. Thanks!

MANASSES (bowing).
The power Of former kings will be revived for us. What happiness for you!

CROMWELL. Indeed!

MANASSES.
My best felicitations. You expect To be advanced, of course!

CROMWELL.
I do. I am To be a corporal.

MANASSES. A noble grade! To be a corporal is a great thing. I think a corporal commands four men. Magnificent! And gold lace, too, he wears.

CROMWELL.
Superb!

Accept

MANASSES.
I’m glad

MANASSES. How quickly the Protector’s fall Builds up your fortune, my lord soldier — eh?

CROMWELL (aside).
The traitor!

MANASSES. Yes, accursed Cromwell, now You’ll expiate your crimes against the Jews. Fanatic, hypocrite, and miser!
[Addressing CROMWELL.] Zounds! This Lord Protector reckons up a bill. Don’t talk to me of crownfed citizens! Their minds are narrow as their fortunes were. No brilliant festivals, no games, no balls, No money loans! What business can one do? If, by their will, you seize a Swedish brig, They search your pocket, feel of both your hands; And to repay for all the dangers run, Give you, perhaps, three quarters of the prize.

CROMWELL.
That is a swindle!

MANASSES. Yes; the shabby kings! They know the odds ‘twixt sequins and besants.

CROMWELL.
A frightful state!

MANASSES. That Cromwell, — mark you this, Did he not insolently fine me once, Because, I know not now at just what rate, I doubled, by good luck, the sums I lent?

CROMWELL.
It was a shame!

MANASSES. He has killed industry. Was it his business, tell me, any way? What right had he, to please his fellow cranks, To stop all theatres and concerts, balls And races, where the young men of the day Drunk with excitement, squandered their estates? Was't legal, thus to rob them of their rights? Sly, hateful, economical, and stern, He is a monster! England lives through you. Your noble arm saves it from tyranny More dire than hell can e'er again conceive. I say not all these things to flatter you.

CROMWELL.
I am convinced of that.

MANASSES (aside, shrugging his shoulders and looking down on CROMWELL).
Machines of war! Incense is ne'er too thick to please their taste.

CROMWELL (aside). How many masks that odious visage wears! Suppose we tear them off now, one by one. [Aloud] Tell me my fortune, Jew!

MANASSES (bowing).
Your destiny? 'T would be an honour, my lord corporal. [Aside] The fool!
[Aloud] Your way leads unto happiness. [Aside] A telescope to see a candle — bah! [Aloud] So be it, gentle lord, I'll read your fate. In polished Latin this method is called, Experience in anima vili. [.Aside.] I laugh in Latin in this booby's face. [Aloud] Extend to me your hand; I will reveal — This infamous Cromwell —
[Examining CROMWELL'S hand by the light of the lantern.
I'm a dead man! [Falls prostrate at CROMWELL'S feet.

CROMWELL (smiling). What is it, speak? What devil's bitten you?

MANASSES (striking his forehead on the ground). A dead man!

CROMWELL. Then you know me, wretched Jew?

MANASSES (with inaudible voice). I know that hand, whose palm can hold the world; I know them, all those lines where Heaven wrote The limitless extent of Cromwell's power. Your star lied not.

CROMWELL. I hear you speak, old man. You are a wretched knave. I could, no doubt, In my turn, with this bit of polished steel Experiment in anima vili.

But I've no strength to waste in crushing worms. Arise!

[MANASSES rises. CROMWELL indicates a stone bench near the door.

Sit there.

[The Jew sits, overcome, in the darkest corner of the bench.

Above all things, keep still. A single word, and your false soul shall fly To heaven to read its fatal alphabet.

[The Jew lets his head fall on his breast. CROMWELL comes to the front of the stage and continues, watching him from the corner of his eye. This Jew served Ormond. Fate betrays them all, And adds this night-bird to the other hawks. [Walking up and down, breaking into speech from time to time.

My crimes, according to their evidence, Are, that I don't bow well and count too close. Of English charter or of Charles the First They do not say one word.

[Putting his hand on the pocket of his coat. What have I here? [Drawing from his pocket, the purse which SIR WILLIAM

MURRAY gave him. The price of blood! Ah, yes, I had forgot; They paid me to assassinate myself. I wonder how much gratitude I owe! I'll count, to judge of their munificence. The head of Cromwell, how much is it worth? 'T would not be civil to buy it too cheap. [Takes the lantern from the Jew's hands and turns its light upon the purse; at the first look he starts back with horror.

My God! My son's own name is on this purse. He furnished money for this parricide.

[Examining it with attention. I'm not mistaken: 't is indeed his crest. What proof is lacking to his treachery? Ah! wretched father and more wretched son! You were not then content to seek their den, To take your part in all their plots and feasts, Inspire their deeds and drink unto my death; You had to pay the funeral trappings too! He gave his gold to them to buy my life, And sharing everything without remorse Pays the great banquet,"which shall be my death.

[Throwing the purse violently upon the ground. His prodigalities included parricide. [RICHARD CROMWELL enters, and appears to be seeking his way.
Some one is coming.

SCENE VI.

The saint. RICHARD CROMWELL.

RICHARD CROMWELL (advancing slowly to the front). ‘T is not very light.

CROMWELL (without being seen). Impossible! Is it my son?

RICHARD CROMWELL.
I’m free At last!

CROMWELL (aside). Delivered by your friends, no doubt, To whom you sold me. Yes, go add your hand In brother’s love to theirs which drip with blood.

RICHARD CROMWELL (without seeing his father). Result of paying well the sentinel.

CROMWELL (aside).
He owns it!

RICHARD CROMWELL. I am free!

CROMWELL (aside).
At what a price!

RICHARD CROMWELL. It cost a sum; but no ingrate am I.

CROMWELL (aside). No, not ungrateful to assassins hired To rob you of your father.

RICHARD CROMWELL.
One more spree!

CROMWELL (aside). With what a careless tone this Joas speaks Of murdering me.

RICHARD CROMWELL. My father is asleep.

CROMWELL (aside).
Is he?

RICHARD CROMWELL. He suspects nothing.

CROMWELL (aside).
He keeps watch, And he hears you.

RICHARD CROMWELL (laughing).
I’ll have to pay for this!

CROMWELL (aside). My God! that laugh to follow such a crime. The wretch has come to ask them, “ Is it done?” What if I gave him, now, his punishment?

RICHARD CROMWELL. Come, come, have courage! How the saints will fret When they find that the bird has flown his cage.

CROMWELL (aside). If I should stab him?
[Draws his dagger, takes a step towards RICHARD CROMWELL, and pauses behind him.
No, it is my son.

RICHARD CROMWELL. The Cavaliers will laugh at my exploit.

CROMWELL (aside). He has the heart to jest o’er my own blood.

[Taking a step.
I’ll strike.

RICHARD CROMWELL. This end is a good thing for me.

CROMWELL (aside).
Is it?

RICHARD CROMWELL. He never would have pardoned me; But now paternal anger I escape.

CROMWELL (aside). No, you’ll escape it not, you fiend! I’ll strike. No pity; I am firm.
[Starts towards RICHARD CROMWELL, then pauses. My first-born child! It was a day of joy when God gave him. This steel will find my own blood in his veins. What care and trouble did his childhood give, And what great happiness! When I appeared, His little eyes would dance and shine; his arms Would reach their tender strength to touch mine own; His little body fluttered as with wings. Oh, when he smiled, the stars shone in my sky!

RICHARD CROMWELL. He is a tyrant! All the worse for him.

CROMWELL (aside). That last word is enough. No more a son Is one who has become a parricide.
[Gets close to his son, lifts his dagger.
Die, traitor!
[A noise of footsteps outside the gate. CROMWELL pauses, and turns around.
Hold! what noise in this dark path? Lord Ormond, coming with his Cavaliers. To its conclusion let us see his crime; We can conclude the drama afterwards. [.Replaces his dagger in its sheath; the Cavaliers enter, with drawn swords, hearing ROCHESTER asleep and gagged, with a handkerchief covering his face.

SCENE VII

The same. LORD ORMOND, LORD CLIFFORD, LORD DROG- HEDA, LORD ROSEBERRY, SIR PETERS DOWNIE, SIR WILLIAM MURRAY, SEDLEY, DOCTOR JENKINS, LORD ROCHESTER. AS the Cavaliers enter, CROMWELL resumes his place and RICHARD CROMWELL turns with astonishment.

RICHARD CROMWELL (without being seen by the Cavaliers).
These men have a suspicious air. I'll watch.
[.Retires to the left of the stage, among the trees.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (to CROMWELL, with a triumphant air).
This mighty lord had no brocaded bed. A flickering candle on his table burned; We could not see. Thanks to the lethargic, He did n't move as we conveyed him hence. We gagged him without trouble; here he is.

CROMWELL.
'T is he?

RICHARD CROMWELL (aside). What does this mean?

LORD CLIFFORD.
We've seized him. Yes, 'T is victory t

RICHARD CROMWELL (aside). What says he?

SIR PETERS DOWNIE.
Now the worst Is done. The night is dark; let us make haste. Move on!
[To DROGHEDA, EOSEBERRY, SEDLEY, and CLIFFORD who are the bearers of the sleeping prisoner and who have stopped.
What is the matter?

LORD ROSEBERRY (to DOWNIE).
Easy said By those who carry naught.

SEDLEY (to DOWNIE).

Since no relays Have been provided, we must stop and rest.

RICHARD CROMWELL (aside). I know these voices.

LORD ORMOND (his eyes fixed on the burden which the Cavaliers have placed upon the ground).
Here lies Cromwell then, Most justly punished for his monstrous crimes. We hold him, this Colossus of earth's fame, In whom the world more than in God believed. 'Tis he, and he lies helpless at our feet. There's nothing strong, nor wise, nor bold enough To wrest the culprit now from his great judge. All fled before him; where's his shelter now? Unhappy soldier, to what end have you Kept fifteen years this nation under yoke? What use are all your battles, all your wounds? The substitution of your name for Stuart's. Your reign of hate and terror and despair; The royal calvary which you have made? These crimes, sealed with the mark of Charles's crown, Are a most awful load to carry now! What an account! How will you render it? All powerful, I hated you; but crushed, I pity. Had I killed you in fair fight — Oh, cruel fate! to seize, not overcome. A triumph without battle! 'T is our fate. The sword gave place to daggers. What a head Has destiny thrown down upon the scales To make them drop upon the Stuarts' side.

RICHARD CROMWELL (aside). What do I hear? In silence, I'll keep watch.

CROMWELL (aside). I like that Ormond; he speaks generously. A soldier's heart can be depended on.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (to LORD ORMOND, indicating the prisoner).
Your lordship does great honour to the knave.

CROMWELL (aside).
Vile courtier!

SIR PETERS DOWNIE (to those who are to hear the prisoner). Let us get away.

LORD DROGHEDA.

Pray, wait.
He is as heavy as if he were dead.

SEDLEY.
It is no easy task to bear this load Unto its destination. What to do? We must deliberate.

LORD CLIFFORD. Let’s kill our man And finish, quick.

LORD DROGHEDA. So say I. Kill our man.

SEDLEY.
It is the shortest way.

RICHARD CROMWELL (aside).
What fiends they are!
Who is the prisoner?

CROMWELL (aside).
The spear is lodged;
Now let us give it rope.

MANASSES (who has observed, all this in profound silence, lifting his head; aside).
This spectacle. Relieves my grief. Now they will kill themselves. That will be consolation.

LORD CLIFFORD (to Cavaliers, brandishing his sword over ROCHESTER).
Is’t agreed?

DOCTOR JENKINS (stopping CLIFFORD). What? Without witnesses? Without a judge? No jury, law, procedure? Gentlemen, This is assassination. The term’s hard, But what especial warrant has made you A court of justice or council of war? To prove you do not violate the law, Where’s your commission, signed with royal seal? Which is attorney, which is president? I do not see two lawyers pleading here, One for the Crown, one for the criminal; What legal apparatus have you? Speak! Who knows Latin enough to be a judge, Or to confront, examine, witnesses; Give sentence, in accordance with the texts, To gallows or to hurdle? What's the day Of session? How will you your judgment date? Where is the instigator of the crime, and where Are the accomplices? On what offences Do you base your punishment? My lords, 't is not Cromwell I here defend; it is the law. I hold him, though unjudged, a criminal. He faltered in allegiance to his king, — A crime which has its punishment in law. " Qui laedit in rege majestatem Dei."

'T is England's law which has been disobeyed. That this great criminal should lose his head, In order to enforce the sacred rights, Is very just; but we must have the forms. You can't condemn him in this lawless way. You've usurped qualities not in accord; You can't be witnesses, accuser, judge, And executioner. It is absurd! I must protest 'gainst the attempt, my lords.

CROMWELL (aside). That must be Jenkins; honest magistrate!

LORD CLIFFORD (to the Cavaliers, shrugging his shoulders). What does he think his croaking words will do?

LORD DROGHEDA (to JENKINS, with an aggrieved manner). You think us ignoramuses, good sir?

SIR PETERS DOWNIE. Think you to rule the court from the king's bench?

SEDLEY (laughing). Since when said the owl to his friend the goshawk —
[Counterfeiting the voice and gestures of DOCTOR JENKINS.
"We'll sit And pronounce sentence on the animal."

LORD ROSEBERRY (laughing). He talks to us in Latin.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY. Stupid talk!

LORD CLIFFORD. My dagger is the judge, without appeal. I strike

CROMWELL (aside). Well, let him strike!

ALL THE CAVALIERS.
We’ll make an end! [LORD CLIFFORD advances with lifted sword towards the prisoner, whose face is still concealed.

DOCTOR JENKINS (gravely).
I do protest.

RICHARD CROMWELL (aside). This scene is horrible! Is it some fearful dream?

LORD CLIFFORD (pushing DOCTOR JENKINS aside).
Protest away!

LORD ORMOND (stopping CLIFFORD). One moment, Clifford; what he says is right, And I approve. The King commanded us To bring the prisoner to him, alive. It is his will; submit.

LORD CLIFFORD (to LORD ORMOND). After to-night ‘T will cost a hundred battles to bear him Away.

SIR PETERS DOWNIE. Besides, when we have got him there, Intends his Majesty to ticket him And keep him in a cage?

LORD DROGHEDA.
Well! we can send The animal well stuffed.

LORD CLIFFORD (to LORD ORMOND).
When once the sword Has left the scabbard, it must strike, my lord. This hour belongs to us; make use of it. He’s in our hands. I say, let Cromwell die.

ALL THE CAVALIERS (except LORD ORMOND and JENKINS). Yes!
[With drawn swords they rush upon the prisoner, who does not stir.

DOCTOR JENKINS (solemnly). I protest.

RICHARD CROMWELL (aside, beside himself with anxiety).
They'll kill my father! Heaven! [Throwing himself into their midst.
Assassins, stop!

ALL THE CAVALIERS. It's Richard Cromwell. 'Sdeath!

CROMWELL (aside).
What is he doing?

RICHARD CROMWELL (to the Cavaliers). Stop, for pity's sake! If of our friendship there is left one trace, Oh, hear me, Downie, Sedley, Roseberry!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (impatiently).
The devil!

RICHARD CROMWELL.
Spare my father!

SEDLEY.
Did he spare His king?

RICHARD CROMWELL. What's that you say? It was a crime. But am I guilty, must I die for it? In killing him, you kill me too, my friends.

CROMWELL (aside). Is that my Richard, hardened parricide? I do not understand.

LORD ROSEBERRY (to RICHARD CROMWELL). You are our comrade, Good Richard, but our duty we must do.

RICHARD CROMWELL You shall not kill him!

CROMWELL (aside).
He defends my life. What happiness! How I misjudged my son!

RICHARD CROMWELL. Was it in preparation for this end You made me welcome at your table, friends? For this we shared our games and feasts and revels That my purse was ever open to your needs? Oh, my once kind associates, compare What I have done, with what you do for me.

LORD ROSEBERRY (low to Cavaliers). Is he so wrong?

DOCTOR JENKINS (to RICHARD CROMWELL).
Go on, young man; that's good! But harp upon the radical defect, They have no right. Oh, plead your cause! Plead! Plead!

RICHARD CROMWELL (to DOCTOR JENKINS).
Sir —

DOCTOR JENKINS. Yes, with you, I am opposed.

RICHARD CROMWELL (to Cavaliers, clasping his hands).
My friends!

CROMWELL (aside). I see all things in a much fairer light. My son — I have been most unjust to him. I'm sure he knew naught of a plot so dark Except the part of drinking with his friends.

LORD ORMOND (to RICHARD CROMWELL). Your father played a heavy game with us. Each staked his head. He lost.

RICHARD CROMWELL.
Assassinate A father while his son looks on! Good God!
[Cries with all his strength.
Help! murder! help!
[To Cavaliers.] I'm not his only hope!
[Cries again.
Help! murder! soldiers, here!

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (interrupting him).
The men are ours.

RICHARD CROMWELL. Then I, alone, — I will defy you all!
[Putting his hand to his side to seize his sword. Ah, what! No sword assists my vengeful arm. My father, why deprive me of my sword?

CROMWELL (aside).
Poor Richard!

LORD ORMOND (to RICHARD CROMWELL). I am sorry, sir. But go, Leave us, and let the King's men work their will.

RICHARD CROMWELL. Oh, Heaven! work their will? I want no favour. Kill me upon his body, which I clasp. [Throws himself on the sleeping LORD ROCHESTER and presses his arms around him closely.

CROMWELL (aside). My son! He goes too far. 'T would be too hard To die on a false Cromwell's breast.

LORD ROSEBERRY (trying to calm RICHARD).
Come, Richard!

RICHARD CROMWELL (still clasping LORD ROCHESTER). No! Either strike me with your steel, or let Me save him.
[The Cavaliers try to drag RICHARD from off LORD ROCHESTER'S body; he struggles with them, and clings to LORD ROCHESTER with greater violence. During this struggle CROMWELL watches all the movements of the Cavaliers, and is ready at any moment to give assistance to his son. MANASSES lifts his head and watches all intently, without speaking a word.

LORD ROCHESTER (waking with a violent start, and struggling in his turn). Oh, you 're strangling me! The deuce!
[All pause with consternation.

LORD ORMOND. What voice was that, just God?
[LORD ROCHESTER tears off the handkerchief which has covered his face, and CROMWELL turns the light of the lantern upon him.

RICHARD CROMWELL (starting hack).
It is the spy.

ALL THE CAVALIERS.
It’s Rochester!

LORD ROCHESTER (to RLCHARD CROMWELL). You are the headsman, sir? You choked me hard enough to make me yield Two ghosts instead of one. Now, could n’t you Be a bit gentler, act in harmony With me, and hang me with less energy?

LORD ORMOND (amazed).
Lord Rochester!

LORD ROCHESTER (half awake, touching the handkerchief around his neck). The cord’s already on, But I don’t see that any gibbet’s here.
Are they to hang me on some rusty nail, As if I were an owl?

LORD ORMOND.
Where is Cromwell?

CROMWELL (with a voice of thunder, disclosing himself). He is here! Come forth, out of your tents, Jacob And Israel.
[At CROMWELL’S words the astonished Cavaliers turn around and see the back of the stage entirely filled by a multitude of soldiers, bearing torches; they have come out from all parts of the garden, and all the doors of the palace; among them THURLOE and the EARL OF CARLISLE are visible. All the windows of White-Hall are suddenly illuminated, and reveal armed soldiers everywhere. CROMWELL’S shadow is thrown out against this brilliant background.

SCENE VIII.

The same. EARL OF CARLISLE, THURLOE, Musketeers, Halberdiers, Noblemen, Cromwell’s Body-Guard.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY (terrified). How many soldiers! God! I’m a dead man.

THE CAVALIERS. Ah, this is treachery!

LORD ORMOND (fixing his eyes first on LORD ROCHESTER, then on CROMWELL). Cromwell and Rochester!

LORD ROCHESTER (rubbing his eyes).
Well, am I hung? Perhaps I am in hell; these fearful lights, These spectres, all these demons with their fire, — Of course it’s hell: Wilmot had never counted Upon heaven. — [Looking at the Protector.]
Yes, there is Satan. On my soul, He looks exactly like the Lord Protector!

CROMWELL (indicating the Cavaliers, to THURLOE and the EARL OF CARLISLE). Arrest these gentlemen.

[A crowd of Puritan soldiers rush upon the Cavaliers, seize them, and take away their swords, before they have time to resist.

LORD ORMOND (breaking his sword on his knee).
None takes my sword!

RICHARD CROMWELL (aside). What is all this? For this new escapade I’ll undergo another punishment. I broke from prison. I am lost!

LORD ROCHESTER (looking around with astonishment).
How now?
Here’s Drogheda and Downie, Roseberry — I’ll burn in most distinguished company. The Jew who ransomed Clifford, — he is here. They’ll roast him in his strong-box, sure. It seems We all are dead and damned. Good-night, my friends. [To Cavaliers.] Let us defy old Satan! To the devil With hell! Let’s jeer Beelzebub unto His face!

LORD ORMOND. In what a fatal trap we fall!

LORD ROCHESTER (to Cavaliers). Our noble scheme has had a sorry end. Cocytos, Cromwell puts into our wine. [Until now CROMWELL has remained silent in his triumph, arms folded across his chest, eyes turned haughtily upon the crushed and terror-stricken Cavaliers.

CROMWELL (aside, looking at LORD ORMOND).
I did not know Ormond. In spite of me, His character inspires me with respect.

LORD ORMOND (eyes fixed upon CROMWELL). How he deceived us! What audacity! What skill!

CROMWELL (aside). Alone, he looks me in the face. A noble adversary, he! He was Commissioned, and he did obey. Let's speak Unto this soldier.
[.Approaching LORD ORMOND and looking at him proudly; aloud.
Speak! Your name. LORD ORMOND.
'T is Bloum. [Aside] Not even dying will I let him know He conquered Ormond.

CROMWELL (aside).
For pride's sake, he lies.
[Aloud] Who are you?

LORD ORMOND.
One rebellious against you, Because of England and its lawful king.

CROMWELL. What do you think of me?

LORD ORMOND.
Yes, speak.
Of you, Cromwell?

CROMWELL.

LORD ORMOND. No tongue describes you but the sword.

CROMWELL. Despotic argument. It has one fault; To daggers oft the scaffold makes reply.

LORD ORMOND.
What matters that?

CROMWELL (folding his arms).
You thirsted for my blood?

LORD ORMOND.
My steel would have chastised the regicide.

CROMWELL.
Chastised? What right?

LORD ORMOND.
Retaliation’s right.

CROMWELL.
You dared to seek the lion in his den!

LORD ORMOND.
You mean the tiger?

CROMWELL.
In the master’s home?

LORD ORMOND. Cromwell, call him the regicide.

CROMWELL.
Always!
That is their speech, their reason, their reply, To every purpose and to every thought. Have I deserved the name of regicide? The people rose against illegal tax: I was severe and honest, Charles was rash. His fall was necessary, and his death Was a sad accident. I venerate The virtues which he had. The king I killed While praying for the man.

LORD ORMOND.
Oh, hypocrite!
You can’t beguile me.

CROMWELL. We must disagree Upon this point.

LORD ORMOND. A place by Ravaillac Is saved for you.

CROMWELL. Hate heats your heart too much, Old man! Your white hair should make you more wise. Cromwell or Ravaillac! Can you compare The hand which guides the world to that base one, The axe a people swings unto the knife Of an assassin? Scripture proves this truth. Blood branded Cain and honoured Samuel.

LORD ORMOND. Well, Ravaillac, whose memory is scorned, Does he not share your glory lawfully? Like you, he killed a just and noble king. What’s lacking to his deed?

CROMWELL.
He struck too low. Kings should be struck nowhere but at the head.

LORD ORMOND. Oh, Charles, my master! Clear I see him now.
[Repelling CROMWELL. Away from me, — you who have raised your hand Against the sacredness of royalty!

CROMWELL. Blood can defile and blood can purify. [.Aside.] Wherefore? He judges; I defend myself. I let him stand before me and parade His foolish honour and his virtues dull. His petty mind cannot conceive how fate Drives on, remorselessly, a giant soul! He is incurable. Leave him alone. [Turns his back on LORD ORMOND and approaches DOCTOR JENKINS.
Ah, Doctor Jenkins!
[.Indicating LORD ORMOND and SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
‘Mongst these madmen — you? [Indicating SEDLEY, LORD CLIFFORD, and LORD ROCHESTER. And with these knaves? You who are wise and just!

DOCTOR JENKINS (gravely). You have a right to say what pleases you; You've conquered.

CROMWELL. To my favour, you preferred To share with dreamers a catastrophe Which must be rudely punished.

DOCTOR JENKINS.
If you please, Make just distinction in the words you use. You can avenge yourself, not punish us. It is as well, I think, to be exact. " Tyrannus non judex," — a tyrant is Not judge. If, thanks to traitors, to deserters, You have been the most skilful in the fight And force declares for you, with us stands right. You can condemn us, true, by violence. What's that? We die an arbitrary death, De facto; pray consult your men of law, Your Whitelocke, Pierpoint, Maynard. I'll agree To stand by their decision, though Whitelocke Has a false system, and your other two Oft plead for fox against the poulterer.

CROMWELL.
Well, then! accept the gallows for your share.

DOCTOR JENKINS. I will; but we have the advantage still. An incensed tyrant's gibbet is our fate. The pillory of posterity is yours.
[CROMWELL shrugs his shoulders.

LORD ROCHESTER (still half awake). Where are my wits gone? If I'm not asleep, I must be dead. This Cromwell puzzles me. Already here? I left him, yesterday, Up there. — [Addressing Soldiers who surround him.
Come, can't one change one's dreams, one's hell? Deliver me from Noll, you've a kind look.

CROMWELL (after a moment of reflection, folds his arms and speaks smilingly to the Cavaliers). Well, sirs! You have prepared a wondrous plot. You thought to catch Cromwell in a child's trap, To murder him, — for your triumphant knives Would not have treated me, before the gate, As David treated Saul within the cave. I think no one of you had been content To gently cut the border of my cloak. I understand. 'T is simple. I approve; But, in approving, I must frankly say You might have stumbled on a better plan. For this attempt is weak in all its points. I’m sorry that I knew it not in time To offer you my counsel, my good friends; But do not blame me. You have sweated hard To think this out. And I, like Joshua, Whom twenty kings united could not harm, Have cut the sinews of your steeds of war. We all have acted as became our place.

You made attack, and I planned my defence. As for your project, in itself, I own I like the ardour of such loyal hearts. Audacity and courage suit my taste. Although success has not been quite complete, I shall esteem your efforts none the less. You worked with boldness, firm and disciplined; You did not falter, hesitate, nor blench; You are, — accept these compliments sincere, — Good foemen, not unworthy of my steel. I see no reason to disparage you. I value you too high to let you go. These feelings shall be publicly expressed, And with proud honours I will have you hung Don’t thank me; pardon me instead, if I [.Indicating SIR WILLIAM MURRAY, who is overcome with terror.

Must place this weeping braggart by your side. To me he is not worth the rope he costs. He ought to thank you; for without your aid He’d not have had a chance to rouse my ire.

[.Indicating MANASSES, who stands motionless. Forgive me, also, if I add this Jew, — A sin, with Christians mix a deicide, To honest robbers join Barabbas; but I’ll favour you: he shall be hung low down. I beg each one of you to pardon me For such scant pay; I give what I have got: Compared unto your merit, ‘t is not much. Go now; prepare your own account with God. We all are sinners, friends. In a few hours, When dawn shall cast its light upon these walls, You will be hung. Now go — and pray for me. [The Guards, with the EARL OF CARLISLE at their head, lead off the prisoners, who, with the exceptions of MURRAY and the Jew, preserve a proud and scornful attitude. CROMWELL stands reflecting a few moments and then turns suddenly to THURLOE.

Let them prepare Westminster. I am king!

[He re-enters White-Hall through the gate, and THURLOE with a profound obeisance exits through the park.

SCENE IX.

THE FOUR FOOLS. AS CROMWELL and THURLOE go out, GRAMADOCH advances his head from the Fools' hiding- place, then comes out cautiously, looking around to see if any one is present; after an instant he makes a sign to the others, who follow, and the four Fools, standing close together, look from one to the other and burst into violent fits of laughter.

GRAMADOCH (to the others).
What do you say to that?

GIRAFF (laughing).
Whew! how ridiculous!

ELESPURU.
The nether world is visible in this.

TRICK.
'T is something mad, idiotic, unheard of!

GIRAFF.
It's a gay spectacle. Cromwell unmasked, Fire without smoke, and Satan true to life.

GRAMADOCH. Of all the actors in this fateful scene, Which was the maddest? Come, to whom the prize?

TRICK.
To Murray, who on Cromwell spent his scorn, Then turns from Noll to Charles in pirouette, And swears a weather-vane is a true flag.

GIRAFF.
No, 't is to Richard, son of Belial, Who dies for Rochester from filial love.

TRICK.
If Cromwell had killed Richard in his rage, 'T would have been fine.

GIRAFF.

That would have ended all.

TRICK.
A shame!

GRAMADOCH. So then to Richard you award The noble fool’s-cap, trophy of our art?

ELESPURU. The Doctor’s learned frankness I prefer.

TRICK.
Lord Ormond preached to Cromwell! That was good. Was’t not amusing? I would have preferred To teach justice unto a man of law, To comb a polar bear, a panther track, Or stir the crater of Vesuvius.

—

GIRAFF.
This Jew has no conception of romance, —
This rabbi-spy, miser-astrologer, Who, while his thoughts gloat o’er the glint of gold, Comes with his lantern to decipher stars.

ELESPURU.
Amphibious animal, to both spheres strange. This Jew appeared upon the scene as comes A bat to pierce the darkness of the tomb.

GIRAFF.
Most apt is your comparison, because Upon a cross, before some tall church door, Old Noll will nail him for a scare-crow. Ha!

TRICK.
Thus Cromwell settles with the Cavaliers. Upon his gallows many ropes has he.

GRAMADOCH. Yet, though he bears a world upon his back, Cromwell’s more mad than all the rest, because He will be king; and death waits at the door. [These words arrest the attention of the Fools; they drove close to GRAMADOCH.

GIRAFF (to GRAMADOCH).
What’s that?

GRAMADOCH. You’ll see.

TRICK (to GRAMADOCH).
But, tell us —

GRAMADOCH.
By and by.

ELESPURU (to GRAMADOCH). Why should you care?

GRAMADOCH (shaking his head).
A mystery’s an egg. Don’t break it if you wish the chicken hatched. Have patience. Cromwell, who in all succeeds, If he takes this step, finds his precipice. Death’s waiting. At the coronation, friends, You’ll see, you’ll laugh. Ah, he is much more mad Than are the dwarfs he crushes as he walks! A thousand times more mad, because he thinks He is so wise.

TRICK.
But, to conclude this talk, The most idiotic, counting Cromwell, are Ourselves. If we were wise, we would not waste Our time on these stupidities, when we Might pass the hours in idleness or sleep, In singing to the echoes all our woes, Or looking at the moon down in a well.
[They go out.

ACT V.

THE WORKMEN.

SCENE. — The Great Hall at Westminster. On the left, towards the back, the main door of the hall seen obliquely; in the background semi-circular steps, rising to a good height. Rich hangings of tapestry fill the spaces between the gothic pillars all around the hall, allowing but the capitals and cornices to be seen. To the right, a frame covered with boards, which are to form the steps of the throne's platform. Several men are working on them, as the curtain rises; some are nailing the final boards on the steps, while others are covering them with a rich scarlet velvet carpet, fringed with gold; others are arranging a dais of the same material and the same colour above the platform. Under the canopy, the arms of the Protector are embroidered in gold. Divers implements belonging to the carpenters and upholsterers are scattered on the floor; and some ladders placed against the pillars show that the draping has just been terminated. Opposite to the throne is a pulpit. All around the hall are tribunes and balconies richly draped. It is three o'clock in the morning; day is beginning to dawn, and rays of light fall through the half- opened door and through the casements, making the light of the lamps look pale. Numerous brass lamps are hung around the room for the benefit of the night labourers.

SCENE I.

SOME WORKMEN.

THE FOREMAN (by gesture encouraging those who are arranging the dais).
The work progresses. Good! The dais is large Enough.
[To a Workman who stands near, with the Bible in his hands.

Come, brother, edify us. Read.

THE WORKMAN (reading). “ Now, the temple had a cedar wainscot, A floor of spruce—”

THE FOREMAN (to Workmen).
Eat of the holy feast.

THE READER (continuing). “ King Solomon supported it, from space To space, by plateaus with five sides and by Four-cornered tiles; he covered this great work With plates of gold, and in the oracle Beside the altar placed two cherubim With outstretched wings.”
A WORKMAN (casting a glance over the preparations).
Our hands accomplished much Last night. That his work should be left complete King Solomon gave seven years unto His temple and fifteen unto his palace. But for our labour, we had one short hour.

THE FOREMAN.
Well said. [To the Workmen who are arranging the dais.
That ladder is a better one. [To ENOCH.] Can one make too much haste —
[To the Workmen who are putting the curtain on the dais.
That is the height — [To ENOCH.] When one for the Protector builds a throne?

SECOND WORKMAN. The ceremony will take place to-day?

THE FOREMAN. Yes; by good luck the platform will be ready. [To ENOCH.] We never worked —
[To the Workmen who are nailing the hoards.
Less noise, come, over there! [To ENOCH] Naught was e’er done so quick, except that night —

ENOCH.
What night?

THE FOREMAN. Your memory is not very good. Eight years ago: it was a cold, dark night, — The night of January thirtieth, Or twenty-ninth. We also worked that time For my Lord Oliver.

SECOND WORKMAN. Did we not build The scaffold of King Charles that night?

THE FOREMAN.
Yes, Tom!
Of King Barabbas is it thus one speaks? Of English Pharaoh?

ENOCH (as if recalling memories). I recollect. The scaffold rested ‘gainst the palace wall. Faith! those were no rough steps on which to hang The rabbis, and burn witches: no indeed! A scaffold, black, well-built, as one should be. ‘T was on a level with the window, too. No need of ladder: most convenient.

THE FOREMAN. And strong enough to bear all Herod’s sons. Robin himself could find no better joists. One could die comfortably without a fear.

TOM (on the platform). This throne is not as solid: see, it shakes.

ENOCH.
The scaffold was not built so rapidly.

THE WORKMAN (who holds the Bible, shaking his head). No, ‘t was not finished in a single night.

ENOCH.
Why not?

THE WORKMAN (indicating the throne). It was a part of this same scene. This is one higher step which Cromwell mounts. What he began then, terminates to-day. The scaffold is completed by this throne.

TOM.
Inspired Nahum sees things in their truth.

NAHUM (eyes fixed upon the throne). Yes, stage for stage, I like that one the best. ‘T was Charles’ turn then: now, it will be ours. On the black cloth Cromwell but slew a king; Upon that purple, now, the nation dies.

THE FOREMAN (to NAHUM). Dare you speak thus? What if some one should hear?

NAHUM.
To sack-cloth and to ashes am I doomed! What does it matter? Would that Cromwell heard. If he insists on being crowned, he falls. He is accursed; and I predict his death.
Yes, I, poor miserable man, who am Worth more than he, with all his vile renown. For God preferred a desert unto Tyre, The grape of Ephraim to Abiezer’s vine.

THE FOREMAN (watching NAHUM, who stands in ecstasy). Imprudent man!
[To ENOCH.] The royal arm-chair must Be placed upon the platform. Lend your help. [Both mount the steps, carrying a large arm-chair covered with scarlet velvet, and heavily gilded; upon its back the arms of the Protector are embroidered and heavily embossed in gold. They place the arm-chair in the centre of the platform.

TOM (looking at the royal seat). A good arm-chair. He’ll sit there like a king. —

ENOCH (giving the final touches to the arm-chair; to THE FOREMAN).
That night you speak of, I prepared the block, — A fine oak block it was, — for Charles’s head, All furnished with its cramps and double chain, Quite new: used only for Lord Strafford.

THIRD WORKMAN.
Yes!
Who came to bid us stop our hammering?

THE FOREMAN. ‘T was Tomlinson, colonel on duty then. He said the torture we need not begin, And that our hammers with their violent noise

Deprived the criminal of his last sleep.

NAHUM.
He slept: how strange!

FOURTH WORKMAN.
During those gloomy hours, If any one had seen us working there Building a scaffold by the torches’ light, As if we were grave-diggers at a grave, Or demons, who by witchcraft in one night Can build up an abnormal edifice, That person would have been well terrified.

ENOCH.
I like nocturnal work; it pays us well. I lived, with my ten children, for two weeks On Charles’s scaffold.

FIFTH WORKMAN. I wonder if Cromwell Will pay as much for thrones as scaffolds.

TOM.
But ‘T is Master Barebone, the upholsterer Who gets the most out of this whole affair. He furnishes the curtains, seats, brocades, And of our salary three quarters takes.

NAHUM.
A temple-vender!

FIFTH WORKMAN.
Mede!

FOURTH WORKMAN.
True son of Eve, Who blindly steps upon the axe’s edge.

NAHUM (rejoining).
A pillar of the ark, buttress of Babel;
One foot in heaven, the other one in hell.

TOM.

Be silent! He’ll dismiss us if he finds We treat him as he treats his master. Hark, He comes!

[BAREBONE enters. All the Workmen resume their work in silence; NAHUM, alone, remains standing, motionless, his eyes fixed on the old, much-worn open Bible, which he holds.

SCENE II.

The same. BAREBONE.

BAREBONE (looking over the work which has been done). This is encouraging.

[To Workmen.] I’m pleased With you. I think there’s nothing left to do. [Aside] I am extremely gratified to find They’ve finished their abominable task so soon; For the conspirators, who now are due, Can hold a council without witnesses; Can overlook the place, and decide how To strike the surest blow at Oliver. How fortunate for this conspiracy That I’m upholsterer to this anti-Christ! Let me dismiss them.

[Aloud to Workmen.] Go, my brothers, go! Be strong against all spirits that seduce. Love well your neighbours, — even wicked men [To THE FOREMAN.] Sir Nehemias, [THE FOREMAN approaches BAREBONE, while the Workmen pick up their tools and load themselves with their lamps and ladders.

Get the buff cuirass Completed instantly, for Cromwell’s use, Whom may the Lord protect.

[Low, and whispering in THE FOREMAN’S ear.

From what is left, Make at your leisure, when no one can see, Some scabbards for the daggers of our saints. [THE FOREMAN bows his head in acquiescence, and goes out accompanied by all the Workmen.

SCENE III.

BAREBONE (alone, standing before the throne, as if in contemplation). Behold this throne, — unrighteous edifice On which we ‘re placed, a sacrifice to Nesroch; Where the successful chief becomes a king; Where this rejuvenated serpent casts His skin. By this he thinks to clinch his power, This Zerubbabel in whom Nimrod breathes, This priest of hell; corrupter of mankind, Who, prostituting our most sacred church, Designs within the depths of his vile soul To make the spouse of saints his concubine. God’s fierce oppressor and betrayer too, Than Stharnabusai thousand-fold more base. Behold this throne decked with anathema! All is correct: six feet by nine, and draped In crimson velvet. Yes, it took ten bales To cover it like this. ‘T was not enough For this irreverent son to wield a power Usurped from God himself; to trample On our Israel as on a broken reed; More than Adonibesec to be feared; To ape the glutton, over Europe stretched, Beneath whose table sixty kings shall feed. No, he must have a throne! And what a throne! A mass of fringe, of damask, satin, plumes, Whereon, as of the Holy Lamp’t was writ, The sculptor and the lapidary joined Their arts. This tinsel he must have as well, — When I say tinsel, I mean solid gold; Pure gold of Hungary. These tassels fine Would furnish four republics with gold coin. I chose them all myself; of lesser weight They would have hurt the velvet’s grand effect, — Rare Spanish velvet. Let him reign and die. The crown shall glorify his final hour. We’ll put Sisera’s nail upon his brow.

[Looking at the throne cushions. I paid five dollars for each yard of this; I’ll sell it now for ten, — an ancient mode. This Ehud’s a good customer, were’t not For avarice. His death is close at hand. Under the mighty dais, with its folds, Where his plebeian crest usurps a crown, The royal steps will yield beneath his tread. The place is suited to the dagger’s act. [Walks up and down before the throne, and his countenance changes its expression of rage to one of admiration for all the ornaments which decorate it. He’s capable of beating me down yet; Of letting Maynard mutilate the bill; Clipping the gold brocades, cheapening the moires; Then, if I dare complain, in his good faith, He sends his soldiers to talk law to me.

Serve Pharaohs? Ingratitude always Is the first impulse of their frozen hearts.

However, he should be content with me.

To parody the majesty of kings, There’s nothing wanting to this corrupt throne, This hideous theatre, this altar vile.

All is magnificent. I spared no pains.
To Moloch’s splendour I resigned myself.
Carpets, Bohemian leather, I’ve exposed To all the peril blasphemy invites.
Die, Jebusite! — [Seized by a sudden thought.
Where will I get my pay When he is dead? Great Deborah left not Her nail in the unholy brow she struck. When Samson’s drowsy vigour overturned The alien temple, what great risk ran he? When, in her splendour, from the bloody feast, Where Holofernes had succumbed to her, Fled Judith, she contrived to save her life And all her jewels. Who’ll defray my bill? What profit will accrue me from his death? I must leave something for my widow’s needs. I see the matter in a different light. Let me reflect. — Here are our friends, the saints. [Enter the Puritan conspirators with LAMBERT at their head. They all wear long cloaks, and large conical- shaped hats with wide brims, which are pulled down over their dark and sombre countenances. They walk slowly, as if absorbed in profound reflection; several seem to be murmuring prayers. The gleam of dagger- blades, is visible through their half-open cloaks.

SCENE IV.

BAREBONE, LAMBERT, JOYCE, OVERTON, PLINLIMMON, HARRISON, WILDMAN, LUDLOW, SYNDERCOMB, PIMPLETON, PALMER, GARLAND, PRIDE, JEROBOAM OF EMER, and other Roundhead conspirators.

LAMBERT (to BAREBONE).
Well?
[For all answer BAREBONE points to the throne and the regal decorations, on which the conspirators cast glances of hatred. LAMBERT turns to his companions and addresses them solemnly.
You behold! Faithful to his designs, Cromwell completes his sacrilegious work. At Westminster all things have been prepared. The platform’s raised, and all may see the steps Where Parliament will grovel at his feet. Of our last chance let us make noble use. We judge this second king; his crime is clear, — That throne is proof.

OVERTON.
It is his scaffold, friends. He will ascend to make a fatal fall. His last hour is determined by himself. Here, resurrected from the tomb of kings, This pomp shall be his funeral display. Our knife will join his soul to Stuart’s ghost. To come to this! This tyrant, hypocrite, Exhumes the royalty which we proscribed. There, where we threw it, in the tomb he seeks The bloody sceptre that he envied Charles. He dares purloin the crown from out the grave. But back ‘t will fall, and drag down Cromwell too;
And if some other one should dare as much, May every royal robe be a new shroud.

LAMBERT (aside).
He goes too far!

OVERTON (continuing). Anathema to him!

ALL.
Anathema!

OVERTON (continuing). All have conspired with us, — Cromwell himself. His fortune blinded him, This Attila inspired by Machiavel. Without his help, hate had been powerless To undermine his popular control. He lost himself, because he did not know When his firm tread encountered different ground. He, who forsook his native heath, must die. To be a king, he is become a man; And Death, beneath that title, claims her prey. The crowd, once his support, leaves him to us. ‘T was he who signed this ill-omened divorce; In yielding up the people, he renounced His strength. They ‘re willing to be crushed and wronged, But by a Lord Protector, not a king. As a plebeian tyrant he was safe. Had he been worse than Herod, to the world His uncrowned brow was deemed the only one Strong to support the burden of the State; But on that brow let shine a diadem, And all things change: to those who loved him most, ‘T is but a king’s head, and belongs by right Unto the executioner.

ALL (excepting LAMBERT and BAREBONE. Since the conspirators arrived, BAREBONE seems to be absorbed in deep reflection).

Well said! JOYCE.
We’ve drawn our swords, and reeking they shall go Back to our scabbards, to the hilt besmeared A second time with blood of traitor kings.

PRIDE.
Yes, ‘t is his tomb he seeks at Westminster. He was the high-priest of his insincere, His hell-bespoken sect; he wants to be Its idol. He has raised the altar; now Upon it he shall immolate himself.

LUDLOW.
Goffe, Skippon, Wolseley, chiefs of his own guard, Will strike with us, if he puts on the crown. Naught can defend him from our thirsty knives. His son-in-law Fleetwood, his brother-in-law, Will let him fall, to freedom true in heart. They’d rather see him dead than crowned a king.

HARRISON.
To Fleetwood honour, and to Desborough! Their souls are not weakened by childish fears Or women’s pity.

GARLAND (who has remained silent up to this time, his eyes fixed on the first rays of the rising sun).
I ne’er saw a brighter sun. A worthy victim do we strike to-day. I never felt such joy nor such great pride In following a path God had revealed. No, not when we forced Strafford’s head to lie Between the sainted axe and holy block; Nor when Laud died, that execrable fiend, Infernal meteor of the Star Chamber, That prelate in whose temple Bethel rose, And who turned to the east his altar vile; Who scoffed with hatred at our Sabbath rights, And spent the day of prayer in shameful games. Nor yet, when Stuart, proud of ancient rights, Deeming a royal crest was God’s own mark, Knelt in his royalty, superb and calm, Before the axe of a rebellious world. In each, I thought we slew an anti-Christ In human form, according to the text. But now I see triumphant Zion strike At Cromwell, the base sycophant, and from The steps whereon he mounts with dizzy tread, Cast him to Tophet, whence hell threw him up. Oh, what a day! Goliath, England’s scourge, Shall bite the dust beneath the patriots’ feet

SYNDERCOMB. No finer dagger-thrust was ever made.

PRIDE.
What honour for God’s warriors!

JOYCE (mounting the throne).
His blood Shall stream upon the purple, where our net Awaits him.
[At these words, BAREBONE, who has listened in silence all this time, starts, as if seized with a sudden and terrible anxiety.

BAREBONE (aside, striking his brow). Out upon me! Was I mad? They’ll spoil my throne with their great streams of blood. Twenty per cent I’ll lose upon it, then.
[Aloud, after a moment’s reflection. Your speech is soft as amber to my soul. I’m but the humblest member of the fold, Yet listen. To the law obedient, You will stab Cromwell. Are you sure’t is right? Remember Malchus: when Peter cut off His ear, the sword by Jesus was accursed. Is’t not in God Almighty’s name forbid To strike with steel and cause the blood to flow? If in this matter still your hearts feel doubt, Read chapter ninth of Genesis, and Numbers, Chapter the thirty-fifth.
[A great movement of indignation among the Roundheads.

JOYCE.
Who dares speak thus? LUDLOW.
Pray, what has softened you, Barebone?

GARLAND.
You wish To spare the anti-Christ?

BAREBONE (stammering).
No! I do not —
I did not mean —

SYNDERCOMB. Are you false to the cause?

HARRISON.
Are we then brigands, to be so condemned, Assassins?

OVERTON. No! to kill is not perforce To commit murder; for on altar fires The goat becomes a holy sacrifice, And his destroyer is a sacred priest. Agag was killed by Samuel, and we Kill the Protector. We are the ministers Of the Most High, and of the multitude.

JOYCE (to BAREBONE). From your dark looks I argued nothing good. You wished to save Cromwell? You hear our words.

BAREBONE.
Barebone save Attila? May God forbid!

SYNDERCOMB (casting indignant looks upon BAREBONE). He is a pheresite or gueber.

GARLAND.
Whence This mortuary pity for Cromwell?

BAREBONE. To shed blood is to violate the law.

SYNDERCOMB (striking him on the shoulder). Must one not dye the purple of this king?

PRIDE.
Barebone is mad.

WILDMAN. Do you mean to withdraw?

LUDLOW (shaking his head). Oft treason borrows scruples for a cloak.

BAREBONE (terrified). You'd think that —

SYNDERCOMB (furious, to BAREBONE). Silence!

GARLAND (to BAREBONE).
Have you drunk, by chance, The waters of the Dead Sea?

HARRISON.

He upholds Balthasar.

OVERTON. Are you Achan who has come To spoil the peace of the afflicted tribes?

PRIDE.
I do not recognize Barebone! May be Some devil has borrowed his countenance To succour Ammon!

GARLAND.
That must be the case I had a most atrocious dream last night.

SYNDERCOMB (drawing his dagger). We’d better test his magic with our swords. [As he beholds the flashing steel, BAREBONE, who has tried in vain to get a chance to speak, cries out violently.

BAREBONE.
But listen!

LAMBERT.
Speak!

BAREBONE (terrified).
My friends, I have no wish To save this English Ehud from his fate; But there are holier ways of killing him, — To strangle, poison, beat, and many more.

SYNDERCOMB (replacing his dagger in its scabbard). That’s fortunate!

GARLAND (grasping BAREBONE’S hand). I did not understand.

WILDMAN (to BAREBONE). I’m glad you’ve not abandoned your high thoughts.

OVERTON (to BAREBONE). Although to shed his blood is a great sin, We have not time to kill him righteously.

BAREBONE (yielding with bad grace). So be it: stab him, if it is your will. [.Aside.] It’s frightful, all the same!

GARLAND.
Yes, Judith’s sword Is brother to the knives with which we strike; Their place is waiting in heaven’s arsenal.

HARRISON.
Now to almighty God we render thanks For sparing us the aid of Cavaliers; Their help had hurt our task and dimmed our fame. But God, who to us wills the victory, Confounds Ormond and Cromwell in their plans. Gives Ormond unto Cromwell, and gives him Unto the saints.

ALL (brandishing their daggers). Almighty God be praised!

LAMBERT.
The hours are passing, gentlemen. Ere long The people unto Westminster will rush. If we should be surprised —

OVERTON (low to JOYCE).
He always fears.

LAMBERT.
Let us not lull ourselves in a false hope. What have we settled? Come, let us conclude.

SYNDERCOMB. In spite of armour, we must strike Cromwell; That’s all.

LAMBERT. But where and when and how!

OVERTON.
Listen to me Among the actors or spectators placed, We’ll be attentive to the great display, Holding our daggers hidden in our hand. At first the rhetoricians will be heard, The aldermen, and afterwards the preachers. Then will come Cromwell, who, upon his throne, From Warwick’s hands will take the royal purple, While the Lord Mayor will bestow the axe. Whitelocke will give the seals; and, greater sacrilege, The Bible with gold clasps will be offered By Thomas Widdrington. Lambert, at last, Will place the crown: that is the time for us. Let us surround him, and as soon as gleams The gold upon his forehead, let us strike.

ALL.
Amen!

LAMBERT. Who will strike first?

SYNDERCOMB.
I will!

PRIDE.
I will!

WILDMAN.
I will!

OVERTON. The honour is my due.

GARLAND.
‘T is mine!
I’ve blessed this blade: it cannot miss his heart.

HARRISON. I will begin: I owe his corrupt heart A blow for each of the Lord’s hundred names. For four weeks now I have been practising The blow upon a Cromwell made of wax.

LUDLOW.
The glory of a deed like this is great; ‘T is natural we all should urge our claim.
As for myself, if I have ever asked Of Heaven a conspicuous sign of grace, ‘T is that my arm might strike this monster down.
I hoped my sons should one day say of me, “ He overthrew the Stuarts and Cromwell;
Twice did Ludlow demolish tyranny.”

But this same Ludlow is a citizen, And holds the people’s good above his own.
Lambert is highest here amongst us all:
He bears the crown, he stands beside the throne;
He, best of all, can strike the fatal blow.

LAMBERT (aside, with alarm). What does he say?

LUDLOW (continuing).
In such an hour as this Each one should sacrifice to public weal. Do as I do.
To General Lambert I yield the honour of the opening blow.

LAMBERT (aside). Who asks him for it? God! he ruins me.

PRIDE.
So be it. I agree to Ludlow’s words.

SYNDERCOMB.
I sacrifice myself.
[To LAMBERT.] TO you the blow!

LAMBERT (hesitatingly). Such honour, gentlemen, consoles my grief. [Aside] Frightful embarrassment!

WILDMAN (to LAMBERT).
Yes, it is you, Who shall strike Cromwell. Happy fate is yours!

GARLAND.
Like an archangel you will crush Satan.

LAMBERT (troubled).
I am confused —

OVERTON (low to JOYCE). He changes colour, look!

JOYCE (low to OVERTON).
The coward!

LAMBERT (continuing). I am overjoyed.
[Aside.] My God! What shall I do? I'm in despair. Curse Ludlow! [Aloud] Thus honoured by your choice — I can't express —

OVERTON (low to JOYCE). He's white with terror.

LAMBERT (continuing). I —

GARLAND (to LAMBERT).
The god of strength Reveal himself in you!

SYNDERCOMB (to LAMBERT). Your part Will be as easy as magnificent.
[He mounts the platform and points to the arm-chair. There sits Cromwell or Nabo, both together Making one devil —
[Taking one step, he indicates the place LAMBERT should occupy near the throne.
You are to stand here.

LAMBERT (aside).
'T is unavoidable!

SYNDERCOMB (continuing his demonstration). With perfect ease You can displace his mantle when you give The crown; then you can stab him to the heart. I envy you!

LAMBERT (to SYNDERCOMB). As a true friend, I yield The honoured place to you.

LUDLOW (eagerly to LAMBERT).
'T is you we need; Your place alone can guarantee the blow. To yield to Syndercomb, were to risk all.

LAMBERT (insisting). I'm the least worthy —

OVERTON. Lambert hesitates!

LAMBERT (aside).
Well, then!
[Aloud.] I'll strike!

ALL (brandishing their daggers).
Then die, Amalekite!
Die, Oliver Cromwell!

BAREBONE (with supplicating tone).
Pray, Zion, hear me! O great deliverers of Israel, In stabbing Cromwell, do not spoil my throne. This velvet's dear, — ten dollars by the yard. [At BAREBONE'S words all the Puritans more back and look at him with indignation. BAREBONE continues without noticing it. Save the rich curtains, as you strike him, please, And make him, if you can, fall on his back, In order that this Moloch's ruddy blood May stain my carpets the least possible.
[Renewed demonstration of anger from the conspirators.

SYNDERCOMB (looking sidewise at BAREBONE). Who is this publican?

PRIDE.
What, Barebone, — more

GARLAND.
Of Nebuchadnezzar I've heard men speak.

WILDMAN (to BAREBONE). Know you the parable of the rich man?

LUDLOW.
We give our life: you count your farthings — faugh!

OVERTON (laughing). That's it. Our friend, upholsterer of Cromwell Invokes the aid of Heaven to save his goods, And puts them under God's protection.

GARLAND.

’Tis A sin to mix such matters, and deserves To draw God’s idle thunder on our heads.

WILDMAN.
Erastianism vile!

BAREBONE (aside). ‘T is the right word.
Alas!
[Aloud] Allow me to explain myself. Does one rebel ‘gainst God, betray the State, Because one feels a love for Heaven’s gifts, Which God gives man who lives on earth an hour, As consolation for his loneliness?
[Indicating the throne. Six cubits from the base unto the top! Such decorations should not one regret? All I possess is there!

HARRISON (casting envious looks upon the splendid trappings to which BAREBONE points). A splendid sight! Upon my soul! I did not look before. Those tassels of pure gold; look, Syndercomb, That arm-chair of brocaded velvet cost A thousand jacobuses.

BAREBONE. At the least!

HARRISON (to SYNDERCOMB). What do you say?

SYNDERCOMB (devouring the arm-chair with his eyes). What booty!

BAREBONE (starting).
What said he?

SYNDERCOMB (to the other conspirators). God, who stands by us, gives his saints good things. Therefore all things belong to us. He dies Beneath our blows; we will divide the spoils.

BAREBONE.
Now, God forbid! My gold cloth, curtains, silk!

SYNDERCOMB. Of Lebanon’s eagles the gold calf is prey!

BAREBONE.
Of eagles — why not crows? You would do that?

OVERTON (separating them). Come, let us kill first; afterwards divide!

ALL.
Amen!

BAREBONE. Damnation! They are pirates — these! They want to pillage! Plunderers! Alack! They'll make an infidel of me. What shall I do? Divide my fortune amongst them! Damnation!
[BAREBONE retires to the centre of the conspirators' circle and gives himself up to gloomy thoughts.

OVERTON (to the Roundheads, who are grouped around him).
While waiting for Israel To struggle with this King of Babylon, And lift with us, 'gainst Oliver the First, The banner on which stand the harp and palm, Six must remain in the Guards' Hall.

ALL.
E'en so!

OVERTON (continuing). Hiding their daggers from the partisans, Twelve of us shall be grouped around the steps Where Richard fastened Norfolk's spurs. Four more Within the waiting-chamber, and four more Within the court of Tutellage; the rest Dispersed among the chapels of the Stuarts, Tudors, and Plantagenets, must guard The stairs and hold the corridors; so that If Cromwell lose or win, we may have power To open or to close the right of way. These last must help, by speech, to fan the fire Which will be smould'ring in the active crowd, And by inciting the great tribes to rage Quicken the eruption of the volcano.

ALL (except BAREBONE, clutching their daggers). Devour Abiron! Dathan be consumed!

GARLAND (throwing himself on his knees in the centre of the Puritan circle, lifting his dagger to heaven). O God! creator of the atom and Leviathan, assist our enterprise. To manifest thy power, which men fear not, Let fire burst flaming from this Cromwell’s breast. Direct our blows, Redeemer God, kind God, God merciful! Yield up thy enemies. Since we are thy obedient servants, Lord, Let shine within our hands, upon our brows, Thy flaming swords and lurid tongues of fire.

[He rises; the Puritans, remaining a few seconds with bowed heads, seem to pray with him.

BAREBONE (aside).
Abomination dwells within their thoughts.
Divide my fortune!

LAMBERT.
Friends, the hour is past.
Let us go forth.
[Aside] How shall I strike this blow?

LUDLOW.
We’ll speak no more; we’ll strike. Let the accursed Render account to the elect.
[All the conspirators, except BAREBONE, go out with the same processional solemnity which marked their entrance. As LAMBERT is about to cross the threshold, OVERTON holds him back by the arm.

SCENE V.

LAMBERT, OVERTON, BAREBONE. During this entire scene, BAREBONE, who is still absorbed in melancholy reflections, is concealed from the two men by the platform of the throne.

OVERTON.
My lord!

LAMBERT.
What is it?

OVERTON.
General, I beg a word!

LAMBERT.
Go on!
[Both return to the front of the stage and remain an instant in silence, — LAMBERT in the attitude of expectation, OVERTON as if not knowing just how to begin.

OVERTON.
Is yours a steady hand?

LAMBERT.
What! do You question it?

OVERTON.
I do!

LAMBERT (haughtily).
How dare —

OVERTON.
Hear me!
To cut down Cromwell in his pride, they've placed The sword of Israel within your hand. You have been chosen to destroy these schemes, And cut the knot of this great tragedy. Well, you received with a debasing fear The honour I'd have bought with my heart's blood. You would have shirked your task with joy. I know Your heart, ambitious coward, you! [LAMBERT makes a gesture of anger; OVERTON restrains him.
Oh, let Me speak! I'll not consider now your plans, Covered by a most penetrable mask. I need not tell you that my eye reads you, That I discern your plot, yet to be born, Which travails now in our conspiracy.
You think our arms will help to make your tide.
You think, for pride is a false reckoner, A giant is replaced by a dwarf.
You want the heritage that Cromwell leaves, And all its burdens do not stagger you.

The load is rather heavy for your back.
I see the hand which takes, but not the arms Which can sustain. There’s nothing simpler than Your thoughts, which plan things as your heart desires.
You think the people will support your claim, —
As if’t were ever seen in the world’s course That when a yoke bends Liberty’s bold brow A tyrant is less burdensome when small.

LAMBERT (furious). Colonel, this injury —

OVERTON.
Whene’er you will, I’m at your service, sir. Now you must hear The brutal frankness of an honest voice. You are no king as yet to be deceived. Without dwelling on your ambitious dreams, This is what I am moved to say to you: You are to strike a blow which you redoubt, I am to stand near you. If your hand fails To punish Cromwell’s regal insolence, When he has placed the crown upon his brow If you don’t stab him, I will be more prompt! Look at this knife. [Showing his dagger to LAMBERT.
In lack of other, this, To strike his heart, will pass first through your own. [LAMBERT starts back, aghast with anger and astonishment. I leave you choice between two dastard acts. [Goes out.

SCENE VI.

LAMBERT; BAREBONE, still in the corner of the stage.

LAMBERT (trembling with rage, following OVERTON to the great door).
You dare this? Insolent! Hear me! He’s gone! And on my brow a burning blot of shame Upbraids my hand, too slow for punishment. Gone! Did the traitor humble me enough? With what madmen fate now associates me! As a conspirator, what is my life? Always far distant from the goal I seek; Threatened with loss of all, now that we win; Exposed to thousand perils through affronts; Crushed by the tyrant, outraged by the slaves! Retreat? A precipice! Advance, on lava beds. Cromwell or Overton, headsman or prey! What! draw his sword against me? Yes, he would. I know him! I must strike the fatal blow!

BAREBONE (without being heard or seen by LAMBERT). This guilty race would plunder me!

LAMBERT (musing).
Strike him Amongst his friends, in sight of his own guards! Strike him, who lavished benefits on me! What base ingratitude! If I should miss —

BAREBONE (thoughtfully). Rob me of capital to found a bank!

LAMBERT.
Fatal ambition! You’ve led me too far. I sought the throne, and stumble ‘gainst the block. [Walking up and down with agitation, casting glances outside.
Some one is coming. Let us go. The crowd Is here already. I will go prepare Myself. — [Goes out.

BAREBONE.
False friends, all envious of my wealth. Misfortune unto you, to me, to all. — [Goes out.

SCENE VII.

TRICK, GIRAFF, ELESPURU, afterwards GRAMADOCH. The three Fools come into the Great Hall by the main door and look sidewise at BAREBONE as he goes out.

TRICK.
Barebone!

GIRAFF.
He is not gay.

ELESPURU.
The idiot!

TRICK.
A Samuel behind the counter. Ha! A Jeremiah in a shop!

ELESPURU. ‘T was he Who furnished this for Cromwell.

TRICK.
He robs him.

GIRAFF.
And he does better still, — he kills him.

TRICK.
Yes!
Noll satisfies his thirst for gold and blood; He takes his purse and life at the same time.

ELESPURU.
What matters it to us?

GIRAFF.
Where shall we stand?

TRICK (indicating a narrow alcove in a bay). In this tribune.

ELESPURU. Yes, it will hold us all. [The three Fools pass under the hangings and in a moment re-appear in the tribune.

TRICK.
‘T is comfortable here.

GIRAFF.
We will see well.

ELESPURU (stretching himself on a cushion and yawning).
Good place to sleep, on one ear, then the other;

I’ll need it. We were fools to keep awake All night out there to watch the garden scene, To sit through all that drama of night air And run the risk of getting cold and gout.

TRICK.
Cromwell will pay us when he gets his crown; Gramadoch promises a startling end.

GIRAFF.
Gramadoch! We will see him in his state, Bearing the train, armed with the ivory rod.

ELESPURU.
His state? Yes, call it so. Faith! though a fool, I’d not be train-bearer to that vile king. What a disgrace! In sight of all the world To be seen dragging Satan by his tail.

TRICK (sings).
As for myself, I can’t deny In love with Oliver the last am I, And Gramadoch, a philosophic fool, — Two pieces of the self-same wool.
There’s nothing funnier to see In all the melancholy show Than this fool who doth proudly go, Bearing the train of royalty.

GIRAFF.
If Gramadoch had but a noble air, He’d look the fool leading in leash, the wise!

ELESPURU. The fool would be in front.

TRICK.
Why does Cromwell Have his train carried?

ELESPURU.
Sharp, indeed, is Trick! He wants to keep the royal mantle clean: Save it from sweeping up the dirt that’s ‘round.

TRICK.

I understand. The reason’s natural, But who can do it when he wears the robe?

GIRAFF
Ormond had done it.

ELESPURU.
Cromwell sends him off, With naked feet and haltered neck, to make Apology.

GIRAFF I wonder if he’s hung poor man!

TRICK.
Not yet.

GIRAFF. So much more fun for us. When we have finished with this tiresome play, We may have time to go and sees the hanging. We must laugh somehow.

TRICK.
Judging by the looks, We’ll find sufficient chance for laughter here. Death plays his part in this fine spectacle. If I have eyes, Cromwell walks to his doom. I’ve been all over London to observe, And mourning everywhere attracts the eye. At Temple Bar, at Gate House, on the Strand, I saw the military blush with hate At sound of king. They’ve plotted in the gloom ‘Gainst Oliver; all parties have combined. All’s threatening.

ELESPURU. The people, what think they?

TRICK.
They ‘re on the watch. They lie in wait like leopards. They gaze upon these wolves who rend themselves. They wait and let them fight the battle out, Knowing the victor will remain for them. The mine is primed; and if I’m not deceived, At Cromwell’s feet ‘t is ready now to burst.

GIRAFF (joyously). What a mad noise the saints and fools will make! They’ll clash their swords, and we will clap our hands.

ELESPURU (sings). Good Master Oliver, beware, All traitors meet their match somewhere. Maybe that Satan did prepare This stately throne of yours I I’m sure the platform Death did make. Perhaps during the scene he’ll wake And turn you out of doors. Around yon fatal edifice There lurks some dangerous artifice.

Your stars have lied, my friend. Upon this fété which looks so well The sorcerers have cast their spell. Beneath the flowers which sweet do smell, The dais’ spangled end, You’ll find, if once that purple falls, Some ghastly skeletons, in palls, Beneath you there, And that those haughty steps that rise Resplendent with their draperies, Conceal from only your blind eyes, A gallows-stair.

TRICK AND GIRAFF (applauding). A charming thing!

TRICK.

My friends, I have a thought. [ELESPURU and GIRAFF draw near to TRICK with an expression of great interest. While Gramadoch, in stately dignity, Holds at arm’s length the great Protector’s train, In sight of all the solemn Parliament, Under the nose of all the sober clerks, We’ll make up faces and get him to laugh!

ELESPURU (clapping his hands).

A great idea!

GIRAFF (frisking around).

Good! Good!

A VOICE OUTSIDE (sings).

Above all, when the lady Abbess drops Her eyes, One knows that all her sweet devotions are But lies.

Her heart beats in that gloomy cell of stone With fire;

Her soul is God’s. She gives her heart to Love Entire.

No relics cold and lifeless does she sell To him Who comes to barter for the cloister’s grace His sin.

When one is abbess, all of Love ignored Is but His name; naught else is of the gentle god Forgot.

[GRAMADOCH enters.

TRICK.
It is himself.
‘T is Gramadoch who comes.

GIRAFF (to GRAMADOCH).
What brings you back To us to-day?

TRICK (to GRAMADOCH). Since when do train-bearers Come in advance of him whose train they bear?

GRAMADOCH. To pay subservient court to his new king, Lord Roberts’ son entreated for my place. Since a most noble lord competed, I Am but an honorary slave to-day.

ELESPURU. A lord’s son bear the train of Oliver! Our shame is his ambition; he descends To envy of it. Let him have his way. Friend, I embrace you, and my pride returns; Thanks to the Lord for honouring the fools. [GRAMADOCH mounts into the tribune and his comrades crowd around him.

GIRAFF.
Your wit was lacking to our merriment.

TRICK.
More fools there are, more fun there is, they say. I’m glad one place gives shelter to all four.

ELESPURU.
Together we taste pleasures of the gods, We fools, united.

GRAMADOCH.
That is what I like.
[Enter MILTON. Here’s Master Milton. Now our group’s complete.

SCENE VIII.

THE FOUR FOOLS, MILTON.

MILTON (accompanied by his guide, advances slowly, and stands a long time turned towards the throne, as if crushed by a great despair). It must be! It is done. I drink the dregs; Exempted from no pang, I face the pain. I'll see this king made. All is now prepared. Before the day is past, Cromwell shall be Within the tomb or lost upon a throne.

TRICK (low to GRAMADOCH). The devil's poet preaches sermons well.

MILTON (continuing). Whether he reigns or dies, this fatal day Opens the coffin of his noble fame. The hero to the king surrenders him, Barters his halo for a diadem, — Oh, rare debasement of a god-like brow! Cromwell a prince! With eagerness he gives For rank, his glory; for a sound, his name!

GRAMADOCH (low to TRICK). For a non-mitred soul he is not bad.

MILTON (continuing). To hate this archangel is a hard task, Whose name I would have carved on altar stones. With futile errors he beguiled us all; This man I looked on as incarnate truth. I come to take my everlasting leave Of you, revolted against God and man. Grasp Caesar's royalty and that of Guise; The crown is gilded and the dagger's sharp. [.Retires into a corner of the stage, opposite to the Fools' retreat. Remains there motionless.

SCENE IX.

The same. Populace, afterwards WILLIS, afterwards OVER- TON, SYNDERCOMB, and the Puritan conspirators. A group of the people enter, men, women, old men, in Puritan dress; they seem to belong to divers professions. Among them is an old reformed soldier. They arrive in a crowd and in great haste. The first call to those behind.

CITIZENS.
This way!

MILTON (to his page).
Who comes?

PAGE.
The populace.

MILTON.
Ah, yes!
The people, always ignorant and dazzled!
They come to watch a scene for which they pay;
To see a strange hand risk their destiny.
A CITIZEN.
No guards here yet?

SECOND CITIZEN. Thank goodness, we ‘re the first.

THIRD CITIZEN. Let’s take the best positions, quick. [They place themselves near the throne. SIR RICHARD WILLIS enters; he is enveloped in a long cloak.

TRICK (indicating the citizens and WILLIS to his companions).
Behold The citizens and that man with a squint. The common feeling is not shared by him. They come to see; but this man comes to watch. ‘T is the spy Willis.

GIRAFF.
Why condemn the man? On empty words must wise men always feed? But curiosities of different sort, These are; that’s all!
[Enter OVERTON and SYNDERCOMB. In silence they join the group of spectators already assembled.

FIRST CITIZEN (indicating the platform, to his neighbour).
This is a splendid throne!

SECOND CITIZEN.
Magnificent!

THIRD CITIZEN. Our Oliver does naught Half way.
A WOMAN. The throne is made of solid gold.

ANOTHER WOMAN. These fringes are superb.

THIRD WOMAN.
At last we'll have Some games, some feasts, some spectacles!
A MERCHANT (in the crowd).
Indeed, Barebone is a most lucky man. It pays To have a brother in the Parliament.

FIRST CITIZEN (to THE MERCHANT). Yes, he was Barebone of the Rump, that one!

THE MERCHANT (examining the hangings of a pillar). He sells them that for Chinese goods! Well done! Upholsterer to the Court. If I were that, I would put my commission in the Book, And on my knees at that. He must get gold In tons.

SECOND CITIZEN. Long live King Oliver!

FIRST WOMAN.
No more Preaching monotonous. We will have balls.

SECOND CITIZEN.
Horse racing —

THIRD WOMAN. Actors who'll defy the provost.

SECOND WOMAN. Gypsies, who used to come before in crowds To dance the saraband in Mulberry Garden.

THE SOLDIER (who has been silent and motionless, steps towards the women and cries with a loud voice).

Be silent, women! Hush!
[Movement of surprise from all.

FIRST CITIZEN.
It is a soldier!

SECOND CITIZEN. E’en so, what has he got to say against The wives of citizens?

THE SOLDIER (to the Citizens).
Hush! Women, hush!

THE CITIZENS.
Women — we?

THE SOLDIER. Yes, women, you! And more Than they. — [Indicating women.
These creatures are poor souls, but you — What shall I say of you who surpass them In naught but foolish laughter, giddy looks!

OVERTON (striking THE SOLDIER on the back). Good fellow! You have had your fill of wrongs! After long years of service you have been Reformed; deprived of your employment — eh?

THE SOLDIER. Worse still than that. I am to have a king.

OVERTON (to the crowd). He’s in the right. Is it indeed an hour To laugh when Israel weeps and God is wroth; When one oppresses those who protect him, And heaps a throne on people overwhelmed; When all augments the woe England endures?

FIRST CITIZEN. That’s true enough, but his words were too harsh. [The crowd increases little by little; the workman NAHUM enters.

OVERTON.
Oh, pardon him! A noble martyr, friends, Whose heart is harrowed by this Tyrian pomp. Let him join his expression of deep grief Unto our country’s cry of agony, — Our mother, whose proud loins are rent to-day In giving birth unto this monster king.

THIRD CITIZEN. A king! That word hurts, but I know not why!

SECOND CITIZEN. All that I thought, this man explains to me.

NAHUM.
A king's a tyrant.

SECOND CITIZEN. Live the republic!

OVERTON.
And what a king! A despot, liar, cheat! What was he yesterday?

THE SOLDIER.
A soldier!

THE MERCHANT.
Brewer.

THIRD CITIZEN. From this mad festival who will save us?

FIRST CITIZEN.
Of Cromwell, who'd have thought it? Terrible! Usurper!

NAHUM.
Dares to call himself a king! 'T is sacrilege!

SECOND CITIZEN.
A crime!

FIRST CITIZEN.
All royalty Has been proscribed.

OVERTON. You all have rights unto This throne.

FIRST CITIZEN. Of course! What has he more than we

OVERTON.
Hell has planned out his route: resuscitates Old kings and their abuses.

NAHUM.
It’s old name Of Jesus giving to Jerusalem.

OVERTON.
To crush us with the weight of a vile throne!

SECOND WOMAN. They say his eyes glare at one in the night.

THIRD WOMAN. He’s got three rows of teeth inside his mouth, They say.
[All the Puritan conspirators come in by degrees, except LAMBERT. They grasp each other s hands when they meet, and then mingle silently with the crowd.

NAHUM.
It is the monster which Saint John Announced.

SECOND CITIZEN. The beast of the Apocalypse.

THE SOLDIER.
It is.

OVERTON.
Cromwell will bring the nine plagues on Our heads.

NAHUM. He’s an Assyrian.

OVERTON.
He is.
Our misery has reached its limit now.

THE MERCHANT.
I sell no goods.

THE SOLDIER. No food; our feet are bare; On the hard ground we sleep. If this lasts long, While Noll upon each pillar hangs his crest, We will be forced to use our teeth for nails To mend our shoes.

OVERTON. We’ll stand before his door And wait for charity.

NAHUM. What Cromwell needs Is not a throne, but Haman’s gibbet and Barabbas’ cross.

SYNDERCOMB. Yes, death to Cromwell!

SIR RICHARD WILLIS (among the crowd).
Death!

MILTON (starting at WILLIS’S voice; to the Puritan conspirators).
Speak lower, men!

SIR RICHARD WILLIS. To the usurper, death!

THE SOLDIER. Speak lower? Why! What do I care? I’ll go And on his threshold cry out, “ Death to you!”

NAHUM (to THE SOLDIER). God speaks his judgments in no hidden voice. Your lips are pure.

THE SOLDIER (to NAHUM).
Just as you see me now, Poor and forgotten like a clod upon the field, Left naked by the flood of human strife,
If I can see this child of Sirah killed, I’ll die consoled.

OVERTON (leading him aside and showing dagger to him).
Friend, you shall be consoled. [THE SOLDIER makes a movement of surprise and joy which OVERTON restrains. Be still!
[A detachment from CROMWELL’S regiment enters. They wear red uniforms, with cuirass; musket and partisan on their shoulder.

The guard arrives. We must keep still. [The Soldiers push back the people on both sides.

CHIEF OF THE DETACHMENT (with loud voice). Room for the English Lion’s Ironsides.
[To some citizens whom he thrusts back.
Move back!

ONE OF THE CITIZENS (to another citizen).
‘T is plainly seen from their proud looks They are from the Protector’s regiment.
[The Soldiers form in line from the throne to the door.

THE SOLDIER (low to OVERTON, indicating the officer). The officers of Ahab wear silk coats.
A YOUNG SENTINEL (pushing him back among the crowd). Keep in your place, my friend.

OVERTON (low to THE SOLDIER).
How they push you! These hired assassins take their master’s tone, And the recruit insults the veteran.

THE SOLDIER (pressing his hand). Patience, my friend!

CHIEF OF THE DETACHMENT (to his troops).
Soldiers, the Holy Ghost Has called us here. Pray for our general!

OVERTON (to CHIEF OF THE DETACHMENT). Your general! Why not say for your king?

CHIEF OF THE DETACHMENT. Our king? Who dares insult him thus?

OVERTON.
I dare!

CHIEF OF THE DETACHMENT.
You lie!

OVERTON.
I do not lie.

CHIEF OF THE DETACHMENT.
Our Cromwell king!
Now, God forbid!

OVERTON. He will be king to-day.

CHIEF OF THE DETACHMENT. Who told you that?
[THE CHAMPION OF ENGLAND enters; he is in complete armour, on horseback, and flanked by four Halberdiers, who carry in front of him a banner on which are the Protector's arms.

OVERTON. Behold!

SCENE X.

The Same. THE CHAMPION OF ENGLAND.

THE SOLDIER (low to OVERTON).
Let's see what words He comes to cast upon the wind.

THE CHAMPION (on horseback, in front of the throne).
Hosannah! I speak to you in God's eternal name! The most high Parliament, which long has prayed Unto the Holy Ghost for special light To put an end unto the nation's woes, Ordains that Oliver Cromwell be king!
[.Murmurs among THE CROWD.

TRICK (low to his companions, indicating the people). Watch these psalm-singers fly into a rage.

THE CHAMPION (continuing). Should there in London, or Three Kingdoms, be An old or young man, boor or Cavalier, Who dares contest the right of my Lord Oliver, We, England’s champion, do defy him here, With dagger, hatchet, sword or cimeter! We’ll immolate him without tolerance, And hang his crest upon this horse’s mane. If such a man is here, let him stand forth And speak, and with his sword confirm his words. You are my witnesses, that free from sin, I throw down at his feet this glove torn off From my right hand.

[THE CHAMPION throws down his gauntlet before the people, draws his sword and lifts it above his head.

STANDARD BEARER, AND THE CHAMPION’S HALBERDIERS. Hosannah!
[Amazed silence among the people. All eyes are fixed on the gauntlet.

THE CHAMPION.
No one speaks!

OVERTON (aside). Must one always keep silence?

MILTON (with loud voice).
Why only one, Great Champion? If such be your master’s plans, He should throw down as many gloves as he Thinks he has subjects.
[Movement of approbation in THE CROWD.

THE CHAMPION.
Who is this, who speaks? The blind man! Go away from here, my man. [The Soldiers push MILTON aside. OVERTON approaches the officer who commands the Guard and interrogates him with a look.

OFFICER (casting down his eye, with sombre countenance). All goes ill.

OVERTON (low to SYNDERCOMB). All goes well.

THE CHAMPION (looking around upon the people).
Well! no one speaks?

OVERTON (to MILTON, pressing his hand). We’ll send Lord Cromwell to rejoin his glove.

MILTON (aside).
Alas!

THE CHAMPION.
I wait!

THE SOLDIER (aside, looking at THE CHAMPION). Puppy! Proud satellite!

SYNDERCOMB (low to OVERTON). I know not what keeps me from flogging him.
[Takes one step towards the glove; OVERTON stops him.

OVERTON.
Let us be prudent.

GRAMADOCH (low to his companions, indicating the group of Puritan conspirators).
Those fools will spoil all. If they pick up that glove, farewell the rest. We must not let them ruin everything.

TRICK.
How shall we stop it?
[GRAMADOCH twists his head with a knowing air.

THE CHAMPION (still holding his sword high).
No one answers me!

GRAMADOCH (jumping from the tribune into the hall). Yes, one! I do! — [Surprise among the people.

THE CHAMPION (astonished). You lift that glove?

GRAMADOCH (picking up the glove).
I do!

THE CHAMPION.
Who are you?

GRAMADOCH. A grimace-vender like you! We both wear masks to mystify the world! Mine makes men laugh, and yours makes them afraid; That’s all the difference.

THE CHAMPION.
A knavish air Have you.

GRAMADOCH. You have the same!

THE CHAMPION (to Halberdier).
It is a fool.

GRAMADOCH. Just so! A fool by taste and principle. Yes, that is my position at the Court. You’ve guessed it.

VOICE IN THE CROWD.
Harlequin defies the rope! It is Noll’s fool; the action is most bold! A real fool?

MILTON. What is this parody? [Great bursts of laughter from the Fools’ tribune.

GRAMADOCH. Come, let us take the field!

THE CHAMPION.
Poor jester you! Go hence, or I will have you whipped.

GRAMADOCH.
Oh, ho!
What fine disdain! A puppet like myself, Except your faces are not gay like mine. I tell you once again, Cromwell pays us To make a little noise in this droll scene. A bell is your voice, and a clapper mine!

THE CHAMPION.

You knave —

GRAMADOCH. Without hurting our characters, We might measure our strength for or against King Oliver. I am his train-bearer; His trumpet, you!

THE CHAMPION (angrily).
Which weapon do you choose?

GRAMADOCH.
I choose —— [Unsheathing his lath.
My wooden sword.
[.Brandishing it with a martial air.
‘Gainst a straw soldier, It is a fitting weapon. Captain — guard! [To THE CROWD. Come, battle, battle, come! — [To THE CHAMPION.
I want to see If we can furnish a second Dunbar, And if your durandal is worth my blade. [To THE CROWD. Come, see —— [Indicating MILTON.
I mean no disrespect to him — See singing Falstaff fight with bugling Stentor. See a fool thrash a bully!

OVERTON (low to SYNDERCOMB).
Looks this not As though the scene had been prepared before?

GRAMADOCH (strutting before THE CHAMPION). Well, well, my champion! What! Are you afraid? You hesitate, — you who defied us all! I only want to smash you in two blows, You can pick up the pieces afterwards.

THE CHAMPION (indicating GRAMADOCH). Arrest this fool!
[The Guards surround and seize GRAMADOCH.

GRAMADOCH (fighting, and laughing to himself).
Why? I am in the right! He is a coward! He’s afraid! Enough! If he gets me enraged, I will begin A suit against him—” quare impedit.” [The Fools in the tribune applaud and laugh immoderately.

THE CHAMPION (with solemn voice). Since none of you contests what I have said, Except a blind man and a fool, I now, Before the entire world, proclaim this truth, That Oliver Cromwell is England’s king!

THE SATELLITES OF THE CHAMPION. God save King Oliver!
[Profound silence among the people and the troops.

THE CHAMPION.
Let us pass on! [Goes out slowly with his escort.

SYNDERCOMB (low to OVERTON, indicating GRAMADOCH, who is laughing). ‘T was to amuse the people!

OVERTON (same tone, pointing to the astonished populace).
Yes. He threatens;
They are dumb!

SCENE XI.

THE CROWD.

VOICES IN THE CROWD. Old Noll is long! — When do you think He’ll leave White-Hall?— ‘T is hard to wait like this. [Violent ringing of bells is heard outside; distant cannon is heard at intervals.
—— Be silent! Do you hear the bells, the cannon?
—— He’s starting! — Will he pass Old Baily? — No! By Piccadilly he will go. — Look there!
How many people stand now in the Square.
—— It is the populace: how many heads!
—— Above, below, all swarins with life. — Although It is hot weather, there is not a roof, Not any inch of pavement, uncovered By jarring faces. — Balconies up there Were rented at a fabulous price, I know.
—— Just to behold Cromwell, a human face.
—— The Babylonians are insane. — I stifle! May God protect me! — The procession comes: It spreads over the Square. — At last!
[Movement among THE CROWD: all eyes are eagerly turned to the main door.

— Tell me, Who marches at the head? — Major Skippon.

—— What, Skippon.? — A good soldier of repute.

—— At Worcester, of the army he was first To cross the Severn on the bridge of boats.

—— The saints made good use of their swords that day.

—— They used their better still at White-Hall on The thirtieth of January! — Man!

You say that in a manner to procure Your death. — Be silent! — Well, I laugh! — Be still!

—— Laughing’s not talking. — If I were not crushed, I’d go and strangle you! — Have done! — Behold, Here’s the Lord Mayor.

[THE LORD MAYOR enters with the Aldermen, the City Clerks, the Constables; all are in costume. THE LORD MAYOR and the city officers halt on the left of the main door.

— Admire Pack, alderman, There in the file, “whom Noll, to please the city, Made knight with a fagot-staff. — With what an air He rides his high horse! — It was he who put The motion which made Pilate king. [The courts enter in procession; the courts of justice take their places on, the top benches at the back of the hall.

— Behold! The barons of the courts in scarlet robes.

—— Huzza! Judge Hale. — Sergeant Wallop, huzza!

—— Look at the colonels who go flying by!

—— What! are there not sufficient guards on pay? The long robed corporations fall in line.

—— Noll is a tyrant! An usurper base!

—— A Titan who would climb the heavens high. No right but force has this Enceladus!

O

He scales the Stuarts’ throne; he mounts it not!

—— Escaped Oxonian, peace. — The learned fool, Speaks he not Latin? — I’ve a right to curse This Appius in his curule chair. — He thinks He can slay Cromwell with a ferrule!

AN USHER (in black, appears on the threshold and cries).

Room!

Room for the Parliament!

[The Parliament enters in double file, preceded by THE SPEAKER before whom walk the Mace-bearers, the Ushers, the Clerks, and the Sergeants of the House. Great attention among THE CROWD. While the Parliament seat themselves on the first row of benches, conversation among THE CROWD continues.

VOICES IN THE CROWD.
— The Speaker’s name, What is it?— ‘T is Sir Thomas Widdrington, I think. — A handsome man! — He is a Judas!

OVERTON (low to WILDMAN). The people hold resentments; did you note None cried, “ God save the House of Commons!”

WILDMAN (low to OVERTON, indicating the Parliament).
No!
May God confound them! they ‘re all sold to him. They worship him and Belatucadrus.

TRICK (fixing his eyes on the assembly). The courts, the aldermen, and Parliament, These are poor England’s only deities. Behold them!

GIRAFF. The amusing gods!

ELESPURU.
What think You of them, brother?

GIRAFF.
Gods in the same way That we are fools.

TRICK. I sorely long to see This tempest burst on grave Olympus!

GIRAFF.
Yes;
Like yours, my mind holds pandemonium More entertaining than this pantheon.

ELESPURU (indicating GRAMADOCH, who, guarded in a corner of the hall by four Halberdiers, is making a thousand contortions). Look! Gramadoch is making signs to us.

GRAMADOCH (making faces to his comrades). Hum! — [The Fools burst out laughing.

ELESPURU.
Faith! his joke was just a bit too strong. TRICK.
How will he extricate himself?

GIRAFF.
That's no Concern of ours.

ELESPURU.
True! We laughed heartily, And for the present moment 't is enough.

AN USHER (on the balcony of a great tribune, facing the throne, and richly decorated).
My Lady Protectress!
[All the city functionaries rise, uncover and make a profound obeisance to the Protectress, who enters accompanied by her four daughters, each dressed after her own style. The Protectress, MISTRESS FLEETWOOD, and LADY CLEYPOLE are in black with jet ornaments; LADY FALCONBRIDGE in full court dress, with mantle of brocaded gold cloth, skirt of ginger-coloured velvet embroidered with Venetian scorpions, feathers, and a peeress's crown; FRANCES in dress of white gauze worked with silver. The Protectress returns the salutation of THE LORD MAYOR and the Aldermen with a •profound courtesy, then seats herself with her daughters, in the front of the tribune; the back is occupied by their women.

TRICK (to the Fools).
'T is fortunate That face has not yet donned the name of queen.
A SOLDIER (in the Fools' tribune).
Peace, knights of Hellebore!

TRICK (sneeringly).

Trust a soldier To always cry out peace!
[THE SOLDIER makes a threatening gesture; TRICK re-seats himself, shrugging his shoulders. The entrance of CROMWELL'S family causes a great commotion, and all eyes are fixed on the tribune.

VOICES IN THE CROWD.
— What! it is she?
The Lady Protectress! How stout she is!

—— The daughter of a man named Bourchier.
— — 'T is a fine dream she's having now. — Sir, who Is that young Eve at her right hand? — What, here?
—— No, there! — That's Lady Frances. — His daughter?
—— Yes.
—— Old Noll has five or six, eh? — He has four. Look at them. — The youngest is a pretty thing!
—— How warm it is! — Oh, how uncomfortable.
—— The crowd increases. — We are crowded here As were those sons of hell whose numbers matched The sands beside the sea. — What luck to be A bird and have a pair of wings! — I'm crushed! [,Suddenly the sound of a cannon is heard close to Westminster.

SYNDERCOMB (low to the group of conspirators). He comes!
[Second cannon. Great noise in the square outside: intense expression of interest in the hall.

OVERTON (low to Conspirators). The faithful to their posts! [The conspirators scatter themselves among the crowd. The sound of cannon is heard at regular intervals: noise of trumpets and shouts. The city officials advance to meet the Protector.

VOICES IN THE CROWD.
— 'Tis he!
—— There! — Let us see! — Himself! — At last! — Oh!
—— Ah!
—— The Achan of nations — Pharaoh-Necho!
—— He rides alone! — He's looking at his watch.

—— The mayor and sheriffs go to meet him, look!
—— If you can see, sir, tell me how he's dressed.
—— Black velvet! Neighbour, your elbow is sharp.
—— The mayor accosts him. — Ah, the carriage stops!
—— They make a speech. — He signals with his head.
—— They hand him a petition: he passes it To Lord Broghill. — The mayor is speaking yet.
—— What, yet? — When will he finish? — He is on His knees, almost. — Eunuch to Holofernes! Haranguer to any chance government!
—— The Lord Protector answers. — Listen! — Hark!
—— The wolf is lecturing the sheep! For shame!
—— At Dunbar, Noll's beard was much dirtier.
—— He's getting out. — Where is he going? — Oh, To say his prayers in the chancellor's office. — Humph!
—— He prays to Satan. — How his Ironsides Surround him! — Vain precaution, that! — His guards Are ill content to keep a king! — Be still!
—— A new delay! — How do you think he looks?
—— He's gloomy! — He is gay! — A heavy man!
—— Majestic! — He's much aged! — No, he is tired.
—— The sunshine troubled him! — He has the gout!
—— Drawn by eight horses: I'm disgusted with The monster. — This is hauling rubbish in Triumphal chariots! — He's coming back!
—— Good! now to Westminster! — Behold! there goes His sword-bearer and his train-bearer, too.
—— The reverend minister with his blue cape!
—— Is it not Lockyer? — Yes. — The palace clerks, The sergeants of the court, pages, lackeys!
—— On horseback, the Lord Mayor precedes his coach, Drawn sword, uncovered! — Oh, usurper bold!
—— Airs of our ancient kings! — Die Oliver The Last! — Lord Halberdier, please let me see!
—— He comes!
[Surrounded by his escort, CROMWELL appears upon the threshold of the main door; immense agitation in the crowd,. All the assembly arise and stand uncovered, in attitude of great respect. The Protector is in black velvet costume without sword and without cloak. His escort, at some distance behind him, forms a flashing circle of gold and steel. Nearest to the Protector, in front, stands THE LORD MAYOR with drawn sword; back of him stands the EARL OF CARLISLE with drawn sword. Among the escort the following men are to be distinguished: GENERALS DESBOROUGH and FLEETWOOD, THURLOE, STOUPE, the Secretaries of State and the private secretaries of the cabinet; EICHARD CROMWELL; HANNIBAL SESTHEAD, with his gorgeous costume of gold brocade, his pages and his Danish dogs; a crowd of generals, of colonels, whose brilliant uniforms and resplendent cuirasses make a strong contrast to the blue cloak and brown robe of the preacher LOCKYER, who stands among them. To the right of the door stand a group of high dignitaries who are to figure in the ceremony; on a red velvet cushion the EARL OF WARWICK bears the purple robe, on another red cushion LORD BROGHILL bears the sceptre, GENERAL LAMBERT bears the crown, WHITELOCKE, the state-seals; an Alderman bears for THE LORD MAYOR the sword; a clerk of the House of Commons bears for THE SPEAKER the Bible.

SCENE XII.

CROMWELL, his family, his escort, THE CROWD. AS CROMWELL appears on the threshold of Westminster Hall, amid the noise of cannon which has not ceased during the entire preceding scene, amid the bells, the trumpet flourishes and the rolling drums, one hears the acclamations which follow him from outside.

VOICES (outside). Hurrah for England’s Lord Protector!

OVERTON (low to GARLAND). These shouts are paid for! We will hush them soon! ‘T was just the same when Noll, at Grocers-Hall, Made Thomas Viner loyal baronet. He was acclaimed at Cheapside, for his cash! [CROMWELL pauses a few seconds on the threshold and makes several salutations to the people outside.

VOICES IN THE CROWD. Lord Cromwell! — Is that Cromwell? — What, the king?

—— The regicide! — He's very homely! — What A little man to be a hero ‘ — Yes!
I thought him taller! — I thought him less fat!
—— How that man with a big hat spoils my view! Take off your hat, sir! — I — since when, madame, Do we doff hats before the anti-Christ?
[CROMWELL turns to the people inside; profound silence.

CROMWELL (taking a few steps). In name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost Peace be with you!
[Silence among the assembly; acclamations continue outside on the Square.

VOICES (outside).
God keep you, Oliver!
—— Long live Cromwell!
[CROMWELL turns lack again and salutes the people outside in the square.

THURLOE (low to CROMWELL).
Success smiles on your act. What acclamations! What enthusiasm! What a grand day!

CROMWELL (low and Utterly to THURLOE).
Yes; these tremendous crowds, Intoxicated with delight and love, who seem A proud accomplice of my triumph now, Would be as eager to applaud my death. In my success they see a spectacle; They run to it rejoicing, and nothing Could better rouse their transports and their hopes Than thus to see me crowned, — except it were To see me hung. Look now, how still they are! Good people!

THURLOE (low). The saints' levellers did this. [The Parliament, with THE SPEAKER at their head, advance in double file towards CROMWELL; they respectfully salute the Protector, who takes off his hat and replaces it.

THE SPEAKER (to CROMWELL). My lord! When Samuel made sacrifice He kept the heifer's shoulder for King Saul, To prove to him, behind the sacred veil, How great the burden of a nation is, — Which fact has led Maximilian to assert ‘T is hard to fit one's self for government. Few mortals who have gained control o’er men Know how to guide the progress of the world. The chariot of life rolls heavily, Loaded with human souls; fate drags it on. To steer it skilfully o’er tortuous roads Necessitates a firm arm and strong hands.

Oft times at night, when clouded are the skies, We ‘scape the rut to fall o’er precipice.
This car, whose groaning axle all earth hears, Can’t be unharnessed and can have no brake.
It must move onward, without halt or pause;
The steeds whom God has bound to the great pole Forever, wildly as on battle-field, In spite of lash must kick, in spite of bit Must run, and crushing kings, cities, nations, Drag the blind wheels over their fatal course.
When chance sometimes directs its destiny, In the deep ruts flows such a sea of blood That dogs, when dry, do quench their thirst in it.
Then all earth totters and great kingdoms fall.
Therefore, you see what hangs upon the choice Of driver for this car which all men dread.
A double right must place him there, — God’s will, Above all, and the people’s honest voice.
To diadem be joined the tongues of fire.
Then is he proven one of those rare men Whom people follow as a beacon light.
But ah, not easily is such rank won!
This master spirit needs omniscient force.
Like to the suns, which God alone creates, They roll, and drag worlds with them in their course;
Their heights are lighted by the rays of God, And burning always, never can they rest.
From all I’ve said, the people must conclude There is but one arm strong enough to guide our fate.
‘T is time a chieftain should appear ‘mongst us!
Earth needs a man! That man, my lord, is you.
[The Parliament and the entire assembly bow low. Assume direction of our destinies. Accept your House of Common’s loyal faith!
[Profound silence among the people.

OVERTON (low to MLLTON). His House of Commons!

CROMWELL (to THE SPEAKER).
I am grateful, sir! This land is prosperous, by grace of God. In Ireland, in spite of civil wars Faith holds its own and conquers fresh domain. Bent on suppressing the foul Papist sore, Harry, my deputy, by fire and sword Extirpates with one hand; with the other, sears. Armagh is burning. Rome has no priest there. The clans in Scotland have resumed their yoke. Outside, all's well! Dunkirk has no more hope. Old England, with the French Alliance, holds Spain, humbled, in the palm of her broad hand. Our Indian commerce has made giant strides. The envious Castilian burns with rage. God's help has proven that our cause is just. Much blood has flowed at Madrid and Lisbon; Vast sums of gold has their rebellion cost. Blake fills our treasury with their galleons. Unto Jamaica I've dispatched two fleets; Meanwhile the army works out its old plans. The Tuscan's penitent, we'll pardon him; And when all other matters are arranged, Since he invites us and entreats our aid, We'll save the Russian from the Turkish hordes. God grants immediately whate'er we ask; You see no nation stands so high as ours. Live, then, protected by celestial grace; But that the Lord should manifest his love, We needs must supplicate on bended knees. Let us all pray, and may his gracious spirit come And rest upon us.
[CROMWELL kneels; his entire escort, Parliament, the city officials, courts of justice, soldiers, kneel also: moment of silence and meditation, during which one hears only the bells, the cannon, the trumpets, and the noise of the crowd outside.

SYNDERCOMB (low to OVERTON and GARLAND, who have drawn near to the throne). They are kneeling, all! The tyrant and his guards; their swords are down. No eye is watching us; why don't we strike?

GARLAND (repulsing him with indignation). Wretch!

SYNDERCOMB.
Hush! Why cry so loud? GARLAND.
Strike him at prayer?

SYNDERCOMB.
What else to do?

GARLAND. Against him, let us pray! Enough of murderous rage! Let God make choice Between our prayers!
[The Puritans bow their heads and pray; silence.

CROMWELL (rising). Proceed!
[All arise. EARL OF WARWICK advances with slow and stately step towards the Protector, bends one knee, and presents to him the purple robe bordered with ermine.

EARL OF WARWICK (to CROMWELL).
Vouchsafe to wear This royal purple.
[CROMWELL, assisted by WARWICK, puts on the robe.

OVERTON (low to Puritans'). 'T is his shroud he wraps Around him, friends!

GARLAND (low).
Behold him now! It is The scarlet son of prostituted Tyre.

WILDMAN (low). Heaven's thunder, burst!
[CROMWELL, robed in the purple mantle, whose train is borne by the young LORD ROBERTS, richly dressed, advances gravely towards the throne. EARL OF WARWICK precedes him with drawn sword. EARL OF CARLISLE follows, his sword's point bent to the ground.

SYNDERCOMB (aside).
What a brilliant escort He's borrowed from the nether world! Fine purple, Soldiers of iron, gilded noblemen, Ermine, a throne beplumed, with haughty dais, Women unchaste, and men who know not shame; Pomp, power, and triumph; the great man lacks naught. He floats in pride and rapturous joy! E'en so! To make it vanish like a fleeting dream, The shadow of a chariot, or flash of sword, What needs almighty God? What needs the Lord?
[.Hugging his dagger to his breast. A bit of steel in a poor sinner's hand!
[Having crossed the hall slowly, amid profound silence, CROMWELL reaches the foot of the throne and prepares to ascend it. The conspirators quietly mingle with the crowd and surround the platform.

MILTON (from the crowd, with startling voice). Cromwell, beware!

CROMWELL (turning towards the people). Who speaks?

SYNDERCOMB (low to GARLAND).
May God confound This blind man whose voice puts them all on guard.
Our secrets.

MILTON (to CROMWELL). Beware the Ides of March!

OVERTON (low to MILTON).
Do not reveal

CROMWELL (to MLLTON). Explain yourself!

MILTON (to CROMWELL).
Mene, Tekel, Upharsin.
[CROMWELL shrugs his shoulders and ascends the throne.

OVERTON (to GARLAND). He ascends. I breathe again.

GARLAND (low). The alarm was forcible.
[CROMWELL seats himself upon the throne. THE EARLS OF WARWICK and CARLISLE, with drawn swords, stand behind his arm-chair. THURLOE and STOUPE stand beside him. THE LORD MAYOR, bearing the cushion which holds the sword, and followed by his Aldermen, approaches the throne; he ascends a few steps, bends one knee, and presents the sword to CROMWELL.

THE LORD MAYOR (to CROMWELL).
This which I place Within your hands, Lord Cromwell, is the sword. For lack of anvil, on the tyrant's brow Its steel, by the whole nation, has been forged. This sword has double blades, — for justice one, And one for war; alternately they shine In battle and in holy place, now in The soldier's grasp, now flaming in God's hand. The city of London yields it now to you.
[CROMWELL girds on the sword, draws it from the sheath, holds it over his head, and then returns it to THE LORD MAYOR, who replaces it in its sheath and retires backwards.

WHITELOCKE (approaching CROMWELL with the same ceremony). My lord, I bring the seals.
[CROMWELL receives the seals, then returns them to WHITELOCKE who retires. THE SPEAKER, followed by the officers of the House of Commons, approaches in his turn, bearing the Bible with gold clasps.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT (kneeling before CROMWELL).
I bring the Book, My lord.
[CROMWELL receives the Bible, and THE SPEAKER retires, making profound obeisances. LAMBERT, pale and anxious, approaches next, bearing the crown on a rich crimson velvet cushion. OVEKTON breaks through the crowd and takes position beside him.

LAMBERT (kneeling upon the steps of CROMWELL'S platform).
My lord —

OVERTON (low to LAMBERT).
'T is I. Be brave!

LAMBERT (aside).
He stands Here, at my side! [A loud to CROMWELL, stammering. Receive the crown!

OVERTON (drawing his dagger, low to LAMBERT).
And death!
[All the conspirators scattered among the crowd place their hands upon their daggers.

CROMWELL (as if awakening with a start). Hold! What is this? Wherefore bring you this crown? What shall I do with it? Who gave it me? Is this a dream? Is that the diadem? What right have you to force me among kings? Who adds such scandal to our holy feast? His crown to me who caused his head to fall? Has this occasion been misunderstood? My lords, my brothers, Englishmen, hear me! I come not here to don the diadem.

To dip my title in the people's heart, I came; to refresh my power and renew My rights. The sacred crimson twice was dyed.
This people owns the purple, and with loyal heart I take it from them; but a royal crown!
When did I ask it? Who says I desire it?
I would not give one hair from this poor head, Which has grown white in serving England's needs, For the gold crests of all the kings of earth.
Take it from here! Go, bear this bawble hence, —
The vainest of all human vanities!
Don't wait for me to crush it under foot.
Alas! how little they know me, these men Who with base flattery bid me crown myself.
What they can never give, I have received From God, — grace inadmissible. Of self I'm master; when one is a son of God, Can one be less? Of our prosperity The universe is jealous; what need I
More than this knowledge of your happiness?
I've said this nation is the chosen one, And Europe is a satellite to her.
All yields before our star: the infidel Is cursed. It seems by this, as if God said, " Grow, England, and my eldest daughter be.
Among all nations I have crowned you;
Be my beloved, and walk close to my side."
He pours upon us constant benefits;
Each day that ends, each new day that begins, Adds one more golden link to this great chain.
'T would seem as if our God, to Philistine So terrible, had, like a labourer, Hewn out our path: as if his arm, upon An axis indestructible by time, Had fastened the machinery of this Vast edifice. Oh, grand, mysterious work, Which through long ages his great hand prepared.
All things move thus. The wheels, together chained, Gnaw with their iron teeth at the machine.
The living labyrinth of beams and yards And weights starts into motion; without halt Continuing its inexorable route Accomplishes its herculean task!
Nations entire, caught in its myriad arms, Were crushed to atoms fled they not aside.

That I should impede God, whose glorious law Prepares a special destiny for us;
Of this people elect, scorning the rights, I'd place my wish before their interest;
I, pilot, open sails to adverse winds?
No! To false friends I give no joy like this.
The English fleet is still Queen of the Waves.
Colossus stands erect. What use serve plots Against Great Britain's noble destiny?
What harm can pickaxe do to mountain-side?
[Casting lynx glances around him. This warning to the ill-disposed: we know All that they do; transparent is the sea Although the precipice is deep. We see The bottom of the trap where their hopes crawl. Sometimes the viper's wounded by his sting. The fire we kindle often burns ourselves. And the Lord's eye can pierce through everything. Between kings and the people who decreed Divorce? I did! With such a silly bait Thought men to trap me? Crown? I crushed one once. Although I've worn it not, I know its weight. What! for a Court give up the camp I love? To sceptre change my sword, for diadem Renounce my helmet? Come, am I a child!
Was I born yesterday? Do I not know That gold weighs more than iron. Erect a throne For me? Ah, would you dig my grave? Cromwell Knows well how one descends from such a height.
And then, what weariness assails the brow Wrinkled with care, and furrowed with its gems;
Each one of them conceals a biting thorn.
The crown kills men. Grim anguish undermines Their heart; it changes e'en the gentlest soul Into a tyrant, — crushing him, it makes Him crush us in his turn. The crowd delight In all this show; oblivious of self.
They count the rubies shining in his crown.
But they would pity those who bear the weight If they observed the brow, not diadem.
O'erwhelmed with trouble, soon their sovereign hands Blindly confuse the reins of government.
Take back the execrable sign! Away!
Too oft it falls from brow to blind the eyes.
[With pathos. What should I do with't? Not born to power, My tastes are simple and are innocent. If I, with sling in hand, have watched the fold,

Have taken the helm when rocks appeared ahead, I sacrificed myself to common weal. Could I but have grown old in my own sphere; If, in the shadow of my hut, my woods, I could have seen the vanquished tyrant fall! God is my witness, dearer far to me Than all the pomp of empire, were my fields; And thousand-fold more charm had life for me As shepherd, than as combatant ‘gainst kings. [Weeping.] Speak you of sceptre? What a failure I Have made of life! That bit of tinsel holds Naught that attracts me. Pity me, my friends, Don’t envy; pity your old general, — Old Oliver, who feels his arm is weak, And that his end is near. I’m old; I’m weary. I ask compassion. Is’t not time to rest? Each day I ask it of God’s holy will; Each day, before his throne, I strike my breast! To wish to be a king? So frail, so proud! This project, — oh, I swear it! — is as far From me, as is the sunlight to a babe Within its mother’s womb. Away with it, Forever! I accept not anything from you But the hereditary right. In proof Of what I say, I will entreat at once Some theologian of great light to read My soul. If need be, I will consult two. To the Most High I owe a full account Of all your rights; unto his will I bow, And will accomplish what the hundred and Tenth psalm commands.
[Applause and acclamations burst forth from every side. The people and the soldiers, losing by degrees all feeling of hostility, give vent to their enthusiasm. The Parliament and the Protector’s escort are stupefied. CLLOM- WELL prepares to resume his discourse, and makes a gesture to the people; all become silent.
Now let us pray to God With humble and obedient heart, asking That he may keep you all in his good care. We have revealed to you our inmost soul; We ask your pardon in a last request, For such long speech upon so warm a day. [He re-seats himself. The acclamations and the enthusiasm of the people burst forth again. The disconcerted Puritan conspirators stand gloomy and silent, casting aside their daggers.

OVERTON (low to GARLAND). He will die in his bed.

GARLAND (low).
They want him, now They’ve got him!

THE CROWD. Hurrah!

WILDMAN (low).
Hereditary right He’s gained, the juggler!

THE CROWD.
To the Protector, hail! Hurrah < Long live Cromwell! Live Oliver! Glory unto the conqueror of Tyre.

OVERTON (low to Puritans). He fooled us well! Some one betrayed our plans. He has been warned; a case of forfeiture!

BAREBONE (aside). It was the only way to save my bill. [Most of the Puritan conspirators mix in the crowd, which continues rapturously to acclaim the triumph of CROMWELL. LAMBERT, pale and stupefied, prepares to come down from the platform. CROMWELL stops him.

CROMWELL. You are to dine with us to-day, Lambert.
Who?
[Low to LAMBERT, who turns to him with amazement. Why tremble, since he is no longer there?

LAMBERT (stammering).

CROMWELL (Still low). He, — this Overton, who was to push Your faltering hand. — [With a sardonic smile.
You were in league with them.

LAMBEET.
My lord, I swear —

CROMWELL. Swear about nothing!

LAMBEET.
But —

CROMWELL.
I have good witnesses. You were the chief Of the conspiracy!

LAMBEET.
The chief!

CROMWELL.
In name, At least. You feared your own audacity, And were not brave enough to dare to stab Me face to face!

LAMBEET.
My lord! [Aside] For this man’s eye Each mortal has his thoughts writ on his brow!

CROMWELL (aloud, to LAMBEET, smiling). Have I been well informed? A tattling voice Says you have taste for a retired life, — That you are passionately fond of flowers.
[Low, and grinding his teeth. You will return me your commission, sir!
[He dismisses him with a gesture. LAMBERT descends from the platform and mingles with the crowd. At this moment CROMWELL perceives the sceptre which LORD BROGHILL placed upon the steps of the throne. What’s this? A sceptre? Take this fool’s toy hence [Turning to TRICK.
For you, my fool.
[The people and soldiers redouble their cheers.

TRICK (from his tribune). Not so! ‘T is the concern Of bigger fools than we!
[A BAILIFF enters; he bows before the throne, and addresses CROMWELL.

BAILIFF (to CROMWELL).
The High-Sheriff Awaits your pleasure.

CROMWELL. Let him come in. [Enter THE HIGH-SHERIFF, followed by two Sergeants-at- arms.
Well!

THE HIGH-SHERIFF (saluting CROMWELL). These prisoners who have been condemned to death, My lord, — this Bloum —

CROMWELL (starting).
What! Is't already done?

THE HIGH-SHERIFF.
Not yet, my lord?

CROMWELL. That's fortunate!

THE HIGH-SHERIFF.
Hewlet Prepared the gallows at Tyburn by dawn. Upon their way unto the fatal spot They beg an audience of you, my lord. Shall their request be granted or refused?

CROMWELL What reason do they urge?

THE HIGH-SHERIFF.
A prayer to make!

CROMWELL.
You may admit them.

THE HIGH-SHERIFF. Here, my lord?

CROMWELL.
Yes, here.
[Upon a sign from CROMWELL, THE HIGH-SHERIFF bows and goes out. For some instants CROMWELL remains silent amid the acclamations of the people and the whisperings of the Generals and the Parliament. Then he suddenly rouses himself and addresses DOCTOR LOCKYER, who is among his escort. Come, Master Lockyer, were you not advised To edify us with the Holy Word? We wait: time passes and grace takes its flight. [DOCTOR LOCKYER mounts the pulpit opposite the throne, slowly and with evident embarrassment.

DOCTOR LOCKYER.
My lord, this is my text —
[Hesitates, and appears troubled.

CROMWELL.
Continue! Speak!

DOCTOR LOCKYER (reading from, a Bible which he holds in his hands). “ One day the assembled trees, to choose a king, Said to the olive-tree, ‘ Become our king—’”

CROMWELL (angrily, interrupting him). Where did you find that text? ‘T is a bold one.

DOCTOR LOCKYER. My lord, ‘t is in the Bible.

CROMWELL. „ What?

DOCTOR LOCKYER.
Behold!
Judges, ninth chapter and eighth verse.

CROMWELL.
Silence!
With this hour what connection has your text? Can you find nothing better in the Holy Book? Could you not choose a chapter or a verse Which had a bearing on our present need? This, for example: “ May he be accursed Who leads the wandering blind astray.” Or this, “ The truly wise man dares and doubts;” or “ The Archangel went to bind the devil in The wilderness.” Then there are other themes Which preachers who are eloquent can touch, And which the present scene had dignified. “ Is mankind double?” “ Must the angels of God, When they come to us, change their sphere? “ Or else; What consequence, if Whiggamores, who are Strict dogmatists were antipoedo Baptists? Such things at least would have been understood. For this people, wise and intelligent, You might have treated twenty subjects such As these. I’m wearied to the death to hear These college pastors preach all day, talk through The nose, and praise, in the same breath, the sun, The moon, and my Lord Egliuston. Come down! [Renewed acclamations. LOCKYER, much confused, leaves the pulpit and mingles in the crowd. A BAILIFF enters, pauses on the threshold of the door and calls out.

BAILIFF.
The prisoners, my lord!

CROMWELL.
Let them come in. [The condemned Cavaliers enter, LORD ORMOND at their head. They are preceded by THE HIGH-SHERIFF and are surrounded by Archers and Sergeants-at-Arms.

SCENE XIII.

The same. LORD ORMOND, LORD ROCHESTER, LORD BOSEBERRY, LORD CLIFFORD, SIR PETERS DOWNIE, LORD DROGHEDA, SEDLEY, SIR WILLIAM MURRAY, DOCTOR JENKINS, MANASSES-BEN-ISRAEL, all, with hands bound behind their buck, naked feet, and rope around the neck. THE HIGH-SHERIFF, Archers of the city, Sergeants-at- Arms. The crowd watch with interest and curiosity the entrance of the Cavaliers and step back as they appear.

THE SERGEANTS-AT-ARMS.
Room — room!
[The Cavaliers pause before CROMWELL'S throne, ORMOND and ROCHESTER are in the front row; they are firm and tranquil. MURRAY and MANASSES are the only ones who appear dejected. For some instants CROMWELL watches the prisoners, the assembly, the crowd, and seems to enjoy the anxious silence which pervades the place.

CROMWELL (folding his arms and turning to the Cavaliers). What do you want?
[Aside] If they would ask For pardon!

LORD ORMOND (with steady voice).
We are men of courage, and Ask neither pity nor pardon from you! Men who die as we are to die are proud. Naught troubles nor debases us. What can We hope to gain from you, a murderer, A vassal, who upon his vulgar shield Puts crest and robe and royal sceptre, ‘til He has the arms of England quartered there!

CROMWELL (interrupting him). Then wherefore come to me?

LORD ORMOND.
To ask one word. What path shall lead us to our heavenly home? Your men conduct us to the gallows: do You know our rank?

CROMWELL.
We know that you are traitors Condemned to death.

LORD ORMOND.
But we are noblemen. You do not seem to understand: I will Explain. The gallows are not made for men Who bear our names; however low your rank The rope, dishonouring us, hurts you as well. There is no hanging between men of taste And men of quality. We claim our rights.

CROMWELL.
Is that all?
[Aside.] It is life they ask.

LORD ORMOND.
It is.
Consider the request.

CROMWELL. What do you wish?

LORD ORMOND. To have our heads cut off: freedom from gallows, And its indignities. We have the right To be beheaded.

CROMWELL (low to THURLOE). Humanity is strange! They have no fear, no shame: to scaffold mounts Their pride with them. They face eternity With thoughts governed by prejudice; for them The block is but a scene of vanity.
[To the Cavaliers with a bitter smile. I understand: when you appear in heaven You want the folding-doors to open wide. For a rough hemp, the honour were too great To choke this high and mighty English lord! It has been done, however. In your ranks There are those whose ancestors would not blush, Because they have not any! There's the Jew, And the plebeian magistrate.

DOCTOR JENKINS.
I am Not judged; you have no right to fine, nor kill, Nor send me unto prison. I am free! The Norman charter reads: " Nullus homo Liber imprisionetur."

LORD ROCHESTER (laughing, to SEDLEY). 'Sdeath'
Will he quote laws to him from Arthur's time?

CROMWELL (to Cavaliers). We hold you, gentlemen. Accomplices, Lieutenants, chiefs, you 're caught in your own trap. The hour has tolled; the avenging arm is raised; The moment is unfortunate to ask For favours!

LORD ORMOND (interrupting him). Favours, sir? May God forbid! A right of England's old nobility We claim. A right! Do you hear? Favour? Faith! A block, the axe!

CROMWELL. Peace, you who speak so loud. Last night you came girded with swords and knives Into my house. You bribed or fooled the guard. You thought to seize me helpless in my bed. What end had you in store for me?

LORD ORMOND.
No gallows!

CROMWELL.
Doubtless; you were in too much haste. The knife Works faster. But since God delivered you Into my hands, my gentlemen assassins, What do you ask of me?

LORD ORMOND.
To die as knights;
To die for our king.

LORD ROCHESTER. Die for Rowland — yes I
[Low to ROSEBERRY. I'm always ready; 't was my money first, And now it is my head. Another debt To his account.

CROMWELL (to LORD ORMOND, after a moments reflection).
Old man, I make you judge. If chance had put me in your place, and you In mine, tell me, what would you do?

LORD ORMOND.
I would Not pardon!

CROMWELL. Well, I pardon you!
[Movement of surprise in the assembly.

ALL THE CAVALIERS.
What's this?

CROMWELL.
You 're free!

LORD ORMOND. Just Heaven! [To CROMWELL.] If you but knew my name —

CROMWELL (interrupting him). That does not matter.
[Low to THURLOE.] If he names himself We can't control the people.
[Turning suddenly to LORD BROGHILL, who has stood among the escort in solemn silence.
An old friend Of yours, Lord Broghill, is in London. [LORD ORMOND and LORD BROGHILL turn away with astonishment.

LORD BROGHILL.
Who?

CROMWELL.
Lord Ormond.

LORD BROGHILL.

Ormond!
[Aside.] What if he should know!

CROMWELL.
He has been here five days, my dear Broghill.
[Feels in his coat and takes out the sealed packet which he seized from DAVENANT.
Here is a packet of great interest To him; his name is on the fold. Do you Know his address?

LORD BROGHILL (troubled). No, I do not, my lord!

CROMWELL.
'T is Bloum, the Rat House, on the Strand.

LORD BROGHILL (stammering).
Wherefore —

LORD ORMOND (aside, examining the parchment CROMWELL holds).
The royal message! Davenant was false.

CROMWELL (jiving package to LORD BROGHILL). Give it to Ormond with my compliments; This letter falling into other hands Might compromise him. Beg him to depart At once and be content not to return. If he needs money, give him some.

LORD ROSEBERRY (low to LORD ORMOND).
Money!
Thrice happy man! If he had offered me But surety for my debts!

LORD ROCHESTER (low, congratulating LORD ORMOND).
A pleasant act. I'm charmed he spared the mention of our name.

CROMWELL (with loud, gruff voice). Lord Rochester!

LORD ROCHESTER (starting with surprise). What?

CROMWELL.
I have pardoned you!
Go to the devil!

LORD ROCHESTER (low to LORD ROSEBERRY). Less civility He shows to me. No matter. Proteus Is this man, a magician? On approach He seems a royal lion; try to make Him go to sleep: a touch of wand — presto! The sleeping lion is a wakeful cat; The cat becomes a tiger, and roars loud; Presto! the claw is changed to velvet paw, But through the velvet one can feel its clutch.

CROMWELL. My learned chaplain, we entreat you not To stay too long among us.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside).
I agree!

CROMWELL (continuing). Thanks to the fines, imposed by a just law, To swear in England is expensive, friend. Since you, with best intentions, can't keep still, Taxed by this law at every syllable, You would be ruined speedily.

LORD ROCHESTER.
My thanks For the good counsel.
[To the people who follow him with derisive laughter. Yes, applaud, vile race!

CROMWELL.
Wait, Doctor! Take your wife away with you.

LORD ROCHESTER (trembling).
My wife?

CROMWELL. My Lady Rochester. [DAME GUGGLIGOY hastily descends from the Lady Protectress's tribune and throws herself on ROCHESTER'S neck. Hooting in the crowd.

DAME GUGGLIGOY (embracing ROCHESTER).
Dear spouse!

LORD ROCHESTER (trying to free himself). God’s mercy!

CROMWELL.
Yes, you must united be! What would men say to see one half depart Without the other? — [To DAME GUGGLIGOY.
Go, follow your husband. [DAME GUGGLIGOY takes ROCHESTER’S arm, who resigns himself sadly.

LORD ROCHESTER (aside). What amnesty! You are the most chastised And most ridiculous, Wilmot! Behold The strange appearance which your two halves make! One with this coat, the other with that face, — And Frances sees me! God! ‘t will make me wise!

CROMWELL (pointing to SIR WILLIAM MUREAY, in the group of Cavaliers). Go, Murray, once again receive the blows Due Charles, in common parlance Prince of Wales, For this bad plot, which failed so stupidly. [The populace applaud. The Archers and Constables seize MUEEAY, who hides his face in his hands and seems to be overwhelmed with shame and despair. CROMWELL addresses the Rabbi. This Jew who would have graced the astragal Of gallows, is now free.
[MANASSES joyfully lifts his face; CROMWELL continues, turning to BAREBONE, who stands beside the throne. If he consents To pay your bill, Barebone.
[BAREBONE draws a long parchment from his pocket, which he hands to MANASSES.

MANASSES (examining the bill).
‘T is dear.

CROMWELL (to the other prisoners).
You are All free! — [The Archers unbind the Cavaliers.

THURLOE (low to CROMWELL). All? Think, this plot was serious!

CROMWELL (low). I have the people; no use for gibbets now! [SIR WILLIAM MURRAY, whom the Archers are dragging away, throws himself on his knees and turns his clasped hands to CROMWELL.

SIR WILLIAM MURRAY.
Mercy, my lord!

CROMWELL.
What, from the whip? Away!
Is such not a fit service for your back, —
Whipped for your king? You serve a noble cause.
You'll call yourself a martyr, a Montrose!
[Makes a sign and the Archers drag MURRAY away. The Protector addresses the crowd with an imperious and an inspired air.
O sainted people, spare our fallen foes!
The elephant forbears to crush the snake.
Thus may Heaven save you from all future snares, You chosen vessels!

LORD ROCHESTER (low to SEDLEY).
They are naught but jars.
[The people respond to the Protector's words by prolonged shouts; with a gesture, he commands silence and continues.

CROMWELL.
By clemency I wish to mark this day!
[To THE HIGH-SHERIFF.
Seek Carr, a prisoner in the Tower.
[THE HIGH-SHERIFF goes out. CROMWELL leans on the arm of his chair and seems to meditate. Silence and attention among the audience. SIR RICHARD WILLIS, who was absent a short time and has now returned, accosts ORMOND among the group of Cavaliers.

SIR RICHARD (saluting LORD ORMOND).
My lord, Accept my compliments.

LORD ORMOND (surprised).
What! It is you? Free also? An enigma is that man! He apes kingcraft to pardon us like this!
[Pressing SIR RICHARD'S hand. I owe him thanks for you, if not for me.
[With a mysterious air he bends to SIR RICHARD'S ear. The traitor's Davenant! If I meet him —

SIR RICHARD. Do you think so? There are some reasons for And some against. Mistrust him, if you will. Be prudent, now that you've escaped!

LORD ORMOND (pressing his hand again).
My friend, How much we are deceived!

CROMWELL (rousing himself from his reverie, designating the Cavaliers to STOUPE).
Embark these fools To-morrow on the Thames. Their punishment I here remit in full.
[Rudely addressing HANNIBAL SESTHEAD, who has displayed his luxurious equipment on the steps of the platform.
Sir Hannibal, Though cousin of a king, you must be taught That I am master in my own domain. You 're light of character, and have strange ways Not much in harmony with our elect. Pray, take them hence. Go forth, and sin no more.

HANNIBAL SESTHEAD (aside). He pardons treason sooner than satire. I am the only sufferer.
[Goes out with his pages and his dogs. The crowd hoots at him and applauds CROMWELL.

OVERTON (low to GARLAND). Behold The people's transports! Just a speech, a word, And they are changed.

LORD ROCHESTER (low to ROSEBERRY).
From the Protector's arm God saves us. Let us be content!

GARLAND (low to OVERTON).
He broke Our weapons with a single word!

CROMWELL (perceiving GRAMADOCH between the Guards).
What does My fool between four constables?

GRAMADOCH (boldly).
Oh, these Are the Fool's guard.

AN ARCHER. This idiotic dwarf Took up the gauntlet which your Highness threw.

CROMWELL (irritated.. to GRAMADOCH). You knave!

GRAMADOCH. Only a fool dared do it, lord.

CROMWELL (smiling, and signing to the Archers to release him).
Go! Go!
[GRAMADOCH hastens to rejoin his comrades in their tribune; they embrace him, and give him a cordial welcome. In the mean time CROMWELL has turned to MILTON.
Milton, is he content?

MILTON.
He waits!

CROMWELL.
I am content with you. Speak to me now. Have you nothing to ask me?

MILTON.
Yes, I have.

CROMWELL.
What is it?

MILTON.
A favour!

CROMWELL.

I grant it. Speak!

MILTON.
Your Highness pardoned all your enemies; But one is left.

CROMWELL.
Who?

MILTON.
Davenant.

CROMWELL.
What, he? The Papist! Davenant! The royal spy! Ask something else.

MILTON. Ah, no! Let me insist. He was of the conspiracy, — too true. He is a Papist, and he sought your death. But since that you have pardoned these men!

CROMWELL.
No, I cannot.

MILTON. He was sharer in these plots, I know, but —

CROMWELL (impatiently). Speak no more of him to me. The man writes comedies.
[MILTON, disappointed, turns away; CROMWELL recalls him with a gentler tone.
It is our will To make you poet-laureate, Milton.

MILTON.
Such title I could not accept, my lord; The post is not yet vacant.

CROMWELL (surprised).
No? By whom Is it then filled?

MILTON. By Davenant!

CROMWELL (shrugging his shoulders).
Under The reign of the late James the First!

MILTON.
Since he Must keep his chains, leave him his laurels too.

CROMWELL. There's logic worthy of a poet, yes! Phrases an arm in length; bombastic soul! You'd govern and reprove your governors, You who pass all your time forcing poor words Into strange metre!

MILTON. Solomon composed Five thousand proverbs.
[CROMWELL turns away and signs to his son RICHARD to approach.

CROMWELL (to RICHARD CROMWELL).
Come, Richard, my heir, The army and the Parliament must ope Its doors to you. I make you colonel, peer Of England, member of the Privy Council.

RICHARD CROMWELL (saluting his father with embarrassment).
The duties of the House — my tastes — you are My father and my master too, my lord. But so much honour quite confuses me. If you'll allow me, I will frankly say I have more than I'm worth — more than I want. I love the woods, the fields; leisure I love, And also rest. I like to hunt the deer And stags in herds. I like the open plains, Where I fear no revolts except among My hawks, my falcons, and my hounds. [Dissatisfied and disconcerted, CROMWELL dismisses him with a gesture.

CROMWELL (aside, with bitterness).
Alas!
Would that the other were my eldest son!
What use is all I do?
[Enter CARR, accompanied by THE HIGH-SHERIFF. He forces his way slowly through the crowd; looks with indignation upon all the royal decorations, and advances gravely to the tribune where CROMWELL stands.

SCENE XIV.

The same. CARR.

CARR (folding his arms and looking CROMWELL in the face). What do you want? Base tyrant by the right of crime, are cells No refuge from your tyranny? What wants The apostate with me now? The turn-coat, what Says he?

VOICES IN THE CROWD. Down with the madman!

CROMWELL (to the people).
Let him speak!
God wishes to try David; he permits The son of Semei to curse him thus! [To CARR.] GO on!

CARR.
Yes, hypocrite, that is your plan! With fine outside you cover base designs;
On your infernal brow put heaven’s veil;
Jeer while you torture, ornament your chains, And on a bleeding heart pour irony.
That I might crush your sceptre and your mask, God kept me in his quiver until now.
He said, “ Go to the city with your lute, From Cromwell’s temple drive a servile crowd, Destroy the altar, let the idol burn, Tell them the Egyptian is a man, not God.”
Behold you, Cromwell, on your shining throne!
Tremble! Night follows close on gorgeous day.
Think of Nimrod the hunter. Our great Lord Shattered his crossbow as if’t were a toy.
Remember Ishbosheth: that foolish king Was first to make the people line his path;
One hundred warriors of Issachar Went on their horses in advance of him.
But God brings forth — and ’tis the soul’s despair —
Grief out of joy, and ashes from the flame!
Proud Ishbosheth fell like abortive fruit, As falls an echo borne off by the winds!

Bemember Shalmaneser! On fleet steeds This king, surrounded by his armfed hosts, Passed, as in summer ‘neath a heavy sky The lightning passes, ominous and still!

Remember Sennacherib, as he came With his fierce army from Assyria;

Nine hundred thousand men, so furious And proud their breath had pushed the heavens up!

Unclean magicians, centaurs hideous, Arabs clashing their cymbals mightily, Oxen and leopards to the bridle trained;

War chariots armed with brazen scythes; mad steeds Which tigresses had suckled; great elephants Six hundred strong, like moving fortresses, Among the legions planting their huge feet And shaking towers upon their monstrous backs.

Camels and buffaloes and mastodons, Zebras and mammoths of extinguished worlds, —

A roaring herd through which crashed wheels of steel Belonging to the chariots scaled with gold.

At night the camp looked like a field of fire;

And when this monstrous army roused itself The fishermen, sailing their barks of reed, Imagined that they heard the ocean roar.

All added glory to this splendid king.

His mares had wings, and crushed earth as they flew.

With brow banded by stars, he grander seemed Than his grand chariot drawn by elephants.

Around him banners, flags, and flames streamed forth, As stream gold fires around a comet’s course.

But Heaven had pity on this wretched world:

God blew upon this star with shining mane, And suddenly the wonder disappeared, As dies the flickering lamp of vigils lone!

Proud sycophant, you deem yourself more strong Than such great kings, the suns of eastern worlds!

Can you, like eagles, swoop, at any hour Upon Damascus, Carchemish, Samaria?

Have you, like sand, invaded the bazaar, Destroyed Sochoh-Benoth, Tiglath-pileser?

Have you with chariots, horses, rushing crowds, Disturbed the solitude of Lebanon?

No, you have not! O Sovereign of Kings, Your arm has changed the boundaries of States;
Mankind at sight of you draws back in fear.
You hold the world as prey, within your fangs, —
But that is all! In all your wars and deeds God helped above, the people helped below.
Yourself did naught. You ‘re but an instrument, —
The flail which beats the wheat on threshing-floor Where are the gods of Ava and Emathia? What can the Sepharvaim do when touched By God? These idols reigned: you’ll pass away As they have done, inconsequent as is The bell which rattles on a camel’s neck. Soon will the saints gird on their robes ‘gainst you Gad, Asher, Benjamin, and Naphtali Will stand upon Mount Ebal and curse you. The women’s and the children’s jeers will taunt And follow you. Unto your eyes, blinded By hell; unto your feet, earth will be iron, And bronze will be the skies. A purple night Enshrouds your haughty eye-lids, but our God Will crush your head beneath two stones; and we Shall see the people, who have won their rights, Stone future tyrants with your whitened bones. On impious thrones, the world has often seen Its Pharaohs of Memphis and Sultans Of Ethiopia; its popes, its dukes, And emperors, who have amused themselves By torturing their subjects and their slaves. But such a man as you, magician, king, And satrap, a mind so cruel and astute And bold the sun of heaven has not yet looked Upon! Be you accursed!

CROMWELL.
Is this the end?

CARR.
Not yet! Be cursed at setting sun and cursed At break of day; be cursed upon your steed And in your chariot; accursed be Your wooden weapons and your arms of steel.

CROMWELL.
Is that all?

CARR.

No! Accursed be the air Which Zephyr brings; accursed be your bed, The threshold of your door. Be you accursed!

CROMWELL
Well, is that all?

CARR.
No! Be accursed! CROMWELL.
Come, come!
You’ll rend your lungs! Have you finished? Hear me! You are in prison for an ancient crime! I pardon you. Go! You are free!

CARR.
Tyrant!
By what right, free? Have you not sinned enough?
Do you wish to increase your list of crimes?
With your ballista wherefore strike my tower?
Why drag me from the cell where I must spend My days? To break my chains? Speak, were they forged By you? You pardon me? Heartless despot!
Your clemency brings ruin like your rage!
Long Parliament placed me within my cell;
My treachery deserved the punishment, For I rebelled against the sacred yoke.
I had marked two portions of the heroes’ spoil, And I am punished. I live in the depths Of a dark tower where iron bars shut out All glint of day; the spider hangs his web Upon my bed, and in its meshes oft The bat tangles his wings; at night, I hear The worm arise and toil within the tomb.
I hunger and I thirst; in summer I
Am warm; in winter I am cold. ‘T is well!
To all things I submit and give example.
But you, how dare you touch the temple, Noll?
How dare you even move a post? What they, The saints, have bound can you unbind? Alas!
Of thunder can one hide the consequence?
Condemned by them, no one can set me free.
No! and I proudly walk among these men, The last vestige of their authority.

A shattered pine, deep in the precipice, I flaunt the noble scar upon my brow.

You wish to break my chains by force, do you?

[To people.] See, how your tyrant treads you under-foot!

No, I prefer — I, Carr, who face you now, Prefer the chain of captive to the yoke Of slave. What do I say? I much prefer My destiny to yours. I like my tower Far better than your palace heaped with spoil.

I'd not exchange my sentence for your crime, My honest chains for your usurped throne.

We are both criminals, and when we die The Lord will count your crimes and my remorse.

Re-ope my prison doors, or, if you wish My freedom, restore the equilibrium Of our great State: give back our Parliament;

Then, come with me. Both of us with bowed head, Bound with one rope, with ashes on our face, Before its bar we'll stand and sue for grace.

But while I wait for that auspicious day, Give back my chains; respect my liberty!

[.Bursts of laughter from the multitude. Hush, yonder rabble! In my cell, I am The only Englishman you do not rule!

The only free man. There I curse you; there I offer our two selves as holocaust To Heaven! My prison! In vain you bid me break Its bars! My prison! If profane laws you need And worldly texts for your corrupted hearts, By right of habeas corpus I go back!

CROMWELL.

So be it! He invokes a law without Repeal.

TRICK (in the Fools' tribune). His prison! 'T is a mistake; he means His private box.

[CARR exits proudly amid the hisses of the populace.

SYNDERCOMB (low to GARLAND). He is the only man Amongst us all.

VOICES IN THE CROWD. Hail! Glory to the saints! Glory to God! The God of Sinai! — Long life to the Protector!

[SYNDERCOMB, exasperated by the imprecations of CARR and the acclamations of the people, draws his dagger and rushes towards the platform.

SYNDERCOMB (waving his dagger).
To the King Of Sodom, death!

EARL OF CARLISLE (to Halberdiers). Arrest the assassin!

CROMWELL (restraining the Guard by a gesture).
Make way For this man! — [To SYNDERCOMB.
Your death!
Speak! What do you want?

SYNDERCOMB.

CROMWELL.
Depart in liberty! Depart in peace!

SYNDERCOMB.
I am the risen avenger! If your guard Did not restrain my lips —

CROMWELL (motioning to the Soldiers to release him).
Speak on!

SYNDERCOMB.
No words Of mine should touch you. Did they not hold back My arm —

CROMWELL.
Strike!

SYNDERCOMB (advancing one step and lifting his dagger). Die, O tyrant! [The people rush upon him and disarm him.

VOICES IN THE CROWD.
Murder is The answer that he makes to pardon. Let Him perish! Let the murderer die! [The infuriated people seize SYNDERCOMB and drag him, struggling desperately, out of the hall.

CROMWELL (to THURLOE).
See what Is done to him. — [THURLOE goes out.

VOICES IN THE CROWD. Annihilate the traitor!

CROMWELL.
My brothers, I have pardoned him. He knows Not what he does.

VOICES IN THE CROWD (outside).
Away! Unto the Thames! Drown him! — [Re-enter THURLOE.

THURLOE (to CROMWELL). The people are satisfied. The Thames Received the mad apostle.

CROMWELL (aside).
Clemency Is, after all, a method too. ‘T is one Foe less; but to such deeds the people must Not get too. well accustomed.
[Moment of silence; cries of joy and triumph among THE CROWD. CROMWELL, seated on his throne, seems to quietly relish the delirious acclamations of the populace and the army.

OVERTON (low to MILTON).
To this idol A human victim has been sacrificed. All is for him; the frivolous multitude, The army too. He lacks not anything. He has All that he needs. Our efforts served To raise him higher, that was all. In vain Do men defy him; vainly shall they dare To attack him; he has the power to crush us, one By one. Devotion he inspires; terror He inspires also; he should be satisfied.

CROMWELL (dreamfully). When am I to be king?

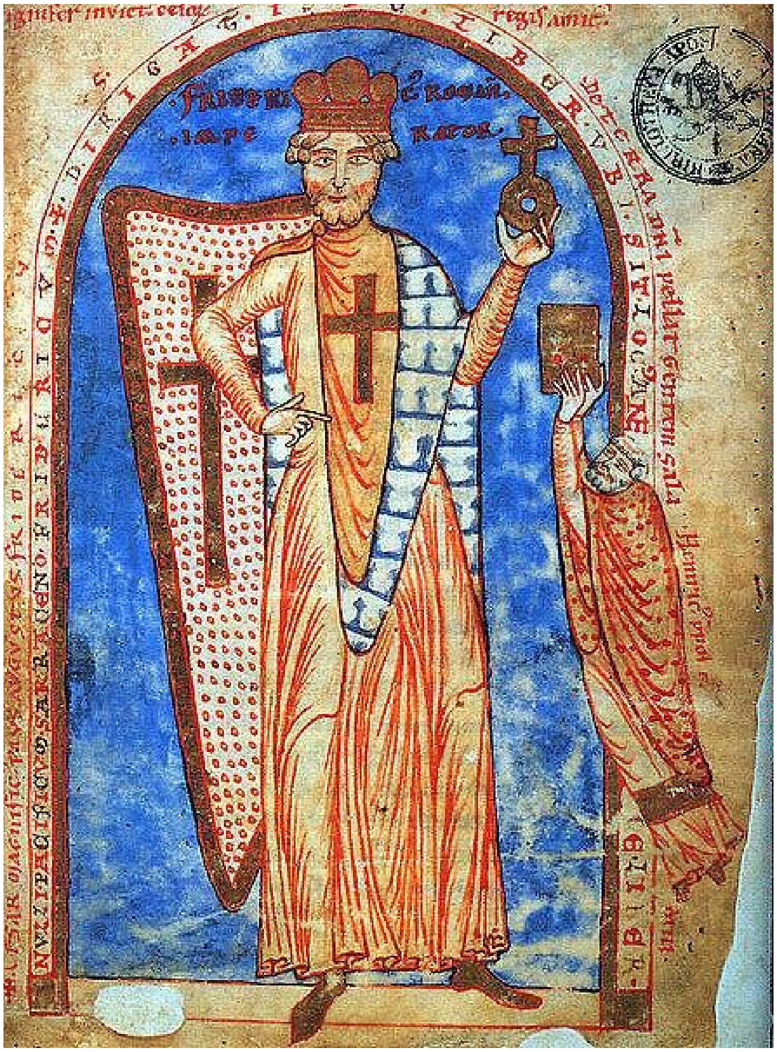
CURTAIN

THE BURGRAVES

A TRILOGY

This historical play was first performed by the Comédie-Française on 7 May 1843. The drama takes place along the Rhine and concerns the return of Barbarossa, who was a German Holy Roman Emperor.



Frederick I Barbarossa (1122–1190)

THE BURGRAVES

CONTENTS

DRAMATIS PERSONS.
PART I.
SCENE I.
SCENE II.
SCENE III.
SCENE IV
SCENE V.
SCENE VI.
SCENE VII.
PART II.
SCENE I.
SCENE II.
SCENE III.
SCENE IV.
SCENE V.
SCENE VI.
PART III.
SCENE I.
SCENE II
SCENE III.
SCENE IV.

DRAMATIS PERSONS.

JOB, Burgrave of Heppenheff. MAGNUS, son of Job, Burgrave of Wardeck. HATTO, son of Magnus, Marquis of Verona, Burgrave of Nollig.
GORLOIS, son of Hatto (bastard), Burgrave of Sareck.
FREDERIC, of Hohenstaufen.
OTBERT.
DUKE GERHARD, of Thuringen.
GILISSA, Margrave of Lusatia.
PLATON, Margrave of Moravia.
LUPUS, Count of Mons.
CADWALLA, Burgrave of Okenfels.
DARIUS, Burgrave of Lahneck.
ZOAGLIO GIANNILARO, Genoese nobleman.
UTHER, Pendragon of Brittany.
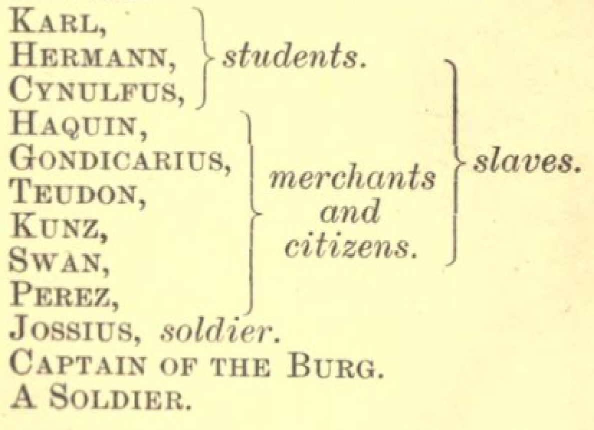
COUNTESS REGINA.
GUANHUMARA.
EDWIGE.



KARL,
HERMANN, students.
CYNULFUS,
HAQUIN,
GONDICARIUS,
TEUDON, merchants and citizens. slaves.
KUNZ,
SWAN,
PEREZ,
JOSSIUS, soldier.
CAPTAIN OF THE BURG.
A SOLDIER.

Setting: HEPPENHEFF, 1200.

THE BURGRAVES.

PART I.

THE GRANDSIRE.

SCENE. — The ancient gallery of seigniorial portraits of the burg of Heppenheff. This gallery is circular in form and spreads around the great tower; it communicates with the rest of the castle by means of four large doors which are situated at the four cardinal points. As the curtain rises, one notices that a portion of this gallery makes a turn and is lost behind the round wall of the tower. To the left, one of the four large communicating doors. To the right, a large and high door, communicating with the interior of the lower it stands upon an elevation of three steps and has a small house-door beside it. In the background a semi-circular roman promenade with low pillars, curious capitals, over which is a second story, (practicable) communicating with the gallery by means of a stair case of six steps. The sky is visible through the large arches of this promenade and also the remainder of the castle, whose highest tower is surmounted with an immense black flag, which floats in the breeze. To the left, near to the large folding-door, there is a small window filled with high-coloured glass. Near to the window, an arm-chair. The gallery looks uninhabited and dilapidated. The walls and the stone vaulting, on which some almost effaced frescoes are distinguishable, are green and mouldy through the oozing of rain. The portraits hung in the panels of the gallery are all turned to the wall. As the curtain rises, evening approaches. That part of the castle which is visible through the arches of the promenade seems to be lighted and illuminated in the interior, although it is yet broad daylight. The noise of trumpets and clarions comes from that side of the bury, and at times loud songs accompanied by the clinking of glasses are heard. Nearer, one hears the rustling of iron, as if a troop of men in chains were mooing about in that portion of the promenade which is invisible. A woman leans against the great door, and appears to be listening to the flourishes and singing in the neighbouring hall. She is alone, old, half covered by a long black veil, dressed in ragged sack-cloth, bound with a chain, which by a double link is fastened to her waist and to her naked feet, she has an iron collar around her neck.

SCENE I.

GUANHUMARA (alone, listening. Song outside).
“To us the civil war Eternal glory brings: Defiance to the cities, Defiance to the kings.
“The Burgrave flourishes When days of peace are o’er. Barons, defy the pope, Defy the emperor!
“We ‘re brave! Then let us reign, — Reign by the fire, the rod. Burgraves, defy the devil! Defy almighty God!”

[Trumpets and clarions.

GUANHUMARA.
The lords are gay! The feasting still goes on’
[She looks towards the opposite side of the theatre. Under the lash, the prisoners work since dawn.
[She listens.
Here, sounds of revel; there, the clank of chains.
[She fixes her eyes on the door of the tower to the right. There, father and grandfather, bent with years, Watch the results of all their sombre work. They meditate upon their life, their race, And, out of reach of yon mad jests, review Their crimes, less hideous than their progeny. How great these lords in their prosperity Have been, and are to-day. Frontier dukes, And sovereign counts, and sons of gothic kings Bend to their level and their equals are ‘ Their city, full of clarions, songs, and hoots, Stands inaccessible among the clouds. A thousand soldiers, bandits with fierce eyes, Armed to the teeth, keep an eternal watch. All things go for protection to their lair. And yet in a dark corner of the place Wanders a woman, old and bent and sad, Chains on her feet, a yoke upon her neck, In rags, face veiled; a wretched slave is she: But, princes, tremble! This slave’s name is Hate! [She goes up stage and mounts the steps of the promenade. A troop of slaves enter from the gallery at the right; they are chained (some of them in couples), and they carry working-tools, pics, pickaxes, hammers, etc., in their hands. GUANHUMARA, leaning against one of the pillars in the promenade, loatches them thoughtfully. By the torn and soiled garments of the prisoners one can recognize their former professions.

SCENE II.

KUNZ, TEUDON, IIAQUIN, GONDICARIUS, citizens and merchants with grey beards; Jossius, an old soldier; HERMANN, CYNULFUS, KARL, students from, the University of Boulogne and the School of Maintz; SWAN (or SUEUON) merchant from Lubeck. The prisoners advance slowly in separate groups, the students with the students, citizens and merchants together, soldier alone. The old men seem exhausted with work and grief. During this entire scene and the two which follow it, the flourishes and singing from the next hall are audible.

TEUDON (throwing down the tool which he held, and sitting on the stone step, in front of the double door of the tower).
The hour of rest at last! Oh, I am tired’

KUNZ (shaking his chain).
Once I was free and rich — and now!

GONDICARIUS (leaning against a pillar).
Alas!

CYNULFUS (watching GUANHUMARA, who crosses the promenade slowly).
I wish I knew on whom that woman spies.

SWAN (low to CYNULFUS).
The other month, our masters, — race accursed! —
Seized her among the merchants of Saint Gall.
I know no more’

CYNULFUS.
It is enough for me That she has freedom while we all are chained.

SWAN.
She cured a fever which near killed Hatto, —
Hatto, the eldest of the grand-children.

HAQUIN.
A serpent bit the Burgrave Rollo’s heel. The other day; she cured that too.

CYNULFUS.
Indeed!

HAQUIN.
I think, for my part, she’s a sorceress.

HERMANN.
No! she’s a fool.

SWAN.
She knows a thousand things. She cured not only Rollo, Hatto, but Eloi, Kniid, Azzo, — lepers from whom all men fled.

TEUDON.
This woman’s working at some sombre scheme. I tell you, she’s some wretched plot afoot With these three lepers, who are bound to her. You stumble on them at most every turn. They ‘re like three dogs which follow a she-wolf.

HAQUIN.
Yes; in the cemetery, yesterday, I saw them where the lepers live, these four, Making a coffin; nailing down the planks. She held a vase, and waved it, in her hands, Crooning, as women sing to babes who sleep. She made a philtre of the dead man’s bones.

SWAN.
All night they were afoot. The stars were bright, And one could see this woman and the lepers, Masked! It was horrible! I could not sleep; I watched them.

KUNZ.
Yes, they have some hiding-place Here in the caves. The other day the witch With her three lepers passed with surly looks By the long wall. I turned my eyes away One instant. When I looked again they'd gone, — Had sunk within the wall!

HAQUIN.
These wretched men, These lepers, sorcerers, with whom we live, Oppress me.

KUNZ.
It was near to the Lost Cave.
You know it?

HERMANN. That these lepers serve the one Who healed them is but natural and just.

SWAN.
Instead of lepers and bad Hatto, Kunz, The one within these walls she ought to cure Is old Job's niece —

KUNZ.
Regina! God bless her!
She is an angel.

HERMANN. She is dying.

KUNZ.
Yes!
Horror of Hatto, loneliness, and grief Are killing her. Each day she's nearer death.

TEUDON.
Poor child —
[GUANHUMARA re-appears at back of stage and crosses slowly.

HAQUIN.

Look! There the old witch goes again. She terrifies me. Everything about her, — Her wild looks, her dumb grief, her piercing glance So wise, so clear, so terrible at times, Her wondrous powers which are miraculous, — They frighten me!

GONDICABIUS. Accursed be this place.

TEUDON.
Be quiet! Peace!

GONDICABIUS. Nobody comes this way. Our masters are at supper. We ‘re far off, We can’t be overheard.

TEUDON (lowering his voice and looking towards the tower).
They ‘re both in there.

GONDICAEIUS.
Who — both?

TEUDON.
The old men, — son and father. Peace. Except Madame Regina (this I have From Edwige the nurse), except Otbert, The young adventurer who came last year, Though but a boy to serve at Heppenheff, And whom the grandfather, cursed in his sons, Loves for his youth and for his loyalty, — No hand opens that door, no one comes here. The man of prey sits in his den alone’ There was a time when he defied the world; When twenty counts and twenty dukes, his sons And grandsons, generations five, of which His mountain was the ark, surrounded him, As if this bandit patriarch were king. But age has broken him. He lives apart And sits there, ‘neath a gorgeous canopy, Alone. His son, old Magnus, standing, holds His lance. For months he never speaks a word. At night one sees him, entering, pale and crushed, Some secret hall of which he keeps the key. Where does he go?

SWAN.
This old man has strange griefs. HAQUIN.
His sons weigh like bad spirits on his mind.

KUNZ.
‘T was not in vain that he was cursed!

GONDICARIUS.
‘T was just.

SWAN.
When he was very old, he had a son, His last son, whom he loved, — so goes the world; Always the grey-beard loves the head of gold. When but one year of age this child was lost.

KUNZ.
A gypsy stole it.

CYNUFLUS. Near a field of wheat.

HAQUIN.
As for myself, I know, this city built On mountain top, and having, so they say, Witnessed a monstrous crime, was left long time Deserted, and at length was pulled down by Teutonic order. Finally the years Oblivion brought, and suddenly, one day The master, a fantastic man, who changed His name as we change hats, returned. Since then, By his command, the black flag always waves Over the castle.

SWAN (to KUNZ). Have you noticed, son, At base of the round tower, above the stream Which howls in the ravine, at angle with The moat, a narrow window crossed with bars, Twisted and broken?

KUNZ.
It is the Lost Cave. I spoke about it a short while ago.

HAQUIN.
A gloomy spot. A spectre habits there, ‘T is said.

HERMANN.
Nonsense!

CYNULFUS. The wall seems streaked with blood.

KUNZ.
What’s certain, is, that none can enter there. The secret of the entrance’s lost. The window Is all we know of it. No living soul Goes in.

SWAN.
Yet, every night, when I pass by The rock, I hear footsteps within.

KUNZ (with horror).
You ‘re sure?

SWAN.
Quite sure.

TEUDON.
Come, Kunz — enough! Here silence would Be wise.

HAQUIN. This place is full of mystery. I watch all things; all gives me food for thought.

TEUDON.
Let’s talk of something else; what is to happen No one but God can tell.
[Turns to a group which has taken no part in the scene so far. They are in a corner, listening attentively to what a young student is saying.
Come, Karl, we’ll hear Your story too.
[KARL comes to the front, all draw around him; the two groups of slaves, old men and youths, mingle together, displaying the same attention.

KARL.
You must remember, for ‘T is an important point, that’t was last month The adventure happened — [Seems to reflect a moment.
Twenty years ago! When Barbarossa died in the Crusades —

HERMANN. Your Max was in a bad locality. So be it!

KARL.

Yes, it is a wretched place, A dreaded spot. A flight of ravens, black And sinister, eternally sweeps ‘round The mountain, and at night, when the deep gloom Envelops them, their awful cries affright The boldest of the huntsmen chasing them Back to Lantern. Great drops of water fall, Like tears from some most awful countenance.

A cavern, black and of most fearful shape, Gapes deep in the ravine. Max Edmoud, Count, Feared not to climb that fearful mount by night.

He boldly entered the unearthly caves.

A pallid light of dawn revealed their horrors As he moved on, when suddenly, far down The gloomy depths, beneath a vaulted arch, Seated upon a chair of brass, his feet Enveloped by his mantle, to the right A sceptre, to the left a globe, he saw An old man, frightful, motionless, bowed down, In purple robes, armed with a sword, and crowned.

Upon a block of stone the old man leaned.

Although Count Max was brave and had waged war With John the Warrior, he felt himself Grow pale before this old man, almost lost Amid the grass, the moss, and ivy leaves.

It was the Emperor Frederic Barbarossa.

He slept; a wild and fearful sleep. His beard, Which once was gold, was white as snow, and wound Itself three times around the block of stone;

His long white lashes shut his heavy lids;

A pierced heart bled on his scarlet shield.

At instants during his unnatural sleep His hand grasped blindly at his sword. God knows What dreams were passing through his soul

HERMANN.

What more?

KARL.

Listen. The sound of footsteps in the cave Awakened the old man; he raised his head, And fixing on the Count a savage look, He asked him, as he opened his dull eyes, “ Chevalier, have the ravens flown away?” Count Max returned, “ No, sire.” At that reply The old man bowed his head without a word. And Max, dumb, stupefied with terror, saw This phantom emperor fall asleep again. [While KARL has been speaking, all the prisoners have gradually drawn around him, listening with increasing interest to his story.

Jossius was one of the first to come as soon as he heard the name of BARBAROSSA.

HERMANN (laughing heartily). That is a most extraordinary tale!

HAQUIN (to KARL). If rumour’s right, ‘t was in the Cydnus that The Emperor drowned himself in sight of all His troops.

JOSSIUS. The current carried him away. I know, for I was there. I saw it all. It was a fearful sight, and from my mind The memory will never be effaced Othon of Wittelsbach, you know, hated The Emperor, but when he saw him thus At mercy of the waves, while on him rained The Turkish javelins, he, Prince Othon, On horseback leaped into the angry stream, Offering himself as target to the foe. “ We’ll save the Emperor,” he cried.

HERMANN.
In vain!

JOSSIUS.
Yes, vain, though all tried valiantly. There died Two counts and soldiers sixty-three for him.

KARL.
That’s nothing to prevent his ghost from haunting The Malpas Valley —

SWAN.
Well, I have been told, That by a miracle he saved himself, Became a hermit, and is yet alive.

GONDICARIUS. Pray God he be! May he help Germany Before the year twelve hundred twenty comes, — The fatal year, when the empire must fall.

SWAN.
Already, on all sides, our glory wanes.

HAQUIN.
Yes, if he were alive! I dream of it.

To rescue us his loyal subjects from This hell, he’d recommence the Burgraves’ war!

KUNZ.
The whole world groans as much as we poor slaves. Our country has no chief, Europe no bounds.

HAQUIN.
Bread fails —

GONDICARIUS. Along the borders of the Rhine There’s naught but swarming of new brigand life.

KUNZ.
The electors feed on quarrels ‘mongst themselves.

HERMANN. Cologne declares for Suabia.

SWAN.
And Erfurt For Brunswick.

GONDICARIUS. Maintz elects Berthold.

KUNZ.
And Treves Wants Frederic.

GONDICARIUS. Meanwhile the country dies.

HAQUIN.
The cities are all closed.

SWAN.
It is unsafe To travel save in companies well armed.

KARL.
Small tyrants harass our good citizens.

TEUDON.
Four emperors! Too much, and not enough; For when it comes to kings, you see, one king’s Worth more than four.

KUNZ.
We need a mighty arm To fight for us; but Barbarossa’s dead!

SWAN (to JOSSIUS). Was nothing ever found of him?

JOSSIUS.
The waves Kept all their booty.

TEUDON. Swan, you recollect The prophecy they made upon his birth: “ This child, whose laws one day will rule the world, Shall twice be held as dead, and shall revive.” Well! this prediction, which was ridiculed And then forgotten, has been half fulfilled.

HERMANN.
He’s been the hero of full many a tale.

TEUDON.
I’m telling what I know. In ninety-two, I saw a certain Sfrondati within The hospital at Prague. An aged man, Dalmatian, and ‘t was said, of feeble mind.
This man, within his prison, loudly told That when a youth and searching for adventure He became squire to Rarbarossa’s father, The old Duke Frederic. The Duke was stunned With the prediction made about his son.
The child indeed seemed born for double war;
Guelf through his mother, Ghibeline through his sire, He might be fairly claimed by either side.
His father brought him up within a tower At first, away from every eye, and tried To hide him from the clutch of destiny.
But by and by he sought another refuge, —
One still more safe. A noble girl had borne
To him a bastard son, who, born and bred Among the mountains, did not know his sire Was Duke of Suabia and chief of war.
He knew him only by the name Othon.

The good duke kept this son concealed, for fear He might desire to be a prince and strive To wrest a province from his own dukedom.

The bastard, through his mother, owned a city Near to the Rhine, of which he was Burgrave, And the lord suzerain, — a bandit castle, An eagle’s nest, a lair! The father thought This shelter safe. He sought the burgrave, and Embracing him, said, as he gave the child Into his care, “ My son, this is your brother!”

He went away. No man cheats destiny.

Of course, the father thought his secret safe, Because the child himself ignored the truth.

Till he was twenty Barbarossa lived With the burgrave, when, mark you, this is strange!

One day some herdsmen, passing by the stream Which sweeps the basement of the castle walls, Found in a thicket, at a boulder’s base, Two bloody, naked bodies — breathing yet.

Two men, stabbed in the castle, without noise, And thrown by night into the precipice, Yet were not dead! A miracle, you see.

These two men, who were saved by God’s own hand, Were Barbarossa and his friend Sfrondati, Who alone possessed a knowledge of his birth.

They both were healed; then, with great mystery Sfrondati brought the young son to the Duke, Who for reward imprisoned Sfrondati.

He kept his son, which was the wisest course, And only sought to hush the whole affair.

He never saw his bastard son again;

But when he felt his end approaching, called His son, and had him kiss the crucifix, And swear, kneeling beside his dying bed, Not to disclose himself unto his brother, Nor to avenge himself, but wait until His brother’s age had reached a hundred years. By which never was meant, though God is judge. In fact, the bastard died and never knew He was a duke’s son and the brother Of a great emperor. Sfrondati’s face Grew white with horror if one tried to probe This family secret. The two men had loved One girl. The elder felt himself betrayed, Killed one, and sold the other to a bandit, Remorseless fiend, who yoked her, like a man, To boats that ply from Ostia to Rome, — A fearful fate! Sfrondati shook his head And said, “ Forgotten!” His mind was a blank. Nothing survived the dark night of his soul, — Neither the name of bastard, nor the woman. He knew no longer how, he knew not where. I saw this man, imprisoned for a fool In Prague; now he is dead.

HERMANN.
And you conclude?

TEUDON.
I only think. If all these facts are true, The prophecy holds good: because, surely, This hope is not fantastical; if once It is accomplished, why not twice? If young, Our Barbarossa was accounted dead, Why may he not revive again?

HERMANN (laughing).
We'll wait Until he comes.

KUNZ (to TEUDON). I've heard this tale before. Young Frederic was called Donato then; The bastard's name was Fosco; and the girl Who made the trouble was a Corsican, If I remember right. The lovers used To hide in some cave out of sight, to which The entrance was their own sweet mystery. One night the brother Fosco found them there. With jealous heart and furious hand he changed The idyll to a tragedy.

GONDICARIUS.
And yet That Frederic should have reached the height of power And never tried to find the woman he had loved, Has always seemed a blot upon his fame, — That is, if this romantic tale be true.

TEUDON.
Ah, but he did, my friend! For thirty years Did his most valiant arm ransack both borders Of the Rhine. But the bastard —

KUNZ.
Fosco? TEUDON (continuing).
Yes.
Had left his home to serve in Brittany. I think, 't was many years ere he returned.

The emperor devastated mountains, woods, Laid siege to castles and destroyed burgraves, But found her not.

GONDICARIUS (to JOSSIUS).
You were among his troops; You fought those knaves; do you remember it?

JOSSIUS.
It was a war of giants. The burgraves For once, stood by each other, tooth and nail.
We had to carry every portal, every wall!
Above, below, riddled with shot and bathed In blood the barons fought; and laughing wildly Beneath their hideous masks, let fiery oil And melted lead upon their helmets stream.
We had to hold the siege without and fight within.
We cut down with our swords, bit with our teeth.
Oh, what assaults! and when at last, with storm And fire we took a castle, oftentimes It buried us among its ruins. It was then That Barbarossa, masked but crowned, fought singly With a bandit, who, forced from his lair, Burned Frederic’s arm with a red hot trefoil, And made the Emperor say to Count d’ Arau, “ I’ll let the headsman pay him back, my friend.”

GONDICARIUS. Was this man taken prisoner?

JOSSIUS.
He escaped. His visor hid his face, and Frederic kept The trefoil on his arm.

TEUDON (to SWAN). Well, as for me, I think that Barbarossa is alive. You’ll see!

JOSSIUS. I’m sure that he is dead.

CYNULFUS.
And Max?

HERMANN.
Delusion!

TEUDON. And the grotto at Malpas?

HERMANN.
A fairy-tale!

KARL.
Yet Sfrondati has thrown New light upon this history.

HERMANN.
My faith!
They ‘re naught but dreams of a demented mind, Within whose flickering lights all visions pass, Having no better substance than the clouds.
[Enter a SOLDIER, whip in hand.

SOLDIER.
Slaves, get to work! To-night the guests intend To visit this division of the castle. Lord Hatto, the master, brings them. Pass on! Let him not find you dragging your chains here! [The prisoners pick up their tools, couple themselves together silently and go out with lent heads, driven by THE SOLDIER with his whip. GUANHUMARA appears upon the upper gallery and follows them with her eyes. Just as the prisoners disappear, REGINA, EDWIGE, and OTBERT enter through the great door. REGINA is dressed in white. EDWIGE, the nurse, is old, and dressed in black. OTBERT wears the costume of a soldier of fortune, with cutlass and long sword. REGINA is very young. She is pale, weak, and is hardly able to walk. She seems like one who has been ill a long time and is about to die. She leans on the arm of OTBERT. who supports her, and watches her with great anxiety. EDWIGE follows them. Without being seen by any of them, GUANHUMARA watches them and listens to them for a few moments, then exits on the side opposite where she came in.

SCENE III.

OTBERT, REGINA, EDWIGE (at intervals).

OTBERT.

Lean more on me. There! Do not walk so fast. Sit down and rest a moment. [Leads her to a great chair near the window. How are you?

REGINA.
I ‘m ill — I’m cold. I shiver. Ah! that feasting —
O
It made me suffer.
[To EDWIGE.] See that no one comes.
[EDWIGE goes out.

OTBERT.
Have no fear! They will drink until day-break. Why do you go there if it tires you?

REGINA.
Because Hatto —

OTBEET. Hatto?

REGINA (pacifying him).
Speak low. He might Have forced me. I am his betrothed.

OTBERT.
You should Have spoken to the old man: Hatto is Afraid of him.

REGINA. What does it matter, now That I am soon to die?

OTBERT.
Oh, don’t say that! REGINA.
To suffer, dream, and die is woman’s lot.

OTBERT (turning to window). Look! The fine sunset.

REGINA.
Yes; a dying sun Sets all the world afire I ‘T is autumn — night! All’s dying, — leaves and grass and moss and light.

OTBERT. The leaves will live again!

REGINA (dreamily, looking at sky).
Yes, they'll return. Ah me, how fast they fly! 'T is sad to see Them go, the swallows, for they go so far, — Way to the sunny south.

OTBERT.
They will come back!

REGINA.
Perhaps — but not in time! I'll never see The birds, nor look upon the leaves again.

OTBERT.
Regina!

REGINA. Push me closer, closer to The window! — [She gives him her purse.
Take my purse, Otbert, and throw The money to those prisoners!
[OTBERT throws the purse from a window at the lack: she continues looking out of window.
Ah, yes!
The sun is fire' Those rays, the last ones, look! Have made a crown upon the brow of Taunus. How the river shines. Red splendours decorate The forests. See! those panes of glass in yon Small hamlet, there, are livid fire. How grand! How grand ' Ah me, how beautiful life is! All nature is a stream of living light. Yet I, who have no father and no mother, I'm dying; nobody can save me. None Can help me; I am doomed. Alone and sad, I feel existence ebbing from my heart.

OTBERT.
Alone? And where am I, who love you?

REGINA.
Ah!
Your love is like the rest, — a dream. Sweet dream! But dreams which come at night, go with the dawn, And soon — you will forget me; yes, you will!

OTBERT.
For you I’d die; for you I’d dare damnation!
You say I do not love you! Ah, you are Not kind! One year ago, when in this den, Surrounded by these plunderers, I saw You first, I loved you. In this gloomy place Where crimes are heaped more high than hope, my eyes Found you, the one white lily in the slums Of hell, one radiant star amid eternal Night! I loved you, the Countess of the Rhine!
Loved you, his bride, — Hatto the invincible.
I’m a poor man (I’ve told you so before), Soldier of fortune, of uncertain birth, Perhaps a slave, or less than slave; perhaps A greater than a king. But all I am Is yours. When you leave me, my life is done.
They ‘re two, in this black castle, whom I love:
You first, you most, you above every one, —
Above a father had I one, or God!
Then next I love the old man, cowering there Beneath the weight of a remorseless past.
In you he finds his only joy. You are, O — sweet young girl, his one last torch of life, His one last faith in Heaven, his one last trust That God, who made you, must be merciful.
I —— wretched, hapless youth, crushed underneath The heel of destiny, I bless you both;
For near you I forget my lot, near him My soul feels power to break its iron bars.
Near you it feels the courage to endure.
You understand me now. I’ve told you all.
That I am sad, am jealous, and I suffer;
Oh, yes, I suffer every hour! Just now, When Hatto looked at you, up in my heart There surged a very hurricane of hate.
I could have killed him, and I checked myself.
I do not love you? Child, give me one kiss And take my heart’s blood. Dear, go tell the priest He does not love his God; Regina, tell The free-born Tuscan that he does not love His home; go tell the sailor that he does Not love the dawn which follows fearful nights;
Go tell the weary prisoner who dies Within his cell, he does not love the hand Which sets him free, — but do not tell me that I love you not! To me you are the light Which pierces the abyss through which I go, —

The hand of God, sustaining when I fall.
To you I must belong eternally.
You know that well! ‘T is strange! the kindest women, They love to trifle with men’s agonies —
But pardon me, I talk about myself And you are suffering. Upon my knees, Let me give sympathy unto your pain, Which, while I kiss your hands, breathe out on me.

REGINA.
My lot, like yours, Otbert, was full of woe. I am an orphan, just the same as you. If Heaven had willed, our fortunes, so akin, United might have borne us joys divine. But now —

OTBERT.
Since we have spoken of our love, Grief cannot hurt you, for I’ll be on guard. ‘I’ll serve, adore you! I will kill Hatto If he should fret you! I will be Your father and your mother. Do not fear, I will replace them both. Your father, — see, my arms Your mother, — feel, my heart!

REGINA.
You right Now I read clear into your soul.’ T is fierce, resistless as a giant is, And tender, like a woman. That’s you • Your nature is like that, Otbert. Alas “ You can’ do anything for me.

OTBERT.
I can! REGINA.
’Tis not from Hatto that I need defence. As brave and valiant as you are, you can’t Dispute me with the one who claims my body, Demands my soul. My veritable bridegroom, He is death! Before I go to my dark home, Of what is best in me I make two parts; I give one to my Saviour, one to you. Friend, place your gentle hand upon my brow. I say to you as now I stand upon The threshold of another life: Otbert My soul belongs to God, my heart to you. You are my love!

EDWIGE (returning). Some one is coming.

REGINA (to EDWIGE).
Come!
[Leaning upon OTBERT and EDWIGE, she takes a few steps towards the door. As she is about to pass through, she pauses and turns. To be sixteen and die, is horrible, When life can give us such great happiness! Otbert, I want to live! Oh, grant my prayer! Don't let the cold tomb separate us, love ' I'm horribly afraid of death! O life! I must have life! Can you not give it me?

OTBERT.
Yes! You shall live!

SCENE IV

[REGINA exits with EDWIGE. The door closes: OTBERT seems to follow her with his eyes and continues to speak with her although she has disappeared.
What! Die? So young and fair! No! Though damnation be the price of life For you, the price I'll pay, and you shall live! [Perceives GUANHUMARA, who has been standing for some time, motionless, at back of stage. You are the one I want. I need you. Come!

GUANHUMARA.
Go — go your way!

OTBERT. No; hear me!

GUANHUMARA.
Hear you ask About your family, your country. Well! Suppose I do not know? The reason why Your youth was passed in gaunt exile with me? If your true name is Otbert, or Yorglii? If't was in Corsica I found you, naked And alone, searching for life, or if It was Moldavia? Why, I made you come Into this castle? Why I came myself And found you, yet forbade all recognition? Why, although Regina's touched our tyrant's heart, I keep this chain around my neck, and why, Where’er I go, as if bound by a vow, I always wear this ring? If I am Slav, Or Corsican, or Jew, or Moor? I’ll tell You nothing. Go! Denounce me if you will — But no! Although she gave you bitter food, You’ll not betray the one who fed you with Her life, — the only mother you have known. And after all, what hurt could death give me? [She tries to pass: he stops her.

OTBERT.
‘T is nothing of myself I’d ask you now. You, who know everything, Regina —

GUANHUMARA.
Will Be dead within a month. [Tries to go; he detains her.

OTBERT.
Can you not save Her?

GUANHUMARA. Save her? What is she to me? [Dreamily, speaking to herself.’] Ah, yes! In India I wandered through the woods At night, in unknown depths, a hideous thing, Livid and terrible e’en to the beasts. I searched for herbs, for poisons, philtres strange, Which make the dead alive, and living dead!

OTBERT.
Speak! Can you save her?

GUANHUMARA.
Yes.

OTBERT.
For sake of pity, For God’s sake who now hears us, and for mine, — For me, who kiss your feet with tears, — you will?

GUANHUMARA. Will I? Suppose, a few moments ago, When you looked into your Regina’s eyes, Suppose your enemy, Hatto, had come Upon you suddenly like a wild storm, And, laughing with inhuman rage, had pierced Her palpitating heart with his cold steel And thrown her tender body to the stream Which, like a tiger, howls and fumes below; Suppose he then took you with his red hands And led you to the neighbouring town, and bound You, broken-hearted as you were, with chains, And placed you, naked, in the trader’s mart To be insulted, bought and sold, — a slave; Suppose that you a soldier, born free-man, Were harnessed like a dog, to draw the ships That ply the River Tiber; and suppose After that fearful day life took no note Of you or him for nigh a hundred years, — When you had wandered, mad, from land to land, Throughout those awful years of slavery, And had come back, what would there be Within your heart? Speak now, and tell me that’

OTBERT.
Vengeance and murder and a thirst for blood.

GUANHUMARA. Well, I am vengeance! I am murder, too. I am the thirst for blood! Blind spectre of The Past, unerringly I march unto My goal. And what is this you ask of me? You want me to have pity, to save life, To feel a human kindness — paugh! You make Me laugh. You say you need me. Have a care! What if I should need you? Do not grow pale. What if I brought you up unto this end? What if I’ve tried to shun you for your sake, Because I shrink before your innocence? You, in your turn, O child whom I would spare, Must shrink from rousing memories of my wrongs, Must leave me to my solitude and death. Well, now! At last you know my history! Was it not cruel? ‘T was the lover whom They killed. The woman — ah, I was the woman She was made a slave and sold Alas, she lived! The assassin — he lives too! You can help me. Indeed, I’ve suffered, — suffered long’ Oh, all The rains of heaven have fallen on my brow. I have grown hideous, like a beast, from pain. Tor sixty years I’ve lived on what makes weaker People die. Hunger, exile, and grief Have crushed me to the dust. I’ve seen the Nile, The Indus, seen the ocean and the storms, And the eternal nights of the North Pole. My chains have been embedded in my flesh. I, sick and frozen, — I, a woman, — have Been driven by my masters, with the lash. But it is over. There is nothing human In me now; and when I place my hand [Putting her hand on her heart. Here, nothing stirs. I am a statue and I live within a tomb. When, white and cold, I reached this castle just about at dusk One month ago, I wondered, ‘mid the storm, No fateful ear o’erheard my steps of stone. Well! I, who’ve slept with hate for sixty years, I hold my enemy within my power At last. Yea, in my grasp, and if I choose, This hour he dies. One word, he cowers at my feet; One step, and he is dead. Shall I repeat It twice? You are the one, the only one, Who can give me the vengeance that I want. But now that I have won the fearful chance, I say, “ No, no, it would be horrible!” I, who’ve gone down to hell, — I feel afraid. Don’t seek me. Do not tempt me. Keep away; For if there’s question of a pact with me, I’ll claim conditions that will make you blench! Speak! Will you draw your dagger from its sheath? Become a murderer — a headsman? Ah, You tremble! Go, weak heart and faltering arm! I have not sought you! Go; leave me alone!

OTBERT (pale, and lowering his voice). What do you ask of me?

GUANHUMARA.
Keep innocent And go —

OTBERT.
To save her, I will shed my blood.

GUANHUMARA.
Go! go!

OTBERT.
Commit a crime! Is that enough?

GUANHUMARA. He tempts me’ Demons, you hear witness that He tempted me. Well, I will not resist. I take you at your word, and you are mine! No matter what may happen. Do not waste Your time in prayers to me. My soul’s a hell Within whose livid depths all prayers are lost. I told you I am pitiless; I can Feel no remorse, except he should come back, — The man who died; Donato, whom I loved. Now listen for the last time, while you stand Upon the threshold of this awful task. I tell you all. There’s some one you must kill, — Kill, as one kills upon the scaffold. Kill, Here; when I will and whom I will, and have No mercy and no faltering. Do you hear?

OTBERT.

Go on!

GUANHUMARA. Each breath of this soft air is pushing Your fair Regina to her tomb. Without My help she dies; and if I will, she lives. You see this phial: just one drop of this, Each night, will bring life back to her.

OTBERT.
Good God Do you speak truly? Give it me!

GUANHUMAEA.
No, wait!
If, thanks to this, you see her come to you With life upon her lips, health in her eyes, A resurrected angel, happy woman, Then you belong to me!

OTBERT (beside himself).
My God! I do!

GUANHUMARA.
You swear it?

OTBERT.
Yes.

GUANHUMARA. So be it. Your Regina Shall be my surety, — shall be the forfeit If you break faith with me. I know this place; I am acquainted with its mysteries, And can go anywhere at any time.

OTBERT (holding out his hand for the phial). You promise me she'll live?

GUANHUMARA.
Think of your oath.

OTBERT.
She will be saved!

GUANHUMARA. Remember, in exchange I claim your soul.

OTBERT.
Take it and give —

GUANHUMARA.
‘T is mine!
[Gives him the phial.
Until to-morrow!

OTBERT.
Yes, until to-morrow.
[GUANHUMARA goes out.

OTBERT (alone). Thank you! No matter who you are or what you do, My blessings on you if Regina lives ‘ I’ll take this to her.
[Goes towards the small door, stops a moment and looks at phial.
Cheerfully I give Myself to hell to save my loved one’s life. [He exits hastily through the small door, which closes after him. From the opposite side, one hears laughter and singing, which gradually draws nearer. The large folding-door opens. The Princes and the Burgraves, led by HATTO, enter joyously; they are all crowned with flowers, dressed in silk and gold, without armour of any kind, and with glasses in their hands. They drink, laugh, talk in groups, among which pages are passing, bearing bottles full of wine, golden ewers, and platters laden with fruit. In the background are Halberdiers, motionless and silent. Musicians, clarions, trumpets, heralds.

SCENE V.

HATTO, GORLOIS, DUKE GERHARD OF THURINGEN; PLATON, Margrave of Moravia; GILISSA, Margrave of Lusatia; ZOAGLIO GIANNILARO, Genoese nobleman;

DARIUS, Burgrave of Lahneck; CADWALLA, Burgrave of Okenfels; LUPUS, Count of Mons (a very young man, like GORLOIS). Other Burgraves and Princes; some dumb personages, among others UTHER, pen- dragon of the Bretons, and the brothers of HATTO and, of GORLOIS. A few women handsomely dressed. Pages, halberdiers, captains.

COUNT LUPUS (singing).
“The winter’s cold, the wind is high, The snow the mountain covers: What matters that, since we can love? What matters snow to lovers?
“My mother is dead; our family priest Eternal grief discovers: What matters that, since we can love! What matters grief to lovers?
“Beelzebub outside my door, With all his demons, hovers; What matters that, since we can love What matters hell to lovers ‘(“

MARGRAVE GILISSA (leaning from, the side window, to COUNT LUPUS).
One sees the portal and the winding path From here.

MARGRAVE PLATON (examining the general dilapidation of the place). What dreariness and what decay!

DUKE GERHARD (to HATTO).
‘T is like a castle tenanted by ghosts.

HATTO (indicating door of tower).
My grandfather is there!

DUKE GERHARD.
Is he alone?

HATTO.
No, with my father.

MARGRAVE PLATON.
How did you contrive To rid yourself of them?

HATTO.
They’d had their day. Besides, their minds are troubled. ‘T is two weeks Since the old man has spoken. Old age must Give way! He’s near a hundred. Well, they ‘re gone, And I am in their place.

GIANNILARO.

They left, themselves?

HATTO.
Well, not exactly —— [A CAPTAIN enters.
What is it?

CAPTAIN (to HATTO)
My lord The jeweller Perez’ ransom is not paid.

HATTO.
Let him be hung!

CAPTAIN.
The citizens of Linz, Much frightened, beg for quarter.

HATTO.
Pillage them.
‘T is conquered territory.

CAPTAIN.
Those of Rhens?

HATTO.
Those pillage too! — [THE CAPTAIN goes out.

BURGRAVE DARIUS (glass in hand, turning to HATTO).
Your wine is good, Marquis.
[Drinks.

HATTO.
My faith ‘ it ought to be. It’s ruddy wine. Bingen, afraid and anxious to conciliate me, Sends me two tuns a year.

DUKE GEKHABD.
She’s beautiful, —
Regina, your betrothed.

HATTO.
Ah, well! We use What we have got. On the maternal side She is related to the family.

DUKE GERHARD.
She’s ill.

HATTO.
It’s nothing.

GIANNILARO (low to DUKE GERHARD).
She is dying.

GERHARD.
Ah!
[Enter CAPTAIN.

CAPTAIN (low to HATTO). The merchants will pass here to-morrow.

HATTO (aloud).
Good!
Go; lie in wait for them.
[CAPTAIN exits. HATTO continues, turning to the Princes.
My father would Be there with them. I stay at home. Once we Were warriors; now we amuse ourselves. Once it was force, now it is stratagem. The traveller curses me; the traveller says “ Hatto and his wild brothers lead a life Most terrible within that gloomy place Which furious tempests lash continually. Hatto gives feasts to margraves, dukes, and counts. His princely guests are served by princely slaves, Who humbly kiss the dust beneath his feet.” My faith! it’s a fine life. I’m feared and envied, I laugh always; my dungeon settles all. Waiting for hell, I make a paradise Of life. I let my bandits loose as huntsmen Let loose their dogs. I revel in my life. You saw that my betrothed is beautiful. How is’t with you? Do you intend to wed The Countess Isabel?

DUKE GERHARD. No, I do not!

HATTO.
You took her city from her, the last year, And promised to espouse her.

DUKE GERHARD.
Possibly.
They made me swear it on the Bible, too, I think. But I — I kept the city and I left The girl. — [He laughs.

HATTO (laughing).
What said the diet?

DUKE GERHARD (laughing).
It was dumb.

HATTO.
And your oath, on the Bible.

DUKE GERHARD.
Bah'
[Some moments before this, the door of the tower has been opened, revealing several steps of a gloomy staircase, on which two old men are discovered. One is a little more than sixty years old, his hair is grey, his beard is grey; the other, very much older, is almost entirely bald and has a long white beard; both wear a cuirass of steel, with armour on legs and arms; a long sword at their sides, and over their soldier dress, the oldest one wears a white robe lined with gold cloth; the other one a great wolf-skin, whose jaws are adjusted on his head. Behind the older man, a squire stands as if petrified; he has a white beard, is dressed in armour, and holds a large black banner, without any device, above the old man's head. OTBERT, with his eyes cast down, stands near the older man; he is somewhat in the background, and the old man rests his right arm, on him. In the shadow, behind each of the old knights, two squires are visible. They are dressed in armour like their masters, and are not less old than they; long white beards flow from the visors which are pulled down from their helmets. On cushions of scarlet velvet the squires hold the helmets of the two old men; they are of extraordinary shape, and their crests are formed of the jaws of fantastic animals. The two old men listen in silence; the younger leans his chin upon his two hands joined on the handle's point of an immense Scotch axe. The guests, busily talking together, have not perceived them.

SCENE VI.

The same. JOB, MAGNUS, OTBERT. MAGNUS.
There was A time when oaths, made in old Germany, Were like our armour and our arms, — of steel. I think of it with pride, as something solid, And lustrous to the eye, which direst battle Could never shatter, which was made to match The man in spirit, and hugged fast to pillow By the most noble, while he slept; which dim And rusty, still was strong and to be feared. When a proud noble died and was interred, His armour covered him not half so well As his unbroken word; that, time and death, Which rots the fairest steel must leave untouched. But now faith, honour, and our pledged word Follow the giddy fashions of the day. They 're made of tinsel, silk. The strongest vow, With witnesses or not, will last about As long as lasts a handsome doublet, more Or less, — most often less; is soon worn out And cast aside as are the ragged garments Which give offence because they 're out of style. [As MAGNUS speaks, all look around at him with consternation. Sudden silence among the guests.

HATTO (bowing to the old man).
My father —

MAGNUS.
You young fellows make much noise. Leave the old men alone in their grim night. Your glaring torches hurt their tired eyes. We men of old clashed swords. You children clash Your glasses, — but let it be far from us.

HATTO.
My lord —
[At this moment he perceives all the portraits are turned face to the wall.

What’s this? [To MAGNUS.] Your pardon, who has dared — These portraits, my ancestors, what bold hand Has turned them thus?

MAGNUS.
I did.

HATTO.
You did?

MAGNUS.
Yes, I.

HATTO.
My father —

DUKE GERHARD (to HATTO). ‘T is a jest.

MAGNUS (to HATTO).
I turned them thus, That they might not see their descendants’ shame.

HATTO (furious). For a less insult Barbarossa killed His great-uncle Louis. And if you go Too far —

MAGNUS (turning his head half way to HATTO). Some one has spoken Barbarossa’s name Some one, I think, praised this barbarian. Before me, let none dare to speak his name!

COUNT LUPUS (laughing). What did he do to you, old man?

MAGNUS.
My sires, Veil, veil your eyes! What did he do to me, My masters? Little Count of Mons, ‘t was you Who asked me, was it not? Go down the Rhine; Start from the lake and go to the Seven Mountains, Counting all the proud castles on the way Which are in ruins! What he did to me? He took our daughters, sisters, and he made Them slaves; he built imperial gallows on Our rocks, and built them with the stones of our Ancestral halls; upon us he made war And carnage and assault unto the death; He put a slave’s yoke on our noblest men, — That’s what he did to me, and what he did To you! For thirty years we’ve borne with fire And exile, chains, indignities; with wrongs And tortures, dungeons, death, — all from this man, This Caesar, the invincible. From him We’ve suffered everything. Good God! like Jews, Like slaves, we have endured these infamies, This one eternal victory; and now Our sons, degraded, don’t remember it.

All bowed before him. When this Frederic, A mass of gold from crested head to heel, Surged from the top of some breach, all afire.

And cast his gauntlet in the teeth of our Entire army, not one man had strength To face him; they all shook with fear, and fled.

My father —— [Indicating the, old man.

Yes, my father who stands here, Alone had courage, when he met this god In a small passage face to face, to bar His way and with a red-hot iron to brand His right hand with the mark of a trefoil. O memories, O time, — all, all is past’ The lightning’s disappeared from our dazed eyes. The baron lords are gone. The ruins strew The fields; of all the forest there remains But one great oak; — [Bowing before the old man.

And that great oak is you, My father most revered. — [Straightening himself up.

Accursed be The name of Barbarossa, name abhorred! Our crests lie underneath the moulding earth, Our Rhine, dishonoured river, flows by naught But savage ruins. We shall be avenged! ‘T will be my lot, my task! Without compunction Or mercy, pity, shame, — on him if he’s Alive, or on his race, — my hate shall fall. God keep me from the tomb ‘til this is done! God keep me living ‘til we are avenged. To taste that awful, that unequalled joy, I’d lift my arms from out my tomb and seize My prey! To come back to the earth and end This holy task, I’d burst the bonds of death. Oh, be God willing or be he adverse, Whatever gate shuts down upon my soul, Let it be heaven or hell, with dauntless heart I’ll burst it with my fist of iron —

[Interrupts himself and remains silent.

Alas!

What say I, — wretched, hopeless, weak old man?

[He falls into a deep reverie, and does not appear to notice anything around him. Little by little, the guests resume their laughter and gaiety. The two old men seem like statues. Wine circulates, and the revellers resume their jests.

HATTO (low to DUKE GERHARD, indicating the old men, and shrugging his shoulders).
Age has disturbed their mind.

GORLOIS (low to COUNT LUPUS, indicating HATTO).
The day will come When father will resemble them, and I
Will be like him.

HATTO (to DUKE GERHARD). The soldiers are devoted To them, that is the worst.
[In the mean time GORLOIS and some pages have gone towards the window and are looking outside. Suddenly GORLOIS turns around.

GORLOIS.
Father, look there!
See that old man with the white beard!

COUNT LUPUS (running to the window).
How old!
How slowly he ascends the winding path!
His brow is bent.

GIANNILARO (approaching). How tired he looks!

COUNT LUPUS.
The wind Blows lustily through his old cloak.

GOKLOIS.
It looks As though he meant to ask for shelter here.

MARGRAVE GILISSA. He’s a poor beggar!

BURGRAVE CADWALLA. Or a spy.

BURGRAVE DARIUS.
Away!

HATTO (at the window). Let the old wretch be chased away at once, With stones!

LUPUS, GORLOIS, AND PAGES (throwing stones). Off with you, dog'

MAGNUS (awakening with a start).
Almighty God! In what age are we living, and what men Are these we call our sons! To stone like this A poor old man, who totters to our door!
[Looking at them all. In my day we had follies like the rest: We sang, we feasted, we were young, like you.
But if an old man, bent with age and pain, Came unto us, with out-stretched hand, to beg, Whether we were in midst of revel, feast, Or song; we stopped, we filled a casque with money, And we gave him wine, because, who knows? ofttimes Beggars are sent by God. Then we resumed Our revels, while the old man went his way, His feeble hands cheered with the touch of gold, His sad heart warmed with wine. That's what we did.
Compare to that what you have done just now.

JOB (straightening himself up, taking one step forward, and touching the shoulder of MAGNUS). Young man, be still. In my time, at our feasts We drank and sang much gayer songs than you. We used to sit around an entire ox Served on a dish of gold; but if, by chance, A beggar, an old man in rags, passed by, An escort went to meet him; when he came, The clarions burst forth, the barons rose, The young men ceased to sing or speak or smile; They bowed themselves before him humbly, though They might be princes of the Holy Empire. The old men stretched their hands to him, and said, " Accept a welcome here, my lord."
[To GORLOIS.] GO you And bring the stranger up.

HATTO (bowing). But —

JOB (to HATTO).
Silence!

DUKE. GERHARD.
My lord —

JOB (to DUKE GERHARD). Who dares to speak when I have said “ Be still!”
[All fall back in silence. GORLOIS obeys him and exits.

OTBERT (aside). Good, Count! You, grand old lion, look with shame On these poor tiger-cats God gave to you For sons. But if they goad you on too far, Set up your lion’s mane and make them blench.

GORLOIS (re-entering, to JOB). He’s coming up, your lordship.

JOB (to those princes who have remained sitting’).
Rise! All rise’
[To his sons.] Gather around me.
[To GORLOIS.] Here!
[To the heralds and trumpeters.] Now, clarions, blow! Blow loud, as though you were to greet a king! [Flourishes. The Burgraves and the Princes stand on the left. All the sons and grandsons of JOB stand around him on the right. Halberdiers are in the background holding the banner high. Through the centre door enters a beggar, who seems almost as old as COUNT JOB. His white beard descends to his stomach; he wears a hooded robe of brown drugget, which is in rags; a large brown cloak full of rents; his head is bare; around his waist he wears a cord from which hangs a large rosary; his naked feet are corded. When he reaches the top of the sixth step, he stands motionless, leaning upon a long, knotted stick. The Halberdiers salute him with the banner and the clarions blow fresh flourishes. GUANHUMARA has appeared before this, on the upper story of the promenade, and has watched the entire scene.

SCENE VII.

The same. A BEGGAR.

JOB (standing among his children, to THE BEGGAR, motionless upon the threshold). Whoever you may be, have you e'er heard That in Taunus, between Cologne and Spire, There stands a rock tremendous, by whose side Tall mountains look like hills; upon this rock Built on a heap of lava stands a burg Whose master is redoubted o'er the earth? Has it been told you that this lawless man, Tainted with crime, renowned for valiant deeds, By Frankfurt diet and the Pisan council Thrust from the Holy Empire and the church, Was chastised, hunted, ostracized, yet still Kept on his mountain-top and held his own? He waged a tireless war, with never halt Nor quarter, ‘gainst the Elector Palatine, And ‘gainst the Archbishop of Treves? With bold, Unerring foot pushed back, for sixty years, The ladder which the Empire tried to rest Against his wall? Has it been told you that The brave man always finds a shelter there? That this proud burgrave makes the rich man poor And of the mightiest makes slaves; that now, High overhead of all the dukes and kings And emperors, in face of Germany All bruised and torn and bleeding from their broils, He floats upon his tower, in sign of hate Of grim defiance and of bold appeal To the enchainéd people, a black flag, Whose gloomy folds sweep out rebellious ‘gainst The wild destruction of the storms? Has it Been told you that he's near his hundredth year;
That, braving God and man unto the last, He claims, since he ascended to his lair, Not wars which have burned castles all around, Not Caesar furious, nor almighty Rome, Not years, which crush all men beneath their weight, Have ever vanquished, bent, or broken him, This Titan, excommunicated Job?
Did you know that?

THE BEGGAR. I did.

JOB.
You ‘re at his home. Welcome, my lord. I'm Job, called the accursed.
[Indicating MAGNUS. This is my son, here at my feet; and these Are sons of his, much less in size than we. Thus hope often betrays us. My good sword, My father left me. It has won for me A name of terror. In my mother's right I hold this castle D'Heppenheff. Name, sword, And castle, all belong to you, my guest. Now, in your turn, speak loud and free to us.

THE BEGGAR. Lords, counts, and princes! Also you, O slaves I enter and salute you, and I say If everything’s at peace within your souls, If nothing, when you think of actions past Troubles your hearts, pure as the sky is pure, Live, laugh, and sing; but, otherwise, at once Direct your thoughts to God. Young men, old men, You crowned with flowers and you crowned with years, If underneath God’s sky you do base deeds, Look well before you and be grave. Our days Are short and full of strange uncertainties.
Age conies to few: to most opens the tomb.
Young men, so proud of being young and strong, Think of the old. Old men, remember death!
Love the sweet law of hospitality;
For when we turn a stranger from our door, Do we know who he is, or whence he conies?
Were you all kings, you should respect the poor.
For God, who with a single breath lays low The pines which have withstood a hundred years, Can also fill with lightning and with storm The hand the beggar hides beneath his rags.

PART II.

THE BEGGAR.

SCENE. — Hall of Panoplies. To the left a door. In the background a gallery with apertures, through which the sky is visible. Plain walls of basalt. General appearance rude and severe. Complete suits of armour set up against the pillars. As the curtain rises, THE BEGGAR is discovered leaning on his staff, in the front of the stage; his eyes are fixed on the ground, and he seems the prey of sorrowful thoughts.

SCENE I.

THE BEGGAR (alone). The hour is come to strike the fateful blow! All might be saved: but we must risk it all. What matters it, if God be on my side!

O — Germany, my country, how thy sons Have fallen! In what state, I find thee now, After my weary exile. Philip dead, And Ladislas a fugitive, and they Have poisoned Henry. With an easy mind They sold Richard the Lion-Hearted just As they would sell Achilles. Fearful fall!

Complete decadence! Unity is lost.

The bonds which held the States are loosening.

In this land, once the home of bravest men, I — I — see Lorrainers, Flemish, Saxons, Franks, Moravians, and Bavarians; but of Germans, Not one! Adepts these men are in their arts. It's for the monk to sing, the priest to preach, It's for the page to bear his master's lance.

For lord barons to rob, for kings to sleep.

Those who've not learned to rob, can only groan, And tremblingly, as in the Salic days, Kneel at a shrine and kiss its relics. Bah!

All men are either brutes or cowards, vile Or cruel. The Elector Palatine As carver, has the first voice after Treves, He sells it. Unrespected goes the truce Of lords. Bohemia's king is Slav; he is Elector. Every man is bound to stretch To his full stature. Horrors everywhere, And violence, and force the only right!

The sock is trampled into lance of steel, While scythes forsake the harvest fields for war.

Incendiarism's in the air. The tramp Who passes singing by the cottage door Conceals his flint and steel beneath his cloak.

The Vandals own Berlin, — most fearful sight!

The Pagans are at Dantzic. The Moguls At Breslau. All these horrors crowd themselves Persistently upon my aching brain.

Oh, shame! There is no money. All is dead, —

The country, cities, and surrounding lands!

How will the Strasburg spire be raised? By whom The banner of the towns be borne? By Jews, Who have grown rich out of our civil war.

Oh, degradation! Sorrow! This empire Leaned on great pillars once, — on Guelders, Cleves, On Holland, Luxemburg, Juliers. All gone!

We have no Poland, no more Lombardy.

Our only help against a bold attack Is Ulm and Augsbourg, — homes of bad church-men.

The work of Charlemagne and pious Othon Exists no more. Our eastern frontier's lost.

The counts of Alsace claim Upper Lorraine, And Lower is possessed by Counts Louvain. No more Teutonic order. At Gauvain There are but eight and twenty cavaliers, One hundred men-at-arms, and Denmark threatens, While England agitates her Ghibelines And Guelfs; Lorrainers are all traitors. Brabant grows, and fire is smouldering at Turin, lie's strong, Philip Augustus; Genoa Demands a price; the interdict hangs still. The Holy Father, seated on his throne, Uncertain, haughty, dreams away, in Rome. And not one leader — God! at such a time. The mad electors crown whoever pays; They fight each other, digging their own graves. And as a victim, bleeding, must succumb When four strong horses rend his limbs apart, So these electors let four emperors From Ratisbonne to Anvers, and Lubeck To Spire, dismember our great empire. God! O Germany — poor Germany! Alas! [His head falls on his breast; he slowly exits through the back. OTBERT, who entered an instant before, follows him with his eyes. THE BEGGAR disappears under the arches of the gallery. Suddenly OTBERT'S face brightens with joy and surprise. REGINA appears on the side opposite where THE BEGGAR went out; she is radiant with happiness and health.

SCENE II.

OTBERT, REGINA.

OTBERT.
Regina! Is it possible? 'T is you!

REGINA.
Yes, dear Otbert! I speak, I breathe, I live! My feet have life in them. My lips have smiles. I'm free from suffering, full of vigour new; I live, I'm happy, I belong to you.

OTBERT (gazing at her).
Oh, joy!

REGINA.
I slept last night in such great calm. If aught stirred in my brain, 't was thought of you! What a sweet sleep! without a single pain. And when the morning sun awoke me, love, It was a birth into another world. The sparrows' cheerful song fell on my ear; The flowers unclosed their leaves so ardently I felt them breathe. My soul had sympathy For everything with voice, for everything With life, and tears fell from my happy eyes. I cried to the sweet birds, to the sweet flowers " 'T is I, O dear companions, it is I!" Otbert, I love you!
[Throws herself into his arms; she draws the phial from her breast.
Your elixir 's life. You've cured me, won me from Death's arms, Otbert; Now save me from Hatto's!

OTBERT.
I will, my love! My beauty, my Regina! Oh, my joy ' I will not leave my work undone. But do Not praise me. I am nothing; neither good Nor virtuous nor strong. I’ve naught but love. You live, and life begins also for me! You live: my soul is born again like yours. Look in my eyes. God! you are beautiful. Is ‘t true you do not suffer any more?

REGINA.
The pain is truly gone, forever gone!

OTBERT.
My God, I thank you!

REGINA.
I thank you, Otbert! [They remain clasped in each, other’s arms for an instant;
then REGINA draws herself away. Our good Count Job expects me. Oh, my king, I only came to say I loved you. Now, I’ll go. Good-bye!

OTBERT. Come back.

REGINA.
Yes, by-and-by, But I must hurry now; he waits for me. — (Exits.

OTBERT (falling on his knees, and lifting his hands to heaven).
I thank thee, God in heaven. She is saved!
[GUANHUMARA appears up stage.

SCENE III.

OTBERT, GUANHUMARA.

GUANHUMARA (placing her hand on OTBERT’S shoulder). Well.

OTBERT (with horror). Guanhumara!

GUANHUMARA. Are you satisfied? You see, I kept my promise.

OTBERT.
I’ll keep mine.

GUANHUMARA.
Without relenting?

OTBERT.
Without weakness. Then — [Aside.’] I’ll kill myself.

GUANHUMARA.
You will be waited for To-night at twelve.

OTBERT. Where?

GUANHUMARA.
By the tower which floats The black flag.

OTBERT.
‘T is a ghastly place. No one Dares go there. It is said the rock is marked —

GUANHUMARA. With blood. It creeps from out a window which O’erhangs the torrent.

OTBERT (with horror).
Blood? It’s blood, you say? Blood burns and stains forever!

GUANHUMARA.
No, it cleans;
It quenches thirst!
Alone and masked.

OTBERT. What orders to your slave? Whom shall I find there?

GUANHUMARA.
You will find a man.

OTBERT. What then?

GUANHUMARA.
You’ll follow him.

OTBERT.
‘T is well!
[GUANHUMARA violently seizes the dagger which OTBERT wears at his belt; she draws it out and fixes a terrible look on its blade, then lifts her eyes to heaven.

GUANHUMARA. O mighty skies! Mysterious depths! Great fecund ocean of eternal blue! Night, calm, majestic, sad, serene! You, whom I clung to through my long exile, You, link of my old chain, my faithful friend, Bear witness now! And you, walls, castle, oaks, Which lend your shade to hide vindictive steps, Listen to me! To this avenging knife I dedicate the life of Fosco, lord Of forests, rocks, and fields; as dark as you, O night! as old as you, great oaks!

OTBERT.
Who is This Fosco?

GUANHUMARA. By your hand he dies to-night.
[Giving back dagger.
Farewell, till midnight!
[She goes out through the gallery at the back, and does not see JOB and REGINA, who come in from the opposite side.

OTBERT (alone).
Pity me, my God!

SCENE IV.

OTBERT, REGINA, JOB.

REGINA (enters running, then goes back to COUNT JOB, who is following slowly). Yes, I can run! My lord, look! see! I can — [Approaches OTBERT who seems to be yet listening to the last words of GUANHUMARA; he has not seen them come in. Otbert, we ‘re here!

OTBERT (starting from his reverie).
My lord and countess! Yes!

JOB.
This morning, heavier than usual, grief Oppressed me. What the beggar said last night Flashed every moment through my weary brain. [To REGINA.] I thought of you almost in Death’s cold arms, Of your sweet mother, whose pale shadow haunts This place —
[To OTBERT.] When suddenly into my room, Fresh, rosy, sparkling eyes and radiant brow, She bursts, this girl — my child. A miracle! I laugh, I weep. I tremble for great joy. “ Come thank Sir Otbert,” she exclaims; and I — I answer, “ Let us run to thank him. Come!” We crossed the whole deserted castle —

REGINA (gaily).
And —
We’ve run to you —

JOB (to OTBERT). What mystery is this? Regina’s health restored? Quick, tell me all! Whence did you get the power to save her? Speak!

OTBERT.
It was a philtre sold me by a slave.

JOB.
From this day forth that slave is free. I give Him fields and vines, one hundred livres in gold;
I pardon all our men condemned to death;
I grant the franchise to a thousand peasants Whom our Regina shall select. [He takes their hands.
My heart Will burst with joy — [Looking at them tenderly.

‘T is happiness enough For me to look at you!
[He takes a few steps forward and seems lost in a sombre reverie.
‘T is true, I am accursed! I’m old, alone, and sad. I hide myself Down in the dungeon of my sires, and there Dejected, dumb, and lost, I sit and watch The shadows hemming in my loneliness. Life is so dark! I turn my glance afar O’er Germany and find nothing but hate, But tyrants, butchers, steeped in wine or blood. Poor country! whom a thousand arms push down The precipice, where it must lodge at last, Unless God lets some giant soul go by Who will have pity and will hold it back. My country tortures me! As to my race, My children, and my home, all’s evil, hate, And wrong. Hatto against Magnus, and Gorlois Against Hatto. The whelp defiant snarls And gnashes at the wolf. My race makes me Afraid. It makes me look into myself, Into my life! I blench before it, God! Such a revolting mask wears every act Which memory calls up from out my soul. Yes, dark — all dark! My country’s rent by demons; I have begotten monsters, and black spectres Haunt my dark soul. When my gaunt eye grows sick Of gazing on this waste, this triple night, And vainly seeking God and God’s daylight, Dares to escape the desert, where I dream, I need to see you, holy rays of sun, You saints, who hover merciful near hell, You children, shining with the grace of life, You brave young man, you pure and radiant girl, Who, when you turn your virgin eyes on me, Are like two angels bringing peace to Satan.

OTBERT (aside).
Sorrow!

REGINA. Alas! my lord.

JOB.
Come! let me clasp You both close to my heart.
[To OTBERT, looking at him tenderly. Your glance is true: One knows you would be faithful to an oath, — As faithful as the eagle to the sun, As is the steel unto the magnet. Yes, All that he promises, this boy will do. [To REGINA.] Is it not so?

REGINA.
I owe my life to him.

JOB.
Before my fall, I was like him, — as pure, As chaste, as true as is a virgin or An unfleshed sword! — [Goes to window.
Soft air, a smiling sun, Give new assurance to the sinking heart.
[Coming back to REGINA and indicating OTBERT. Look you, Regina, yon brave figure there Reminds me of a boy, my last born son. It seemed like pardon, when he came to me. ‘T is twenty years! A child to my old age, How great a gift! I stood beside his cradle Ceaselessly, e’en while he slept. I talked So gaily! We ‘re most foolish when we ‘re old. And nights, I held his blond head on my knee. You cannot know, for then you were not born. He prattled back those words which make us laugh. Not one year yet! Oh, he was very bright; He knew me always, — I can’t tell it all. He laughed; and I, old dotard that I was, With that sweet laughter drank in life’s sunshine. I thought to rear him great, a conqueror. I called him George. One day, — sad memory! — While he was playing in the fields — oh, when You are a mother never let your boy Play far from you — they took him from me! Jews! A woman! Why? To slaughter him, they said, Upon their Sabbath day. ‘T is twenty years, And yet I weep to-day, the same as then. I loved him so! He was my little king. I was quite mad with joy — quite drunk with joy. When his sweet hands played with my old grey beard, I felt as any soul must feel when heaven Is opening and celestial joys float down Upon it! That is all! It breaks my heart! [To OTBERT.] He would have been your age. He would have had Your noble brow! He would be innocent, Like you. I love you! Come, come to my arms! [GUANHUMARA has come in before this, and, has observed this scene from the back, without being seen. JOB presses OTBERT in a close embrace and weeps. Sometimes, in seeing you, I’ve said, “ ‘T is he!” By a strange fascinating miracle, Your eyes, your air, your voice, your ways, In bringing back this lost son to my soul, Make me remember and forget him too. Oh, be my son!

OTBERT. My lord!

JOB.
Yes, son. Hear me! You splendid boy, in love with truth and right, Child of nobody, orphan, without home, But with a great heart, filled with noble dreams, When I say, “ Young man, be my son,” to you, Do you know what I mean? All that I mean? [To OTBERT and REGINA.] I know. My children, listen. It is hard To pass long days with an old man whose face Is turned forever to the tomb; to live From dreary morn to evening in a cell When womanhood is beautiful and manhood Is supreme. Oh, it would be inhuman, Odious, and vile, if in that gloomy cell, In spite of the old man, whose eyes are dull One could not give a look or catch a smile! What I do mean is this: the old man sees, He knows what love is, and he bids you wed.

REGINA (beside herself with joy). Kind Heaven!

JOB (to REGINA). I'll complete your cure, my child!

OTBERT.
You say —

JOB (to REGINA). Your mother left you to my care. She was my niece. Alas! she is no more. I watched her die. And seven of my sons, I watched them die. They were my bravest sons.
Then George — they robbed me of my pretty boy! And my last wife, she died! I lost them all. That is the penalty of living long. We see death follow death, with certain law, Just as month follows month, while every year Brings new funereal garments to the home! But you, at least, Regina, shall be happy; You shall marry each other. It is right. Hatto would crush you, flower that you are! When your good mother died, I said to her, " Your daughter is my daughter. Have no fear. If need be, I will shed my blood for her!"

REGINA.
A good, kind father you have been to me.

JOB.
I promised it.
[To OTBERT). YOU, son, grow tall and rugged; Be a warrior. You've no possessions, But I will give for dowry to your bride My fief of Rammerberg, dependency Of Heppenheff. Go, seek your destiny As Nimrod did, and Caesar, and Pompey. I had two mothers, — one, a woman; one, A sword. I was the bastard of a count, And son legitimate of my own deeds. Do you, as I did. [Aside] All except the crimes. [Aloud.] Above all things, be honest and be brave I’ve thought about this marriage a long time. The free knight Job can well ally himself With Otbert, the free archer. I suppose You’ve said, “ I’ll have to live a wretched life, Condemned to be a page to the old count, A dog to the old lion, chained to him As long as he shall live.” Ah, no, my son!

I love you for your happiness, not mine.
Old men are not as selfish as you think.
Let us arrange it all. I fear Hatto.
We’ll have no words about it here. ‘T were death.
[Lowering his voice.
My tower has a passage to the moats. I keep the keys. Otbert, to-night, with guards You shall depart. The rest concerns yourselves.

OTBERT.
But —

JOB (smiling).
You refuse?

OTBERT.
To enter Paradise?
Oh, no!

JOB.
Then do not say another word. But do as I have bid you. When the sun Has set, you must depart in haste. I’m here To keep Hatto from going in pursuit. The marriage can take place at Caub — [GUANHUMARA, who has heard everything, goes out. JOB takes the arm of each within his own and looks at them tenderly.
And now, My lovers, tell me I have made you happy, Ere you leave me.

REGINA. My dear father, yes!

JOB.
I want a last word full of love from you. Think what my life will be, when you are gone!
When my dark past, grown heavier every hour, Surrounds me once again!

[To REGINA.] Alas! my child, Though we can silence memory sometimes, Its voice is never rendered dumb.
[To OTBERT.] I feel All will be well. I'll let Gunther, my chaplain, Go with you. Some day you'll come back to me. Restrain your tears for I need all my strength. You 're happy! You are lovers! You are young! What does it matter if an old man weeps? Take what life gives at twenty years. Good-bye! God surely will not let me suffer long. Wait for me here. Otbert, you know the door. I go to get the keys. I'll bring them here.
[He goes out through door on the left.

SCENE V.

OTBERT, REGINA.

OTBERT (watching him with bewilderment, as he goes out).
Heaven, kind Heaven, I do not understand!
Fly with Regina from this fearful place?
Oh, if I'm dreaming, lady, pity me, And do not wake me! Is it truly you?
You, angel, you belong to me? To-night?
Oh, let us fly at once ' God! if you knew.
There Eden radiant, and behind me, hell.
To fly to happiness! To fly from crime!

REGINA.
My love, what say you?

OTBERT.
Nothing. I will fly. My oath! Regina, love, I swore an oath! It does not matter. I'll escape. I'll fly! God, who is just, will judge me. He was kind. That old man is a saint. I love him! Yes, We'll fly! Come quickly; everything will help, I feel it! Nothing would have heart to bar The way to our sweet happiness!
[During the last moments, GUANHUMARA has come back through the gallery. She has brought HATTO, and with her finger points to OTBERT and REGINA who are locked in each other's arms. HATTO makes a sign, and behind him enter a crowd of Princes, Burgraves, and Soldiers. THE MARQUIS points to the two lovers, who, absorbed in each other, hear nothing and see nothing. When, with a start, OTBERT turns to go, drawing REGINA with him, HATTO bars the way. GUANHUMARA has disappeared.

SCENE VI.

OTBERT, REGINA, HATTO, MAGNUS, GORLOIS, the Bur- graves, Princes, GIANNILARO, Soldiers, afterwards THE BEGGAR, afterwards JOB.

HATTO (to OTBERT).
Why not? REGINA.
Heavens! Hatto!

HATTO (to the Archers).
Seize that woman and that man!

OTBERT (drawing his sword and with a gesture stopping the Soldiers). My lord, you are a wretch! A traitor! Vile And base! I'd like to see if terror too Lies at the bottom of your recreant heart, Choked as it is with every hideous vice. Between ourselves, my marquis, I suspect You 're nothing but a coward; and these lords, Who doubtless are more brave than you, will see When I have struck the mask of valour off, A sickly hue of fear creep o'er your face. By her own sovereign choice, I speak for her, — Regina, noble, Countess of the Rhine. Prince, she refuses you and marries me. I challenge you to meet me on the sward Near to the Wisper, not three miles from here, With any weapon, single combat, now, Without delay, mercy, or quarter, face Uncovered, on the borders of the stream. Into the stream the vanquished will be thrown. We kill or die!
[REGINA faints; her women carry her off. OTBERT bars the way to the Archers who try to approach.

Beware! Let no one stir! I speak to all these lords. Pray, listen well. You princes, who unto this mount have come, Duke Gerhard, Sir Uther the pendragon of Brittany, Darius the Burgrave, And Burgrave Cadwalla, before you all I strike this baron in the face and claim, In order to chastise him for his crimes, The right of the free archers ‘gainst free counts. [He strikes his glove across HATTO’S face. THE BEGGAR enters, unnoticed among the crowd.

HATTO.
I’ve let you talk!
[Low to ZOAGLIO GIANNILARO, who stands near him in the crowd of Princes.
My sword is trembling yet, Giannilaro, in its sheath.
[To OTBERT.] NOW, sir, For you! Who may you be, my daring friend? Speak! Are you son to king or sovereign, duke Or margrave, that you dare defy me thus? Come! Let us hear your name, — if you know it! You call yourself Otbert, Archer —
[To Lords] He lies! [To OTBERT.] YOU lie! Your name is not Otbert. I know From whence you come, whose family you are, What you are worth! Your name, my master, is Yorghi,— ‘t is Yorghi Spadaceli, and you Are not so much as noble. Come, I know! Your sire was Corsican, your mother Slav. You ‘re but a cheat! A slave, son of a slave! Away!
[To nobles.’] My lords, we’ve many princes here.
If they will stand by him, I’ll fight them all.
Firm foot, at any place, at any time, Two daggers to the hand and naked breast.
[To OTBERT.] But you, presumptuous brigand, Corsican, Escaped from apes, throw your gloves to the valets!

OTBERT.
You wretch!

THE BEGGAR (talcing one step toward HATTO). Marquis, I’m ninety-two years old, But I’ll stand up against you! Ho! A sword!
[He throws away his staff and takes a sword from one of the panoplies suspended on the wall.

HATTO (bursting into a laugh). A fool was lacking to this feast, my lords! Behold him! From whence comes the churl? We've jumped from gipsy to a beggar! Well! What is your name?

THE BEGGAR. 'T is Frederic of Suabia, German Emperor!

MAGNUS. 'T is Barbarossa! [Surprise and stupefaction. Everybody moves and forms a sort of circle around THE BEGGAR, who disengages a cross which is suspended around his neck and holds it up, in his right hand; his left rests on the sword, whose point sticks into the ground.

THE BEGGAR. Behold the cross of Charlemagne!
[All eyes are fixed upon the cross; moment of silence. He continues.
Yes, I!
Lord of the mountain whereon I was born, King of the Romans and crowned emperor, Sword-bearer to almighty God, and King Of Burgundy and Aries. The holy tomb Where great Charles slept, unworthy, I profaned. I've made atonement for it. Twenty years On bended knees I've wept, despaired, and prayed, Within a desert, living on the herbs Of nature and the dews from heaven. I was A phantom horrible to all who saw.
The whole world thought me lost among the dead, But in those depths I heard my country call. I left behind my chosen solitudes. For high should every patriot stand to-day. Who here can recognize me?

MAGNUS (approaching).
Show your arm, You Roman Caesar!

THE BEGGAR. Yes, the trefoil's there Which one of you burnt on it.
[Holds out his arm to MAGNUS. Look!
[MAGNUS bends over and examines THE BEGGAR'S arm carefully, then straightens himself up.

MAGNUS (to spectators).
It is!
Since I have recognized him, I will speak. 'T is Emperor Frederic Barbarossa!

ALL.
Ah!
[Surprise is at its height; the circle grows larger. THE EMPEROR, leaning on the great sword, turns towards the guests and fixes a terrible glance on them.

THE EMPEROR. You've heard my steps before within these vales, When golden spurs clanked on my heels. Look well, And recognize the master, O burgraves, Who subjugated Europe, gave new birth To Othon's Germany and made her queen; Whom three sovereigns in Mersebourg, two popes In Rome, made supreme judge, because he was An honest noble and good emperor;
I who gave a crown to Suénon, the tiara Unto Victor, and with the sceptre touched Their brows; who overthrew the Hermann's throne;
Who subjugated in Icóne and Thrace, The cailiff Arslau, Isaac emperor;
Who, Genoa, Pisa, Milan keeping down, Suppressing wars and cries and treacheries and rage, Held all the hundred towns of Italy In his large hand. He is the one who speaks, Who rises up before you now!
[Takes a step forward; all fall back. I've known How to track wolves. I've known how to judge kings.
I've had the chiefs of seven Lombardian cities Hung. I have broken through ten thousand halberds With which Albert the Bear defied my will!
My footsteps are in every road. My hands Dismembered Henry's kingdom, took away His duchies, provinces, and with the wreck Made fourteen princes. Yes, for forty years, With iron fingers I've been pulling down Your Rhenish towers, stone by stone. Bandits, Yon recognize me! Now I come to say That I feel pity for my country's state, That I intend to blot you from the earth And blow your shameful ashes to the winds.
[Turns to the Archers. Your soldiers understand me. They are mine. I count on them. They shared my glory ere They shared your shame. 'T was under me They served before our land was blighted, and They've not forgotten their old emperor. Am I not right, my veterans, comrades, friends?
[To the Burgraves.] Ah, wretches, recreants, ravagers of homes!
My death gave life to you. Well, touch and hear And see, 't is I!
[Taking long strides among them; all fall back. No doubt you think yourselves Brave cavaliers! You 're saying, under breath, " We 're sons of barons and great noblemen; We continue the race!" Continue it? Your fathers, great in mind as well as size, Fought in great wars. They made great marches, leaped O'er bridges, which the enemy broke down; Dared pike-men, squadrons; music at their head, And clarions blowing, faced a world entire, And held their own. However high the castle, Mountain, they could take the strongest tower With a mere wooden ladder, bending 'neath Their weight and braced against defended walls, Whence sulphur rained down. Yes, on a cord, These warriors, more like fiends than men, have rocked In the abysses, while the night winds lashed Their bodies 'gainst the jagged rocks. If any Blamed these night assaults, the captains bold Threw their defiance at the Emperor And waited, one 'gainst twenty, in the shade For day to come and bring their sovereign.

'T was thus they gained their castles, cities, lands.

So well they fought, that after twenty years When eyes looked 'round to see how things had changed, Behold! small men were dukes, great men were kings.

But you, like jackals and like vultures, hid Behind the copse, behind the osier-trees, Vile, silent, crouching, dagger in your hand, Dreading the bite of every vagrant dog;

You lie in wait, sunk in some loathsome marsh, Close to those roads considered dangerous For sound of footstep or for bell of mule. You go a hundred strong to rob one man; Then, with your booty, fly back to your rock. Do you dare call yourselves your fathers' sons, — Your fathers, strong among the strong, and great Among the greatest? They were conquerors, While you are only robbers'

[The Burgraves bow their heads with humiliation, indignation, and terror. He continues.

Had you hearts, Could you be made to feel, I'd say to you, " You are too infamous." What moment, cowards, Do you choose to follow this great business? Speak! Good God! You choose the hour when Germany Expires! What ignominy! Wicked sons, You rob your mother as she gasps for life. She weeps, and lifting high her stiffening arms, Cries with the breath that rattles in her throat, " Be cursed!" What she inaudibly has said, I say aloud. I am your emperor. I am no more your guest. I claim my rights, — Now, on the instant! Having scourged myself, I've come to wreak God's vengeance on you all. [He perceives the two Margraves, PLATON and GILISSA, and walks up to them. Lord of Moravia, Marquis of Lusatia, What do you on the borders of the Rhine? Is this your place? While with these bandits, here, You clash your glasses, in the East one hears The champ of war-steeds. Oriental hordes Stand at Vienna's gates. To the frontier, My lords! Move on! Remember bearded Henry, Ernest the Breast-plated! To the front! Away! We guard the battlements. You guard the moat.

[Perceiving ZOAGLIO GIANNILARO. Giannilaro, I'm not pleased to see You here. What do you want? Come, Genoese, Go back to Genoa! [To the Pendragon of Brittany.

And what wants he, Sir Uther? Bretons too? We seem to have All earth's adventurers here.

[To the two Margraves, PLATON and GILISSA.

Margraves, you pay One hundred thousand marks of fine.

[To COUNT LUPUS.] YOU 're young, But wickeder than young. You 're nothing now. Your city I make free!

[To DUKE GERHARD.] She lost her county, Countess Isabel. You were the thief. You go to Bale; the imperial chamber we Will convene there and publicly, my prince. You'll walk a mile, and in your arms carry A Jew!

[To the Soldiers.] Now liberate your prisoners, And link the cruel chains they've worn so long Around their master's neck.

[To the Burgraves.] 'T is a surprise? You had not counted on this resurrection? No! You spent your hours in feasts and wine and dance, You sang your songs, you shouted loud for joy, You gaily dug your nails into the flesh Of your poor victims! Yes, this nation which I love, you tore its limbs asunder, and Between your greedy selves, you parcelled out The palpitating spoils. But suddenly, To this lair of monstrosity, he comes, — The great avenger, furious and strong!

He scales the walls called inaccessible, And like an eagle, swoops upon his prey. [.All are dumb with consternation and terror. JOB has entered the hall during the speech, and has silently joined the crowd of nobles. MAGNUS alone has listened to THE EMPEROR without fear, and has looked fixedly at him the whole time. When BARBAROSSA has finished, MAGNUS looks at him once more from head to foot, then his countenance changes to a wild expression of joy and of fury.

MAGNUS (his eye fixed on THE EMPEROR). Yes, it is he indeed — alive!

[With a violent gesture he pushes aside Soldiers and Princes, goes up stage, with a single bound ascends the six steps of the staircase, with his two fists seizes hold of the battlements of the gallery, and cries to those outside with a voice of thunder.

What ho!
Treble your sentinels! Lift up the bridge!
Go, archers, to the turrets; slingers to The wings! Down the portcullis! Man the walls!
A thousand in the battlements, a thousand In the gorge. The rest go to the woods!
Cut granite and cut trees, — the biggest blocks, The tallest trees; and on this mound which keeps A world in awe, we'll build a gallows worthy Of this great emperor! — [He comes down.
He gave himself!
He is our prisoner!
[Folding his arms and looking at THE EMPEROR face to face.
I must admire You, sire. Where are your people? Harbingers?
Shall we soon hear your trumpets blow? Will you Upon this stronghold which you mean to raze Strew salt as at Lubeck, or hemp, as once You did at Pisa? What? We hear no sound!
Have you come all alone? No army, Caesar?
No troops? I know that is your usual way'
I know't was in this fashion, all alone, Your sword in hand, your name upon your lips, You burst the gates and captured Tarsus and Coré. One step sufficed. It needed but One cry to force Utrecht and Genoa, and Rome degenerate; Iconium bent Before you, Lombardy grew pale as soon As Milan shivered at your breath of steel.
All that we know! But know you who we are?
[Pointing to Soldiers. Just now I heard you speaking to these men. You called them veterans, comrades! Good! But see. Not one of them has stirred an inch. Because You 're nothing here. My father is the man, — The man they fear, the man they love! To Job These men belong more than they do to God! Unto the bandit lord there's nothing sacred But his guest, and you are our guest no more! You said it but a moment since, yourself.
[.Indicating JOB. That is my father, — look, that old man there! T was he who branded you upon the arm. That mark is better proof of your estate Than all the sacred oil rubbed off your brow. The hatred of you twain outweighs your years. You put a price upon his head; he did The same by yours. And now he holds it. You Are here alone, unharmed, and in our power.

Fritz-Hohenstaufen, gaze upon us well.
Sooner than enter here, in this dumb crowd Of princes, fierce, revengeful, mad with hate, Darius, Gorlois, Hatto, Magnus, Job, —
Mighty Count Job, the burgrave of Taunus, Sooner than enter here, you King of Aries, Who scarcely know with whom you speak, you madman Whose rash folly is a sure guarantee That you are Barbarossa, — mark me now, It would have been far better had you gone By darkest night into some fearful den Of Africa, and suddenly amid The gloom found you were hemmed in by wild beasts, By tigers, lionesses, on the spring, With lust of murder in their gleaming eyes. [While MAGNUS has been talking, the circle of Burgraves has drawn itself closer around THE EMPEROR. Behind the Burgraves a treble line of Soldiers, armed to the teeth, have ranged themselves in silence; above them rises the great standard of the burg, red and white equally divided, with a silver axe embroidered on a field of gules; this motto is under the axe, “Monticomam, viro caput.” THE EMPEROR, without yielding a step, overawes this crowd. Suddenly, when MAGNUS has concluded, one of the Burgraves draws his sword.

CADWALLA (drawing his sword). Yes, Caesar, give us back our citadels.

DARIUS (drawing his sword) Our burgs, which are no more than nests for birds.

HATTO (drawing his sword). The friends you killed, who come to haunt our turrets When the fierce night winds moan and blow!

MAGNUS (seizing his axe).
Yes, yes!
You come out from the tomb? Well, then, go back. I’ll send you there, that, on the instant when A thousand voices rapturously cry, “ He lives!” dull echo will retort, “ He’s dead!” Oh, tremble, fool, who thought to menace us! [The Burgraves with swords drawn and violent cries press around BAKBAROSSA. JOB comes out of the crowd and raises his hand; all are silent.

JOB (to THE EMPEROR). My son Magnus has told you, sire, the truth. You are my enemy. I was the man, The furious soldier, who gave you the wound. I hate you, but I want a Germany Within the world! My country's breaking, sire. She's tottering o'er her grave. You can save her. Where they defied you, on my knees I fall, Prostrate before my emperor, whom my God Brings back.

[He kneels before BARBAROSSA, then half turns to the Princes and Burgraves.

Kneel, all of you! Cast down your swords! [All throw down their swords and kneel, except MAGNUS.

JOB, still kneeling, speaks to THE EMPEROR. This hapless nation needs you, — only you! Help us! Without you, the whole country's lost. There are in Germany two Germans left: You 're one, and I am one. That is enough! Reign, sire. — [Designating the others.

I let them talk, poor foolish men! Excuse them; they are young!

[To MAGNUS, who is still standing. Magnus, obey!

[MAGNUS, a prey to some gloomy irresolution, appears to hesitate; his father makes a gesture; he falls on his knees. JOB continues. It is a truth that serfs and barons, naked feet And visored brows, that labourers and hunters Must always live on hate. Eternally The mountain-tops have fought the fields. You know It, sire. Now, without anger, I admit The barons acted ill, — the mountain-tops Were wrong. — [Rising up: to the Soldiers.

Go, set the captives free, at once! [The Soldiers obey in silence, and detach the chains of the prisoners, who during this scene have stood in groups in the gallery at the back of the stage. JOB continues. Now, burgraves, you, take as great Caesar bids Their chains and clogs!

[The Burgraves rise up in indignation. JOB looks at them with authority.

Begin with me! [With a gesture he orders a Soldier to put one of the iron collars on his neck. The Soldier drops his eyes and turns away his head. JOB repeats the sign, the Soldier obeys. The other Burgraves allow themselves to be chained without resistance. JOB*, with his chain attached to his neck, turns to* THE EMPEROR.

Behold!

We are as you would have us. Emperor, In his own palace Job becomes a slave And brings his head to you. But if the brow Which years of fearful struggle have not bent, Deserves your pity, listen, O my king! When you, our master, go to the frontier, Let us, — grant us this one, this final prayer, — Let us go with you, prisoners, soldiers too. We'll keep our chains, but put us face to face With your worst enemies, the most inhuman, The most depraved; and be they Vandals, Maygars, Be they Hungarians wild, be they more thick Than is the hail of springtime or the snows Of winter: be they more in numbers than The grains of wheat in a rich harvest time, You'll see us, scourged and humbled as we are, With eyes cast down, rebellious 'gainst our shame, Sweep, — in God's sight I swear it! — sweep these hordes Like dust before your eyes. Chained, terrible, And dauntless, soaked from head to foot in blood, We who are convicts here, there will be gods!

CAPTAIN OF ARCHERS OF THE BURG (advancing toward JOB, and lowing, awaits his orders).
My lord!
[JOB shakes his head and signs to him to address THE EMPEROR, who stands motionless and silent. THE CAPTAIN turns to THE EMPEROR and salutes him with great respect.
Sire!

THE EMPEROR (indicating the Burgraves). Take them off to prison! [The Soldiers lead the Burgraves off, all except JOB, who, upon a sign from THE EMPEROR remains. All go out. When they are alone, FREDERIC approaches JOB and unfastens his chain. JOB, stupefied, lets him do it. A moment of silence.

THE EMPEROR (looking into JOB'S face).
Fosco!

JOB (shuddering with horror).
Great heaven!

THE EMPEROR (putting his finger on his lips). Hush! Speak not a word.

JOB (aside).
My God

THE EMPEROR. Watch for me there, where you go every night.

PART III.

THE LOST CAVE.

SCENE. — A gloomy cavern, low, round, damp, of hideous aspect. Some few pieces of tapestry, mouldy from age, are hanging on the walls. To the right, a window, grated, among whose bars are three which have been violently wrenched off. To the left, a bench and table roughly hewn in stone. In the background, in the shadow, a sort of gallery, whose pillars supporting the arches are visible. It is night. A moonbeam falls through the window and forms a white, square figure on the opposite wall. As the curtain rises. JOB is discovered alone in the cave, seated on the stone bench, a prey to gloomy thought. A lighted lantern is placed on the block of stone at his feel. He wears a garment of grey drugget.

SCENE I.

JOB (alone).
What said the Emperor? What did I reply?
I did not understand. No, I heard wrong.
Since yesterday my mind has been confused.
I walk with trouble, know not where I go I lose my way with every step I take;
And actual objects trembling in a mist Delude my weary eyes, which search the gloom In vain, as we seek phantoms of a dream. [Dreaming.
The demons love to torture wretched hearts.
Yes, it must be a dream. But oh, how sad!
In our poor hearts, pierced with a triple blade, When virtue falls asleep, crime furnishes The dreams. Ah, when we ‘re young, we count On triumph; when we ‘re old, on punishment.
At both mysterious ends of life, a dream:
The first one is a lie. The second — what?

[A moment of silence. All I know now is that my haughty walls Have crumbled. Barbarossa's master here! Oh, misery! But yet I did my duty! I did well! I have saved my country. Yes, I saved the kingdom. — [Dreaming. Oh, the Emperor! A phantom we have been each to the other; And when we met, it was with dazzled eyes, Like giants of an ancient, vanished world, We faced each other, knowing only two were left Out of the wreck of a colossal age. We stand upon the peaks of the great past! This new, disastrous day has submerged all! But her great waves, gigantic as they were, Were never tall enough to touch our brows!

[Becoming more absorbed. Now one of us must yield. It will be I. I feel the shadows coming: day is done! Oh, fall of my proud mountain! Father Rhine Will tell, to-morrow, to old Germany That the fierce duel waged so long between Old Job and Barbarossa sees an end at last. To-morrow, no more children, no more slaves. Farewell, O giant struggle — victories! Glory, that I have loved so dear, farewell! To-morrow, if I listen, I shall hear The passer-by make jest and game of me! He will see Job, who was a hundred years A sovereign, who defended inch by inch Each rock upon his Rhine; Job, who, in spite Of Caesar, spite of Rome, kept on his feet And lived, — he will behold him vanquished, chained, His vitals gnawed by this Imperial eagle;

A colossus prostrate, whom all men May touch; the last of the great burgraves, nailed To his own rocks! — [Rises.

What, I — Count Job, — I fall Like this? Hush, pride! Bend low thy head Here in this tomb. These walls which palpitate Tell such a tale of horror! 'T is so long ago! And always yesterday, my God!

[He falls back on the stone bench, covers his face with his hands and weeps.

Beneath this vault Forever since that day, my crime has sweated, Drop by drop, this sweat of blood, which men Do call remorse. Here every night I cry Unto the dead, who, since they left this world, Have bribed Insomnia to stick her leaden Fingers through my sockets. If I sleep, By Nature goaded, through a sea of blood Two figures float around me, and do pull Me down into their flood. — [Rising.

Just God!

[Coming to front of stage. The world Has thought me great. Forgotten by God's thunder The lawless bandit has grown old upon His mountain-top, towards which all Europe turned Admiring eyes. But let a murderer Do all he can, he'll never do so much As to make conscience dupe of earthly glory. No! Men have thought me drunk with victory, But every night for sixty years I've come To kneel in dumb repentance on these stones. These walls, sad cancer in my haughty home, Have ceaselessly thrust back upon my heart The mean and lying grandeur of my fame.

Loud blew the clarions everywhere I went.

My banners were borne high, for I was mighty, —

Imperious count at Court, unconquerable Lion in my den. But when earth lay A pygmy at my feet, then crime grew tall, —

A giant in my breast. It laughed aloud At every epithet of praise I earned.

And when men bowed with veneration as I passed, it stuck its teeth into my heart And shouted, " Wretch!" Ginevra, Donato, Will you forgive your executioner When God has pardoned him? To strike one's breast, To kneel on the damp stones, to weep, repent, Make life eternal prayer, 't is not enough!

No pitying thing has pardoned me. I've known No respite! Soul forever damned! — [sits again.

I have Had ancestors, descendants too! But now My city's fallen; my own son is old. His sons are traitors, and my one ewe-lamb, My last born, he was taken long ago. Regina and Otbert, whom I loved much, — The soul must always love, for't is divine, — They fled, no doubt, when these disasters came. I have been looking for them: both are gone! 'T is all too bitter! Let me die!

[he draws a dagger from his belt. Some one, Something, has always been around me here, My heart has felt it. Well, at this dread hour I cry for pardon! Mercy, Donato! Here, on death's threshold, Job appeals no more. There is but Fosco. Mercy, peace for him!

A VOICE (in the shadow, feeble, like a murmur). Cain!

JOB (startled). What? Who spoke? An echo, nothing more! If any voice speaks here, 'tis from the tomb. Who else could enter this dark catacomb? This secret spot where never day has shone Is known to nothing living but myself. Those who did know it, long, long since are dead!

[Takes a step up stage. My hands are clasped and raised in anguish! Hear! O martyr, pardon Fosco!

THE VOICE.
Cain!

JOB (starting back with terror).
How strange! Some one did speak. That’s certain. Be it so! Come shadow, phantom, ghost, whate’er you be, Strike! I would rather die than hear again That ghastly echo to my pleading.

THE VOICE.
Cain’
[.Becoming fainter, and as if lost in the depths. Cain! Cain!

JOB.
My God! My knees bend under me! I’m dreaming. Grief has made me mad at last! This wine from hell has made a drunken fool Of me. Remorse is laughing at my elbow. Oh, yes! I hear you, devils! Hideous dreams, Which all through life have tortured me, You’ve reached your high-flood now; and I — I can’t elude your grip in this black hell! Speak, then, O voice which rises from the tomb, I’m here! Whatever thing you wish to know, Whatever explication you demand, I without faltering will answer. Speak! [A woman appears at the back. She is dressed in black, has a lamp in her hand. She comes from behind a pillar on the left.

SCENE II

JOB, GUANHUMARA.

GUANHUMARA (veiled). Where is your brother, Cain?

JOB (with terror).
Who’ What are you?

GUANHUMARA. Up there I am a slave; down here a queen! Each mortal has his destiny! This castle, As you well know, is double. Underneath Its halls and towers are many tombs, like this. All that the sun reveals up there, is yours; All that foul gloom conceals down here, is mine!

[Moves slowly towards him. I hold you fast. You can’t escape me now!

JOB.
Who are you, woman? Speak!

GUANHUMARA.
The Past! I have A tale of infamy to tell. It happened, — ah, So long ago! Many of them are dead! Those of a hundred were scarce thirty then.
[She indicates a corner of the cave. Two lovers, Count, were there! Mark well the chamber. It was at night, — a calm September night. A chilly moonbeam entered through those bars And cast a figure, like a shroud, upon The wall.
[She turns and points to the wall, touched by the moon. Look, there it is! With sudden fury, Sword in hand —

JOB.
Be merciful! I know!

GUANHUMARA. You know the story ‘ Well, Fosco, the place Where he, Donato, fell — [Points to the stone bench.
‘T was there! The arm Which struck the blow —— [SEIZES JOB’S right arm.
‘T is here’

JOB.
My God! strike me, But speak no more I

GUANHUMARA The body —
[she drags him to the window. Come! They threw Donato, master, and Sfrondati, squire, Out from the window; and to get them through, One of the murderers with his fist of steel Burst these three bars. That fist, to-day, a reed —
Behold it, Count! — [She seizes his hand again.

JOB.

Have mercy!

GUANHUMARA.
Some one plead For mercy then. Oh, grief! A woman! Shame! She wrung her hands entreating mercy! Shame! He laughed, the murderer; he had her hound Here, Count, and put this chain around her foot Himself! Look at it now!
[Lifts up her dress and shows him the chain riveted around her naked foot.

JOB.
Ginevra!

GUANHUMARA.
Yes!
Dead heart, cold hand, extinguished eyes! Ginevra!
Ah, my name was sweet in Corsican!
In the rough countries of the North it changed To Guanhumara! Age, that other north Which freezes and disfigures us, has made A livid spectre of the fair young girl.
Behold it!
[Lifts her veil and reveals her emaciated and mournful face to JOB.
You must die!

JOB.
I thank you!

GUANHUMAKA.
Wait I
Before you thank me, wait, old man! Your son Is living, — your son George!

JOB.
What’s that you say?

GUANHUMAKA.
I stole him from you.

JOB.
For God’s sake! GUANHUMAKA.
He wore This little chain.
[Draws a child’s necklace of pearls and gold from her bosom and throws it to him. He picks it up and covers it with kisses. Then he falls on his knees.

JOB.
I embrace your knees. Have pity! Let me see him!

GUANHUMARA.
You shall see Him soon. He is the one who is to kill You!

JOB (rising with horror). Have you made a monster of my boy That he would kill his father?

GUANHUMARA.
‘T is Otbert!

JOB (clasping his hands to heaven). Oh, God! My heart revealed this thing before. He is a noble boy. He’ll not kill me. How foolishly you count upon Otbert!

GUANHUMARA. Do I? You’ve lived your life in the broad sun. I’ve spent my days in earth’s eternal gloom. ‘T is strange you never heard my vengeful steps As they gained on you. Wake up now! Too late! Fosco, the serpent’s fangs are in your flesh. While you were talking with the Emperor, I went to see Regina, in her room. She drank, because I willed, a mighty drug. I was alone with her. Look at her now! [Through the back of the gallery on the right, two men enter, dressed in black and masked; they bear a coffin, covered with a black cloth, slowly across the stage. JOB hastens to them; they stop.

JOB.
A coffin!
[JOB draws away the black cloth with terror; the masked men allow it. THE COUNT lifts the shroud and sees a white figure. It is REGINA.
My Regina! [To GUANHUMARA.] Killed! By you! You are a monster!

GUANHUMARA. She is not dead yet. I am accustomed to these tricks. She’s dead For you; for me, she only sleeps; and if —
[She makes a gesture as if to awaken her.

JOB.
What price for her awakening? Speak!

GUANHUMARA.
Your death.
I’ve told Otbert. The choice lies in his hands.
[She places her right hand on the coffin. I swear, by the eternity a wrong Endures, by golden Corsica my home, By the cold skeleton which sleeps below, By this voracious wall which drank his blood, That empty from this place that coffin shall Not go!
[The two men take up the coffin and disappear on the side opposite where they came in.
He is to choose, — or you or her! If you want to escape, fly from your doom, You can! Then both of them shall die! They ‘re in My power!

JOB (hiding his face in his hands). Horrible!

GUANHUMARA. Resist me not!
Die, and Regina lives.

JOB.
Wait! One last prayer. To die is nothing. Take me, — take my life, My blood! — but spare the innocent from crime. Is not one victim food enough for your Revenge? A strange world shows itself to me. My crime has generated on this mount A hell, within whose shadows I see demons Fight, — a hideous nest of scorpions, hatched From the big drops which from my dagger fell;
For murder is prolific harvester Of ill: I know it! I have learned it! Well, In your infernal circle I am caught.
What more do you desire? I am your prey.
‘T is just’ I feel your clutch with joy. You have Done well. I am a wretched man, accursed In sons and grandsons. But the boy, my last!

You have the heart to let him enter here, Pure, strong, and noble, with unstained soul, Then send him back marked with the awful curse I, Cain, have borne? Ginevra, bear with me!
You thought it right to take him, — all I had! —
Take him from me, whose feet were near the tomb.
I’ll not gainsay the right. You kept him, yes;
You did not make him suffer for my sin, I ‘m sure of that. You’ve had my rights, my joy:
You’ve seen his bright eyes open to the world, You’ve felt his dear head rest upon your breast.
Well, he is now your child, — yours more than mine:
I swear it’ Oh, indeed, I’ve suffered much.
I have been punished, truly! When they came And told me he was lost, that he was stolen, I went mad almost. They will tell you — no, I don’t exaggerate. I gave one cry, “ My boy is stolen!” and I fell — yes, fell Down on the ground. My little boy! How well I can remember it! He was out playing Amid the flowers. These are the things that torture, Is it not so? You can be judge if I Have suffered. Listen! Don’t commit this crime, More hideous than my own; but leave him pure.
Keep free from guilt that soul which is divine.
Oh, if a heart beats in your woman’s breast —

GUANHUMARA.
It beats no more there. You have torn it out.

JOB.
Well, I am willing. You must understand That I am eager for the tomb. But not — His hand!

GUANHUMARA. A brother killed his brother here. Why not a son his father?

JOB (on his knees, hands clasped, dragging himself to GUANHUMARA’S feet).
Spare me this! Some other death, Ginevra, I implore!

GUANHUMARA. Accursed man! I prayed to you, like this. Did I not tell you, that? Upon my knees, With naked bosom, desperate and mad, I wrung my hands in anguish, at your feet Until at last, beside myself, I rose, And shouting, “ I am Corsican,” defied You! Then you hurled your victim to the moat, And with demoniac laughter, kicked me back, Replying “ Get your vengeance if you can! I’m having mine!”

JOB.
My boy said nothing; he Did you no wrong. Remember, I was jealous! Look, now I weep. I loved you tenderly!

GUANHUMARA. Hush! What a ghastly, an inhuman thing, That two lost souls, sunk in the mire of crime, Pollution in their hearts, blood on their hands, Should dare to breathe the sacred name of love! Well, if you loved, how much the more loved I, Whose breast has been a chaos sixty years’ Give back Donato! Fratricide, give back My love to me!

JOB (rising, with gloomy resignation).
Knows Otbert whom he kills?

GUANHUMARA. He does not. For Regina he will strike, Ignoring who you are.

JOB.
Oh, fateful night!

GUANHUMARA. He knows he is avenger of a crime, — No more. Be silent; hide your face, and die. I will consent to that.
[Takes off her veil and gives it to him.

JOB (seizing the veil). I thank you!

GUANHUMARA.
Hush!
I hear a step. Confide your soul to God. He comes, I go. I shall hear everything. I hold Regina in my cave. Be quick. There is no time to lose.
[Goes out on the left, where the bearers of the coffin made their exit.

JOB (falling on his knees by the stone bench).
God, thou art just!
[Covers himself with the black veil and remains kneeling, motionless, in the attitude of prayer. Through the gallery on the right a man, masked, dressed in black, and bearing a torch, appears; he motions to some one to enter: it is OTBERT. OTBERT pale, wild, distraught. As OTBERT enters, and while he is speaking, JOB does not move. As soon as OTBERT has come in, the masked man disappears.

SCENE III.

JOB, OTBERT. OTBERT.
Where have you brought me? What dark place is this?
[Looking around.
The masked man is not here ‘ Heavens! Where am I?
Is this the place? Already? A cold shiver Runs through my veins. My poor head swims. I faint!
[Perceiving JOB. Whom do I see there in the gloom? No one!
[Going towards JOB. The dark is so deceptive! [Puts his hand on JOB’S head.
‘T is a man!
[JOB remains motionless. God’ The cold sweat of crime creeps o’er my flesh. Is this the scaffold? Is the victim there? Is this sad Rosco, who must die to-night? Speak, is it you? He speaks not! It is he. Whoever you may be, I hate myself! I’ve not a thing against you. I ignore Why you are there so motionless, and why You do not rise and crush me! I know nothing! I’m as unknown to you as you to me. But you can feel these weak and trembling hands Are not a murderer’s. Of course, you know I am the instrument of mad revenge, Chastiser of a crime. You do not know A shroud has wound itself around my feet. I’ve tried, but cannot extricate myself. Speak, do you know Regina, my sweet love, This angel from whose brow my daylight comes? Look you, she’s there, wrapt in a winding-sheet: Dead, if I falter; living, if I kill. Old man, have mercy! Won’t you speak to me? Please tell me that you understand my trouble And my despair. Speak! tell me you forgive This fearful martyrdom. Oh, just to hear Your voice, one single word of pardon! God! Just one! My heart is breaking; pity me!

JOB (rises and throws aside his veil). Otbert! Otbert, my child!

OTBETTT.
Count Job! JOB (embracing him ardently).
In vain!
All my poor, bleeding heart went out to him. This frightful silence tortured me too much. I'm but an old man, — weak and broken down; I could not die without a last embrace. Come to my heart!
[.He covers OTBERT'S face with tears and kisses. Ah, let me see you, child!
You'll not believe it, though I've looked at you With an increasing pleasure six long months, I never saw you well.
[Looks at him with enraptured eyes. 'T is the first time! A young man! Twenty years! What a fine sight! I kiss your pure brow. Let me look at you, And feast my eye. A while ago you talked, And I was silent. Ah, you could not know How deep your words went down into my soul! You'll find my great sword hanging on the wall; I give it to you, child; my helmet, pennon, Which has so often triumphed, — they are yours. If you could only read it in my heart How dear you are to me! I bless you, child! My God, give to this boy all your good gifts; Give him a life as long as mine, but much Less sad than mine; give him a prosperous And honourable destiny. Grant that His sons, as much respected as their sire, May guide, with fondest care, his trembling steps When these locks, now so black, are grey.

OTBERT
My lord —

JOB (putting his hand on OTBERT'S head). I bless this young man — Heaven, hark to me — In all that he has done, all he may do! Be happy! Listen now, Otbert, to me. I am no more a father and no more a king. My family's in chains; my tower is down. T was right I gave my children up; 't was right, With humbled brow, I should save Germany. But now I ought to die. My poor old hand, It trembles. You are young; you'll help me. Yes!

[Draws from its sheath the dagger which OTBERT carries and presents it. ‘T is only you from whom I’d ask so much.

OTBERT (terrified). Ask it of me? But don’t you know — I’m here For some one —

JOB.
Fosco? I am he! OTBERT.
Not you!
[Drawing lack and looking around in the darkness. O demons who glare at me, O spectres Standing around, it is the old burgrave, The man I honour and I love! Have mercy! Spare us the fearful torture of this hour! No answer! God! ‘T is horrible ‘ Old Job?
[With despair and solemnity. ‘T is vain. I will not, cannot lift my hand Against that sacred head, against the life Of this great demi-god of the old Rhine.

JOB.
Otbert, it is making easy my way Into the grave. Must I avow still more?
It is the truth: I am a criminal.
Your wife on earth, your sister in the skies, Regina, she is there; she waits for you.
She’s pale, ice-cold, and beautiful. For her You promised to do everything. You swore To save her from all pain, for love is strong, E’en though the promise forced you to the tomb To wrestle with the fiends who guard the door.
You said you’d buy her back with your own soul. Death holds her now. The shadow of his arm Grows taller ‘round her, every instant. Haste! You have the power. Save her!

OTBERT (wild).
Do you think I must?

JOB.
I wonder that you hesitate! On one side, I, old, sinful, and condemned, With death’s grim hold already on my heart, Less of a hero than a knave, far more A hawk than eagle, — I whose life, So full of blood and woe and viciousness, Has often made God’s thunder growl around My home! On my side, crime, old age, and grief. On hers youth, beauty, innocence, and love! A woman who adores you; child who trusts! Oh, fool is he who doubts and cannot choose Between a miserable rag, polluted, vile, And the white linen of a cherubim. She wants to live. I want to die. And you, You falter when with one kind blow you might Bring happiness to both. If you love us —

OTBERT.
Good God!

JOB.

Be our deliverer, Otbert. Saint Sigismund killed Boleslas to cure Him of a hideous ulcer. Who blamed him? Remorse is the rank ulcer of a soul. Cure me of that!

OTBERT (taking the knife).
Well, then —— [He stops.

JOB.
What hinders now?

OTBERT (putting lack dagger into sheath). A fearful thought has come into my mind! You had a child; a gipsy woman stole It, — yes, you told me so this morning! I was taken by a woman, when quite young. Things strange as this have taken place before! If I should be that child; my father, you?

JOB (aside).
Oh, heaven!
[Aloud] Sorrow has disturbed your brain. You ‘re not that child! I tell you so!

OTBERT.
But yet You often call me son!

JOB.
I love you so! ‘T is habit; it is such a tender word.

OTBERT.
I feel — here — something strange —

JOB.
Oh, no!

OTBERT.
A voice Seems speaking to me —

JOB.
‘T is a voice that lies.

OTBERT.
My lord! My lord! What if I were your child?

JOB.
I beg you, do not think that senseless thing. I had the proof, — what shall I say to you? — That Jews — they killed him — at their feast. His corpse Was brought to me. I told you that, this morning.

OTBERT.
No!

JOB.
Yes, yes, remember! Think it over well! No, you are not my son! You can trust me. If I had not had proofs, — you are quite right, — I might have had the same idea as you. A young child — stolen by an unknown hand. I’m thankful now that it occurred to you, Because I want to force it from your mind, Lest, when I’m dead, some hard, relentless heart Might tell you, just to torture your poor soul, That old Job was your father. How unkind! You won’t believe it now, for you are not. When we are old, our memory — sometimes Is not so good; but on their Sabbath, Jews, You know, kill children! Thus they killed my boy! I tell you I had proofs! Be quite assured! Rest easy, O my son! Now, there, you see, I called you son! ‘T was habit, — only that. Won’t you believe me? It is very hard To struggle at my age.

Have no more doubts; Obey me without fear. I kiss your brow, I press your hand upon my heart, — your hand Which will deliver me and will be pure!
What! you ray son? Have no such dreams, my child.
I swear — but you, you so intelligent, Who find the truth in every little thing, You think that I would lend my countenance To such a frightful mystery? You think —
Oh, is it possible? But when I know!
But when I tell you, Otbert, my beloved, That you are not my son —

VOICE (from the depths).
Regina's life Can last but fifteen minutes more!

OTBERT.
Regina!

JOB.
Wretch! You mean to let her die?

OTBERT.
Almighty God! I also — I have borne Too much! I'm drunk with misery. I'm mad!
In this hole, which is rotting with its crimes, "whose air reeks with the awful breath of hell, Murder's miasmas mount into my brain. [Beside himself.
O^ wall, are you athirst for some more blood?
\

JOB (putting the knife back into his hand).
Yes!

OTBERT. Do not tempt me!

JOB.
do it!

OTBERT.

Soon I’ll fall! I hang by reeds o’er the great precipice Of crime. It needs but just a touch to push Me down. I will do something horrible! Oh, don’t tempt me!

JOB.
You’ll save the innocent!
You’ll punish sin!

OTBERT.
Hush! don’t you see I’m ready, — At that point when half my reason is gone; That they’ve drugged me with some hot drink from hell To give me strength equal to their monstrosity; That poison’s made a Corsican of me; That I can feel Regina dying; that The she-wolf’s waiting in the shadow, and The tigress has been starved?

JOB.
I know it. Yes, The jaws of retribution shall be filled! ‘T is time! Here, in this place, Donato prayed: I was of stone! Be you as pitiless As I was hard. I am old Satan; be The victorious archangel, you, and strike!

OTBERT (lifting his knife). In spite of me, grim murder lifts my arm.

JOB (on his knees). I was a monster, for I stabbed him. Strike! I killed him — ‘t was my brother. Strike! [OTBERT, as if mad and beside himself, lifts the dagger; he is about to strike, when some one holds his arm. He turns and recognizes THE EMPEROR.

SCENE IV.

The same. THE EMPEROR, afterwards GUANHUMARA, afterwards REGINA.

THE EMPEROR.
‘T was I!

[OTBERT lets the dagger fall. JOB rises and looks at THE EMPEROR. GUANHUMARA advances her head from behind the pillar and watches.

JOB (to THE EMPEROR).
‘T was you!

OTBERT. The Emperor!

THE EMPEROR (to JOB).
The Duke, our father, Also your king, concealed me in your castle. Wherefore? I do not know.

JOB.
You are my brother? You?

THE EMPEROR. Bleeding, but breathing yet, you held me there, Suspended from that window, and you said, “The tomb for you, and hell for me!” I heard Those words hissed over the black precipice, And then I fell —

JOB (clasping his hands).
True! God forbade the crime!

THE EMPEROR. Some shepherds saved me.

JOB (falling at THE EMPEROR’S feet).
I am at your feet:
Take your revenge!

THE EMPEROR.
My brother! To my arms! What better thing to do, at death’s own door?
[Lifts him up and embraces him.
I pardon you!

JOB.
Thou art almighty. God!

GUANHUMARA (taking a step forward). My dagger falls. Donato lives. I'll die Contented at his feet. I give you back All you have loved, all that my hate has seized — [To JOB.] To you, your son!
[To OTBERT.] To you, your wife, Regina! [Makes a sign: REGINA, all in white appears at the back of the left gallery; she totters, and is supported by the two masked men; she seems dazed; she sees OTBERT and rushes to his arms with a great cry.

REGINA.
Heaven!
[OTBERT, REGINA, and JOB remain in a rapturous embrace.

OTBERT. Regina — wife! My father!

JOB (lifting his eyes to heaven).
Son!

GUANHUMARA (at back). This is my hour! Tomb, open doors to me! [Lifts a phial to her lips. THE EMPEROR goes to her quickly.

THE EMPEROR.
What's that?

GUANHUMARA.
I swore, that coffin, empty, should Not leave this place!

THE EMPEROR.
Ginevra!

GUANHUMARA.
Donato!
'T is a swift poison — Love! Good-bye! [she dies.

THE EMPEROR.
I, too, Must go. Job, reign over your Rhine!

JOB.

Remain!

THE EMPEROR. I leave a sovereign to the world. Just now The herald of the Empire came to tell The princes had at last, at Spire, chosen My grandson Frederic for Emperor. He’s a true sage, untouched by hate and free From sin. I leave my throne to him, while I Go back into my solitudes. Farewell! Live, reign, and suffer! Destiny is hard. Before death claimed me, prostrate at the cross, I wanted to extend my guiding hand, As king, once more upon my people, and, As loving brother, hold it out to you. Whatever life has brought, when the bell tolls, He’s happy who can bless!
[.All fall on their knees to receive the benediction of THE EMPEROR.

JOB (takes THE EMPEROR’S hand and kisses it). And great who can forgive!

THE POET. Depart with Barbarossa, O Count Job! Go forth together, hand-in-hand, you twain! Make of your royal mantles two great shrouds; Each aiding each, pass on, and bear away The mighty arch of ancient Germany. Colossi! Worlds like this are small for you. Thou solitude, whose depths are resonant, Receive this giant pair within thy gloom; And let all earth, agape, lend eyes to watch This entrance into thy eternal night Of a grand burgrave and grand emperor.

CURTAIN

HERNANI

This play was performed for the first time at the Comédie-Française on 25 February 1830 and published the same year. It is one of Hugo's most famous plays, which concerns the Battle of Hernani, a popular theme for romantic drama at the time. The play was no less than a triumph and later became the inspiration of Verdi's opera Ernani.

AL
Victor Hugo
1830

Hugo at the time of publication

TABLE DES MATIERES

PERSONNAGES.
SCÈNE PREMIÈRE.
SCÈNE II.
SCÈNE III.
SCÈNE IV.
ACTE DEUXIÈME - LE BANDIT.
SCÈNE PREMIÈRE.
SCÈNE II.
SCÈNE IV.
ACTE TROISIÈME - LE VIEILLARD.
SCÈNE PREMIÈRE.
SCÈNE II.
SCÈNE III.
SCÈNE IV.
SCÈNE V.
SCÈNE VI.
SCÈNE VII.
ACTE QUATRIÈME - LE TOMBEAU.
SCÈNE PREMIÈRE.
SCÈNE II.
SCÈNE III.
SCÈNE V.
ACTE CINQUIÈME - LA NOCE.
SCÈNE PREMIÈRE.
SCÈNE III.
SCÈNE IV.
SCÈNE V.
SCÈNE VI.

HERNANI

PREFACE DE L’AUTEUR.

L’auteur de ce drame écrivait il y a peu de semaines à propos d’un poëte mort avant l’âge:

«…Dans ce moment de mêlée et de tourmente littéraire, qui faut-il plaindre, ceux qui meurent ou ceux qui combattent? Sans doute, il est triste de voir un poëte de vingt ans qui s’en va, une lyre qui se brise, un avenir qui s’évanouit; mais n’est-ce pas quelque chose aussi que le repos? N’est-il pas permis à ceux autour desquels s’amassent incessamment calomnies, injures, haines, jalousies, sourdes menées, basses trahisons; hommes loyaux auxquels on fait une guerre déloyale; hommes dévoués qui ne voudraient enfin que doter le pays d’une liberté de plus, celle de l’art, celle de l’intelligence; hommes laborieux qui poursuivent paisiblement leur oeuvre de conscience, en proie d’un côté à de viles machinations de censure et de police, en butte de l’autre, trop souvent, à l’ingratitude des esprits mêmes pour lesquels ils travaillent; ne leur est-il pas permis de retourner quelquefois la tête avec envie vers ceux qui sont tombés derrière eux et qui dorment dans le tombeau? Invideo, disait Luther dans le cimetière de Worms, invideo, quia quiéscunt.

«Qu’importe toutefois? Jeunes gens, ayons bon courage! Si rude qu’on nous veuille faire le présent, l’avenir sera beau. Le romantisme, tant de fois mal défini, n’est, à tout prendre, et c’est là sa définition réelle, si l’on ne l’envisage que sous son côté militant, que le libéralisme en littérature. Cette vérité est déjà comprise à peu près de tous les bons esprits, et le nombre en est grand; et bientôt, car l’oeuvre est déjà bien avancée, le libéralisme littéraire ne sera pas moins populaire que le libéralisme politique. La liberté dans l’art, la liberté dans la société, voilà le double but auquel doivent tendre d’un même pas tous les esprits conséquents et logiques; voilà la double bannière qui rallie, à bien peu d’intelligences près (lesquelles s’éclaireront), toute la jeunesse si forte et si patiente d’aujourd’hui; puis, avec la jeunesse et à sa tête, l’élite de la génération qui nous a précédés, tous ces sages vieillards qui, après le premier moment de défiance et d’examen, ont reconnu que ce que font leur fils est une conséquence de ce qu’ils ont fait eux-mêmes, et que la liberté littéraire est fille de la liberté politique. Ce principe est celui du siècle, et prévaudra. Les Ultras de tout genre, classiques ou monarchiques, auront beau se prêter secours pour refaire l'ancien régime de toutes pièces, société et littérature; chaque progrès du pays, chaque développement des intelligences, chaque pas de la liberté fera crouler tout ce qu'ils auront échafaudé. Et, en définitive, leurs efforts de réaction auront été utiles. En révolution, tout mouvement fait avancer. La vérité et la liberté ont cela d'excellent que tout ce qu'on fait pour elles et tout ce qu'on fait contre elles les sert également. Or, après tant de grandes choses que nos pères ont faites et que nous avons vues, nous voilà sortis de la vieille forme sociale; comment ne sortirions-nous pas de la vieille forme poétique? A peuple nouveau, art nouveau. Tout en admirant la littérature de Louis XIV, si bien adaptée à sa monarchie, elle saura bien avoir sa littérature propre et personnelle et nationale, cette France actuelle, cette France du dix-neuvième siècle, à qui Mirabeau a fait sa liberté et Napoléon sa puissance.»

Qu'on pardonne à l'auteur de ce drame de se citer ici lui-même; ses paroles ont si peu le don de se graver dans les esprits, qu'il aurait souvent besoin de les rappeler. D'ailleurs, aujourd'hui, il n'est peut-être point hors de propos de remettre sous les yeux des lecteurs les deux pages qu'on vient de transcrire. Ce n'est pas que ce drame puisse en rien mériter le beau nom d'art nouveau, de poésie nouvelle, loin de là; mais c'est que le principe de la liberté en littérature vient de faire un pas; c'est qu'un progrès vient de s'accomplir, non dans l'art, ce drame est trop peu de chose, mais dans le public; c'est que, sous ce rapport du moins, une partie des pronostics hasardés plus haut viennent de se réaliser.

Il y avait péril, en effet, à changer ainsi brusquement d'auditoire, à risquer sur le théâtre des tentatives confiées jusqu'ici seulement au papier qui souffre tout; le public des livres est bien différent du public des spectacles, et l'on pouvait craindre de voir le second repousser ce que le premier avait accepté. Il n'en a rien été. Le principe de la liberté littéraire, déjà compris par le monde qui lit et qui médite, n'a pas été moins complètement adopté par cette immense foule, avide des pures émotions de l'art, qui inonde chaque soir les théâtres de Paris. Cette voix haute et puissante du peuple, qui ressemble à celle de Dieu, veut désormais que la poésie ait la même devise que la politique: TOLÉRANCE ET LIBERTÉ.

Maintenant vienne le poëte! il y a un public.

Et cette liberté, le public la veut telle qu’elle doit être, se conciliant avec l’ordre, dans l’état, avec l’art, dans la littérature. La liberté a une sagesse qui lui est propre, et sans laquelle elle n’est pas complète. Que les vieilles règles de d’Aubignac meurent avec les vieilles coutumes de Cujas, cela est bien; qu’à une littérature de cour succède une littérature de peuple, cela est mieux encore; mais surtout qu’une raison intérieure se rencontre au fond de toutes ces nouveautés. Que le principe de liberté fasse son affaire, mais qu’il la fasse bien. Dans les lettres, comme dans la société, point d’étiquette, point d’anarchie des lois. Ni talons rouges, ni bonnets rouges.

Voilà ce que veut le public, et il veut bien. Quant à nous, par déférence pour ce public qui a accueilli avec tant d’indulgence un essai qui en méritait si peu, nous lui donnons ce drame aujourd’hui tel qu’il a été représenté. Le jour viendra peut-être de le publier tel qu’il a été conçu par l’auteur, en indiquant et en discutant les modifications que la scène lui a fait subir. Ces détails de critique peuvent ne pas être sans intérêt ni sans enseignements, mais ils sembleraient minutieux aujourd’hui; la liberté de l’art est admise, la question principale est résolue; à quoi bon s’arrêter aux questions secondaires? Nous y reviendrons du reste quelque jour, et nous parlerons aussi, bien en détail, en la ruinant par les raisonnements et par les faits, de cette censure dramatique qui est le seul obstacle à la liberté du théâtre, maintenant qu’il n’y en a plus dans le public. Nous essayerons, à nos risques et périls et par dévouement aux choses de l’art, de caractériser les mille abus de cette petite inquisition de l’esprit, qui a, comme l’autre saint-office, ses juges secrets, ses bourreaux masqués, ses tortures, ses mutilations et sa peine de mort. Nous déchirerons, s’il se peut, ces langes de police dont il est honteux que le théâtre soit encore emmailloté au dix-neuvième siècle.

Aujourd’hui il ne doit y avoir place que pour la reconnaissance et les remerciements. C’est au public que l’auteur de ce drame adresse les siens, et du fond du coeur. Cette oeuvre, non de talent, mais de conscience et de liberté, a été généreusement protégée contre bien des inimitiés par le public, parce que le public est toujours, aussi lui, consciencieux et libre. Grâces lui soient donc rendues, ainsi qu’à cette jeunesse puissante qui a porté aide et faveur à l’ouvrage d’un jeune homme sincère et indépendant comme elle! C’est pour elle surtout qu’il travaille, parce que ce serait une gloire bien haute que l’applaudissement de cette élite de jeunes hommes, intelligente, logique, conséquente, vraiment libérale en littérature comme en politique, noble génération qui ne se refuse pas à ouvrir les deux yeux à la vérité et à recevoir la lumière des deux côtés.

Quant à son oeuvre en elle-même, il n’en parlera pas. Il accepte les critiques qui en ont été faites, les plus sévères comme les plus bienveillantes, parce qu’on peut profiter à toutes. Il n’ose se flatter que tout le monde ait compris du premier coup ce drame, dont le Romancero general est la véritable clef. Il prierait volontiers les personnes que cet ouvrage a pu choquer de relire le Cid Don Sanche, Nicomède, ou plutôt tout Corneille et tout Molière, ces grands et admirables poëtes. Cette lecture, si pourtant elles veulent bien faire d’abord la part de l’immense infériorité de l’auteur d’Hernani, les rendra peut-être moins sévères pour certaines choses qui ont pu les blesser dans la forme ou dans le fond de ce drame. En somme, le moment n’est peut-être pas encore venu de le juger. Hernani n’est jusqu’ici que la première pierre d’un édifice qui existe tout construit dans la tête de son auteur, mais dont l’ensemble peut seul donner quelque valeur à ce drame. Peut-être ne trouvera-t-on pas mauvaise un jour la fantaisie qui lui a pris de mettre, comme l’architecte de Bourges, une porte presque moresque à sa cathédrale gothique.

En attendant, ce qu’il a fait est bien peu de chose, il le sait. Puissent le temps et la force ne pas lui manquer pour achever son oeuvre! Elle ne vaudra qu’autant qu’elle sera terminée. Il n’est pas des ces poëtes privilégiés qui peuvent mourir ou s’interrompre avant d’avoir fini, sans péril pour leur mémoire; il n’est pas de ceux qui restent grands, même sans avoir complété leur ouvrage, heureux hommes dont on peut dire ce que Virgile disait de Carthage ébauchée:

Pendent opera interrupta, minaeque
Murorum ingentes!

9 mars 1830.

Lettre aux éditeurs des poésies de M. Dovalle.

Ce jour, prédit par l’auteur, est venu. Nous donnons dans cette édition Hernani tout entier, tel que le poëte l’avait écrit, avec les développements de passion, les détails de moeurs et les saillies de caractères que la représentation avait retranchés. Quant à la discussion critique que l’auteur indique, elle sortira d’elle-même, pour tous les lecteurs, de la comparaison qu’ils pourront faire entre l’Hernani tronqué du théâtre et l’Hernani de cette édition. Espérons tout des progrès que le public des théâtres fait chaque jour.

Mai 1836. (Note de l’éditeur.)

PERSONNAGES.

HERNANI. DON MATIAS.
DON CARLOS. DON RICARDO.
DON RUY GOMEZ DE SILVA. DON FRANCISCO.
DOÑA SOL DE SILVA. DON GARCI SUAREZ.
LE ROI DE BOHÊME. DON JUAN DE HARO.
LE DUC DE BAVIERE. DON GIL TELLEZ GIRON.
LE DUC DE GOTHA. DOÑA JOSEFA DUARTE.
LE DUC DE LUTZELBOURG. Un montagnard.
JAQUEZ. Une dame.
DON SANCHO.
Premier conjuré. Deuxième conjuré. Troisième conjuré.
Conjurés de la ligue sacro-sainte, Allemands et Espagnols.
Montagnards, seigneurs, soldats, pages, peuple.
Espagne, 1519.

HERNANI.

ACTE PREMIER - LE ROI.

SARAGOSSE.

Une chambre à coucher. La nuit. Une lampe sur la table.

SCÈNE PREMIÈRE.

DOÑA JOSEFA DUARTE (vieille, en noir, avec le corps de sa jupe cousu de jais, à la mode d'Isabelle la Catholique); DON CARLOS.

DOÑA JOSEFA (seule). Elle ferme les rideaux cramoisis de la fenêtre et met en ordre quelques fauteuils. On frappe à une petite porte dérobée à droite. Elle écoute. On frappe un second coup. Serait-ce déjà lui?

Un nouveau coup. C'est bien à l'escalier Dérobé.

Un quatrième coup. Vite, ouvrons.

Elle ouvre la petite porte masquée. Entre don Carlos, le manteau sur le nez et le chapeau sur les yeux. Bonjour, beau cavalier.

Elle l'introduit. Il écarte son manteau et laisse voir un riche costume de velours et de soie, à la mode castillane de 1519. Elle le regarde sous le nez et recule étonnée. Quoi, seigneur Hernani, ce n'est pas vous! — Main-forte! Au feu!

DON CARLOS (lui saisissant le bras).
Deux mots de plus, duègne, vous êtes morte!

Il la regarde fixement. Elle se tait, effrayée.
Suis-je chez doña Sol? fiancée au vieux duc
De Pastraña, son oncle, un bon seigneur, caduc,
Vénérable et jaloux? dites? La belle adore
Un cavalier sans barbe et sans moustache encore,

Et reçoit tous les soirs, malgré les envieux,
Le jeune amant sans barbe à la barbe du vieux.
Suis-je bien informé?

Elle se tait. Il la secoue par le bras.
Vous répondrez peut-être?

DOÑA JOSEFA.
Vous m’avez défendu de dire deux mots, maître.

DON CARLOS.
Aussi n’en veux-je qu’un. — Oui, — non. — Ta dame est bien
Doña Sol de Silva? parle.

DOÑA JOSEFA.
Oui. — Pourquoi?

DON CARLOS.
Pour rien. Le duc, son vieux futur, est absent à cette heure?

DOÑA JOSEFA.
Oui.

DON CARLOS.
Sans doute elle attend son jeune?

DOÑA JOSEFA.
Oui.

DON CARLOS.
Que je meure!

DOÑA JOSEFA.
Oui.

DON CARLOS.
Duègne, c’est ici qu’aura lieu l’entretien?

DOÑA JOSEFA.
Oui.

DON CARLOS.
Cache-moi céans.

DOÑA JOSEFA.
Vous!

DON CARLOS.
Moi.

DOÑA JOSEFA.
Pourquoi?

DON CARLOS.
Pour rien.

DOÑA JOSEFA.
Moi! vous cacher!

DON CARLOS.
Ici.

DOÑA JOSEFA.
Jamais!

DON CARLOS (tirant de sa ceinture un poignard et une bourse).
Daignez, madame,
Choisir de cette bourse ou bien de cette lame.

DOÑA JOSEFA (prenant la bourse).
Vous êtes donc le diable?

DON CARLOS.
Oui, duègne.

DOÑA JOSEFA (ouvrant une armoire étroite dans le mur).
Entrez ici.

DON CARLOS (examinant l’armoire).
Cette boîte?

DOÑA JOSEFA (la refermant).
Va-t’en, si tu n’en veux pas.

DON CARLOS (rouvrant l’armoire).
Si!

L’examinant encore.
Serait-ce l’écurie où tu mets d’aventure
Le manche du balai qui te sert de monture?

Il s’y blottit avec peine.
Ouf!

DOÑA JOSEFA (joignant les mains et scandalisée).
Un homme ici!

DON CARLOS (dans l’armoire restée ouverte).
C’est une femme, est-ce pas,
Qu’attendait ta maîtresse?

DOÑA JOSEFA.
O ciel! j’entends le pas
De doña Sol. — Seigneur, fermez vite la porte.

Elle pousse la porte de l’armoire, qui se referme.

DON CARLOS (de l’intérieure de l’armoire).
Si vous dites un mot, duègne, vous êtes morte.

DOÑA JOSEFA (seule).
Qu’est cet homme? Jésus mon Dieu! Si j’appelais?
Qui? Hors madame et moi, tout dort dans le palais.
Bah! l’autre va venir. La chose le regarde.
Il a sa bonne épée, et que le ciel nous garde
De l’enfer!

Pesant la bourse.
Après tout, ce n’est pas un voleur.

Entre doña Sol, en blanc. Doña Josefa cache la bourse.

SCÈNE II.

DOÑA JOSEFA, DON CARLOS (caché); DOÑA SOL. Puis HERNANI.

DOÑA SOL.
Josefa!

DOÑA JOSEFA.
Madame?

DOÑA SOL.
Ah! je crains quelque malheur.
Hernani devrait être ici.

Bruit de pas à la petite porte.
Voici qu'il monte.
Ouvre avant qu'il ne frappe, et fais vite, et sois prompte.

Josefa ouvre la petite porte. Entre Hernani. Grand manteau, grand chapeau. Dessous, un costume de montagnard d'Aragon, gris, avec une cuirasse de cuir, une épée, un poignard, et un cor à la ceinture.

DOÑA SOL (courant à lui).
Hernani!

HERNANI.
Doña Sol! Ah! c'est vous que je vois
Enfin! et cette voix qui parle est votre voix!
Pourquoi le sort mit-il mes jours si loin des vôtres?
J'ai tant besoin de vous pour oublier les autres!

DOÑA SOL (touchant ses vêtements).
Jésus! votre manteau ruisselle! il pleut donc bien?

HERNANI.
Je ne sais.

DOÑA SOL.
Vous devez avoir froid!

HERNANI.
Ce n’est rien.

DOÑA SOL.
Otez donc ce manteau.

HERNANI.
Doña Sol, mon amie,
Dites-moi, quand la nuit vous êtes endormie,
Calme, innocente et pure, et qu’un sommeil joyeux
Entr’ouvre votre bouche et du doigt clôt vos yeux,
Un ange vous dit-il combien vous êtes douce
Au malheureux que tout abandonne et repousse?

DOÑA SOL.
Vous avez bien tardé, seigneur! Mais dites-moi
Si vous avez froid.

HERNANI.
Moi! je brûle près de toi!
Ah! quand l’amour jaloux bouillonne dans nos têtes,
Quand notre coeur se gonfle et s’emplit de tempêtes,
Qu’importe ce que peut un nuage des airs
Nous jeter en passant de tempête et d’éclairs!

DOÑA SOL (lui défaisant son manteau).
Allons! donnez la cape, — et l’épée avec elle.

HERNANI (la main sur son épée).
Non. C’est mon autre amie, innocente et fidèle.
— Doña Sol, le vieux duc, votre futur époux,
Votre oncle, est donc absent?

DOÑA SOL.
Oui, cette heure est à nous.

HERNANI.
Cette heure! Et voilà tout. Pour nous, plus rien qu'une heure!
Après, qu'importe? il faut qu'on oublie ou qu'on meure.
Ange! une heure avec vous! une heure, en vérité,
A qui voudrait la vie, et puis l'éternité!

DOÑA SOL.
Hernani!

HERNANI (amèrement).
Que je suis heureux que le duc sorte!
Comme un larron qui tremble et qui force une porte;
Vite, j'entre, et vous vois, et dérobe au vieillard
Une heure de vos chants et de votre regard;
Et je suis bien heureux, et sans doute on m'envie
De lui voler une heure, et lui me prend ma vie!

DOÑA SOL.
Calmez-vous.

Remettant le manteau à la duègne.
Josefa, fais sécher le manteau.

Josefa sort. Elle s'assied et fait signe à Hernani de venir près d'elle.
Venez là.

HERNANI (sans l'entendre).
Donc le duc est absent du château?

DOÑA SOL (souriant).
Comme vous êtes grand!

HERNANI.
Il est absent.

DOÑA SOL.
Chère âme,
Ne pensons plus au duc.

HERNANI.
Ah! pensons-y, madame!
Ce vieillard! il vous aime, il va vous épouser!
Quoi donc! vous prit-il pas l’autre jour un baiser?
N’y plus penser!

DOÑA SOL (riant).
C’est là ce qui vous désespère!
Un baiser d’oncle! au front! presque un baiser de père!

HERNANI.
Non. Un baiser d’amant, de mari, de jaloux.
Ah! vous serez à lui, madame! Y pensez-vous?
O l’insensé vieillard, qui, la tête inclinée,
Pour achever sa route et finir sa journée,
A besoin d’une femme, et va, spectre glacé,
Prendre une jeune fille! ô vieillard insensé!
Pendant que d’une main il s’attache à la vôtre,
Ne voit-il pas la mort qui l’épouse de l’autre?
Il vient dans nos amours se jeter sans frayeur!
Vieillard, va-t’en donner mesure au fossoyeur!
— Qui fait ce mariage? On vous force, j’espère!

DOÑA SOL.
Le roi, dit-on, le veut.

HERNANI.
Le roi! le roi! Mon père
Est mort sur l’échafaud, condamné par le sien.
Or, quoiqu’on ait vieilli depuis ce fait ancien,
Pour l’ombre du feu roi, pour son fils, pour sa veuve,
Pour tous les siens, ma haine est encor toute neuve!
Lui, mort, ne compte plus. Et, tout enfant, je fis
Le serment de venger mon père sur son fils.
Je te cherchais partout, Carlos, roi des Castilles!
Car la haine est vivace entre nos deux familles.
Les pères ont lutté sans pitié, sans remords,
Trente ans! Or, c’est en vain que les pères sont morts.

Leur haine vit. Pour eux la paix n'est point venue,
Car les fils sont debout, et le duel continue.
Ah! c'est donc toi qui veux cet exécrable hymen!
Tant mieux. Je te cherchais, tu viens dans mon chemin!

DOÑA SOL.
Vous m'effrayez.

HERNANI.
Chargé d'un mandat d'anathème,
Il faut que j'en arrive à m'effrayer moi-même!
Écoutez. L'homme auquel, jeune, on vous destina,
Ruy de Silva, votre oncle, est duc de Pastrafia,
Riche-homme d'Aragon, comte et grand de Castille.
A défaut de jeunesse, il peut, ô jeune fille,
Vous apporter tant d'or, de bijoux, de joyaux,
Que votre front reluise entre des fronts royaux,
Et pour le rang, l'orgueil, la gloire et la richesse,
Mainte reine peut-être envîra sa duchesse.
Voilà donc ce qu'il est. Moi, je suis pauvre, et n'eus
Tout enfant, que les bois où je fuyais pieds nus.
Peut-être aurais-je aussi quelque blason illustre
Qu'une rouille de sang à cette heure délustre;
Peut-être ai-je des droits, dans l'ombre ensevelis,
Qu'un drap d'échafaud noir cache encor sous ses plis,
Et qui, si mon attente un jour n'est pas trompée,
Pourront de ce fourreau sortir avec l'épée.
En attendant, je n'ai reçu du ciel jaloux
Que l'air, le jour et l'eau, la dot qu'il donne à tous.
Or du duc ou de moi souffrez qu'on vous délivre.
Il faut choisir des deux, l'épouser, ou me suivre.

DOÑA SOL.
Je vous suivrai.

HERNANI.
Parmi mes rudes compagnons?
Proscrits dont le bourreau sait d'avance les noms.

Gens dont jamais le fer ni le coeur ne s'émousse,
Ayant tous quelque sang à venger qui les pousse?
Vous viendrez commander ma bande, comme on dit?
Car, vous ne savez pas, moi, je suis un bandit!
Quand tout me poursuivait dans toutes les Espagnes,
Seule, dans ses forêts, dans ses hautes montagnes,
Dans ses rocs où l'on n'est que de l'aigle aperçu,
La vieille Catalogne en mère m'a reçu.
Parmi ses montagnards, libres, pauvres, et graves,
Je grandis, et demain trois mille de ses braves,
Si ma voix dans leurs monts fait résonner ce cor,
Viendront… Vous frissonnez. Réfléchissez encor.
Me suivre dans les bois, dans les monts, sur les grèves,
Chez des hommes pareils aux démons de vos rêves,
Soupçonner tout, les yeux, les voix, les pas, le bruit,
Dormir sur l'herbe, boire au torrent, et la nuit
Entendre, en allaitant quelque enfant qui s'éveille,
Les balles des mousquets siffler à votre oreille.
Être errante avec moi, proscrite, et, s'il le faut,
Me suivre où je suivrai mon père, — à l'échafaud.

DOÑA SOL.
Je vous suivrai.

HERNANI.
Le duc est riche, grand, prospère.
Le duc n'a pas de tache au vieux nom de son père.
Le duc peut tout. Le duc vous offre avec sa main
Trésors, titres, bonheur…

DOÑA SOL.
Nous partirons demain.
Hernani, n'allez pas sur mon audace étrange
Me blâmer. Etes-vous mon démon ou mon ange?
Je ne sais, mais je suis votre esclave. Écoutez.
Allez où vous voudrez, j'irai. Restez, partez,
Je suis à vous. Pourquoi fais-je ainsi? je l'ignore.

J’ai besoin de vous voir et de vous voir encore
Et de vous voir toujours. Quand le bruit de vos pas
S’efface, alors je crois que mon coeur ne bat pas,
Vous me manquez, je suis absente de moi-même;
Mais dès qu’enfin ce pas que j’attends et que j’aime
Vient frapper mon oreille, alors il me souvient
Que je vis, et je sens mon âme qui revient!

HERNANI (la serrant dans ses bras).
Ange!

DOÑA SOL.
A minuit. Demain. Amenez votre escorte,
Sous ma fenêtre. Allez, je serai brave et forte.
Vous frapperez trois coups.

HERNANI.
Savez-vous qui je suis,
Maintenant?

DOÑA SOL.
Monseigneur, qu’importe! Je vous suis.

HERNANI.
Non, puisque vous voulez me suivre, faible femme,
Il faut que vous sachiez quel nom, quel rang, quelle âme
Quel destin est caché dans le pâtre Hernani.
Vous vouliez d’un brigand, voulez-vous d’un banni?

DON CARLOS (ouvrant avec fracas la porte de l’armoire).
Quand aurez-vous fini de conter votre histoire?
Croyez-vous donc qu’on soit à l’aise en cette armoire?

Hernani recule étonné. Doña Sol pousse un cri et se réfugie dans ses bras, en fixant sur don Carlos des yeux effarés.

HERNANI (la main sur la garde de son épée).
Quel est cet homme?

DOÑA SOL.
O ciel! Au secours!

HERNANI.
Taisez-vous,
Doña Sol! vous donnez l’éveil aux yeux jaloux.
Quand je suis près de vous, veuillez, quoi qu’il advienne,
Ne réclamer jamais d’autre aide que la mienne.

A don Carlos.
Que faisiez-vous là?

DON CARLOS.
Moi? mais, à ce qu’il paraît,
je ne chevauchais pas à travers la forêt.

HERNANI.
Qui raille après l’affront s’expose à faire rire
Aussi son héritier.

DON CARLOS.
Chacun son tour! — Messire,
Parlons franc. Vous aimez madame et ses yeux noirs,
Vous y venez mirer les vôtres tous les soirs,
C’est fort bien. J’aime aussi madame, et veux connaître
Qui j’ai vu tant de fois entrer par la fenêtre,
Tandis que je restais à la porte.

HERNANI.
En honneur,
Je vous ferai sortir par où j’entre, seigneur.

DON CARLOS.
Nous verrons. J’offre donc mon amour à madame.
Partageons. Voulez-vous? J’ai vu dans sa belle âme
Tant d’amour, de bonté, de tendres sentiments,
Que madame à coup sûr en a pour deux amants.
Or, ce soir, voulant mettre à fin mon entreprise,

Pris, je pense, pour vous, j'entre ici par surprise,
Je me cache, j'écoute, à ne vous celer rien;
Mais j'entendais très mal et j'étouffais très bien.
Et puis, je chiffonnais ma veste à la française.
Ma foi, je sors!

HERNANI.
Ma dague aussi n'est pas à l'aise
Et veut sortir.

DON CARLOS (le saluant).
Monsieur, c'est comme il vous plaira.

HERNANI (tirant son épée).
En garde!

Don Carlos tire son épée.

DOÑA SOL (se jetant entre eux).
Hernani! ciel!

DON CARLOS.
Calmez-vous, señora.

HERNANI (à don Carlos).
Dites-moi votre nom.

DON CARLOS.
Hé! dites-moi le vôtre!

HERNANI.
Je le garde, secret et fatal, pour un autre
Qui doit un jour sentir, sous mon genou vainqueur,
Mon nom à son oreille, et ma dague à son coeur!

DON CARLOS.
Alors, quel est le nom de l'autre?

HERNANI.
Que t’importe?
En garde! défends-toi!

Ils croisent leurs épées. Doña Sol tombe tremblante sur un fauteuil. On entend des coups à la porte.

DOÑA SOL (se levant avec effroi).
Ciel! on frappe à la porte!

Les champions s’arrêtent. Entre Josefa par la petite porte et tout effarée.

HERNANI (à Josefa).
Qui frappe ainsi?

DOÑA JOSEFA (à doña Sol).
Madame! un coup inattendu!
C’est le duc qui revient!

DOÑA SOL (joignant les mains).
Le duc! tout est perdu!
Malheureuse!

DOÑA JOSEFA (jetant les yeux autour d’elle).
Jésus! l’inconnu! des épées!
On se battait! Voilà de belles équipées!

Les deux combattants remettent leurs épées dans le fourreau. Don Carlos s’enveloppe dans son manteau et rabat son chapeau sur ses yeux. On frappe.

HERNANI.
Que faire?

On frappe.

UNE VOIX (au dehors).
Doña Sol, ouvrez-moi!

Doña Josefa fait un pas vers la porte. Hernani l’arrête.

HERNANI.
N’ouvrez-pas!

DOÑA JOSEFA (tirant son chapelet).
Saint Jacques monseigneur! tirez-nous de ce pas!

On frappe de nouveau.

HERNANI (montrant l’armoire à Don Carlos).
Cachons-nous.

DON CARLOS.
Dans l’armoire?

HERNANI (montrant la porte).
Entrez-y. Je m’en charge.
Nous y tiendrons tous deux.

DON CARLOS.
Grand merci, c’est trop large!

HERNANI (montrant la petite porte).
Fuyons par là.

DON CARLOS.
Bonsoir. Pour moi, je reste ici.

HERNANI.
Ah! tête et sang! monsieur, vous me paîrez ceci!

A doña Sol.
Si je barricadais l’entrée?

DON CARLOS (à Josefa).
Ouvrez la porte.

HERNANI.
Que dit-il?

DON CARLOS (à Josefa interdite).
Ouvrez donc, vous dis-je!

On frappe toujours. Doña Josefa va ouvrir en tremblant.

DOÑA SOL.
Je suis morte!

SCÈNE III.

LES MEMES. DON RUY GOMEZ DE SILVA, barbe et cheveux blancs; en noir.
VALETS avec des flambeaux.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Des hommes chez ma nièce à cette heure de nuit!
Venez tous! cela vaut la lumière et le bruit.

A doña Sol.
Par saint Jean d'Avila, je crois que, sur mon âme,
Nous sommes trois chez vous! C'est trop de deux, madame.

Aux deux jeunes gens.
Mes jeunes cavaliers, que faites-vous céans?
Quand nous avions le Cid et Bernard, ces géants
De l'Espagne et du monde allaient par les Castilles
Honorant les vieillards et protégeant les filles.
C'étaient des hommes forts et qui trouvaient moins lourds
Leur fer et leur acier que vous votre velours.
Ces hommes-là portaient respect aux barbes grises,
Faisaient agenouiller leur amour aux églises,
Ne trahissaient personne, et donnaient pour raison
Qu'ils avaient à garder l'honneur de leur maison.
S'ils voulaient une femme, ils la prenaient sans tache,
En plein jour, devant tous, et l'épée, ou la hache,
Ou la lance à la main. — Et quant à ces félons
Qui, le soir, et les yeux tournés vers leurs talons,
Ne fiant qu'à la nuit leurs manoeuvres infâmes,
Par derrière aux maris volent l'honneur des femmes,
J'affirme que le Cid, cet aïeul de nous tous,
Les eût tenus pour vils et fait mettre à genoux,
Et qu'il eût, dégradant leur noblesse usurpée,
Souffleté leur blason du plat de son épée!
Voilà ce que feraient, j'y songe avec ennui,

Les hommes d’autrefois aux hommes d’aujourd’hui.
— Qu’êtes-vous venus faire ici? C’est donc à dire
Que je ne suis qu’un vieux dont les jeunes vont rire?
On va rire de moi, soldat de Zamora?
Et quand je passerai, tête blanche, on rira?
Ce n’est pas vous, du moins, qui rirez!

HERNANI.
Duc…

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Silence!
Quoi! vous avez l’épée, et la dague, et la lance,
La chasse, les festins, les meutes, les faucons,
Les chansons à chanter le soir sous les balcons,
Les plumes au chapeau, les casaques de soie,
Les bals, les carrousels, la jeunesse, la joie,
Enfants, l’ennui vous gagne! A toux prix, au hasard,
Il vous faut un hochet. Vous prenez un vieillard.
Ah! vous l’avez brisé, le hochet! mais Dieu fasse
Qu’il vous puisse en éclats rejaillir à la face!
Suivez-moi!

HERNANI.
Seigneur duc…

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Suivez-moi! suivez-moi!
Messieurs, avons-nous fait cela pour rire? Quoi!
Un trésor est chez moi. C’est l’honneur d’une fille,
D’une femme, l’honneur de toute une famille,
Cette fille, je l’aime, elle est ma nièce, et doit
Bientôt changer sa bague à l’anneau de mon doigt,
Je la crois chaste et pure et sacrée à tout homme,
Or il faut que je sorte une heure, et moi qu’on nomme
Ruy Gomez de Silva, je ne puis l’essayer
Sans qu’un larron d’honneur se glisse à mon foyer!
Arrière! lavez donc vos mains, hommes sans âmes,

Car, rien qu'en y touchant, vous nous tachez nos femmes,
Non. C'est bien. Poursuivez. Ai-je autre chose encor?

Il arrache son collier.
Tenez, foulez aux pieds, foulez ma toison d'or!

Il jette son chapeau.
Arrachez mes cheveux, faites-en chose vile!
Et vous pourrez demain vous vanter par la ville
Que jamais débauchés, dans leurs jeux insolents,
N'ont sur plus noble front souillé cheveux plus blancs.

DOÑA SOL.
Monseigneur…

DON RUY GOMEZ (à ses valets).
Écuyers! écuyers! à mon aide!
Ma hache, mon poignard, ma dague de Tolède!

Aux deux jeunes gens.
Et suivez-moi tous deux!

DON CARLOS (faisant un pas).
Duc, ce n'est pas d'abord
De cela qu'il s'agit. Il s'agit de la mort
De Maximilien, empereur d'Allemagne.

Il jette son manteau, et découvre son visage caché par son chapeau.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Raillez-vous?… — Dieu! le roi!

DOÑA SOL.
Le roi!

HERNANI (dont les yeux s'allument).
Le roi d'Espagne!

DON CARLOS (gravement).
Oui, Carlos. — Seigneur duc, es-tu donc insensé?
Mon aïeul l'empereur est mort. Je ne le sai
Que de ce soir. Je viens, tout en hâte, et moi-même,
Dire la chose, à toi, féal sujet que j'aime,
Te demander conseil, incognito, la nuit,
Et l'affaire est bien simple, et voilà bien du bruit!

Don Ruy Gomez renvoie ses gens d'un signe. Il s'approche de don Carlos que doña Sol examine avec crainte et surprise, et sur lequel Hernani demeuré dans un coin fixe des yeux étincelants.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Mais pourquoi tarder tant à m'ouvrir cette porte?

DON CARLOS.
Belle raison! tu viens avec toute une escorte!
Quand un secret d'État m'amène en ton palais,
Duc, est-ce pour l'aller dire à tous tes valets!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Altesse, pardonnez! l'apparence…

DON CARLOS.
Bon père,
Je t'ai fait gouverneur du château de Figuère,
Mais qui dois-je à présent faire ton gouverneur?

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Pardonnez…

DON CARLOS.
Il suffit. N'en parlons plus, seigneur.
Donc l'empereur est mort.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
L'aïeul de votre altesse
Est mort?

DON CARLOS.
Duc, tu m’en vois pénétré de tristesse.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Qui lui succède?

DON CARLOS.
Un duc de Saxe est sur les rangs.
François premier, de France, est un des concurrents.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Où vont se rassembler les électeurs d’empire?

DON CARLOS.
Ils ont choisi, je crois, Aix-la-Chapelle, ou Spire,
Ou Francfort.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Notre roi, dont Dieu garde les jours,
N’a-t-il pensé jamais à l’empire?

DON CARLOS.
Toujours.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
C’est à vous qu’il revient.

DON CARLOS.
Je le sais.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Votre père
Fut archiduc d’Autriche, et l’empire, j’espère,
Aura ceci présent, que c’était votre aïeul,
Celui qui vient de choir de la pourpre au linceul.

DON CARLOS.
Et puis, on est bourgeois de Gand.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Dans mon jeune âge
Je le vis, votre aïeul. Hélas! seul je surnage
D’un siècle tout entier. Tout est mort à présent.
C’était un empereur magnifique et puissant.

DON CARLOS.
Rome est pour moi.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Vaillant, ferme, point tyrannique,
Cette tête allait bien au vieux corps germanique!

Il s’incline sur les mains du roi et les baise.
Que je vous plains! Si jeune, en un tel deuil plongé!

DON CARLOS.
Le pape veut ravoir la Sicile, que j’ai,
Un empereur ne peut posséder la Sicile,
Il me fait empereur, alors, en fils docile,
Je lui rends Naple. Ayons l’aigle, et puis nous verrons
Si je lui laisserai rogner les ailerons!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Qu’avec joie il verrait, ce vétéran du trône,
Votre front déjà large aller à sa couronne!
Ah! seigneur, avec vous nous le pleurerons bien,
Cet empereur très grand, très bon et très chrétien!

DON CARLOS.
Le saint-père est adroit. — Qu’est-ce que la Sicile?
C’est une île qui pend à mon royaume, une île,
Une pièce, un haillon, qui, tout déchiqueté,
Tient à peine à l’Espagne et qui traîne à côté.
— Que ferez-vous, mon fils, de cette île bossue
Au monde impérial au bout d’un fil cousue?
Votre empire est mal fait; vite, venez ici,
Des ciseaux! et coupons! — Très saint-père, merci!

Car de ces pièces-là, si j’ai bonne fortune,
Je compte au saint-empire en recoudre plus d’une,
Et, si quelques lambeaux m’en étaient arrachés,
Rapiécer mes états d’îles et de duchés!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Consolez-vous! il est un empire des justes
Où l’on revoit les morts plus saints et plus augustes!

DON CARLOS.
Ce roi François premier, c’est un ambitieux!
Le vieil empereur mort, vite il fait les doux yeux
A l’empire! A-t-il pas sa France très chrétienne?
Ah! la part est pourtant belle, et vaut qu’on s’y tienne!
L’empereur mon aïeul disait au roi Louis:
— Si j’étais Dieu le Père, et si j’avais deux fils,
Je ferais l’aîné Dieu, le second roi de France.

Au duc.
Crois-tu que François puisse avoir quelque espérance?

DON RUY GOMEZ.
C’est un victorieux.

DON CARLOS.
Il faudrait tout changer.
La bulle d’or défend d’élire un étranger.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
A ce compte, seigneur, vous êtes roi d’Espagne!

DON CARLOS.
Je suis bourgeois de Gand.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
La dernière campagne
A fait monter bien haut le roi François premier.

DON CARLOS.
L’aigle qui va peut-être éclore à mon cimier
Peut aussi déployer ses ailes.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Votre altesse
Sait-elle le latin?

DON CARLOS.
Mal.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Tant pis. La noblesse
D’Allemagne aime fort qu’on lui parle latin.

DON CARLOS.
Ils se contenteront d’un espagnol hautain;
Car il importe peu, croyez-en le roi Charle,
Quand la voix parle haut, quelle langue elle parle.
— Je vais en Flandre. Il faut que ton roi, cher Silva,
Te revienne empereur. Le roi de France va
Tout remuer. Je veux le gagner de vitesse.
Je partirai sous peu.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Vous nous quittez, altesse,
Sans purger l’Aragon de ces nouveaux bandits
Qui partout dans nos monts lèvent leurs fronts hardis?

DON CARLOS.
J’ordonne au duc d’Arcos d’exterminer la bande.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Donnez-vous aussi l’ordre au chef qui la commande
De se laisser faire?

DON CARLOS.
Eh! quel est ce chef? son nom?

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Je l’ignore. On le dit un rude compagnon.

DON CARLOS.
Bah! je sais que pour l’heure il se cache en Galice,
Et j’en aurai raison avec quelque milice.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
De faux avis alors le disaient près d’ici.

DON CARLOS.
Faux avis! — Cette nuit, tu me loges.

DON RUY GOMEZ (s’inclinant jusqu’à terre).
Merci, Altesse!

Il appelle ses valets.
Faites tous honneur au roi mon hôte.

Les valets rentrent avec des flambeaux. Le duc les range sur deux haies jusqu’à la porte du fond. Cependant doña Sol s’approche lentement d’Hernani. Le roi les épie tous deux.

DOÑA SOL (bas à Hernani).
Demain, sous ma fenêtre, à minuit, et sans faute.
Vous frapperez des mains trois fois.

HERNANI (bas).
Demain.

DON CARLOS (à part).
Demain!

Haut à doña Sol vers laquelle il fait un pas avec galanterie.
Souffrez que pour rentrer je vous offre la main.

Il la reconduit à la porte. Elle sort.

HERNANI (la main dans sa poitrine sur la poignée de sa dague).
Mon bon poignard!

DON CARLOS (revenant, à part).
Notre homme a la mine attrapée.

Il prend à part Hernani.
Je vous ai fait l’honneur de toucher votre épée,
Monsieur. Vous me seriez suspect pour cent raisons.
Mais le roi don Carlos répugne aux trahisons.
Allez. Je daigne encore protéger votre fuite.

DON RUY GOMEZ (revenant et montrant Hernani).
Qu’est ce seigneur?

DON CARLOS.
Il part. C’est quelqu’un de ma suite.

Ils sortent avec les valets et les flambeaux, le duc précédant le roi, une cire à la main.

SCÈNE IV.

HERNANI (seul).
Oui, de ta suite, ô roi! de ta suite! — J’en suis!
Nuit et jour, en effet, pas à pas, je te suis.
Un poignard à la main, l’oeil fixé sur ta trace,
Je vais. Ma race en moi poursuit en toi ta race.
Et puis, te voilà donc mon rival! Un instant
Entre aimer et haïr je suis resté flottant,
Mon coeur pour elle et toi n’était point assez large,
J’oubliais en l’aimant ta haine qui me charge:
Mais puisque tu le veux, puisque c’est toi qui viens
Me faire souvenir, c’est bon, je me souviens!
Mon amour fait pencher la balance incertaine
Et tombe tout entier du côté de ma haine.
Oui, je suis de ta suite, et c’est toi qui l’as dit!
Va, jamais courtisan de ton lever maudit,
jamais seigneur baisant ton ombre, ou majordome
Ayant à te servir abjuré son coeur d’homme, jamais chiens de palais dressés à suivre un roi
Ne seront sur tes pas plus assidus que moi!
Ce qu’ils veulent de toi, tous ces grands de Castille,
C’est quelque titre creux, quelque hochet qui brille,
C’est quelque mouton d’or qu’on se va pendre au cou;
Moi, pour vouloir si peu je ne suis pas si fou!
Ce que je veux de toi, ce n’est point faveurs vaines,
C’est l’âme de ton corps, c’est le sang de tes veines,
C’est tout ce qu’un poignard, furieux et vainqueur,
En y fouillant longtemps peut prendre au fond d’un coeur.
Va devant! je te suis. Ma vengeance qui veille
Avec moi toujours marche et me parle à l’oreille.
Va! je suis là, j’épie et j’écoute, et sans bruit
Mon pas cherche ton pas et le presse et le suit.
Le jour tu ne pourras, ô roi, tourner la tête
Sans me voir immobile et sombre dans ta fête;

La nuit tu ne pourras tourner les yeux, ô roi,
Sans voir mes yeux ardents luire derrière toi!

Il sort par la petite porte.

ACTE DEUXIÈME - LE BANDIT.

SARAGOSSE.

Un patio du palais de Silva. A gauche, les grands murs du palais, avec une fenêtre à balcon. Au-dessous de la fenêtre, une petite porte. A droite et au fond, des maisons et des rues. Il est nuit. On voit briller ça et là, aux façades des édifices, quelques fenêtres encore éclairées.

SCÈNE PREMIÈRE.

DON CARLOS, DON SANCHO SANCHEZ DE ZUNIGA, COMTE DE MONTEREY, DON MATIAS CENTURION, MARQUIS D'ALMUÑAN, DON RICARDO DE ROXAS, SEIGNEUR DE CASAPALMA.

Ils arrivent tous quatre, don Carlos en tête, chapeaux rabattus, enveloppés de longs manteaux dont leurs épées soulèvent le bord inférieur.

DON CARLOS (examinant le balcon).
Voilà bien le balcon, la porte… Mon sang bout.

Montrant la fenêtre qui n'est pas éclairée.
Pas de lumière encor!

Il promène ses yeux sur les autres croisées éclairées.
Des lumières partout
Où je n'en voudrais pas, hors à cette fenêtre
Où j'en voudrais!

DON SANCHO.
Seigneur, reparlons de ce traître.
Et vous l'avez laissé partir!

DON CARLOS.
Comme tu dis.

DON MATIAS.
Et peut-être c'était le major des bandits!

DON CARLOS.
Qu'il en soit le major ou bien le capitaine,
Jamais roi couronné n'eut mine plus hautaine.

DON SANCHO.
Son nom, seigneur?

DON CARLOS (les yeux fixés sur la fenêtre).
Mufioz… Fernan…

Avec le geste d’un homme qui se rappelle tout à coup.
Un nom en i.

DON SANCHO.
Hernani, peut-être?

DON CARLOS.
Oui.

DON SANCHO.
C’est lui!

DON MATIAS.
C’est Hernani?
Le chef!

DON SANCHO (au roi).
De ses propos vous reste-t-il mémoire?

DON CARLOS (qui ne quitte pas la fenêtre des yeux).
Hé! je n’entendais rien dans leur maudite armoire!

DON SANCHO.
Mais pourquoi le lâcher lorsque vous le tenez?

Don Carlos se tourne gravement et le regarde en face.

DON CARLOS.
Comte de Monterey, vous me questionnez.

Les deux seigneurs reculent et se taisent.
Et d’ailleurs ce n’est point le souci qui m’arrête.
J’en veux à sa maîtresse et non point à sa tête.
J’en suis amoureux fou! Les yeux noirs les plus beaux,
Mes amis! deux miroirs! deux rayons! deux flambeaux!
Je n’ai rien entendu de toute leur histoire

Que ces trois mots: Demain, venez à la nuit noire!
Mais c’est l’essentiel. Est-ce pas excellent?
Pendant que ce bandit, à mine de galant,
S’attarde à quelque meurtre, à creuser quelque tombe,
Je viens tout doucement dénicher sa colombe.

DON RICARDO.
Altesse, il eût fallu, pour compléter le tour,
Dénicher la colombe en tuant le vautour.

DON CARLOS (à don Ricardo).
Comte! un digne conseil! vous avez la main prompte!

DON RICARDO (s’inclinant profondément).
Sous quel titre plaît-il au roi que je sois comte?

DON SANCHO (vivement).
C’est méprise!

DON RICARDO (à don Sancho).
Le roi m’a nommé comte.

DON CARLOS.
Assez!
Bien.

A Ricardo.
J’ai laissé tomber ce titre. Ramassez.

DON RIARCDO (s’inclinant de nouveau).
Merci, seigneur!

DON SANCHO (à don Matias).
Beau comte! un comte de surprise.

Le roi se promène au fond, examinant avec impatience les fenêtres éclairées. Les deux seigneurs causent sur le devant.

DON MATIAS (à don Sancho).
Mais que fera le roi, la belle une fois prise?

DON SANCHO (regardant Ricardo de travers).
Il la fera comtesse, et puis dame d’honneur.
Puis, qu’il en ait un fils, il sera roi.

DON MATIAS.
Seigneur,
Allons donc! un bâtard! Comte, fût-on altesse,
On ne saurait tirer un roi d’une comtesse!

DON SANCHO.
Il la fera marquise, alors, mon cher marquis.

DON MATIAS.
On garde les bâtards pour les pays conquis.
On les fait vice-rois. C’est à cela qu’ils servent.

Don Carlos revient.

DON CARLOS (regardant avec colère toutes les fenêtres éclairées).
Dirait-on pas des yeux jaloux qui nous observent?
Enfin! en voilà deux qui s’éteignent! allons!
Messieurs, que les instants de l’attente sont longs!
Qui fera marcher l’heure avec plus de vitesse?

DON SANCHO.
C’est ce que nous disons souvent chez votre altesse.

DON CARLOS.
Cependant que chez vous mon peuple le redit.

La dernière fenêtre éclairée s’éteint.
— La dernière est éteinte!

Tourné vers le balcon de doña Sol toujours noir.
O vitrage maudit!

Quand t'éclaireras-tu? — Cette nuit est bien sombre.
Doña Sol, viens briller comme un astre dans l'ombre!

A don Ricardo.
Est-il minuit?

DON RICARDO.
Minuit bientôt.

DON CARLOS.
Il faut finir
Pourtant! A tout moment l'autre peut survenir.

La fenêtre de doña Sol s'éclaire. On voit son ombre se dessiner sur les vitraux lumineux.
Mes amis! un flambeau! son ombre à la fenêtre!
Jamais jour ne me fut plus charmant à voir naître.
Hâtons-nous! faisons-lui le signal qu'elle attend.
Il faut frapper des mains trois fois. Dans un instant,
Mes amis, vous allez la voir! — Mais notre nombre
Va l'effrayer peut-être… Allez tous trois dans l'ombre
Là-bas, épier l'autre. Amis, partageons-nous
Les deux amants. Tenez, à moi la dame, à vous
Le brigand.

DON RICARDO.
Grand merci!

DON CARLOS.
S'il vient, de l'embuscade
Sortez vite, et poussez au drôle une estocade.
Pendant qu'il reprendra ses esprits sur le grès,
J'emporterai la belle, et nous rirons après,
N'allez pas cependant le tuer! c'est un brave
Après tout, et la mort d'un homme est chose grave.

Les deux seigneurs s'inclinent et sortent. Don Carlos les laisse s'éloigner, puis frappe des mains à deux reprises. A la deuxième fois la fenêtre s’ouvre, et dama Sol paraît sur le balcon.

SCÈNE II.

DON CARLOS, DOÑA SOL.

DOÑA SOL (au balcon).
Est-ce vous, Hernani?

DON CARLOS (à part).
Diable! Ne parlons pas!

Il frappe de nouveau des mains.

DOÑA SOL.
Je descends.

Elle referme la fenêtre, dont la lumière disparaît. Un moment après, la petite porte s'ouvre, et doña Sol en sort, une lampe à la main, sa mante sur les épaules.

DOÑA SOL.
Hernani!

Don Carlos rabat son chapeau sur son visage, et s'avance précipitamment vers elle.

DOÑA SOL (laissant tomber sa lampe).
Dieu! ce n'est point son pas!

Elle veut rentrer. Don Carlos court à elle et la retient par le bras.

DON CARLOS.
Doña Sol!

DOÑA SOL.
Ce n'est point sa voix! Ah! malheureuse!

DON CARLOS.
Eh! quelle voix veux-tu qui soit plus amoureuse?
C’est toujours un amant, et c’est un amant roi!

DOÑA SOL.
Le roi!

DON CARLOS.
Souhaite, ordonne, un royaume est à toi!
Car celui dont tu veux briser la douce entrave,
C’est le roi ton seigneur, c’est Carlos ton esclave!

DOÑA SOL (cherchant à se dégager de ses bras).
Au secours, Hernani!

DON CARLOS.
Le juste et digne effroi!
Ce n’est pas ton bandit qui te tient, c’est le roi.

DOÑA SOL.
Non. Le bandit, c’est vous! N’avez-vous pas de honte?
Ah! pour vous à la face une rougeur me monte.
Sont-ce là les exploits dont le roi fera bruit?
Venir ravir de force une femme la nuit!
Que mon bandit vaut mieux cent fois! Roi, je proclame
Que, si l’homme naissait où le place son âme,
Si Dieu faisait le rang à la hauteur du coeur,
Certe, il serait le roi, prince, et vous le voleur!

DON CARLOS (essayant de l’attirer).
Madame…

DOÑA SOL.
Oubliez-vous que mon père était comte?

DON CARLOS.
Je vous ferai duchesse.

DOÑA SOL (le repoussant).
Allez! c’est une honte!

Elle recule de quelques pas.
Il ne peut être rien entre nous, don Carlos.
Mon vieux père a pour vous versé son sang à flots.
Moi je suis fille noble, et de ce sang jalouse.
Trop pour la concubine, et trop peu pour l’épouse!

DON CARLOS.
Princesse?

DOÑA SOL.
Roi Carlos, à des filles de rien
Portez votre amourette, ou je pourrais fort bien,
Si vous m’osez traiter d’une façon infâme,
Vous montrer que je suis dame, et que je suis femme.

DON CARLOS.
Eh bien, partagez donc et mon trône et mon nom.
Venez. Vous serez reine, impératrice!…

DOÑA SOL.
Non.
C’est un leurre. Et d’ailleurs, altesse, avec franchise,
S’agît-il pas de vous, s’il faut que je le dise,
J’aime mieux avec lui, mon Hernani, mon roi,
Vivre errante, en dehors du monde et de la loi,
Ayant faim, avant soif, fuyant toute l’année,
Partageant jour à jour sa pauvre destinée,
Abandon, guerre, exil, deuil, misère et terreur,
Que d’être impératrice avec un empereur!

DON CARLOS.
Que cet homme est heureux!

DOÑA SOL.
Quoi! pauvre, proscrit même!

DON CARLOS.
Qu’il fait bien d’être pauvre et proscrit, puis qu’on l’aime!
Moi, je suis seul! Un ange accompagne ses pas!
— Donc vous me haïssez?

DOÑA SOL.
Je ne vous aime pas.

DON CARLOS (la saisissant avec violence).
Eh bien, que vous m’aimiez ou non, cela n’importe!
Vous viendrez, et ma main plus que la vôtre est forte.
Vous viendrez! je vous veux! Pardieu, nous verrons bien
Si je suis roi d’Espagne et des Indes pour rien!

DOÑA SOL (se débattant).
Seigneur! oh! par pitié! — Quoi! vous êtes altesse,
Vous êtes roi. Duchesse, ou marquise, ou comtesse,
Vous n’avez qu’à choisir. Les femmes de la cour
Ont toujours un amour tout prêt pour votre amour.
Mais mon proscrit, qu’a-t-il reçu du ciel avare?
Ah! vous avez Castille, Aragon et Navarre,
Et Murcie, et Léon, dix royaumes encor,
Et les Flamands, et l’Inde avec les mines d’or!
Vous avez un empire auquel nul roi ne touche,
Si vaste que jamais le soleil ne s’y couche!
Et, quand vous avez tout, voudrez-vous, vous le roi,
Me prendre, pauvre fille, à lui qui n’a que moi?

Elle se jette à ses genoux. Il cherche à l’entraîner.

DON CARLOS.
Viens! Je n’écoute rien. Viens! Si tu m’accompagnes,
Je te donne, choisis, quatre de mes Espagnes.
Dis, lesquelles veux-tu? Choisis!

Elle se débat dans ses bras.

DOÑA SOL.

Pour mon honneur,
Je ne veux rien de vous que ce poignard, seigneur!

Elle lui arrache le poignard de sa ceinture. Il la lâche et recule.

Avancez maintenant! faites un pas!

DON CARLOS.

La belle!
Je ne m’étonne plus si l’on aime un rebelle!

Il veut faire un pas. Elle lève le poignard.

DOÑA SOL.

Pour un pas, je vous tue, et me tue.

Il recule encore. Elle se détourne et crie avec force

Hernani! Hernani!

DON CARLOS.

Taisez-vous!

DOÑA SOL (le poignard levé).

Un pas! tout est fini.

DON CARLOS.

Madame! à cet excès ma douceur est réduite.
J’ai là pour vous forcer trois hommes de ma suite…

HERNANI (surgissant tout à coup derrière lui).

Vous en oubliez un!

Le roi se retourne, et voit Hernani immobile derrière lui dans l’ombre, les bras croisés sous le long manteau qui l’enveloppe, et le large bord de son chapeau relevé. Doña Sol pousse un cri, court à Hernani et l’entoure de ses bras.

SCENE III.

DON CARLOS, DOÑA SOL, HERNANI.

HERNANI (immobile, les bras toujours croisés, et ses yeux étincelants fixés sur le roi).
Ah! le ciel m'est témoin
Que volontiers je l'eusse été chercher plus loin!

DOÑA SOL.
Hernani, sauvez-moi de lui!

HERNANI.
Soyez tranquille,
Mon amour!

DON CARLOS.
Que font donc mes amis par la ville?
Avoir laissé passer ce chef de bohémiens!

Appelant.
Monterey!

HERNANI.
Vos amis sont au pouvoir des miens.
Et ne réclamez pas leur épée impuissante,
Pour trois qui vous viendraient, il m'en viendrait soixante.
Soixante dont un seul vous vaut tous quatre. Ainsi
Vidons entre nous deux notre querelle ici.
Quoi! vous portiez la main sur cette jeune fille!
C'était d'un imprudent, seigneur roi de Castille,
Et d'un lâche!

DON CARLOS (souriant avec dédain).
Seigneur bandit, de vous à moi
Pas de reproche!

HERNANI.
Il raille! Oh! je ne suis pas roi;
Mais quand un roi m'insulte et pour surcroît me raille;

Ma colère va haut et me monte à sa taille,
Et, prenez garde, on craint, quand on me fait affront,
Plus qu'un cimier de roi la rougeur de mon front!
Vous êtes insensé si quelque espoir vous leurre.

Il lui saisit le bras.
Savez-vous quelle main vous étreint à cette heure?
Écoutez. Votre père a fait mourir le mien,
Je vous hais. Vous avez pris mon titre et mon bien,
Je vous hais. Nous aimons tous deux la même femme,
Je vous hais, je vous hais, — oui, je te hais dans l'âme!

DON CARLOS.
C'est bien.

HERNANI.
Ce soir pourtant ma haine était bien loin.
Je n'avais qu'un désir, qu'une ardeur, qu'un besoin,
Doña Sol! — Plein d'amour, j'accourais… Sur mon âme!
Je vous trouve essayant contre elle un rapt infâme!
Quoi! vous que j'oubliais, sur ma route placé!
Seigneur, je vous le dis, vous êtes insensé!
Don Carlos, te voilà pris dans ton propre piège.
Ni fuite, ni secours! je te tiens et t'assiège!
Seul, entouré partout d'ennemis acharnés,
Que vas-tu faire?

DON CARLOS (fièrement).
Allons! vous me questionnez!

HERNANI.
Va, va, je ne veux pas qu'un bras obscur te frappe.
Il ne sied pas qu'ainsi ma vengeance m'échappe.
Tu ne seras touché par un autre que moi.
Défends-toi donc.

Il tire son épée.

DON CARLOS.
Je suis votre seigneur le roi.
Frappez. Mais pas de duel.

HERNANI.
Seigneur, qu’il te souvienne
Qu’hier encor ta dague a rencontré la mienne.

DON CARLOS.
Je le pouvais hier. J’ignorais votre nom,
Vous ignoriez mon titre. Aujourd’hui, compagnon,
Vous savez qui je suis et je sais qui vous êtes.

HERNANI.
Peut-être.

DON CARLOS.
Pas de duel. Assassinez-moi. Faites.

HERNANI.
Crois-tu donc que les rois à moi me sont sacrés?
Çà, te défendras-tu?

DON CARLOS.
Vous m’assassinerez!

Hernani recule. Don Carlos fixe des yeux d’aigle sur lui.
Ah! vous croyez, bandits, que vos brigades viles
Pourront impunément s’épandre dans les villes?
Que teints de sang, chargés de meurtres, malheureux!
Vous pourrez après tout faire les généreux,
Et que nous daignerons, nous, victimes trompées,
Ennoblir vos poignards du choc de nos épées?
Non, le crime vous tient. Partout vous le traînez.
Nous, des duels avec vous! arrière! assassinez.

Hernani, sombre et pensif, tourmente quelques instants de la main la poignée de son épée, puis se retourne brusquement vers le roi, et brise la lame sur le pavé.

HERNANI.
Va-t’en donc!

Le roi se tourne à demi vers lui et le regarde avec hauteur.
Nous aurons des rencontres meilleures.
Va-t’en.

DON CARLOS.
C’est bien, monsieur. Je vais dans quelques heures
Rentrer, moi votre roi, dans le palais ducal.
Mon premier soin sera de mander le fiscal.
A-t-on fait mettre à prix votre tête?

HERNANI.
Oui.

DON CARLOS.
Mon maître,
Je vous tiens de ce jour sujet rebelle et traître.
Je vous en avertis, partout je vous poursuis.
Je vous fais mettre au ban du royaume.

HERNANI.
J’y suis
Déjà.

DON CARLOS.
Bien.

HERNANI.
Mais la France est auprès de l’Espagne.
C’est un port.

DON CARLOS.
Je vais être empereur d’Allemagne.
Je vous fais mettre au ban de l’empire.

HERNANI.
A ton gré.
J’ai le reste du monde où je te braverai.
Il est plus d’un asile où ta puissance tombe.

DON CARLOS.
Et quand j’aurai le monde?

HERNANI.
Alors j’aurai la tombe.

DON CARLOS.
Je saurai déjouer vos complots insolents.

HERNANI.
La vengeance est boiteuse, elle vient à pas lents,
Mais elle vient.

DON CARLOS (riant à demi, avec dédain).
Toucher à la dame qu’adore
Ce bandit!

HERNANI (dont les yeux se rallument).
Songes-tu que je te tiens encore?
Ne me rappelle pas, futur césar romain,
Que je t’ai là, chétif et petit dans ma main,
Et que si je serrais cette main trop loyale
J’écraserais dans l’oeuf ton aigle impériale!

DON CARLOS.
Faites.

HERNANI.
Va-t’en! va-t’en!

Il ôte son manteau et le jette sur les épaules du roi.
Fuis, et prends ce manteau.
Car dans nos rangs pour toi je crains quelque couteau.

Le roi s’enveloppe du manteau.
Pars tranquille à présent. Ma vengeance altérée
Pour tout autre que moi fait ta tête sacrée.

DON CARLOS.
Monsieur, vous qui venez de me parler ainsi,
Ne demandez un jour ni grâce ni merci!

Il sort.

SCÈNE IV.

HERNANI, DOÑA SOL.

DOÑA SOL (saisissant la main d'Hernani).
Maintenant, fuyons vite.

HERNANI (la repoussant avec une douceur grave).
Il vous sied, mon amie,
D'être dans mon malheur toujours plus raffermie,
De n'y point renoncer, et de vouloir toujours
Jusqu'au fond, jusqu'au bout, accompagner mes jours.
C'est un noble dessein, digne d'un coeur fidèle!
Mais, tu le vois, mon Dieu, pour tant accepter d'elle,
Pour emporter joyeux dans mon antre avec moi
Ce trésor de beauté qui rend jaloux un roi,
Pour que ma doña Sol me suive et m'appartienne,
Pour lui prendre sa vie et la joindre à la mienne,
Pour l'entraîner sans honte encore et sans regrets,
Il n'est plus temps; je vois l'échafaud de trop près.

DOÑA SOL.
Que dites-vous?

HERNANI.
Ce roi que je bravais en face
Va me punir d'avoir osé lui faire grâce.
Il fuit; déjà peut-être il est dans son palais.
Il appelle ses gens, ses gardes, ses valets,
Ses seigneurs, ses bourreaux…

DOÑA SOL.
Hernani! Dieu! je tremble.
Eh bien! hâtons-nous donc alors! fuyons ensemble!

HERNANI.
Ensemble! non, non. L'heure en est passée. Hélas!

Doña Sol, à mes yeux quand tu te révélas
Bonne, et daignant m’aimer d’un amour secourable,
J’ai bien pu vous offrir, moi, pauvre misérable,
Ma montagne, mon bois, mon torrent, — ta pitié
M’enhardissait, — mon pain de proscrit, la moitié
Du lit vert et touffu que la forêt me donne;
Mais t’offrir la moitié de l’échafaud! pardonne,
Doña Sol! l’échafaud, c’est à moi seul!

DOÑA SOL.
Pourtant
Vous me l’aviez promis!

HERNANI (tombant à ses genoux).
Ange! ah! dans cet instant
Où la mort vient peut-être, où s’approche dans l’ombre
Un sombre dénoûment pour un destin bien sombre,
Je le déclare ici, proscrit, traînant au flanc
Un souci profond, né dans un berceau sanglant,
Si noir que soit le deuil qui s’épand sur ma vie,
Je suis un homme heureux et je veux qu’on m’envie;
Car vous m’avez aimé! car vous me l’avez dit!
Car vous avez tout bas béni mon front maudit!

DOÑA SOL (penchée sur sa tête).
Hernani!

HERNANI.
Loué soit le sort doux et propice
Qui me mit cette fleur au bord du précipice!

Il se relève.
Et ce n’est pas pour vous que je parle en ce lieu,
Je parle pour le ciel qui m’écoute, et pour Dieu.

DOÑA SOL.
Souffre que je te suive.

HERNANI.
Ah! ce serait un crime
Que d’arracher la fleur en tombant dans l’abîme.
Va, j’en ai respiré le parfum, c’est assez!
Renoue à d’autres jours tes jours par moi froissés.
Epouse ce vieillard. C’est moi qui te délie.
Je rentre dans ma nuit. Toi, soit heureuse, oublie!

DOÑA SOL.
Non, je te suis! je veux ma part de ton linceul!
Je m’attache à tes pas.

HERNANI (la serrant dans ses bras).
Oh! laisse-moi fuir seul.

Il la quitte avec un mouvement convulsif.

DOÑA SOL (douloureusement et joignant les mains).
Hernani! tu me fuis! Ainsi donc, insensée,
Avoir donné sa vie, et se voir repoussée,
Et n’avoir, après tant d’amour et tant d’ennui,
Pas même le bonheur de mourir près de lui!

HERNANI.
Je suis banni! je suis proscrit! je suis funeste!

DOÑA SOL.
Ah! vous êtes ingrat!

HERNANI (revenant sur ses pas).
Eh bien, non! non, je reste,
Tu le veux, me voici. Viens, oh! viens dans mes bras!
Je reste, et resterai tant que tu le voudras.
Oublions-les! restons.

Il s’assied sur un banc.
Sieds-toi sur cette pierre.

Il se place à ses pieds.

Des flammes de tes yeux inonde ma paupière,
Chante-moi quelque chant comme parfois le soir
Tu m’en chantais, avec des pleurs dans ton oeil noir.
Soyons heureux! buvons, car la coupe est remplie,
Car cette heure est à nous, et le reste est folie.
Parle-moi, ravis-moi. N’est-ce pas qu’il est doux
D’aimer et de savoir qu’on vous aime à genoux?
D’être deux? d’être seuls? et que c’est douce chose
De se parler d’amour la nuit quand tout repose?
Oh! laisse-moi dormir et rêver sur ton sein,
Doña Sol! mon amour! ma beauté!

Bruit de cloches au loin.

DOÑA SOL (se levant effarée).

Le tocsin!
Entends-tu? le tocsin!

HERNANI (toujours à genoux).

Eh non! c’est notre noce
Qu’on sonne.

Le bruit de cloches augmente. Cris confus, flambeaux et lumières à toutes les fenêtres, sur tous les toits, dans toutes les rues.

DOÑA SOL.

Lève-toi! fuis! Grand Dieu! Saragosse
S’allume!

HERNANI (se soulevant à demi).

Nous aurons une noce aux flambeaux.

DOÑA SOL.

C’est la noce des morts! la noce des tombeaux!

Bruit d’épées. Cris.

HERNANI (se recouchant sur le banc de pierre).
Rendormons-nous!

UN MONTAGNARD (L'épée à la main, accourant).
Seigneur, les sbires, les alcades,
Débouchent dans la place en longues cavalcades!
Alerte, monseigneur!

Hernani se lève.

DOÑA SOL (pale).
Ah! tu l'avais bien dit!

LE MONTAGNARD.
Au secours!

HERNANI (au montagnard).
Me voici. C'est bien.

CRIS CONFUS (au dehors).
Mort au bandit!

HERNANI (au montagnard).
Ton épée.

A doña Sol.
Adieu donc!

DOÑA SOL.
C'est moi qui fais ta perte!
Où vas-tu?

Lui montrant la petite porte.
Viens! Fuyons par cette porte ouverte.

HERNANI.
Dieu! laisser mes amis! que dis-tu?

Tumulte et cris.

DOÑA SOL.
Ces clameurs
Me brisent.

Retenant Hernani.
Souviens-toi que si tu meurs, je meurs!

HERNANI (la tenant embrassée).
Un baiser!

DOÑA SOL.
Mon époux! mon Hernani! mon maître!

HERNANI (la baisant au front).
Hélas! c’est le premier.

DOÑA SOL.
C’est le dernier peut-être.

Il part. Elle tombe sur le banc.

ACTE TROISIÈME - LE VIEILLARD.

LE CHATEAU DE SILVA DANS LES MONTAGNES D'ARAGON.

La galerie des portraits de la famille de Silva; grande salle, dont ces portraits, entourés de riches bordures, et surmontés de couronnes ducales et d'écussons dorés, font la décoration. Au fond une haute porte gothique. Entre chaque portrait une panoplie complète; toutes ces armures des siècles différents.

SCÈNE PREMIÈRE.

DOÑA SOL, blanche, et debout près d'une table; DON RUY GOMEZ DE SILVA, assis dans son grand fauteuil ducal en bois de chêne.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Enfin! c'est aujourd'hui! dans une heure on sera
Ma duchesse! plus d'oncle! et l'on m'embrassera!
Mais m'as-tu pardonné? J'avais tort, je l'avoue.
J'ai fait rougir ton front, j'ai fait pâlir ta joue.
J'ai soupçonné trop vite, et je n'aurais point dû
Te condamner ainsi sans avoir entendu.
Que l'apparence a tort! Injustes que nous sommes!
Certe, ils étaient bien là, les deux beaux jeunes hommes.
C'est égal. Je devais n'en pas croire mes yeux.
Mais que veux-tu, ma pauvre enfant? quand on est vieux!

DOÑA SOL (immobile et grave).
Vous reparlez toujours de cela. Qui vous blâme?

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Moi! J'eus tort. Je devais savoir qu'avec ton âme
On n'a point de galants lorsqu'on est doña Sol,
Et qu'on a dans le coeur de bon sang espagnol.

DOÑA SOL.
Certe, il est bon et pur, monseigneur, et peut-être
On le verra bientôt.

DON RUY GOMEZ (se levant et allant à elle).
Écoute, on n'est pas maître
De soi-même, amoureux comme je suis de toi,
Et vieux. On est jaloux, on est méchant, pourquoi?
Parce que l'on est vieux. Parce que beauté, grâce,
Jeunesse, dans autrui, tout fait peur, tout menace.
Parce qu'on est jaloux des autres, et honteux
De soi. Dérision! que cet amour boiteux,

Qui nous remet au coeur tant d’ivresse et de flamme,
Ait oublié le corps en rajeunissant l’âme!
— Quand passe un jeune pâtre — oui, c’en est là! — souvent,
Tandis que nous allons, lui chantant, moi rêvant,
Lui dans son pré vert, moi dans mes noires allées,
Souvent je dis tout bas: — O mes tours crénelées,
Mon vieux donjon ducal, que je vous donnerais,
Oh! que je donnerais mes blés et mes forêts,
Et les vastes troupeaux qui tondent mes collines,
Mon vieux nom, mon vieux titre, et toutes mes ruines,
Et tous mes vieux aïeux qui bientôt m’attendront,
Pour sa chaumière neuve et pour son jeune front!
Car ses cheveux sont noirs, car son oeil reluit comme
Le tien, tu peux le voir, et dire: Ce jeune homme!
Et puis penser à moi qui suis vieux. Je le sais!
Pourtant j’ai nom Silva, mais ce n’est plus assez!
Oui, je me dis cela. Vois à quel point je t’aime!
Le tout, pour être jeune et beau comme toi-même!
Mais à quoi vais-je ici rêver? Moi, jeune et beau!
Qui te dois de si loin devancer au tombeau!

DOÑA SOL.
Qui sait?

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Mais va, crois-moi, ces cavaliers frivoles
N’ont pas d’amour si grand qu’il ne s’use en paroles.
Qu’une fille aime et croie un de ces jouvenceaux,
Elle en meurt, il en rit. Tous ces jeunes oiseaux,
A l’aile vive et peinte, au langoureux ramage,
Ont un amour qui mue ainsi que leur plumage.
Les vieux, dont l’âge éteint la voix et les couleurs,
Ont l’aile plus fidèle, et, moins beaux, sont meilleurs.
Nous aimons bien. Nos pas sont lourds? nos yeux arides?
Nos fronts ridés? Au coeur on n’a jamais de rides.
Hélas! quand un vieillard aime, il faut l’épargner.
Le coeur est toujours jeune et peut toujours saigner.

Oh! mon amour n’est point comme un jouet de verre
Qui brille et tremble; oh! non, c’est un amour sévère,
Profond, solide, sûr, paternel, amical,
De bois de chêne, ainsi que mon fauteuil ducal!
Voilà comme je t’aime, et puis je t’aime encore
De cent autres façons, comme on aime l’aurore,
Comme on aime les fleurs, comme on aime les cieux!
De te voir tous les jours, toi, ton pas gracieux,
Ton front pur, le beau feu de ta fière prunelle,
je ris, et j’ai dans l’âme une fête éternelle!

DOÑA SOL.
Hélas!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Et puis, vois-tu, le monde trouve beau,
Lorsqu’un homme s’éteint, et lambeau par lambeau
S’en va, lorsqu’il trébuche au marbre de la tombe,
Qu’une femme, ange pur, innocente colombe,
Veille sur lui, l’abrite, et daigne encor souffrir
L’inutile vieillard qui n’est bon qu’à mourir.
C’est une oeuvre sacrée et qu’à bon droit on loue
Que ce suprême effort d’un coeur qui se dévoue,
Qui console un mourant jusqu’à la fin du jour,
Et, sans aimer peut-être, a des semblants d’amour!
Ah! tu seras pour moi cet ange au coeur de femme
Qui du pauvre vieillard réjouit encor l’âme,
Et de ses derniers ans lui porte la moitié,
Fille par le respect et soeur par la pitié.

DOÑA SOL.
Loin de me précéder, vous pourrez bien me suivre,
Monseigneur. Ce n’est pas une raison pour vivre
Que d’être jeune. Hélas! je vous le dis, souvent
Les vieillards sont tardifs, les jeunes vont devant,
Et leurs yeux brusquement referment leur paupière,
Comme un sépulcre ouvert dont retombe la pierre.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Oh! les sombres discours! Mais je vous gronderai,
Enfant! un pareil jour est joyeux et sacré.
Comment, à ce propos, quand l'heure nous appelle,
N'êtes-vous pas encor prête pour la chapelle?
Mais, vite! habillez-vous. Je compte les instants.
La parure de noce!

DOÑA SOL.
Il sera toujours temps.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Non pas.

Entre un page.
Que veut Iaquez!

LE PAGE.
Monseigneur, à la porte
Un homme, un pèlerin, un mendiant, n'importe,
Est là qui vous demande asile.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Quel qu'il soit,
Le bonheur entre avec l'étranger qu'on reçoit.
Qu'il vienne. — Du dehors a-t-on quelques nouvelles?
Que dit-on de ce chef de bandits infidèles
Qui remplit nos forêts de sa rébellion?

LE PAGE.
C'en est fait d'Hernani, c'en est fait du lion
De la montagne.

DOÑA SOL (à part).
Dieu!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Quoi!

LE PAGE.
La bande est détruite.
Le roi, dit-on, s’est mis lui-même à leur poursuite.
La tête d’Hernani vaut mille écus du roi
Pour l’instant; mais on dit qu’il est mort.

DOÑA SOL (à part).
Quoi! sans moi,
Hernani!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Grâce au ciel! il est mort, le rebelle!
On peut se réjouir maintenant, chère belle.
Allez donc vous parer, mon amour, mon orgueil!
Aujourd’hui, double fête!

DOÑA SOL (à part).
Oh! des habits de deuil!

Elle sort.

DON RUY GOMEZ (au page).
Fais-lui vite porter l’écrin que je lui donne.

Il se rassied dans son fauteuil.
Je veux la voir parée ainsi qu’une madone,
Et, grâce à ses doux yeux, et grâce à mon écrin,
Belle à faire à genoux tomber un pèlerin.
A propos, et celui qui nous demande un gîte?
Dis-lui d’entrer, fais-lui nos excuses, cours vite.

Le page salue et sort.
Laisser son hôte attendre! ah! c’est mal!

La porte du fond s’ouvre. Parait Hernani déguisé en pèlerin. Le duc se lève et va à sa rencontre.

SCÈNE II.

DON RUY GOMEZ, HERNANI.

Hernani s’arrête sur le seuil de la porte.

HERNANI.
Monseigneur,
Paix et bonheur à vous!

DON RUY GOMEZ (le saluant de la main).
A toi paix et bonheur,
Mon hôte!

Hernani entre. Le duc se rassied.
N’es-tu pas pèlerin?

HERNANI (s’inclinant).
Oui.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Sans doute
Tu viens d’Armillas?

HERNANI.
Non. J’ai pris une autre route;
On se battait par là.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
La troupe du banni,
N’est-ce pas?

HERNANI.
Je ne sais.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Le chef, le Hernani,

Que devient-il? sais-tu?

HERNANI.
Seigneur, quel est cet homme?

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Tu ne le connais pas? tant pis! la grosse somme
Ne sera point pour toi. Vois-tu, ce Hernani.
C’est un rebelle au roi, trop longtemps impuni.
Si tu vas à Madrid, tu le pourras voir pendre.

HERNANI.
je n’y vais pas.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Sa tête est à qui veut la prendre.

HERNANI (à part).
Qu’on y vienne!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Où vas-tu, bon pèlerin?

HERNANI.
Seigneur,
Je vais à Saragosse.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Un voeu fait en l’honneur
D’un saint? de Notre-Dame?

HERNANI.
Oui, duc, de Notre-Dame.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Del Pilar?

HERNANI.
Del Pilar.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Il faut n'avoir point d'âme
Pour ne point acquitter les voeux qu'on fait aux saints.
Mais, le tien accompli, n'as-tu d'autres desseins?
Voir le Pilier, c'est là tout ce que tu désires?

HERNANI.
Oui, je veux voir brûler les flambeaux et les cires,
Voir Notre-Dame, au fond du sombre corridor,
Luire en sa châsse ardente avec sa chape d'or,
Et puis m'en retourner.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Fort bien. — Ton nom, mon frère?
Je suis Ruy de Silva.

HERNANI (hésitant).
Mon nom?…

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Tu peux le taire
Si tu veux. Nul n'a droit de le savoir ici.
Viens-tu pas demander asile?

HERNANI.
Oui, duc.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Merci!
Sois le bienvenu. Reste, ami, ne te fais faute
De rien. Quant à ton nom, tu te nommes mon hôte.
Qui que tu sois, c'est bien! et, sans être inquiet,
J'accueillerais Satan, si Dieu me l'envoyait.

La porte du fond s'ouvre à deux battants. Entre doña Sol, en parure de mariée. Derrière elle, pages, valets, et deux femmes portant sur un coussin de velours un coffret d'argent ciselé, qu'elles vont déposer sur une table, et qui renferme un riche écrin, couronne de duchesse, bracelets, colliers, perles et brillants pêle-mêle. — Hernani, haletant et effaré, considère doña Sol avec des yeux ardents, sans écouter le duc.

SCÈNE III.

LES MÊMES, DOÑA SOL, PAGES, VALETS, FEMMES.

DON RUY GOMEZ (continuant).
Voici ma Notre-Dame à moi. L'avoir priée
Te portera bonheur.

Il va présenter la main à doña Sol, toujours pâle et grave.
Ma belle mariée,
Venez. — Quoi! pas d'anneau! pas de couronne encor!

HERNANI (d'une voix tonnante).
Qui veut gagner ici mille carolus d'or?

Tous se retournent étonnés. Il déchire sa robe de pèlerin, la foule aux pieds, et en sort dans son costume de montagnard. Je suis Hernani.

DOÑA SOL (à part, avec joie).
Ciel! vivant!

HERNANI (aux valets).
Je suis cet homme
Qu'on cherche.

Au duc.
Vous vouliez savoir si je me nomme
Perez ou Diego? — Non, je me nomme Hernani.
C'est un bien plus beau nom, c'est un nom de banni,
C'est un nom de proscrit! Vous voyez cette tête?
Elle vaut assez d'or pour payer votre fête.

Aux valets.
Je vous la donne à tous. Vous serez bien payés!
Prenez! liez mes mains, liez mes pieds, liez!
Mais non, c'est inutile, une chaîne me lie
Que je ne romprai point?

DOÑA SOL (à part).
Malheureuse!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Folie!
Çà, mon hôte est un fou!

HERNANI.
Votre hôte est un bandit.

DOÑA SOL.
Oh! ne l’écoutez pas.

HERNANI.
J’ai dit ce que j’ai dit.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Mille carolus d’or! monsieur, la somme est forte,
Et je ne suis pas sûr de tous mes gens.

HERNANI.
Qu’importe!
Tant mieux si dans le nombre il s’en trouve un qui veut.

Aux valets.
Livrez-moi! vendez-moi!

DON RUY GOMEZ (s’efforçant de le faire taire).
Taisez-vous donc! on peut
Vous prendre au mot.

HERNANI.
Amis, l’occasion est belle!
Je vous dis que je suis le proscrit, le rebelle,
Hernani!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Taisez-vous!

HERNANI.
Hernani!

DOÑA SOL (d'une voix éteinte, à son oreille).
Ho! tais-toi!

HERNANI (se détournant à demi vers doña Sol).
On se marie ici! Je veux en être, moi!
Mon épousée aussi m'attend.

Au duc.
Elle est moins belle
Que la vôtre, seigneur, mais n'est pas moins fidèle.
C'est la mort!

Aux valets.
Nul de vous ne fait un pas encor?

DOÑA SOL (bas).
Par pitié!

HERNANI (aux valets).
Hernani! mille carolus d'or!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
C'est le démon!

HERNANI (à un jeune valet).
Viens, toi; tu gagneras la somme.
Riche alors, de valet tu redeviendras homme.

Aux valets gui restent immobiles.
Vous aussi, vous tremblez! Ai-je assez de malheur!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Frère, à toucher ta tête, ils risqueraient la leur.
Fusses-tu Hernani, fusses-tu cent fois pire,
Pour ta vie au lieu d'or offrît-on un empire,

Mon hôte, je te dois protéger en ce lieu,
Même contre le roi, car je te tiens de Dieu.
S’il tombe un seul cheveu de ton front, que je meure!

A doña Sol.

Ma nièce, vous serez ma femme dans une heure;
Rentrez chez vous. Je vais faire armer le château,
J’en vais fermer la porte.

Il sort. Les valets le suivent.

HERNANI (regardant avec désespoir sa ceinture dégarnie et désarmée).

Oh! pas même un couteau!

Doña Sol, après que le duc a disparu, fait quelques pas comme pour suivre ses femmes, puis s’arrête, et, dès qu’elles sont sorties, revient vers Hernani avec anxiété.

SCÈNE IV.

HERNANI, DOÑA SOL.

Hernani considère avec un regard froid et comme inattentif l'écrin nuptial placé sur la table; puis il hoche la tête, et ses yeux s'allument.

HERNANI.
Je vous fais compliment! Plus que je ne puis dire
La parure me charme et m'enchante, et j'admire!

Il s'approche de l'écrin.
La bague est de bon goût, — la couronne me plaît,
Le collier est d'un beau travail, — le bracelet
Est rare, — mais cent fois, cent fois moins que la femme
Qui sous un front si pur cache ce coeur infâme!

Examinant de nouveau le coffret.
Et qu'avez-vous donné pour tout cela? — Fort bien!
Un peu de votre amour? mais, vraiment, c'est pour rien!
Grand Dieu! trahir ainsi! n'avoir pas honte, et vivre!

Examinant l'écrin.
Mais peut-être après tout c'est perle fausse et cuivre
Au lieu d'or, verre et plomb, diamants déloyaux,
Faux saphirs, faux bijoux, faux brillants, faux joyaux!
Ah! s'il en est ainsi, comme cette parure,
Ton coeur est faux, duchesse, et tu n'es que dorure!

Il revient au coffret.
— Mais non, non. Tout est vrai, tout est bon, tout est beau!
Il n'oserait tromper, lui qui touche au tombeau.
Rien n'y manque.

Il prend l'une après l'autre toutes les pièces de l'écrin.
Colliers, brillants, pendants d'oreille
Couronne de duchesse, anneau d'or… — A merveille!

Grand merci de l'amour sûr, fidèle et profond!
Le précieux écrin!

DOÑA SOL (Elle va au coffret, y fouille, et en tire un poignard).
Vous n'allez pas au fond!
— C'est le poignard qu'avec l'aide de ma patronne
Je pris au roi Carlos, lorsqu'il m'offrit un trône,
Et que je refusai, pour vous qui m'outragez!

HERNANI (tombant à ses pieds).
Oh! laisse qu'à genoux dans tes yeux affligés
J'efface tous ces pleurs amers et pleins de charmes,
Et tu prendras après tout mon sang pour tes larmes!

DOÑA SOL (attendrie).
Hernani! je vous aime et vous pardonne, et n'ai
Que de l'amour pour vous.

HERNANI.
Elle m'a pardonné,
Et m'aime! Qui pourra faire aussi que moi-même,
Après ce que j'ai dit, je me pardonne et m'aime?
Oh! je voudrais savoir, ange au ciel réservé,
Où vous avez marché, pour baiser le pavé!

DOÑA SOL.
Ami!

HERNANI.
Non, je dois t'être odieux! Mais, écoute,
Dis-moi: Je t'aime! Hélas! rassure un coeur qui doute,
Dis-le-moi! car souvent avec ce peu de mots
La bouche d'une femme a guéri bien des maux.

DOÑA SOL (absorbée et sans l'entendre).
Croire que mon amour eût si peu de mémoire!
Que jamais ils pourraient, tous ces hommes sans gloire

Jusqu'à d'autres amours, plus nobles à leur gré,
Rapetisser un coeur où son nom est entré!

HERNANI.
Hélas! j'ai blasphémé! Si j'étais à ta place,
Doña Sol, j'en aurais assez, je serais lasse
De ce fou furieux, de ce sombre insensé
Qui ne sait caresser qu'après qu'il a blessé,
Je lui dirais: Va-t'en! — Repousse-moi! repousse!
Et je te bénirai, car tu fus bonne et douce,
Car tu m'as supporté trop longtemps, car je suis
Mauvais, je noircirais tes jours avec mes nuits,
Car c'en est trop enfin, ton âme est belle et haute
Et pure, et si je suis méchant, est-ce ta faute?
Epouse le vieux duc! il est bon, noble, il a
Par sa mère Olmedo, par son père Alcala.
Encore un coup, sois riche avec lui, sois heureuse!
Moi, sais-tu ce que peut cette main généreuse
T'offrir de magnifique? une dot de douleurs.
Tu pourras y choisir ou du sang ou des pleurs.
L'exil, les fers, la mort, l'effroi qui m'environne,
C'est là ton collier d'or, c'est ta belle couronne,
Et jamais à l'épouse un époux plein d'orgueil
N'offrit plus riche écrin de misère et de deuil.
Epouse le vieillard, te dis-je; il te mérite!
Eh! qui jamais croira que ma tête proscrite
Aille avec ton front pur? qui, nous voyant tous deux,
Toi calme et belle, moi violent, hasardeux,
Toi paisible et croissant comme une fleur à l'ombre,
Moi heurté dans l'orage à des écueils sans nombre,
Qui dira que nos sorts suivent la même loi?
Non. Dieu qui fait tout bien ne te fit pas pour moi.
Je n'ai nul droit d'en haut sur toi, je me résigne.
J'ai ton coeur, c'est un vol! je le rends au plus digne.
Jamais à nos amours le ciel n'a consenti.
Si j'ai dit que c'était ton destin, j'ai menti.
D'ailleurs, vengeance, amour, adieu! mon jour s'achève.

Je m'en vais, inutile, avec mon double rêve,
Honteux de n'avoir pu ni punir ni charmer,
Qu'on m'ait fait pour haïr, moi qui n'ai su qu'aimer!
Pardonne-moi! fuis-moi! ce sont mes deux prières;
Ne les rejette pas, car ce sont les dernières.
Tu vis et je suis mort. Je ne vois pas pourquoi
Tu te ferais murer dans ma tombe avec moi.

DOÑA SOL.
Ingrat!

HERNANI.
Monts d'Aragon! Galice! Estramadoure!
— Oh! je porte malheur à tout ce qui m'entoure!
J'ai pris vos meilleurs fils, pour mes droits sans remords
Je les ai fait combattre, et voilà qu'ils sont morts!
C'étaient les plus vaillants de la vaillante Espagne.
Ils sont morts! ils sont tous tombés dans la montagne,
Tous sur le dos couchés, en braves, devant Dieu,
Et, si leurs yeux s'ouvraient, ils verraient le ciel bleu!
Voilà ce que je fais de tout ce qui m'épouse!
Est-ce une destinée à te rendre jalouse?
Doña Sol, prends le duc, prends l'enfer, prends le roi!
C'est bien. Tout ce qui n'est pas moi vaut mieux que moi!
Je n'ai plus un ami qui de moi se souvienne,
Tout me quitte, il est temps qu'à la fin ton tour vienne,
Car je dois être seul. Fuis ma contagion.
Ne te fais pas d'aimer une religion!
Ah! par pitié pour toi, fuis! — Tu me crois peut-être
Un homme comme sont tous les autres, un être
Intelligent, qui court droit au but qu'il rêva.
Détrompe-toi. Je suis une force qui va!
Agent aveugle et sourd de mystères funèbres!
Une âme de malheur faite avec des ténèbres!
Où vais-je? Je ne sais. Mais je me sens poussé
D'un souffle impétueux, d'un destin insensé.
Je descends, je descends, et jamais ne m'arrête.

Si parfois, haletant, j’ose tourner la tête,
Une voix me dit: Marche! et l’abîme est profond,
Et de flamme ou de sang je le vois rouge au fond!
Cependant, à l’entour de ma course farouche,
Tout se brise, tout meurt. Malheur à qui me touche!
Oh! fuis! détourne-toi de mon chemin fatal,
Hélas! sans le vouloir, je te ferais du mal!

DOÑA SOL.
Grand Dieu!

HERNANI.
C’est un démon redoutable, te dis-je,
Que le mien. Mon bonheur, voilà le seul prodige
Qui lui soit impossible. Et toi, c’est le bonheur!
Tu n’es donc pas pour moi, cherche un autre seigneur!
Va, si jamais le ciel à mon sort qu’il renie
Souriait… n’y crois pas! ce serait ironie!
Epouse le duc!

DOÑA SOL.
Donc, ce n’était pas assez!
Vous aviez déchiré mon coeur, vous le brisez!
Ah! vous ne m’aimez plus!

HERNANI.
Oh! mon coeur et mon âme,
C’est toi, l’ardent foyer d’où me vient toute flamme,
C’est toi! Ne m’en veux pas de fuir, être adoré!

DOÑA SOL.
Je ne vous en veux pas. Seulement j’en mourrai.

HERNANI.
Mourir! pour qui? pour moi? Se peut-il que tu meures
Pour si peu?

DOÑA SOL (laissant éclater ses larmes).
Voilà tout.

Elle tombe sur un fauteuil.

HERNANI (s’asseyant près d’elle).
Oh! tu pleures! tu pleures!
Et c’est encor ma faute! et qui me punira?
Car tu pardonneras encor! Qui te dira
Ce que je souffre au moins, lorsqu’une larme noie
La flamme de tes yeux dont l’éclair est ma joie!
Oh! mes amis sont morts! Oh! je suis insensé!
Pardonne. Je voudrais aimer, je ne le sai.
Hélas! j’aime pourtant d’une amour bien profonde!
— Ne pleure pas! mourons plutôt! — Que n’ai-je un monde?
Je te le donnerais! Je suis bien malheureux!

DOÑA SOL (se jetant à son cou).
Vous êtes mon lion superbe et généreux!
Je vous aime.

HERNANI.
Oh! l’amour serait un bien suprême
Si l’on pouvait mourir de trop aimer!

DOÑA SOL.
Je t’aime!
Monseigneur! je vous aime et je suis toute à vous.

HERNANI (laissant tomber sa tête sur son épaule).
Oh! qu’un coup de poignard de toi me serait doux!

DOÑA SOL (suppliante).
Ah! ne craignez vous pas que Dieu ne vous punisse
De parler de la sorte?

HERNANI (toujours appuyé sur son sein).
Eh bien! qu’il nous unisse!

Tu le veux. Qu’il en soit ainsi! — J’ai résisté.

Tous deux, dans les bras l’un de l’autre, se regardent avec extase, sans voir, sans entendre, et comme absorbés dans leur regard. Entre don Ruy Gomez par la porte du fond. Il regarde et s’arrête comme pétrifié sur le seuil.

SCÈNE V.

HERNANI, DOÑA SOL, DON RUY GOMEZ.

DON RUY GOMEZ (immobile et croisant les bras sur le seuil de la porte).
Voilà donc le païment de l’hospitalité!

DOÑA SOL.
Dieu! le duc!

Tous deux se retournent comme réveillés en sursaut.

DON RUY GOMEZ (toujours immobile).
C’est donc là mon salaire, mon hôte?
— Bon seigneur, va-t’en voir si ta muraille est haute,
Si la porte est bien close et l’archer dans sa tour,
De ton château pour nous fais et refais le tour,
Cherche en ton arsenal une armure à ta taille,
Ressaye à soixante ans ton harnois de bataille!
Voici la loyauté dont nous paîrons ta foi!
Tu fais cela pour nous, et nous ceci pour toi!
Saints du ciel! j’ai vécu plus de soixante années,
J’ai vu bien des bandits aux âmes effrénées,
J’ai souvent, en tirant ma dague du fourreau,
Fait lever sur mes pas des gibiers de bourreau,
J’ai vu des assassins, des monnayeurs, des traîtres,
De faux valets à table empoisonnant leur maîtres,
J’en ai vu qui mouraient sans croix et sans pater,
J’ai vu Sforce, j’ai vu Borgia, je vois Luther,
Mais je n’ai jamais vu perversité si haute
Qui n’eût craint le tonnerre en trahissant son hôte!
Ce n’est pas de mon temps. Si noire trahison
Pétrifie un vieillard au seuil de sa maison,
Et fait que le vieux maître, en attendant qu’il tombe,

A l’air d’une statue à mettre sur sa tombe.
Maures et Castillans! quel est cet homme-ci?

Il lève les yeux et les promène sur les portraits qui entourent la salle.
O vous, tous les Silva qui m’écoutez ici,
Pardon si devant vous, pardon si ma colère
Dit l’hospitalité mauvaise conseillère!

HERNANI (se levant).
Duc…

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Tais-toi!

Il fait lentement trois pas dans la salle et promène de nouveau ses regards sur les portraits des Silva.
Morts sacrés! aïeux! hommes de fer!
Qui voyez ce qui vient du ciel et de l’enfer,
Dites-moi, messeigneurs, dites, quel est cet homme?
Ce n’est pas Hernani, c’est Judas qu’on le nomme!
Oh! tâchez de parler pour me dire son nom!

Croisant les bras.
Avez-vous de vos jours vu rien de pareil? Non!

HERNANI.
Seigneur duc…

DON RUY GOMEZ (toujours aux portraits).
Voyez-vous, il veut parler, l’infâme!
Mais, mieux encor que moi, vous lisez dans son âme.
Oh! ne l’écoutez pas! C’est un fourbe! Il prévoit
Que mon bras va sans doute ensanglanter mon toit,
Que peut-être mon coeur couve dans ses tempêtes
Quelque vengeance, soeur du festin des sept têtes,
Il vous dira qu’il est proscrit, il vous dira
Qu’on va dire Silva comme l’on dit Lara,

Et puis qu’il est mon hôte, et puis qu’il est votre hôte…
Mes aïeux, mes seigneurs, voyez, est-ce ma faute?
Jugez entre nous deux!

HERNANI.
Ruy Gomez de Silva,
Si jamais vers le ciel noble front s’éleva,
Si jamais coeur fut grand, si jamais âme haute,
C’est la vôtre, seigneur! c’est la tienne, ô mon hôte!
Moi qui te parle ici, je suis coupable, et n’ai
Rien à dire, sinon que je suis bien damné.
Oui, j’ai voulu te prendre et t’enlever ta femme,
Oui, j’ai voulu souiller ton lit, oui, c’est infâme!
J’ai du sang. Tu feras très bien de le verser,
D’essuyer ton épée et de n’y plus penser!

DOÑA SOL.
Seigneur, ce n’est pas lui! Ne frappez que moi-même!

HERNANI.
Taisez-vous, doña Sol. Car cette heure est suprême.
Cette heure m’appartient. Je n’ai plus qu’elle. Ainsi
Laissez-moi m’expliquer avec le duc ici.
Duc, crois aux derniers mots de ma bouche; j’en jure,
Je suis coupable, mais sois tranquille, — elle est pure!
C’est là tout. Moi coupable, elle pure; ta foi
Pour elle, un coup d’épée ou de poignard pour moi.
Voilà. — Puis fais jeter le cadavre à la porte
Et laver le plancher, si tu veux, il n’importe!

DOÑA SOL.
Ah! moi seule ai tout fait. Car je l’aime.

Don Ruy se détourne à ce mot en tressaillant, et fixe sur doña Sol un regard terrible. Elle se jette à ses genoux.

Oui, pardon!
Je l’aime, monseigneur!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Vous l’aimez!

A Hernani.
Tremble donc!

Bruit de trompettes au dehors. — Entre le page. Au page
Qu’est ce bruit?

LE PAGE.
C’est le roi, monseigneur, en personne,
Avec un gros d’archers et son héraut qui sonne.

DOÑA SOL.
Dieu! le roi! Dernier coup!

LE PAGE (au duc).
Il demande pourquoi
La porte est close, et veut qu’on ouvre.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Ouvrez au roi.

Le page s’incline et sort.

DOÑA SOL.
Il est perdu!

Don Ruy Gomez va à l’un des tableaux, qui est son propre portrait et le dernier à gauche; il presse un ressort, le portrait s’ouvre comme une porte, et laisse voir une cachette pratiquée dans le mur. Il se tourne vers Hernani.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Monsieur, venez ici.

HERNANI.
Ma tête
Est à toi. Livre-la, seigneur. Je la tiens prête.
Je suis ton prisonnier.

Il entre dans la cachette. Don Ruy presse de nouveau le ressort, tout se referme, et le portrait revient à sa place.

DOÑA SOL (au duc).
Seigneur, pitié pour lui!

LE PAGE (entrant).
Son altesse le roi.

Doña Sol baisse précipitamment son voile. La porte s'ouvre à deux battants. Entre don Carlos en habit de guerre, suivi d'une foule de gentilshommes également armés, de pertuisaniers, d'arquebusiers, d'arbalétriers.

SCÈNE VI.

DON RUY GOMEZ; DOÑA SOL (voilée); DON CARLOS; SUITE.

Don Carlos s'avance à pas lents, la main gauche sur le pommeau de son épée, la droite dans sa poitrine, et fixe sur le vieux duc un oeil de défiance et de colère. Le duc va au devant du roi et le salue profondément. — Silence. — Attente et terreur alentour. Enfin, le roi, arrivé en face du duc, lève brusquement la tête.

DON CARLOS.
D'où vient donc aujourd'hui,
Mon cousin, que ta porte est si bien verrouillée?
Par les saints! je croyais ta dague plus rouillée!
Et je ne savais pas qu'elle eût hâte à ce point,
Quand nous te venons voir, de reluire à ton poing!

Don Ruy Gomez veut parler, le roi poursuit avec un geste impérieux.
C'est s'y prendre un peu tard pour faire le jeune homme!
Avons-nous des turbans? serait-ce qu'on me nomme
Boabdil ou Mahom, et non Carlos, répond!
Pour nous baisser la herse et nous lever le pont?

DON RUY GOMEZ (s'inclinant).
Seigneur…

DON CARLOS (à ses gentilshommes).
Prenez les clefs! saissisez-vous des portes!

Deux officiers sortent. Plusieurs autres rangent les soldats en triple haie dans la salle, du roi à la grande porte. Don Carlos se retourne vers le duc.
Ah! vous réveillez donc les rébellions mortes?
Pardieu! si vous prenez de ces airs avec moi.
Messieurs les ducs, le roi prendra des airs de roi
Et j'irai par les monts, de mes mains aguerries,
Dans leurs nids crénelés tuer les seigneuries!

DON RUY GOMEZ (se redressant).
Altesse, les Silva sont loyaux…

DON CARLOS (l’interrompant).
Sans détours
Réponds, duc, ou je fais raser tes onze tours!
De l’incendie éteint il reste une étincelle,
Des bandits morts il reste un chef. — Qui le recèle?
C’est toi! Ce Hernani, rebelle empoisonneur,
Ici, dans ton château, tu le caches!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Seigneur,
C’est vrai.

DON CARLOS.
Fort bien. Je veux sa tête, — ou bien la tienne,
Entends-tu, mon cousin?

DON RUY GOMEZ (s’inclinant).
Mais qu’à cela ne tienne!
Vous serez satisfait.

Doña Sol cache sa tête dans ses mains et tombe sur le fauteuil.

DON CARLOS (radouci).
Ah! tu t’amendes. — Va
Chercher mon prisonnier.

Le duc croise les bras, baisse la tête et reste quelques moments rêveur. Le roi et doña Sol l’observent en silence et agités d’émotions contraires. Enfin le duc relève son front, va au roi, lui prend la main, et le mène à pas lents devant le plus ancien des portraits, celui qui commence la galerie à droite.

DON RUY GOMEZ (montrant au roi le vieux portrait).
Celui-ci, des Silva

C’est l’aîné, c’est l’aïeul, l’ancêtre, le grand homme!
Don Silvius, qui fut trois fois consul de Rome.

Passant au portrait suivant.
Voici don Galceran de Silva, l’autre Cid!
On lui garde à Toro, près de Valladolid,
Une châsse dorée où brûlent mille cierges.
Il affranchit Léon du tribut des cent vierges.

Passant à un autre.
— Don Blas, — qui, de lui-même et dans sa bonne foi,
S’exila pour avoir mal conseillé le roi.

A un autre.
— Christoval. — Au combat d’Escalona, don Sanche,
Le roi, fuyait à pied, et sur sa plume blanche
Tous les coups s’acharnaient; il cria: Christoval!
Christoval prit la plume et donna son cheval.

A un autre.
— Don Jorge, qui paya la rançon de Ramire,
Roi d’Aragon.

DON CARLOS (croisant les bras et le regardant de la tête aux pieds).
Pardieu! don Ruy, je vous admire!
Continuez!

DON RUY GOMEZ (passant à un autre).
Voici Ruy Gomez de Silva,
Grand-maître de Saint-Jacque et de Calatrava.
Son armure géante irait mal à nos tailles.
Il prit trois cents drapeaux, gagna trente batailles,
Conquit au roi Motril, Antequera, Suez,
Nijar, et mourut pauvre. — Altesse, saluez.

Il s’incline, se découvre, et passe à un autre. Le roi l’écoute avec une impatience et une colère toujours croissantes.

Près de lui, Gil son fils, cher aux âmes loyales.
Sa main pour un serment valait les mains royales.

A un autre.
— Don Gaspard, de Mendoce et de Silva l'honneur!
Toute noble maison tient à Silva, seigneur.
Sandoval tour à tour nous craint ou nous épouse,
Manrique nous envie et Lara nous jalouse.
Alencastre nous hait. Nous touchons à la fois
Du pied à tous les ducs, du front à tous les rois!

DON CARLOS.
Vous raillez-vous?

DON RUY GOMEZ (allant à d'autres portraits).
Voilà don Vasquez, dit le Sage,
Don Jayme, dit le Fort. Un jour, sur son passage,
Il arrêta Zamet et cent maures tout seul.
— J'en passe, et des meilleurs.

Sur un geste de colère du roi, il passe un grand nombre de tableaux, et vient tout de suite aux trois derniers portraits à gauche du spectateur.
Voici mon noble aïeul.
Il vécut soixante ans, gardant la foi jurée,
Même aux juifs.

A l'avant-dernier.
Ce vieillard, cette tête sacrée,
C'est mon père. Il fut grand, quoi qu'il vint le dernier.
Les maures de Grenade avaient fait prisonnier
Le comte Alvar Giron, son ami. Mais mon père
Prit pour l'aller chercher six cents hommes de guerre;
Il fit tailler en pierre un comte Alvar Giron
Qu'à sa suite il traina, jurant par son patron
De ne point reculer que le comte de pierre
Ne tournât front lui-même et n'allât en arrière.
Il combattit, puis vint au comte, et le sauva.

DON CARLOS
Mon prisonnier!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
C’était un Gomez de Silva.
Voilà donc ce qu’on dit quand dans cette demeure
On voit tous ces héros…

DON CARLOS.
Mon prisonnier sur l’heure!

DON RUY GOMEZ (Il s’incline profondément devant le roi, lui prend la main et le mène devant le dernier portrait, celui qui sert de porte à la cachette où il a fait entrer Hernani. Doña Sol le suit des yeux avec anxiété. — Attente et silence dans l’assistance.
Ce portrait, c’est le mien. — Roi don Carlos, merci!
Car vous voulez qu’on dise en le voyant ici:
«Ce dernier, digne fils d’une race si haute,
Fut un traître, et vendit la tête de son hôte!»

Joie de dora Sol. Mouvement de stupeur dans les assistants. Le roi, déconcerté, s’éloigne avec colère. Puis reste quelques instants silencieux, les lèvres tremblantes et l’oeil enflammé.

DON CARLOS.
Duc, ton château me gêne et je le mettrai bas!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Car vous me la paîriez, altesse, n’est-ce pas?

DON CARLOS.
Duc, j’en ferai raser les tours pour tant d’audace,
Et je ferai semer du chanvre sur la place.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Mieux voir croître du chanvre où ma tour s’éleva
Qu’une tache ronger le vieux nom de Silva.

Aux portraits.
N’est-il pas vrai, vous tous?

DON CARLOS.
Duc, cette tête est nôtre,
Et tu m’avais promis…

DON RUY GOMEZ.
J’ai promis l’une ou l’autre,

Aux portraits.
N’est-il pas vrai, vous tous?

Montrant sa tête.
Je donne celle-ci.

Au roi.
Prenez-la.

DON CARLOS.
Duc, fort bien. Mais j’y perds, grand merci!
La tête qu’il me faut est jeune, il faut que morte
On la prenne aux cheveux. La tienne? que m’importe!
Le bourreau la prendrait par les cheveux en vain.
Tu n’en as pas assez pour lui remplir la main!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Altesse, pas d’affront! ma tête encore est belle,
Et vaut bien, que je crois, la tête d’un rebelle.
La tête d’un Silva, vous êtes dégoûté!

DON CARLOS.
Livre-nous Hernani!

DON Ruy GOMEZ.
Seigneur, en vérité,
J’ai dit.

DON CARLOS (à sa suite).
Fouillez partout! et qu’il ne soit point d’aile,
De cave ni de tour…

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Mon donjon est fidèle
Comme moi. Seul il sait le secret avec moi.
Nous le garderons bien tous deux.

DON CARLOS.
Je suis le roi!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Hors que de mon château démoli pierre à pierre
On ne fasse ma tombe, on n’aura rien.

DON CARLOS.
Prière,
Menace, tout est vain! — Livre-moi le bandit,
Duc! ou tête et château, j’abattrai tout.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
J’ai dit.

DON CARLOS.
Eh bien donc! au lieu d’une alors j’aurai deux têtes.

Au duc d’Alcala.
Jorge, arrêtez le duc.

DOÑA SOL (arrachant son voile et se jetant entre le roi, le duc, et les gardes).
Roi don Carlos, vous êtes
Un mauvais roi!

DON CARLOS.
Grand Dieu! Que vois-je? doña Sol!

DOÑA SOL.
Altesse, tu n’as pas le coeur d’un Espagnol!

DON CARLOS (troublé).
Madame, pour le roi vous êtes bien sévère.

Il s’approche de doña Sol. Bas.
C’est vous qui m’avez mis au coeur cette colère.
Un homme devient ange ou monstre en vous touchant.
Ah! quand on est haï, que vite on est méchant!
Si vous aviez voulu, peut-être, ô jeune fille,
J’étais grand, j’eusse été le lion de Castille!
Vous m’en faites le tigre avec votre courroux.
Le voilà qui rugit, madame, taisez-vous!

Doña Sol lui jette un regard. Il s’incline.
Pourtant, j’obéirai.

Se tournant vers le duc.
Mon cousin, je t’estime.
Ton scrupule après tout peut sembler légitime.
Sois fidèle à ton hôte, infidèle à ton roi,
C’est bien, je te fais grâce et suis meilleur que toi.
— J’emmène seulement ta nièce comme otage.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Seulement!

DOÑA SOL (interdite).
Moi, seigneur!

DON CARLOS.
Oui, vous.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Pas davantage!
O la grande clémence! ô généreux vainqueur,

Qui ménage la tête et torture le coeur!
Belle grâce!

DON CARLOS.
Choisis. Doña Sol ou le traître.
Il me faut l'un des deux.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Ah! vous êtes le maître!

Don Carlos s'approche de doña Sol pour l'emmener. Elle se réfugie vers don Ruy Gomez.

DOÑA SOL.
Sauvez-moi, monseigneur!

Elle s'arrête. — A part.
Malheureuse, il le faut!
La tête de mon oncle ou l'autre!… Moi plutôt!

Au roi.
Je vous suis.

DON CARLOS (à part).
Par les saints! l'idée est triomphante!
Il faudra bien enfin s'adoucir, mon infante!

Doña Sol va d'un pas grave et assuré au coffret qui renferme l'écrin, l'ouvre et y prend le poignard, qu'elle cache dans son sein. Don Carlos vient à elle et lui présente la main.

DON CARLOS (à doña Sol).
Qu'emportez-vous là?

DOÑA SOL.
Rien.

DON CARLOS.
Un joyau précieux?

DOÑA SOL.
Oui.

DON CARLOS (souriant).
Voyons.

DOÑA SOL.
Vous verrez.

Elle lui donne la main et se dispose à le suivre. Don Ruy Gomez, qui est resté immobile et profondément absorbé dans sa pensée, se retourne et fait quelques pas en criant.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Doña Sol! terre et cieux!
Doña Sol! — Puisque l’homme ici n’a point d’entrailles,
A mon aide! croulez, armures et murailles!

Il court au roi.
Laisse-moi mon enfant! je n’ai qu’elle, ô mon roi!

DON CARLOS (lâchant la main de doña Sol).
Alors, mon prisonnier!

Le duc baisse la tête et semble en proie à une horrible hésitation; puis il se relève, et regarde les portraits en joignant les mains vers eux.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Ayez pitié de moi,
Vous tous!

Il fait un pas vers la cachette; doña Sol le suit des yeux avec anxiété. Il se retourne vers les portraits. Oh! voilez-vous! votre regard m’arrête.

Il s’avance en chancelant jusqu’à son portrait, puis se retourne encore vers le roi. Tu le veux?

DON CARLOS.
Oui.

Le duc lève en tremblant la main vers le ressort.

DOÑA SOL.
Dieu!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Non!

Il se jette aux genoux du roi.
Par pitié, prends ma tête!

DON CARLOS.
Ta nièce!

DON RUY GOMEZ (se relevant).
Prends-la donc! et laisse-moi l'honneur!

DON CARLOS (saisissant la main de doña Sol tremblante).
Adieu, duc.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Au revoir!

Il suit de l'oeil le roi, qui se retire lentement avec doña Sol; puis il met la main sur son poignard. Dieu vous garde, seigneur!

Il revient sur le devant, haletant, immobile, sans plus rien voir ni entendre, l'oeil fixe, les bras croisés sur sa poitrine, qui les soulève comme par des mouvements convulsifs. Cependant le roi sort avec doña Sol, et toute la suite des seigneurs sort après lui, deux à deux, gravement et chacun à son rang. Ils se parlent à voix basse entre eux.

DON RUY GOMEZ (à part).
Roi, pendant que tu sors joyeux de ma demeure,
Ma vieille loyauté sort de mon coeur qui pleure.

Il lève les yeux, les promène autour de lui, et voit qu'il est seul. Il court à la muraille, détache deux épées d'une panoplie, les mesure toutes deux, puis les dépose sur une table. Cela fait, il va au portrait, pousse le ressort, la porte cachée se rouvre.

SCÈNE VII.

DON RUY GOMEZ, HERNANI.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Sors.

Hernani parait à la porte de la cachette. Don Ruy lui montre les deux épées sur la table.
Choisis. — Don Carlos est hors de la maison.
Il s'agit maintenant de me rendre raison.
Choisis. Et faisons vite. — Allons donc! ta main tremble!

HERNANI.
Un duel! Nous ne pouvons, vieillard, combattre ensemble.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Pourquoi donc? As-tu peur? N'est-tu point noble?
Enfer!
Noble ou non, pour croiser le fer avec le fer,
Tout homme qui m'outrage est assez gentilhomme!

HERNANI.
Vieillard…

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Viens me tuer ou viens mourir, jeune homme.

HERNANI.
Mourir, oui. Vous m'avez sauvé malgré mes voeux.
Donc, ma vie est à vous. Reprenez-la.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Tu veux?

Aux portraits.
Vous voyez qu'il le veut.

A Hernani.
C’est bon. Fais ta prière.

HERNANI.
Oh! c’est à toi, seigneur, que je fais la dernière.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Parle à l’autre Seigneur.

HERNANI.
Non, non, à toi! Vieillard,
Frappe-moi. Tout m’est bon, dague, épée ou poignard.
Mais fais-moi, par pitié, cette suprême joie!
Duc, avant de mourir, permets que je la voie!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
La voir!

HERNANI.
Au moins permets que j’entende sa voix
Une dernière fois! rien qu’une seule fois!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
L’entendre!

HERNANI.
Oh! je comprends, seigneur, ta jalousie.
Mais déjà par la mort ma jeunesse est saisie,
Pardonne-moi. Veux-tu, dis-moi, que, sans la voir,
S’il le faut, je l’entende? et je mourrai ce soir.
L’entendre seulement! contente mon envie!
Mais, oh! qu’avec douceur j’exhalerais ma vie,
Si tu daignais vouloir qu’avant de fuir aux cieux
Mon âme allât revoir la sienne dans ses yeux!
— Je ne lui dirai rien. Tu seras là, mon père.
Tu me prendras après.

DON RUY GOMEZ (montrant la cachette encore ouverte).
Saints du ciel! ce repaire
Est-il donc si profond, si sourd et si perdu,
Qu’il n’ait entendu rien?

HERNANI.
Je n’ai rien entendu.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Il a fallu livrer doña Sol ou toi-même.

HERNANI.
A qui, livrée?

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Au roi.

HERNANI.
Vieillard stupide! il l’aime.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Il l’aime!

HERNANI.
Il nous l’enlève! il est notre rival!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
O malédiction! — Mes vassaux! A cheval!
A cheval! poursuivons le ravisseur!

HERNANI.
Écoute.
La vengeance au pied sûr fait moins de bruit en route.
Je t’appartiens. Tu peux me tuer. Mais veux-tu
M’employer à venger ta nièce et sa vertu?
Ma part dans ta vengeance! oh! fais-moi cette grâce.
Et, s’il faut embrasser tes pieds, je les embrasse!

Suivons le roi tous deux. Viens, je serai ton bras,
Je te vengerai, duc. Après, tu me tueras.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Alors, comme aujourd’hui, te laisseras-tu faire?

HERNANI.
Oui, duc.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Qu’en jures-tu?

HERNANI.
La tête de mon père.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Voudras-tu de toi-même un jour t’en souvenir?

HERNANI (lui présentant le cor qu’il détache de sa ceinture).
Écoute. Prends ce cor. — Quoi qu’il puisse advenir,
Quand tu voudras, seigneur, quel que soit le lieu, l’heure,
S’il te passe à l’esprit qu’il est temps que je meure,
Viens, sonne de ce cor, et ne prends d’autres soins.
Tout sera fait.

DON RUY GOMEZ (lui tendant la main).
Ta main.

Ils se serrent la main. — Aux portraits.
Vous tous, soyez témoins!

ACTE QUATRIÈME - LE TOMBEAU.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.

Les caveaux qui renferment le tombeau de Charlemagne à Aix-la-Chapelle. De grandes voûtes d'architecture lombarde. Gros piliers bas, pleins cintres, chapiteaux d'oiseaux et de fleurs. — A droite, le tombeau de Charlemagne, avec une petite porte de bronze, basse et cintrée. Une seule lampe suspendue à une clef de voûte en éclaire l'inscription: KAROLVS MAGNVS. — Il est nuit. On ne voit pas le fond du souterrain; l'ail se perd dans les arcades, les escaliers et les piliers qui s'entre croisent dans l'ombre.

SCÈNE PREMIÈRE.

DON CARLOS, DON RICARDO DE ROXAS, COMTE DE CASAPALMA (une lanterne à la main. Grands manteaux, chapeaux rabattus).

DON RICARDO (son chapeau à la main).
C'est ici.

DON CARLOS.
C'est ici que la ligue s'assemble!
Que je vais dans ma main les tenir tous ensemble!
Ah! monsieur l'électeur de Trèves, c'est ici!
Vous leur prêtez ce lieu! Certe, il est bien choisi!
Un noir complot prospère à l'air des catacombes.
Il est bon d'aiguiser les stylets sur des tombes.
Pourtant c'est jouer gros. La tête est de l'enjeu,
Messieurs les assassins! et nous verrons. — Pardieu!
Ils font bien de choisir pour une telle affaire
Un sépulcre, — ils auront moins de chemin à faire.

A don Ricardo.
Ces caveaux sous le sol s'étendent-ils bien loin?

DON RICARDO.
Jusques au château-fort.

DON CARLOS.
C'est plus qu'il n'est besoin.

DON RICARDO.
D'autres, de ce côté, vont jusqu'au monastère
D'Altenheim…

DON CARLOS.
Où Rodolphe extermina Lothaire.

Bien. — Une fois encor, comte, redites-moi
Les noms et les griefs, où, comment, et pourquoi.

DON RICARDO.
Gotha.

DON CARLOS.
Je sais pourquoi le brave duc conspire.
Il veut un Allemand d'Allemagne à l'Empire.

DON RICARDO.
Hohenbourg.

DON CARLOS.
Hohenbourg aimerait mieux, je croi,
L'enfer avec François que le ciel avec moi.

DON RICARDO.
Don Gil Tellez Giron.

DON CARLOS.
Castille et Notre-Dame!
Il se révolte donc contre son roi, l'infâme!

DON RICARDO.
On dit qu'il vous trouva chez madame Giron
Un soir que vous veniez de le faire baron.
Il veut venger l'honneur de sa tendre compagne.

DON CARLOS.
C'est donc qu'il se révolte alors contre l'Espagne.
— Qui nomme-t-on encore?

DON RICARDO.
On cite avec ceux-là
Le révérend Vasquez, évêque d'Avila.

DON CARLOS.
Est-ce aussi pour venger la vertu de sa femme?

DON RICARDO.
Puis Guzman de Lara, mécontent, qui réclame
Le collier de votre ordre.

DON CARLOS.
Ah! Guzman de Lara!
Si ce n’est qu’un collier qu’il lui faut, il l’aura.

DON RICARDO.
Le duc de Lutzelbourg. Quant aux plans qu’on lui prête…

DON CARLOS.
Le duc de Lutzelbourg est trop grand de la tête.

DON RICARDO.
Juan de Haro, qui veut Astorga.

DON CARLOS.
Ces Haro
Ont toujours fait doubler la solde du bourreau.

DON RICARDO.
C’est tout.

DON CARLOS.
Ce ne sont pas toutes mes têtes. Comte,
Cela ne fait que sept, et je n’ai pas mon compte.

DON RICARDO.
Ah! je ne nomme pas quelques bandits, gagés
Par Trêve ou par la France…

DON CARLOS.
Hommes sans préjugés

Dont le poignard, toujours prêt à jouer son rôle,
Tourne aux plus gros écus, comme l’aiguille au pôle!

DON RICARDO.
Pourtant j’ai distingué deux hardis compagnons,
Tous deux nouveaux venus. Un jeune, un vieux.

DON CARLOS.
Leurs noms?

Don Ricardo lève les épaules en signe d’ignorance.
Leur âge?

DON RICARDO.
Le plus jeune a vingt ans.

DON CARLOS.
C’est dommage.

DON RICARDO.
Le vieux, soixante au moins.

DON CARLOS.
L’un n’a pas encor l’âge,
Et l’autre ne l’a plus. Tant pis. J’en prendrai soin.
Le bourreau peut compter sur mon aide au besoin.
Ah! loin que mon épée aux factions soit douce,
Je la lui prêterai si sa hache s’émousse,
Comte, et pour l’élargir, je coudrai, s’il le faut,
Ma pourpre impériale au drap de l’échafaud.
— Mais serai-je empereur seulement?

DON RICARDO.
Le collège,
A cette heure assemblé, délibère.

DON CARLOS.
Que sais-je?

Ils nommeront François premier, ou leur Saxon,
Leur Frédéric le Sage! — Ah! Luther a raison,
Tout va mal! — Beaux faiseurs de majestés sacrées!
N’acceptant pour raisons que les raisons dorées!
Un Saxon hérétique! un comte palatin
Imbécile! un primat de Trèves libertin!
— Quant au roi de Bohême, il est pour moi. — Des princes
De Hesse, plus petits encor que leurs provinces!
De jeunes idiots! des vieillards débauchés!
Des couronnes, fort bien! mais des têtes? cherchez!
Des nains! que je pourrais, concile ridicule,
Dans ma peau de lion emporter comme Hercule!
Et qui, démaillotés du manteau violet,
Auraient la tête encor de moins que Triboulet
— Il me manque trois voix, Ricardo! tout me manque!
Oh! je donnerais Gand, Tolède et Salamanque,
Mon ami Ricardo, trois villes à leur choix,
Pour trois voix, s’ils voulaient! Vois-tu, pour ces trois voix,
Oui, trois de mes cités de Castille ou de Flandre,
Je les donnerais! — sauf, plus tard, à les reprendre!

Don Ricardo salue profondément le roi, et met son chapeau sur sa tête.
— Vous vous couvrez?

DON RICARDO.
Seigneur, vous m’avez tutoyé.

Saluant de nouveau.
Me voilà grand d’Espagne.

DON CARLOS (à part).
Ah! tu me fais pitié,
Ambitieux de rien! — Engeance intéressée!
Comme à travers la nôtre ils suivent leur pensée!
Basse-cour où le roi, mendié sans pudeur,
A tous ces affamés émiette la grandeur!

Rêvant.
Dieu seul et l'empereur sont grands! — et le saint-père!
Le reste, rois et ducs! qu'est cela?

DON RICARDO.
Moi, j'espère
Qu'ils prendront votre altesse.

DON CARLOS (à part).
Altesse! altesse, moi!
J'ai du malheur en tout. — S'il fallait rester roi!

DON RICARDO (à part).
Baste! empereur ou non, me voilà grand d'Espagne.

DON CARLOS.
Sitôt qu'ils auront fait l'empereur d'Allemagne,
Quel signal à la ville annoncera son nom?

DON RICARDO.
Si c'est le duc de Saxe, un seul coup de canon.
Deux, si c'est le Français. Trois, si c'est votre altesse.

DON CARLOS.
Et cette doña Sol! Tout m'irrite et me blesse!
Comte, si je suis fait empereur, par hasard,
Cours la chercher. Peut-être on voudra d'un césar!

DON RICARDO (souriant).
Votre altesse est bien bonne!

DON CARLOS (l'interrompant avec hauteur).
Ah! là-dessus, silence!
Je n'ai point dit encor ce que je veux qu'on pense.
— Quand saura-t-on le nom de l'élu?

DON RICARDO.
Mais, je crois,

Dans une heure au plus tard.

DON CARLOS.
Oh! trois voix! rien que trois!
— Mais écrasons d'abord ce ramas qui conspire,
Et nous verrons après à qui sera l'empire.

Il compte sur ses doigts et frappe du pied.
Toujours trois voix de moins! Ah! ce sont eux qui l'ont!
— Ce Corneille Agrippa pourtant en sait bien long!
Dans l'océan céleste il a vu treize étoiles
Vers la mienne du nord venir à pleines voiles.
J'aurai l'empire, allons! — Mais d'autre part on dit
Que l'abbé Jean Trithème à François l'a prédit.
— J'aurais dû, pour mieux voir ma fortune éclaircie,
Avec quelque armement aider la prophétie!
Toutes prédictions du sorcier le plus fin
Viennent bien mieux à terme et font meilleure fin
Quand une bonne armée, avec canons et piques,
Gens de pied, de cheval, fanfares et musiques,
Prête à montrer la route au sort qui veut broncher,
Leur sert de sage-femme et les fait accoucher.
Lequel vaut mieux, Corneille Agrippa? Jean Trithème?
Celui dont une armée explique le système,
Qui met un fer de lance au bout de ce qu'il dit,
Et compte maint soudard, lansquenet ou bandit,
Dont l'estoc, refaisant la fortune imparfaite,
Taille l'événement au plaisir du prophète.
— Pauvres fous! qui, l'oeil fier, le front haut, visent droit
A l'empire du monde et disent: J'ai mon droit!
Ils ont force canons, rangés en longues files,
Dont le souffle embrasé ferait fondre des villes;
Ils ont vaisseaux, soldats, chevaux, et vous croyez
Qu'ils vont marcher au but sur les peuples broyés…
Baste! au grand carrefour de la fortune humaine,
Qui mieux encor qu'au trône à l'abime nous mène,
A peine ils font trois pas, qu'indécis, incertains,

Tâchant en vain de lire au livre des destins,
Ils hésitent, peu sûrs d'eux-même, et dans le doute
Au nécroman du coin vont demander leur route!

A don Ricardo.
— Va-t'en. C'est l'heure où vont venir les conjurés.
Ah! la clef du tombeau?

DON RICARDO (remettant une clef au roi).
Seigneur, vous songerez
Au comte de Limbourg, gardien capitulaire,
Qui me l'a confiée et fait tout pour vous plaire.

DON CARLOS (le congédiant).
Fais tout ce que j'ai dit! tout!

DON RICARDO (s'inclinant).
J'y vais de ce pas,
Altesse!

DON CARLOS.
Il faut trois coups de canon, n'est-ce pas?

Don Ricardo s'incline et sort. Don Carlos, resté seul, tombe dans une profonde rêverie. Ses bras se croisent, sa tête fléchit sur sa poitrine; puis il se relève et se tourne vers le tombeau.

SCÈNE II.

DON CARLOS (seul).
Charlemagne, pardon! ces voûtes solitaires
Ne devraient répéter que paroles austères.
Tu t’indignes sans doute à ce bourdonnement
Que nos ambitions font sur ton monument.
— Charlemagne est ici! Comment, sépulcre sombre,
Peux-tu sans éclater contenir si grande ombre?
Es-tu bien là, géant d’un monde créateur,
Et t’y peux-tu coucher de toute ta hauteur?
— Ah! c’est un beau spectacle à ravir la pensée
Que l’Europe ainsi faite et comme il l’a laissée!
Un édifice, avec deux hommes au sommet,
Deux chefs élus auxquels tout roi né se soumet.
Presque tous les états, duchés, fiefs militaires,
Royaumes, marquisats, tous sont héréditaires;
Mais le peuple a parfois son pape ou son césar,
Tout marche, et le hasard corrige le hasard.
De là vient l’équilibre, et toujours l’ordre éclate.
Électeurs de drap d’or, cardinaux d’écarlate,
Double sénat sacré dont la terre s’émeut,
Ne sont là qu’en parade, et Dieu veut ce qu’il veut.
Qu’une idée, au besoin des temps, un jour éclose,
Elle grandit, va, court, se mêle à toute chose,
Se fait homme, saisit les coeurs, creuse un sillon;
Maint roi la foule au pied ou lui met un bâillon;
Mais qu’elle entre un matin à la diète, au conclave,
Et tous les rois soudain verront l’idée esclave,
Sur leurs têtes de rois que ses pieds courberont,
Surgir, le globe en main ou la tiare au front.
Le pape et l’empereur sont tout. Rien n’est sur terre
Que pour eux et par eux. Un suprême mystère
Vit en eux, et le ciel, dont ils ont tous les droits,
Leur fait un grand festin des peuples et des rois,
Et les tient sous sa nue, où son tonnerre gronde,

Seuls, assis à la table où Dieu leur sert le monde.
Tête à tête ils sont là, réglant et retranchant,
Arrangeant l’univers comme un faucheur son champ.
Tout se passe entre eux deux. Les rois sont à la porte,
Respirant la vapeur des mets que l’on apporte,
Regardant à la vitre, attentifs, ennuyés,
Et se haussant, pour voir, sur la pointe des pieds.
Le monde au-dessous d’eux s’échelonne et se groupe.
Ils font et défont. L’un délie et l’autre coupe.
L’un est la vérité, l’autre est la force. Ils ont
Leur raison en eux-même, et sont parce qu’ils sont.
Quand ils sortent, tous deux égaux, du sanctuaire,
L’un dans sa pourpre, et l’autre avec son blanc suaire,
L’univers ébloui contemple avec terreur
Ces deux moitiés de Dieu, le pape et l’empereur.
— L’empereur! l’empereur! être empereur! — O rage,
Ne pas l’être! et sentir son coeur plein de courage! —
Qu’il fut heureux celui qui dort dans ce tombeau!
Qu’il fut grand! De son temps c’était encor plus beau.
Le pape et l’empereur! ce n’était plus deux hommes.
Pierre et César! en eux accouplant les deux Romes,
Fécondant l’une et l’autre en un mystique hymen,
Redonnant une forme, une âme au genre humain,
Faisant refondre en bloc peuples et pêle-mêle
Royaumes, pour en faire une Europe nouvelle,
Et tous deux remettant au moule de leur main
Le bronze qui restait du vieux monde romain!
Oh! quel destin! — Pourtant cette tombe est la sienne!
Tout est-il donc si peu que ce soit là qu’on vienne?
Quoi donc! avoir été prince, empereur et roi!
Avoir été l’épée, avoir été la loi!
Géant, pour piédestal avoir eu l’Allemagne!
Quoi! pour titre césar et pour nom Charlemagne!
Avoir été plus grand qu’Annibal, qu’Attila,
Aussi grand que le monde!… et que tout tienne là!
Ah! briguez donc l’empire, et voyez la poussière
Que fait un empereur! Couvrez la terre entière

De bruit et de tumulte; élevez, bâtissez
Votre empire, et jamais ne dites: C’est assez!
Taillez à larges pans un édifice immense!
Savez-vous ce qu’un jour il en reste? ô démence!
Cette pierre! Et du titre et du nom triomphants?
Quelques lettres à faire épeler des enfants!
Si haut que soit le but où votre orgueil aspire,
Voilà le dernier terme!…-Oh! l’empire! l’empire!
Que m’importe! j’y touche, et le trouve à mon gré.
Quelque chose me dit: Tu l’auras! — Je l’aurai —
Si je l’avais!… — O ciel! être ce qui commence!
Seul, debout, au plus haut de la spirale immense!
D’une foule d’états l’un sur l’autre étagés
Être la clef de voûte, et voir sous soi rangés
Les rois, et sur leur tête essuyer ses sandales;
Voir au-dessous des rois les maisons féodales,
Margraves, cardinaux, doges, ducs à fleurons;
Puis évêques, abbés, chefs de clans, hauts barons,
Puis clercs et soldats; puis, loin du faîte où nous sommes,
Dans l’ombre, tout au fond de l’abîme, — les hommes.
— Les hommes! c’est-à-dire une foule, une mer,
Un grand bruit, pleurs et cris, parfois un rire amer,
Plainte qui, réveillant la terre qui s’effare,
A travers tant d’échos nous arrive fanfare!
Les hommes! — Des cités, des tours, un vaste essaim,
De hauts clochers d’église à sonner le tocsin! —

Rêvant.
Base de nations portant sur leurs épaules
La pyramide énorme appuyée aux deux pôles,
Flots vivants, qui toujours l’étreignant de leurs plis,
La balancent, branlante, à leur vaste roulis,
Font tout changer de place et, sur ses hautes zones,
Comme des escabeaux font chanceler les trônes,
Si bien que tous les rois, cessant leurs vains débats,
Lèvent les yeux au ciel… Rois! regardez en bas!
— Ah! le peuple! — océan! — onde sans cesse émue,

Où l’on ne jette rien sans que tout ne remue!
Vague qui broie un trône et qui berce un tombeau!
Miroir où rarement un roi se voit en beau!
Ah! si l’on regardait parfois dans ce flot sombre,
On y verrait au fond des empires sans nombre,
Grands vaisseaux naufragés, que son flux et reflux
Roule, et qui le gênaient, et qu’il ne connaît plus!
— Gouverner tout cela! — Monter, si l’on vous nomme,
A ce faîte! Y monter, sachant qu’on n’est qu’un homme!
Avoir l’abîme là!… — Pourvu qu’en ce moment
Il n’aille pas me prendre un éblouissement!
Oh! d’états et de rois mouvante pyramide,
Ton faîte est bien étroit! Malheur au pied timide!
A qui me retiendrais-je! Oh! si j’allais faillir
En sentant sous mes pieds le monde tressaillir!
En sentant vivre, sourdre et palpiter la terre!
— Puis, quand j’aurai ce globe entre mes mains, qu’en faire?
Le pourrai-je porter seulement? Qu’ai-je en moi?
Être empereur, mon Dieu! J’avais trop d’être roi!
Certe, il n’est qu’un mortel de race peu commune
Dont puisse s’élargir l’âme avec la fortune.
Mais moi! qui me fera grand? qui sera ma loi?
Qui me conseillera?

Il tombe à deux genoux devant le tombeau.
Charlemagne! c’est toi!
Ah! puisque Dieu, pour qui tout obstacle s’efface,
Prend nos deux majestés et les met face à face,
Verse-moi dans le coeur, du fond de ce tombeau,
Quelque chose de grand, de sublime et de beau!
Oh! par tous ses côtés fais-moi voir toute chose.
Montre-moi que le monde est petit, car je n’ose
Y toucher. Montre-moi que sur cette Babel
Qui du pâtre à César va montant jusqu’au ciel,
Chacun en son degré se complaît et s’admire,
Voit l’autre par-dessous et se retient d’en rire.
Apprends-moi tes secrets de vaincre et de régner,

Et dis-moi qu'il vaut mieux punir que pardonner!
— N'est-ce pas? — S'il est vrai qu'en son lit solitaire
Parfois une grande ombre au bruit que fait la terre
S'éveille, et que soudain son tombeau large et clair
S'entr'ouvre, et dans la nuit jette au monde un éclair,
Si cette chose est vraie, empereur d'Allemagne,
Oh! dis-moi ce qu'on peut faire après Charlemagne!
Parle! dût en parlant ton souffle souverain
Me briser sur le front cette porte d'airain!
Ou plutôt, laisse-moi seul dans ton sanctuaire
Entrer, laisse-moi voir ta face mortuaire,
Ne me repousse pas d'un souffle d'aquilons.
Sur ton chevet de pierre accoude-toi. Parlons.
Oui, dusses-tu me dire, avec ta voix fatale,
De ces choses qui font l'oeil sombre et le front pâle!
Parle, et n'aveugle pas ton fils épouvanté,
Car ta tombe sans doute est pleine de clarté!
Ou, si tu ne dis rien, laisse en ta paix profonde
Carlos étudier ta tête comme un monde;
Laisse qu'il te mesure à loisir, ô géant.
Car rien n'est ici-bas si grand que ton néant!
Que la cendre, à défaut de l'ombre, me conseille!

Il approche la clef de la serrure.
Entrons.

Il recule.
Dieu! s'il allait me parler à l'oreille!
S'il était là, debout et marchant à pas lents!
Si j'allais ressortir avec de cheveux blancs!
Entrons toujours!

Bruit de pas.
On vient. Qui donc ose à cette heure,
Hors moi, d'un pareil mort éveiller la demeure?
Qui donc?

Le bruit s'approche.

Ah! j'oubliais! ce sont mes assassins.
Entrons!

Il ouvre la porte du tombeau, qu'il referme sur lui. — Entrent plusieurs hommes, marchant à pas sourds, cachés sous leurs manteaux et leurs chapeaux.

SCÈNE III.

LES CONJURÉS. Ils vont les uns aux autres, en se prenant la main et en échangeant quelques paroles à voix basse.

PREMIER CONJURÉ (portant seul une torche allumée).
Ad augusta.

DEUXIÈME CONJURÉ.
Per angusta.

PREMIER CONJURÉ.
Les saints
Nous protègent.

TROISIÈME CONJURÉ.
Les morts nous servent.

PREMIER CONJURÉ.
Dieu nous garde.

Bruit de pas dans l'ombre.

DEUXIÈME CONJURÉ.
Qui vive?

VOIX DANS L'OMBRE.
Ad augusta.

DEUXIÈME CONJURÉ.
Per angusta.

Entrent de nouveaux conjurés. — Bruit de pas.

PREMIER CONJURÉ (au troisième).
Regarde;
Il vient encor quelqu'un.

TROISIÈME CONJURÉ.
Qui vive?

VOIX DANS L'OMBRE.
Ad augusta.

TROISIÈME CONJURÉ.
Per augusta.

Entrent de nouveaux conjurés, qui échangent des signes de mains avec tous les autres.

PREMIER CONJURÉ.
C'est bien. Nous voilà tous. — Gotha,
Fais le rapport. — Amis, l'ombre attend la lumière.

Tous les conjurés s'asseyent en demi-cercle sur des tombeaux. Le premier conjuré passe tour à tour devant tous, et chacun allume à sa torche une cire qu'il tient à la main. Puis le premier conjuré va s'asseoir en silence sur une tombe au centre du cercle et plus haute que les autres.

LE DUC DE GOTHA (se levant).
Amis, Charles d'Espagne, étranger par sa mère,
Prétend au saint-empire.

PREMIER CONJURÉ.
Il aura le tombeau.

LE DUC DE GOTHA (Il jette sa torche à terre et l'écrase du pied).
Qu'il en soit de son front comme de ce flambeau!

TOUS.
Que ce soit!

PREMIER CONJURÉ.
Mort à lui!

LE DUC DE GOTHA.
Qu'il meure!

TOUS.
Qu’on l’immole!

DON JUAN DE HARO.
Son père est allemand.

LE DUC DE LUTZELBOURG.
Sa mère est espagnole.

LE DUC DE GOTHA.
Il n’est plus espagnol et n’est pas allemand.
Mort!

UN CONJURÉ.
Si les électeurs allaient en ce moment
Le nommer empereur?

PREMIER CONJURÉ.
Eux! lui! jamais!

DON GIL TELLEZ GIRON.
Qu’importe!
Amis! frappons la tête et la couronne est morte!

PREMIER CONJURÉ,
S’il a le saint-empire, il devient, quel qu’il soit,
Très auguste, et Dieu seul peut le toucher du doigt!

LE DUC DE GOTHA.
Le plus sûr, c’est qu’avant d’être auguste, il expire.

PREMIER CONJURÉ.
On ne l’élira point!

TOUS.
Il n’aura pas l’empire!

PREMIER CONJURÉ.
Combien faut-il de bras pour le mettre au linceul?

TOUS.
Un seul.

PREMIER CONJURÉ.
Combien faut-il de coups au coeur?

TOUS.
Un seul.

PREMIER CONJURÉ.
Qui frappera?

TOUS.
Nous tous.

PREMIER CONJURÉ.
La victime est un traître.
Ils font un empereur; nous, faisons un grand prêtre.
Tirons au sort.

Tous les conjurés écrivent leurs noms sur leurs tablettes, déchirent la feuille, la roulent, et vont l'un après l'autre la jeter dans l'urne d'un tombeau. — Puis le premier conjuré dit: Prions.

Tous s'agenouillent. Le premier conjuré se lève et dit:
Que l'élu croie en Dieu,
Frappe comme un Romain, meure comme un Hébreu!
Il faut qu'il brave roue et tenailles mordantes,
Qu'il chante aux chevalets, rie aux lampes ardentes,
Enfin que pour tuer et mourir, résigné,
Il fasse tout!

Il tire un des parchemins de l'urne.

TOUS.
Quel nom?

PREMIER CONJURÉ (à haute voix).
Hernani.

HERNANI (sortant de la foule des conjurés).
J’ai gagné!
— Je te tiens, toi que j’ai si longtemps poursuivie,
Vengeance!

DON RUY GOMEZ (perçant la foule et prenant Hernani à part).
Oh! cède-moi ce coup!

HERNANI.
Non, sur ma vie!
Oh! ne m’enviez pas ma fortune, seigneur!
C’est la première fois qu’il m’arrive bonheur.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Tu n’as rien. Eh bien, tout, fiefs, châteaux, vasselages,
Cent mille paysans dans mes trois cents villages,
Pour ce coup à frapper, je te les donne, ami!

HERNANI.
Non!

LE DUC DE GOTHA.
Ton bras porterait un coup moins affermi,
Vieillard!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Arrière, vous! sinon le bras, j’ai l’âme.
Aux rouilles du fourreau ne jugez point la lame.

A Hernani.
Tu m’appartiens!

HERNANI.
Ma vie à vous, la sienne à moi.

DON RUY GOMEZ (tirant le cor de sa ceinture).
Eh bien, écoute, ami. Je te rends ce cor.

HERNANI (ébranlé).
Quoi!
La vie! — Eh! que m'importe! Ah! je tiens ma vengeance!
Avec Dieu dans ceci je suis d'intelligence.
J'ai mon père à venger… peut-être plus encor!
Elle, me la rends-tu?

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Jamais! Je rends ce cor.

HERNANI.
Non!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Réfléchis, enfant!

HERNANI.
Duc, laisse-moi ma proie.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Eh bien! maudit sois-tu de m'ôter cette joie!

Il remet le cor à sa ceinture.

PREMIER CONJURÉ (à Hernani).
Frère! avant qu'on ait pu l'élire, il serait bien
D'attendre dès ce soir Carlos…

HERNANI.
Ne craignez rien
Je sais comment on pousse un homme dans la tombe.

PREMIER CONJURÉ.
Que toute trahison sur le traître retombe,
Et Dieu soit avec vous! — Nous, comtes et barons,

S’il périt sans tuer, continuons! Jurons
De frapper tour à tour et sans nous y soustraire
Carlos qui doit mourir.

TOUS (tirant leurs épées).
Jurons!

LE DUC DE GOTHA (au premier conjuré).
Sur quoi, mon frère?

DON RUY GOMEZ (retourne son épée, la prend par la pointe et l’élève au-dessus de sa tête). Jurons sur cette croix!

TOUS (élevant leurs épées).
Qu’il meure impénitent!

On entend un coup de canon éloigné. Tous s’arrêtent en silence. — La porte du tombeau s’entr’ouvre. Don Carlos parait sur le seuil. Pâle, il écoute. — Un second coup. — Un troisième coup. — Il ouvre tout à fait la porte du tombeau, mais sans faire un pas, debout et immobile sur le seuil.

SCENE IV.

LES CONJURÉS, DON CARLOS: puis DON RICARDO, SEIGNEURS, GARDES; LE
ROI DE BOHÊME, LE DUC DE BAVIÈRE; puis DOÑA SOL.

DON CARLOS.
Messieurs, allez plus loin! l’empereur vous entend.

Tous les flambeaux s’éteignent à la fois. — Profond silence. — Il fait un pas dans les ténèbres, si épaisses qu’on y distingue à peine les conjurés, muets et immobiles.
Silence et nuit! l’essaim en sort et s’y replonge.
Croyez-vous que ceci va passer comme un songe,
Et que je vous prendrai, n’ayant plus vos flambeaux,
Pour des hommes de pierre assis sur leurs tombeaux?
Vous parliez tout à l’heure assez haut, mes statues!

Allons! relevez donc vos têtes abattues,
Car voici Charles-Quint! Frappez, faites un pas!
Voyons, oserez-vous? — Non, vous n’oserez pas.
Vos torches flamboyaient sanglantes sous ces voûtes.
Mon souffle a donc suffi pour les éteindre toutes!
Mais voyez, et tournez vos yeux irrésolus,
Si j’en éteins beaucoup, j’en allume encor plus.

Il frappe de la clef de fer sur la porte de bronze du tombeau. A ce bruit, toutes les profondeurs du souterrain se remplissent de soldats portant des torches et des pertuisanes. A leur tête, le duc d’Alcala, le marquis d’Almuñan. Accourez, mes faucons! j’ai le nid, j’ai la proie!

Aux conjurés.
J’illumine à mon tour. Le sépulcre flamboie,
Regardez!

Aux soldats.
Venez tous, car le crime est flagrant.

HERNANI (regardant les soldats).
A la bonne heure! Seul il me semblait trop grand.
C’est bien. J’ai cru d’abord que c’était Charlemagne.
Ce n’est que Charles-Quint.

DON CARLOS (au duc d’Alcala).
Connétable d’Espagne!

Au marquis d’Almuñan.
Amiral de Castille, ici! — Désarmez-les.

On entoure les conjurés et on les désarme.

DON RICARDO (accourant et s’inclinant jusqu’à terre).
Majesté!

DON CARLOS.
Je te fais alcade du palais.

DON RICARDO (s’inclinant de nouveau).
Deux électeurs, au nom de la chambre dorée,
Viennent complimenter la majesté sacrée.

DON CARLOS.
Qu’ils entrent.

Bas à Ricardo.
Doña Sol.

Ricardo salue et sort. Entrent, avec flambeaux et fanfares, le roi de Bohême et le duc de Bavière, tout en drap d’or, couronnes en tête. — Nombreux cortège de seigneurs allemands, portant la bannière de l’empire, l’aigle à deux têtes, avec l’écusson d’Espagne au milieu — Les soldats s’écartent, se rangent en haie, et font passage aux deux électeurs, jusqu’à l’empereur, qu’ils saluent profondément, et qui leur rend leur salut en soulevant son chapeau.

LE DUC DE BAVIÈRE.
Charles! roi des Romains,
Majesté très sacrée, empereur! dans vos mains
Le monde est maintenant, car vous avez l’empire.
Il est à vous, ce trône où tout monarque aspire!
Frédéric, duc de Saxe, y fut d’abord élu,
Mais, vous jugeant plus digne, il n’en a pas voulu.
Venez donc recevoir la couronne et le globe.
Le saint-empire, ô roi, vous revêt de la robe,
Il vous arme du glaive, et vous êtes très grand.

DON CARLOS.
J’irai remercier le collège en rentrant.
Allez, messieurs. Merci, mon frère de Bohême,
Mon cousin de Bavière. Allez. J’irai moi-même.

LE ROI DE BOHEME.
Charles, du nom d’amis nos aïeux se nommaient.
Mon père aimait ton père, et leurs pères s’aimaient.
Charles, si jeune en butte aux fortunes contraires,

Dis, veux-tu que je sois ton frère entre tes frères?
Je t’ai vu tout enfant, et ne puis oublier…

DON CARLOS (l’interrompant).
Roi de Bohême! eh bien, vous êtes familier!

Il lui présente sa main à baiser, ainsi qu’au duc de Bavière, puis congédie les deux électeurs, qui le saluent profondément. Allez!

Sortent les deux électeurs avec leur cortège.

LA FOULE.
Vivat!

DON CARLOS (à part).
J’y suis! et tout m’a fait passage!
Empereur! — Au refus de Frédéric le Sage!

Entre doña Sol, conduite par Ricardo.

DOÑA SOL.
Des soldats! l’empereur! O ciel! coup imprévu.
Hernani!

HERNANI.
Doña Sol!

DON RUY GOMEZ (à côté d’Hernani, à part).
Elle ne m’a point vu!

Doña Sol court à Hernani. Il la fait reculer d’un regard de défiance.

HERNANI.
Madame!…

DOÑA SOL (tirant le poignard de son sein).
J’ai toujours son poignard!

HERNANI (lui tendant les bras).
Mon amie!

DON CARLOS.
Silence, tous!

Aux conjurés.
Votre âme est-elle raffermie?
Il convient que je donne au monde une leçon.
Lara le Castillan et Gotha le Saxon,
Vous tous! que venait-on faire ici? parlez.

HERNANI (faisant un pas).
Sire,
La chose est toute simple, et l’on peut vous la dire.
Nous gravions la sentence au mur de Balthazar.

Il tire un poignard et l’agite.
Nous rendions à César ce qu’on doit à César.

DON CARLOS.
Paix!

A don Ruy Gomez.
Vous traître, Silva!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Lequel de nous deux, sire?

HERNANI (se retournant vers les conjurés).
Nos têtes et l’empire! il a ce qu’il désire.

A l’empereur.
Le bleu manteau des rois pouvait gêner vos pas.
La pourpre vous va mieux. Le sang n’y paraît pas.

DON CARLOS (à don Ruy Gomez).
Mon cousin de Silva, c’est une félonie

A faire du blason rayer ta baronnie!
C'est haute trahison, don Ruy, songez-y bien.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Les rois Rodrigue font les comtes Julien.

DON CARLOS (au duc d'Alcala).
Ne prenez que ce qui peut être duc ou comte.
Le reste!…

Don Ruy Gomez, le duc de Lutzelbourg, le duc de Gotha, don Juan de Haro, don Guzman de Lara, don Tellez Giron, le baron de Hohenbourg, se séparent du groupe des conjurés, parmi lesquels est resté Hernani. — Le duc d'Alcala les entoure étroitement de gardes.

DOÑA SOL (à part).
Il est sauvé!

HERNANI (sortant du groupe des conjurés).
Je prétends qu'on me compte!

A don Carlos.
Puisqu'il s'agit de hache ici, que Hernani,
Pâtre obscur, sous tes pieds passerait impuni,
Puisque son front n'est plus au niveau de ton glaive,
Puisqu'il faut être grand pour mourir, je me lève.
Dieu qui donne le sceptre et qui te le donna
M'a fait duc de Segorbe et duc de Cardona,
Marquis de Monroy, comte Albatera, vicomte
De Gor, seigneur de lieux dont j'ignore le compte.
Je suis Jean d'Aragon, grand maître d'Avis, né
Dans l'exil, fils proscrit d'un père assassiné
Par sentence du tien, roi Carlos de Castille!
Le meurtre est entre nous affaire de famille.
Vous avez l'échafaud, nous avons le poignard.
Donc, le ciel m'a fait duc, et l'exil montagnard.
Mais puisque j'ai sans fruit aiguisé mon épée
Sur les monts et dans l'eau des torrents retrempée,

Il met son chapeau. Aux autres conjurés:
Couvrons-nous, grands d'Espagne!

Tous les Espagnols se couvrent. A don Carlos:
Oui, nos têtes, ô roi,
Ont le droit de tomber couvertes devant toi!

Aux prisonniers.
Silva, Haro, Lara, gens de titre et de race,
Place à Jean d'Aragon! ducs et comtes, ma place!

Aux courtisans et aux gardes.
Je suis Jean d'Aragon, roi, bourreaux et valets!
Et si vos échafauds sont petits, changez-les!

Il vient se joindre au groupe des seigneurs prisonniers.

DOÑA SOL.
Ciel!

DON CARLOS.
En effet, j'avais oublié cette histoire.

HERNANI.
Celui dont le flanc saigne a meilleure mémoire.
L'affront que l'offenseur oublie en insensé
Vit et toujours remue au coeur de l'offensé.

DON CARLOS.
Donc je suis, c'est un titre à n'en point vouloir d'autres,
Fils de pères qui font choir la tête des vôtres!

DOÑA SOL (se jetant à genoux devant l'empereur).
Sire, pardon! pitié! Sire, soyez clément!
Ou frappez-nous tous deux, car il est mon amant,
Mon époux! En lui seul je respire. Oh! je tremble.
Sire, ayez la pitié de nous tuer ensemble!
Majesté! je me traîne à vos sacrés genoux!

Je l’aime! Il est à moi, comme l’empire à vous!
Oh! grâce!

Don Carlos la regarde immobile.
Quel penser sinistre vous absorbe?

DON CARLOS.
Allons! relevez-vous, duchesse de Segorbe,
Comtesse Albatera, marquise de Monroy…

A Hernani.
Tes autres noms, don Juan?

HERNANI.
Qui parle ainsi? le roi?

DON CARLOS.
Non, l’empereur.

DOÑA SOL (se relevant),
Grand Dieu!

DON CARLOS (la montrant à Hernani).
Duc, voilà ton épouse.

HERNANI (les yeux au ciel, et doña Sol dans ses bras).
Juste Dieu!

DON CARLOS (à don Ruy Gomez).
Mon cousin, ta noblesse est jalouse,
Je sais. Mais Aragon peut épouser Silva.

DON RUY GOMEZ (sombre).
Ce n’est pas ma noblesse.

HERNANI (regardant doña Sol avec amour et la tenant embrassée).
Oh! ma haine s’en va!

Il jette son poignard.

DON RUY GOMEZ (à part, les regardant tous deux).
Éclaterai-je? oh! non! Fol amour! douleur folle!
Tu leur ferais pitié, vieille tête espagnole!
Vieillard, brûle sans flamme, aime et souffre en secret.
Laisse ronger ton coeur. Pas un cri. L'on rirait.

DOÑA SOL (dans les bras d'Hernani).
0 mon duc!

HERNANI.
Je n'ai plus que de l'amour dans l'âme.

DOÑA SOL.
O bonheur!

DON CARLOS (à part, la main dans sa poitrine).
Éteins-toi, coeur jeune et plein de flamme!
Laisse régner l'esprit, que longtemps tu troublas.
Tes amours désormais, tes maîtresses, hélas!
C'est l'Allemagne, c'est la Flandre, c'est l'Espagne.

L'oeil fixé sur sa bannière.
L'empereur est pareil à l'aigle, sa compagne.
A la place du coeur il n'a qu'un écusson.

HERNANI.
Ah! vous êtes César!

DON CARLOS (à Hernani).
De ta noble maison,
Don juan, ton coeur est digne.

Montrant doña Sol.
Il est digne aussi d'elle.
— A genoux, duc!

Hernani s'agenouille. Don Carlos détache sa toison-d'or et la lui passe au cou. Reçois ce collier.

Don Carlos tire son épée et l’en frappe trois fois sur l’épaule.
Sois fidèle!
Par saint Etienne, duc, je te fais chevalier.

Il le relève et l’embrasse.
Mais tu l’as, le plus doux et le plus beau collier,
Celui que je n’ai pas, qui manque au rang suprême,
Les deux bras d’une femme aimée et qui vous aime!
Ah! tu vas être heureux; moi, je suis empereur.

Aux conjurés.
Je ne sais plus vos noms, messieurs. Haine et fureur,
Je veux tout oublier. Allez, je vous pardonne!
C’est la leçon qu’au monde il convient que je donne,
Ce n’est pas vainement qu’à Charles premier, roi,
L’empereur Charles-Quint succède, et qu’une loi
Change, aux yeux de l’Europe, orpheline éplorée,
L’altesse catholique en majesté sacrée.

Les conjurés tombent à genoux.

LES CONJURÉS.
Gloire à Carlos!

DON RUY GOMEZ (à don Carlos).
Moi seul je reste condamné.

DON CARLOS.
Et moi!

DON RUY GOMEZ (à part).
Mais, comme lui, je n’ai point pardonné!

HERNANI.
Qui donc nous change tous ainsi?

TOUS (soldats, conjurés, seigneurs).
Vive Allemagne!

Honneur à Charles-Quint!

DON CARLOS (se tournant vers le tombeau).
Honneur à Charlemagne!
Laissez-nous seuls tous deux.

Tous sortent.

SCÈNE V.

DON CARLOS (seul. Il s’incline devant le tombeau).
Es-tu content de moi?
Ai-je bien dépouillé les misères du roi,
Charlemagne? Empereur, suis-je bien un autre homme?
Puis-je accoupler mon casque à la mitre de Rome?
Aux fortunes du monde ai-je droit de toucher?
Ai-je un pied sûr et ferme, et qui puisse marcher
Dans ce sentier, semé des ruines vandales,
Que tu nous as battu de tes larges sandales?
Ai-je bien à ta flamme allumé mon flambeau?
Ai-je compris la voix qui parle en ton tombeau?
— Ah! j’étais seul, perdu, seul devant un empire,
Tout un monde qui hurle, et menace, et conspire,
Le Danois à punir, le Saint-Père à payer,
Venise, Soliman, Luther, François premier,
Mille poignards jaloux luisant déjà dans l’ombre,
Des pièges, des écueils, des ennemis sans nombre,
Vingt peuples dont un seul ferait peur à vingt rois,
Tout pressé, tout pressant, tout à faire à la fois,
Je t’ai crié: — Par où faut-il que je commence?
Et tu m’as répondu: — Mon fils, par la clémence!

ACTE CINQUIÈME - LA NOCE.

SARAGOSSE.

Une terrasse du palais d'Aragon. Au fond, la rampe d'un escalier qui s'enfonce dans le jardin. A droite et à gauche, deux portes donnant sur une terrasse, que ferme une balustrade surmontée de deux rangs d'arcades moresques, au-dessus et au travers desquelles on voit les jardins du palais, les jets d'eau dans l'ombre, les bosquets avec les lumières qui s'y promènent, et au fond les faîtes gothiques et arabes du palais illuminé. Il est nuit. On entend des fanfares éloignées. Des masques, des dominos, épars, isolés, ou groupés, traversent çà et là la terrasse. Sur le devant, un groupe de jeunes seigneurs, les masques à la main, riant et causant à grand bruit.

SCÈNE PREMIÈRE.

DON SANCHO SANCHEZ DE ZUNIGA, Comte de MONTEREY, DON MATIAS CENTURION, MARQUIS D'ALMURAN, DON RICARDO DE ROXAS, Comte de CASAPALMA, DON FRANCISCO DE SOTOMAYOR, Comte de VELALCAZAR, DON GARCI SUAREZ DE CARBAJAL, Comte DE PERALVER.

DON GARCI.
Ma foi, vive la joie et vive l'épousée!

DON MATIAS (regardant au balcon).
Saragosse ce soir se met à la croisée.

DON GARCI.
Et fait bien! on ne vit jamais noce aux flambeaux
Plus gaie, et nuit plus douce, et mariés plus beaux!

DON MATIAS.
Bon empereur!

DON SANCHO.
Marquis, certain soir qu'à la brune
Nous allions avec lui tous deux cherchant fortune,
Qui nous eût dit qu'un jour tout finirait ainsi?

DON RICARDO (l'interrompant).
J'en étais.

Aux autres.
Écoutez l'histoire que voici:
Trois galants, un bandit que l'échafaud réclame,
Puis un duc, puis un roi, d'un même coeur de femme
Font le siège à la fois. L'assaut donné, qui l'a?
C'est le bandit.

DON FRANCISCO.
Mais rien que de simple en cela.
L’amour et la fortune, ailleurs comme en Espagne,
Sont jeux de des pipés. C’est le voleur qui gagne!

DON RICARDO
Moi, j’ai fait ma fortune à voir faire l’amour.
D’abord comte, puis grand, puis alcade de cour,
J’ai fort bien employé mon temps, sans qu’on s’en doute.

DON SANCHO.
Le secret de monsieur, c’est d’être sur la route
Du roi…

DON RICARDO.
Faisant valoir mes droits, mes actions.

DON GARCI.
Vous avez profité de ses distractions.

DON MATIAS.
Que devient le vieux duc? Fait-il clouer sa bière?

DON SANCHO.
Marquis, ne riez pas! car c’est une âme fière.
Il aimait doña Sol, ce vieillard. Soixante ans
Ont fait ses cheveux gris, un jour les a fait blancs.

DON GARCI.
Il n’a pas reparu, dit-on, à Saragosse?

DON SANCHO.
Vouliez-vous pas qu’il mît son cercueil de la noce?

DON FRANCISCO.
Et que fait l’empereur?

DON SANCHO.
L’empereur aujourd’hui
Est triste. Le Luther lui donne de l’ennui.

DON RICARDO.
Ce Luther, beau sujet de soucis et d’alarmes!
Que j’en finirais vite avec quatre gendarmes!

DON MATIAS.
Le Soliman aussi lui fait ombre.

DON GARCI.
Ah! Luther,
Soliman, Neptunus, le diable et Jupiter,
Que me font ces gens-là? Les femmes sont jolies,
La mascarade est rare, et j’ai dit cent folies!

DON SANCHO.
Voilà l’essentiel.

DON RICARDO.
Garci n’a point tort. Moi,
Je ne suis plus le même un jour de fête, et croi
Qu’un masque que je mets me fait une autre tête,
En vérité!

DON SANCHO (bas à don Matias).
Que n’est-ce alors tous les jours fête?

DON FRANCISCO (montrant la porte à droite).
Messeigneurs, n’est-ce pas la chambre des époux?

DON GARCI (avec un signe de tête).
Nous les verrons venir dans l’instant.

DON FRANCISCO.
Croyez-vous?

DON GARCI.
Hé! sans doute!

DON FRANCISCO.
Tant mieux. L'épousée est si belle!

DON RICARDO.
Que l'empereur est bon! Hernani, ce rebelle
Avoir la toison d'or! marié! pardonné!
Loin de là, s'il m'eût cru, l'empereur eût donné
Lit de pierre au galant, lit de plume à la dame.

DON SANCHO (bas à don Matias).
Que je le crèverais volontiers de ma lame,
Faux seigneur de clinquant recousu de gros fil.
Pourpoint de comte, empli de conseils d'alguazil!

DON RICARDO (s'approchant).
Que dites-vous là?

DON MATIAS (bas à don Sancho).
Comte, ici pas de querelle!

A don Ricardo.
Il me chante un sonnet de Pétrarque à sa belle.

DON GARCI.
Avez-vous remarqué, messieurs, parmi les fleurs,
Les femmes, les habits de toutes les couleurs,
Ce spectre, qui, debout contre une balustrade,
De son domino noir tachait la mascarade?

DON RICARDO.
Oui, pardieu!

DON GARCI.
Qu'est-ce donc?

DON RICARDO.
Mais, sa taille, son air…
C’est don Prancasio, général de la mer.

DON FRANCISCO.
Non.

DON GARCI.
Il n’a pas quitté son masque.

DON FRANCISCO.
Il n’avait garde.
C’est le duc de Soma qui veut qu’on le regarde.
Rien de plus.

DON RICARDO.
Non. Le duc m’a parlé.

DON GARCI.
Qu’est ce alors
Que ce masque? — Tenez, le voilà.

Entre un domino noir qui traverse lentement la terrasse au fond. Tous se retournent et le suivent des yeux, sans qu’il paraisse y prendre garde.

DON SANCHO.
Si les morts
Marchent, voici leur pas.

DON GARCI (courant au domino noir).
Beau masque!…

Le domino noir se retourne et s’arrête. Garci recule.
Sur mon âme,
Messeigneurs, dans ses yeux j’ai vu luire une flamme!

DON SANCHO.
Si c’est le diable, il trouve à qui parler.

Il va au domino noir, toujours immobile.
Mauvais!
Nous viens-tu de l’enfer?

LE MASQUE.
Je n’en viens pas, j’y vais.

Il reprend sa marche et disparaít par la rampe de l’escalier. Tous le suivent des yeux avec une sorte d’effroi.

DON MATIAS.
La voix est sépulcrale autant qu’on le peut dire.

DON GARCI.
Baste! ce qui fait peur ailleurs, au bal fait rire.

DON SANCHO.
Quelque mauvais plaisant!

DON GARCI.
Ou si c’est Lucifer
Qui vient nous voir danser, en attendant l’enfer, Dansons!

DON SANCHO.
C’est à coup sûr quelque bouffonnerie.

DON MATIAS.
Nous le saurons demain.

DON SANCHO (à don Matias).
Regardez, je vous prie.
Que devient-il?

DON MATIAS (à la balustrade de la terrasse).
Il a descendu l’escalier.
Plus rien.

DON SANCHO.
C’est un plaisant drôle!

Rêvant.
C’est singulier.

DON GARCI (à une dame qui passe).
Marquise, dansons-nous celle-ci?

Il la salue et lui présente la main.

LA DAME.
Mon cher comte,
Vous savez, avec vous, que mon mari les compte.

DON GARCI.
Raison de plus. Cela l’amuse apparemment.
C’est son plaisir. Il compte, et nous dansons.

La dame lui donne la main, et ils sortent.

DON SANCHO (pensif).
Vraiment,
C’est singulier!

DON MATIAS.
Voici les mariés. Silence!

Entrent Hernani et doña Sol se donnant la main. Doña Sol en magnifique habit de mariée; Hernani tout en velours noir, avec la toison-d’or au cou. Derrière eux, foule de masques, de dames et de seigneurs qui leur font cortège. Deux hallebardiers en riche livrée les suivent, et quatre pages les précèdent. Tout le monde se range et s’incline sur leur passage. Fanfare.

SCENE II.

LES MEMES, HERNANI, DOÑA SOL, SUITE.

HERNANI (saluant).
Chers amis!

DON RICARDO (allant à lui et s'inclinant).
Ton bonheur fait le nôtre, excellence!

DON FRANCISCO (contemplant doña Sol).
Saint Jacques monseigneur! c'est Vénus qu'il conduit!

DON MATIAS.
D'honneur, on est heureux un pareil jour la nuit!

DON FRANCISCO (montrant à don Matias la chambre nuptiale).
Qu'il va se passer là de gracieuses choses!
Être fée, et tout voir, feux éteints, portes closes,
Serait-ce pas charmant!

DON SANCHO (à don Matias).
Il est tard. Partons-nous?

Tous vont saluer les mariés et sortent, les uns par la porte, les autres par l'escalier du fond.

HERNANI (les reconduisant).
Dieu vous garde!

DON SANCHO (resté le dernier, lui serre la main).
Soyez heureux!

Il sort. Hernani et doña Sol restent seuls. Bruit de pas et de voix qui s'éloignent, puis cessent tout à fait. Pendant tout le commencement de la scène qui suit, les fanfares et les lumières éloignées s'éteignent par degrés. La nuit et le silence reviennent peu à peu.

SCÈNE III.

HERNANI, DOÑA SOL.

DOÑA SOL.
Ils s’en vont tous,
Enfin!

HERNANI (cherchant à l’attirer dans ses bras).
Cher amour!

DOÑA SOL (rougissant et reculant).
C’est… qu’il est tard, ce me semble.

HERNANI.
Ange! il est toujours tard pour être seuls ensemble.

DOÑA SOL.
Ce bruit me fatiguait. N’est-ce pas, cher seigneur,
Que toute cette joie étourdit le bonheur?

HERNANI.
Tu dis vrai. Le bonheur, amie, est chose grave.
Il veut des coeurs de bronze et lentement s’y grave.
Le plaisir l’effarouche en lui jetant des fleurs.
Son sourire est moins près du rire que des pleurs.

DOÑA SOL.
Dans vos yeux, ce sourire est le jour.

Hernani cherche à l’entraîner vers la porte. Elle rougit.
Tout à l’heure.

HERNANI.
Oh! je suis ton esclave! Oui, demeure, demeure!
Fais ce que tu voudras. Je ne demande rien.
Tu sais ce que tu fais! ce que tu fais est bien!

Je rirai si tu veux, je chanterai. Mon âme
Brûle. Eh! dis au volcan qu'il étouffe sa flamme,
Le volcan fermera ses gouffres entr'ouverts,
Et n'aura sur ses flancs que fleurs et gazons verts.
Car le géant est pris, le Vésuve est esclave,
Et que t'importe à toi son coeur rongé de lave?
Tu veux des fleurs? c'est bien! Il faut que de son mieux
Le volcan tout brûlé s'épanouisse aux yeux!

DOÑA SOL.
Oh! que vous êtes bon pour une pauvre femme,
Hernani de mon coeur!

HERNANI.
Quel est ce nom, madame?
Ah! ne me nomme plus de ce nom, par pitié!
Tu me fais souvenir que j'ai tout oublié!
Je sais qu'il existait autrefois, dans un rêve,
Un Hernani, dont l'oeil avait l'éclair du glaive,
Un homme de la nuit et des monts, un proscrit
Sur qui le mot vengeance était partout écrit,
Un malheureux traînant après lui l'anathème!
Mais je ne connais pas ce Hernani. — Moi, j'aime
Les prés, les fleurs, les bois, le chant du rossignol.
Je suis Jean d'Aragon, mari de doña Sol!
Je suis heureux!

DOÑA SOL.
Je suis heureuse!

HERNANI.
Que m'importe
Les haillons qu'en entrant j'ai laissés à la porte!
Voici que je reviens à mon palais en deuil.
Un ange du Seigneur m'attendait sur le seuil.
J'entre, et remets debout les colonnes brisées,
Je rallume le feu, je rouvre les croisées,
Je fais arracher l'herbe au pavé de la cour,

Je ne suis plus que joie, enchantement, amour.
Qu’on me rende mes tours, mes donjons, mes bastilles,
Mon panache, mon siège au conseil des Castilles,
Vienne ma doña Sol rouge et le front baissé,
Qu’on nous laisse tous deux, et le reste est passé!
Je n’ai rien vu, rien dit, rien fait. Je recommence
J’efface tout, j’oublie! Ou sagesse ou démence,
Je vous ai, je vous aime, et vous êtes mon bien!

DOÑA SOL (examinant sa toison-d’or).
Que sur ce velours noir ce collier d’or fait bien!

HERNANI.
Vous vîtes avant moi le roi mis de la sorte.

DOÑA SOL.
Je n’ai pas remarqué. Tout autre, que m’importe!
Puis, est-ce le velours ou le satin encor?
Non, mon duc, c’est ton cou qui sied au collier d’or.
Vous êtes noble et fier, monseigneur.

Il veut l’entraîner.
Tout à l’heure!
Un moment! — Vois-tu bien, c’est la joie et je pleure!
Viens voir la belle nuit.

Elle va à la balustrade.
Mon duc, rien qu’un moment!
Le temps de respirer et de voir seulement.
Tout s’est éteint, flambeaux et musique de fête.
Rien que la nuit et nous. Félicité parfaite!
Dis, ne le crois-tu pas? sur nous, tout en dormant,
La nature à demi veille amoureusement.
Pas un nuage au ciel. Tout, comme nous, repose.
Viens, respire avec moi l’air embaumé de rose!
Regarde. Plus de feux, plus de bruit. Tout se tait.
La lune tout à l’heure à l’horizon montait
Tandis que tu parlais, sa lumière qui tremble

Et ta voix, toutes deux m’allaient au coeur ensemble,
Je me sentais joyeuse et calme, ô mon amant,
Et j’aurais bien voulu mourir en ce moment!

HERNANI.
Ah! qui n’oublierait tout à cette voix céleste!
Ta parole est un chant où rien d’humain ne reste.
Et, comme un voyageur, sur un fleuve emporté,
Qui glisse sur les eaux par un beau soir d’été
Et voit fuir sous ses yeux mille plaines fleuries,
Ma pensé entraînée erre en tes rêveries!

DOÑA SOL.
Ce silence est trop noir, ce calme est trop profond.
Dis, ne voudrais-tu pas voir une étoile au fond?
Ou qu’une voix des nuits, tendre et délicieuse,
S’élevant tout à coup, chantât?…

HERNANI (souriant).
Capricieuse!
Tout à l’heure on fuyait la lumière et les chants!

DOÑA SOL.
Le bal! Mais un oiseau qui chanterait aux champs!
Un rossignol perdu dans l’ombre et dans la mousse,
Ou quelque flûte au loin!… Car la musique est douce,
Fait l’âme harmonieuse, et, comme un divin choeur,
Éveille mille voix qui chantent dans le coeur
Ah! ce serait charmant!

On entend le bruit lointain d’un cor dans l’ombre.
Dieu! je suis exaucée!

HERNANI (tressaillant, à part).
Ah! malheureuse!

DOÑA SOL.
Un ange a compris ma pensée.

Ton bon ange sans doute?

HERNANI (amèrement).
Oui, mon bon ange!

Le cor recommence. — A part.
Encor!

DOÑA SOL (souriant).
Don Juan, je reconnais le son de votre cor!

HERNANI.
N'est-ce pas?

DOÑA SOL.
Seriez-vous dans cette sérénade
De moitié?

HERNANI.
De moitié, tu l'as dit.

DOÑA SOL.
Bal maussade!
Oh! que j'aime bien mieux le cor au fond des bois!
Et puis, c'est votre cor, c'est comme votre voix.

Le cor recommence.

HERNANI (à part).
Ah! le tigre est en bas qui hurle, et veut sa proie.

DOÑA SOL.
Don Juan, cette harmonie emplit le coeur de joie.

HERNANI (se levant terrible).
Nommez-moi Hernani! nommez-moi Hernani!
Avec ce nom fatal je n'en ai pas fini!

DOÑA SOL (tremblante).
Qu’avez-vous?

HERNANI.
Le vieillard!

DOÑA SOL.
Dieu! quels regards funèbres!
Qu’avez-vous?

HERNANI.
Le vieillard, qui rit dans les ténèbres!
— Ne le voyez-vous pas?

DOÑA SOL.
Où vous égarez-vous?
Qu’est-ce que ce vieillard?

HERNANI.
Le vieillard!

DOÑA SOL (tombant à genoux).
A genoux
Je t’en supplie, oh! dis, quel secret te déchire?
Qu’as-tu?

HERNANI.
Je l’ai juré!

DOÑA SOL.
Juré?

Elle suit tous ses mouvements avec anxiété. Il s’arrête tout à coup et passe la main sur son front.

HERNANI (à part). Qu’allais-je dire? Épargnons-la.

Haut.
Moi, rien. De quoi t’ai-je parlé?

DOÑA SOL.
Vous avez dit…

HERNANI.
Non. Non. J’avais l’esprit troublé…
Je souffre un peu, vois-tu. N’en prends pas d’épouvante.

DOÑA SOL.
Te faut-il quelque chose? ordonne à ta servante.

Le cor recommence.

HERNANI (à part).
Il le veut! il le veut! Il a mon serment!

Cherchant à sa ceinture sans épée et sans poignard.
— Rien!
Ce devrait être fait! — Ah!…

DOÑA SOL.
Tu souffres donc bien.

HERNANI.
Une blessure ancienne, et qui semblait fermée,
Se rouvre…

A part.
Éloignons-la.

Haut.
Doña Sol, bien-aimée,
Écoute. Ce coffret qu’en des jours — moins heureux
Je portais avec moi…

DOÑA SOL.
Je sais ce que tu veux.
Eh bien, qu’en veux-tu faire?

HERNANI.
Un flacon qu’il renferme
Contient un élixir, qui pourra mettre un terme
Au mal que je ressens. — Va!

DOÑA SOL.
J’y vais, mon seigneur.

Elle sort par la porte de la chambre nuptiale.

SCÈNE IV.

HERNANI (seul).
Voilà donc ce qu'il vient faire de mon bonheur!
Voici le doigt fatal qui luit sur la muraille!
Oh! que la destinée amèrement me raille!

Il tombe dans une profonde et convulsive rêverie, puis se détourne brusquement.

Eh bien?… — Mais tout se tait. Je n'entends rien venir.
Si je m'étais trompé?…

Le masque en domino noir parait au haut de la rampe. Hernani s'arrête pétrifié.

SCÈNE V.

HERNANI, LE MASQUE.

LE MASQUE.
«Quoi qu’il puisse advenir,
Quand tu voudras, vieillard, quel que soit le lieu, l’heure,
S’il te passe à l’esprit qu’il est temps que je meure,
Viens, sonne de ce cor, et ne prends d’autres soins.
Tout sera fait.» — Ce pacte eut les morts pour témoins.
Eh bien, tout est-il fait?

HERNANI (à voix basse).
C’est lui!

LE MASQUE.
Dans ta demeure
Je viens, et je te dis qu’il est temps. C’est mon heure.
Je te trouve en retard.

HERNANI.
Bien. Quel est ton plaisir?
Que feras-tu de moi? Parle.

LE MASQUE.
Tu peux choisir
Du fer ou du poison. Ce qu’il faut, je l’apporte.
Nous partirons tous deux.

HERNANI.
Soit.

LE MASQUE.
Prions-nous?

HERNANI.
Qu’importe!

LE MASQUE.
Que prends-tu?

HERNANI.
Le poison.

LE MASQUE.
Bien! — Donne-moi ta main.

Il présente une fiole à Hernani, qui la reçoit en pâlissant.
Bois, — pour que je finisse.

Hernani approche la fiole de ses lèvres, puis recule.

HERNANI.
Oh! par pitié, demain! —
Oh! s'il te reste un coeur, duc, ou du moins une âme,
Si tu n'es pas un spectre échappé de la flamme,
Un mort damné, fantôme ou démon désormais,
Si Dieu n'a point encor mis sur ton front: jamais!
Si tu sais ce que c'est que ce bonheur suprême
D'aimer, d'avoir vingt ans, d'épouser quand on aime,
Si jamais femme aimée a tremblé dans tes bras,
Attends jusqu'à demain! Demain tu reviendras!

LE MASQUE.
Simple qui parle ainsi! Demain! demain! — Tu railles!
Ta cloche a ce matin sonné tes funérailles!
Et que ferais-je, moi, cette nuit? J'en mourrais.
Et qui viendrait te prendre et t'emporter après?
Seul descendre au tombeau! Jeune homme, il faut me suivre!

HERNANI.
Eh bien, non! et de toi, démon, je me délivre!
Je n'obéirai pas.

LE MASQUE.
Je m'en doutais. Fort bien.

Sur quoi donc m’as-tu fait ce serment! — Ah! sur rien.
Peu de chose, après tout! La tête de ton père!
Cela peut s’oublier. La jeunesse est légère.

HERNANI.
Mon père! Mon père!… — Ah! j’en perdrai la raison!

LE MASQUE.
Non, ce n’est qu’un parjure et qu’une trahison.

HERNANI
Duc!

LE MASQUE.
Puisque les aînés des maisons espagnoles
Se font jeu maintenant de fausser leurs paroles,
Adieu!

Il fait un pas pour sortir.

HERNANI.
Ne t’en va pas.

LE MASQUE.
Alors…

HERNANI.
Vieillard cruel

Il prend la fiole.
Revenir sur mes pas à la porte du ciel!

Rentre doña Sol, sans voir le masque, qui est debout, au fond.

SCÈNE VI.

LES MÊMES, DOÑA SOL.

DOÑA SOL.
Je n’ai pu le trouver, ce coffret.

HERNANI(à part).
Dieu! C’est elle!
Dans quel moment!

DOÑA SOL.
Qu’a-t-il? je l’effraie, il chancelle
A ma voix! — Que tiens-tu dans ta main? quel soupçon!
Que tiens-tu dans ta main? réponds.

Le domino s’est approché et se démasque. Elle pousse un cri, et reconnaît don Ruy. C’est du poison!

HERNANI.
Grand Dieu!

DOÑA SOL (à Hernani).
Que t’ai-je fait? quel horrible mystère!
Vous me trompiez, don Juan!

HERNANI.
Ah! j’ai dû te le taire.
J’ai promis de mourir au duc qui me sauva.
Aragon doit payer cette dette à Silva.

DOÑA SOL.
Vous n’êtes pas à lui, mais à moi. Que m’importe
Tous vos autres serments!

A don Ruy Gomez.
Duc, l’amour me rend forte,

Contre vous, contre tous, duc, je le défendrai.

DON RUY GOMEZ (immobile).
Défends-le, si tu peux, contre un serment juré.

DOÑA SOL.
Quel serment?

HERNANI.
J’ai juré.

DOÑA SOL.
Non, non, rien ne te lie!
Cela ne se peut pas! Crime! attentat! folie!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Allons, duc!

Hernani fait un geste pour obéir. Doña Sol cherche à l’entraîner.

HERNANI.
Laissez-moi, doña Sol. Il le faut.
Le duc a ma parole, et mon père est là-haut!

DOÑA SOL (à don Ruy Gomez).
Il vaudrait mieux pour vous aller aux tigres même
Arracher leurs petits qu’à moi celui que j’aime!
Savez-vous ce que c’est que doña Sol? Longtemps,
Par pitié pour votre âge et pour vos soixante ans,
J’ai fait la fille douce, innocente et timide,
Mais voyez-vous cet oeil de pleurs de rage humide?

Elle tire un poignard de son sein.
Voyez-vous ce poignard? — Ah! vieillard insensé,
Craignez vous pas le fer quand l’oeil a menacé?
Prenez-garde, don Ruy! — Je suis de la famille.
Mon oncle! — Écoutez-moi. Fussé-je votre fille,
Malheur si vous portez la main sur mon époux!

Elle jette le poignard, et tombe à genoux devant le duc.
Ah! je tombe à vos pieds! Ayez pitié de nous!
Grâce! Hélas! monseigneur, je ne suis qu’une femme,
Je suis faible, ma force avorte dans mon âme,
Je me brise aisément. Je tombe à vos genoux!
Ah! je vous en supplie, ayez pitié de nous.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Doña Sol!

DOÑA SOL.
Pardonnez! Nous autres Espagnoles,
Notre douleur s’emporte à de vives paroles,
Vous le savez. Hélas! vous n’étiez pas méchant!
Pitié! vous me tuez, mon oncle, en le touchant!
Pitié! je l’aime tant!

DON RUY GOMEZ (sombre).
Vous l’aimez trop!

HERNANI.
Tu pleures!

DOÑA SOL.
Non, non, je ne veux pas, mon amour, que tu meures!
Non! je ne le veux pas.

A don Ruy.
Faites grâce aujourd’hui!
Je vous aimerai bien aussi, vous.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Après lui!
De ces restes d’amour, d’amitié, — moins encore,
Croyez-vous apaiser la soif qui me dévore?

Montrant Hernani.
Il est seul! il est tout! Mais moi, belle pitié!

Qu’est-ce que je peux faire avec votre amitié?
O rage! il aurait, lui, le coeur, l’amour, le trône,
Et d’un regard de vous il me ferait l’aumône!
Et s’il fallait un mot à mes voeux insensés,
C’est lui qui vous dirait: — Dis cela, c’est assez! —
En maudissant tous bas le mendiant avide!
Auquel il faut jeter le fond du verre vide
Honte! dérision! non. Il faut en finir.
Bois.

HERNANI.
Il a ma parole, et je dois la tenir.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Allons!

Hernani approche la fiole de ses lèvres. Doña Sol se jette sur son bras.

DOÑA SOL.
Oh! pas encor! Daignez tous deux m’entendre.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Le sépulcre est ouvert, et je ne puis attendre.

DOÑA SOL.
Un instant! — Mon seigneur! Mon don Juan! — Ah!
tous deux
Vous êtes bien cruels! Qu’est-ce que je veux d’eux?
Un instant! voilà tout, tout ce que je réclame!
Enfin, on laisse dire à cette pauvre femme
Ce qu’elle a dans le coeur!… — Oh! laissez-moi parler!

DON RUY GOMEZ (à Hernani).
J’ai hâte.

DOÑA SOL.
Messeigneurs, vous me faites trembler!
Que vous ai-je donc fait?

HERNANI.
Ah! son cri me déchire.

DOÑA SOL (lui retenant toujours le bras).
Vous voyez bien que j’ai mille choses à dire!

DON RUY GOMEZ (à Hernani).
Il faut mourir.

DOÑA SOL (toujours pendue au bras d’Hernani).
Don Juan, lorsque j’aurai parlé
Tout ce que tu voudras, tu le feras.

Elle lui arrache la fiole.
Je l’ai!

Elle élève la fiole aux yeux d’Hernani et du vieillard étonné.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Puisque je n’ai céans affaire qu’à deux femmes,
Don Juan, il faut qu’ailleurs j’aille chercher des âmes.
Tu fais de beaux serments par le sang dont tu sors,
Et je vais à ton père en parler chez les morts!
— Adieu…

Il fait quelques pas pour sortir. Hernani le retient.

HERNANI.
Duc, arrêtez!

A doña Sol.
Hélas! je t’en conjure,
Veux-tu me voir faussaire, et félon, et parjure?
Veux-tu que partout j’aille avec la trahison
Écrite sur le front? Par pitié, ce poison,
Rends-le-moi! Par l’amour, par notre âme immortelle!…

DOÑA SOL (sombre).
Tu veux?

Elle boit.
Tiens, maintenant.

DON RUY GOMEZ (à part).
Ah! c’était donc pour elle!

DOÑA SOL (rendant à Hernani la fiole à demi vidée).
Prends, te dis-je.

HERNANI (à don Ruy).
Vois-tu, misérable vieillard!

DOÑA SOL.
Ne te plains pas de moi, je t’ai gardé ta part.

HERNANI (prenant la fiole).
Dieu!

DOÑA SOL.
Tu ne m’aurais pas ainsi laissé la mienne,
Toi! Tu n’as pas le coeur d’une épouse chrétienne.
Tu ne sais pas aimer comme aime une Silva.
Mais j’ai bu la première et suis tranquille. — Va!
Bois si tu veux!

HERNANI.
Hélas! qu’as-tu fait, malheureuse?

DOÑA SOL.
C’est toi qui l’as voulu.

HERNANI.
C’est une mort affreuse!

DOÑA SOL.
Non. Pourquoi donc?

HERNANI.
Ce philtre au sépulcre conduit.

DOÑA SOL.
Devions-nous pas dormir ensemble cette nuit?
Qu’importe dans quel lit?

HERNANI.
Mon père, tu te venges
Sur moi qui t’oubliais!

Il porte la fiole à sa bouche.

DOÑA SOL (se jetant sur lui).
Ciel! des douleurs étranges!…
Ah! jette loin de toi ce philtre! — Ma raison
S’égare. Arrête! Hélas! mon don Juan, ce poison
Est vivant! ce poison dans le coeur fait éclore
Une hydre à mille dents qui ronge et qui dévore!
Oh! je ne savais pas qu’on souffrît à ce point!
Qu’est-ce donc que cela? c’est du feu! Ne bois point!
Oh! tu souffrirais trop!

HERNANI (a don Ruy).
Ah! ton âme est cruelle!
Pouvais-tu pas choisir d’autre poison pour elle?

Il boit et jette la fiole.

DOÑA SOL.
Que fais-tu?

HERNANI.
Qu’as-tu fait?

DOÑA SOL.
Viens, ô mon jeune amant,
Dans mes bras.

Ils s’asseyent l’un près de l’autre.
N’est-ce pas qu’on souffre horriblement?

HERNANI.
Non.

DOÑA SOL.
Voilà notre nuit de noces commencée!
Je suis bien pâle, dis, pour une fiancée?

HERNANI.
Ah!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
La fatalité s’accomplit.

HERNANI.
Désespoir!
O tourment! doña Sol souffrir, et moi le voir!

DOÑA SOL.
Calme-toi. Je suis mieux. — Vers des clartés nouvelles
Nous allons tout à l’heure ensemble ouvrir nos ailes.
Partons d’un vol égal vers un monde meilleur.
Un baiser seulement, un baiser!

Ils s’embrassent.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
O douleur!

HERNANI (d’une voix affaiblie).
Oh! béni soit le ciel qui m’a fait une vie
D’abîmes entourée et de spectres suivie,
Mais qui permet que, las d’un si rude chemin,
Je puisse m’endormir ma bouche sur ta main!

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Qu’ils sont heureux!

HERNANI (d’une voix d plus en plus faible).
Viens, viens… doña Sol… tout est sombre…
Souffres-tu?

DOÑA SOL (d’une voix également éteinte).
Rien, plus rien.

HERNANI.
Vois-tu des feux dans l’ombre?

DOÑA SOL.
Pas encor.

HERNANI (avec un soupir).
Voici…

Il tombe.

DON RUY GOMEZ (soulevant sa tête, qui retombe).
Mort!

DOÑA SOL (échevelée, et se dressant à demi sur son séant).
Mort! non pas! nous dormons.
Il dort. C’est mon époux, vois-tu. Nous nous aimons.
Nous sommes couchés là. C’est notre nuit de noce.

D’une voix qui s’éteint.
Ne le réveillez pas, seigneur duc de Mendoce.
Il est las.

Elle retourne la figure d’Hernani.
Mon amour, tiens-toi vers moi tourné.
Plus près… plus près encor…

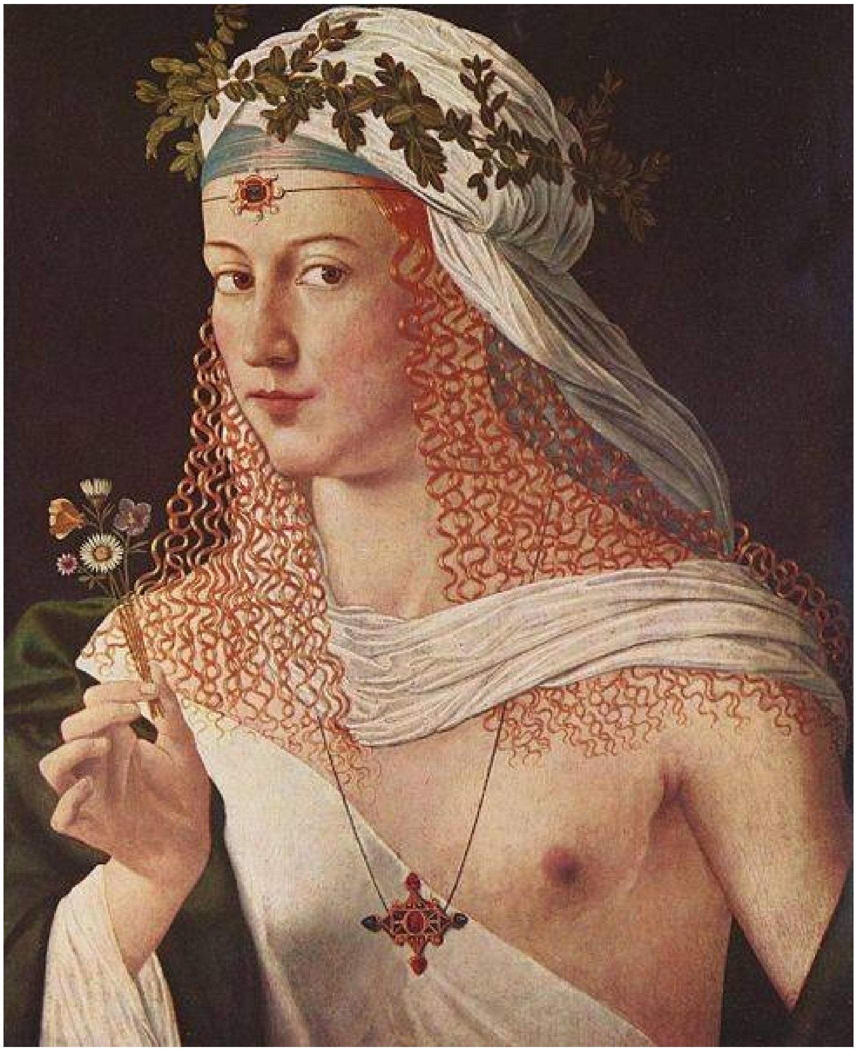
Elle retombe.

DON RUY GOMEZ.
Morte! — Oh! je suis damné.

Il se tue.

LUCRÈCE BORGIA

This play in prose was performed for the first time at the Théâtre de la Porte-Saint-Martin on February 2, 1833. It tells the story of Lucrèce Borgia, the natural daughter of the Spanish cardinal and future Pope Rodrigo Borgia.



Portrait of Lucrèce Borgia

TABLE DES MATIERES

AVERTISSEMENT
ACTE 1 PARTIE 1 SCENE 1
ACTE 1 PARTIE 1 SCENE 2
ACTE 1 PARTIE 1 SCENE 3
ACTE 1 PARTIE 1 SCENE 4
ACTE 1 PARTIE 1 SCENE 5
ACTE 1 PARTIE 2 SCENE 1
ACTE 1 PARTIE 2 SCENE 2
ACTE 1 PARTIE 2 SCENE 3
ACTE 2 PARTIE 1 SCENE 1
ACTE 2 PARTIE 1 SCENE 2
ACTE 2 PARTIE 1 SCENE 3
ACTE 2 PARTIE 1 SCENE 4
ACTE 2 PARTIE 1 SCENE 5
ACTE 2 PARTIE 1 SCENE 6
ACTE 2 PARTIE 2 SCENE 1
ACTE 2 PARTIE 2 SCENE 2
ACTE 3 SCENE 1
ACTE 3 SCENE 2
ACTE 3 SCENE 3

AVERTISSEMENT

Ainsi qu’il s’y était engagé dans la préface de son dernier drame, l’auteur est revenu à l’occupation de toute sa vie, à l’art. Il a repris ses travaux de prédilection, avant même d’en avoir tout-à-fait fini avec les petits adversaires politiques qui sont venus le distraire il y a deux mois. Et puis, mettre au jour un nouveau drame six semaines après le drame proscrit, c’était encore une manière de dire son fait au présent gouvernement. C’était lui montrer qu’il perdait sa peine. C’était lui prouver que l’art et la liberté peuvent repousser en une nuit sous le pied maladroit qui les écrase. Aussi compte-t-il bien mener de front désormais la lutte politique, tant que besoin sera, et l’œuvre littéraire. On peut faire en même temps son devoir et sa tâche. L’un ne nuit pas à l’autre. L’homme a deux mains. le roi s’amuse et Lucrèce Borgia ne se ressemblent ni par le fond, ni par la forme, et ces deux ouvrages ont eu chacun de leur côté une destinée si diverse que l’un sera peut-être un jour la principale date politique et l’autre la principale date littéraire de la vie de l’auteur. Il croit devoir le dire cependant, ces deux pièces si différentes par le fond, par la forme et par la destinée, sont étroitement accouplées dans sa pensée. L’idée qui a produit le roi s’amuse et l’idée qui a produit Lucrèce Borgia sont nées au même moment sur le même point du cœur. Quelle est en effet la pensée intime cachée sous trois ou quatre écorces concentriques dans le roi s’amuse? La voici. Prenez la difformité physique la plus hideuse, la plus repoussante, la plus complète; placez-la là où elle ressort le mieux, à l’étage le plus infime, le plus souterrain et le plus méprisé de l’édifice social; éclairez de tous côtés, par le jour sinistre des contrastes, cette misérable créature; et puis, jetez-lui une ame, et mettez dans cette ame le sentiment le plus pur qui soit donné à l’homme, le sentiment paternel. Qu’arrivera-t-il? C’est que ce sentiment sublime, chauffé selon certaines conditions, transformera sous vos yeux la créature dégradée; c’est que l’être petit deviendra grand; c’est que l’être difforme deviendra beau. Au fond, voilà ce que c’est que le roi s’amuse. Eh bien! Qu’est-ce que c’est que Lucrèce Borgia? Prenez la difformité morale la plus hideuse, la plus repoussante, la plus complète; placez-la là où elle ressort le mieux, dans le cœur d’une femme, avec toutes les conditions de beauté physique et de la grandeur royale, qui donnent de la saillie au crime, et maintenant mêlez à toute cette difformité morale un sentiment pur, le plus pur que la femme puisse éprouver, le sentiment maternel; dans votre monstre mettez une mère; et le monstre intéressera, et le monstre fera pleurer, et cette créature qui faisait peur fera pitié, et cette ame difforme deviendra presque belle à vos yeux. Ainsi, la paternité sanctifiant la difformité physique, voilà le roi s'amuse; la maternité purifiant la difformité morale, voilà Lucrèce Borgia. Dans la pensée de l'auteur, si le mot bilogie n'était pas un mot barbare, ces deux pièces ne feraient qu'une bilogie sui generis, qui pourrait avoir pour titre: le père et la mère. Le sort les a séparées, qu'importe! L'une a prospéré, l'autre a été frappée d'une lettre de cachet; l'idée qui fait le fond de la première restera long-temps encore peut-être voilée par mille préventions à bien des regards; l'idée qui a engendré la seconde semble être chaque soir, si aucune illusion ne nous aveugle, comprise et acceptée par une foule intelligente et sympathique; mais quoi qu'il en soit de ces deux pièces, qui n'ont d'autre mérite d'ailleurs que l'attention dont le public a bien voulu les entourer, elles sont soeurs jumelles, elles se sont touchées en germe, la couronnée et la proscrite, comme Louis XIV et le masque de fer.

Corneille et Molière avaient pour habitude de répondre en détail aux critiques que leurs ouvrages suscitaient, et ce n'est pas une chose peu curieuse aujourd'hui de voir ces géans du théâtre se débattre dans des avant-propos et des avis au lecteur sous l'inextricable réseau d'objections que la critique contemporaine ourdissait sans relâche autour d'eux. L'auteur de ce drame ne se croit pas digne de suivre d'aussi grands exemples. Il se taira, lui, devant la critique. Ce qui sied à des hommes pleins d'autorité, comme Molière et Corneille, ne sied pas à d'autres. D'ailleurs il n'y a peut-être que Corneille au monde qui puisse rester grand et sublime, au moment même où il fait mettre une préface à genoux devant Scudery ou Chapelain. L'auteur est loin d'être Corneille; l'auteur est loin d'avoir affaire à Chapelain ou à Scudery. La critique, à quelques rares exceptions près, a été en générale loyale et bienveillante pour lui. Sans doute il pourrait répondre à plus d'une objection. à ceux qui trouvent, par exemple, que Gennaro se laisse trop candidement empoisonner par le duc au second acte, il pourrait demander si Gennaro, personnage construit par la fantaisie du poète, est tenu d'être plus vraisemblable et plus défiant que l'historique Drusus de Tacite, ignarus et juveniliter hauriens. à ceux qui lui reprochent d'avoir exagéré les crimes de Lucrèce Borgia, il dirait: lisez Tomasi, lisez Guicciardini, lisez surtout le diarium. à ceux qui le blâment d'avoir accepté sur la mort des maris de Lucrèce certaines rumeurs populaires à demi fabuleuses, il répondrait que souvent les fables du peuple font la vérité du poète; et puis il citerait encore Tacite, historien plus obligé de se critiquer sur la réalité des faits que le poète dramatique. Il pourrait pousser le détail de ces explications beaucoup plus loin, et examiner une à une avec la critique toutes les pièces de la charpente de son ouvrage; mais il a plus de plaisir à remercier la critique qu'à la contredire; et, après tout, les réponses qu'il pourrait faire aux objections de la critique, il aime mieux que le lecteur les trouve dans le drame, si elles y sont, que dans la préface.

On lui pardonnera de ne point insister davantage sur le côté purement esthétique de son ouvrage. Il est tout un autre ordre d'idées, non moins hautes selon lui, qu'il voudrait avoir le loisir de remuer et d'approfondir à l'occasion de cette pièce de Lucrèce Borgia. à ses yeux, il y a beaucoup de questions sociales dans les questions littéraires, et toute œuvre est une action. Voilà le sujet sur lequel il s'étendrait volontiers, si l'espace et le temps ne lui manquaient. Le théâtre, on ne saurait trop le répéter, a de nos jours une importance immense, et qui tend à s'accroître sans cesse avec la civilisation même. Le théâtre est une tribune. Le théâtre est une chaire. Le théâtre parle fort et parle haut. Lorsque Corneille dit: pour être plus qu'un roi tu te crois quelque chose, Corneille, c'est Mirabeau. Quand Shakespeare dit: (…), Shakespeare, c'est Bossuet. L'auteur de ce drame sait combien c'est une grande et sérieuse chose que le théâtre. Il sait que le drame, sans sortir des limites impartiales de l'art, a une mission nationale, une mission sociale, une mission humaine. Quand il voit chaque soir ce peuple si intelligent et si avancé qui a fait de Paris la cité centrale du progrès, s'entasser en foule devant un rideau que sa pensée, à lui chétif poète, va soulever le moment d'après, il sent combien il est peu de chose, lui, devant tant d'attente et de curiosité; il sent que si son talent n'est rien, il faut que sa probité soit tout; il s'interroge avec sévérité et recueillement sur la portée philosophique de son œuvre; car il se sait responsable, et il ne veut pas que cette foule puisse lui demander compte un jour de ce qu'il lui aura enseigné. Le poète aussi a charge d'ames. Il ne faut pas que la multitude sorte du théâtre sans emporter avec elle quelque moralité austère et profonde. Aussi espère-t-il bien, dieu aidant, ne développer jamais sur la scène (du moins tant que dureront les temps sérieux où nous sommes), que des choses pleines de leçons et de conseils. Il fera toujours apparaître volontiers le cercueil dans la salle du banquet, la prière des morts à travers les refrains de l’orgie, la cagoule à côté du masque. Il laissera quelquefois le carnaval débraillé chanter à tue-tête sur l’avant-scène; mais il lui criera du fond du théâtre. Il sait bien que l’art seul, l’art pur, l’art proprement dit, n’exige pas tout cela du poète, mais il pense qu’au théâtre surtout il ne suffit pas de remplir seulement les conditions de l’art. Et quant aux plaies et aux misères de l’humanité, toutes les fois qu’il les étalera dans le drame, il tâchera de jeter sur ce que ces nudités-là auraient de trop odieux le voile d’une idée consolante et grave. Il ne mettra pas Marion De Lorme sur la scène, sans purifier la courtisane avec un peu d’amour; il donnera à Triboulet le difforme un cœur de père; il donnera à Lucrèce la monstrueuse des entrailles de mère. Et de cette façon, sa conscience se reposera du moins tranquille et sereine sur son œuvre. Le drame qu’il rêve et qu’il tente de réaliser pourra toucher à tout sans se souiller à rien. Faites circuler dans tout une pensée morale et compatissante, et il n’y a plus rien de difforme ni de repoussant. à la chose la plus hideuse mêlez une idée religieuse, elle deviendra sainte et pure. Attachez Dieu au gibet, vous avez la croix.

12 février 1833.

[

ACTE 1 PARTIE 1 SCENE 1

Une terrasse du palais barbarigo, à Venise. C’est une fête de nuit. Des masques traversent par instans le théâtre. Des deux côtés de la terrasse, le palais splendidement illuminé et résonnant de fanfares. La terrasse couverte d’ombre et de verdure. Au fond, au bas de la terrasse, est censé couler le canal de la Zueca, sur lequel on voit passer par momens, dans les tenèbres, des gondoles, chargées de masques et de musiciens, à demi éclairées. Chacune de ces gondoles traverse le fond du théâtre avec une symphonie tantôt gracieuse, tantôt lugubre, qui s’éteint par degrés dans l’éloignement. Au fond, Venise au clair de lune.

De jeunes seigneurs, magnifiquement vêtus, leurs masques à la main, causent sur la terrasse.

Gubetta, Gennaro, vêtu en capitaine, don Apostolo Gazella, Maffio Orsini, Ascanio Petrucci, Oloferno Vitellozzo, Jeppo Liveretto.

Oloferno. Nous vivons dans une époque où les gens accomplissent tant d’actions horribles qu’on ne parle plus de celle-là, mais certes il n’y eut jamais événement plus sinistre et plus mystérieux.

Ascanio. Une chose ténébreuse faite par des hommes ténébreux.

Jeppo. Moi, je sais les faits, messeigneurs. Je les tiens de mon cousin éminentissime le cardinal Carriale, qui a été mieux informé que personne. -vous savez, le cardinal Carriale, qui eut cette fière dispute avec le cardinal Riario au sujet de la guerre contre Charles VIII de France?

Gennaro, bâillant. Ah! Voilà Jeppo qui va nous conter des histoires! -pour ma part, je n’écoute pas. Je suis déjà bien assez fatigué sans cela.

Maffio. Ces choses-là ne t’intéressent pas, Gennaro, et c’est tout simple. Tu es un brave capitaine d’aventure. Tu portes un nom de fantaisie. Tu ne connais ni ton père ni ta mère. On ne doute pas que tu ne sois gentilhomme, à la façon dont tu tiens une épée; mais tout ce qu’on sait de ta noblesse, c’est que tu te bats comme un lion. Sur mon ame, nous sommes compagnons d’armes, et ce que je dis n’est pas pour t’offenser. Tu m’as sauvé la vie à Rimini, je t’ai sauvé la vie au pont de Vicence. Nous nous sommes juré de nous aider en périls comme en amour, de nous venger l’un l’autre quand besoin serait, de n’avoir pour ennemis, moi, que les tiens, toi, que les miens. Un astrologue nous a prédit que nous mourrions le même jour, et nous lui avons donné dix sequins d’or pour la prédiction. Nous ne sommes pas amis, nous sommes frères. Mais enfin, tu as le bonheur de t’appeler simplement Gennaro, de ne tenir à personne, de ne traîner après toi aucune de ces fatalités, souvent héréditaires, qui s’attachent aux noms historiques. Tu es heureux! Que t’importe ce qui se passe et ce qui s’est passé, pourvu qu’il y ait toujours des hommes pour la guerre et des femmes pour le plaisir? Que te fait l’histoire des familles et des villes, à toi, enfant du drapeau, qui n’as ni ville ni famille? Nous, vois-tu, Gennaro? C’est différent. Nous avons droit de prendre intérêt aux catastrophes de notre temps. Nos pères et nos mères ont été mêlés à ces tragédies, et presque toutes nos familles saignent encore.

— dis-nous ce que tu sais, Jeppo.

Gennaro. Il se jette dans un fauteuil, dans l’attitude de quelqu’un qui va dormir.

Vous me réveillerez quand Jeppo aura fini.

Jeppo. Voici. -c’est en quatorze cent quatre-vingt…

Gubetta, dans un coin du théâtre. Quatre-vingt-dix-sept.

Jeppo. C’est juste. Quatre-vingt-dix-sept. Dans une certaine nuit d’un mercredi à un jeudi…

Gubetta. Non. D’un mardi à un mercredi.

Jeppo. Vous avez raison. -cette nuit donc, un batelier du Tibre, qui s’était couché dans son bateau, le long du bord, pour garder ses marchandises, vit quelque chose d’effrayant. C’était un peu au-dessous de l’église santo-Hieronimo. Il pouvait être cinq heures après minuit. Le batelier vit venir dans l’obscurité, par le chemin qui est à gauche de l’église, deux hommes qui allaient à pied, de çà, de là, comme inquiets; après quoi il en parut deux autres; et enfin trois; en tout sept. Un seul était à cheval. Il faisait nuit assez noire. Dans toutes les maisons qui regardent le Tibre, il n’y avait plus qu’une seule fenêtre éclairée. Les sept hommes s’approchèrent du bord de l’eau. Celui qui était monté tourna la croupe de son cheval du côté du Tibre, et alors le batelier vit distinctement sur cette croupe des jambes qui pendaient d’un côté, une tête et des bras de l’autre, -le cadavre d’un homme. Pendant que leurs camarades guettaient les angles des rues, deux de ceux qui étaient à pied prirent le corps mort, le balancèrent deux ou trois fois avec force, et le lancèrent au milieu du Tibre. Au moment où le cadavre frappa l’eau, celui qui était à cheval fit une question à laquelle les deux autres répondirent: oui, monseigneur. Alors le cavalier se retourna vers le Tibre, et vit quelque chose de noir qui flottait sur l’eau. Il demanda ce que c’était. On lui répondit: monseigneur, c’est le manteau de monseigneur qui est mort. Et quelqu’un de la troupe jeta des pierres à ce manteau, ce qui le fit enfoncer. Ceci fait, ils s’en allèrent tous de compagnie, et prirent le chemin qui mène à saint-Jacques. Voilà ce que vit le batelier.

Maffio. Une lugubre aventure! était-ce quelqu’un de considérable que ces hommes jetaient ainsi à l’eau? Ce cheval me fait un effet étrange; l’assassin en selle, et le mort en croupe!

Gubetta. Sur ce cheval il y avait les deux frères.

Jeppo. Vous l’avez dit, Monsieur De Belverana. Le cadavre, c’était Jean Borgia; le cavalier, c’était César Borgia.
Maffio. Famille de démons que ces Borgia! Et dites, Jeppo, pourquoi le frère tuait-il ainsi le frère?

Jeppo. Je ne vous le dirai pas. La cause du meurtre est tellement abominable, que ce doit être un péché mortel d’en parler seulement.

Gubetta. Je vous le dirai, moi. César, cardinal de Valence, a tué Jean, duc de Gandia, parce que les deux frères aimaient la même femme.

Maffio. Et qui était cette femme?

Gubetta, toujours au fond du théâtre. Leur soeur.

Jeppo. Assez, Monsieur De Belverana. Ne prononcez pas devant nous le nom de cette femme monstrueuse. Il n’est pas une de nos familles à laquelle elle n’ait fait quelque plaie profonde.

Maffio. N’y avait-il pas aussi un enfant mêlé à tout cela?

Jeppo. Oui, un enfant dont je ne veux nommer que le père, qui était Jean Borgia.

Maffio. Cet enfant serait un homme maintenant.

Oloferno. Il a disparu.

Jeppo. Est-ce César Borgia qui a réussi à le soustraire à la mère? Est-ce la mère qui a réussi à le soustraire à César Borgia? On ne sait.

Don Apostolo. Si c’est la mère qui cache son fils, elle fait bien. Depuis que César Borgia, cardinal de Valence, est devenu duc de Valentinois, il a fait mourir, comme vous savez, sans compter son frère Jean, ses deux neveux, les fils de Guifry Borgia, prince de Squillacci, et son cousin, le cardinal François Borgia. Cet homme a la rage de tuer ses parens.

Jeppo. Pardieu! Il veut être le seul Borgia, et avoir tous les biens du pape.

Ascanio. La sœur que vous ne voulez pas nommer, Jeppo, ne fit-elle pas à la même époque une cavalcade secrète au monastère de saint-Sixte pour s’y renfermer, sans qu’on sût pourquoi?

Jeppo. Je crois que oui. C’était pour se séparer du seigneur Jean Sforza, son deuxième mari.

Maffio. Et comment se nommait ce batelier qui a tout vu?

Jeppo. Je ne sais pas.

Gubetta. Il se nommait Georgio Schiavone, et avait pour industrie de mener du bois par le Tibre à Ripetta.
Maffio, bas à Ascanio. Voilà un espagnol qui en sait plus long sur nos affaires que nous autres romains.

Ascanio, bas. Je me éfie comme toi de ce Monsieur De Belverana. Mais n’approfondissons pas ceci; il y a peut-être une chose dangereuse là-dessous.

Jeppo. Ah! Messieurs, messieurs! Dans quel temps sommes-nous? Et connaissez-vous une créature humaine qui soit sûre de vivre quelques lendemains dans cette pauvre Italie avec les guerres, les pestes et les Borgia qu’il y a!

Don Apostolo. Ah çà, messeigneurs, je crois que tous tant que nous sommes nous devons faire partie de l’ambassade que la république de Venise envoie au duc de Ferrare, pour le féliciter d’avoir repris Rimini sur les Malatesta. Quand partons-nous pour Ferrare?

Oloferno. Décidément, après-demain. Vous savez que les deux ambassadeurs sont nommés. C’est le sénateur Tiopolo et le général des galères Grimani.

Don Apostolo. Le capitaine Gennaro sera-t-il des nôtres?

Maffio. Sans doute! Gennaro et moi nous ne nous séparons jamais.

Ascanio. J’ai une observation importante à vous soumettre, messieurs; c’est qu’on boit le vin d’Espagne sans nous.

Maffio. Rentrons au palais. -hé! Gennaro! à Jeppo. — mais c’est qu’il s’est réellement endormi pendant votre histoire, Jeppo.

Jeppo. Qu’il dorme. Tous sortent excepté Gubetta.

[

ACTE 1 PARTIE 1 SCENE 2

Gubetta, puis Dona Lucrezia, Gennaro endormi.

Gubetta, seul. Oui, j’en sais plus long qu’eux; ils se disaient cela tout bas. J’en sais plus qu’eux, mais dona Lucrezia en sait plus que moi, Monsieur De Valentinois en sait plus que dona Lucrezia, le diable en sait plus que Monsieur De Valentinois, et le pape Alexandre-Six en sait plus que le diable.

Regardant Gennaro. — comme cela dort, ces jeunes gens!

Entre dona Lucrezia, masquée. Elle aperçoit Gennaro endormi, et va le contempler avec une sorte de ravissement et de respect.

Dona Lucrezia, à part. Il dort! -cette fête l’aura sans doute fatigué! — qu’il est beau! Se retournant. — Gubetta!

Gubetta. Parlez moins haut, madame. -je ne m’appelle pas ici Gubetta, mais le comte de Belverana, gentilhomme castillan; vous, vous êtes madame la marquise de Pontequadrato, dame napolitaine. Nous ne devons pas avoir l’air de nous connaître. Ne sont-ce pas là les ordres de votre altesse? Vous n’êtes point ici chez vous; vous êtes à Venise.

Dona Lucrezia. C’est juste, Gubetta. Mais il n’y a personne sur cette terrasse, que ce jeune homme qui dort; nous pouvons causer un instant.

Gubetta. Comme il plaira à votre altesse. J’ai encore un conseil à vous donner; c’est de ne point vous démasquer. On pourrait vous reconnaître.

Dona Lucrezia. Et que m’importe? S’ils ne savent pas qui je suis, je n’ai rien à craindre; s’ils savent qui je suis, c’est à eux d’avoir peur.

Gubetta. Nous sommes à Venise, madame; vous avez bien des ennemis ici, et des ennemis libres. Sans doute la république de Venise ne souffrirait pas qu’on osât attenter à la personne de votre altesse; mais on pourrait vous insulter.

Dona Lucrezia. Ah! Tu as raison; mon nom fait horreur, en effet.

Gubetta. Il n’y a pas ici que des vénitiens; il y a des romains, des napolitains, des romagnols, des lombards, des italiens de toute l’Italie.

Dona Lucrezia. Et toute l’Italie me hait! Tu as raison! Il faut pourtant que tout cela change. Je n’étais pas née pour faire le mal, je le sens à présent plus que jamais. C’est l’exemple de ma famille qui m’a entraînée. -Gubetta!

Gubetta. Madame.
Dona Lucrezia. Fais porter sur-le-champ les ordres que nous allons te donner dans notre gouvernement de Spolette.

Gubetta. Ordonnez, madame; j’ai toujours quatre mules sellées et quatre coureurs tout prêts à partir.

Dona Lucrezia. Qu’a-t-on fait de Galeas Accaioli?

Gubetta. Il est toujours en prison, en attendant que votre altesse le fasse pendre.

Dona Lucrezia. Et Guifry Buondelmonte?

Gubetta. Au cachot. Vous n’avez pas encore dit de le faire étrangler.

Dona Lucrezia. Et Manfredi De Curzola?

Gubetta. Pas encore étranglé non plus.

Dona Lucrezia. Et Spadacappa?

Gubetta. D’après vos ordres, on ne doit lui donner le poison que le jour de Pâques, dans l’hostie. Cela viendra dans six semaines, nous sommes au carnaval.

Dona Lucrezia. Et Pierre Capra?

Gubetta. à l’heure qu’il est, il est encore évêque de Pesaro et régent de la chancellerie; mais, avant un mois, il ne sera plus qu’un peu de poussière, car notre saint-père le pape l’a fait arrêter sur votre plainte, et le tient sous bonne garde dans les chambres basses du Vatican.

Dona Lucrezia. Gubetta, écris en hâte au saint-père que je lui demande la grâce de Pierre Capra! Gubetta, qu’on mette en liberté Accaioli! En liberté Manfredi De Curzola! En liberté Buondelmonte! En liberté Spadacappa!

Gubetta. Attendez! Attendez, madame! Laissez-moi respirer! Quels ordres me donnez-vous là! Ah! Mon dieu! Il pleut des pardons! Il grêle de la miséricorde! Je suis submergé dans la clémence! Je ne me tirerai jamais de ce déluge effroyable de bonnes actions!

Dona Lucrezia. Bonnes ou mauvaises, que t’importe, pourvu que je te les paie.

Gubetta. Ah! C’est qu’une bonne action est bien plus difficile à faire qu’une mauvaise. -hélas! Pauvre Gubetta que je suis! à présent que vous vous imaginez de devenir miséricordieuse, qu’est-ce que je vais devenir, moi?

Dona Lucrezia. Ecoute, Gubetta, tu es mon plus ancien et mon plus fidèle confident…

Gubetta. Voilà quinze ans, en effet, que j’ai l’honneur d’être votre collaborateur.
Dona Lucrezia. Hé bien! Dis, Gubetta, mon vieil ami, mon vieux complice, est-ce que tu ne commences pas à sentir le besoin de changer de genre de vie? Est-ce que tu n’as pas soif d’être béni, toi et moi, autant que nous avons été maudits? Est-ce que tu n’en as pas assez du crime?

Gubetta. Je vois que vous êtes en train de devenir la plus vertueuse altesse qui soit.

Dona Lucrezia. Est-ce que notre commune renommée à tous deux, notre renommée infâme, notre renommée de meurtre et d’empoisonnement, ne commence pas à te peser, Gubetta?

Gubetta. Pas du tout. Quand je passe dans les rues de Spolette, j’entends bien quelquefois des manans qui fredonnent autour de moi: hum! Ceci est Gubetta, Gubetta-poison, Gubetta-poignard, Gubetta-gibet! Car ils ont mis à mon nom une flamboyante aigrette de sobriquets. On dit tout cela, et quand les voix ne le disent pas, ce sont les yeux qui le disent. Mais qu’est-ce que cela fait? Je suis habitué à ma mauvaise réputation comme un soldat du pape à servir la messe.

Dona Lucrezia. Mais ne sens-tu pas que tous les noms odieux dont on t’accable, et dont on m’accable aussi, peuvent aller éveiller le mépris et la haine dans un cœur où tu voudrais être aimé? Tu n’aimes donc personne au monde, Gubetta?

Gubetta. Je voudrais bien savoir qui vous aimez, madame!

Dona Lucrezia. Qu’en sais-tu? Je suis franche avec toi; je ne te parlerai ni de mon père, ni de mon frère, ni de mon mari, ni de mes amans.

Gubetta. Mais c’est que je ne vois guère que cela qu’on puisse aimer.

Dona Lucrezia. Il y a encore autre chose, Gubetta.

Gubetta. Ah çà! Est-ce que vous vous faites vertueuse pour l’amour de Dieu?

Dona Lucrezia. Gubetta! Gubetta! S’il y avait aujourd’hui en Italie, dans cette fatale et criminelle Italie, un coeur noble et pur, un cœur plein de hautes et de mâles vertus, un cœur d’ange sous une cuirasse de soldat; s’il ne me restait, à moi, pauvre femme, haïe, méprisée, abhorrée, maudite des hommes, damnée du ciel, misérable toute-puissante que je suis; s’il ne me restait dans l’état de détresse où mon âme agonise douloureusement qu’une idée, qu’une espérance, qu’une ressource, celle de mériter et d’obtenir avant ma mort une petite place, Gubetta, un peu de tendresse, un peu d’estime dans ce cœur si fier et si pur; si je n’avais d’autre pensée que l’ambition de le sentir battre un jour joyeusement et librement sur le mien; comprendrais-tu alors, dis, Gubetta, pourquoi j’ai hâte de racheter mon passé, de laver ma renommée, d’effacer les taches de toutes sortes que j’ai partout sur moi, et de changer en une idée de gloire, de pénitence et de vertu, l’idée infâme et sanglante que l’Italie attache à mon nom?

Gubetta. Mon dieu, madame! Sur quel hermite avez-vous marché aujourd’hui?
Dona Lucrezia. Ne ris pas. Il y a long-temps déjà que j’ai ces pensées sans te les dire. Lorsqu’on est entraîné par un courant de crimes, on ne s’arrête pas quand on veut. Les deux anges luttaient en moi, le bon et le mauvais; mais je crois que le bon va enfin l’emporter.

Gubetta. — Savez-vous, madame, que je ne vous comprends plus, et que depuis quelque temps vous êtes devenue indéchiffrable pour moi? Il y a un mois, votre altesse annonce qu’elle part pour Spolette, prend congé de monseigneur don Alphonse D’Este, votre mari, qui a du reste la bonhomie d’être amoureux de vous comme un tourtereau et jaloux comme un tigre; votre altesse donc quitte Ferrare, et s’en vient secrètement à Venise, presque sans suite, affublée d’un faux nom napolitain, et moi d’un faux nom espagnol. Arrivée à Venise, votre altesse se sépare de moi, et m’ordonne de ne pas la connaître; et puis, vous vous mettez à courir les fêtes, les musiques, les tertullias à l’espagnole, profitant du carnaval pour aller partout masquée, cachée à tous, déguisée, me parlant à peine entre deux portes chaque soir; et voilà que toute cette mascarade se termine par un sermon que vous me faites! Un sermon de vous à moi, madame! Cela n’est-il pas véhément et prodigieux? Vous avez métamorphosé votre nom, vous avez métamorphosé votre habit, à présent vus métamorphosez votre âme! En honneur, c’est pousser furieusement loin le carnaval. Je m’y perds. Où est la cause de cette conduite de la part de votre altesse?

Dona Lucrezia, lui saisissant vivement le bras, et l’attirant près de Gennaro endormi. Vois-tu ce jeune homme?

Gubetta. Ce jeune homme n’est pas nouveau pour moi, et je sais bien que c’est après lui que vous courez sous votre masque depuis que vous êtes à Venise.

Dona Lucrezia. Qu’est-ce que tu en dis?

Gubetta. Je dis que c’est un jeune homme qui dort couché sur un banc, et qui dormirait debout s’il avait été en tiers dans la conversation morale et édifiante que je viens d’avoir avec votre altesse.

Dona Lucrezia. Est-ce que tu ne le trouves pas bien beau?

Gubetta. Il serait plus beau, s’il n’avait pas les yeux fermés. Un visage sans yeux, c’est un palais sans fenêtres.

Dona Lucrezia. Si tu savais comme je l’aime!

Gubetta. C’est l’affaire de don Alphonse, votre royal mari. Je dois cependant avertir votre altesse qu’elle perd ses peines. Ce jeune homme, à ce qu’on m’a dit, aime d’amour une belle jeune fille nommée Fiametta.

Dona Lucrezia. Et la jeune fille, l’aime-t-elle?

Gubetta. On dit que oui.
Dona Lucrezia. Tant mieux! Je voudrais tant le savoir heureux!

Gubetta. Voilà qui est singulier et n’est guère dans vos façons. Je vous croyais plus jalouse.

Dona Lucrezia, contemplant Gennaro. Quelle noble figure!

Gubetta. Je trouve qu’il ressemble à quelqu’un…

Dona Lucrezia. Ne me dis pas à qui tu trouves qu’il ressemble! — laisse-moi.

Gubetta sort. Dona Lucrezia reste quelques instants comme en extase devant Gennaro; elle ne voit pas deux hommes masqués qui viennent d’entrer au fond du théâtre et qui l’observent.

Dona Lucrezia, se croyant seule. C’est donc lui! Il m’est donc enfin donné de le voir un instant sans périls! Non, je ne l’avais pas rêvé plus beau. ô Dieu! épargnez-moi l’angoisse d’être jamais haïe et méprisée de lui; vous savez qu’il est tout ce que j’aime sous le ciel! -je n’ose ôter mon masque; il faut pourtant que j’essuie mes larmes.

Elle ôte son masque pour s’essuyer les yeux. Les deux hommes masqués causent à voix basse pendant qu’elle baise la main de Gennaro endormi.

Premier Homme Masqué. Cela suffit, je puis retourner à Ferrare. Je n’étais venu à Venise que pour m’assurer de son infidélité; j’en ai assez vu. Mon absence de Ferrare ne peut se prolonger plus long-temps. Ce jeune homme est son amant. Comment le nomme-t-on, Rustighello?

Deuxième Homme Masqué. Il s’appelle Gennaro. C’est un capitaine aventurier, un brave, sans père ni mère, un homme dont on ne connaît pas les bouts. Il est en ce moment au service de la république de Venise.

Premier Homme. Fais en sorte qu’il vienne à Ferrare.

Deuxième Homme. Cela se fera de soi-même, monseigneur; il part après-demain pour Ferrare avec plusieurs de ses amis, qui font partie de l’ambassade des sénateurs Tiopolo et Grimani.

Premier Homme. C’est bien. Les rapports qu’on m’a faits étaient exacts. J’en ai assez vu, te dis-je; nous pouvons repartir.

Ils sortent.

Dona Lucrezia, joignant les mains et presque agenouillée devant Gennaro. ô mon Dieu, qu’il y ait autant de bonheur pour lui qu’il y a eu de malheur pour moi!

Elle dépose un baiser sur le front de Gennaro, qui s’éveille en sursaut. Gennaro, saisissant par les deux bras Lucrezia interdite. Un baiser! Une femme! -sur mon honneur, madame, si vous étiez reine et si j’étais poète, ce serait véritablement l’aventure de messire Alain Chartier, le rimeur français. -mais j’ignore qui vous êtes, et moi, je ne suis qu’un soldat.

Dona Lucrezia. Laissez-moi, seigneur Gennaro!

Gennaro. Non pas, madame.

Dona Lucrezia. Voici quelqu’un! Elle s’enfuit, Gennaro la suit.

ACTE 1 PARTIE 1 SCENE 3

Jeppo, puis Maffio. Jeppo, entrant par le côté opposé. Quel est ce visage? C’est bien elle! Cette femme à Venise! -hé, Maffio!

Maffio, entrant. Qu’est-ce?

Jeppo. Que je te dise une rencontre inouie. Il parle bas à l’oreille de Maffio.

Maffio. En es-tu sûr?

Jeppo. Comme je suis sûr que nous sommes ici dans le palais Barbarigo et non dans le palais Labbia.

Maffio. Elle était en causerie galante avec Gennaro?

Jeppo. Avec Gennaro.

Maffio. Il faut tirer mon frère Gennaro de cette toile d’araignée.

Jeppo. Viens avertir nos amis. Ils sortent. -pendant quelques instans la scène reste vide; on voit seulement passer, de temps en temps, au fond du théâtre, quelques gondoles avec des symphonies. -rentrent Gennaro et dona Lucrezia masquée.

ACTE 1 PARTIE 1 SCENE 4

Gennaro, dona Lucrezia.

Dona Lucrezia. Cette terrasse est obscure et déserte; je puis me démasquer ici. Je veux que vous voyiez mon visage, Gennaro.

Elle se démasque.

Gennaro. Vous êtes bien belle!

Dona Lucrezia. Regarde-moi bien, Gennaro, et dis-moi que je ne te fais pas horreur!

Gennaro. Vous me faire horreur, madame! Et pourquoi? Bien au contraire, je me sens au fond du coeur quelque chose qui m’attire vers vous.

Dona Lucrezia. Donc tu crois que tu pourrais m’aimer, Gennaro?

Gennaro. Pourquoi non? Pourtant, madame, je suis sincère, il y aura toujours une femme que j’aimerai plus que vous.

Dona Lucrezia, souriant. Je sais, la petite Fiametta.

Gennaro. Non.

Dona Lucrezia. Qui donc?

Gennaro. Ma mère.

Dona Lucrezia. Ta mère! Ta mère, ô mon Gennaro! Tu aimes bien ta mère, n’est-ce pas?

Gennaro. Et pourtant je ne l’ai jamais vue. Voilà qui vous paraît bien singulier, n’est-il pas vrai? Tenez, je ne sais pas pourquoi j’ai une pente à me confier à vous; je vais vous dire un secret que je n'ai encore dit à personne, pas même à mon frère d'armes, pas même à Maffio Orsini. Cela est étrange de se livrer ainsi au premier venu; mais il me semble que vous n'êtes pas pour moi la première venue. -je suis un capitaine qui ne connaît pas sa famille, j'ai été élevé en Calabre par un pêcheur dont je me croyais le fils. Le jour où j'eus seize ans, ce pêcheur m'apprit qu'il n'était pas mon père. Quelque temps après, un seigneur vint qui m'arma chevalier, et qui repartit sans avoir levé la visière de son morion. Quelque temps après encore, un homme vêtu de noir vint m'apporter une lettre. Je l'ouvris. C'était ma mère qui m'écrivait, ma mère que je ne connaissais pas, ma mère que je rêvais bonne, douce, tendre, belle comme vous! Ma mère, que j'adorais de toutes les forces de mon âme! Cette lettre m'apprit, sans me dire aucun nom, que j'étais noble et de grande race, et que ma mère était bien malheureuse. Pauvre mère!

Dona Lucrezia. Bon Gennaro!

Gennaro. Depuis ce jour-là, je me suis fait aventurier, parce qu'étant quelque chose par ma naissance, j'ai voulu être aussi quelque chose par mon épée. J'ai couru toute l'Italie. Mais le premier jour de chaque mois, en quelque lieu que je sois, je vois toujours venir le même messager. Il me remet une lettre de ma mère, prend ma réponse et s'en va; et il ne me dit rien, et je ne lui dis rien, parce qu'il est sourd et muet.

Dona Lucrezia. Ainsi tu ne sais rien de ta famille?

Gennaro. Je sais que j'ai une mère, qu'elle est malheureuse, et que je donnerais ma vie dans ce monde pour la voir pleurer, et ma vie dans l'autre pour la voir sourire. Voilà tout.

Dona Lucrezia. Que fais-tu de ses lettres?

Gennaro. Je les ai toutes là, sur mon cœur. Nous autres gens de guerre, nous risquons souvent notre poitrine à l'encontre des épées. Les lettres d'une mère, c'est une bonne cuirasse.

Dona Lucrezia. Noble nature!

Gennaro. Tenez, voulez-vous voir son écriture? Voici une de ses lettres.

Il tire de sa poitrine un papier qu’il baise et qu’il remet à dona Lucrezia. — lisez cela.

Dona Lucrezia, lisant. “… ne cherche pas à me connaître, mon Gennaro, avant le jour que je te marquerai. Je suis bien à plaindre, va. Je suis entourée de parens sans pitié, qui te tueraient comme ils ont tué ton père. Le secret de ta naissance, mon enfant, je veux être la seule à le savoir. Si tu le savais, toi, cela est à la fois si triste et si illustre que tu ne pourrais pas t’en taire; la jeunesse est confiante, tu ne connais pas les périls qui t’environnent comme je les connais; qui sait? Tu voudrais les affronter par bravade de jeune homme, tu parlerais ou tu te laisserais deviner, et tu ne vivrais pas deux jours. Oh non! Contente-toi de savoir que tu as une mère qui t’adore et qu veille nuit et jour sur ta vie. Mon Gennaro, mon fils, tu es tout ce que j’aime sur la terre; mon cœur se fond quand je songe à toi…”

elle s’interrompt pour dévorer une larme.

Gennaro. Comme vous lisez cela tendrement! On ne dirait pas que vous lisez, mais que vous parlez. -ah! Vous pleurez! -vous êtes bonne, madame, et je vous aime de pleurer de ce qu’écrit ma mère. Il reprend la lettre, la baise de nouveau, et la remet dans sa poitrine.

— oui, vous voyez, il y a eu bien des crimes autour de mon berceau. -ma pauvre mère! -n’est-ce pas que vous comprenez maintenant que je m’arrête peu aux galanteries et aux amourettes, parce que je n’ai qu’une pensée au cœur, ma mère! Oh! Délivrer ma mère! La servir, la venger, la consoler! Quel bonheur! Je penserai à l’amour après! Tout ce que je fais, je le fais pour être digne de ma mère. Il y a bien des aventuriers qui ne sont pas scrupuleux, et qui se battraient pour Satan après s’être battus pour saint Michel; moi, je ne sers que des causes justes; je veux pouvoir déposer un jour aux pieds de ma mère une épée nette et loyale comme celle d’un empereur. -tenez, madame, on m’a offert un gros enrôlement au service de cette infâme Madame Lucrèce Borgia. J’ai refusé.

Dona Lucrezia. Gennaro! -Gennaro! Ayez pitié des méchans! Vous ne savez pas ce qui se passe dans leur cœur.

Gennaro. Je n’ai pas pitié de qui est sans pitié. -mais laissons cela, madame; et maintenant que je vous ai dit qui je suis, faites de même, et dites-moi à votre tour qui vous êtes.

Dona Lucrezia. Une femme qui vous aime, Gennaro.

Gennaro. Mais votre nom?…

Dona Lucrezia. Ne m’en demandez pas plus. Des flambeaux. Entrent avec bruit Jeppo et Maffio.

Dona Lucrezia remet son masque précipitamment.

ACTE 1 PARTIE 1 SCENE 5

Les mêmes, Maffio Orsini, Jeppo Liveretto, Ascanio Petrucci, Oloferno Vitellozzo, don Apostolo Gazella. -seigneurs, dames, pages portant des flambeaux.

Maffio, un flambeau à la main. Gennaro! Veux-tu savoir quelle est la femme à qui tu parles d’amour?

Dona Lucrezia, à part, sous son masque. Juste ciel!

Gennaro. Vous êtes tous mes amis, mais je jure Dieu que celui qui touchera au masque de cette femme sera un enfant hardi. Le masque d’une femme est sacré comme la face d’un homme.

Maffio. Il faut d’abord que la femme soit une femme,

Gennaro! Mais nous ne voulons point insulter celle-là; nous voulons seulement lui dire nos noms.

Faisant un pas vers dona Lucrezia. — madame, je suis Maffio Orsini, frère du duc de Gravina, que vos sbires ont étranglé la nuit pendant qu’il dormait.

Jeppo. Madame, je suis Jeppo Liveretto, neveu de Liveretto Vitelli, que vous avez fait poignarder dans les caves du Vatican.

Ascanio. Madame, je suis Ascanio Petrucci, cousin de Pandolfo Petrucci, seigneur de Sienne, que vous avez assassiné pour lui voler plus aisément sa ville.

Oloferno. Madame, je m’appelle Oloferno Vitellozzo, neveu d’Iago D’Appiani, que vous avez empoisonné dans une fête, après lui avoir traîtreusement dérobé sa bonne citadelle seigneuriale de Piombino.

Don Apostolo. Madame, vous avez mis à mort sur l’échafaud don Francisco Gazella, oncle maternel de don Alphonse D’Aragon, votre troisième mari, que vous avez fait tuer à coups de hallebarde sur le palier de l’escalier de saint-Pierre je suis don Apostolo Gazella, cousin de l’un et fils de l’autre.

Dona Lucrezia. ô dieu!

Gennaro. Quelle est cette femme?

Maffio. Et maintenant que nous vous avons dit nos noms, madame, voulez-vous que nous vous disions le vôtre?

Dona Lucrezia. Non! Non! Ayez pitié, messeigneurs! Pas devant lui!
Maffio, la démasquant. ôtez votre masque, madame, qu’on voie si vous pouvez encore rougir.

Don Apostolo. Gennaro, cette femme à qui tu parlais d’amour est empoisonneuse et adultère.

Jeppo. Inceste à tous les degrés. Inceste avec ses deux frères, qui se sont entretués pour l’amour d’elle!

Dona Lucrezia. Grâce!

Ascanio. Inceste avec son père, qui est pape!

Dona Lucrezia. Pitié!

Oloferno. Inceste avec ses enfants, si elle en avait; mais le ciel en refuse aux monstres!

Dona Lucrezia. Assez! Assez!

Maffio. Veux-tu savoir son nom, Gennaro?

Dona Lucrezia. Grâce! Grâce! Messeigneurs!

Maffio. Gennaro, veux-tu savoir son nom?

Elle se traîne aux geoux de Gennaro. N’écoute pas, mon Gennaro!

Maffio, étendant le bras. C’est Lucrèce Borgia!

Gennaro, la repoussant. Oh!… elle tombe évanouie à ses pieds.

ACTE 1 PARTIE 2 SCENE 1

Une place de Ferrare. à droite, un palais avec un balcon garni de jalousies, et une porte basse. Sous le balcon, un grand écusson de pierre chargé d’armoiries avec ce mot en grosses lettres saillantes de cuivre doré au-dessous: Borgia. à gauche, une petite maison avec porte sur la place. Au fond des maisons et des clochers.

Dona Lucrezia, Gubetta.

Dona Lucrezia. Tout est-il prêt pour ce soir, Gubetta?

Gubetta. Oui, madame.

Dona Lucrezia. Y seront-ils tous les cinq?

Gubetta. Tous les cinq.

Dona Lucrezia. Ils m’ont bien cruellement outragée, Gubetta!

Gubetta. Je n’étais pas là, moi.

Dona Lucrezia. Ils ont été sans pitié!

Gubetta. Ils vous ont dit votre nom tout haut comme cela?

Dona Lucrezia. Ils ne m’ont pas dit mon nom, Gubetta; ils me l’ont craché au visage!

Gubetta. En plein bal!

Dona Lucrezia. Devant Gennaro!

Gubetta. Ce sont de fiers étourdis d’avoir quitté Venise et d’être venus à Ferrare. Il est vrai qu’ils ne pouvaient guère faire autrement, étant désignés par le sénat pour faire partie de l’ambassade qui est arrivée l’autre semaine.

Dona Lucrezia. Oh! Il me hait et me méprise maintenant, et c’est leur faute. -ah! Gubetta, je me vengerai d’eux.

Gubetta. à la bonne heure, voilà parler. Vos fantaisies de miséricorde vous ont quittée, dieu soit loué! Je suis bien plus à mon aise avec votre altesse quand elle est naturelle comme la voilà. Je m’y retrouve au moins. Voyez-vous, madame, un lac, c’est le contraire d’une île; une tour, c’est le contraire d’un puits; un aqueduc, c’est le contraire d’un pont; et moi, j’ai l’honneur d’être le contraire d’un personnage vertueux.

Dona Lucrezia. Gennaro est avec eux. Prends garde qu’il ne lui arrive rien. Gubetta. Si nous devenions, vous une bonne femme, et moi un bon homme, ce serait monstrueux.

Dona Lucrezia. Prends garde qu’il n’arrive rien à Gennaro, te dis-je!

Gubetta. Soyez tranquille.

Dona Lucrezia. Je voudrais pourtant bien le voir encore une fois! Gubetta.

Vive-dieu, madame, votre altesse le voit tous les jours. Vous avez gagné son valet pour qu’il déterminât son maître à prendre logis là, dans cette bicoque, vis-à-vis votre balcon, et de votre fenêtre grillée vous avez tous les jours l’ineffable bonheur de voir entrer et sortir le susdit gentilhomme.

Dona Lucrezia. Je dis que je voudrais lui parler, Gubetta.

Gubetta. Rien de plus simple. Envoyez lui dire par votre porte-chape Astolfo que votre altesse l’attend aujourd’hui à telle heure au palais.

Dona Lucrezia. Je le ferai, Gubetta. Mais voudra-t-il venir?

Gubetta. Rentrez, madame, je crois qu’il va passer ici tout-à-l’heure avec les étourneaux que vous savez.

Dona Lucrezia. Te prennent-ils toujours pour le comte de Belverana?

Gubetta. Ils me croient espagnol depuis le talon jusqu’aux sourcils. Je suis un de leurs meilleurs amis. Je leur emprunte de l’argent.

Dona Lucrezia. De l’argent! Et pourquoi faire?

Gubetta. Pardieu! Pour en avoir. D’ailleurs il n’y a rien qui soit plus espagnol que d’avoir l’air gueux et de tirer le diable par la queue.

Dona Lucrezia, à part. ô mon dieu! Faites qu’il n’arrive pas malheur à mon Gennaro!

Gubetta. Et à ce propos, madame, il me vient une réflexion.

Dona Lucrezia. Laquelle?

Gubetta. C’est qu’il faut que la queue du diable lui soit soudée, chevillée et vissée à l’échine d’une façon bien triomphante pour qu’elle résiste à l’innombrable multitude de gens qui la tirent perpétuellement!

Dona Lucrezia. Tu ris à travers tout, Gubetta.

Gubetta. C’est une manière comme une autre.
Dona Lucrezia. Je crois que les voici. -songe à tout. Elle rentre dans le palais par la petite porte sous le balcon.

ACTE 1 PARTIE 2 SCENE 2

Gubetta, puis Gennaro, Maffio, Jeppo, Ascanio, don Apostolo, Oloferno.

Gubetta, seul. Qu’est-ce que c’est que ce Gennaro? Et que diable en veut-elle faire? Je ne sais pas tous les secrets de la dame, il s’en faut; mais celui-ci pique ma curiosité. Ma foi, elle n’a pas eu de confiance en moi cette fois, il ne faut pas qu’elle s’imagine que je vais la servir dans cette occasion; elle se tirera de l’intrigue avec le Gennaro comme elle pourra. Mais quelle étrange manière d’aimer un homme quand on est fille de Roderigo Borgia et de la Vanozza, quand on est une femme qui a dans les veines du sang de courtisane et du sang de pape! Madame Lucrèce devient platonique. Je ne m’étonnerai plus de rien maintenant, quand même on viendrait me dire que le pape Alexandre Six croit en Dieu! -allons, voici nos jeunes fous du carnaval de Venise. Ils ont eu une belle idée de quitter une terre neutre et libre pour venir à Ferrare après avoir mortellement offensé la duchesse de Ferrare! à leur place je me serais, certes, abstenu de faire partie de la cavalcade des ambassadeurs vénitiens. Mais les jeunes gens sont ainsi faits. La gueule du loup est de toutes les choses sublunaires celle où ils se précipitent le plus volontiers.

Entrent les jeunes seigneurs sans voir d’abord Gubetta, qui s’est placé en observation sous l’un des piliers qui soutiennent le balcon. Ils causent à voix basse et d’un air d’inquiétude.

Maffio, bas. Vous direz ce que vous voudrez, messieurs, on peut se dispenser de venir à Ferrare quand on a blessé au cœur Madame Lucrèce Borgia.

Don Apostolo. Que pouvions-nous faire? Le sénat nous envoie ici. Est-ce qu’il y a moyen d’éluder les ordres du sérénissime sénat de Venise? Une fois désignés, il fallait partir. Je ne me dissimule pourtant pas, Maffio, que la Lucrezia Borgia est en effet une redoutable ennemie. Elle est la maîtresse ici.

Jeppo. Que veux-tu qu'elle nous fasse, Apostolo? Ne sommes-nous pas au service de la république de Venise? Ne faisons-nous pas partie de son ambassade? Toucher à un cheveu de notre tête, ce serait déclarer la guerre au doge, et Ferrare ne se frotte pas volontiers à Venise.

Gennaro, rêveur dans un coin du théâtre, sans se mêler à la conversation. ô ma mère! Ma mère! Qui me dira ce que je puis faire pour ma pauvre mère!

Maffio. On peut te coucher tout de ton long dans le sépulcre, Jeppo, sans toucher à un cheveu de ta tête. Il y a des poisons qui font les affaires des Borgia sans éclat et sans bruit, et beaucoup mieux que la hache ou le poignard. Rappelle-toi la manière dont Alexandre Six a fait disparaître du monde le sultan Zizimi, le frère de Bajazet.

Oloferno. Et tant d'autres.
Don Apostolo. Quant au frère de Bajazet, son histoire est curieuse, et n'est pas des moins sinistres. Le pape lui persuada que Charles De France l'avait empoisonné le jour où ils firent collation ensemble; Zizimi crut tout, et reçut des belles mains de Lucrèce Borgia un soi-disant contre-poison qui, en deux heures, délivra de lui son frère Bajazet.

Jeppo. Il paraît que ce brave turc n'entendait rien à la politique.

Maffio. Oui, les Borgia ont des poisons qui tuent en un jour, en un mois, en un an, à leur gré. Ce sont d'infâmes poisons qui rendent le vin meilleur, et font vider le flacon avec plus de plaisir. Vous vous croyez ivre, vous êtes mort. Ou bien un homme tombe tout à coup en langueur, sa peau se ride, ses yeux se cavent, ses cheveux blanchissent, ses dens se brisent comme verre sur le pain; il ne marche plus, il se traîne; il ne respire plus, il râle; il ne rit plus, il ne dort plus, il grelotte au soleil en plein midi; jeune homme, il a l'air d'un vieillard; il agonise ainsi quelque temps, enfin il meurt. Il meurt; et alors on se souvient qu'il y a six mois ou un an il a bu un verre de vin de Chypre chez un Borgia.

Se retournant. — tenez, messeigneurs, voilà justement Montefeltro, que vous connaissez peut-être, qui est de cette ville, et à qui la chose arrive en ce moment. — il passe là au fond de la place. -regardez-le. On voit passer au fond du théâtre un homme à cheveux blancs, maigre, chancelant, boitant, appuyé sur un bâton, et enveloppé d’un manteau.

Ascanio. Pauvre Montefeltro!

Don Apostolo. Quel âge a-t-il?

Maffio. Mon âge. Vingt-neuf ans.

Oloferno. Je l’ai vu l’an passé rose et frais comme vous.

Maffio. Il y a trois mois, il a soupé chez notre saint-père le pape, dans sa vigne du belvédère!

Ascanio. C’est horrible!

Maffio. Oh! L’on conte des choses bien étranges de ces soupers des Borgia!

Ascanio. Ce sont des débauches effrénées, assaisonnées d’empoisonnemens.

Maffio. Voyez, messeigneurs, comme cette place est déserte autour de nous. Le peuple ne s’aventure pas si près que nous du palais ducal; il a peur que les poisons qui s’y élaborent jour et nuit ne transpirent à travers les murs.

Ascanio. Messieurs, à tout prendre, les ambassadeurs ont eu hier leur audience du duc. Notre service est à peu près fini. La suite de l’ambassade se compose de cinquante cavaliers. Notre disparition ne s’apercevrait guère dans le nombre. Et je crois que nous ferions sagement de quitter Ferrare.
Maffio. Aujourd’hui même.

Jeppo. Messieurs, il sera temps demain. Je suis invité à souper ce soir chez la princesse Negroni, dont je suis fort éperdument amoureux, et je ne voudrais pas avoir l’air de fuir devant la plus jolie femme de Ferrare.

Oloferno. Tu es invité à souper ce soir chez la princesse Negroni?

Jeppo. Oui.

Oloferno. Et moi aussi.

Ascanio. Et moi aussi.

Don Apostolo. Et moi aussi.

Maffio. Et moi aussi.

Gubetta. Et moi aussi, messieurs.

Jeppo. Tiens, voilà Monsieur De Belverana. Eh bien! Nous irons tous ensemble; ce sera une joyeuse soirée. Bonjour, Monsieur De Belverana.

Gubetta. Que dieu vous garde longues années, seigneur Jeppo.

Maffio, bas à Jeppo. Vous allez encore me trouver bien timide, Jeppo. Hé bien, si vous m'en croyiez, nous n'irions pas à ce souper. Le palais Negroni touche au palais ducal, et je n'ai pas grande croyance aux airs amiables de ce seigneur Belverana.

Jeppo, bas. Vous êtes fou, Maffio. La Negroni est une femme charmante, je vous dis que j'en suis amoureux, et le Belverana est un brave homme. Je me suis enquis de lui et des siens. Mon père était avec son père au siége de Grenade, en quatorze cent quatre-vingts et tant.

Maffio. Cela ne prouve pas que celui-ci soit le fils du père avec qui était votre père.

Jeppo. Vous êtes libre de ne pas venir souper, Maffio.

Maffio. J'irai si vous y allez, Jeppo.

Jeppo. Vive Jupiter, alors! -et toi, Gennaro, est-ce que tu n'es pas des nôtres ce soir?

Ascanio. Est-ce que la Negroni ne t’a pas invité?

Gennaro. Non. La princesse m’aura trouvé trop médiocre gentilhomme.

Maffio, souriant. Alors, mon frère, tu iras de ton côté à quelque rendez-vous d’amour, n’est-ce pas?
Jeppo. A propos, conte-nous donc un peu ce que te disait Madame Lucrèce l’autre soir. Il paraît qu’elle est folle de toi. Elle a dû t’en dire long. La liberté du bal était une bonne fortune pour elle. Les femmes ne déguisent leur personne que pour déshabiller plus hardiment leur âme. Visage masqué, coeur à nu.

Depuis quelques instants dona Lucrezia est sur le balcon dont elle a entrouvert la jalousie. Elle écoute.

Maffio. Ah! Tu es venu te loger précisément en face de son balcon. Gennaro! Gennaro!

Don Apostolo. Ce qui n’est pas sans danger, mon camarade; car on dit ce digne duc de Ferrare fort jaloux de madame sa femme.

Oloferno. Allons, Gennaro, dis-nous où tu en es de ton amourette avec la Lucrèce Borgia.

Gennaro. Messeigneurs! Si vous me parlez encore de cette horrible femme, il y aura des épées qui reluiront au soleil!

Dona Lucrezia, sur le balcon, à part. Hélas!

Maffio. C’est pure plaisanterie, Gennaro. Mais il me semble qu’on peut bien te parler de cette dame, puisque tu portes ses couleurs.

Gennaro. Que veux-tu dire?

Maffio, lui montrant l’écharpe qu’il porte. Cette écharpe?

Jeppo. Ce sont en effet les couleurs de Lucrèce Borgia.

Gennaro. C’est Fiametta qui me l’a envoyée.

Maffio. Tu le crois. Lucrèce te l’a fait dire. Mais c’est Lucrèce qui a brodé l’écharpe de ses propres mains pour toi.

Gennaro. En es-tu sûr, Maffio? Par qui le sais-tu?

Maffio. Par ton valet qui t’a remis l’écharpe et qu’elle a gagné.

Gennaro. Damnation! Il arrache l’écharpe, la déchire et la foule aux pieds.

Dona Lucrezia, à part. Hélas!

Elle referme la jalousie et se retire.

Maffio. Cette femme est belle pourtant!
Jeppo. Oui, mais il y a quelque chose de sinistre empreint sur sa beauté.

Maffio. C’est un ducat d’or à l’effigie de Satan.

Gennaro. Oh! Maudite soit cette Lucrèce Borgia! Vous dites qu’elle m’aime, cette femme! Hé bien, tant mieux! Que ce soit son châtiment! Elle me fait horreur! Oui, elle me fait horreur! Tu sais, Maffio, cela est toujours ainsi; il n’y a pas moyen d’être indifférent pour une femme qui nous aime. Il faut l’aimer ou la haïr. Et comment aimer celle-là? Il arrive aussi que, plus on est persécuté par l’amour de ces sortes de femmes, plus on les hait. Celle-ci m’obsède, m’investit, m’assiége. Par où ai-je pu mériter l’amour d’une Lucrèce Borgia? Cela n’est-il pas une honte et une calamité? Depuis cette nuit où vous m’avez dit son nom d’une façon si éclatante, vous ne sauriez croire à quel point la pensée de cette femme scélérate m’est odieuse. Autrefois je ne voyais Lucrèce Borgia que de loin, à travers mille intervalles, comme un fantôme terrible debout sur toute l’Italie, comme le spectre de tout le monde. Maintenant ce spectre est mon spectre à moi; il vient s’asseoir à mon chevet; il m’aime, ce spectre, et veut se coucher dans mon lit! Par ma mère, c’est épouvantable! Ah! Maffio! Elle a tué Monsieur De Gravina, elle a tué ton frère! Hé bien, ton frère, je le remplacerai près de toi, et je le vengerai près d’elle! -voilà donc son exécrable palais! Palais de la luxure, palais de la trahison, palais de l’assassinat, palais de l’adultère, palais de l’inceste, palais de tous les crimes, palais de Lucrèce Borgia! Oh! La marque d’infamie que je ne puis lui mettre au front à cette femme, je veux la mettre au moins au front de son palais!

Il monte sur le banc de pierre qui est au-dessous du balcon, et avec son poignard, il fait sauter la première lettre du nom de Borgia gravé sur le mur, de façon qu’il ne reste plus que ce mot: orgia.

Maffio. Que diable fait-il?

Jeppo. Gennaro, cette lettre de moins au nom de Madame Lucrèce, c’est ta tête de moins sur tes épaules.

Gubetta. Monsieur Gennaro, voilà un calembourg qui fera mettre demain la moitié de la ville à la question.

Gennaro. Si l’on cherche le coupable, je me présenterai.

Gubetta, à part. Je le voudrais, pardieu, cela embarrasserait Madame Lucrèce.

Depuis quelques instants, deux hommes vêtus de noir se promènent sur la place et observent.

Maffio. Messieurs, voilà des gens de mauvaise mine qui nous regardent un peu curieusement. Je crois qu’il serait prudent de nous séparer. -ne fais pas de nouvelles folies, frère Gennaro.

Gennaro. Sois tranquille, Maffio. Ta main? -messieurs, bien de la joie cette nuit!
Il rentre chez lui; les autres se dispersent.

ACTE 1 PARTIE 2 SCENE 3

Les deux hommes vêtus de noir.

Premier Homme. Que diable fais-tu là, Rustighello?

Deuxième Homme. J’attends que tu t’en ailles, Astolfo.

Premier Homme. En vérité?

Deuxième Homme. Et toi, que fais-tu là, Astolfo?

Premier Homme. J’attends que tu t’en ailles, Rustighello.

Deuxième Homme. à qui donc as-tu affaire, Astolfo?

Premier Homme. à l’homme qui vient d’entrer là. Et toi, à qui en veux-tu?

Deuxième Homme. Au même.

Premier Homme. Diable!

Deuxième Homme. Qu’est-ce que tu en veux faire?

Premier Homme. Le mener chez la duchesse. -et toi?

Deuxième Homme. Je veux le mener chez le duc.

Premier Homme. Diable!

Deuxième Homme. Qu’est-ce qui l’attend chez la duchesse?

Premier Homme. L’amour, sans doute. -et chez le duc?

Deuxième Homme. Probablement, la potence.

Premier Homme. Comment faire? Il ne peut pas être à la fois chez le duc et chez la duchesse, amant heureux et pendu.

Deuxième Homme. Voici un ducat. Jouons à croix ou pile à qui de nous deux aura l’homme.

Premier Homme. C’est dit.

Deuxième Homme. Ma foi, si je perds, je dirai tout bonnement au duc que j’ai trouvé l’oiseau déniché. Cela m’est bien égal les affaires du duc. Il jette un ducat en l’air.
Premier Homme. Pile.

Deuxième Homme, regardant à terre. C’est face.

Premier Homme. L’homme sera pendu. Prends-le. Adieu.

Deuxième Homme. Bonsoir.

L’autre une fois disparu, il ouvre la porte basse sous le balcon, y entre et revient un moment après accompagné de quatre sbires avec lesquels il va frapper à la porte de la maison où est entré Gennaro. La toile tombe.

ACTE 2 PARTIE 1 SCENE 1

Une salle du palais ducal de Ferrare. Tentures de cuir de Hongrie frappées d’arabesques d’or. Ameublement magnifique dans le goût de la fin du quinzième siècle en Italie. -le fauteuil ducal en velours rouge, brodé aux armes de la maison d’Este. à côté, une table couverte de velours rouge. -au fond, une grande porte. à droite, une petite porte. à gauche, une autre petite porte masquée. -derrière la petite porte masquée, on voit, dans un compartiment ménagé sur le théâtre, la naissance d’un escalier en spirale qui s’enfonce sous le plancher et qui est éclairé par une longue et étroite fenêtre grillée. Don Alphonse D’Este, en magnifique costume à ses couleurs. Rustighello, vêtu des mêmes couleurs, mais d’étoffes plus simples.

Rustighello. Monseigneur le duc, voilà vos premiers ordres exécutés. J’en attends d’autres.

Don Alphonse. Prends cette clef. Va à la galerie de Numa. Compte tous les panneaux de la boiserie à partir de la grande figure peinte qui est près de la porte, et qui représente Hercule, fils de Jupiter, un de mes ancêtres. Arrivé au vingt-troisième panneau, tu verras une petite ouverture cachée dans la gueule d’une guivre dorée, qui est une guivre de Milan. C’est Ludovic-Le-Maure qui a fait faire ce panneau. Introduis la clef dans cette ouverture. Le panneau tournera sur ses gonds comme une porte. Dans l’armoire secrète qu’il recouvre, tu verras sur un plateau de cristal un flacon d’or et un flacon d’argent avec deux coupes en émail. Dans le flacon d’argent il y a de l’eau pure. Dans le flacon d’or il y a du vin préparé. Tu apporteras le plateau, sans y rien déranger, dans le cabinet voisin de cette chambre, Rustighello, et si tu as jamais entendu des gens dont les dents claquaient de terreur à parler de ce fameux poison des Borgia qui, en poudre, est blanc et scintillant comme de la poussière de marbre de Carrare, et qui, mêlé au vin, change du vin de Romorantin en vin de Syracuse, tu te garderas de toucher au flacon d’or.

Rustighello. Est-ce là tout, monseigneur?

Don Alphonse. Non. Tu prendras ta meilleure épée, et tu te tiendras dans le cabinet, debout, derrière la porte, de manière à entendre tout ce qui se passera ici, et à pouvoir entrer au premier signal que je te donnerai avec cette clochette d'argent, dont tu connais le son.

Il montre une clochette sur la table.

— si j'appelle simplement: -Rustighello! -tu entreras avec le plateau. Si je secoue la clochette, tu entreras avec l'épée.

Rustighello. Il suffit, monseigneur.

Don Alphonse. Tu tiendras ton épée nue à la main, afin de n'avoir pas la peine de la tirer.
Rustighello. Bien.

Don Alphonse. Rustighello! Prends deux épées. Une peut se briser. -va.

Rustighello sort par la petite porte. Un Huissier, entrant par la porte du fond. Notre dame la duchesse demande à parler à notre seigneur le duc.

Don Alphonse. Faites entrer ma dame.

ACTE 2 PARTIE 1 SCENE 2

Don Alphonse, dona Lucrezia.

Dona Lucrezia, entrant avec impétuosité. Monsieur, monsieur, ceci est indigne, ceci est odieux, ceci est infâme. Quelqu’un de votre peuple, -savez-vous cela, don Alphonse? -vient de mutiler le nom de votre femme gravé au-dessous de mes armoiries de famille sur la façade de votre propre palais. La chose s’est faite en plein jour, publiquement, par qui? Je l’ignore, mais c’est bien injurieux et bien téméraire. On a fait de mon nom un écriteau d’ignominie, et votre populace de Ferrare, qui est bien la plus infâme populace de l’Italie, monseigneur, est là qui ricane autour de mon blason comme autour d’un pilori. Est-ce que vous vous imaginez, don Alphonse, que je m’accommode de cela, et que je n’aimerais pas mieux mourir en une fois d’un coup de poignard qu’en mille fois de la piqûre envenimée du sarcasme et du quolibet? Pardieu, monsieur, on me traite étrangement dans votre seigneurie de Ferrare! Ceci commence à me lasser, et je vous trouve l’air trop gracieux et trop tranquille pendant qu’on traîne dans les ruisseaux de votre ville la renommée de votre femme, déchiquetée à belles dents par l’injure et la calomnie. Il me faut une réparation éclatante de ceci, je vous en préviens, monsieur le duc. Préparez-vous à faire justice. C’est un événement sérieux qui arrive là, voyez-vous? Est-ce que vous croyez par hasard que je ne tiens à l’estime de personne au monde, et que mon mari peut se dispenser d’être mon chevalier? Non, non, monseigneur; qui épouse protége; qui donne la main donne le bras. J’y compte. Tous les jours ce sont de nouvelles injures, et jamais je ne vous en vois ému. Est-ce que cette boue dont on me couvre ne vous éclabousse pas, don Alphonse? Allons, sur mon âme, courroucez-vous donc un peu, que je vous voie, une fois dans votre vie, vous fâcher à mon sujet, monsieur! Vous êtes amoureux de moi, dites-vous quelquefois? Soyez-le donc de ma gloire. Vous êtes jaloux? Soyez-le de ma renommée! Si j’ai doublé par ma dot vos domaines héréditaires; si je vous ai apporté en mariage, non-seulement la rose d’or et la bénédiction du saint-père, mais ce qui tient plus de place sur la surface du monde, Sienne, Rimini, Cesena, Spolette et Piombino, et plus de villes que vous n’aviez de châteaux, et plus de duchés que vous n’aviez de baronnies; si j’ai fait de vous le plus puissant gentilhomme de l’Italie, ce n’est pas une raison, monsieur, pour que vous laissiez votre peuple me railler, me publier et m’insulter; pour que vous laissiez votre Ferrare montrer du doigt à toute l’Europe votre femme plus méprisée et plus bas placée que la servante des valets de vos palefreniers; ce n’est pas une raison, dis-je, pour que vos sujets ne puissent me voir passer au milieu d’eux sans dire: -ha! Cette femme!… -or, je vous le déclare, monsieur, je veux que le crime d’aujourd’hui soit recherché et notablement puni, ou je m’en plaindrai au pape, je m’en plaindrai au valentinois qui est à Forli avec quinze mille hommes de guerre; et voyez maintenant si cela vaut la peine de vous lever de votre fauteuil!

Don Alphonse. Madame, le crime dont vous vous plaignez m’est connu.

Dona Lucrezia. Comment, monsieur! Le crime vous est connu, et le criminel n’est pas découvert!
Don Alphonse. Le criminel est découvert.

Dona Lucrezia. Vive Dieu! S’il est découvert, comment se fait-il qu’il ne soit pas arrêté?

Don Alphonse. Il est arrêté, madame.

Dona Lucrezia. Sur mon âme, s’il est arrêté, d’où vient qu’il n’est pas encore puni?

Don Alphonse. Il va l’être. J’ai voulu d’abord avoir votre avis sur le châtiment.

Dona Lucrezia. Et vous avez bien fait, monseigneur! -où est-il?

Don Alphonse. Ici.

Dona Lucrezia. Ah, ici! -il me faut un exemple, entendez-vous, monsieur? C’est un crime de lèze-majesté. Ces crimes-là font toujours tomber la tête qui les conçoit et la main qui les exécute. -ah! Il est ici! Je veux le voir.

Don Alphonse. C’est facile.

Appelant. — Bautista!

L’huissier reparaît.

Dona Lucrezia. Encore un mot, monsieur, avant que le coupable soit introduit. -quel que soit cet homme, fût-il de votre ville, fût-il de votre maison, don Alphonse, donnez-moi votre parole de duc couronné qu’il ne sortira pas d’ici vivant.

Don Alphonse. Je vous la donne. -je vous la donne, entendez-vous bien, madame?

Dona Lucrezia. C’est bien. Hé, sans doute j’entends. Amenez-le maintenant, que je l’interroge moi-même! -mon dieu, qu’est-ce que je leur ai donc fait à ces gens de Ferrare pour me persécuter ainsi!

Don Alphonse, à l’huissier. Faites entrer le prisonnier.

La porte du fond s’ouvre. On voit paraître Gennaro désarmé entre deux pertuisaniers. Dans le même moment, on voit Rustighello monter l’escalier dans le petit compartiment à gauche, derrière la porte masquée; il tient à la main un plateau sur lequel il y a un flacon doré, un flacon argenté et deux coupes. Il pose le plateau sur l’appui de la fenêtre, tire son épée et se place derrière la porte.

ACTE 2 PARTIE 1 SCENE 3

Les mêmes, Gennaro.

Dona Lucrezia. Gennaro!

Don Alphonse, s’approchant d’elle, bas et avec un sourire.

Est-ce que vous connaissez cet homme?

Dona Lucrezia. C’est Gennaro! -quelle fatalité, mon dieu! Elle le regarde avec angoisse; il détourne les yeux.

Gennaro. Monseigneur le duc, je suis un simple capitaine et je vous parle avec le respect qui convient. Votre altesse m’a fait saisir dans mon logis ce matin; que me veut-elle!

Don Alphonse. Seigneur capitaine, un crime de lèze-majesté humaine a été commis ce matin vis à vis la maison que vous habitez. Le nom de notre bien-aimée épouse et cousine dona Lucrezia Borgia a été insolemment balafré sur la face de notre palais ducal. Nous cherchons le coupable.

Dona Lucrezia. Ce n’est pas lui! Il y a méprise, don Alphonse. Ce n’est pas ce jeune homme!

Don Alphonse. D’où le savez-vous?

Dona Lucrezia. J’en suis sûre. Ce jeune homme est de Venise et non de Ferrare. Ainsi…

Don Alphonse. Qu’est-ce que cela prouve?

Dona Lucrezia. Le fait a eu lieu ce matin, et je sais qu’il a passé la matinée chez une nommée Fiametta.

Gennaro. Non, madame.

Don Alphonse. Vous voyez bien que votre altesse est mal instruite. Laissez-moi l'interroger. -capitaine Gennaro, êtes-vous celui qui a commis le crime?

Dona Lucrezia, éperdue. On étouffe ici! De l'air! De l'air! J'ai besoin de respirer un peu!

Elle va à une fenêtre, et en passant à côté de Gennaro, elle lui dit bas et rapidement: — dis que ce n'est pas toi!
Don Alphonse, à part. Elle lui a parlé bas.

Gennaro. Duc Alphonse, les pêcheurs de Calabre qui m'ont élevé, et qui m'ont trempé tout jeune dans la mer pour me rendre fort et hardi, m'ont enseigné cette maxime, avec laquelle on peut risquer souvent sa vie, jamais son honneur: -fais ce que tu dis, dis ce que tu fais. -duc Alphonse, je suis l'homme que vous cherchez.

Don Alphonse, se tournant vers dona Lucrezia. Vous avez ma parole de duc couronné, madame.

Dona Lucrezia. J'ai deux mots à vous dire en particulier, monseigneur.

Le duc fait signe à l'huissier et aux gardes de se retirer avec le prisonnier dans la salle voisine.

ACTE 2 PARTIE 1 SCENE 4

Dona Lucrezia. Don Alphonse.

Don Alphonse. Que me voulez-vous, madame?

Dona Lucrezia. Ce que je vous veux, don Alphonse, c’est que je ne veux pas que ce jeune homme meure.

Don Alphonse. Il n’y a qu’un instant, vous êtes entrée chez moi comme la tempête, irritée et pleurante, vous vous êtes plaint à moi d’un outrage fait à vous, vous avez réclamé avec injure et cris la tête du coupable, vous m’avez demandé ma parole ducale qu’il ne sortirait pas d’ici vivant, je vous l’ai loyalement octroyée, et maintenant vous ne voulez pas qu’il meure! -par Jésus, madame, ceci est nouveau.

Dona Lucrezia. Je ne veux pas que ce jeune homme meure, monsieur le duc!

Don Alphonse. Madame, les gentilhommes aussi prouvés que moi n’ont pas coutume de laisser leur foi en gage. Vous avez ma parole, il faut que je la retire. J’ai juré que le coupable mourrait, il mourra. Sur mon ame, vous pouvez choisir le genre de mort.

Dona Lucrezia, d’un air riant et plein de douceur. Don Alphonse, don Alphonse, en vérité, nous disons là des folies vous et moi. Tenez, c’est vrai, je suis une femme pleine de déraison. Mon père m’a gâtée; que voulez-vous? On a depuis mon enfance obéi à tous mes caprices. Ce que je voulais il y a un quart d’heure, je ne le veux plus à présent. Vous savez bien, don Alphonse, que j’ai toujours été ainsi. Tenez, asseyez-vous là, près de moi, et causons un peu, tendrement, cordialement, comme mari et femme, comme deux bons amis.

Don Alphonse, prenant de son côté un air de galanterie. Dona Lucrezia, vous êtes ma dame, et je suis trop heureux qu’il vous plaise de m’avoir un instant à vos pieds.

Il s’assied près d’elle.

Dona Lucrezia. Comme cela est bon de s’entendre! Savez-vous bien, Alphonse, que je vous aime encore comme le premier jour de mon mariage, ce jour où vous fîtes une si éblouissante entrée à Rome, entre Monsieur De Valentinois, mon frère, et monsieur le cardinal Hippolyte D’Este, le vôtre. J’étais sur le balcon des degrés de saint-Pierre. Je me rappelle encore votre beau cheval blanc chargé d’orfèvrerie d’or, et l’illustre mine de roi que vous aviez dessus!

Don Alphonse. Vous étiez vous-même bien belle, madame, et bien rayonnante sous votre dais de brocard d’argent.

Dona Lucrezia. Oh! Ne me parlez pas de moi, monseigneur, quand je vous parle de vous. Il est certain que toutes les princesses de l’Europe m’envient d’avoir épousé le meilleur chevalier de la chrétienté. Et moi je vous aime vraiment comme si j’avais dix-huit ans. Vous savez que je vous aime, n’est-ce pas, Alphonse? Vous n’en doutez jamais au moins. Je suis froide quelquefois, et distraite; cela vient de mon caractère, non de mon cœur. Ecoutez, Alphonse, si votre altesse m’en grondait doucement, je me corrigerais bien vite. La bonne chose de s’aimer comme nous faisons! Donnez-moi votre main, -embrassez-moi, don Alphonse! -en vérité, j’y songe maintenant, il est bien ridicule qu’un prince et une princesse comme vous et moi, qui sont assis côte à côte sur le plus beau trône ducal qui soit au monde, et qui s’aiment, aient été sur le point de se quereller pour un misérable petit capitaine aventurier vénitien! Il faut chasser cet homme, et n’en plus parler. Qu’il aille où il voudra, ce drôle, n’est-ce pas, Alphonse? Le lion et la lionne ne se courroucent pas d’un moucheron. -savez-vous, monseigneur, que si la couronne ducale était à donner en concours au plus beau cavalier de votre duché de Ferrare, c’est encore vous qui l’auriez. -attendez, que j’aille dire à Bautista de votre part qu’il ait à chasser au plus vite de Ferrare ce Gennaro!

Don Alphonse. Rien ne presse.

Dona Lucrezia, d’un air enjoué. Je voudrais n’avoir plus à y songer. -allons, monsieur, laissez-moi terminer cette affaire à ma guise!

Don Alphonse. Il faut que celle-ci se termine à la mienne.

Dona Lucrezia. Mais enfin, mon Alphonse, vous n’avez pas de raison pour vouloir la mort de cet homme?

Don Alphonse. Et la parole que je vous ai donnée? Le serment d’un roi est sacré.

Dona Lucrezia. Cela est bon à dire au peuple. Mais de vous à moi, Alphonse, nous savons ce que c’est. Le saint-père avait promis à Charles VIII de France la vie de Zizimi, sa sainteté n’en a pas moins fait mourir Zizimi. Monsieur de Valentinois s’était constitué sur parole ôtage du même enfant Charles VIII, Monsieur de Valentinois s’est évadé du camp français dès qu’il a pu. Vous-même, vous aviez promis aux Petrucci de leur rendre Sienne. Vous ne l’avez pas fait ni dû faire. Hé! L’histoire des pays est pleine de cela. Ni rois ni nations ne pourraient vivre un jour avec la rigidité des sermens qu’on tiendrait. Entre nous, Alphonse, une parole jurée n’est une nécessité que quand il n’y en a pas d’autre.

Don Alphonse. Pourtant, dona Lucrezia, un serment…

Dona Lucrezia. Ne me donnez pas de ces mauvaises raisons-là. Je ne suis pas une sotte. Dites-moi plutôt, mon cher Alphonse, si vous avez quelque motif d’en vouloir à ce Gennaro. Non? Eh bien! Accordez-moi sa vie. Vous m’aviez bien accordé sa mort. Qu’est-ce que cela vous fait? S’il me plaît de lui pardonner. C’est moi qui suis l’offensée.

Don Alphonse. C’est justement parce qu’il vous a offensée, mon amour, que je ne veux pas lui faire grâce.

Dona Lucrezia. Si vous m’aimez, Alphonse, vous ne me refuserez pas plus long-temps. Et s’il me plaît d’essayer de la clémence, à moi? C’est un moyen de me faire aimer de votre peuple. Je veux que votre peuple m’aime. La miséricorde, Alphonse, cela fait ressembler un roi à Jésus-Christ. Soyons des souverains miséricordieux. Cette pauvre Italie a assez de tyrans sans nous depuis le baron vicaire du pape jusqu’au pape vicaire de Dieu. Finissons-en, cher Alphonse. Mettez ce Gennaro en liberté. C’est un caprice, si vous voulez; mais c’est quelque chose de sacré et d’auguste que le caprice d’une femme, quand il sauve la tête d’un homme.

Don Alphonse. Je ne puis, chère Lucrèce.

Dona Lucrezia. Vous ne pouvez? Mais enfin pourquoi ne pouvez-vous pas m’accorder quelque chose d’aussi insignifiant que la vie de ce capitaine?

Don Alphonse. Vous me demandez pourquoi, mon amour?

Dona Lucrezia. Oui, pourquoi?

Don Alphonse. Parce que ce capitaine est votre amant, madame!

Dona Lucrezia. Ciel!

Don Alphonse. Parce que vous l’avez été chercher à Venise! Parce que vous l’iriez chercher en enfer! Parce que je vous ai suivie pendant que vous le suiviez! Parce que je vous ai vue, masquée et haletante, courir après lui comme la louve après sa proie! Parce que tout à l’heure encore vous le couviez d’un regard plein de pleurs et plein de flamme! Parce que vous vous êtes prostituée à lui, sans aucun doute, madame! Parce que c’est assez de honte et d’infamie et d’adultère comme cela! Parce qu’il est temps que je venge mon honneur et que je fasse couler autour de mon lit un fossé de sang, entendez-vous, madame!

Dona Lucrezia. Don Alphonse…

Don Alphonse. Taisez-vous. -veillez sur vos amants désormais, Lucrèce! La porte par laquelle on entre dans votre chambre de nuit, mettez-y tel huissier qu’il vous plaira; mais à la porte par où l’on sort, il y aura maintenant un portier de mon choix, -le bourreau!

Dona Lucrezia. Monseigneur, je vous jure…

Don Alphonse. Ne jurez pas. Les sermens, cela est bon pour le peuple. Ne me donnez pas de ces mauvaises raisons-là.

Dona Lucrezia. Si vous saviez…

Don Alphonse. Tenez, madame, je hais toute votre abominable famille de Borgia, et vous toute la première, que j’ai si follement aimée! Il faut que je vous dise un peu cela à la fin, c’est une chose honteuse, inouie et merveilleuse de voir alliées en nos deux personnes la maison d’Este, qui vaut mieux que la maison de Valois et que la maison de Tudor, la maison d’Este, dis-je, et la famille Borgia, qui ne s’appelle pas même Borgia, qui s’appelle Lenzuoli, ou Lenzolio, on ne sait quoi! J’ai horreur de votre frère César, qui a des taches de sang naturelles au visage! De votre frère César, qui a tué votre frère Jean! J’ai horreur de votre mère la Rosa Vanozza, la vieille fille de joie espagnole qui scandalise Rome après avoir scandalisé Valence! Et quant à vos neveux prétendus, les ducs de Sermoneto et de Nepi, de beaux ducs, ma foi! Des ducs d’hier! Des ducs faits avec des duchés volés! Laissez-moi finir. J’ai horreur de votre père, qui est pape, et qui a un sérail de femmes comme le sultan des turcs Bajazet; de votre père, qui est l’antéchrist; de votre père, qui peuple le bagne de personnes illustres et le sacré collége de bandits, si bien qu’en les voyant tous vêtus de rouge, galériens et cardinaux, on se demande si ce sont les galériens qui sont les cardinaux et les cardinaux qui sont les galériens! -allez maintenant!

Dona Lucrezia. Monseigneur! Monseigneur! Je vous demande, à genoux et à mains jointes, au nom de Jésus et de Marie, au nom de votre père et de votre mère, monseigneur, je vous demande la vie de ce capitaine.

Don Alphonse. Voilà aimer! -vous pourrez faire de son cadavre ce qu’il vous plaira, madame, et je prétends que ce soit avant une heure.

Dona Lucrezia. Grâce pour Gennaro!

Don Alphonse. Si vous pouviez lire la ferme résolution qui est dans mon ame, vous n’en parleriez pas plus que s’il était déjà mort.

Dona Lucrezia, se relevant. Ah! Prenez garde à vous, don Alphonse de Ferrare, mon quatrième mari!

Don Alphonse. Oh! Ne faites pas la terrible, madame! Sur mon ame, je ne vous crains pas! Je sais vos allures. Je ne me laisserai pas empoisonner comme votre premier mari, ce pauvre gentilhomme d'Espagne dont je ne sais plus le nom, ni vous non plus! Je ne me laisserai pas chasser comme votre second mai, Jean Sforza, seigneur de Pesaro, cet imbécille! Je ne me laisserai pas tuer à coups de pique, sur n'importe quel escalier, comme le troisième, don Alphonse D'Aragon, faible enfant dont le sang n'a guère plus taché les dalles que de l'eau pure! Tout beau! Moi je suis un homme, madame. Le nom d'Hercule est souvent porté dans ma famille. Par le ciel! J'ai des soldats plein ma ville et plein ma seigneurie, et j'en suis un moi-même, et je n'ai point encore vendu, comme ce pauvre roi de Naples, mes bons canons d'artillerie au pape, votre saint père!

Dona Lucrezia. Vous vous repentirez de ces paroles, monsieur. Vous oubliez qui je suis…

Don Alphonse. Je sais fort bien qui vous êtes, mais je sais aussi où vous êtes. Vous êtes la fille du pape, mais vous n'êtes pas à Rome; vous êtes la gouvernante de Spolette, mais vous n'êtes pas à Spolette; vous êtes la femme, la sujette et la servante d'Alphonse, duc de Ferrare, et vous êtes à Ferrare!
Dona Lucrezia, toute pâle de terreur et de colère, regarde fixement le duc et recule lentement devant lui, jusqu'à un fauteuil où elle vient tomber comme brisée.

— ah! Cela vous étonne, vous avez peur de moi, madame, jusqu'ici c'était moi qui avais peur de vous. J'entends qu'il en soit ainsi désormais, et pour commencer, voici le premier de vos amans sur lequel je mets la main, il mourra.

Dona Lucrezia, d'une voix faible. Raisonnons un peu, don Alphonse. Si cet homme est celui qui a commis envers moi le crime de lèze-majesté, il ne peut être en même temps mon amant…

Don Alphonse. Pourquoi non? Dans un accès de dépit, de colère, de jalousie! Car il est peut-être jaloux aussi, lui. D’ailleurs, est-ce que je sais, moi? Je veux que cet homme meure. C’est ma fantaisie. Ce palais est plein de soldats qui me sont dévoués et qui ne connaissent que moi. Il ne peut échapper. Vous n’empêcherez rien, madame. J’ai laissé à votre altesse le choix du genre de mort, décidez-vous.

Dona Lucrezia, se tordant les mains. ô mon dieu! ô mon dieu! ô mon dieu!

Don Alphonse. Vous ne répondez pas? Je vais le faire tuer dans l’antichambre à coups d’épée.

Il va pour sortir, elle lui saisit le bras.

Dona Lucrezia. Arrêtez!

Don Alphonse. Aimez-vous mieux lui verser vous-même un verre de vin de Syracuse?

Dona Lucrezia. Gennaro!

Don Alphonse. Il faut qu’il meure.

Dona Lucrezia. Pas à coups d’épée!

Don Alphonse. La manière m’importe peu. -que choisissez-vous?

Dona Lucrezia. L’autre chose.

Don Alphonse. Vous aurez soin de ne pas vous tromper, et de lui verser vous-même du flacon d’or que vous savez? Je serai là d’ailleurs. Ne vous figurez pas que je vais vous quitter.

Dona Lucrezia. Je ferai ce que vous voulez.

Don Alphonse. Bautista!

L’huissier reparaît.
— ramenez le prisonnier.

Dona Lucrezia. Vous êtes un homme affreux, monseigneur!

ACTE 2 PARTIE 1 SCENE 5

Les mêmes, Gennaro, les gardes.

Don Alphonse. Qu’est-ce que j’entends dire, seigneur Gennaro? Que ce que vous avez fait ce matin, vous l’avez fait par étourderie et bravade, et sans intention méchante, que madame la duchesse vous pardonne, et que d’ailleurs vous êtes un vaillant. Par ma mère, s’il en est ainsi, vous pouvez retourner sain et sauf à Venise. à dieu ne plaise que je prive la magnifique république de Venise d’un bon domestique et la chrétienté d’un bras fidèle qui porte une fidèle épée quand il y a devers les eaux de Chypre et de Candie des idolâtres et des sarrasins!

Gennaro. à la bonne heure, monseigneur! Je ne m’attendais pas, je l’avoue, à ce dénouement. Mais je remercie votre altesse. La clémence est une vertu de race royale, et Dieu fera grâce là haut à qui aura fait grâce ici-bas.

Don Alphonse. Capitaine, est-ce un bon service que celui de la république, et combien y gagnez-vous, bon an, mal an?

Gennaro. J’ai une compagnie de cinquante lances, monseigneur, que je défraie et que j’habille. La sérénissime république, sans compter les aubaines et les épaves, me donne deux mille sequins d’or par an.

Don Alphonse. Et si je vous en offrais quatre mille, prendriez-vous service chez moi?

Gennaro. Je ne pourrais. Je suis encore pour cinq ans au service de la république. Je suis lié.

Don Alphonse. Comment? Lié!

Gennaro. Par serment.

Don Alphonse, bas à dona Lucrezia. Il paraît que ces gens-là tiennent les leurs, madame.

Haut. — n’en parlons plus, seigneur Gennaro.

Gennaro. Je n’ai fait aucune lâcheté pour obtenir la vie sauve; mais, puisque votre altesse me la laisse, voici ce que je puis lui dire maintenant. Votre altesse se souvient de l’assaut de Faenza, il y a deux ans. Monseigneur le duc Hercule D’Este, votre père, y courut grand péril de la part de deux cranequiniers du Valentinois qui l’allaient tuer. Un soldat aventurier lui sauva la vie.

Don Alphonse. Oui, et l’on n’a jamais pu retrouver ce soldat.

Gennaro. C’était moi.
Don Alphonse. Pardieu, mon capitaine, ceci mérite récompense. — est-ce que vous n’accepteriez pas cette bourse de sequins d’or?

Gennaro. Nous faisons serment, en prenant le service de la république, de ne recevoir aucun argent des souverains étrangers. Cependant, si votre altesse le permet, je prendrai cette bourse, et je la distribuerai en mon nom aux braves soldats que voici. Il montre les gardes.

Don Alphonse. Faites.

Gennaro prend la bourse.

— mais alors vous boirez avec moi, suivant le vieil usage de nos ancêtres, comme bons amis que nous sommes, un verre de mon vin de Syracuse.

Gennaro. Volontiers, monseigneur.

Don Alphonse. Et pour vous faire honneur comme à quelqu’un qui a sauvé mon père, je veux que ce soit madame la duchesse elle-même qui vous le verse. Gennaro s’incline et se retourne pour aller distribuer l’argent aux soldats au fond du théâtre.

Le duc appelle. — Rustighello!

Rustighello paraît avec le plateau.

— pose le plateau là, sur cette table. — bien.

Prenant dona Lucrezia par la main.

— madame, écoutez ce que je vais dire à cet homme.

— Rustighello, retourne te placer derrière cette porte avec ton épée nue à la main; si tu entends le bruit de cette clochette, tu entreras.

Va. Rustighello sort, et on le voit se replacer derrière la porte.

— madame, vous verserez vous-même à boire au jeune homme, et vous aurez soin de verser du flacon d’or que voici.

Dona Lucrezia, pâle et d’une voix faible. Oui. -si vous saviez ce que vous faites en ce moment, et combien c’est une chose horrible, vous frémiriez vous-même, tout dénaturé que vous êtes, monseigneur!

Don Alphonse. Ayez soin de ne pas vous tromper de flacon. -hé bien, capitaine!

Gennaro, qui a fini sa distribution d’argent, revient sur le devant du théâtre. Le duc se verse à boire dans une des deux coupes d’émail avec le flacon d’argent, et prend la coupe qu’il porte à ses lèvres.
Gennaro. Je suis confus de tant de bonté, monseigneur.

Don Alphonse. Madame, versez à boire au seigneur Gennaro. — quel âge avez-vous, capitaine?

Gennaro, saisissant l’autre coupe et la présentant à la duchesse.

Vingt ans.

Don Alphonse, bas à la duchesse, qui essaie de prendre le flacon d’argent.

Le flacon d’or, madame!

Elle prend en tremblant le flacon d’or. — ah çà, vous devez être amoureux?

Gennaro. Qui est-ce qui ne l’est pas un peu, monseigneur?

Don Alphonse. Savez-vous, madame, que c’eût été une cruauté que d’enlever ce capitaine à la vie, à l’amour, au soleil d’Italie, à la beauté de son âge de vingt ans, à son glorieux métier de guerre et d’aventure par où toutes les maisons royales ont commencé, aux fêtes, aux bals masqués, aux gais carnavals de Venise, où il se trompe tant de maris, et aux belles femmes que ce jeune homme peut aimer et qui doivent aimer ce jeune homme, n’est-ce pas, madame? -versez donc à boire au capitaine.

Bas. — si vous hésitez, je fais entrer Rustighello.

Elle verse à boire à Gennaro sans dire une parole.

Gennaro. Je vous remercie, monseigneur, de me laisser vivre pour ma pauvre mère.

Dona Lucrezia, à part. Oh! Horreur!

Don Alphonse, buvant. à votre santé, capitaine Gennaro, et vivez beaucoup d’années!

Gennaro. Monseigneur, Dieu vous le rende!

Il boit.

Dona Lucrezia, à part. Ciel!

Don Alphonse, à part. C’est fait.

Haut. — sur ce, je vous quitte, mon capitaine. Vous partirez pour Venise quand vous voudrez.

Bas à dona Lucrezia. — remerciez-moi, madame, je vous laisse tête à tête avc lui. Vous devez avoir des adieux à lui faire. Vivez avec lui, si bon vous semble, son dernier quart d’heure.
Il sort, les gardes le suivent.

ACTE 2 PARTIE 1 SCENE 6

Dona Lucrezia, Gennaro. On voit toujours dans le compartiment Rustighello immobile derrière la porte masquée.

Dona Lucrezia. Gennaro! -vous êtes empoisonné!

Gennaro. Empoisonné, madame!

Dona Lucrezia. Empoisonné!

Gennaro. J’aurais dû m’en douter, le vin étant versé par vous.

Dona Lucrezia. Oh! Ne m’accablez pas, Gennaro. Ne m’ôtez pas le peu de force qui me reste et dont j’ai besoin encore pour quelques instans. -écoutez-moi. Le duc est jaloux de vous, le duc vous croit mon amant. Le duc ne m’a laissé d’autre alternative que de vous voir poignarder devant moi par Rustighello, ou de vous verser moi-même le poison. Un poison redoutable, Gennaro, un poison dont la seule idée fait pâlir tout italien qui sait l’histoire de ces vingt dernières années…

Gennaro. Oui, le poison des Borgia!

Dona Lucrezia. Vous en avez bu. Personne au monde ne connaît de contre-poison à cette composition terrible, personne, excepté le pape, Monsieur De Valentinois, et moi. Tenez, voyez cette fiole que je porte toujours cachée dans ma ceinture. Cette fiole, Gennaro, c’est la vie, c’est la santé, c’est le salut. Une seule goutte sur vos lèvres, et vous êtes sauvé!

Elle veut approcher la fiole des lèvres de Gennaro,

il recule.

Gennaro, la regardant fixement. Madame, qui est-ce qui me dit que ce n’est pas cela qui est du poison?

Dona Lucrezia, tombant anéantie sur le fauteuil. ô mon dieu! Mon dieu!

Gennaro. Ne vous appelez-vous pas Lucrèce Borgia? -est-ce que vous croyez que je ne me souviens pas du frère de Bajazet? Oui, je sais un peu d'histoire! On lui fit accroire, à lui aussi, qu'il était empoisonné par Charles Viii, et on lui donna un contre-poison dont il mourut. Et la main qui lui présenta le contre-poison, la voilà, elle tient cette fiole. Et la bouche qui lui dit de le boire, la voici, elle me parle!

Dona Lucrezia. Misérable femme que je suis!

Gennaro. écoutez, madame, je ne me méprends pas à vos semblans d'amour. Vous avez quelque sinistre dessein sur moi. Cela est visible. Vous devez savoir qui je suis. Tenez, dans ce moment-ci, cela se lit sur votre visage que vous le savez, et il est aisé de voir que vous avez quelque insurmontable raison pour ne me le dire jamais. Votre famille doit connaître la mienne, et peut-être à cette heure ce n'est pas de moi que vous vous vengeriez en m'empoisonnant; mais, qui sait? De ma mère!

Dona Lucrezia. Votre mère, Gennaro! Vous la voyez peut-être autrement qu'elle n'est. Que diriez-vous si ce n'était qu'une femme criminelle comme moi?

Gennaro. Ne la calomniez pas. Oh! Non! Ma mère n'est pas une femme comme vous, Madame Lucrèce! Oh! Je la sens dans mon cœur et je la rêve dans mon ame telle qu'elle est; j'ai son image là, née avec moi; je ne l'aimerais pas comme je l'aime si elle n'était pas digne de moi; le cœur d'un fils ne se trompe pas sur sa mère. Je la haïrais si elle pouvait vous ressembler. Mais non, non. Il y a quelque chose en moi qui me dit bien haut que ma mère n'est pas un de ces démons d'inceste, de luxure, et d'empoisonnement comme vous autres, les belles femmes d'à présent. Oh dieu! J'en suis bien sûr, s'il y a sous le ciel une femme innocente, une femme vertueuse, une femme sainte, c'est ma mère! Oh! Elle est ainsi, et pas autrement! Vous la connaissez, sans doute, Madame Lucrèce, et vous ne me démentirez point!

Dona Lucrezia. Non, cette femme-là, Gennaro, cette mère-là, je ne la connais pas!

Gennaro. Mais devant qui est-ce que je parle ainsi? Qu'est-ce que cela vous fait à vous, Lucrèce Borgia, les joies ou les douleurs d'une mère! Vous n'avez jamais eu d'enfans, à ce qu'on dit, et vous êtes bien heureuse. Car vos enfans, si vous en aviez, savez-vous bien qu'ils vous renieraient, madame? Quel malheureux assez abandonné du ciel voudrait d'une pareille mère? être le fils de Lucrèce Borgia! Dire ma mère à Lucrèce Borgia! Oh!…

Dona Lucrezia. Gennaro! Vous êtes empoisonné; le duc, qui vous croit mort, peut revenir à tout moment; je ne devrais songer qu'à votre salut et à votre évasion, mais vous me dites des choses si terribles que je ne puis faire autrement que de rester là, pétrifiée, à les entendre.

Gennaro. Madame…

Dona Lucrezia. Voyons! Il faut en finir. Accablez-moi, écrasez-moi sous votre mépris; mais vous êtes empoisonné, buvez ceci sur-le-champ!

Gennaro. Que dois-je croire, madame? Le duc est loyal, et j'ai sauvé la vie à son père. Vous, je vous ai offensée, vous avez à vous venger de moi.

Dona Lucrezia. Me venger de toi, Gennaro! -il faudrait donner toute ma vie pour ajouter une heure à la tienne, il faudrait répandre tout mon sang pour t'empêcher de verser une larme, il faudrait m'asseoir au pilori pour te mettre sur un trône, il faudrait payer d'une torture de l'enfer chacun de tes moindre plaisirs, que je n'hésiteraispas, que je ne murmurerais pas, que je serais heureuse, que je baiserais tes pieds, mon Gennaro! Oh! Tu ne sauras jamais rien de mon pauvre misérable cœur, sinon qu'il est plein de toi! -Gennaro, le temps presse, le poison marche, tout à l'heure tu le sentirais, vois-tu! Encore un peu, il ne serait plus temps. La vie ouvre en ce moment deux espaces obscurs devant toi, mais l'un a moins de minutes que l'autre n'a d'années. Il faut te déterminer pour l'un des deux. Le choix est terrible. Laisse-toi guider par moi. Aie pitié de toi et de moi, Gennaro. Bois vite, au nom du ciel!

Gennaro. Allons, c’est bien. S’il y a un crime en ceci, qu’il retombe sur votre tête. Après tout, que vous disiez vrai ou non, ma vie ne vaut pas la peine d’être tant disputée. Donnez.

Il prend la fiole et boit.

Dona Lucrezia. Sauvé! -maintenant il faut repartir pour Venise de toute la vitesse de ton cheval. Tu as de l’argent?

Gennaro. J’en ai.

Dona Lucrezia. Le duc te croit mort. Il sera aisé de lui cacher ta fuite. Attends! Garde cette fiole et porte-la toujours sur toi. Dans des temps comme ceux où nous vivons, le poison est de tous les repas. Toi surtout, tu es exposé. Maintenant pars vite. Lui montrant la porte masquée qu’elle entr’ouvre.

— descends par cet escalier. Il donne dans une des cours du palais Negroni. Il te sera aisé de t’évader par là. N’attends pas jusqu’à demain matin, n’attends pas jusqu’au coucher du soleil, n’attends pas une heure, n’attends pas une demi-heure! Quitte Ferrare sur-le-champ, quitte Ferrare comme si c’était Sodome qui brûle, et ne regarde pas derrière toi! — adieu! — attends encore un instant. J’ai un dernier mot à te dire, mon Gennaro!

Gennaro. Parlez, madame.

Dona Lucrezia. Je te dis adieu en ce moment, Gennao, pour ne plus te revoir jamais. Il ne faut plus songer maintenant à te rencontrer quelquefois sur mon chemin. C’était le seul bonheur que j’eusse au monde. Mais ce serait risquer ta tête. Nous voilà donc pour toujours séparés dans cette vie; hélas! Je ne suis que trop sûre que nous serons séparés aussi dans l’autre. Gennaro! Est-ce que tu ne me diras pas quelque douce parole avant de me quitter ainsi pour l’éternité?…

Gennaro, baissant les yeux. Madame…

Dona Lucrezia. Je viens de te sauver la vie, enfin!

Gennaro. Vous me le dites. Tout ceci est plein de tenèbres. Je ne sais que penser. Tenez, madame, je puis tout vous pardonner, une chose exceptée.

Dona Lucrezia. Laquelle?

Gennaro. Jurez-moi par tout ce qui vous est cher, par ma propre tête, puisque vous m’aimez, par le salut éternel de mon ame, jurez-moi que vos crimes ne sont pour rien dans les malheurs de ma mère.
Dona Lucrezia. Toutes les paroles sont sérieuses avec vous, Gennaro. Je ne puis vous jurer cela.

Gennaro. ô ma mère! Ma mère! La voilà donc l’épouvantable femme qui a fait ton malheur!

Dona Lucrezia. Gennaro!…

Gennaro. Vous l’avez avoué, madame! Adieu! Soyez maudite!

Dona Lucrezia. Et toi, Gennaro! Sois béni! Il sort. -elle tombe évanouie sur le fauteuil.

ACTE 2 PARTIE 2 SCENE 1

La deuxième décoration. La place de Ferrare avec le balcon ducal d’un côté et la maison de Gennaro de l’autre.

— il est nuit.

Don Alphonse, Rustighello, enveloppés de manteaux.

Rustighello. Oui, monseigneur, cela s’est passé ainsi. Avec je ne sais quel philtre elle l’a rendu à la vie, et l’a fait évader par la cour du palais Negroni.

Don Alphonse. Et tu as souffert cela?

Rustighello. Comment l’empêcher? Elle avait verrouillé la porte. J’étais enfermé.

Don Alphonse. Il fallait briser la porte.

Rustighello. Une porte de chêne, un verrou de fer. Chose facile!

Don Alphonse. N’importe! Il fallait briser le verrou, te dis-je; il fallait entrer et le tuer.

Rustighello. D’abord, en supposant que j’eusse pu enfoncer la porte, Madame Lucrève l’aurait couvert de son corps. Il aurait fallu tuer aussi Madame Lucrèce.

Don Alphonse. Hé bien? Après?

Rustighello. Je n’avais pas d’ordre pour elle.

Don Alphonse. Rustighello! Les bons serviteurs sont ceux qui comprennent les princes sans leur donner la peine de tout dire.

Rustighello. Et puis j’aurais craint de brouiller votre altesse avec le pape.

Don Alphonse. Imbécille!

Rustighello. C’était bien embarrassant, monseigneur. Tuer la fille du saint-père!

Don Alphonse. Hé bien, sans la tuer, ne pouvais-tu pas crier, appeler, m’avertir, empêcher l’amant de s’évader?

Rustighello. Oui, et puis le lendemain votre altesse se serait reconciliée avec Madame Lucrèce, et le surlendemain Madame Lucrèce m’aurait fait pendre.

Don Alphonse. Assez. Tu m’as dit que rien n’était encore perdu.
Rustighello. Non. Vous voyez une lumière à cette fenêtre. Le Gennaro n’est pas encore parti. Son valet, que la duchesse avait gagné, est à présent gagné par moi, et m’a tout dit. En ce moment il attend son maître derrière la citadelle avec deux chevaux sellés. Le Gennaro va sortir pour l’aller rejoindre dans un instant.

Don Alphonse. En ce cas, embusquons-nous derrière l’angle de sa maison. Il est nuit noire. Nous le tuerons quand il passera.

Rustighello. Comme il vous plaira.

Don Alphonse. Ton épée est bonne?

Rustighello. Oui.

Don Alphonse. Tu as un poignard?

Rustighello. Il y a deux choses qu’il n’est pas aisé de trouver sous le ciel; c’est un italien sans poignard, et une italienne sans amant.

Don Alphonse. Bien. -tu frapperas des deux mains.

Rustighello. Monseigneur le duc, pourquoi ne le faites-vous pas arrêter tout simplement, et pendre par jugement du fiscal?

Don Alphonse. Il est sujet de Venise, et ce serait déclarer la guerre à la république. Non. Un coup de poignard vient on ne sait d’où, et ne compromet personne. L’empoisonnement vaudrait mieux encore, mais l’empoisonnement est manqué.

Rustighello. Alors, voulez-vous, moseigneur, que j’aille chercher quatre sbires pour le dépêcher sans que vous ayez la peine de vous en mêler?

Don Alphonse mon cher, le seigneur Machiavel m’a dit souvent que, dans ces cas-là, le mieux était que les princes fissent leurs affaires eux-mêmes.

Rustighello. Monseigneur, j’entends venir quelqu’un.

Don Alphonse. Rangeons-nous le long de ce mur. Ils se cachent dans l’ombre, sous le balcon. -paraît Maffio en habit de fête, qui arrive en fredonnant et va frapper à la porte de Gennaro.

ACTE 2 PARTIE 2 SCENE 2

Don Alphonse et Rustighello, cachés. Maffio, Gennaro.

Maffio. Gennaro!

La porte s’ouvre, Gennaro paraît.

Gennaro. C’est toi, Maffio? Veux-tu entrer?

Maffio. Non. Je n’ai que deux mots à te dire. Est-ce que décidément tu ne viens pas ce soir souper avec nous chez la princesse Negroni?

Gennaro. Je ne suis pas convié.

Maffio. Je te présenterai.

Gennaro. Il y a une autre raison. Je dois te dire cela, à toi. Je pars.

Maffio. Comment, tu pars?

Gennaro. Dans un quart d’heure.

Maffio. Pourquoi?

Gennaro. Je te dirai cela à Venise.

Maffio. Affaire d’amour?

Gennaro. Oui, affaire d’amour.

Maffio. Tu agis mal avec moi, Gennaro. Nous avions fait serment de ne jamais nous quitter, d’être inséparables, d’être frères; et voilà que tu pars sans moi!

Gennaro. Viens avec moi!

Maffio. Viens plutôt avec moi, toi! -il vaut bien mieux passer la nuit à table avec de jolies femmes et de gais convives que sur la grande route, entre les bandits et les ravins.

Gennaro. Tu n'étais pas très-sûr ce matin de ta princesse Negroni.

Maffio. Je me suis informé. Jeppo avait raison. C'est une femme charmante et de belle humeur, et qui aime les vers et la musique, voilà tout. Allons, viens avec moi.

Gennaro. Je ne puis.
Maffio. Partir à la nuit close! Tu vas te faire assassiner.

Gennaro. Sois tranquille. Adieu. Bien du plaisir.

Maffio. Frère Gennaro, j'ai mauvaise idée de ton voyage.

Gennaro. Frère Maffio, j'ai mauvaise idée de ton souper.

Maffio. S'il allait t'arriver malheur sans que je fusse là!

Gennaro. Qui sait si je ne me reprocherai pas demain de t'avoir quitté ce soir?

Maffio. Tiens, décidément, ne nous séparons pas. Cédons quelque chose chacun de notre côté. Viens ce soir avec moi chez la Negroni, et demain, au point du jour, nous partirons ensemble. Est-ce dit?

Gennaro. Allons, il faut que je te conte, à toi, Maffio, les motifs de mon départ subit. Tu vas juger si j'ai raison.

Il prend Maffio à part et lui parle à l'oreille.

Rustighello, sous le balcon, bas à don Alphonse. Attaquons-nous, monseigneur?

Don Alphonse, bas. Voyons la fin de ceci.

Maffio, éclatant de rire après le récit de Gennaro. Veux-tu que je te dise, Gennaro? Tu es dupe. Il n’y a dans toute cette affaire ni poison, ni contre-poison. Pure comédie. La Lucrèce est amoureuse éperdue de toi, et elle a voulu te faire accroire qu’elle te sauvait la vie, espérant te faire doucement glisser de la reconnaissance à l’amour. Le duc est un bonhomme, incapable d’empoisonner ou d’assassiner qui que ce soit. Tu as sauvé la vie à son père d’ailleurs, et il le sait. La duchesse veut que tu partes, c’est fort bien. Son amourette se déroulerait en effet plus commodément à Venise qu’à Ferrare. Le mari la gêne toujours un peu. Quant au souper de la princesse Negroni, il sera délicieux. Tu y viendras. Que diable! Il faut cependant raisonner un peu et ne rien s’exagérer. Tu sais que je suis prudent, moi, et de bon conseil. Parce qu’il y a eu deux ou trois soupers fameux où les Borgia ont empoisonné, avec de fort bons vins, quelques-uns de leurs meilleurs amis, ce n’est pas une raison pour ne plus souper du tout. Ce n’est pas une raison pour voir toujours du poison dans l’admirable vin de Syracuse et derrière toutes les belles princesses de l’Italie Lucrèce Borgia. Spectres et balivernes que tout cela! à ce compte il n’y aurait que les enfans à la mamelle qui seraient sûrs de ce qu’ils boivent, et qui pourraient souper sans inquiétude. Par Hercule, Gennaro! Sois enfant ou sois homme. Retourne te mettre en nourrice ou viens souper.

Gennaro. Au fait, cela a quelque chose d’étrange de se sauver ainsi la nuit. J’ai l’air d’un homme qui a peur. D’ailleurs, s’il y a du danger à rester, je ne dois pas y laisser Maffio tout seul. Il en sera ce qui pourra. C’est une chance comme une autre. C’est dit. Tu me présenteras à la princesse Negroni. Je vais avec toi.
Maffio, lui prenant la main. Vrai dieu! Voilà un ami!

Ils sortent. On les voit s’éloigner vers le fond de la place. Don Alphonse et Rustighello sortent de leur cachette.

Rustighello, l’épée nue. Hé bien, qu’attendez-vous, monseigneur? Ils ne sont que deux. Chargez-vous de votre homme. Je me charge de l’autre.

Don Alphonse. Non, Rustighello. Ils vont souper chez la princesse Negroni. Si je suis bien informé…

il s’interrompt et paraît rêver un instant. éclatant de rire. — pardieu! Cela ferait encore mieux mon affaire, et ce serait une plaisante aventure. Attendons à demain.

Ils rentrent au palais.

ACTE 3 SCENE 1

Une salle magnifique du palais Negroni. à droite, une porte bâtarde. Au fond, une grande et très-large porte à deux battans. Au milieu, une table superbement servie à la mode du quinzième siècle. De petits pages noirs, vêtus de brocard d'or, circulent à l'entour. -au moment où la toile se lève, il y a quatorze convives à table, Jeppo, Maffio, Ascanio, Oloferno, Apostolo, Gennaro et Gubetta, et sept jeunes femmes, jolies et très-galamment parées. Tous boivent ou mangent, ou rient à gorge déployée avec leurs voisines, excepté Gennaro qui paraît pensif et silencieux.

Jeppo, Maffio, Ascanio, Oloferno, don Apostolo, Gubetta, Gennaro, des femmes, des pages.

Oloferno, son verre à la main. Vive le vin de Xerès! Xerès de la frontera est une ville du paradis.

Maffio, son verre à la main. Le vin que nous buvons vaut mieux que les histoires que vous nous contez, Jeppo.

Ascanio. Jeppo a la maladie de conter des histoires quand il a bu.

Don Apostolo. L'autre jour, c'était à Venise, chez le sérénissime doge Barbarigo; aujourd'hui, c'est à Ferrare, chez la divine princesse Negroni.

Jeppo. L'autre jour, c'était une histoire lugubre; aujourd'hui, c'est une histoire gaie.

Maffio. Une histoire gaie, Jeppo! Comment il advint que don Siliceo, beau cavalier de trente ans, qui avait perdu son patrimoine au jeu, épousa la très-riche marquise Calpurnia, qui comptait quarante-huit printemps. Par le corps de Bacchus! Vous trouvez cela gai!

Gubetta. C'est triste et commun. Un homme ruiné, qui épouse une femme en ruine. Chose qui se voit tous les jours.

Il se met à manger. De temps en temps, quelques-uns se lèvent de table et viennent causer sur le devant de la scène pendant que l’orgie continue.

La Princesse Negroni, à Maffio, montrant Gennaro. Monsieur le comte Orsini, vous avez là un ami qui me paraît bien triste.

Maffio. Il est toujours ainsi, madame. Il faut que vous me pardonniez de l’avoir amené sans que vous lui eussiez fait la grâce de l’inviter. C’est mon frère d’armes. Il m’a sauvé la vie à l’assaut de Rimini. J’ai reçu à l’attaque du pont de Vicence un coup d’épée qui lui était destiné. Nous ne nous séparons jamais. Nous vivons ensemble. Un bohémien nous a prdit que nous mourrions le même jour.
La Negroni, riant. Vous a-t-il dit si ce serait le soir ou le matin?

Maffio. Il nous a dit que ce serait le matin.

La Negroni, riant plus fort. Votre bohémien ne savait ce qu’il disait. — et vous aimez bien ce jeune homme?

Maffio. Autant qu’un homme peut en aimer un autre.

La Negroni. Eh bien! Vous vous suffisez l’un à l’autre. Vous êtes heureux.

Maffio. L’amitié ne remplit pas tout le cœur, madame.

La Negroni. Mon dieu! Qu’est-ce qui remplit tout le cœur?

Maffio. L’amour.

La Negroni. Vous avez toujours l’amour à la bouche.

Maffio. Et vous dans les yeux.

La Negroni. êtes-vous singulier!

Maffio. êtes-vous belle!

Il lui prend la taille.

La Negroni. Monsieur le comte Orsini, laissez-moi!

Maffio. Un baiser sur votre main?

La Negroni. Non!

Elle lui échappe.

Gubetta, abordant Maffio. Vos affaires sont en bon train près de la princesse.

Maffio. Elle me dit toujours non.

Gubetta. Dans la bouche d’une femme non n’est que le frère aîné de oui.

Jeppo, survenant, à Maffio. Comment trouves-tu madame la princesse Negroni?

Maffio. Adorable. Entre nous, elle commence à m’égratigner furieusement le cœur.

Jeppo. Et son souper?

Maffio. Une orgie parfaite.
Jeppo. La princesse est veuve.

Maffio. On le voit bien à sa gaieté!

Jeppo. J’espère que tu ne te défies plus de son souper?

Maffio. Moi! Comment donc! J’étais fou.

Jeppo, à Gubetta. Monsieur De Belverana, vous ne croiriez pas que Maffio avait peur de venir souper chez la princesse?

Gubetta. Peur? -pourquoi?

Jeppo. Parce que le palais Negroni touche au palais Borgia.

Gubetta. Au diable les Borgia! -et buvons!

Jeppo, bas à Maffio. Ce que j'aime dans ce Belverana, c'est qu'il n'aime pas les Borgia.

Maffio, bas. En effet, il ne manque jamais une occasion de les envoyer au diable avec une grâce toute particulière. Cependant, mon cher Jeppo…

Jeppo. Eh bien!

Maffio. Je l'observe depuis le commencement du souper, ce prétendu espagnol. Il n'a encore bu que de l'eau.

Jeppo. Voilà tes soupçons qui te reprennent, mon bon ami Maffio. Tu as le vin étrangement monotone.

Maffio. Peut-être as-tu raison. Je suis fou.

Gubetta, revenant et regardant Maffio de la tête aux pieds. Savez-vous, Monsieur Maffio, que vous êtes taillé pour vivre quatre-vingt-dix-ans, et que vous ressemblez à un mien grand-père, qui a vécu cet âge, et qui s'appelait comme moi Gil-Basilio-Fernan-Ireneo-Felipe-Frasco-Frasquito comte de Belverana?

Jeppo, bas à Maffio. J'espère que tu ne doutes plus de sa qualité d'espagnol. Il a au moins vingt noms de baptême. — quelle litanie, Monsieur De Belverana!

Gubetta. Hélas! Nos parens ont coutume de nous donner plus de noms à notre baptême que d'écus à notre mariage. Mais qu'ont-ils donc à rire là bas?

à part. — il faut pourtant que les femmes aient un prétexte pour s’en aller. Comment faire?

Il retourne s’asseoir à table.
Oloferno, buvant. Par Hercule! Messieurs! Je n’ai jamais passé soirée plus délicieuse. Mesdames, goûtez de ce vin. Il est plus doux que le vin de Lacryma-Christi, et plus ardent que le vin de Chypre. C’est du vin de Syracuse, messeigneurs!

Gubetta, mangeant. Oloferno est ivre, à ce qu’il paraît.

Oloferno. Mesdames, il faut que je vous dise quelques vers que je viens de faire. Je voudrais être plus poète que je ne le suis pour célébrer d’aussi admirables femmes.

Gubetta. Et moi je voudrais être plus riche que je n’ai l’honneur de l’être pour en donner de pareils à mes amis.

Oloferno. Rien n’est si doux que de chanter une belle femme et un bon repas.

Gubetta. Si ce n’est d’embrasser l’une et de manger l’autre.

Oloferno. Oui, je voudrais être poète. Je voudrais pouvoir m’élever au ciel. Je voudrais avoir deux ailes…

Gubetta. De faisan dans mon assiette.

Oloferno. Je vais pourtant vous dire mon sonnet.

Gubetta. Par le diable, monsieur le marquis Oloferno Vitellozzo! Je vous dispense de nous dire votre sonnet. Laissez-nous boire!

Oloferno. Vous me dispensez de vous dire mon sonnet?

Gubetta. Comme je dispense les chiens de me mordre, le pape de me bénir, et les passans de me jeter des pierres.

Oloferno. Tête-dieu! Vous m’insultez, je crois, monsieur le petit espagnol.

Gubetta. Je ne vous insulte pas, grand colosse d’italien que vous êtes. Je refuse mon attention à votre sonnet. Rien de plus. Mon gosier a plus soif de vin de Chypre que mes oreilles de poésie.

Oloferno. Vos oreilles, monsieur le castillan rapé, je vous les clouerai sur les talons!

Gubetta. Vous êtes un absurde belître! Fi! A-t-on jamais vu lourdaud pareil? S’enivrer de vin de Syracuse, et avoir l’air de s’être soûlé avec de la bière!

Oloferno. Savez-vous bien que je vous couperai en quatre, par la mort-dieu!

Gubetta, tout en découpant un faisan. Je ne vous en dirai pas autant. Je ne découpe pas d’aussi grosses volailles que vous. -mesdames, vous offrirai-je de ce faisan?

Oloferno, se jetant sur un couteau. Pardieu! J’éventrerai ce faquin, fût-il plus gentilhomme que l’empereur!
Les Femmes, se levant de table.

Ciel! Ils vont se battre!

Les Hommes. Tout beau, Oloferno!

Ils désarment Oloferno qui veut se jeter sur Gubetta. Pendant ce temps-là, les femmes disparaissent par la porte latérale.

Oloferno, se débattant. Corps-dieu!

Gubetta. Vous rimez si richement en dieu, mon cher poète, que vous avez mis ces dames en fuite. Vous êtes un fier maladroit.

Jeppo. C’est vrai, cela. Que diable sont-elles devenues?

Maffio. Elles ont eu peur. Couteau qui luit, femme qui fuit.

Ascanio. Bah! Elles vont revenir.

Oloferno, menaçant Gubetta. Je te retrouverai demain, mon petit Belverana d démon!

Gubetta. Demain, tant qu'il vous plaira!

Oloferno va se rasseoir en chancelant avec dépit.

Gubetta éclate de rire. — cet imbécille! Mettre en déroute les plus jolies femmes de Ferrare avec un couteau emmanché dans un sonnet! Se fâcher à propos de vers! Je le crois bien qu'il a des ailes. Ce n'est pas un homme, c'est un oison. Cela perche, cela doit dormir sur une patte, cet Oloferno-là!

Jeppo. Là là, faites la paix, messieurs. Vous vous couperez galamment la gorge demain matin. Par Jupiter, vous vous battrez du moins en gentilshommes, avec des épées, et non avec des couteaux.

Ascanio. à propos, au fait, qu'avons-nous donc fait de nos épées?

Don Apostolo. Vous oubliez qu'on nous les a fait quitter dans l'antichambre.

Gubetta. Et la précaution était bonne, car autrement nous nous serions battus devant les dames; ce dont rougiraient des flamands de Flandre, ivres de tabac!

Gennaro. Bonne précaution, en effet!

Maffio. Pardieu, mon frère Gennaro! Voilà la première parole que tu dis depuis le commencement du souper, et tu ne bois pas! Est-ce que tu songes à Lucrèce Borgia? Gennaro! Tu as décidément quelque amourette avec elle! Ne dis pas non.
Gennaro. Verse-moi à boire, Maffio! Je n'abandonne pas plus mes amis à table qu'au feu.

Un Page Noir, deux flacons à la main. Messeigneurs, du vin de Chypre ou du vin de Syracuse?

Maffio. Du vin de Syracuse. C’est le meilleur. Le page noir remplit tous les verres.

Jeppo. La peste soit d’Oloferno! Est-ce que ces dames ne vont pas revenir?

Il va successivement aux deux portes.

— les portes sont fermées en dehors, messieurs!

Maffio. N’allez-vous pas avoir peur à votre tour, Jeppo! Elles ne veulent pas que nous les poursuivions. C’est tout simple.

Gennaro. Buvons, messeigneurs.

Ils choquent leurs verres.

Maffio. à ta santé, Gennaro! Et puisses-tu bientôt retrouver ta mère!

Gennaro. Que Dieu t’entende! Tous boivent, excepté Gubetta qui jette son vin par-dessus son épaule.

Maffio, bas à Jeppo.

Pour le coup, Jeppo, je l’ai bien vu.

Jeppo, bas. Quoi?

Maffio. L’espagnol n’a pas bu;

jeppo; eh bien?

Maffio. Il a jeté son vin par-dessus son épaule.

Jeppo. Il est ivre, et toi aussi.

Maffio. C’est possible.

Gubetta. Une chanson à boire, messieurs! Je vais vous chanter une chanson à boire qui vaudra mieux que le sonnet du marquis Oloferno. Je jure par le bon vieux crâne de mon père que ce n’est pas moi qui ai fait cette chanson, attendu que je ne suis pas poète, et que je n’ai point l’esprit assez galant pour faire se becqueter deux rimes au bout d’une idée. Voici ma chanson. Elle est adressée à monsieur saint Pierre, célèbre portier du paradis, et elle a pour sujet cette pensée délicate que le ciel du bon Dieu appartient aux buveurs.
Jeppo, bas à Maffio. Il est plus qu’ivre, il est ivrogne.

Tous, excepté Gennaro. La chanson! La chanson!

Gubetta, chantant. Saint Pierre, ouvre ta porte au buveur qui t’apporte une voix pleine et forte pour chanter: domino!

Tous en chœur, excepté Gennaro. (…) ils choquent leurs verres en riant aux éclats. Tout à coup on entend des voix éloignées qui chantent sur un ton lugubre.

Jeppo, riant de plus belle. écoutez, messieurs! -corbacque! Pendant que nous chantons à boire, l’écho chante vêpres.

Tous. écoutons.

Voix au-dehors, un peu plus rapprochées. (…) tous éclatent de rire.

Jeppo. Du plain-chant tout pur.

Maffio. Quelque procession qui passe.

Gennaro. à minuit! C’est un peu tard.

Jeppo. Bah! Continuez, Monsieur De Belverana.

Voix au dehors, qui se rapprochent de plus en plus. (…)

tous rient de plus en plus fort.

Jeppo. Sont-ils braillards, ces moines!

Maffio. Regarde donc, Gennaro. Les lampes s’éteignent ici. Nous voici tout à l’heure dans l’obscurité. Les lampes pâlissent en effet, comme n’ayant plus d’huile.

Voix au-dehors, plus près. (…)

Gennaro. Il me semble que les voix se rapprochent.

Jeppo. La procession me fait l’effet d’être en ce moment sous nos fenêtres.

Maffio. Ce sont les prières des morts.

Ascanio. C’est quelque enterrement.

Jeppo. Buvons à la santé de celui qu’on va enterrer.

Gubetta. Savez-vous s’il n’y en a pas plusieurs?
Jeppo. Hé bien, à la santé de tous?

Apostolo, à Gubetta. Bravo! -et continuons de notre côté notre invocation à saint Pierre.

Gubetta. Parlez donc plus poliment. On dit: à monsieur saint Pierre, honorable huissier et guichetier arenté du paradis.

Il chante.

Saint Pierre, ouvre ta porte au buveur qui t’apporte une voix pleine et forte pour chanter: domino!

Tous. gloria domino!

Gubetta. Au buveur, joyeux chantre, qui porte un si gros ventre qu’on doute, lorsqu’il entre, s’il est homme ou tonneau.

Tous, en choquant leurs verres avec des éclats de rire.

La grande porte du fond s’ouvre silencieusement dans toute sa largeur. On voit au-dehors une vaste salle tapissée en noir, éclairée de quelques flambeaux, avec une grande croix d’argent au fond. Une longue file de pénitens blancs et noirs dont on ne voit que les yeux par les trous de leurs cagoules, croix en tête et torche en main, entre par la grande porte en chantant d’un accent sinistre et d’une voix haute. Puis ils viennent se ranger en silence des deux côtés de la salle, et y restent immobiles comme des statues, pendant que les jeunes gentilshommes les regardent avec stupeur.

Maffio. Qu’est-ce que cela veut dire?

Jeppo, s’efforçant de rire. C’est une plaisanterie. Je gage mon cheval contre un pourceau, et mon nom de Liveretto contre le nom de Borgia, que ce sont nos charmantes comtesses qui se sont déguisées de cette façon pour nous éprouver, et que si nous levons une de ces cagoules au hasard, nous trouverons dessous la figure fraîche et malicieuse d’une jolie femme. — voyez plutôt.

Il va soulever en riant un des capuchons, et il reste pétrifié en voyant dessous le visage livide d’un moine qui demeure immobile, la torche à la main et les yeux baissés. Il laisse tomber le capuchon et recule. — ceci commence à devenir étrange!

Maffio. Je ne sais pourquoi mon sang se fige dans mes veines.

Les Pénitents, chantant d’une voix éclatante. (…)

Jeppo. Quel piége affreux! Nos épées, nos épées! Ah! çà, messieurs, nous sommes chez le démon ici.

ACTE 3 SCENE 2

Les mêmes, dona Lucrezia.

Dona Lucrezia, paraissant tout à coup, vêtue de noir, au seuil de la porte. Vous êtes chez moi!

Tous, excepté Gennaro qui observe tout dans un coin du théâtre où dona Lucrezia ne le voit pas. Lucrèce Borgia!

Dona Lucrezia. Il y a quelques jours, tous, les mêmes qui êtes ici, vous disiez ce nom avec triomphe. Vous le dites aujourd’hui avec épouvate. Oui, vous pouvez me regarder avec vos yeux fixes de terreur. C’est bien moi, messieurs. Je viens vous annoncer une nouvelle, c’est que vous êtes tous empoisonnés, messeigneurs, et qu’il n’y en a pas un de vous qui ait encore une heure à vivre. Ne bougez pas. La salle d’à côté est pleine de piques. à mon tour maintenant, à moi de parler haut et de vous écraser la tête du talon! Jeppo Liveretto, va rejoindre ton oncle Vitelli que j’ai fait poignarder dans les caves du Vatican! Ascanio Petrucci, va retrouver ton cousin Pandolfo, que j’ai assassiné pour lui voler sa ville! Oloferno Vitellozzo, ton oncle t’attend, tu sais bien, Iago D’Appiani, que j’ai empoisonné dans une fête! Maffio Orsini, va parler de moi dans l’autre monde à ton frère de Gravina, que j’ai fait étrangler dans son sommeil! Apostolo Gazella, j’ai fait décapiter ton père Francisco Gazella, j’ai fait égorger ton cousin Alphonse D’Aragon, dis-tu; va les rejoindre! -sur mon âme! Vous m’avez donné un bal à Venise, je vous rends un souper à Ferrare. Fête pour fête, messeigneurs!

Jeppo. Voilà un rude réveil, Maffio!

Maffio. Songeons à Dieu!

Dona Lucrezia. Ah! Mes jeunes amis du carnaval dernier! Vous ne vous attendiez pas à cela? Pardieu! Il me semble que je me venge. Qu’en dites-vous, messieurs? Qui est-ce qui se connaît en vengeance ici? Ceci n’est point mal, je crois! -hein? Qu’en pensez-vous? Pour une femme!

Aux moines. — mes pères, emmenez ces gentilshommes dans la salle voisine qui est préparée, confessez-les, et profitez du peu d’instans qui leur restent pour sauver ce qui peut être encore sauvé de chacun d’eux. — messieurs, que ceux d’entre vous qui ont des âmes y avisent. Soyez tanquilles. Elles sont en bonnes mains. Ces dignes pères sont des moines réguliers de saint-Sixte, auxquels notre saint-père le pape a permis de m’assister dans des occasions comme celle-ci. -et si j’ai eu soin de vos âmes, j’ai eu soin aussi de vos corps. Tenez?

Aux moines qui sont devant la porte du fond. — rangez-vous un peu, mes pères, que ces messieurs voient.
Les moines s’écartent et laissent voir cinq cercueils couverts chacun d’un drap noir rangé devant la porte. — le nombre y est. Il y en a bien cinq. — ah! Jeunes gens! Vous arrachez les entrailles à une malheureuse femme, et vous croyez qu’elle ne se vengera pas! Voici le tien, Jeppo. Maffio, voici le tien. Oloferno, Apostolo, Ascanio, voici les vôtres!

Gennaro, qu’elle n’a pas vu jusqu’alors, faisant un pas. Il en faut un sixième, madame!

Dona Lucrezia. Ciel! Gennaro!

Gennaro. Lui-même.

Dona Lucrezia. Que tout le monde sorte d’ici. -qu’on nous laisse seuls. -Gubetta, quoi qu’il arrive, quoi qu’on puisse entendre du dehors de ce qui va se passer ici, que personne n’y entre!

Gubetta. Il suffit.

Les moines ressortent processionnellement, emmenant avec eux dans leurs files les cinq seigneurs chancelans et éperdus.

ACTE 3 SCENE 3

Gennaro, dona Lucrezia.

Il y a à peine quelques lampes mourantes dans l'appartement. Les portes sont refermées. Dona Lucrezia et Gennaro, restés seuls, s'entre-regardent quelques instans en silence, comme ne sachant par où commencer.

Dona Lucrezia, se parlant à elle-même. C'est Gennaro!

Chant Des Moines au-dehors. (…)

Dona Lucrezia. Encore vous, Gennaro! Toujours vous sous tous les coups que je frappe! Dieu du ciel! Comment vous êtes-vous mêlé à ceci?

Gennaro. Je me doutais de tout.

Dona Lucrezia. Vous êtes empoisonné encore une fois. Vous allez mourir!

Gennaro. Si je veux. -j'ai le contre-poison.

Dona Lucrezia. Ah oui! Dieu soit loué!

Gennaro. Un mot, madame. Vous êtes experte en ces matières. Y a-t-il assez d'élixir dans cette fiole pour sauver les gentilshommes que vos moines viennent d'entraîner dans ce tombeau?

Dona Lucrezia, examinant la fiole. Il y en a à peine assez pour vous, Gennaro!

Gennaro. Vous ne pouvez pas en avoir d'autre sur-le-champ?

Dona Lucrezia. Je vous ai donné tout ce que j'avais.

Gennaro. C'est bien.

Dona Lucrezia. Que faites-vous, Gennaro? Dépêchez-vous donc. Ne jouez pas avec des choses si terribles. On n'a jamais assez tôt bu un contre-poison. Buvez, au nom du ciel! Mon dieu! Quelle imprudence vous avez faite là! Mettez votre vie en sûreté. Je vous ferai sortir du palais par une porte dérobée que je connais. Tout peut se réparer encore. Il est nuit. Des chevaux seront bientôt sellés. Demain matin vous serez loin de Ferrare. N'est-ce pas qu'il s'y fait des choses qui vous épouvantent? Buvez, et partons. Il faut vivre! Il faut vous sauver!

Gennaro, prenant un couteau sur la table. C'est-à-dire que vous allez mourir, madame!
Dona Lucrezia. Comment! Que dites-vous?

Gennaro. Je dis que vous venez d'empoisonner traîtreusement cinq gentilshommes, mes amis, mes meilleurs amis, par le ciel! Et parmi eux, Maffio Orsini, mon frère d'armes, qui m'avait sauvé la vie à Vicence, et avec qui toute injure et toute vengeance m'est commune. Je dis que c'est une action infâme que vous avez faite là, qu'il faut que je venge Maffio et les autres, et que vous allez mourir!

Dona Lucrezia. Terre et cieux!

Gennaro. Faites votre prière, et faites-la courte, madame. Je suis empoisonné. Je n'ai pas le temps d'attendre.

Dona Lucrezia. Bah! Cela ne se peut. Ah bien oui, Gennaro me tuer! Est-ce que cela est possible?

Gennaro. C'est la réalité pure, madame, et je jure dieu qu'à votre place je me mettrais à prier en silence, à mains jointes et à deux genoux. -tenez, voici un fauteuil qui est bon pour cela.

Dona Lucrezia. Non. Je vous dis que c'est impossible. Non, parmi les plus terribles idées qui me traversent l'esprit, jamais celle-ci ne me serait venue. -hé bien, hé bien! Vous levez le couteau! Attendez! Gennaro! J'ai quelque chose à vous dire!

Gennaro. Vite.

Dona Lucrezia. Jette ton couteau, malheureux! Jette-le, te dis-je! Si tu savais… -Gennaro! Sais-tu qui tu es? Sais-tu qui je suis? Tu ignores combien je te tiens de près! Faut-il tout lui dire? Le même sang coule dans nos veines, Gennaro! Tu as eu pour père Jean Borgia, duc de Gandia!

Gennaro. Votre frère! Ah! Vous êtes ma tante! Ah! Madame!

Dona Lucrezia, à part. Sa tante!

Gennaro. Ah! Je suis votre neveu! Ah! C'est ma mère, cette infortunée duchesse de Gandia, que tous les Borgia ont rendue si malheureuse! Madame Lucrèce, ma mère me parle de vous dans ses lettres. Vous êtes du nombre de ces parens dénaturés dont elle m'entretient avec horreur, et qui ont tué mon père, et qui ont noyé sa destinée, à elle, de larmes et de sang. Ah! J'ai de plus mon père à venger, ma mère à sauver de vous maintenant! Ah! Vous êtes ma tante! Je suis un Borgia! Oh! Cela me rend fou! -écoutez-moi, dona Lucrezia Borgia, vous avez vécu long-temps, et vous êtes si couverte d'attentats que vous devez en être devenue odieuse et abominable à vous-même. Vous êtes fatiguée de vivre, sans nul doute, n'est-ce pas? Eh bien, il faut en finir. Dans les familles comme les nôtres, où le crime est héréditaire et se transmet de père en fils comme le nom, il arrive toujours que cette fatalité se clôt par un meurtre, qui est d'ordinaire un meurtre de famille, dernier crime qui lave tous les autres. Un gentilhomme n'a jamais été blâmé pour avoir coupé une mauvaise branche à l'arbre de sa maison. L'espagnol Mudarra a tué son oncle Rodrigue De Lara pour moins que vous n'avez fait. Cet espagnol a été loué de tous pour avoir tué son oncle, entendez-vous, ma tante? -allons! En voilà assez de dit là dessus! Recommandez votre âme à Dieu, si vous croyez à Dieu et à votre âme.

Dona Lucrezia. Gennaro! Par pitié pour toi! Tu es innocent encore! Ne commets pas ce crime!

Gennaro. Un crime! Oh! Ma tête s'égare et se bouleverse! Sera-ce un crime? Eh bien! Quand je commettrais un crime! Pardieu! Je suis un Borgia, moi! à genoux, vous dis-je! Ma tante! à genoux!

Dona Lucrezia. Dis-tu en effet ce que tu penses, mon Gennaro? Est-ce ainsi que tu paies mon amour pour toi?

Gennaro. Amour!…

Dona Lucrezia. C’est impossible. Je veux te sauver de toi-même. Je vais appeler. Je vais crier.

Gennaro. Vous n’ouvrirez point cette porte. Vous ne ferez point un pas. Et quant à vos cris, ils ne peuvent vous sauver. Ne venez-vous pas d’ordonner vous-même tout à l’heure que personne n’entrât, quoi qu’on pût entendre au dehors de ce qui va se passer ici?

Dona Lucrezia. Mais c’est lâche ce que vous faites là, Gennaro! Tuer une femme, une femme sans défense! Oh! Vous avez de plus nobles sentimens que cela dans l’âme! écoute-moi, tu me tueras après si tu veux; je ne tiens pas à la vie, mais il faut bien que ma poitrine déborde, elle est pleine d’angoisses de la manière dont tu m’as traitée jusqu’à présent. Tu es jeune, enfant, et la jeunesse est toujours trop sévère. Oh! Si je dois mourir, je ne veux pas mourir de ta main. Cela n’est pas possible, vois-tu, que je meure de ta main. Tu ne sais pas toi-même à quel point cela serait horrible. D’ailleurs, Gennaro, mon heure n’est pas encore venue. C’est vrai, j’ai commis bien des actions mauvaises, je suis une grande criminelle; et c’est parce que je suis une grande criminelle qu’il faut me laisser le temps de me reconnaître et de me repentir. Il le faut absolument, entends-tu, Gennaro?

Gennaro. Vous êtes ma tante. Vous êtes la sœur de mon père. Qu’avez-vous fait de ma mère, Madame Lucrèce Borgia?

Dona Lucrezia. Attends, attends! Mon dieu, je ne puis tout dire. Et puis, si je te disais tout, je ne ferais peut-être que redoubler ton horreur et ton mépris pour moi! écoute-moi encore un instant. Oh! Que je voudrais bien que tu me reçusses repentante à tes pieds! Tu me feras grâce de la vie, n’est-ce pas? Eh bien, veux-tu que je prenne le voile? Veux-tu que je m’enferme dans un cloître, dis? Voyons, si l’on te disait: cette malheureuse femme s’est fait raser la tête, elle couche dans la cendre, elle creuse sa fosse de ses mains, elle prie Dieu nuit et jour, non pour elle, qui en aurait besoin cependant, mais pour toi, qui peux t’en passer; elle fait tout cela, cette femme, pour que tu abaisses un jour sur sa tête un regard de miséricorde, pour que tu laisses tomber une larme sur toutes les plaies vives de son cœur et de son âme, pour que tu ne lui dises plus comme tu viens de le faire avec cette voix plus sévère que celle du jugement dernier: vous êtes Lucrèce Borgia! Si l’on te disait cela, Gennaro, est-ce que tu aurais le coeur de la repousser! Oh! Grâce! Ne me tue pas, mon Gennaro! Vivons tous les deux, toi pour me pardonner, moi, pour me repentir! Aie quelque compassion de moi! Enfin cela ne sert à rien de traiter sans miséricorde une pauvre misérable femme qui ne demande qu’un peu de pitié!

— un peu de pitié! Grâce de la vie! -et puis, vois-tu bien, mon Gennaro, je te le dis pour toi, ce serait vraiment lâche ce que tu ferais là, ce serait un crime affreux, un assassinat! Un homme tuer une femme! Un homme qui est le plus fort! Oh! Tu ne voudras pas! Tu ne voudras pas!

Gennaro, ébranlé. Madame…

Dona Lucrezia. Oh! Je le vois bien, j’ai ma grâce. Cela se lit dans tes yeux. Oh! Laisse-moi pleurer à tes pieds!

Une Voix au-dehors. Gennaro!

Gennaro. Qui m’appelle?

La Voix. Mon frère Gennaro!

Gennaro. C’est Maffio!

La Voix. Gennaro! Je meurs! Venge-moi!

Gennaro, relevant le couteau. C’est dit. Je n’écoute plus rien. Vous l’entendez, madame, il faut mourir!

Dona Lucrezia, se débattant et lui retenant le bras. Grâce! Grâce! Encore un mot!

Gennaro. Non!

Dona Lucrezia. Pardon! écoute-moi!

Gennaro. Non!

Dona Lucrezia. Au nom du ciel!

Gennaro. Non!

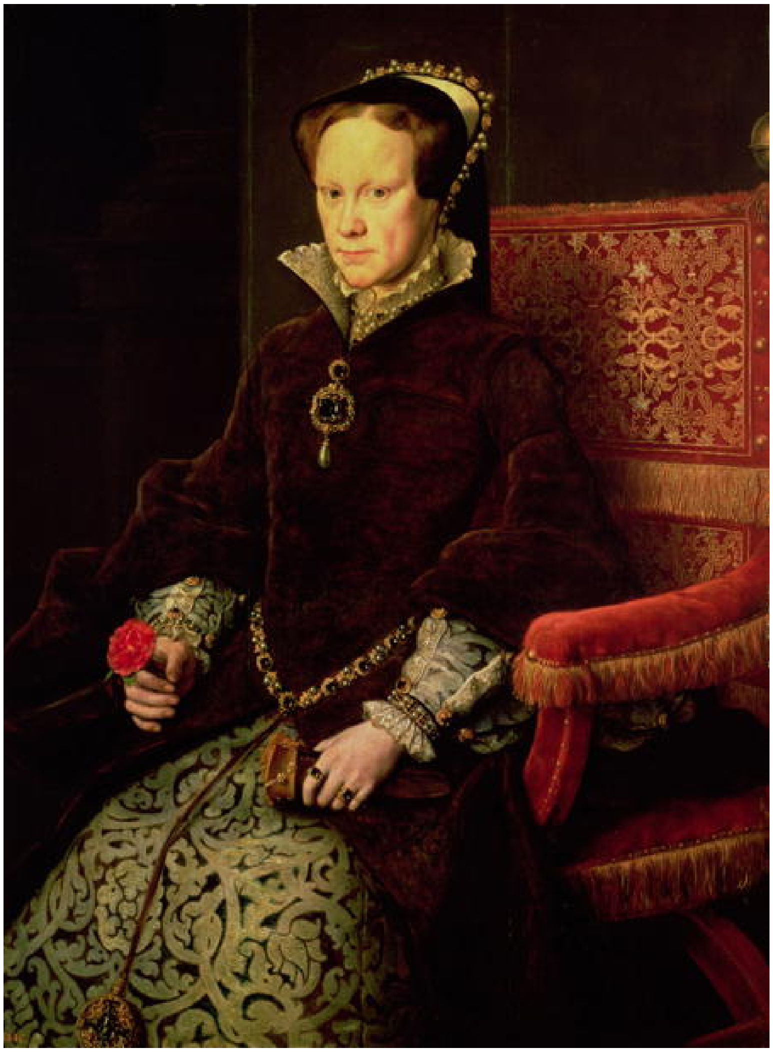
Il la frappe.

Dona Lucrezia. Ah!… tu m’as tuée! -Gennaro! Je suis ta mère!

Fin.

MARIE TUDOR

The first performance of this drama in prose took place at the Théâtre de la Porte-Saint-Martin on November 6, 1833.



La Reine Marie, 1554, by Antonio Moro

TABLE DES MATIERES

AVERTISSEMENT
JOURNEE 1 SCENE 1
JOURNEE 1 SCENE 2
JOURNEE 1 SCENE 3
JOURNEE 1 SCENE 4
JOURNEE 1 SCENE 5
JOURNEE 1 SCENE 6
JOURNEE 1 SCENE 7
JOURNEE 1 SCENE 8
JOURNEE 1 SCENE 9
JOURNEE 2 SCENE 1
JOURNEE 2 SCENE 2
JOURNEE 2 SCENE 3
JOURNEE 2 SCENE 4
JOURNEE 2 SCENE 5
JOURNEE 2 SCENE 6
JOURNEE 2 SCENE 7
JOURNEE 2 SCENE 8
JOURNEE 2 SCENE 9
JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 1
JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 2
JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 3
JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 4
JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 5
JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 6
JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 7
JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 8
JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 9
JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 10
JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 2 SCENE 1
JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 2 SCENE 2

AVERTISSEMENT

Il y a deux manières de passionner la foule au théâtre: par le grand et par le vrai. Le grand prend les masses, le vrai saisit l’ individu.

Le but du poète dramatique, quel que soit d’ ailleurs l’ ensemble de ses idées sur l’ art, doit donc toujours être, avant tout, de chercher le grand, comme Corneille, ou le vrai, comme Molière; ou, mieux encore, et c’ est ici le plus haut sommet où puisse monter le génie, d’ atteindre tout à la fois le grand et le vrai, le grand dans le vrai, le vrai dans le grand, comme Shakspeare.

Car, remarquons-le en passant, il a été donné à Shakspeare, et c’ est ce qui fait la souveraineté de son génie, de concilier, d’ unir, d’ amalgamer sans cesse dans son œuvre ces deux qualités, la vérité et la grandeur, qualités presque opposées, ou tout au moins tellement distinctes, que le défaut de chacune d’ elles constitue le contraire de l’ autre. L’ écueil du vrai, c’ est le petit, l’ écueil du grand, c’ est le faux. Dans tous les ouvrages de Shakspeare, il y a du grand qui est vrai, et du vrai qui est grand. Au centre de toutes ses créations, on retrouve le point d’ intersection de la grandeur et de la vérité; et là où les choses grandes et les choses vraies se croisent, l’ art est complet. Shakspeare, comme Michel-Ange, semble avoir été créé pour résoudre ce problème étrange dont le simple énoncé paraît absurde: -rester toujours dans la nature, tout en en sortant quelquefois. -Shakspeare exagère les proportions, mais il maintient les rapports. Admirable toute-puissance du poète! Il fait des choses plus hautes que nous qui vivent comme nous. Hamlet, par exemple, est aussi vrai qu’ aucun de nous, et plus grand. Hamlet est colossal, et pourtant réel. C’ est que Hamlet, ce n’ est pas vous, ce n’ est pas moi, c’ est nous tous. Hamlet, ce n’ est pas un homme, c’ est l’ homme.

Dégager perpétuellement le grand à travers le vrai, le vrai à travers le grand, tel est donc, selon l’ auteur de ce drame, et en maintenant, du reste, toutes les autres idées qu’ il a pu développer ailleurs sur ces matières, tel est le but du poète au théâtre. Et ces deux mots, grand et vrai, renferment tout. La vérité contient la moralité, le grand contient le beau.

Ce but, on ne lui supposera pas la présomption de croire qu’ il l’ a jamais atteint, ou même qu’ il pourra jamais l’ atteindre; mais on lui permettra de se rendre à lui-même publiquement ce témoignage, qu’ il n’ en a jamais cherché d’ autre au théâtre jusqu’ à ce jour. Le nouveau drame qu’ il vient de faire représenter est un effort de plus vers ce but rayonnant. Quelle est, en effet, la pensée qu’ il a tenté de réaliser dans Marie Tudor? La voici. Une reine qui soit une femme. Grande comme reine. Vraie comme femme.

Il l’ a déjà dit ailleurs, le drame comme il le sent, le drame comme il voudrait le voir créer par un homme de génie, le drame selon le dix-neuvième siècle, ce n’ est pas la tragi-comédie hautaine, démesurée, espagnole et sublime de Corneille; ce n’ est pas la tragédie abstraite, amoureuse, idéale et divinement élégiaque de Racine; ce n’ est pas la comédie profonde, sagace, pénétrante, mais trop impitoyablement ironique, de Molière; ce n’ est pas la tragédie à intention philosophique de Voltaire; ce n’ est pas la comédie à action révolutionnaire de Beaumarchais; ce n’ est pas plus que tout cela, mais c’ est tout cela à la fois; ou, pour mieux dire, ce n’ est rien de tout cela. Ce n’ est pas, comme chez ces grands hommes, un seul côté des choses systématiquement et perpétuellement mis en lumière, c’ est tout regardé à la fois sous toutes les faces. S’ il y avait un homme aujourd’ hui qui pût réaliser le drame comme nous le comprenons, ce drame, ce serait le cœur humain, la tête humaine, la passion humaine, la volonté humaine; ce serait le passé ressuscité au profit du présent; ce serait l’ histoire que nos pères ont faite confrontée avec l’ histoire que nous faisons; ce serait le mélange sur la scène de tout ce qui est mêlé dans la vie; ce serait une émeute là et une causerie d’ amour ici, et dans la causerie d’ amour une leçon pour le peuple, et dans l’ émeute un cri pour le cœur; ce serait le rire; ce serait les larmes; ce serait le bien, le mal, le haut, le bas, la fatalité, la providence, le génie, le hasard, la société, le monde, la nature, la vie; et au-dessus de tout cela on sentirait planer quelque chose de grand!

à ce drame, qui serait pour la foule un perpétuel enseignement, tout serait permis, parce qu’ il serait dans son essence de n’ abuser de rien. Il aurait pour lui une telle notoriété de loyauté, d’ élévation, d’ utilité et de bonne conscience, qu’ on ne l’ accuserait jamais de chercher l’ effet et le fracas, là où il n’ aurait cherché qu’ une moralité et une leçon. Il pourrait mener François Ier chez Maguelonne sans être suspect; il pourrait, sans alarmer les plus sévères, faire jaillir du cœur de Didier la pitié pour Marion; il pourrait, sans qu’ on le taxât d’ emphase et d’ exagération comme l’ auteur de Marie Tudor, poser largement sur la scène, dans toute sa réalité terrible, ce formidable triangle qui apparaît si souvent dans l’ histoire: une reine, un favori, un bourreau.

à l’ homme qui créera ce drame il faudra deux qualités: conscience et génie. L’ auteur qui parle ici n’ a que la première, il le sait. Il n’ en continuera pas moins ce qu’ il a commencé, en désirant que d’ autres fassent mieux que lui. Aujourd’ hui, un immense public, de plus en plus intelligent, sympathise avec toutes les tentatives sérieuses de l’ art; aujourd’ hui, tout ce qu’ il y a d’ élevé dans la critique aide et encourage le poète. Que le poète vienne donc! Quant à l’ auteur de ce drame, sûr de l’ avenir qui est au progrès, certain qu’ à défaut de talent sa persévérance lui sera comptée un jour, il attache un regard serein, confiant et tranquille sur la foule qui, chaque soir, entoure cette œuvre si incomplète de tant de curiosité, d’ anxiété et d’ attention. En présence de cette foule, il sent la responsabilité qui pèse sur lui, et il l’ accepte avec calme. Jamais, dans ses travaux, il ne perd un seul instant de vue le peuple que le théâtre civilise, l’ histoire que le théâtre explique, le cœur humain que le théâtre conseille. Demain il quittera l’ œuvre faite pour l’ œuvre à faire; il sortira de cette foule pour rentrer dans sa solitude; solitude profonde, où ne parvient aucune mauvaise influence du monde extérieur, où la jeunesse, son amie, vient quelquefois lui serrer la main, où il est seul avec sa pensée, son indépendance et sa volonté. Plus que jamais, sa solitude lui sera chère; car ce n’ est que dans la solitude qu’ on peut travailler pour la foule. Plus que jamais, il tiendra son esprit, son œuvre et sa pensée éloignés de toute coterie; car il connaît quelque chose de plus grand que les coteries, ce sont les partis; quelque chose de plus grand que les partis, c’ est le peuple; quelque chose de plus grand que le peuple, c’ est l’ humanité.

17 novembre 1833.

JOURNEE 1 SCENE 1

Le bord de la Tamise. Une grève déserte. Un vieux parapet en ruine cache le bord de l’ eau. à droite, une maison de pauvre apparence. à l’ angle de cette maison, une statuette de la vierge, au pied de laquelle une étoupe brûle dans un treillis de fer. Au fond, au-delà de la Tamise, Londres. On distingue deux hauts édifices, la tour de Londres et Westminster. -le jour commence à baisser.

Plusieurs hommes groupés çà et là sur la grève, parmi lesquels Simon Renard; John Bridges, Baron Chandos; Robert Clinton, Baron Clinton; Anthony Brown, Vicomte De Montagu.

Lord Chandos
vous avez raison, mylord. Il faut que ce damné italien ait ensorcelé la reine. La reine ne peut plus se passer de lui. Elle ne vit que par lui, elle n’ a de joie qu’ en lui, elle n’ écoute que lui. Si elle est un jour sans le voir, ses yeux deviennent languissans, comme du temps où elle aimait le Cardinal Polus, vous savez?
Simon Renard
très-amoureuse, c’ est vrai, et par conséquent très-jalouse.
Lord Chandos
l’ italien l’ a ensorcelée!
Lord Montagu
au fait, on dit que ceux de sa nation ont des philtres pour cela.
Lord Clinton
les espagnols sont habiles aux poisons qui font mourir, les italiens aux poisons qui font aimer.
Le Fabiani alors est tout à la fois espagnol et italien. La reine est amoureuse et malade. Il lui a fait boire des deux.

Lord Montagu

ah ça, en réalité, est-il espagnol ou italien?

Lord Chandos

il paraît certain qu' il est né en Italie, dans la Capitanate, et qu' il a été élevé en Espagne. Il se prétend allié à une grande famille espagnole. Lord Clinton sait cela sur le bout du doigt.

Lord Clinton

un aventurier. Ni espagnol, ni italien. Encore moins anglais, dieu merci! Ces hommes qui ne sont d' aucun pays n' ont point de pitié pour les pays quand ils sont puissans!

Lord Montagu

ne disiez-vous pas la reine malade, Chandos? Cela ne l' empêche pas de mener vie joyeuse avec son favori.

Lord Clinton

vie joyeuse! Vie joyeuse! Pendant que la reine rit, le peuple pleure. Et le favori est gorgé. Il mange de l' argent et boit de l' or, cet homme! La reine lui a donné les biens de Lord Talbot, du grand Lord Talbot! La reine l' a fait comte de Clanbrassil et baron de Dinasmonddy, ce Fabiano Fabiani qui se dit de la famille espagnole de Penalver, et qui en a menti! Il est pair d' Angleterre comme vous, Montagu, comme vous, Chandos, comme Stanley, comme Norfolk, comme moi, comme le roi! Il a la jarretière comme l' infant de Portugal, comme le roi de Danemarck, comme Thomas Percy, septième comte de Northumberland! Et quel tyran que ce tyran qui nous gouverne de son lit! Jamais rien de si dur n' a pesé sur l' Angleterre. J' en ai pourtant vu, moi qui suis vieux! Il y a soixante-dix potences neuves à Tyburn; les bûchers sont toujours braise et jamais cendre; la hache du bourreau est aiguisée tous les matins et ébréchée tous les soirs. Chaque jour c’ est quelque grand gentilhomme qu’ on abat. Avant-hier c’ était Blantyre, hier Northcurry, aujourd’ hui South-Reppo, demain Tyrconnel. La semaine prochaine ce sera vous, Chandos, et le mois prochain ce sera moi. Mylords! Mylords! C’ est une honte et c’ est une impiété que toutes ces bonnes têtes anglaises tombent ainsi pour le plaisir d’ on ne sait quel misérable aventurier qui n’ est même pas de ce pays! C’ est une chose affreuse et insupportable de penser qu’ un favori napolitain peut tirer autant de billots qu’ il en veut de dessous le lit de cette reine! Ils mènent tous deux joyeuse vie, dites-vous. Par le ciel! C’ est infâme! Ah! Ils mènent joyeuse vie, les amoureux, pendant que le coupe-tête à leur porte fait des veuves et des orphelins! Oh! Leur guitare italienne est trop accompagnée du bruit des chaînes! Madame la reine! Vous faites venir des chanteurs de la chapelle d’ Avignon, vous avez tous les jours dans votre palais des comédies, des théâtres, des estrades pleines de musiciens. Pardieu, madame, moins de joie chez vous, s’ il vous plaît, et moins de deuil chez nous. Moins de baladins ici, et moins de bourreaux là. Moins de tréteaux à Westminster et moins d’ échafauds à Tyburn!

Lord Montagu
prenez garde. Nous sommes loyaux sujets,
Mylord Clinton. Rien sur la reine, tout sur Fabiani.
Simon Renard, posant la main sur l’ épaule de Lord Clinton.
Patience!
Lord Clinton
patience! Cela vous est facile à dire à vous, Monsieur Simon Renard. Vous êtes bailli d’ Amont en Franche-Comté, sujet de l’ empereur et son légat à Londres. Vous représentez ici le prince d’ Espagne, futur mari de la reine. Votre personne est sacrée pour le favori. Mais nous, c' est autre chose.

— voyez-vous? Fabiani, pour vous, c' est le berger;
pour nous, c' est le boucher.
La nuit est tout-à-fait tombée.
Simon Renard
cet homme ne me gêne pas moins que vous.
Vous ne craignez que pour votre vie, je crains pour mon crédit, moi. C' est bien plus. Je ne parle pas, j' agis. J' ai moins de colère que vous, mylord, j' ai plus de haine. Je détruirai le favori.
Lord Montagu
oh! Comment faire! J' y songe tout le jour.
Simon Renard
ce n' est pas le jour que se font et se défont les favoris des reines, c' est la nuit.
Lord Chandos
celle-ci est bien noire et bien affreuse!
Simon Renard
je la trouve belle pour ce que j' en veux faire.
Lord Chandos
qu' en voulez-vous faire?
Simon Renard
vous verrez. -Mylord Chandos, quand une femme règne, le caprice règne. Alors la politique n' est plus chose de calcul, mais de hasard. On ne peut plus compter sur rien. Aujourd' hui n' amène plus logiquement demain. Les affaires ne se jouent plus aux échecs, mais aux cartes.
Lord Clinton
tout cela est fort bien, mais venons au fait.
Monsieur le bailli, quand nous aurez-vous délivrés du favori? Cela presse. On décapite demain Tyrconnel.
Simon Renard
si je rencontre cette nuit un homme comme
j' en cherche un, Tyrconnel soupera avec vous demain soir.

Lord Clinton
que voulez-vous dire? Que sera devenu Fabiani?
Simon Renard
avez-vous de bons yeux, mylord?
Lord Clinton
oui, quoique je sois vieux et que la nuit soit noire.
Simon Renard
voyez-vous Londres de l’ autre côté de l’ eau?
Lord Clinton
oui, pourquoi?
Simon Renard
regardez bien. On voit d’ ici le haut et le bas de la fortune de tout favori, Westminster et la tour de Londres.
Lord Clinton
t bien?
Simon Renard
si dieu m’ est en aide, il y a un homme qui au moment où nous parlons est encore là, - il montre Westminster.
Et qui demain à pareille heure sera ici.
Il montre la tour.
Que dieu vous soit en aide!
Lord Montagu
le peuple ne le hait pas moins que nous. Quelle fête dans Londres le jour de sa chute!
Lord Chandos
nous nous sommes mis entre vos mains, monsieur le bailli, disposez de nous. Que faut-il faire?
Simon Renard, montrant la maison près de l’ eau.
Vous voyez bien tous cette maison. C’ est la maison de Gilbert, l’ ouvrier ciseleur. Ne la perdez pas de vue. Dispersez-vous avec vos gens, mais sans trop vous écarter. Surtout ne faites rien sans moi.
Lord Chandos
c’ est dit.

Tous sortent de divers côtés.
Simon renard, resté seul.
Un homme comme celui qu’ il me faut n’ est pas facile à trouver.
Il sort. -entrent Jane et Gilbert se tenant sous le bras; ils vont du côté de la maison. Joshua Farnaby les accompagne, enveloppé d’ un manteau.

JOURNEE 1 SCENE 2

Jane, Gilbert, Joshua Farnaby.

Joshua
je vous quitte ici, mes bons amis. Il est nuit, et il faut que j' aille reprendre mon service de porte-clefs à la tour de Londres. Ah, c' est que je ne suis pas libre comme vous, moi! Voyez-vous? Un guichetier, ce n' est qu' une espèce de prisonnier.
Adieu, Jane. Adieu, Gilbert. Mon dieu, mes amis, que je suis donc heureux de vous voir heureux! Ah ça, Gilbert, à quand la noce?
Gilbert
dans huit jours, n' est-ce pas, Jane?
Joshua
sur ma foi, c' est après demain la noël. Voici le jour des souhaits et des étrennes, mais je n' ai rien à vous souhaiter. Il est impossible de désirer plus de beauté à la fiancée et plus d' amour au fiancé!
Vous êtes heureux!
Gilbert
bon Joshua! Et toi, est-ce que tu n' es pas heureux?
Joshua
ni heureux, ni malheureux. J' ai renoncé à tout, moi. Vois-tu, Gilbert,
il entr' ouvre son manteau et laisse voir un trousseau
de clefs, qui pend à sa ceinture.
Des clefs de prisons qui vous sonnent sans cesse à la ceinture, cela parle, cela vous entretient de toutes sortes de pensées philosophiques. Quand j' étais jeune, j' étais comme un autre, amoureux tout un jour, ambitieux tout un mois, fou toute l' année. C' était sous le roi Henri Viii que j' étais jeune. Un homme singulier que ce Roi Henri Viii.
Un homme qui changeait de femmes, comme une femme change de robes. Il répudia la première, il fit couper la tête à la seconde, il fit ouvrir le ventre à la troisième; quant à la quatrième, il lui fit grâce, il la chassa; mais en revanche il fit couper la tête à la cinquième. Ce n' est pas le conte de Barbe-Bleue que je vous fais là, belle Jane, c' est l' histoire de Henri Viii. Moi, dans ce temps-là, je m' occupais de guerres de religion, je me battais pour l' un et pour l' autre. C' était ce qu' il y avait de mieux alors.

La question d' ailleurs était fort épineuse. Il s' agissait d' être pour ou contre le pape. Les gens du roi pendaient ceux qui étaient pour, mais ils brûlaient ceux qui étaient contre. Les indifférens, ceux qui n' étaient ni pour ni contre, on les brûlait ou on les pendait, indifféremment. S' en tirait qui pouvait. Oui, la corde; non, le fagot; ni oui ni non, le fagot et la corde. Moi qui vous parle, j' ai senti le roussi bien souvent, et je ne suis pas sûr de n' avoir pas été deux ou trois fois dépendu. C' était un beau temps; a peu près pareil à celui-ci. Oui, je me battais pour tout cela. Du diable si je sais maintenant pour qui et pour quoi je me battais. Si l' on me reparle de Maître Luther et du Pape Paul Iii, je hausse les épaules. Vois-tu, Gilbert, quand on a des cheveux gris, il ne faut pas revoir les opinions pour qui l' on faisait la guerre et les femmes à qui l' on faisait l' amour à vingt ans. Femmes et opinions vous paraissent bien laides, bien vieilles, bien chétives, bien édentées, bien ridées, bien sottes. C' est mon histoire. Maintenant je suis retiré des affaires. Je ne suis plus soldat du roi, ni soldat du pape, je suis geôlier à la tour de Londres. Je ne me bats plus pour personne, et je mets tout le monde sous clef. Je suis guichetier et je suis vieux; j' ai un pied dans une prison et l' autre dans la fosse. C' est moi qui ramasse les morceaux de tous les ministres et de tous les favoris qui se cassent chez la reine. C’ est fort amusant. Et puis j’ ai un petit enfant que j’ aime, et puis vous deux que j’ aime aussi, et si vous êtes

heureux, je suis heureux!

Gilbert

en ce cas, sois heureux, Joshua! N’ est-ce pas, Jane?

Joshua

moi, je ne puis rien pour ton bonheur, mais Jane peut tout; tu l’ aimes! Je ne te rendrai même aucun service de ma vie. Tu n’ es heureusement pas assez grand seigneur pour avoir jamais besoin du porte-clef de la tour de Londres. Jane acquittera ma dette en même temps que la sienne.
Car, elle et moi, nous te devons tout Jane n’ était qu’ une pauvre enfant orpheline abandonnée, tu l’ as recueillie et élevée. Moi, je me noyais un beau jour dans la Tamise; tu m’ as tiré de l’ eau.

Gilbert

à quoi bon toujours parler de cela, Joshua?

Joshua

c’ est pour dire que notre devoir, à Jane et à moi, est de t’ aimer, moi, comme un frère, elle…
— pas comme une sœur!

Jane

non, comme une femme. Je vous comprends,
Joshua.

Elle retombe dans sa rêverie.

Gilbert, bas à Joshua.

Regarde-la, Joshua! N’ est-ce pas qu’ elle est belle et charmante, et qu’ elle serait digne d’ un roi? Si tu savais! Tu ne peux pas te figurer comme je l’ aime!

Joshua

prends garde, c’ est imprudent; une femme, ça ne s’ aime pas tant que ça; un enfant, à la bonne heure!

Gilbert

que veux-tu dire?

Joshua

rien. -je serai de votre noce dans huit jours.
— j’ espère qu’ alors les affaires d’ état me laisseront un peu de liberté, et que tout sera fini.

Gilbert

quoi? Qu’ est-ce qui sera fini?

Joshua

ah! Tu ne t’ occupes pas de ces choses-là, toi, Gilbert. Tu es amoureux. Tu es du peuple. Et qu’ est-ce que cela te fait les intrigues d’ en haut, à toi qui es heureux en bas? Mais, puisque tu me questionnes, je te dirai qu’ on espère que d’ ici à huit jours, d’ ici à vingt-quatre heures peut-être, Fabiano Fabiani sera remplacé près de la reine par un autre.

Gilbert

qu’ est-ce que c’ est que Fabiano Fabiani?

Joshua

c’ est l’ amant de la reine, c’ est un favori très-célèbre et très-charmant, un favori qui a plus vite fait couper la tête à un homme qui lui déplaît qu’ un bourgmestre flamand n’ a mangé une cuillerée de soupe, le meilleur favori que le bourreau de la tour de Londres ait eu depuis dix ans. Car tu sais que le bourreau reçoit, pour chaque tête de grand seigneur, dix écus d’ argent, et quelquefois le double, quand la tête est tout-à-fait considérable.
— on souhaite fort la chute de ce Fabiani. -il est vrai que dans mes fonctions à la tour je n’ entends guère gloser sur son compte que des gens d’ assez mauvaise humeur, des gens à qui l’ on doit couper le cou d’ ici à un mois, des mécontens.

Gilbert

que les loups se dévorent entre eux! Que nous importe, à nous, la reine et le favori de la reine? N’ est-ce pas, Jane?

Joshua

oh! Il y a une fière conspiration contre Fabiani! S’ il s’ en tire, il sera heureux. Je ne serais pas surpris qu’ il y eût quelque coup de fait cette nuit. Je viens de voir rôder par là maître Simon Renard tout rêveur.

Gilbert

qu’ est-ce que c’ est que maître Simon Renard?

Joshua

comment ne sais-tu pas cela? C’ est le bras droit de l’ empereur à Londres. La reine doit épouser le prince d’ Espagne, dont Simon Renard est le légat près d’ elle. La reine le hait ce Simon Renard; mais elle le craint, et ne peut rien contre lui. Il a déjà détruit deux ou trois favoris. C’ est son instinct de détruire les favoris. Il nettoie le palais de temps en temps. Un homme subtil et très-malicieux, qui sait tout ce qui se passe, et qui creuse toujours deux ou trois étages d’ intrigues souterraines sous tous les événemens. Quant à Lord Paget, -ne m’ as-tu pas demandé aussi ce que c’ était que Lord Paget? -c’ est un gentilhomme délié, qui a été dans les affaires sous Henri Viii. Il est membre du conseil étroit. Un tel ascendant que les autres ministres n’ osent pas souffler devant lui. Excepté le chancelier cependant, Mylord Gardiner, qui le déteste. Un homme violent, ce Gardiner, et très-bien né. Quant à Paget, ce n’ est rien du tout. Le fils d’ un savetier. Il va être fait baron Paget De Beaudesert en Stafford.

Gilbert

comme il vous débite couramment toutes ces choses-là, ce Joshua!

Joshua

pardieu! à force d’ entendre causer les prisonniers

d’ état.
Simon Renard paraît au fond du théâtre.
 — vois-tu, Gilbert, l’ homme qui sait le mieux
l’ histoire de ce temps-ci, c’ est le guichetier de la tour de Londres.
Simon Renard, qui a entendu les dernières paroles, du fond du théâtre.
Vous vous trompez, mon maître, c’ est le bourreau.
Joshua, bas à Jane et à Gilbert.
Reculons-nous un peu.
Simon Renard s’ éloigne lentement. -quand Simon
Renard a disparu.
 — c’ est précisément maître Simon Renard.
Gilbert
tous ces gens qui rôdent autour de ma maison me déplaisent.
Joshua
que diable vient-il faire par ici? Il faut que je m’ en retourne vite; je crois qu’ il me prépare de la besogne. Adieu, Gilbert. Adieu, belle Jane. -je vous ai pourtant vue pas plus haute que cela!
Gilbert
adieu, Joshua. -mais, dis moi, qu’ est-ce que tu caches donc là, sous ton manteau?
Joshua
ah! J’ ai mon complot aussi, moi.
Gilbert
quel complot?
Joshua
oh! Amoureux qui oubliez tout! Je viens de vous rappeler que c’ était après demain le jour des étrennes et des cadeaux. Les seigneurs complotent une surprise à Fabiani, moi, je complote de mon côté. La reine va se donner peut-être un favori tout neuf. Moi, je vais donner une poupée à mon enfant.
Il tire une poupée de dessous son manteau.

— toute neuve aussi. -nous verrons lequel des deux aura le plus vite brisé son joujou. -dieu vous garde, mes amis!

Gilbert

au revoir, Joshua.

Joshua s’ éloigne. Gilbert prend la main de Jane, et la baise avec passion.

Joshua, au fond du théâtre.

Oh! Que la providence est grande! Elle donne à chacun son jouet, la poupée à l’ enfant, l’ enfant à l’ homme, l’ homme à la femme, et la femme au diable!

Il sort.

JOURNEE 1 SCENE 3

Gilbert, Jane.

Gilbert

il faut que je vous quitte aussi. Adieu, Jane, dormez bien.

Jane

vous ne rentrez pas ce soir avec moi, Gilbert?

Gilbert

je ne puis. Vous savez, je vous l’ ai déjà dit, Jane, j’ ai un travail à terminer à mon atelier cette nuit. Un manche de poignard à ciseler pour je ne sais quel Lord Clanbrassil, que je n’ ai jamais vu, et qui me l’ a fait demander pour demain matin.

Jane

alors, bon soir, Gilbert. à demain.

Gilbert

non, Jane, encore un instant. Ah! Mon dieu! Que j’ ai de peine à me séparer de vous, fût-ce pour quelques heures! Qu’ il est bien vrai que vous êtes ma vie et ma joie! Il faut pourtant que j’ aille travailler, nous sommes si pauvres! Je ne veux pas entrer, car je resterais, et cependant je ne puis partir, homme faible que je suis! Tenez, asseyons-nous quelques minutes à la porte, sur ce banc; il me semble qu’ il me sera moins difficile de m’ en aller que si j’ entrais dans la maison, et surtout dans votre chambre. Donnez-moi votre main.

Il s’ assied et lui prend les deux mains dans les siennes, elle debout.

— Jane! M’ aimes-tu?

Jane

oh! Je vous dois tout, Gilbert! Je le sais, quoique vous me l’ ayez caché long-temps. Toute petite, presque au berceau, j’ ai été abandonnée par mes parens, vous m’ avez prise. Depuis seize ans, votre bras a travaillé pour moi comme celui d’ un père, vos yeux ont veillé sur moi comme ceux d’ une mère. Qu’ est-ce que je serais sans vous, mon dieu! Tout ce que j’ ai, vous me l’ avez donné, tout ce que je suis, vous l’ avez fait.

Gilbert
Jane! M’ aimes-tu?
Jane
quel dévoûment que le vôtre, Gilbert! Vous travaillez nuit et jour pour moi, vous vous brûlez les yeux, vous vous tuez. Tenez, voilà encore que vous passez la nuit aujourd’ hui. Et jamais un reproche, jamais une dureté, jamais une colère.
Vous si pauvre! Jusqu’ à mes petites coquetteries de femme, vous en avez pitié, vous les satisfaites.
Gilbert, je ne songe à vous que les larmes aux yeux. Vous avez quelquefois manqué de pain, je n’ ai jamais manqué de rubans.
Gilbert
Jane! M’ aimes-tu?
Jane
Gilbert, je voudrais baiser vos pieds!
Gilbert
m’ aimes-tu? M’ aimes-tu? Oh! Tout cela ne me dit pas que tu m’ aimes. C’ est de ce mot là que j’ ai besoin, Jane! De la reconnaissance, toujours de la reconnaissance! Oh! Je la foule aux pieds, la reconnaissance! Je veux de l’ amour, ou rien. - mourir! -Jane, depuis seize ans tu es ma fille, tu vas être ma femme maintenant. Je t’ avais adoptée, je veux t’ épouser. Dans huit jours! Tu sais, tu me l’ as promis, tu as consenti, tu es ma fiancée.
Oh! Tu m’ aimais quand tu m’ as promis cela. ô
Jane! Il y a eu un temps, te rappelles-tu, où tu me disais: je t’ aime! En levant tes beaux yeux au ciel. C’ est toujours comme cela que je te veux.
Depuis plusieurs mois il me semble que quelque chose est changé en toi, depuis trois semaines surtout que mon travail m’ oblige à m’ absenter quelquefois les nuits. ô Jane! Je veux que tu m’ aimes, moi. Je suis habitué à cela. Toi, si gaie auparavant, tu es toujours triste et préoccupée à présent, pas froide, pauvre enfant, tu fais ton possible pour ne pas l’ être; mais je sens bien que les paroles d’ amour ne te viennent plus bonnes et naturelles comme autrefois. Qu’ as-tu? Est-ce que tu ne m’ aimes plus? Sans doute je suis un honnête homme, sans doute je suis un bon ouvrier; sans doute, sans doute, mais je voudrais être un voleur et un assassin et être aimé de toi! -Jane! Si tu savais comme je t’ aime!

Jane

je le sais, Gilbert, et j’ en pleure.

Gilbert

de joie! N’ est-ce pas? Dis-moi que c’ est de joie. Oh! J’ ai besoin de le croire. Il n’ y a que cela au monde, être aimé. Je ne suis qu’ un pauvre coeur d’ ouvrier, mais il faut que ma Jane m’ aime. Que me parles-tu sans cesse de ce que j’ ai fait pour toi? Un seul mot d’ amour de toi, Jane, laisse toute la reconnaissance de mon côté. Je me damnerai et je commettrai un crime quand tu voudras. Tu seras ma femme, n’ est-ce pas, et tu m’ aimes? Vois-tu, Jane, pour un regard de toi je donnerais mon travail et ma peine; pour un sourire, ma vie; pour un baiser, mon âme!

Jane

quel noble cœur vous avez, Gilbert!

Gilbert

écoute, Jane! Ris si tu veux, je suis fou, je suis jaloux! C’ est comme cela. Ne t’ offense pas. Depuis quelque temps il me semble que je vois bien des jeunes seigneurs rôder par ici. Sais-tu, Jane, que j’ ai trente-quatre ans? Quel malheur pour un misérable ouvrier gauche et mal vêtu comme moi, qui n’ est plus jeune, qui n’ est pas beau, d’ aimer une belle et charmante enfant de dix-sept ans, qui attire les beaux jeunes gentilshommes dorés et chamarrés comme une lumière attire les papillons! Oh! Je souffre, va! Je ne t’ offense jamais dans ma pensée, toi si honnête, toi si pure, toi dont le front n’ a encore été touché que par mes lèvres! Je trouve seulement quelquefois que tu as trop de plaisir à voir passer les cortéges et les cavalcades de la reine, et tous ces beaux habits de satin et de velours sous lesquels il y a si peu de cœurs et si peu d’ âmes! Pardonne-moi. -mon dieu! Pourquoi donc vient-il par ici tant de jeunes gentilshommes? Pourquoi ne suis-je pas jeune, beau, noble et riche? Gilbert, l’ ouvrier ciseleur, voilà tout. Eux c’ est Lord Chandos, Lord Gerard Fitz-Gerard, le Comte D’ Arundel, le Duc De Norfolk! Oh! Que je les hais! Je passe ma vie à ciseler pour eux des poignées d’ épées dont je voudrais leur mettre la lame dans le ventre.

Jane

Gilbert!…

Gilbert

pardon, Jane. N’ est-ce pas, l’ amour rend bien méchant?

Jane

non, bien bon. -vous êtes bon, Gilbert.

Gilbert

oh! Que je t’ aime. Tous les jours davantage. Je voudrais mourir pour toi. Aime-moi ou ne m’ aime pas, tu en es bien la maîtresse. Je suis fou. Pardonne-moi tout ce que je t’ ai dit. Il est tard, il faut que je te quitte, adieu. Mon dieu! Que c’ est triste de te quitter! Rentre chez toi. Est-ce que tu n’ as pas ta clef?

Jane

non, depuis quelques jours je ne sais ce qu’ elle est devenue.

Gilbert

voici la mienne. -à demain matin. -Jane, n’ oublie pas ceci. Encore aujourd’ hui ton père; dans huit jours ton mari.

Il la baise au front et sort.

Jane, restée seule.

Mon mari! Oh non, je ne commettrai pas ce crime. Pauvre Gilbert! Il m 4 aime! Celui lâ! -et l’ autre…! -pourvu que je n’ aie pas préféré la vanité à l’ amour! Malheureuse fille que je suis, dans la dépendance de qui suis-je maintenant? Oh! Je suis bien ingrate et bien coupable! J’ entends marcher, rentrons vite.

Elle entre dans la maison.

JOURNEE 1 SCENE 4

Gilbert, un homme enveloppé d’ un manteau et coiffé d’ un bonnet jaune.
L’ homme tient Gilbert par la main.
Gilbert
oui, je te reconnais, tu es le mendiant juif qui rôde depuis quelques jours autour de cette maison. Mais que me veux-tu? Pourquoi m’ as-tu pris la main et m’ as-tu ramené ici?
L’ homme
c’ est que ce que j’ ai à vous dire, je ne puis vous le dire qu’ ici.
Gilbert
hé bien! Qu’ est-ce donc? Parle, hâte-toi.
L’ homme
écoutez, jeune homme. -il y a seize ans, dans la même nuit où Lord Talbot, Comte De Waterford, fut décapité aux flambeaux pour fait de papisme et de rebellion, ses partisans furent taillés en pièces dans Londres même par les soldats du Roi Henri Viii. On s’ arquebusa toute la nuit dans les rues. Cette nuit-là, un tout jeune ouvrier, beaucoup plus occupé de sa besogne que de la guerre, travaillait dans son échoppe. La première échoppe à l’ entrée du pont de Londres. Une porte basse à droite. Il y a des restes d’ ancienne peinture rouge sur le mur. Il pouvait être deux heures du matin. On se battait par-là. Les balles traversaient la Tamise en sifflant. Tout à coup, on frappa à la porte de l’ échoppe à travers laquelle la lampe de l’ ouvrier jetait quelque lueur. L’ artisan ouvrit. Un homme qu’ il ne connaissait pas entra. Cet homme portait dans ses bras un enfant au maillot fort effrayé et qui pleurait. L’ homme déposa l’ enfant sur la table, et dit: voici une créature qui n’ a plus ni père ni mère. Puis il sortit lentement, et referma la porte sur lui. Gilbert, l’ ouvrier, n’ avait lui-même ni père ni mère. L’ ouvrier accepta l’ enfant, l’ orphelin adopta l’ orpheline. Il la prit, il la veilla, il la vêtit, il la nourrit, il la garda, il l’ éleva, il l’ aima. Il se donna tout entier à cette pauvre petite créature que la guerre civile jetait dans son échoppe.

Il oublia tout pour elle, sa jeunesse, ses amourettes, son plaisir; il fit de cet enfant l’ objet unique de son travail, de ses affections, de sa vie, et voilà seize ans que cela dure. Gilbert, l’ ouvrier, c’ était vous; l’ enfant…
Gilbert
c’ était Jane. -tout est vrai dans ce que tu dis, mais où veux-tu en venir?
L’ homme
j’ ai oublié de dire qu’ aux langes de l’ enfant il y avait un papier attaché avec une épingle sur lequel on avait écrit ceci: ayez pitié de Jane.
Gilbert
c’ était écrit avec du sang. J’ ai conservé ce papier, je le porte toujours sur moi. Mais tu me mets à la torture. Où veux-tu en venir, dis?
L’ homme
à ceci. -vous voyez que je connais vos affaires.
Gilbert! Veillez sur votre maison cette nuit.
Gilbert
que veux-tu dire?
L’ homme
plus un mot. N’ allez pas à votre travail. Restez dans les environs de cette maison. Veillez. Je ne suis ni votre ami ni votre ennemi, mais c’ est un avis que je vous donne. Maintenant, pour ne pas vous nuire à vous-même, laissez-moi. Allez-vous-en de ce côté, et venez si vous m’ entendez appeler main-forte.
Gilbert

qu’ est-ce que cela signifie?
Il sort à pas lents.

JOURNEE 1 SCENE 5

L’ homme, seul.
La chose est bien arrangée ainsi. J’ avais besoin de quelqu’ un de jeune et de fort qui pût me prêter secours, s’ il est nécessaire. Ce Gilbert est ce qu’ il me faut. -il me semble que j’ entends un bruit de rames et de guitare sur l’ eau. -oui.
Il va au parapet.
On entend une guitare et une voix éloignée qui chante:
quand tu chantes, bercée
le soir entre mes bras, entends-tu ma pensée
qui te répond tout bas?
Ton doux chant me rappelle les plus beaux de mes jours… - chantez, ma belle!
Chantez toujours!
L’ homme
c’ est mon homme.
La Voix
elle s’ approche à chaque couplet.
Quand tu ris, sur ta bouche l’ amour s’ épanouit, et le soupçon farouche
soudain s’ évanouit!
Ah! Le rire fidèle
prouve un cœur sans détours… - riez, ma belle!
Riez toujours!
Quand tu dors, calme et pure,
dans l’ ombre, sous mes yeux,
ton haleine murmure
des mots harmonieux.
Ton beau corps se révèle
sans voile et sans atours… -

dormez, ma belle,
dormez toujours!
Quand tu me dis: je t’ aime!
ô ma beauté! Je croi!
Je crois que le ciel même
s’ ouvre au-dessus de moi!
Ton regard étincelle
du beau feu des amours… -
aimez, ma belle,
aimez toujours!
Vois-tu? Toute la vie
tient dans ces quatre mots,
tous les biens qu’ on envie,
tous les biens sans les maux!
Tout ce qui peut séduire
tout ce qui peut charmer… -
chanter et rire,
dormir, aimer!
L’ homme
il débarque. Bien. Il congédie le batelier. à merveille!
Revenant sur le devant du théâtre.
— le voici qui vient.
Entre Fabiano Fabiani dans son manteau; il se dirige vers la porte de la maison.

JOURNEE 1 SCENE 6

L’ homme, Fabiano Fabiani.
L’ homme, arrêtant Fabiani.
Un mot, s’ il vous plaît.
Fabiani
on me parle, je crois. Quel est ce maraud? Qui es-tu?
L’ homme
ce qu’ il vous plaira que je sois.
Fabiani
cette lanterne éclaire mal. Mais tu as un bonnet jaune, il me semble, un bonnet de juif? Est-ce que tu es un juif?
L’ homme
oui, un juif. J’ ai quelque chose à vous dire.
Fabiani
comment t’ appelles-tu?
L’ homme
je sais votre nom, et vous ne savez pas le mien. J’ ai l’ avantage sur vous. Permettez-moi de le garder.
Fabiani
tu sais mon nom, toi? Cela n’ est pas vrai.
L’ homme
je sais votre nom. à Naples, on vous appelait Signor Fabiani; à Madrid, Don Faviano; à Londres, on vous appelle Lord Fabiano Fabiani, Comte De Clanbrassil.
Fabiani
que le diable t’ emporte!
L’ homme
que dieu vous garde!
Fabiani
je te ferai bâtonner. Je ne veux pas qu’ on sache mon nom quand je vais devant moi la nuit.
L’ homme

surtout quand vous allez où vous allez.
Fabiani
que veux-tu dire?
L’ homme
si la reine le savait!
Fabiani
je ne vais nulle part.
L’ homme
si, mylord! Vous allez chez la belle Jane, la fiancée de Gilbert le ciseleur.
Fabiani, à part.
Diable! Voilà un homme dangereux.
L’ homme
voulez-vous que je vous en dise davantage? Vous avez séduit cette fille, et depuis un mois elle vous a reçu deux fois chez elle la nuit. C’ est aujourd’ hui la troisième. La belle vous attend.
Fabiano
tais-toi! Tais-toi! Veux-tu de l’ argent pour te taire? Combien veux-tu?
L’ homme
nous verrons cela tout à l’ heure. Maintenant, mylord, voulez-vous que je vous dise pourquoi vous avez séduit cette fille?
Fabiani
pardieu! Parce que j’ en étais amoureux.
L’ homme
non. Vous n’ en étiez pas amoureux.
Fabiani
je n’ étais pas amoureux de Jane?
L’ homme
pas plus que de la reine. -amour, non; calcul, oui.
Fabiani
ah çà, drôle, tu n’ es pas un homme, tu es ma conscience habillée en juif!
L’ homme

je vais vous parler comme votre conscience, mylord. Voici toute votre affaire. Vous êtes le favori de la reine. La reine vous a donné la jarretière, la comté et la seigneurie. Choses creuses que cela! La jarretière, c’ est un chiffon; la comté, c’ est un mot; la seigneurie, c’ est le droi d’ avoir la tête tranchée. Il vous fallait mieux. Il vous fallait, mylord, de bonnes terres, de bons bailliages, de bons châteaux et de bons revenus en bonnes livres sterling. Or, le Roi Henri Viii avait confisqué les biens de Lord Talbot, décapité il y a seize ans. Vous vous êtes fait donner par la reine Marie les biens de Lord Talbot. Mais pour que la donation fût valable, il fallait que Lord Talbot fût mort sans postérité. S’ il existait un héritier ou une héritière de Lord Talbot, comme Lord Talbot est mort pour la Reine Marie et pour sa mère Catherine D’ Aragon, comme Lord Talbot était papiste, et comme la Reine Marie est papiste, il n’ est pas douteux que la Reine Marie vous reprendrait les biens, tout favori que vous êtes, mylord, et les rendrait, par devoir, par reconnaissance et par religion, à l’ héritier ou à l’ héritière. Vous étiez assez tranquille de ce côté. Lord Talbot n’ avait jamais eu qu’ une petite fille qui avait disparu de son berceau à l’ époque de l’ exécution de son père, et que toute l’ Angleterre croyait morte. Mais vos espions ont découvert dernièrement que dans la nuit où Lord Talbot et son parti furent exterminés par Henri Viii, un enfant avait été mystérieusement déposé chez un ouvrier ciseleur du pont de Londres, et qu’ il était probable que cet enfant, élevé sous le nom de Jane, était Jane Talbot, la petite fille disparue. Les preuves écrites de sa naissance manquaient, il est vrai, mais tous les jours elles pouvaient se retrouver. L’ incident était fâcheux. Se voir peut-être forcé un jour de rendre à une petite fille Shrewsbury, Wexford, qui est une belle ville, et la magnifique comté de Waterford!

C’ est dur. Comment faire? Vous avez cherché un moyen de détruire et d’ annuler la jeune fille. Un honnête homme l’ eût fait assassiner ou empoisonner. Vous, mylord, vous avez mieux fait, vous l’ avez déshonorée.
Fabiani
insolent!
L’ homme
c’ est votre conscience qui parle, mylord. Un autre eût pris la vie à la jeune fille, vous lui avez pris
l’ honneur, et par conséquent l’ avenir. La reine
Marie est prude, quoiqu’ elle ait des amans.
Fabiani
cet homme va au fond de tout.
L’ homme
la reine est d’ une mauvaise santé; la reine peut mourir, et alors, vous favori, vous tomberiez en ruine sur son tombeau. Les preuves matérielles de l’ état de la jeune fille peuvent se retrouver, et alors, si la reine est morte, toute déshonorée que vous l’ avez faite, Jane sera reconnue héritière de Talbot. Eh bien! Vous avez prévu ce cas-là; vous êtes un jeune cavalier de belle mine, vous vous êtes fait aimer d’ elle, elle s’ est donnée à vous, au pis-aller, vous l’ épouseriez. Ne vous défendez pas de ce plan, mylord, je le trouve sublime. Si je n’ étais moi, je voudrais être vous.
Fabiani
merci.
L’ homme
vous avez conduit la chose avec adresse. Vous avez caché votre nom. Vous êtes à couvert du côté de la reine. La pauvre fille croit avoir été séduite par un chevalier du pays de Sommerset, nommé
Amyas Pawlet.

Fabiani
tout! Il sait tout! Allons, maintenant, au fait, que me veux-tu?
L’ homme
mylord, si quelqu’ un avait en son pouvoir les papiers qui constatent la naissance, l’ existence et le droit de l’ héritière de Talbot, cela vous ferait pauvre comme mon ancêtre Job, et ne vous laisserait plus d’ autres châteaux, Don Fabiano, que vos châteaux en Espagne, ce qui vous contrarierait fort.
Fabiani
oui; mais personne n’ a ces papiers.
L’ homme
si.
Fabiani
qui?
L’ homme
moi.
Fabiani
bah! Toi, misérable! Ce n’ est pas vrai. Juif qui parle, bouche qui ment.
L’ homme
j’ ai ces papiers.
Fabiani
tu mens. Où les as-tu?
L’ homme
dans ma poche.
Fabiani
je ne te crois pas. Bien en règle? Il n’ y manque
rien?
L’ homme
il n’ y manque rien.
Fabiani
alors, il me les faut!
L’ homme
doucement.

Fabiani
juif, donne-moi ces papiers.
L’ homme
fort bien. -juif! Misérable mendiant qui passes dans la rue, donne-moi la ville de Shrewsbury, donne-moi la ville de Wexford, donne-moi la comté de Waterford. -la charité, s’ il vous plaît!
Fabiani
ces papiers sont tout pour moi, et ne sont rien pour toi.
L’ homme
Simon Renard et Lord Chandos me les paieraient bien cher.
Fabiani
Simon Renard et Lord Chandos sont les deux chiens entre lesquels je te ferai pendre.
L’ homme
vous n’ avez rien autre chose à me proposer?
Adieu.
Fabiani
ici, juif! -que veux-tu que je te donne pour ces papiers?
L’ homme
quelque chose que vous avez sur vous.
Fabiani
ma bourse?
L’ homme
fi donc! Voulez-vous la mienne?
Fabiani
quoi, alors?
L’ homme
il y a un parchemin qui ne vous quitte jamais.
C’ est un blanc-seing que vous a donné la reine, et où elle jure sur sa couronne catholique d’ accorder à celui qui le lui présentera la grâce, quelle qu’ elle soit, qu’ il lui demandera. Donnez-moi ce blanc-seing, vous aurez les titres de Jane Talbot. Papier pour papier.

Fabiani

que veux-tu faire de ce blanc-seing?

L’ homme

voyons. Jeu sur table, mylord. Je vous ai dit vos affaires, je vais vous dire les miennes. Je suis un des principaux argentiers juifs de la rue Kantersten, à Bruxelles. Je prête mon argent. C’ est mon métier. Je prête dix et l’ on me rend quinze. Je prête à tout le monde, je prêterais au diable, je prêterais au pape. Il y a deux mois, un de mes débiteurs est mort sans m’ avoir payé. C’ était un ancien serviteur exilé de la famille Talbot. Le pauvre homme n’ avait laissé que quelques guenilles. Je les fis saisir. Dans ces guenilles je trouvai une boîte et dans cette boîte des papiers. Les papiers de Jane Talbot, mylord, avec toute son histoire contée en détail et appuyée de preuves pour des temps meilleurs. La reine d’ Angleterre venait précisément de vous donner les biens de Jane Talbot. Or, j’ avais justement besoin de la reine d’ Angleterre pour un prêt de dix mille marcs d’ or. Je compris qu’ il y avait une affaire à faire avec vous. Je vins en Angleterre sous ce déguisement, j’ épiai vos démarches moi-même, j’ épiai Jane Talbot moi-même, je fais tout moi-même. De cette façon j’ appris tout, et me voici. Vous aurez les papiers de Jane Talbot si vous me donnez le blanc-seing de la reine. J’ écrirai dessus que la reine me donne dix mille marcs d’ or. On me doit quelque chose ici au bureau de l’ excise mais je ne chicanerai pas. Dix mille marcs d’ or, rien de plus. Je ne vous demande pas la somme à vous, parce qu’ il n’ y a qu’ une tête couronnée qui puisse la payer. Voilà parler nettement, j’ espère. Voyez-vous, mylord, deux hommes aussi adroits que vous et moi n’ ont rien à gagner à se tromper l’ un l’ autre. Si la franchise était bannie de la terre, c’ est dans le tête-à-tête de deux fripons qu’ elle devrait se retrouver.

Fabiani

impossible. Je ne puis te donner ce blanc-seing. Dix mille marcs d’ or! Que dirait la reine? Et puis, demain je puis être disgracié; ce blanc-seing, c’ est ma sauve-garde; ce blanc-seing, c’ est ma tête.

L’ homme

qu’ est-ce que cela me fait?

Fabiani

demande-moi autre chose.

L’ homme

je veux cela.

Fabiani

juif, donne-moi les papiers de Jane Talbot.

L’ homme

mylord, donnez-moi le blanc-seing de la reine.

Fabiani

allons, juif maudit! Il faut te céder.

Il tire un papier de sa poche.

L’ homme

montrez-moi le blanc-seing de la reine.

Fabiani

montre-moi les papiers de Talbot.

L’ homme

après.

Ils s’ approchent de la lanterne. Fabiani, placé derrière le juif, de la main gauche lui tient le papier sous les yeux. L’ homme l’ examine.

L’ homme, lisant.

“ nous, Marie, reine… “ -c’ est bien. -vous voyez que je suis comme vous, mylord. J’ ai tout calculé. J’ ai tout prévu.

Fabiani

il tire son poignard de la main droite et le lui enfonce dans la gorge.

Excepté ceci.
L’ homme
oh! Traître!… -à moi!
Il tombe. -en tombant, il jette dans l’ ombre,
derrière lui, sans que Fabiani s’ en aperçoive, un
paquet cacheté.
Fabiani, se penchant sur le corps.
Je le crois mort, ma foi! -vite, ces papiers!
Il fouille le juif.
— mais quoi! Il n’ a rien! Rien sur lui! Pas un papier, le vieux mécréant! Il mentait! Il me trompait! Il me volait! Voyez-vous cela, damné juif!
Oh! Il n’ a rien, c’ est fini! Je l’ ai tué pour rien!
Ils sont tous ainsi, ces juifs. Le mensonge et le vol,
c’ est tout le juif! -allons, débarrassons-nous du cadavre, je ne puis le laisser devant cette porte.
Allant au fond du théâtre.
— voyons si le batelier est encore là, qu’ il m’ aide à le jeter dans la Tamise.
Il descend et disparaît derrière le parapet.
Gilbert, entrant par le côté opposé.
Il me semble que j’ ai entendu un cri.
Il aperçoit le corps étendu à terre sous la lanterne.
— quelqu’ un d’ assassiné! -le mendiant!
L’ homme, se soulevant à demi.
Ah!… -vous venez trop tard, Gilbert.
Il désigne du doigt l’ endroit où il a jeté le paquet.
— prenez ceci, ce sont des papiers qui prouvent que Jane, votre fiancée, est la fille et l’ héritière du dernier Lord Talbot. Mon assassin est Lord
Clanbrassil, le favori de la reine. -ah! J’ étouffe.
— Gilbert! Venge-moi et venge-toi!… - il meurt.
Gilbert
mort! -que je me venge? Que veut-il dire?
Jane, fille de Lord Talbot! Lord Clanbrassil!

Le favori de la reine! Oh! Je m’ y perds!
Secouant le cadavre.
— parle, encore un mot! -il est bien mort.

JOURNEE 1 SCENE 7

Gilbert, Fabiani.

Fabiani, revenant.
Qui va là?
Gilbert
on vient d’ assassiner un homme
Fabiani
non, un juif.
Gilbert
qui a tué cet homme?
Fabiani
pardieu! Vous ou moi.
Gilbert
monsieur!…
Fabiani
pas de témoins. Un cadavre à terre. Deux hommes à côté. Lequel est l’ assassin? Rien ne prouve que ce soit l’ un plutôt que l’ autre, moi plutôt que vous.
Gilbert
misérable! L’ assassin, c’ est vous.
Fabiani
eh bien oui, au fait! C’ est moi. -après?
Gilbert
je vais appeler les constables.
Fabiani
vous allez m’ aider à jeter le corps à l’ eau.
Gilbert
je vous ferai arrêter et punir.
Fabiani
vous m’ aiderez à jeter le corps à l’ eau.
Gilbert
vous êtes impudent!
Croyez-moi, effaçons toute trace de ceci, vous y êtes plus intéressé que moi.
Gilbert

voilà qui est fort!
Fabiani
un de nous deux a fait le coup. Moi, je suis un grand seigneur, un noble lord. Vous, vous êtes un passant, un manant, un homme du peuple. Un gentilhomme qui tue un juif paie quatre sous d' amende. Un homme du peuple qui en tue un autre est pendu.
Gilbert
vous oseriez?…
Fabiani
si vous me dénoncez, je vous dénonce. On me croira plutôt que vous. En tout cas, les chances sont inégales. Quatre sous d' amende pour moi, la potence pour vous.
Gilbert
pas de témoins! Pas de preuves! Oh! Ma tête s' égare. Le misérable me tient, il a raison.
Fabiani
vous aiderai-je à jeter le cadavre à l' eau?
Gilbert
vous êtes le démon!
Fabiani
Gilbert prend le corps par la tête, Fabiano par les pieds; ils le portent jusqu' au parapet.
Oui. -ma foi, mon cher, je ne sais plus au juste lequel de nous deux a tué cet homme.
Ils descendent derrière le parapet.
Fabiani, reparaissant.
Voilà qui est fait. -bonne nuit, mon camarade, allez à vos affaires.
Il se dirige vers la maison et se retourne, voyant que Gilbert le suit.
— hé bien! Que voulez-vous? Quelque argent pour votre peine? En conscience, je ne vous dois rien; mais, tenez.
Il donne sa bourse à Gilbert, dont le premier mouvement est un geste de refus, et qui accepte ensuite de l’ air d’ un homme qui se ravise.

— maintenant, allez-vous-en. Hé bien! Qu’ attendez-vous encore?

Gilbert

rien.

Fabiani

ma foi, restez là si bon vous semble. à vous la belle étoile, à moi la belle fille. Dieu vous garde.

Il se dirige vers la porte de la maison et paraît se disposer à l’ ouvrir.

Gilbert

où allez-vous ainsi?

Fabiani

pardieu! Chez moi.

Gilbert

comment, chez vous?

Fabiani

oui.

Gilbert

quel est celui de nous deux qui rêve? Vous me disiez tout à l’ heure que l’ assassin du juif c’ était moi, vous me dites à présent que cette maison-ci est la vôtre.

Fabiani

ou celle de ma maîtresse, ce qui revient au même.

Gilbert

répétez-moi ce que vous venez de dire.

Fabiani

je dis, l’ ami, puisque vous voulez le savoir, que cette maison est celle d’ une belle fille nommée Jane, qui est ma maîtresse.

Gilbert

et moi, je dis, mylord, que tu mens! Je dis que tu es un faussaire et un assassin, je dis que ta mère a été souffletée en place publique par le bourreau, et que je prendrai ta tête entre mes deux mains, vois-tu, et que je te couperai ta langue avec tes dents!

Fabiani
là, là. Quel est ce diable d’ homme?
Gilbert
je suis Gilbert le ciseleur. Jane est ma fiancée.
Fabiani
et moi, je suis le chevalier Amyas Pawlett.
Jane est ma maîtresse.
Gilbert
tu mens, te dis-je, tu es Lord Clanbrassil, le favori de la reine. Imbécile qui croit que je ne sais pas cela!
Fabiani, à part.
Tout le monde me connaît donc cette nuit! - encore un homme dangereux, et dont il faudra se défaire!
Gilbert
dis-moi sur-le-champ que tu as menti comme
un lâche, et que Jane n’ est pas ta maîtresse.
Fabiani
connais-tu son écriture?
Il tire un billet de sa poche.
— lis ceci.
à part, pendant que Gilbert déploie convulsivement le papier.
— il importe qu’ il rentre chez lui et qu’ il cherche querelle à Jane, cela donnera à mes gens le temps
d’ arriver.
Gilbert, lisant.
“ je serai seule cette nuit, vous pouvez venir.”
— malédiction! Mylord, tu as deshonoré ma fiancée, tu es un infâme! Rends-moi raison!
Fabiani, mettant l’ épée à la main.
Je veux bien. Où est ton épée?
Gilbert
ô rage! être du peuple! N’ avoir rien sur soi, ni épée, ni poignard! Va, je t’ attendrai la nuit au coin d’ une rue, et je t’ enfoncerai mes ongles dans le cou, et je t’ assassinerai, misérable!

Fabiani

là, là, vous êtes violent, mon camarade.

Gilbert

oh! Mylord! Je me vengerai de toi!

Fabiani

toi! Te venger de moi! Toi si bas, moi si haut! Tu es fou! Je t’ en défie.

Gilbert

tu m’ en défies?

Fabiani

oui.

Gilbert

tu verras!

Fabiani, à part.

Il ne faut pas que le soleil de demain se lève pour cet homme.

Haut.

— l’ ami, crois-moi, rentre chez toi! Je suis fâché que tu aies découvert cela; mais je te laisse la belle. Mon intention d’ ailleurs n’ était pas de pousser l’ amourette plus loin. Rentre chez toi.

Il jette une clef aux pieds de Gilbert.

— si tu n’ as pas de clef, en voici une. Ou, si tu l’ aimes mieux, tu n’ as qu’ à frapper quatre coups contre ce volet, Jane croira que c’ est moi, et elle t’ ouvrira. Bonsoir.

Il sort.

JOURNEE 1 SCENE 8

Gilbert, resté seul.
Il est parti! Il n' est plus là! Je ne l' ai pas pétri et broyé sous mes pieds, cet homme! Il a fallu le laisser partir! Pas une arme sur moi!

Il aperçoit à terre le poignard avec lequel Lord Clanbrassil a tué le juif; il le ramasse avec un empressement furieux.

— ah! Tu arrives trop tard! -tu ne pourras probablement tuer que moi! Mais c' est égal, que tu sois tombé du ciel ou vomi par l' enfer, je te bénis! -oh! Jane m' a trahi! Jane s' est donnée à cet infâme! Jane est l' héritière de Lord Talbot! Jane est perdue pour moi! -oh dieu! Voilà en une heure plus de choses terribles sur moi que ma tête n' en peut porter!

Simon Renard paraît dans les ténèbres au fond du théâtre.

— oh! Me venger de cet homme! Me venger de ce Lord Clanbrassil! Si je vais au palais de la reine, les laquais me chasseront à coups de pied comme un chien! Oh! Je suis fou, ma tête se brise. Oh! Cela m' est égal de mourir, mais je voudrais être vengé! Je donnerais mon sang pour la vengeance! N' y a-t-il personne au monde qui veuille faire ce marché avec moi? Qui veut me venger de Lord Clanbrassil et prendre ma vie pour paiement?…

JOURNEE 1 SCENE 9

Gilbert, Simon Renard.
Simon Renard, faisant un pas.
Moi.
Gilbert
toi! Qui es-tu?
Simon Renard
je suis l’ homme que tu désires.
Gilbert
sais-tu qui je suis?
Simon Renard
tu es l’ homme qu’ il me faut.
Gilbert
je n’ ai plus qu’ une idée, sais-tu cela? être vengé de Lord Clanbrassil, et mourir.
Simon Renard
tu seras vengé de Lord Clanbrassil, et tu mourras.
Gilbert
qui que tu sois, merci!
Simon Renard
oui, tu auras la vengeance que tu veux; mais n’ oublie pas à quelle condition. Il me faut ta vie.
Gilbert
prends-la.
Simon Renard
c’ est convenu?
Gilbert
oui.
Simon Renard
Suis-moi.
Gilbert
où?
Tu le sauras.
Gilbert
songe que tu me promets de me venger!

Simon Renard
songe que tu me promets de mourir!

JOURNEE 2 SCENE 1

Une chambre de l’ appartement de la reine. -un évangile ouvert sur un prie-dieu. La couronne royale sur un escabeau. -portes latérales. Une large porte au fond. — une partie du fond masquée par une grande tapisserie de haute lice.

La Reine, splendidement vêtue, couchée sur un lit de repos; Fabiano Fabiani, assis sur un pliant à côté; magnifique costume, la jarretière.

Fabiani, une guitare à la main, chantant.

Quand tu dors, calme et pure,
dans l’ ombre sous mes yeux,
ton haleine murmure
des mots harmonieux.
Ton beau corps se révèle
sans voile et sans atours… -
dormez, ma belle,
dormez toujours!
Quand tu me dis: je t’ aime!
ô ma beauté, je croi
je crois que le ciel même
s’ ouvre au-dessus de moi!
Ton regard étincelle
du beau feu des amours… -
aimez, ma belle,
aimez toujours!
Vois-tu? Toute la vie
tient dans ces quatre mots,
tous les biens qu’ on envie,
tous les biens sans les maux!
Tout ce qui peut séduire
tout ce qui peut charmer… -
chanter et rire,
dormir, aimer!

Il pose la guitare à terre.

Oh! Je vous aime plus que je ne peux dire, madame!
Mais ce Simon Renard! Ce Simon Renard, plus puissant que vous-même ici! Je le hais.
La Reine
vous savez bien que je n’ y puis rien, mylord.
Il est ici le légat du prince d’ Espagne, mon futur mari.
Fabiani
votre futur mari!
La Reine
allons, mylord, ne parlons plus de cela. Je vous aime, que vous faut-il de plus? Et puis, voici qu’ il est temps de vous en aller.
Fabiani
Marie, encore un instant!
La Reine
mais c’ est l’ heure où le conseil étroit va s’ assembler.
Il n’ y a eu ici jusqu’ à cette heure que la femme, il faut laisser entrer la reine.
Fabiani
je veux, moi, que la femme fasse attendre la reine à la porte.
La Reine
vous voulez, vous! Vous voulez, vous! Regardez-moi, mylord. Tu as une jeune et charmante tête, Fabiano!
Fabiani
c’ est vous qui êtes belle, madame! Vous n’ auriez besoin que de votre beauté pour être toute-puissante.
Il y a sur votre tête quelque chose qui dit que vous êtes la reine, mais cela est encore bien mieux écrit sur votre front que sur votre couronne.
La Reine
vous me flattez!
Fabiani
je t’ aime.

La Reine
tu m’ aimes, n’ est-ce pas? Tu n’ aimes que moi? Redis-le-moi encore comme cela, avec ces yeux-là. Hélas! Nous autres pauvres femmes, nous ne savons jamais au juste ce qui se passe dans le coeur d’ un homme; nous sommes obligées d’ en croire vos yeux, et les plus beaux, Fabiano, sont quelquefois les plus menteurs. Mais dans les tiens, mylord, il y a tant de loyauté, tant de candeur, tant de bonne foi, qu’ ils ne peuvent mentir ceux-là, n’ est-ce pas? Oui, ton regard est naïf et sincère, mon beau page. Oh! Prendre des yeux célestes pour tromper, ce serait infernal. Ou tes yeux sont les yeux d’ un ange, ou ils sont ceux d’ un démon.
Fabiani
ni démon, ni ange. Un homme qui vous aime.
La Reine
qui aime la reine?
Fabiani
qui aime Marie.
La Reine
écoute, Fabiano, je t’ aime aussi, moi. Tu es jeune, il y a beaucoup de belles femmes qui te regardent fort doucement, je le sais. Enfin, on se lasse d’ une reine comme d’ une autre. Ne m’ interromps pas. Si jamais tu deviens amoureux d’ une autre femme, je veux que tu me le dises. Je te pardonnerai peut-être si tu me le dis. Ne m’ interromps donc pas. Tu ne sais pas à quel point je t’ aime, je ne le sais pas moi-même! Il y a des momens, cela est vrai, où je t’ aimerais mieux mort qu’ heureux avec une autre; mais il y a aussi des momens où je t’ aimerais mieux heureux. Mon dieu! Je ne sais pas pourquoi on cherche à me faire la réputation d’ une méchante femme.
Fabiani
je ne puis être heureux qu’ avec toi, Marie. Je n’ aime que toi.

La Reine
bien sûr? Regarde-moi. Bien sûr? Oh! Je suis jalouse par instants! Je me figure, -quelle est la femme qui n’ a pas de ces idées-là? -je me figure quelquefois que tu me trompes. Je voudrais être invisible, et pouvoir te suivre, et toujours savoir ce que tu fais, ce que tu dis, où tu es. Il y a dans les contes des fées une bague qui rend invisible; je donnerais ma couronne pour cette bague-là. Je m’ imagine sans cesse que tu vas voir les belles jeunes femmes qu’ il y a dans la ville. Oh! Il ne faudrait pas me tromper, vois-tu!
Fabiani
mais ôtez-vous donc ces idées-là de l’ esprit, madame! Moi vous tromper, madame, ma reine, ma bonne maîtresse! Mais il faudrait que je fusse le plus ingrat et le plus misérable des hommes pour cela! Mais je ne vous ai donné aucune raison de croire que je fusse le plus ingrat et le plus misérable des hommes! Mais je t’ aime, Marie! Mais je t’ adore! Mais je ne pourrais seulement pas regarder une autre femme! Je t’ aime, te dis-je! Mais est-ce que tu ne vois pas cela dans mes yeux? Oh! Mon dieu! Il y a un accent de vérité qui devrait persuader, pourtant. Voyons, regarde-moi bien, est-ce que j’ ai l’ air d’ un homme qui te trahit? Quand un homme trahit une femme, cela se voit tout de suite. Les femmes ordinairement ne se trompent pas à cela. Et quel moment choisis-tu pour me dire des choses pareilles, Marie? Le moment de ma vie où je t’ aime peut-être le plus! C’ est vrai, il me semble que je ne t’ ai jamais tant aimée qu’ aujourd’ hui! Je ne parle pas ici à la reine. Pardieu, je me moque bien de la reine. Qu’ est-ce qu’ elle peut me faire la reine? Elle peut me faire couper la tête, qu’ est-ce que cela? Toi, Marie, tu peux me briser le cœur! Ce n’ est pas votre majesté que j’ aime, c’ est toi. C’ est ta belle main blanche et douce que je baise et que j’ adore, et non votre sceptre, madame!

La Reine

merci, mon Fabiano. Adieu. -mon dieu! Mylord, que vous êtes jeune! Les beaux cheveux noirs et la charmante tête que voilà! -revenez dans une heure.

Fabiani

ce que vous appelez une heure, vous, je l’ appelle un siècle, moi!

Il sort.

Sitôt qu’ il est sorti, la reine se lève précipitamment, va à une porte masquée, l’ ouvre et introduit Simon Renard.

JOURNEE 2 SCENE 2

La Reine, Simon Renard.
La Reine
entrez, monsieur le bailli. Eh! Bien, étiez-vous resté là? L’ avez-vous entendu?
Simon Renard
oui, madame.
La Reine
qu’ en dites-vous? Oh! C’ est le plus fourbe et le plus faux des hommes. Qu’ en dites-vous?
Simon Renard
je dis, madame, qu’ on voit bien que cet homme porte un nom en i.
La Reine
et vous êtes sûr qu’ il va chez cette femme la nuit? Vous l’ avez vu?
Simon Renard
moi, Chandos, Clinton, Montagu, dix témoins.
La Reine
c’ est que c’ est vraiment infâme!
Simon Renard
d’ ailleurs la chose sera encore mieux prouvée à la reine tout à l’ heure. La jeune fille est ici, comme je l’ ai dit à votre majesté. Je l’ ai fait saisir dans sa maison cette nuit.
La Reine
mais est-ce que ce n’ est pas là un crime suffisant pour lui faire trancher la tête à cet homme, monsieur?
Simon Renard
avoir été chez une jolie fille la nuit? Non, madame. Votre majesté a fait mettre en jugement Trogmorton pour un fait pareil; Trogmorton a été absous.
La Reine
j’ ai puni les juges de Trogmorton.

Simon Renard
tâchez de n’ avoir pas à punir les juges de Fabiani.
La Reine
oh! Comment me venger de ce traître?
Simon Renard
votre majesté ne veut la vengeance que d’ une certaine manière?
La Reine
la seule qui soit digne de moi.
Simon Renard
Trogmorton a été absous, madame. Il n’ y a qu’ un moyen, je l’ ai dit à votre majesté. L’ homme qui est là.
La Reine
fera-t-il tout ce que je voudrai?
Simon Renard
oui, si vous faites tout ce qu’ il voudra.
La Reine
donnera-t-il sa vie?
Simon Renard
il fera ses conditions; mais il donnera sa vie.
Qu’ est-ce qu’ il veut? Savez-vous?
Simon Renard
ce que vous voulez vous-même. Se venger.
La Reine
dites qu’ il entre, et restez par là à portée de la voix. -monsieur le bailli!
Simon Renard, revenant.
Madame?…
La Reine
dites à Mylord Chandos qu’ il se tienne là dans la chambre voisine avec six hommes de mon ordonnance, tous prêts à entrer. -et la femme aussi,
toute prête à entrer! -allez.
Simon Renard sort.
La Reine, seule.
Oh! Ce sera terrible!

Une des portes latérales s’ ouvre. Entrent Simon Renard et Gilbert.

JOURNEE 2 SCENE 3

La Reine, Gilbert, Simon Renard.
Gilbert
devant qui suis-je?
Simon Renard
devant la reine.
Gilbert
la reine!
La Reine
c’ est bien, oui, la reine. Je suis la reine. Nous n’ avons pas le temps de nous étonner. Vous, monsieur, vous êtes Gilbert, un ouvrier ciseleur. Vous demeurez quelque part par là au bord de l’ eau avec une nommée Jane dont vous êtes le fiancé, et qui vous trompe, et qui a pour amant un nommé Fabiano qui me trompe, moi. Vous voulez vous venger, et moi aussi. Pour cela, j’ ai besoin de disposer de votre vie à ma fantaisie. J’ ai besoin que vous disiez ce que je vous commanderai de dire, quoi que ce soit. J’ ai besoin qu’ il n’ y ait plus pour vous ni faux ni vrai, ni bien ni mal, ni juste ni injuste, rien que ma vengeance et ma volonté. J’ ai besoin que vous me laissiez faire et que vous vous laissiez faire. Y consentez-vous?
Gilbert
madame…
La Reine
la vengeance, tu l’ auras. Mais je te préviens qu’ il faudra mourir. Voilà tout. Fais tes conditions. Si tu as une vieille mère, et qu’ il faille couvrir sa nappe de lingots d’ or, parle, je le ferai. Vends-moi ta vie aussi cher que tu voudras. Je ne suis plus décidé à mourir, madame.
La Reine
comment!

Gilbert
tenez, majesté, j’ ai réfléchi toute la nuit, rien ne m’ est prouvé encore dans cette affaire. J’ ai vu un homme qui s’ est vanté d’ être l’ amant de Jane. Qui me dit qu’ il n’ a pas menti? J’ ai vu une clef. Qui me dit qu’ on ne l’ a pas volée? J’ ai vu une lettre. Qui me dit qu’ on ne l’ a pas fait écrire de force. D’ ailleurs je ne sais même plus si c’ était bien son écriture. Il faisait nuit. J’ étais troublé. Je n’ y voyais pas. Je ne puis donner ma vie qui est la sienne comme cela. Je ne crois à rien, je ne suis sûr de rien, je n’ ai pas vu Jane.
La Reine
on voit bien que tu aimes! Tu es comme moi, tu résistes à toutes les preuves. Et si tu la vois, cette Jane, si tu l’ entends avouer le crime, feras-tu ce que je veux?
Gilbert
oui. à une condition.
La Reine
tu me la diras plus tard.
à Simon Renard.
— cette femme ici tout de suite.
Simon Renard sort. La reine place Gilbert derrière un rideau qui occupe une partie du fond de l’ appartement.
— mets-toi là.
Entre Jane, pâle et tremblante.

JOURNEE 2 SCENE 4

La Reine, Jane, Gilbert derrière le rideau.
La Reine
approche, jeune fille, tu sais qui nous sommes?
Jane
oui, madame.
La Reine
tu sais quel est l’ homme qui t’ a séduite?
Jane
oui, madame.
La Reine
il t’ avait trompée? Il s’ était fait passer pour un gentilhomme nommé Amyas Pawlett?
Jane
oui, madame.
La Reine
tu sais maintenant que c’ est Fabiano Fabiani, Comte De Clanbrassil?
Jane
oui, madame.
La Reine
cette nuit, quand on est venu te saisir dans ta maison, tu lui avais donné rendez-vous, tu l’ attendais?
Jane, joignant les mains.
Mon dieu, madame!
La Reine
réponds.
Jane, d’ une voix faible.
Oui.
La Reine
tu sais qu’ il n’ y a plus rien à espérer ni pour lui, ni pour toi?
Jane
que la mort. C’ est une espérance.
La Reine

raconte-moi toute l’ aventure. Où as-tu rencontré cet homme pour la première fois?
Jane
la première fois que je l’ ai vu, c’ était… -mais à quoi bon tout cela? Une malheureuse fille du peuple, pauvre et vaine, folle et coquette, amoureuse de parures et de beaux dehors, qui se laisse éblouir par la belle mise d’ un grand seigneur. Voilà tout. Je suis séduite, je suis déshonorée, je suis perdue. Je n’ ai rien à ajouter à cela. Mon dieu!
Vous ne voyez donc pas que chaque mot que je dis me fait mourir, madame.
La Reine
c’ est bien.
Jane
oh! Votre colère est terrible, je le sais, madame.
Ma tête ploie d’ avance sous le châtiment que vous me préparez…
La Reine
moi! Un châtiment pour toi! Est-ce que je m’ occupe de toi, folle! Qui es-tu, malheureuse créature, pour que la reine s’ occupe de toi? Non,
mon affaire, c’ est Fabiano. Quant à toi, femme, c’ est un autre que moi qui se chargera de te punir.
Jane
eh bien, madame, quelque soit celui que vous en chargerez, quelque soit le châtiment, je subirai tout sans me plaindre, je vous remercierai même, si vous avez pitié d’ une prière que je vais vous faire.
Il y a un homme qui m’ a prise orpheline au berceau, qui m’ a adoptée, qui m’ a élevée, qui m’ a nourrie, qui m’ a aimée et qui m’ aime encore; un homme dont je suis bien indigne, envers qui j’ ai été bien criminelle, et dont l’ image est pourtant au fond de mon cœur chère, auguste et sacrée comme celle de Dieu; un homme qui sans doute à l’ heure où je vous parle trouve sa maison vide et abandonnée, et dévastée, et n’ y comprend rien et s’ arrache les cheveux de désespoir. Hé bien, ce que je demande à votre majesté, madame, c’ est qu’ il

n’ y comprenne jamais rien, c’ est que je disparaisse sans qu’ il sache jamais ce que je suis devenue, ni ce que j’ ai fait, ni ce que vous avez fait de moi.
Hélas, mon dieu! Je ne sais pas si je me fais bien comprendre; mais vous devez sentir que j’ ai là un ami, un noble et généreux ami, -pauvre Gilbert!
Oh oui, c’ est bien vrai! -qui m’ estime et qui me
croit pure, et que je ne veux pas qu’ il me haïsse et qu’ il me méprise… -vous me comprenez, n’ est-ce pas, madame? L’ estime de cet homme,
c’ est pour moi bien plus que la vie, allez! Et puis, cela lui ferait un si affreux chagrin! Tant de surprise! Il n’ y croirait pas d’ abord. Non, il n’ y croirait pas. Mon dieu! Pauvre Gilbert! Oh, madame!
Ayez pitié de lui et de moi. Il ne vous a rien fait, lui. Qu’ il ne sache rien de ceci, au nom du ciel!
Au nom du ciel! Qu’ il ne sache pas que je suis coupable, il se tuerait. Qu’ il ne sache pas que je suis morte, il mourrait.
La Reine
l’ homme dont vous parlez est là qui vous écoute, qui vous juge et qui va vous punir.
Gilbert se montre.
Jane
ciel! Gilbert!
Gilbert, à la reine.
Ma vie est à vous, madame.
La Reine
bien. Avez-vous quelques conditions à me faire?
Gilbert
oui, madame.
La Reine
lesquelles? Nous vous donnons notre parole de reine que nous y souscrivons d’ avance.

Gilbert
voici, madame. -c’ est bien simple. C’ est une dette de reconnaissance que j’ acquitte envers un seigneur de votre cour qui m’ a fait beaucoup travailler dans mon métier de ciseleur.
La Reine
parlez.
Gilbert
ce seigneur a une liaison secrète avec une femme qu’ il ne peut épouser, parce qu’ elle tient à une famille proscrite. Cette femme, qui a vécu cachée jusqu’ à présent, c’ est la fille unique et l’ héritière du dernier Lord Talbot, décapité sous le Roi
Henri Viii.
La Reine
comment! Es-tu sûr de ce que tu dis là? Jean Talbot, le bon lord catholique, le loyal défenseur de ma mère d’ Aragon, il a laissé une fille, dis-tu?
Sur ma couronne, si cela est vrai, cet enfant est
mon enfant; et ce que Jean Talbot a fait pour la mère de Marie D’ Angleterre, Marie D’ Angleterre le fera pour la fille de Jean Talbot.
Gilbert
alors, ce sera sans doute un bonheur pour votre majesté de rendre à la fille de Lord Talbot les biens de son père?…
La Reine
oui, certes, et de les reprendre à Fabiano! - mais a-t-on les preuves que cette héritière existe?
Gilbert
on les a.
La Reine
d’ ailleurs, si nous n’ avons pas de preuves, nous en ferons. Nous ne sommes pas la reine pour rien.
Gilbert
votre majesté rendra à la fille de Lord Talbot les biens, les titres, le rang, le nom, les armes et la devise de son père. Votre majesté la relevera de toute proscription et lui garantira la vie sauve. Votre majesté la mariera à ce seigneur qui est le seul homme qu' elle puisse épouser. à ces conditions, madame, vous pourrez disposer de moi, de ma liberté, de ma vie et de ma volonté, selon votre plaisir.

La Reine

bien. Je ferai ce que vous venez de dire.

Gilbert

votre majesté fera ce que je viens de dire. La reine d' Angleterre me le jure, à moi, Gilbert, l' ouvrier ciseleur, sur sa couronne que voici et sur l' évangile ouvert que voilà.

La Reine

sur la royale couronne que voici et sur le divin évangile que voilà, je te le jure!

Gilbert

le pacte est conclu, madame. Faites préparer une tombe pour moi, et un lit nuptial pour les époux. Le seigneur dont je parlais, c' est Fabiani, Comte De Clanbrassil. L' héritière de Talbot, la voici.

Jane

que dit-il?

La Reine

est-ce que j' ai affaire à un insensé? Qu' est-ce que cela signifie? Maître! Faites attention à ceci, que vous êtes hardi de vous railler de la reine d' Angleterre; que les chambres royales sont des lieux où il faut prendre garde aux paroles qu' on dit, et qu' il y a des occasions où la bouche fait tomber la tête!

Gilbert

ma tête, vous l' avez, madame. Moi, j' ai votre serment!

La Reine

vous ne parlez pas sérieusement. Ce Fabiano! Cette Jane!… -allons donc!

Gilbert

cette Jane est la fille et l’ héritière de Lord Talbot.

La Reine

bah! Vision! Chimère! Folie! Les preuves, les avez-vous?

Gilbert

complètes.

Il tire un paquet de sa poitrine.

— veuillez lire ces papiers.

La Reine

est-ce que j’ ai le temps de lire vos papiers, moi? Est-ce que je vous ai demandé vos papiers? Qu’ est-ce que cela me fait, vos papiers? Sur mon âme, s’ ils prouvent quelque chose, je les jetterai au feu, et il ne restera rien.

Gilbert

que votre serment, madame.

La Reine

mon serment! Mon serment!

Gilbert

sur la couronne et sur l’ évangile, madame! C’ est-à-dire, sur votre tête et sur votre âme, sur votre vie dans ce monde et sur votre vie dans l’ autre.

La Reine

mais que veux-tu donc? Je te jure que tu es en démence!

Gilbert

ce que je veux? Jane a perdu son rang, rendez-le lui! Jane a perdu l’ honneur, rendez-le lui! Proclamez-la fille de Lord Talbot et femme de Lord Clanbrassil, -et puis, prenez ma vie!

La Reine

ta vie! Mais que veux-tu que j’ en fasse de ta vie à présent? Je n’ en voulais que pour me venger de cet homme, de Fabiano! Tu ne comprends donc rien? Je ne te comprends pas non plus, moi. Tu parlais de vengeance! C’ est comme cela que tu te venges? Ces gens du peuple sont stupides! Et puis, est-ce que je crois à ta ridicule histoire d’ une héritière de Talbot? Les papiers! Tu me montre les papiers! Je ne veux pas les regarder. Ah! Une femme te trahit, et tu fais le généreux! à ton aise. Je ne suis pas généreuse, moi! J’ ai la rage et la haine dans le cœur. Je me vengerai, et tu m’ y aideras. Mais cet homme est fou! Il est fou! Il est fou! Mon dieu! Pourquoi en ai-je besoin? C’ est désespérant d’ avoir affaire à des gens pareils dans des affaires sérieuses!

Gilbert

j’ ai votre parole de reine catholique. Lord Clanbrassil a séduit Jane, il l’ épousera.

La Reine

et s’ il refuse de l’ épouser?

Gilbert

vous l’ y forcerez, madame.

Jane

oh non! Ayez pitié de moi, Gilbert!

Gilbert

eh bien! S’ il refuse, cet infâme, votre majesté fera de lui et de moi ce qui lui plaira.

La Reine, avec joie.

Ah! C’ est tout ce que je veux!

Gilbert

si ce cas-là arrivait, pourvu que la couronne de comtesse de Waterford soit solennellement replacée par la reine sur la tête sacrée et inviolable de Jane Talbot que voici, je ferai, moi, tout ce que la reine m’ imposera.

La Reine

tout?

Gilbert

tout.

La Reine

tu diras ce qu' il faudra dire? Tu mourras de la mort qu' on voudra?

Gilbert

de la mort qu' on voudra.

Jane

ô dieu!

La Reine

tu le jures?

Gilbert

je le jure.

La Reine

la chose peut s' arranger ainsi. Cela suffit. J' ai ta parole, tu as la mienne. C' est dit.

Elle paraît réfléchir un moment.

à Jane.

— vous êtes inutile ici, sortez, vous. On vous rappellera.

Jane

ô Gilbert! Qu' avez-vous fait-là? ô Gilbert! Je suis une misérable, et je n' ose lever les yeux sur vous! ô Gilbert! Vous êtes plus qu' un ange, car vous avez tout à la fois les vertus d' un ange et les passions d' un homme!

Elle sort.

JOURNEE 2 SCENE 5

La Reine, Gilbert; puis Simon Renard, Lord
Chandos, et les gardes.
La Reine, à Gilbert.
As-tu une arme sur toi? Un couteau? Un poignard?
Quelque chose?
Gilbert, tirant de sa poitrine le poignard de Lord
Clanbrassil.
Un poignard? Oui, madame.
La Reine
bien. Tiens-le à ta main.
Elle lui saisit vivement le bras.
— monsieur le bailli d’ Amont! Lord Chandos!
Entrent Simon Renard, Lord Chandos et les gardes.
— assurez-vous de cet homme! Il a levé le poignard sur moi. Je lui ai pris le bras au moment où il allait me frapper. C’ est un assassin.
Gilbert
madame!…
La Reine, bas à Gilbert.
Oublies-tu déjà nos conventions? Est-ce ainsi que tu te laisses faire?
Haut.
— vous êtes tous témoins qu’ il avait encore le poignard à la main? Monsieur le bailli, comment se nomme le bourreau de la tour de Londres?
Simon Renard
c’ est un irlandais appelé Mac Dermoti.
La Reine
qu’ on me l’ amène, j’ ai à lui parler.
Simon Renard
vous-même?
La Reine
moi-même.
Simon Renard

la reine parlera au bourreau!
La Reine
oui, la reine parlera au bourreau, la tête parlera à la main. -allez donc!
Un garde sort.
Mylord Chandos, et vous, messieurs, vous me répondez de cet homme. Gardez-le là, dans vos rangs, derrière vous. Il va se passer ici des choses qu’ il faut qu’ il voie. -monsieur le lieutenant d’ Amont, Lord Clanbrassil est-il au palais?
Simon Renard
il est là, dans la chambre peinte, qui attend que le bon plaisir de la reine soit de le voir.
La Reine
il ne se doute de rien?
Simon Renard
de rien.
La Reine, à Lord Chandos.
Qu’ il entre.
Simon Renard
toute la cour est là aussi qui attend.
N’ introduira-t-on personne avant Lord Clanbrassil?
La Reine.
Quels sont parmi nos seigneurs ceux qui haïssent
Fabiani?
Simon Renard.
Tous.
La Reine.
Ceux qui le haïssent le plus?
Simon Renard.
Clinton, Montagu, Somerset, le comte de Derby,
Gerard Fitz-Gerard, lord Paget, et le lord
chancelier.
La Reine, à lord Chandos.
Introduisez ceux-là, tous, excepté le lord chancelier. Allez.
Chandos sort.

à Simon Renard.

— le digne évêque chancelier n’ aime pas Fabiani plus que les autres; mais c’ est un homme à scrupules.

Apercevant les papiers que Gilbert a déposés sur la table.

— ah! Il faut pourtant que je jette un coup d’ œil sur ces papiers.

Pendant qu’ elle les examine, la porte du fond s’ ouvre. Entrent avec de profonds saluts les seigneurs désignés par la reine.

JOURNEE 2 SCENE 6

Les mêmes, lord Clinton et les autres seigneurs.

La Reine.

Bonjour, messieurs. Dieu vous ait en sa garde, mylords.

à lord Montagu.

— Anthony Brown, je n' oublie jamais que vous avez dignement tenu tête à Jean De Montmorency et au sieur de Toulouse dans mes négociations avec l' empereur mon oncle. -lord Paget, vous recevrez aujourd' hui vos lettres de baron Paget de Beaudesert en Stafford. -eh mais! C' est notre vieil ami lord Clinton! Nous sommes toujours votre bonne amie, mylord. C' est vous qui avez exterminé Thomas Wyat dans la plaine de Saint-James. Souvenons-nous-en tous, messieurs. Ce jour-là la couronne d' Angleterre a été sauvée par un pont qui a permis à mes troupes d' arriver jusqu' aux rebelles, et par un mur qui a empêché les rebelles d' arriver jusqu' à moi. Le pont, c' est le pont de Londres. Le mur, c' est lord Clinton!

Lord Clinton, bas à Simon Renard.

Voilà six mois que la reine ne m' avait parlé. Comme elle est bonne aujourd' hui!

Simon Renard, bas à lord Clinton.

Patience, mylord. Vous la trouverez meilleure encore tout à l' heure.

La Reine, à lord Chandos.

Mylord Clanbrassil peut entrer.

à Simon Renard.

— quand il sera ici depuis quelques minutes… elle lui parle bas à l' oreille, et lui désigne la porte par laquelle Jane est sortie.

Simon Renard.

Il suffit, madame.

Entre Fabiani.

JOURNEE 2 SCENE 7

Les mêmes, Fabiani.

La Reine.

Ah! Le voici!…

elle se remet à parler bas à Simon Renard.

Fabiani, à part, salué par tout le monde et regardant autour de lui.

Qu’ est-ce que cela veut dire? Il n’ y a que de mes ennemis ici, ce matin. La reine parle bas à Simon Renard. Diable! Elle rit! Mauvais signe!

La Reine, gracieusement à Fabiani.

Dieu vous garde, mylord!

Fabiani, saisissant sa main qu’ il baise.

Madame…

à part.

— elle m’ a souri. Le péril n’ est pas pour moi.

La Reine, toujours gracieuse.

J’ ai à vous parler.

Elle vient avec lui sur le devant du théâtre.

Fabiani.

Et moi aussi j’ ai à vous parler, madame. J’ ai des reproches à vous faire. M’ éloigner, m’ exiler pendant si long-temps! Ah! Il n’ en serait pas ainsi, si dans les heures d’ absence vous songiez à moi comme je songe à vous.

La Reine.

Vous êtes injuste; depuis que vous m’ avez quittée je ne m’ occupe que de vous.

Fabiani.

Est-il bien vrai? Ai-je tant de bonheur? Répétez-le-moi.

La Reine, toujours souriant.

Je vous le jure.

Fabiani.

Vous m’ aimez donc comme je vous aime?

La Reine.
Oui, mylord. -certainement, je n’ ai pensé qu’ à vous. Tellement que j’ ai songé à vous ménager une surprise agréable à votre retour.
Fabiani.
Comment! Quelle surprise?
La Reine.
Une rencontre qui vous fera plaisir.
Fabiani.
La rencontre de qui?
La Reine.
Devinez. -vous ne devinez pas?
Fabiani.
Non, madame.
La Reine.
Tournez-vous.
Il se retourne et aperçoit Jane sur le seuil de la petite porte entr’ ouverte.
Fabiani, à part.
Jane!
Jane, à part.
C’ est lui!
La Reine, toujours avec un sourire.
Mylord, connaissez-vous cette jeune fille?
Fabiani.
Non, madame.
La Reine.
Jeune fille, connaissez-vous mylord?
Jane.
La vérité avant la vie. Oui, madame.
La Reine.
Ainsi, mylord, vous ne connaissez pas cette femme?
Fabiani.
Madame! On veut me perdre. Je suis entouré d’ ennemis. Cette femme est liguée avec eux sans doute. Je ne la connais pas, madame! Je ne sais pas qui elle est, madame!

La Reine, se levant et lui frappant le visage de son gant.

Ah! Tu es un lâche! -ah! Tu trahis l' une et tu renies l' autre! Ah! Tu ne sais pas qui elle est! Veux-tu que je te le dise, moi? Cette femme est Jane Talbot, fille de Jean Talbot, le bon seigneur catholique mort sur l' échafaud pour ma mère. Cette femme est Jane Talbot, ma cousine; Jane Talbot, comtesse de Shrewsbury, comtesse de Wexford, comtesse de Waterford, pairesse d' Angleterre! Voilà ce que c' est que cette femme! -lord Paget, vous êtes commissaire du sceau privé, vous tiendrez compte de nos paroles. La reine d' Angleterre reconnaît solennellement la jeune femme ici présente pour Jane, fille et unique héritière du dernier comte de Waterford.

Montrant les papiers.

— voici les titres et les preuves que vous ferez sceller du grand sceau. C' est notre plaisir.

à Fabiani.

— oui, comtesse de Waterford! Et cela est prouvé! Et tu rendras les biens, misérable! -ah! Tu ne connais pas cette femme! Ah! Tu ne sais pas qui est cette femme! Eh bien! Je te l' apprends, moi! C' est Jane Talbot! Et faut-il t' en dire plus encore?…

le regardant en face, à voix basse, entre les dents.

— lâche! C' est ta maîtresse!

Fabiani.

Madame…

La Reine.

Voilà ce qu' elle est; maintenant voici ce que tu es, toi. -tu es un homme sans âme, un homme sans cœur, un homme sans esprit! Tu es un fourbe et un misérable! Tu es… -pardieu, messieurs, vous n' avez pas besoin de vous éloigner. Cela m' est bien égal que vous entendiez ce que je vais dire à cet homme! Je ne baisse pas la voix, il me semble.

— Fabiano! Tu es un misérable, un traître envers moi, un lâche envers elle, un valet menteur, le plus vil des hommes, le dernier des hommes! Cela est pourtant vrai, je t' ai fait comte de Clanbrassil, baron de Dinasmonddy, quoi encore? Baron de Darmouth en Devonshire. Eh bien! C' est que j' étais folle! Je vous demande pardon de vous avoir fait coudoyer par cet homme-là, mylords. Toi, chevalier! Toi, gentilhomme! Toi, seigneur! Mais compare-toi donc un peu à ceux qui sont cela, misérable! Mais regarde, en voilà autour de toi, des gentilshommes! Voilà Bridges, baron Chandos. Voilà Seymour, duc de Somerset. Voilà les Stanley, qui sont comtes de Derby depuis l' an quatorze-cent quatre-vingt-cinq! Voilà les Clinton, qui sont barons Clinton depuis douze-cent quatre-vingt-dix-huit! Est-ce que tu t' imagines que tu ressembles à ces gens-là, toi! Tu te dis allié à la famille espagnole de Penalver, mais ce n' est pas vrai, tu n' es qu' un mauvais italien, rien! Moins que rien! Fils d' un chaussetier du village de Larino! -oui, messieurs, fils d' un chaussetier! Je le savais et je ne le disais pas et je le cachais, et je faisais semblant de croire cet homme quand il parlait de sa noblesse. Car voilà comme nous sommes, nous autres femmes. ô mon dieu! Je voudrais qu' il y eût des femmes ici, ce serait une leçon pour toutes. Ce misérable! Ce misérable! Il trompe une femme, et renie l' autre! Infâme! Certainement, tu es bien infâme! Comment! Depuis que je parle il n' est pas encore à genoux! à genoux, Fabiani! Mylords, mettez cet homme de force à genoux!

Fabiani.

Votre majesté…

La Reine.

Ce misérable, que j' ai comblé de bienfaits! Ce laquais napolitain, que j’ ai fait chevalier doré et comte libre d’ Angleterre! Ah! Je devais m’ attendre à ce qui arrive! On m’ avait bien dit que cela finirait ainsi. Mais je suis toujours comme cela, je m’ obstine, et je vois ensuite que j’ ai eu tort. C’ est ma faute. Italien, cela veut dire fourbe! Napolitain, cela veut dire lâche! Toutes les fois que mon père s’ est servi d’ un italien, il s’ en est repenti. Ce Fabiani! Tu vois, lady Jane, à quel homme tu t’ es livrée, malheureuse enfant! -je te vengerai, va! -oh! Je devais le savoir d’ avance, on ne peut tirer autre chose de la poche d’ un italien qu’ un stylet, et de l’ âme d’ un italien que la trahison!

Fabiani.

Madame, je vous jure…

La Reine.

Il va se parjurer à présent! Il sera vil jusqu’ à la fin; il nous fera rougir jusqu’ au bout devant ces hommes, nous autres faibles femmes qui l’ avons aimé! Il ne relèvera seulement pas la tête!

Fabiani.

Si, madame! Je la relèverai. Je suis perdu, je le vois bien. Ma mort est décidée. Vous emploierez tous les moyens, le poignard, le poison…

La Reine, lui prenant les mains, et l’ attirant vivement sur le devant du théâtre.

— le poison! Le poignard! Que dis-tu là, italien? La vengeance traître, la vengeance honteuse, la vengeance par derrière, la vengeance comme dans ton pays! Non, signor Fabiani, ni poignard, ni poison. Est-ce que j’ ai à me cacher, moi, à chercher le coin des rues la nuit, et à me faire petite quand je me venge? Non pardieu, je veux le grand jour, entends-tu, mylord? Le plein midi, le beau soleil, la place publique, la hache et le billot, la foule dans la rue, la foule aux fenêtres, la foule sur les toits, cent mille témoins! Je veux qu' on ait peur, entends-tu, mylord? Qu' on trouve cela splendide, effroyable et magnifique, et qu' on dise: c' est une femme qui a été outragée, mais c' est une reine qui se venge! Ce favori si envié, ce beau jeune homme insolent que j' ai couvert de velours et de satin, je veux le voir plié en deux, effaré et tremblant, à genoux sur un drap noir, pieds nus, mains liées, hué par le peuple, manié par le bourreau. Ce cou blanc où j' avais mis un collier d' or, j' y veux mettre une corde. J' ai vu quel effet ce Fabiani faisait sur un trône, je veux voir quel effet il fera sur un échafaud!

Fabiani.
Madame…
La Reine.
Plus un mot. Ah! Plus un mot. Tu es bien véritablement perdu, vois-tu. Tu monteras sur
l' échafaud comme Suffolk et Northumberland. C' est une fête comme une autre que je donnerai à ma bonne ville de Londres! Tu sais comme elle te hait, ma bonne ville! Pardieu, c' est une belle chose quand on a besoin de se venger d' être Marie, dame et reine d' Angleterre, fille de Henri Viii, et maîtresse des quatre mers! Et quand tu seras sur
l' échafaud, Fabiani, tu pourras, à ton gré, faire une longue harangue au peuple comme Northumberland, ou une longue prière à Dieu comme Suffolk pour donner à la grâce le temps de venir; le ciel
m' est témoin que tu es un traître et que la grâce ne viendra pas! Ce misérable fourbe qui me parlait d' amour et me disait tu ce matin! -hé mon dieu, messieurs, cela paraît vous étonner que je parle ainsi devant vous; mais, je vous le répète,
que m' importe?
à lord Somerset.
— mylord duc, vous êtes constable de la tour,

demandez son épée à cet homme.
Fabiani.
La voici; mais je proteste. En admettant qu' il soit prouvé que j' ai trompé ou séduit une femme…
La Reine.
Eh! Que m' importe que tu aies séduit une femme!
Est-ce que je m' occupe de cela? Ces messieurs sont témoins que cela m' est bien égal!
Fabiani.
Séduire une femme, ce n' est pas un crime capital, madame. Votre majesté n' a pu faire condamner
Trogmorton sur une accusation pareille.
Il nous brave maintenant, je crois! Le ver devient serpent. Et qui te dit que c' est de cela qu' on t' accuse?
Fabiani.
Alors de quoi m' accuse-t-on? Je ne suis pas anglais, moi, je ne suis pas sujet de votre majesté. Je suis sujet du roi de Naples et vassal du saint-père.
Je sommerai son légat, l' éminentissime cardinal
Polus, de me réclamer. Je me défendrai, madame.
Je suis étranger. Je ne puis être mis en cause que si j' ai commis un crime, un vrai crime. - quel est mon crime?
La Reine.
Tu demandes quel est ton crime?
Fabiani.
Oui, madame.
La Reine.
Vous entendez tous la question qui m' est faite, mylords, vous allez entendre la réponse. Faites attention, et prenez garde à vous tous tant que vous êtes, car vous allez voir que je n' ai qu' à frapper du pied pour faire sortir de terre un échafaud. -Chandos! Chandos! Ouvrez cette porte à deux battans! Toute la cour! Tout le monde!
Faites entrer tout le monde.

La porte du fond s’ ouvre. Entre toute la cour.

JOURNEE 2 SCENE 8

Les mêmes, le lord chancelier, toute la cour.
La Reine.
— entrez, entrez, mylords. J’ ai véritablement beaucoup de plaisir à vous voir tous aujourd’ hui.
— bien, bien, les hommes de justice, par ici, plus près, plus près. -où sont les sergens d’ armes de la chambre des lords, Harriot et Llanerillo? Ah! Vous voilà, messieurs. Soyez les bienvenus. Tirez vos épées. Bien. Placez-vous à droite et à gauche de cet homme. Il est votre prisonnier.
Fabiani.
Madame, quel est mon crime?
La Reine.
Mylord Gardiner, mon savant ami, vous êtes chancelier d’ Angleterre, nous vous faisons savoir que vous ayez à vous assembler en diligence, vous et les douze lords commissaires de la chambre étoilée, que nous regrettons de ne pas voir ici. Il se passe des choses étranges dans ce palais. écoutez, mylords, Madame élisabeth a déjà suscité plus d’ un ennemi à notre couronne. Il y a eu le complot de Pietro Caro qui a fait le mouvement d’ Exeter, et qui correspondait secrètement avec Madame élisabeth, par le moyen d’ un chiffre taillé sur une guitare. Il y a eu la trahison de Thomas Wyat, qui a soulevé le comté de Kent. Il y a eu la rébellion du duc de Suffolk, lequel a été saisi dans le creux d’ un arbre après la défaite des siens. Il y a aujourd’ hui un nouvel attentat. écoutez tous. Aujourd’ hui, ce matin, un homme s’ est présenté à mon audience. Après quelques paroles, il a levé un poignard sur moi. J’ ai arrêté son bras à temps. Lord Chandos et monsieur le bailli d’ Amont ont saisi l’ homme. Il a déclaré avoir été poussé à ce crime par lord Clanbrassil.

Fabiani.

Par moi? Cela n' est pas. Oh! Mais voilà une chose affreuse! Cet homme n' existe pas. On ne retrouvera pas cet homme. Qui est-il? Où est-il?

La Reine.

Il est ici.

Gilbert, sortant du milieu des soldats derrière lesquels il est resté caché jusqu' alors.

C' est moi.

La Reine.

En conséquence des déclarations de cet homme, nous, Marie, reine, nous accusons devant la chambre aux étoiles cet autre homme, Fabiano Fabiani, comte de Clanbrassil, de haute trahison et d' attentat régicide sur notre personne impériale et sacrée.

Fabiani.

Régicide, moi! C' est monstrueux! Oh! Ma tête s' égare! Ma vue se trouble! Quel est ce piége? Qui que tu sois, misérable, oses-tu affirmer que ce qu' a dit la reine est vrai?

Gilbert.

Oui.

Fabiani.

Je t' ai poussé au régicide, moi?

Gilbert.

Oui.

Fabiani.

Oui! Toujours oui! Malédiction! C' est que vous ne pouvez pas savoir à quel point cela est faux, messeigneurs! Cet homme sort de l' enfer. Malheureux! Tu veux me perdre; mais tu ignores que tu te perds en même temps. Le crime dont tu me charges te charge aussi. Tu me feras mourir, mais tu mourras. Avec un seul mot, insensé, tu fais tomber deux têtes, la mienne et la tienne. Sais-tu cela?

Gilbert.

Je le sais.

Fabiani.

Mylords, cet homme est payé…

Gilbert.

Par vous. Voici la bourse pleine d' or que vous m' avez donnée pour le crime. Votre blason et votre chiffre y sont brodés.

Fabiani.

Juste ciel! -mais on ne représente pas le poignard avec lequel cet homme voulait, dit-on, frapper la reine. Où est le poignard?

Lord Chandos.

Le voici.

Gilbert, à Fabiani.

C' est le vôtre. -vous me l' avez donné pour cela. On en retrouvera le fourreau chez vous.

Le Lord Chancelier.

Comte de Clanbrassil, qu' avez-vous à répondre? Reconnaissez-vous cet homme?

Fabiani.

Non.

Gilbert.

Au fait, il ne m' a vu que la nuit. -laissez-moi lui dire deux mots à l' oreille, madame; cela aidera sa mémoire.

Il s' approche de Fabiani. Bas.

— tu ne reconnais donc personne aujourd' hui, mylord? Pas plus l' homme outragé que la femme séduite. Ah! La reine se venge, mais l' homme du peuple se venge aussi. Tu m' en avais défié, je crois! Te voilà pris entre les deux vengeances. Mylord, qu' en dis-tu? -je suis Gilbert, le ciseleur!

Fabiani.

Oui! Je vous reconnais. -je reconnais cet homme, mylords. Du moment où j' ai affaire à cet homme, je n' ai plus rien à dire.

La Reine.
Il avoue!
Le Lord Chancelier, à Gilbert.
D’ après la loi normande et le statut vingt-cinq du roi Henri Viii, dans les cas de lèse-majesté au premier chef, l’ aveu ne sauve pas le complice. N’ oubliez point que c’ est un cas où la reine n’ a pas le droit de grâce, et que vous mourrez sur l’ échafaud comme celui que vous accusez. Réfléchissez. Confirmez-vous tout ce que vous avez dit?
Gilbert.
Je sais que je mourrai, et je le confirme.
Jane, à part.
Mon dieu! Si c’ est un rêve, il est bien horrible!
Le Lord Chancelier, à Gilbert.
Consentez-vous à réitérer vos déclarations la main sur l’ évangile?
Il présente l’ évangile à Gilbert, qui y pose la main.
Gilbert.
Je jure, la main sur l’ évangile, et avec ma mort prochaine devant les yeux, que cet homme est un assassin; que ce poignard, qui est le sien, a servi au crime; que cette bourse, qui est la sienne, m’ a été donnée par lui pour le crime. Que Dieu m’ assiste! C’ est la vérité!
Le Lord Chancelier, à Fabiani.
Mylord, qu’ avez-vous à dire?
Fabiani.
Rien. -je suis perdu!
Simon Renard, bas à la reine.
Votre majesté a fait mander le bourreau; il est là.
La Reine.
Bon, qu’ il vienne.
Les rangs des gentilshommes s’ écartent, et l’ on voit paraître le bourreau vêtu de rouge et de noir, portant sur l’ épaule une longue épée dans son fourreau.

JOURNEE 2 SCENE 9

Les mêmes, le bourreau.
La Reine.
Mylord duc de Somerset, ces deux hommes à la tour! -mylord Gardiner, notre chancelier, que leur procès commence dès demain devant les douze pairs de la chambre aux étoiles, et que Dieu soit en aide à la vieille Angleterre! Nous entendons que ces hommes soient jugés tous deux avant que nous partions pour Exford, où nous ouvrirons le parlement, et pour Windsor, où nous ferons nos pâques.
Au bourreau.
— approche-toi! Je suis aise de te voir. Tu es un bon serviteur. Tu es vieux. Tu as déjà vu trois règnes. Il est d' usage que les souverains de ce royaume te fassent un don, le plus magnifique possible, à leur avénement. Mon père, Henri Viii, t' a donné l' agrafe en diamans de son manteau. Mon frère, édouard Vi, t' a donné un hanap d' or ciselé. C' est mon tour maintenant. Je ne t' ai encore rien donné, moi. Il faut que je te fasse un présent. Approche.
Montrant Fabiani.
— tu vois bien cette tête, cette jeune et charmante tête, cette tête qui, ce matin encore, était ce que j' avais de plus beau, de plus cher et de plus précieux au monde, eh bien! Cette tête, tu la vois bien, dis? -je te la donne!

JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 1

Salle de l’ intérieur de la tour de Londres. Voûte ogive soutenue par de gros piliers. à droite et à gauche, les deux portes basses de deux cachots. à droite, une lucarne qui est censée donner sur la Tamise. à gauche, une lucarne qui est censée donner sur les rues. De chaque côté, une porte masquée dans le mur. Au fond, une galerie avec une sorte de grand balcon fermé par des vitraux et donnant sur les cours extérieures de la tour.

Gilbert, Joshua.

Gilbert.

Eh bien?

Joshua.

Hélas!

Gilbert.

Plus d’ espoir?

Joshua.

Plus d’ espoir!

Gilbert va à la fenêtre.

Oh! Tu ne verras rien de la fenêtre!

Gilbert.

Tu t’ es informé, n’ est-ce pas?

Joshua.

Je ne suis que trop sûr!

Gilbert.

C’ est pour Fabiani?

Joshua.

C’ est pour Fabiani.

Gilbert.

Que cet homme est heureux! Malédiction sur moi!

Joshua.

Pauvre Gilbert! Ton tour viendra. Aujourd’ hui c’ est lui, demain ce sera toi.

Gilbert.

Que veux-tu dire? Nous ne nous entendons pas.
De quoi me parles-tu?
Joshua.
De l’ échafaud qu’ on dresse en ce moment.
Gilbert.
Et moi, je te parle de Jane!
Joshua.
De Jane!
Gilbert.
Oui, de Jane! De Jane seulement! Que m’ importe le reste! Tu as donc tout oublié, toi? Tu ne te souviens donc plus que depuis un mois, collé aux barreaux de mon cachot d’ où l’ on aperçoit la rue, je la vois rôder sans cesse, pâle et en deuil, au pied de cette tourelle qui renferme deux hommes, Fabiani et moi? Tu ne te rappelles donc plus mes angoisses, mes doutes, mes incertitudes? Pour lequel des deux vient-elle? Je me fais cette question nuit et jour, pauvre misérable! Je te l’ ai faite à toi-même, Joshua, et tu m’ avais promis hier au soir de tâcher de la voir et de lui parler. Oh! Dis! Sais-tu quelque chose? Est-ce pour moi qu’ elle vient ou pour Fabiani?
Joshua.
J’ ai su que Fabiani devait décidément être décapité aujourd’ hui, et toi, demain, et j’ avoue que depuis ce moment-là je suis comme fou, Gilbert. L’ échafaud a fait sortir Jane de mon esprit. Ta mort…
Gilbert.
Ma mort! Qu’ entends-tu par ce mot? Ma mort, c’ est que Jane ne m’ aime plus. Du jour où je n’ ai plus été aimé, j’ ai été mort. Oh! Vraiment mort, Joshua! Ce qui survit de moi depuis ce temps, ne vaut pas la peine qu’ on prendra demain. Oh! Vois-tu, tu ne te fais pas d’ idée de ce que c’ est qu’ un homme qui aime! Si l’ on m’ avait dit il y a deux mois: -Jane, votre Jane sans tache, votre Jane si pure, votre amour, votre orgueil, votre lis, votre trésor, Jane se donnera à un autre. En voudrez-vous après? -j’ aurais dit: non! Je n’ en voudrai pas! Plutôt mille fois la mort pour elle et pour moi! Et j’ aurais foulé sous mes pieds celui qui m’ eût parlé ainsi. -eh bien si, j’ en veux! -aujourd’ hui, vois-tu bien,

Jane n’ est plus la Jane sans tache qui avait mon adoration, la Jane dont j’ osais à peine effleurer le front de mes lèvres, Jane s’ est donnée à un autre, à un misérable, je le sais, eh bien! C’ est égal, je l’ aime. J’ ai le cœur brisé; mais je l’ aime. Je baiserais le bas
de sa robe, et je lui demanderais pardon si elle voulait de moi. Elle serait dans le ruisseau de la rue avec celles qui y sont que je la ramasserais là, et que je la serrerais sur mon cœur, Joshua!
— Joshua! Je donnerais, non cent ans de vie, puisque je n’ ai plus qu’ un jour, mais l’ éternité que j’ aurai demain, pour la voir me sourire encore une fois, une seule fois avant ma mort, et me dire ce mot adoré qu’ elle me disait autrefois: je t’ aime! -Joshua!
Joshua! C’ est comme cela le cœur d’ un homme qui aime. Vous croyez que vous tuerez la femme qui vous trompe? Non, vous ne la tuerez pas, vous vous coucherez à ses pieds après comme avant, seulement vous serez triste. Tu me trouves faible!
Qu’ est-ce que j’ aurais gagné, moi, à tuer Jane?
Oh! J’ ai le cœur plein d’ idées insupportables. Oh!
Si elle m’ aimait encore, que m’ importe tout ce qu’ elle a fait! Mais elle aime Fabiani! Mais elle aime Fabiani! C’ est pour Fabiani qu’ elle vient!
Il y a une chose certaine, c’ est que je voudrais mourir! Aie pitié de moi, Joshua!
Joshua.
Fabiani sera mis à mort aujourd’ hui.
Gilbert.

Et moi demain.
Joshua.
Dieu est au bout de tout.
Gilbert.
Aujourd’ hui je serai vengé de lui. Demain il sera vengé de moi.
Joshua.
Mon frère, voici le second constable de la tour, maître éneas Dulverton. Il faut rentrer. Mon frère, je te reverrai ce soir.
Gilbert.
Oh! Mourir sans être aimé! Mourir sans être pleuré! Jane!… Jane!… Jane!… il rentre dans le cachot.
Joshua.
Pauvre Gilbert! Mon dieu! Qui m’ eût jamais dit que ce qui arrive arriverait?
Il sort. -entrent Simon Renard et maître éneas.

JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 2

Simon Renard, maître éneas Dulverton.
Simon Renard.
C’ est fort singulier, comme vous dites, mais que voulez-vous? La reine est folle, elle ne sait ce qu’ elle veut. On ne peut compter sur rien, c’ est une femme. Je vous demande un peu ce qu’ elle vient faire ici! Tenez, le cœur de la femme est une énigme dont le roi François Ier a écrit le mot sur les vitraux de Chambord:
souvent femme varie,
bien fol est qui s’ y fie.
écoutez, maître éneas, nous sommes anciens amis. Il faut que cela finisse aujourd’ hui. Tout dépend de vous ici. Si l’ on vous charge…
il parle bas à l’ oreille de maître éneas.
— traînez la chose en longueur, faites-la manquer adroitement. Que j’ aie deux heures seulement devant moi, ce soir ce que je veux est fait, demain plus de favori, je suis tout puissant, et après demain vous êtes baronnet et lieutenant de la tour. Est-ce compris?
Maître éneas.
C’ est compris.
Simon Renard.
Bien. J’ entends venir. Il ne faut pas qu’ on nous voie ensemble. Sortez par là. Moi, je vais au-devant de la reine.
Ils se séparent.

JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 3

Un geôlier entre avec précaution, puis il introduit lady Jane.

Le Geôlier.

Vous êtes où vous vouliez parvenir, mylady.

Voici les portes des deux cachots. Maintenant, s’ il vous plaît, ma récompense.

Jane détache son bracelet de diamans et le lui donne.

Jane.

La voilà.

Le Geôlier.

Merci. Ne me compromettez pas.

Il sort.

Jane, seule.

Mon dieu! Comment faire? C’ est moi qui l’ ai perdu, c’ est à moi de le sauver. Je ne pourrai jamais. Une femme, cela ne peut rien. L’ échafaud! L’ échafaud! C’ est horrible! Allons, plus de larmes, des actions. -mais je ne pourrai pas! Je ne pourrai pas! Ayez pitié de moi, mon Dieu! On vient, je crois. Qui parle là? Je reconnais cette voix. C’ est la voix de la reine. Ah! Tout est perdu!

Elle se cache derrière un pilier. -entrent la reine et Simon Renard.

JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 4

La reine, Simon Renard, Jane cachée.

La Reine.

Ah! Le changement vous étonne! Ah! Je ne me ressemble plus à moi-même! Hé bien! Qu' est-ce que cela me fait? C' est comme cela. Maintenant je ne veux plus qu' il meure!

Simon Renard.

Votre majesté avait pourtant arrêté hier que l' exécution aurait lieu aujourd' hui.

La Reine.

Comme j' avais arrêté avant-hier que l' exécution aurait lieu hier; comme j' avais arrêté dimanche que l' exécution aurait lieu lundi. Aujourd' hui j' arrête que l' exécution aura lieu demain.

Simon Renard.

En effet, depuis le deuxième dimanche de l' avent que l' arrêt de la chambre étoilée a été prononcé, et que les deux condamnés sont revenus à la tour, précédés du bourreau, la hache tournée vers leur visage, il y a trois semaines de cela, votre majesté remet chaque jour la chose au lendemain.

La Reine.

Eh bien! Est-ce que vous ne comprenez pas ce que cela signifie, monsieur? Est-ce qu' il faut tout vous dire, et qu' une femme mette son cœur à nu devant vous, parce qu' elle est reine, la malheureuse, et que vous représentez ici le prince d' Espagne mon futur mari? Mon dieu, monsieur, vous ne savez pas cela, vous autres, chez une femme, le cœur a sa pudeur comme le corps. Hé bien oui, puisque vous voulez le savoir, puisque vous faites semblant de ne rien comprendre, oui, je remets tous les jours l' exécution de Fabiani au lendemain, parce que chaque matin, voyez-vous, la force me manque à l' idée que la cloche de la tour de Londres va sonner la mort de cet homme, parce que je me sens défaillir à la pensée qu' on aiguise une hache pour cet homme, parce que je me sens mourir de songer qu' on va clouer une bière pour cet homme, parce que je suis femme, parce que je suis faible, parce que je suis folle, parce que j' aime cet homme, pardieu! -en avez-vous assez? êtes-vous satisfait? Comprenez-vous? Oh! Je trouverai moyen de me venger un jour sur vous de tout ce que vous me faites dire, allez!

Simon Renard.

Il serait temps cependant d' en finir avec Fabiani. Vous allez épouser mon royal maître le prince d' Espagne, madame!

La Reine.

Si le prince d' Espagne n' est pas content, qu' il le dise, nous en épouserons un autre. Nous ne manquons pas de prétendans. Le fils du roi des romains, le prince de Piémont, l' infant de Portugal, le cardinal Polus, le roi de Danemarck et lord Courtenay sont aussi bons gentilshommes que lui.

Simon Renard.

Lord Courtenay! Lord Courtenay!

La Reine.

Un baron anglais, monsieur, vaut un prince espagnol. D' ailleurs lord Courtenay descend des empereurs d' orient. Et puis, fâchez-vous si vous voulez!

Simon Renard.

Fabiani s' est fait haïr de tout ce qui a un coeur dans Londres.

La Reine.

Excepté de moi.

Simon Renard.

Les bourgeois sont d' accord sur son compte avec les seigneurs. S' il n' est pas mis à mort aujourd' hui même comme l’ a promis votre majesté…

La Reine.
Eh bien?
Simon Renard.
Il y aura émeute des manans.
La Reine.
J’ ai mes lansquenets.
Simon Renard.
Il y aura complot des seigneurs.
La Reine.
J’ ai le bourreau.
Simon Renard.
Votre majesté a juré sur le livre d’ heures de sa mère qu’ elle ne lui ferait pas grâce.
La Reine.
Voici un blanc-seing qu’ il m’ a fait remettre, et dans lequel je jure sur ma couronne impériale que je la lui ferai. La couronne de mon père vaut le livre d’ heures de ma mère. Un serment détruit l’ autre. D’ ailleurs, qui vous dit que je lui ferai grâce?
Simon Renard.
Il vous a bien audacieusement trahie, madame!
La Reine.
Qu’ est-ce que cela me fait? Tous les hommes en font autant. Je ne veux pas qu’ il meure. Tenez, mylord,… -monsieur le bailli, veux-je dire! Mon dieu! Vous me troublez tellement l’ esprit que je ne sais vraiment plus à qui je parle! -tenez, je sais tout ce que vous allez me dire. Que c’ est un homme vil, un lâche, un misérable! Je le sais comme vous, et j’ en rougis; mais je l’ aime. Que voulez-vous que j’ y fasse? J’ aimerais peut-être moins un honnête homme. D’ ailleurs, qui êtes-vous tous tant que vous êtes? Valez-vous mieux que lui? Vous allez me dire que c’ est un favori, et que la nation anglaise n’ aime pas les favoris. Est-ce que je ne sais pas que vous ne voulez le renverser que pour mettre à sa place le comte de Kildare, ce fat, cet irlandais! Qu' il fait couper vingt têtes par jour! Qu' est-ce que cela vous fait? Et ne me parlez pas du prince d' Espagne. Vous vous en moquez bien. Ne me parlez pas du mécontentement de Monsieur De Noailles, l' ambassadeur de France. Monsieur De Noailles est un sot, et je le lui dirai à lui-même. D' ailleurs je suis une femme, moi, je veux et je ne veux plus, je ne suis pas tout d' une pièce. La vie de cet homme est nécessaire à ma vie. Ne prenez pas cet air de candeur virginale et de bonne foi, je vous en supplie. Je connais toutes vos intrigues. Entre nous, vous savez comme moi qu' il n' a pas commis le crime pour lequel il est condamné. C' est arrangé. Je ne veux pas que Fabiani meure. Suis-je la maîtresse ou non? Tenez, monsieur le bailli, parlons d' autre chose, voulez-vous?

Simon Renard.

Je me retire, madame. Toute votre noblesse vous a parlé par ma voix.

La Reine.

Que m' importe la noblesse!

Simon Renard, à part.

Essayons du peuple.

Il sort avec un profond salut.

La Reine, seule.

Il est sorti d' un air singulier. Cet homme est capable d' émouvoir quelque sédition. Il faut que j' aille en hâte à la maison de ville. -holà, quelqu' un!

Maître éneas et Joshua paraissent.

JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 5

Les mêmes, moins Simon Renard; maître éneas,
Joshua.
La Reine.
C’ est vous, maître éneas. Il faut que cet homme et vous, vous vous chargiez de faire évader sur-le-champ le comte de Clanbrassil.
Maître éneas.
Madame…
La Reine.
Tenez, je ne me fie pas à vous! Je me souviens que vous êtes de ses ennemis. Mon dieu! Je ne suis donc entourée que des ennemis de l’ homme que j’ aime! Je gage que ce porte-clefs, que je ne connais pas, le hait aussi.
Joshua.
C’ est vrai, madame.
La Reine.
Mon dieu! Mon dieu! Ce Simon Renard est plus roi que je ne suis reine. Quoi! Personne à qui me fier ici! Personne à qui donner pleins pouvoirs pour faire évader Fabiani!
Jane, sortant de derrière le pilier.
Si, madame! Moi!
Joshua, à part.
Jane!
La Reine.
Toi, qui toi? C’ est vous, Jane Talbot? Comment êtes-vous ici? Ah! C’ est égal! Vous y êtes! Vous venez sauver Fabiani. Merci. Je devrais vous haïr, Jane, je devrais être jalouse de vous, j’ ai mille raisons pour cela. Mais non, je vous aime de l’ aimer.
Devant l’ échafaud, plus de jalousie, rien que
l’ amour. Vous êtes comme moi, vous lui pardonnez, je le vois bien. Les hommes ne comprennent pas cela, eux. Lady Jane, entendons-nous. Nous sommes bien malheureuses toutes deux, n’ est-ce pas? Il faut faire évader Fabiani. Je n’ ai que vous, il faut bien que je vous prenne. Je suis sûre du moins que vous y mettrez votre cœur. Chargez-vous-en. Messieurs, vous obéirez tous deux à lady Jane en tout ce qu’ elle vous prescrira, et vous me répondez sur vos têtes de l’ exécution de ses ordres. Embrasse-moi, jeune fille!

Jane.

La Tamise baigne le pied de la tour de ce côté. Il y a là une issue secrète que j’ ai observée. Un bateau à cette issue, et l’ évasion se ferait par la Tamise. C’ est le plus sûr.

Maître éneas.

Impossible d’ avoir un bateau là avant une bonne heure.

Jane.

C’ est bien long.

Maître éneas.

C’ est bientôt passé. D’ ailleurs dans une heure, il fera nuit. Cela vaudra mieux, si sa majesté tient à ce que l’ évasion soit secrète.

La Reine.

Vous avez peut-être raison. Eh bien! Dans une heure, soit! Je vous laisse, lady Jane, il faut que j’ aille à la maison de ville. Sauvez Fabiani!

Jane.

Soyez tranquille, madame!

La reine sort. Jane la suit des yeux.

Joshua, sur le devant du théâtre.

Gilbert avait raison, toute à Fabiani!

JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 6

Les mêmes, moins la reine.
Jane, à maître éneas.
Vous avez entendu les volontés de la reine. Un bateau là au pied de la tour, les clefs des couloirs secrets, un chapeau et un manteau.
Maître éneas.
Impossible d’ avoir tout cela avant la nuit. Dans une heure, mylady.
Jane.
C’ est bien, allez. Laissez-moi avec cet homme.
Maître éneas sort. Jane le suit des yeux.
Joshua, à part, sur le devant du théâtre.
Cet homme! C’ est tout simple. Qui a oublié Gilbert ne reconnaît plus Joshua.
Il se dirige vers la porte du cachot de Fabiani et se met en devoir de l’ ouvrir.
Jane.
Que faites-vous là?
Joshua.
Je préviens vos désirs, mylady. J’ ouvre cette porte.
Jane.
Qu’ est-ce que c’ est que cette porte?
Joshua.
La porte du cachot de mylord Fabiani.
Jane.
Et celle-ci?
Joshua.
C’ est la porte du cachot d’ un autre.
Jane.
Qui? Cet autre?
Un autre condamné à mort. Quelqu’ un que vous ne connaissez pas. Un ouvrier nommé Gilbert.
Jane.

Ouvrez cette porte!
Joshua, après avoir ouvert la porte.
Gilbert!

JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 7

Jane, Gilbert, Joshua.
Gilbert, de l’ intérieur du cachot.
Que me veut-on?
Il paraît sur le seuil, aperçoit Jane, et s’ appuie tout chancelant contre le mur.
Jane! -lady Jane Talbot!
Jane, à genoux, sans lever les yeux sur lui.
Gilbert! Je viens vous sauver.
Gilbert.
Me sauver!
Jane.
écoutez. Ayez pitié, ne m’ accablez pas. Je sais tout ce que vous allez me dire. C’ est juste; mais ne me le dites pas. Il faut que je vous sauve. Tout est préparé. L’ évasion est sûre. Laissez-vous sauver par moi comme par un autre. Je ne demande rien de plus. Vous ne me connaîtrez plus ensuite.
Vous ne saurez plus qui je suis. Ne me pardonnez pas, mais laissez-moi vous sauver. Voulez-vous?
Gilbert.
Merci; mais c’ est inutile. à quoi bon vouloir sauver ma vie, lady Jane, si vous ne m’ aimez plus?
Jane, avec joie.
Oh! Gilbert! Est-ce bien en effet cela que vous me demandez? Gilbert! Est-ce que vous daignez vous occuper encore de ce qui se passe dans le coeur de la pauvre fille? Gilbert! Est-ce que l’ amour que je puis avoir pour quelqu’ un vous intéresse encore et vous paraît valoir la peine que vous vous en informiez? Oh! Je croyais que cela vous était bien égal, et que vous me méprisiez trop pour vous inquiéter de ce que je faisais de mon cœur. Gilbert!
Si vous saviez quel effet me font les paroles que vous venez de me dire. C’ est un rayon de soleil bien inattendu dans ma nuit, allez! Oh! écoutez-moi donc, alors! Si j’ osais encore m’ approcher de vous, si j’ osais toucher vos vêtemens, si j’ osais prendre votre main dans les miennes, si j’ osais encore lever les yeux vers vous et vers le ciel, comme autrefois, savez-vous ce que je vous dirais, à genoux, prosternée, pleurant sur vos pieds, avec des sanglots dans la bouche et la joie des anges dans le cœur? Je vous dirais: Gilbert, je t’ aime!

Gilbert, la saisissant dans ses bras avec emportement.
Tu m’ aimes!
Jane.
Oui, je t’ aime!
Gilbert.
Tu m’ aimes! -elle m’ aime, mon dieu! C’ est bien vrai, c’ est bien elle qui me le dit, c’ est bien sa bouche qui a parlé, dieu du ciel!
Jane.
Mon Gilbert!
Gilbert.
Tu as tout préparé pour mon évasion, dis-tu?
Vite! Vite! La vie! Je veux la vie, Jane m’ aime!
Cette voûte s’ appuie sur ma tête et l’ écrase. J’ ai besoin d’ air. Je meurs ici. Fuyons vite!
Viens-nous-en, Jane! Je veux vivre, moi! Je suis aimé.
Jane.
Pas encore. Il faut un bateau. Il faut attendre la nuit. Mais sois tranquille, tu es sauvé. Avant une heure, nous serons dehors. La reine est à la maison de ville, et ne reviendra pas de sitôt. Je suis maîtresse ici. Je t’ expliquerai tout cela.
Gilbert.
Une heure d’ attente, c’ est bien long. Oh! Il me tarde de ressaisir la vie et le bonheur! Jane,

Jane! Tu es là! Je vivrai! Tu m' aimes! Je reviens de l' enfer! Retiens-moi, je ferais quelques folies, vois-tu. Je rirais, je chanterais. Tu m' aimes donc?

Jane.

Oui! -je t' aime! Oui, je t' aime! Et vois-tu, Gilbert, crois-moi bien, ceci est la vérité comme au lit de la mort, -je n' ai jamais aimé que toi! Même dans ma faute, même au fond de mon crime, je t' aimais! à peine ai-je été tombée aux bras du démon qui m' a perdue, que j' ai pleuré mon ange!

Gilbert.

Oublié! Pardonné! Ne parle plus de cela, Jane. Oh! Que m' importe le passé! Qui est-ce qui résisterait à ta voix! Qui est-ce qui ferait autrement que moi! Oh oui! Je te pardonne bien tout, mon enfant bien aimé! Le fond de l' amour, c' est l' indulgence, c' est le pardon. Jane, la jalousie et le désespoir ont brûlé les larmes dans mes yeux. Mais je te pardonne, mais je te remercie, mais tu es pour moi la seule chose vraiment rayonnante de ce monde, mais à chaque mot que tu prononces, je sens une douleur mourir et une joie naître dans mon ame! Jane! Relevez votre tête, tenez-vous droite là, et regardez-moi. -je vous dis que vous êtes mon enfant.

Jane.

Toujours généreux! Toujours! Mon Gilbert bien aimé!

Gilbert.

Oh! Je voudrais être déjà dehors, en fuite, bien loin, libre avec toi! Oh! Cette nuit qui ne vient pas! -le bateau n' est pas là. -Jane! Nous quitterons Londres tout de suite, cette nuit. Nous quitterons l' Angleterre. Nous irons à Venise. Ceux de mon métier gagnent beaucoup d' argent là. Tu seras à moi… -oh! Mon dieu! Je suis insensé, j’ oubliais quel nom tu portes! Il est trop beau,

Jane!
Jane.
Que veux-tu dire?
Gilbert.
Fille de lord Talbot.
Jane.
J’ en sais un plus beau.
Gilbert.
Lequel?
Femme de l’ ouvrier Gilbert.
Gilbert.
Jane!…
Jane.
Oh non! Oh! Ne crois pas que je te demande cela. Oh! Je sais bien que j’ en suis indigne. Je ne leverai pas mes yeux si haut; je n’ abuserai pas à ce point du pardon. Le pauvre ciseleur Gilbert ne se mésalliera pas avec la comtesse de Waterford. Non, je te suivrai, je t’ aimerai, je ne te quitterai jamais. Je me coucherai le jour à tes pieds, la nuit à ta porte. Je te regarderai travailler, je t’ aiderai, je te donnerai ce qu’ il te faudra. Je serai pour toi quelque chose de moins qu’ une sœur, quelque chose de plus qu’ un chien. Et si tu te maries, Gilbert, -car il plaira à Dieu que tu finisses par trouver une femme pure et sans tache, et digne de toi, -eh bien! Si tu te maries, et si ta femme est bonne, et si elle veut bien, je serai la servante de ta femme. Si elle ne veut pas de moi, je m’ en irai, j’ irai mourir où je pourrai. Je ne te quitterai que dans ce cas-là. Si tu ne te maries pas, je resterai près de toi, je serai bien douce et bien résignée, tu verras; et si l’ on pense mal de me voir avec toi, on pensera ce qu’ on voudra. Je n’ ai plus à rougir, moi, vois-tu? Je suis une pauvre fille.

Gilbert, tombant à ses pieds.
Tu es un ange! Tu es ma femme!
Jane.
Ta femme! Tu ne pardonnes donc que comme
Dieu, en purifiant? Ah! Sois béni, Gilbert, de me mettre cette couronne sur le front.
Gilbert se relève et la serre dans ses bras. Pendant qu' ils se tiennent étroitement embrassés, Joshua vient prendre la main de Jane.
Joshua.
C' est Joshua, lady Jane.
Gilbert.
Bon Joshua!
Joshua.
Tout à l' heure vous ne m' avez pas reconnu.
Jane.
Ah! C' est que c' est par lui que je devais commencer.
Joshua lui baise les mains.
Gilbert, la serrant dans ses bras.
Mais quel bonheur! Mais est-ce que c' est bien réel tout ce bonheur-là?
Depuis quelques instans, on entend au dehors un bruit éloigné, des cris confus, un tumulte. Le jour baisse.
Joshua.
Qu' est-ce que c' est que ce bruit?
Il va à la fenêtre qui donne sur la rue.
Jane.
Oh! Mon dieu! Pourvu qu' il n' aille rien arriver!
Joshua.
Une grande foule là-bas. Des pioches; des piques; des torches. Les pensionnaires de la reine à cheval et en bataille. Tout cela vient par ici. Quels cris! Ah diable! On dirait une émeute de populaire.
Jane.
Pourvu que ce ne soit pas contre Gilbert!
Cris éloignés.
Fabiani! Mort à Fabiani!

Jane.
Entendez-vous?
Joshua.
Oui.
Jane.
Que disent-ils?
Joshua.
Je ne distingue pas.
Ah! Mon dieu! Mon dieu!
Entrent précipitamment par la porte masquée maître éneas et un batelier.

JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 8

Les mêmes, maître éneas, un batelier.
Maître éneas.
Mylord Fabiani! Mylord! Pas un instant à perdre.
On a su que la reine voulait sauver votre vie.
Il y a sédition du populaire de Londres contre vous. Dans un quart d’ heure, vous seriez déchiré.
Mylord, sauvez-vous! Voici un manteau et un chapeau.
Voici les clefs. Voici un batelier. N’ oubliez pas que c’ est à moi que vous devez tout cela. Mylord, hâtez-vous!
Bas au batelier.
— tu ne te presseras pas.
Jane.
Elle couvre en hâte Gilbert du manteau et du chapeau. Bas à Joshua.
Ciel! Pourvu que cet homme ne reconnaisse pas…
Maître éneas, regardant Gilbert en face.
Mais quoi! Ce n’ est pas lord Clanbrassil! Vous n’ exécutez pas les ordres de la reine, mylady! Vous en faites évader un autre!
Jane.
Tout est perdu!… j’ aurais dû prévoir cela! Ah dieu! Monsieur, c’ est vrai, ayez pitié…
Maître éneas, bas à Jane.
Silence! Faites! Je n’ ai rien dit, je n’ ai rien vu.
Il se retire au fond du théâtre d’ un air
d’ indifférence.
Jane.
Que dit-il?… ah! La providence est donc pour nous! Ah! Tout le monde veut donc sauver Gilbert!
Joshua.
Non, lady Jane. Tout le monde veut perdre
Fabiani.
Pendant toute cette scène, les cris redoublent au

dehors.
Jane.
Hâtons-nous, Gilbert! Viens vite!
Joshua.
Laissez-le partir seul.
Jane.
Le quitter!
Joshua.
Pour un instant. Pas de femme dans le bateau, si vous voulez qu' il arrive à bon port. Il y a encore trop de jour. Vous êtes vêtue de blanc. Le péril passé, vous vous retrouverez. Venez avec moi par
ici. Lui par là.
Joshua a raison. Où te retrouverai-je, mon
Gilbert?
Gilbert.
Sous la première arche du pont de Londres.
Jane.
Bien. Pars vite. Le bruit redouble. Je te voudrais loin!
Joshua.
Voici les clefs. Il y a douze portes à ouvrir et à fermer d' ici au bord de l' eau. Vous en avez pour un bon quart d' heure.
Jane.
Un quart d' heure! Douze portes! C' est affreux!
Gilbert, l' embrassant.
Adieu, Jane. Encore quelques instans de séparation, et nous nous rejoindrons pour la vie.
Jane.
Pour l' éternité!
Au batelier.
— monsieur, je vous le recommande.
Maître éneas, bas au batelier.
De crainte d' accident, ne te presse pas.
Gilbert sort avec le batelier.
Joshua.

Il est sauvé! à nous maintenant! Il faut fermer ce cachot.
Il referme le cachot de Gilbert.
— c’ est fait. Venez vite, par ici!
Il sort avec Jane par l’ autre porte masquée.
Maître éneas, seul.
Le Fabiani est resté au piége! Voilà une petite femme fort adroite que maître Simon Renard eût payée bien cher. Mais comment la reine prendra-t-elle la chose? Pourvu que cela ne retombe pas sur moi!
Entrent à grands pas par la galerie Simon Renard et la reine. Le tumulte extérieur n’ a cessé d’ augmenter. La nuit est presque tout-à-fait tombée.
— cris de mort; flambeaux; torches; bruit des vagues de la foule; cliquetis d’ armes; coups de feu; piétinemens de chevaux. Plusieurs gentilshommes, la dague au poing, accompagnent la reine. Parmi eux, le héraut d’ Angleterre, Clarence, portant la bannière royale, et le héraut de l’ ordre de la jarretière, Jarretière, portant la bannière de l’ ordre.

JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 9

La reine, Simon Renard, maître éneas, lord Clinton, les deux hérauts, seigneurs, pages, etc.

La Reine, bas à maître éneas.

Fabiani est-il évadé?

Maître éneas.

Pas encore.

La Reine.

Pas encore!

Elle le regarde fixement d' un air terrible.

Maître éneas, à part.

Diable!

Cris Du Peuple, au-dehors.

Mort à Fabiani!

Simon Renard.

Il faut que votre majesté prenne un parti sur-le-champ, madame. Le peuple veut la mort de cet homme. Londres est en feu. La tour est investie. L' émeute est formidable. Les nobles de ban ont été taillés en pièces au pont de Londres. Les pensionnaires de votre majesté tiennent encore; mais votre majesté n' en a pas moins été traquée de rue en rue, depuis la maison de ville jusqu' à la tour. Les partisans de Madame élisabeth sont mêlés au peuple. On sent qu' ils sont là, à la malignité de l' émeute. Tout cela est sombre. Qu' ordonne votre majesté?

Cris Du Peuple.

Fabiani! Mort à Fabiani!

Ils grossissent et se rapprochent de plus en plus.

La Reine.

Mort à Fabiani! Mylords, entendez-vous ce peuple qui hurle? Il faut lui jeter un homme. La populace veut à manger.

Simon Renard.

Qu’ ordonne votre majesté?
La Reine.
Pardieu, mylords, vous tremblez tous autour de moi, il me semble. Sur mon ame, faut-il que ce soit une femme qui vous enseigne votre métier de gentilshommes! à cheval, mylords, à cheval. Est-ce que la canaille vous intimide? Est-ce que les épées ont peur des bâtons?
Simon Renard.
Ne laissez pas les choses aller plus loin. Cédez, madame, pendant qu’ il en est temps encore. Vous pouvez encore dire la canaille, dans une heure vous seriez obligée de dire le peuple.
Les cris redoublent, le bruit se rapproche.
La Reine.
Dans une heure!
Simon Renard, allant à la galerie et revenant.
Dans un quart d’ heure, madame. Voici que la première enceinte de la tour est forcée. Encore un pas, le peuple est ici.
Le Peuple.
à la tour! à la tour! Fabiani! Mort à Fabiani!
La Reine.
Qu’ on a bien raison de dire que c’ est une horrible chose que le peuple! Fabiano!
Simon Renard.
Voulez-vous le voir déchirer sous vos yeux dans un instant?
La Reine.
Mais savez-vous qu’ il est infâme qu’ il n’ y en ait pas un de vous qui bouge, messieurs! Mais au nom du ciel, défendez-moi donc!
Lord Clinton.
Vous, oui, madame; Fabiani, non.
La Reine.
Ah ciel! Eh bien oui! Je le dis tout haut, tant pis! Fabiano est innocent! Fabiano n’ a pas commis le crime pour lequel il est condamné. C’ est moi, et celui-ci, et le ciseleur Gilbert, qui avons tout fait, tout inventé, tout supposé. Pure comédie!

Osez me démentir, monsieur le bailli! Maintenant, messieurs, le défendrez-vous? Il est innocent, vous dis-je. Sur ma tête, sur ma couronne, sur mon dieu, sur l’ ame de ma mère, il est innocent du crime! Cela est aussi vrai qu’ il est vrai que vous êtes là, lord Clinton! Défendez-le. Exterminez ceux-ci, comme vous avez exterminé Tom Wyat, mon brave Clinton, mon vieil ami, mon bon Robert!
Je vous jure qu’ il est faux que Fabiano ait
voulu assassiner la reine.
Lord Clinton.
Il y a une autre reine qu’ il a voulu assassiner,
c’ est l’ Angleterre.
Les cris continuent dehors.
La Reine.
Le balcon! Ouvrez le balcon! Je veux prouver moi-même au peuple qu’ il n’ est pas coupable!
Simon Renard.
Prouvez au peuple qu’ il n’ est pas italien!
La Reine.
Quand je pense que c’ est un Simon Renard, une créature du cardinal de Granvelle, qui ose me parler ainsi! Eh bien, ouvrez cette porte! Ouvrez ce cachot! Fabiano est là; je veux le voir, je veux lui parler.
Simon Renard, bas.
Que faites-vous? Dans son propre intérêt, il est inutile de faire savoir à tout le monde où il est.
Le Peuple.
Fabiani à mort! Vive élisabeth!
Simon Renard.
Les voilà qui crient vive élisabeth, maintenant.
La Reine.

Mon dieu! Mon dieu!
Simon Renard.
Choisissez, madame:
il désigne d’ une main la porte du cachot.
— ou cette tête au peuple,
il désigne de l’ autre main la couronne que porte la reine.
— ou cette couronne à Madame élisabeth.
Le Peuple.
Mort! Mort! Fabiani! élisabeth!
Une pierre vient casser une vitre à côté de la reine.
Simon Renard.
Votre majesté se perd sans le sauver. La deuxième cour est forcée. Que veut la reine?
La Reine.
Vous êtes tous des lâches, et Clinton tout le premier!
Ah! Clinton, je me souviendrai de cela, mon ami!
Simon Renard.
Que veut la reine?
La Reine.
Oh! être abandonnée de tous! Avoir tout dit sans rien obtenir! Qu’ est-ce que c’ est donc que ces gentilshommes-là? Ce peuple est infâme. Je voudrais le broyer sous mes pieds. Il y a donc des cas où une reine ce n’ est qu’ une femme! Vous me le paierez tous bien cher, messieurs!
Simon Renard.
Que veut la reine?
La Reine, accablée.
Ce que vous voudrez! Faites ce que vous voudrez!
Vous êtes un assassin!
à part.
— oh! Fabiano!
Simon Renard.

Clarence! Jarretière! à moi! -maître éneas, ouvrez le grand balcon de la galerie.
Le balcon du fond s’ ouvre. Simon Renard y va,
Clarence à sa droite, Jarretière à sa gauche.
Immense rumeur au dehors.
Le Peuple.
Fabiani! Fabiani!
Simon Renard, au balcon, tourné vers le peuple.
Au nom de la reine!
Les Hébauts.
Au nom de la reine!
Profond silence au dehors.
Simon Renard.
Manans! La reine vous fait savoir ceci: aujourd’ hui, cette nuit même, une heure après le couvre-feu,
Fabiano Fabiani, comte de Clanbrassil, couvert
d’ un voile noir de la tête aux pieds, baillonné d’ un baillon de fer, une torche de cire jaune du poids de trois livres à la main, sera mené aux flambeaux de la tour de Londres par Charing-Cross, au vieux-marché de la cité, pour y être publiquement marri et décapité, en réparation de ses crimes de haute trahison au premier chef et d’ attentat régicide sur la personne impériale de sa majesté.
Un immense battement de mains éclate au-dehors.
Le Peuple.
Vive la reine! Mort à Fabiani!
Simon Renard, continuant.
Et pour que personne dans cette ville de Londres n’ en ignore, voici ce que la reine ordonne: - pendant tout ce trajet que fera le condamné de la tour de Londres au vieux-marché, la grosse cloche de la tour tintera. Au moment de l’ exécution, trois coups de canon seront tirés. Le premier,
quand il montera sur l’ échafaud; le second,
quand il se couchera sur le drap noir; le troisième,
quand sa tête tombera.

Applaudissemens.

Le Peuple.

Illuminez! Illuminez!

Simon Renard.

Cette nuit, la tour et la cité de Londres seront illuminées de flammes et flambeaux, en signe de joie. J' ai dit.

Applaudissemens.

Dieu garde la vieille charte d' Angleterre!

Les Deux Hérauts.

Dieu garde la vieille charte d' Angleterre!

Le Peuple.

Fabiani à mort! Vive Marie! Vive la reine!

Le balcon se referme. Simon Renard vient à la reine.

Simon Renard.

Ce que je viens de faire ne me sera jamais pardonné par la princesse élisabeth.

La Reine.

Ni par la reine Marie. -laissez-moi, monsieur!

Elle congédie du geste tous les assistans.

Simon Renard, bas à maître éneas.

Maître éneas, veillez à l' exécution.

Maître éneas.

Reposez-vous sur moi.

Simon Renard sort. Au moment où maître éneas va sortir, la reine court à lui, le saisit par le bras, et le ramène violemment sur le devant du théâtre.

JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 1 SCENE 10

La reine, maître éneas.
Cris Du Dehors.
Mort à Fabiani! Fabiani! Fabiani!
La Reine.
Laquelle des deux têtes crois-tu qui vaille le mieux en ce moment, celle de Fabiani ou la tienne?
Maître éneas.
Madame…
La Reine.
Tu es un traître!
Maître éneas.
Madame!…
à part.
— diable!
La Reine.
Pas d’ explications. Je le jure par ma mère,
Fabiano mort, tu mourras.
Maître éneas.
Mais, madame…
La Reine.
Sauve Fabiano, tu te sauveras. Pas autrement.
Cris.
Fabiani à mort! Fabiani!
Maître éneas.
Sauver lord Clanbrassil! Mais le peuple est là.
C’ est impossible. Quel moyen?…
La Reine.
Cherche.
Maître éneas.
Comment faire, mon dieu?
La Reine.
Fais comme pour toi.
Maître éneas.

Mais le peuple va rester en armes jusqu’ après l’ exécution. Pour l’ apaiser, il faut qu’ il y ait quelqu’ un de décapité.

La Reine.

Qui tu voudras.

Maître éneas.

Qui je voudrai? Attendez, madame!… -l’ exécution se fera la nuit, aux flambeaux, le condamné couvert d’ un voile noir, baillonné, le peuple tenu fort loin de l’ échafaud par les piquiers, comme toujours, il suffit qu’ il voie une tête tomber. La chose est possible. -pourvu que le batelier soit encore là, je lui ai dit de ne pas se presser.

Il va à la fenêtre d’ où l’ on voit la Tamise.

— il y est encore! Mais il était temps.

Il se penche à la lucarne une torche à la main, en agitant son mouchoir, puis il se tourne vers la reine.

— c’ est bien. -je vous réponds de mylord Fabiani, madame.

La Reine.

Sur ta tête?

Maître éneas.

Sur ma tête!

JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 2 SCENE 1

Une espèce de salle à laquelle viennent aboutir deux escaliers, un qui monte, l’ autre qui descend.
L’ entrée de chacun de ces deux escaliers occupe une partie du fond du théâtre. Celui qui monte se perd dans les frises; celui qui descend se perd dans les dessous. On ne voit ni d’ où partent ces escaliers, ni où ils vont.
La salle est tendue de deuil d’ une façon particulière: le mur de droite, le mur de gauche et le plafond, d’ un drap noir coupé d’ une grande croix blanche; le fond, qui fait face au spectateur, d’ un drap blanc avec une grande croix noire. Cette tenture noire et cette tenture blanche se prolongent chacune de leur côté, à perte de vue, sous les deux escaliers. à droite et à gauche, un autel tendu de noir et de blanc, décoré comme pour des funérailles.
Grands cierges, pas de prêtres. Quelques rares lampes funèbres, pendues çà et là aux voûtes, éclairent faiblement la salle et les escaliers. Ce qui éclaire réellement la salle, c’ est le grand drap blanc du fond, à travers lequel passe une lumière rougeâtre comme s’ il y avait derrière une immense fournaise flamboyante.
La salle est pavée de dalles tumulaires. -au lever du rideau, on voit se dessiner en noir sur ce drap transparent l’ ombre immobile de la reine.
Jane, Joshua.
Ils entrent avec précaution en soulevant une des tentures noires par quelque petite porte pratiquée là.
Jane.
Où sommes-nous, Joshua?
Joshua.
Sur le grand palier de l’ escalier par où descendent les condamnés qui vont au supplice. Cela a été tendu ainsi sous Henri Viii.

Jane.

Aucun moyen de sortir de la tour?

Joshua.

Le peuple garde toutes les issues. Il veut être sûr cette fois d’ avoir son condamné. Personne ne pourra sortir avant l’ exécution.

Jane.

La proclamation qu’ on a faite du haut de ce balcon me résonne encore dans l’ oreille. L’ avez-vous entendue, quand nous étions en bas? Tout ceci est horrible, Joshua!

Joshua.

Ah! J’ en ai vu bien d’ autres, moi!

Jane.

Pourvu que Gilbert ait réussi à s’ évader! Le croyez-vous sauvé, Joshua?

Joshua.

Sauvé! J’ en suis sûr.

Jane.

Vous en êtes sûr, bon Joshua?

Joshua.

La tour n’ était pas investie du côté de l’ eau. Et puis, quand il a dû partir, l’ émeute n’ était pas ce qu’ elle a été depuis. C’ était une belle émeute, savez-vous!

Jane.

Vous êtes sûr qu’ il est sauvé?

Joshua.

Et qu’ il vous attend, à cette heure, sous la première arche du pont de Londres, où vous le rejoindrez avant minuit.

Jane.

Mon dieu! Il va être inquiet de son côté.

Apercevant l’ ombre de la reine.

— ciel! Qu’ est-ce que c’ est que cela, Joshua?

Joshua, bas en lui prenant la main.
Silence! -c’ est la lionne qui guette.
Pendant que Jane considère cette silhouette noire avec terreur, on entend une voix éloignée, qui paraît venir d’ en haut, prononcer lentement et distinctement ces paroles:
— celui qui marche à ma suite, couvert de ce
voile noir, c’ est très-haut et très-puissant seigneur
Fabiano Fabiani, comte de Clanbrassil, baron de
Dinasmonddy, baron de Darmouth en Devonshire,
lequel va être décapité au marché de Londres, pour
crime de régicide et de haute trahison. -Dieu
fasse miséricorde à son ame!
Une Autre Voix.
Priez pour lui!
Jane, tremblante.
Joshua! Entendez-vous?
Joshua.
Oui. Moi, j’ entends de ces choses-là tous les jours.
Un cortége funèbre paraît au haut de l’ escalier, sur les degrés duquel il se développe lentement à mesure qu’ il descend. En tête, un homme vêtu de noir, portant une bannière blanche à croix noire. Puis maître éneas Dulverton, en grand manteau noir, son bâton blanc de constable à la main. Puis un groupe de pertuisaniers vêtus de rouge. Puis le bourreau, sa hache sur l’ épaule, le fer tourné vers celui qui le suit. Puis un homme entièrement couvert d’ un grand voile noir qui traîne sur ses pieds. On ne voit de cet homme que son bras nu qui passe par une ouverture faite au linceul, et qui porte une torche de cire jaune allumée. à côté de cet homme, un prêtre en costume du jour des morts. Puis un groupe de pertuisaniers en rouge. Puis un homme vêtu de blanc portant une bannière noire à croix blanche.
à droite et à gauche deux files de hallebardiers

portant des torches.
Jane.
Joshua! Voyez-vous?
Joshua.
Oui. Je vois de ces choses-là tous les jours,
moi.
Au moment de déboucher sur le théâtre, le cortége
s’ arrête.
Maître éneas.
Celui qui marche à ma suite, couvert de ce voile noir, c’ est très-haut et très-puissant seigneur
Fabiano Fabiani, comte de Clanbrassil, baron de
Dinasmonddy, baron de Darmouth en Devonshire,
lequel va être décapité au marché-de-Londres, pour
crime de régicide et de haute trahison. -Dieu
fasse miséricorde à son ame!
Les Deux Porte-Bannière.
Priez pour lui!
Le cortége traverse lentement le fond du théâtre.
Jane.
C’ est une chose terrible que nous voyons là,
Joshua. Cela me glace le sang.
Joshua.
Ce misérable Fabiani!
Jane.
Paix, Joshua! Bien misérable, mais bien malheureux!
Le cortége arrive à l’ autre escalier. Simon Renard, qui, depuis quelques instans, a paru à l’ entrée de cet escalier et a tout observé, se range pour le laisser passer. Le cortége s’ enfonce sous la voûte de l’ escalier, où il disparaît peu à peu. Jane le suit des yeux avec terreur.
Simon Renard, après que le cortége a disparu.
Qu’ est-ce que cela signifie? Est-ce bien là Fabiani? Je le croyais moins grand. Est-ce que maître éneas?… il me semble que la reine
l’ a gardé auprès d’ elle un instant. Voyons donc!

Il s’ enfonce sous l’ escalier à la suite du cortége.

Voix, qui s’ éloigne de plus en plus.

Celui qui marche à ma suite, couvert de ce voile noir, c’ est très-haut et très-puissant seigneur Fabiano Fabiani, comte de Clanbrassil, baron de Dinasmonddy, baron de Darmouth en Devonshire, lequel va être décapité au marché-de-Londres, pour crime de régicide et de haute trahison. - Dieu fasse miséricorde à son ame!

Autres Voix, presque indistinctes.

Priez pour lui!

Joshua.

La grosse cloche va annoncer tout à l’ heure sa sortie de la tour. Il vous sera peut-être possible maintenant de vous échapper. Il faut que je tâche d’ en trouver les moyens. Attendez-moi là; je vais revenir.

Jane.

Vous me laissez, Joshua? Je vais avoir peur, seule ici, mon dieu!

Joshua.

Vous ne pourriez parcourir toute la tour avec moi sans péril. Il faut que je vous fasse sortir de la tour. Pensez que Gilbert vous attend.

Jane.

Gilbert! Tout pour Gilbert! Allez!

Joshua sort.

Jane, seule.

Oh! Quel spectacle effrayant! Quand je songe que cela eût été ainsi pour Gilbert!

Elle s’ agenouille sur les degrés de l’ un des autels.

— oh! Merci! Vous êtes bien le dieu sauveur! Vous avez sauvé Gilbert!

Le drap du fond s’ entr’ ouvre. La reine paraît; elle s’ avance à pas lents vers le devant du théâtre, sans voir Jane.

Jane, se détournant.
Dieu! La reine!

JOURNEE 3 PARTIE 2 SCENE 2

Jane, la reine.
Jane se colle avec effroi contre l’ autel, et attache sur la reine un regard de stupeur et d’ épouvante.
La Reine.

Elle se tient quelques instans en silence sur le devant du théâtre, l’ œil fixe, pâle, comme absorbée dans une sombre rêverie. Enfin elle pousse un profond soupir.
Oh! Le peuple!
Elle promène autour d’ elle avec inquiétude son regard qui rencontre Jane.
— quelqu’ un là! -c’ est toi, jeune fille! C’ est vous, lady Jane! Je vous fais peur. Allons, ne craignez rien. Le guichetier éneas nous a trahies, vous savez? Ne craignez donc rien. Enfant, je te l’ ai déjà dit, tu n’ as rien à craindre de moi, toi.
Ce qui faisait ta perte il y a un mois fait ton salut aujourd’ hui. Tu aimes Fabiano. Il n’ y a que toi et moi sous le ciel qui ayons le cœur fait ainsi, que toi et moi qui l’ aimions. Nous sommes sœurs.
Jane.
Madame…
La Reine.
Oui, toi et moi, deux femmes, voilà tout ce qu’ il a pour lui, cet homme. Contre lui tout le reste! Toute une cité, tout un peuple, tout un monde! Lutte inégale de l’ amour contre la haine!
L’ amour pour Fabiano, il est triste, épouvanté, éperdu; il a ton front pâle, il a mes yeux en larmes; il se cache près d’ un autel funèbre; il prie par ta bouche, il maudit par la mienne. La haine contre Fabiani, elle est fière, radieuse, triomphante, elle est armée et victorieuse, elle a la cour, elle a le peuple, elle a des masses d’ hommes plein les rues, elle mâche à la fois des cris de mort et des cris de joie, elle est superbe, et hautaine, et toute puissante; elle illumine toute une ville autour d’ un échafaud! L’ amour, le voici, deux femmes vêtues de deuil dans un tombeau. La haine, la voilà!

Elle tire violemment le drap blanc du fond, qui, en s’ écartant, laisse voir un balcon, et au-delà de ce balcon, à perte de vue, dans une nuit noire, toute la ville de Londres splendidement illuminée. Ce qu’ on voit de la tour de Londres est illuminé également. Jane fixe des yeux étonnés sur tout ce spectacle éblouissant dont la réverbération éclaire le théâtre.
La Reine.
Oh! Ville infâme! Ville révoltée! Ville maudite! Ville monstrueuse qui trempe sa robe de fête dans le sang et qui tient la torche au bourreau? Tu en as peur, Jane, n’ est-ce pas? Est-ce qu’ il ne te semble pas comme à moi qu’ elle nous nargue lâchement toutes deux, et qu’ elle nous regarde avec ses cent mille prunelles flamboyantes, faibles femmes abandonnées que nous sommes, perdues et seules dans ce sépulcre! Jane! L’ entends-tu rire et hurler, l’ horrible ville! Oh! L’ Angleterre! L’ Angleterre à qui détruira Londres! Oh! Que je voudrais pouvoir changer ces flambeaux en brandons, ces lumières en flammes, et cette ville illuminée en une ville qui brûle!
Une immense rumeur éclate au dehors. Applaudissemens. Cris confus: -le voilà! Le voilà! Fabiani à mort! -on entend tinter la grosse cloche de la tour de Londres. à ce bruit, la reine se met à rire d’ un rire terrible.
Jane.
Grand dieu! Voilà le malheureux qui sort… -vous riez, madame!

La Reine.
Oui, je ris!
Elle rit.
— oui, et tu vas rire aussi! Mais d’ abord il faut que je ferme cette tenture, il me semble toujours que nous ne sommes pas seules et que cette affreuse ville nous voit et nous entend.
Elle ferme le rideau blanc et revient à Jane.
— maintenant qu’ il est sorti, maintenant qu’ il n’ y a plus de danger, je puis te dire cela. Mais ris donc, rions toutes deux de cet exécrable peuple qui boit du sang. Oh! C’ est charmant! Jane! Tu trembles pour Fabiano, sois tranquille! Et ris avec moi, te dis-je! Jane! L’ homme qu’ ils ont, l’ homme qui va mourir, l’ homme qu’ ils prennent pour Fabiano, ce n’ est pas Fabiano!
Elle rit.
Jane.
Ce n’ est pas Fabiano!
La Reine.
Non!
Jane.
Qui est-ce donc?
La Reine.
C’ est l’ autre.
Jane.
Qui? L’ autre?
La Reine.
Tu sais bien, tu le connais, cet ouvrier, cet homme… -d’ ailleurs qu’ importe?
Jane, tremblant de tout son corps.
Gilbert?
La Reine.
Oui, Gilbert, c’ est ce nom-là.
Jane.
Madame! Oh non, madame! Oh! Dites que cela n’ est pas, madame! Gilbert! Ce serait trop horrible! Il s’ est évadé!

La Reine.
Il s’ évadait quand on l’ a saisi, en effet. On l’ a mis à la place de Fabiano sous le voile noir. C’ est une exécution de nuit. Le peuple n’ y verra rien.
Sois tranquille.
Jane, avec un cri effrayant.
Ah! Madame! Celui que j’ aime, c’ est Gilbert!
La Reine.
Quoi? Que dis-tu? Perds-tu la raison? Est-ce que tu me trompais aussi, toi? Ah! C’ est ce Gilbert que tu aimes! Eh bien, que m’ importe?
Jane, brisée, aux pieds de la reine, sanglotant,
se traînant sur les genoux, les mains jointes.
La grosse cloche tinte pendant toute cette scène.
Madame, par pitié! Madame, au nom du ciel!
Madame, par votre couronne, par votre mère, par les anges! Gilbert! Gilbert! Cela me rend folle, madame, sauvez Gilbert! Cet homme, c’ est ma vie, cet homme, c’ est mon mari, cet homme… je viens de vous dire qu’ il a tout fait pour moi, qu’ il m’ a élevée, qu’ il m’ a adoptée, qu’ il a remplacé près de mon berceau mon père qui est mort pour votre mère.
Madame, vous voyez bien que je ne suis qu’ une pauvre misérable et qu’ il ne faut pas être sévère pour moi.
Ce que vous venez de me dire m’ a donné un coup si terrible que je ne sais vraiment pas comment j’ ai la force de vous parler. Je dis ce que je peux, voyez-vous. Mais il faut que vous fassiez suspendre
l’ exécution. Tout de suite. Suspendre l’ exécution.
Remettre la chose à demain. Le temps de se reconnaître, voilà tout. Ce peuple peut bien attendre à demain.
Nous verrons ce que nous ferons. Non, ne secouez pas la tête. Pas de danger pour votre Fabiano.
C’ est moi que vous mettrez à la place. Sous le voile noir, la nuit, qui le saura? Mais sauvez
Gilbert! Qu’ est-ce que cela vous fait, lui ou moi?

Enfin! Puisque je veux bien mourir, moi! -oh mon dieu! Cette cloche, cette affreuse cloche!
Chacun des coups de cette cloche est un pas vers
l’ échafaud. Chacun des coups de cette cloche frappe sur mon cœur. -faites cela, madame, ayez pitié!
Pas de danger pour votre Fabiano. Laissez-moi baiser vos mains. Je vous aime, madame, je ne vous l’ ai pas encore dit; mais je vous aime bien. Vous êtes une grande reine. Voyez comme je baise vos belles mains. Oh! Un ordre pour suspendre l’ exécution.
Il est encore temps. Je vous assure que c’ est très-possible. Ils vont lentement. Il y a loin de la tour au vieux-marché. L’ homme du balcon a dit qu’ on passerait par Charing-Cross. Il y a un chemin plus court. Un homme à cheval arriverait encore à temps. Au nom du ciel, madame, ayez pitié! Enfin, mettez-vous à ma place, supposez que je sois la reine et vous la pauvre fille, vous pleureriez comme moi, et je ferais grâce. Faites grâce, madame!
Oh! Voilà ce que je craignais, que les larmes ne
m’ empêchassent de parler. Oh! Tout de suite.
Suspendre l’ exécution. Cela n’ a pas d’ inconvénient, madame. Pas de danger pour Fabiano, je vous jure!
Est-ce que vraiment vous ne trouvez pas qu’ il faut faire ce que je dis, madame?
La Reine, attendrie et la relevant.
Je le voudrais, malheureuse. Ah! Tu pleures, oui, comme je pleurais; ce que tu éprouves je viens de l’ éprouver. Mes angoisses me font compatir aux tiennes. Tiens, tu vois que je pleure aussi.
C’ est bien malheureux, pauvre enfant! Sans doute, il semble bien qu’ on aurait pu en prendre un autre,
Tyreonnel, par exemple; mais il est trop connu, il fallait un homme obscur. On n’ avait que celui-là sous la main. Je t’ explique cela pour que tu comprennes, vois-tu. Oh! Mon dieu! Il y a de ces fatalités-là. On se trouve pris. On n’ y peut rien.

Jane.

Oui, je vous écoute bien, madame. C' est comme moi, j' aurais encore plusieurs choses à vous dire; mais je voudrais que l' ordre de suspendre l' exécution fût signé et l' homme parti. Ce sera une chose faite, voyez-vous. Nous parlerons mieux après. Oh! Cette cloche! Toujours cette cloche!

La Reine.

Ce que tu veux est impossible, lady Jane.

Jane.

Si, c' est possible. Un homme à cheval. Il y a un chemin très-court. Par le quai. J' irais, moi. C' est possible. C' est facile. Vous voyez que je parle avec douceur.

La Reine.

Mais le peuple ne voudrait pas, mais il reviendrait tout massacrer dans la tour, et Fabiano y est encore, mais comprends donc. Tu trembles, pauvre enfant, moi je suis comme toi, je tremble aussi. Mets-toi à ma place à ton tour. Enfin, je pourrais bien ne pas prendre la peine de t' expliquer tout cela. Tu vois que je fais ce que je peux. Ne songe plus à ce Gilbert, Jane! C' est fini. Résigne-toi!

Jane.

Fini! Non, ce n' est pas fini! Non, tant que cette horrible cloche sonnera, ce ne sera pas fini! Me résigner! à la mort de Gilbert! Est-ce que vous croyez que je laisserai mourir Gilbert ainsi? Non, madame. Ah! Je perds mes peines! Ah! Vous ne m' écoutez pas. Eh bien! Si la reine ne m' entend pas, le peuple m' entendra! Ah! Ils sont bons, ceux-là, voyez-vous! Le peuple est encore dans cette cour. Vous ferez de moi ensuite ce que vous voudrez. Je vais lui crier qu' on le trompe, et que c' est Gilbert, un ouvrier comme eux, et que ce n' est pas Fabiani.

La Reine.

Arrête, misérable enfant!
Elle lui saisit le bras et la regarde fixement d’ un air formidable.
— ah! Tu le prends ainsi? Ah! Je suis bonne et douce, et je pleure avec toi, et voilà que tu deviens folle et furieuse! Ah! Mon amour est aussi grand que le tien, et ma main est plus forte que la tienne. Tu ne bougeras pas. Ah, ton amant! Que m’ importe ton amant? Est-ce que toutes les filles d’ Angleterre vont venir me demander compte de leurs amans, maintenant! Pardieu! Je sauve le mien comme je peux et aux dépens de qui se trouve là. Veillez sur les vôtres!
Jane.
Laissez-moi! -oh! Je vous maudis, méchante femme!
La Reine.
Silence!
Jane.
Non, je ne me tairai pas. Et voulez-vous que je vous dise une pensée que j’ ai à présent? Je ne crois pas que celui qui va mourir soit Gilbert.
La Reine.
Que dis-tu?
Jane.
Je ne sais pas. Mais je l’ ai vu passer sous ce voile noir. Il me semble que si ç’ avait été Gilbert, quelque chose aurait remué en moi, quelque chose se serait révolté, quelque chose se serait soulevé dans mon cœur, et m’ aurait crié: Gilbert! C’ est Gilbert! Je n’ ai rien senti, ce n’ est pas Gilbert!
La Reine.
Que dis-tu là? Ah! Mon dieu! Tu es insensée, ce que tu dis là est fou, et cependant cela m’ épouvante. Ah! Tu viens de remuer une des plus secrètes inquiétudes de mon cœur. Pourquoi cette émeute m’ a-t-elle empêchée de surveiller tout moi-même! Pourquoi m’ en suis-je remise à d’ autres qu’ à moi du salut de Fabiano? éneas Dulverton est un traître. Simon Renard était peut-être là.

Pourvu que je n’ aie pas été trahie une deuxième fois par les ennemis de Fabiano! Pourvu que ce ne soit pas Fabiano en effet…! -quelqu’ un!
Vite quelqu’ un! Quelqu’ un!
Deux geôliers paraissent.
Au premier.
 — vous, courez. Voici mon anneau royal. Dites qu’ on suspende l’ exécution. Au vieux-marché! Au vieux-marché! Il y a un chemin plus court, disais-tu, Jane?
Jane.
Par le quai.
La Reine, au geôlier.
Par le quai. Un cheval! Cours vite!
Le geôlier sort.
Au deuxième geôlier.
 — vous, allez sur-le-champ à la tourelle
d’ édouard-le-confesseur. Il y a là les deux cachots des condamnés à mort. Dans l’ un de ces cachots, il y a un homme. Amenez-le-moi sur-le-champ.
Le geôlier sort.
 — ah! Je tremble! Mes pieds se dérobent sous moi; je n’ aurais pas la force d’ y aller moi-même.
Ah! Tu me rends folle comme toi! Ah! Misérable fille, tu me rends malheureuse comme toi! Je te maudis, comme tu me maudis! Mon dieu! L’ homme aura-t-il le temps d’ arriver? Quelle horrible anxiété! Je ne vois plus rien. Tout est trouble dans mon esprit. Cette cloche, pour qui sonne-t-elle?
Est-ce pour Gilbert? Est-ce pour Fabiano?
Jane.
La cloche s’ arrête.
La Reine.

C’ est que le cortége est sur la place de l’ exécution.
L’ homme n’ aura pas eu le temps d’ arriver.
On entend un coup de canon éloigné.
Jane.
Ciel!
La Reine.
Il monte sur l’ échafaud.
Deuxième coup de canon.
— il s’ agenouille.
Jane.
C’ est horrible!
Troisième coup de canon.
Toutes Deux.
Ah!…
La Reine.
Il n’ y en a plus qu’ un de vivant. Dans un instant nous saurons lequel. Mon dieu! Celui qui va entrer, faites que ce soit Fabiano!
Jane.
Mon dieu! Faites que ce soit Gilbert!
Le rideau du fond s’ ouvre. Simon Renard paraît, tenant Gilbert par la main.
Jane.
Gilbert!
Ils se précipitent dans les bras l’ un de l’ autre.
La Reine.
Et Fabiano?
Simon Renard.
Mort.
La Reine.
Mort?… mort! Qui a osé…?
Simon Renard.
Moi. J’ ai sauvé la reine et l’ Angleterre.

FIN.

RUY BLAS

This play in five acts was presented by Hugo and the theatre company of the Renaissance in the salle Ventadour, November 8, 1838. Though considered by many critics to be Hugo's best play, Ruy Blas initially met only average success.

The action takes place in 17th century Spain during the reign of Charles II. Ruy Blas, an indentured commoner and poet falls in love with the Queen. As is typical with Hugo, the play is a thinly veiled cry for political reform.

Sarah Bernhardt playing the part of the Queen, 1872

TABLE DES MATIERES

PREFACE
ACTE PREMIER
Scène première – Don Salluste De Bazan, Gudiel; par instants Ruy Blas.
Scène II – Don Salluste, Don César.
ACTE II
Scène Première: La Reine, La Duchesse d’Albuquerque, Don Guritan, Casilda, Duègnes
Scène II - LA REINE seule
Scène III La reine, la duchesse d’Albuquerque, Casilda, don Guritan, femmes de la reine, pages, Ruy Blas.
Scène IV - Ruy Blas, don Guritan.
Scène V - Don Guritan, la reine.
ACTE III
Scène première
Scène II – Les mêmes, Ruy Blas.
Scène III – Ruy Blas, la reine.
Scène IV - Ruy Blas, seul.
Scène V - Ruy Blas, don Salluste.
ACTE IV
Scène première – Ruy Blas, le page.
Scène II – Don César
Scène III - Don César, un laquais.
Scène IV - Don César, une duègne.
Scène V - Don César, don Guritan.
Scène VI - Don Salluste
Scène VII - Don Salluste, don César.
Scène VIII - Les mêmes, un alcade, des alguazils.
ACTE V
Scène première – Ruy Blas, seul.
Scène II - Ruy Blas, la Reine.
Scène III - Les mêmes, don Salluste.
Scène IV - La reine, Ruy Blas.

PREFACE

Trois espèces de spectateurs composent ce qu’on est convenu d’appeler le public: premièrement, les femmes; deuxièmement, les penseurs; troisièmement, la foule proprement dite. Ce que la foule demande presque exclusivement à l’œuvre dramatique, c’est de l’action; ce que les femmes y veulent avant tout, c’est de la passion; ce qu’y cherchent plus spécialement les penseurs, ce sont des caractères. Si l’on étudie attentivement ces trois classes de spectateurs, voici ce qu’on remarque: la foule est tellement amoureuse de l’action, qu’au besoin elle fait bon marché des caractères et des passions. Les femmes, que l’action intéresse d’ailleurs, sont si absorbées par les développements de la passion, qu’elles se préoccupent peu du dessin des caractères; quant aux penseurs, ils ont un tel goût de voir des caractères, c’est-à-dire des hommes, vivre sur la scène, que, tout en accueillant volontiers la passion comme incident naturel dans l’œuvre dramatique, ils en viennent presque à y être importunés par l’action. Cela tient à ce que la foule demande surtout au théâtre des sensations; la femme, des émotions; le penseur, des méditations. Tous veulent un plaisir; mais ceux-ci, le plaisir des yeux; celles-là, le plaisir du cœur; les derniers, le plaisir de l’esprit. De là, sur notre scène, trois espèces d’œuvres bien distinctes: l’une vulgaire et inférieure, les deux autres illustres et supérieures, mais qui toutes les trois satisfont un besoin: le mélodrame pour la foule; pour les femmes, la tragédie qui analyse la passion; pour les penseurs, la comédie qui peint l’humanité. Disons-le en passant, nous ne prétendons rien établir ici de rigoureux, et nous prions le lecteur d’introduire de lui-même dans notre pensée les restrictions qu’elle peut contenir. Les généralités admettent toujours les exceptions; nous savons fort bien que la foule est une grande chose dans laquelle on trouve tout, l’instinct du beau comme le goût du médiocre, l’amour de l’idéal comme l’appétit du commun; nous savons également que tout penseur complet doit être femme par les côtés délicats du cœur; et nous n’ignorons pas que, grâce à cette loi mystérieuse qui lie les sexes l’un à l’autre aussi bien par l’esprit que par le corps, bien souvent dans une femme il y a un penseur. Ceci posé, et après avoir prié de nouveau le lecteur de ne pas attacher un sens trop absolu aux quelques mots qui nous restent à dire, nous reprenons. Pour tout homme qui fixe un regard sérieux sur les trois sortes de spectateurs dont nous venons de parler, il est évident qu'elles ont toutes les trois raison. Les femmes ont raison de vouloir être émues, les penseurs ont raison de vouloir être enseignés, la foule n'a pas tort de vouloir être amusée. De cette évidence se déduit la loi du drame. En effet, au delà de cette barrière de feu qu'on appelle la rampe du théâtre, et qui sépare le monde réel du monde idéal, créer et faire vivre, dans les conditions combinées de l'art et de la nature, des caractères, c'est-à-dire, et nous le répétons, des hommes; dans ces hommes, dans ces caractères, jeter des passions qui développent ceux-ci et modifient ceux-là; et enfin, du choc de ces caractères et de ces passions avec les grandes lois providentielles, faire sortir la vie humaine, c'est-à-dire des événements grands, petits, douloureux, comiques, terribles, qui contiennent pour le cœur ce plaisir qu'on appelle l'intérêt, et pour l'esprit cette leçon qu'on appelle la morale: tel est le but du drame. On le voit, le drame tient de la tragédie par la peinture des assions, et de la comédie par la peinture des caractères. Le drame est la troisième grande forme de l'art, comprenant, enserrant, et fécondant les deux premières. Corneille et Molière existeraient indépendamment l'un de l'autre, si Shakespeare n'était entre eux, donnant à Corneille la main gauche, à Molière la main droite. De cette façon, les deux é lectricités opposées de la comédie et de la tragédie se rencontrent, et l'étincelle qui en jaillit, c'est le drame. En expliquant, comme il les entend et comme il les a déjà indiqués plusieurs fois, le principe, la loi et le but du drame, l'auteur est loin de se dissimuler l'exiguïté de ses forces et la brièveté de son esprit. Il définit ici, qu'on ne s'y méprenne pas, non ce qu'il a fait, mais ce qu'il a voulu faire. Il montre ce qui a été pour lui le point de départ. Rien de plus. Nous n'avons en tête de ce livre que peu de lignes à écrire, et l'espace nous manque pour les développements nécessaires. Qu'on nous permette donc de passer, sans nous appesantir autrement sur la transition, des idées générales que nous venons de poser, et qui, selon nous, toutes les conditions de l'idéal étant maintenues du reste, régissent l'art tout entier, à quelques-unes des idées particulières que ce drame, Ruy Blas, peut soulever dans les esprits attentifs. Et premièrement, pour ne prendre qu'un des côtés de la question, au point de vue de la philosophie de l'histoire, quel est le sens de ce drame? - Expliquons-nous. Au moment où une monarchie va s'écrouler, plusieurs phénomènes peuvent être observés. Et d'abord la noblesse tend à se dissoudre. En se dissolvant elle se divise, et voici de quelle façon: Le royaume chancelle, la dynastie s'éteint, la loi tombe en ruine; l'unité politique s’émiette aux tiraillements de l’intrigue; le haut de la société s’abâtardit et dé génère; un mortel affaiblissement se fait sentir à tous au dehors comme au dedans; les grandes choses de l’état sont tombées, les petites seules sont debout, triste spectacle public; plus de police, plus d’armée, plus de finances; chacun devine que la fin arrive. De là, dans tous les esprits, ennui de la veille, crainte du lendemain, défiance de tout homme, découragement de toute chose, dégoût profond. Comme la maladie de l’état est dans la tête, la noblesse, qui y touche, en est la première atteinte. Que devient-elle alors? Une partie des gentilshommes, la moins honnête et la moins généreuse, reste à la cour. Tout va être englouti, le temps presse, il faut se hâter, il faut s’enrichir, s’agrandir et profiter des circonstances. On ne songe plus qu’à soi. Chacun se fait, sans pitié pour le pays, une petite fortune particulière dans un coin de la grande infortune publique. On est courtisan, on est ministre, on se dépêche d’être heureux et puissant. On a de l’esprit, on se déprave, et l’on réussit. Les ordres de l’état, les dignités, les places, l’argent, on prend tout, on veut tout, on pille tout. On ne vit plus que par l’ambition et la cupidité. On cache les désordres secrets que peut engendrer l’infirmité humaine sous beaucoup de gravité extérieure. Et, comme cette vie acharnée aux vanités et aux jouissances de l’orgueil a pour première condition l’oubli de tous les sentiments naturels, on y devient féroce. Quand le jour de la disgrâce arrive, quelque chose de monstrueux se développe dans le courtisan tombé, et l’homme se change en démon. L’état désespéré du royaume pousse l’autre moitié de la noblesse, la meilleure et la mieux née, dans une autre voie. Elle s’en va chez elle, elle rentre dans ses palais, dans ses châteaux, dans ses seigneuries. Elle a horreur des affaires, elle n’y peut rien, la fin du monde approche; qu’y faire et à quoi bon se désoler? Il faut s’étourdir, fermer les yeux, vivre, boire, aimer, jouir. Qui sait? A-t-on même un an devant soi? Cela dit, ou même simplement senti, le gentilhomme prend la chose au vif, décuple sa livrée, achète des chevaux, enrichit des femmes, ordonne des fêtes, paie des orgies, jette, donne, vend, achète, hypothèque, compromet, dévore, se livre aux usuriers et met le feu aux quatre coins de son bien. Un beau matin, il lui arrive un malheur. C’est que, quoique la monarchie aille grand train, il s’est ruiné avant elle. Tout est fini, tout est brûlé. De toute cette belle vie flamboyante il ne reste pas même de la fumée; elle s’est envolée. De la cendre, rien de plus. Oublié et abandonné de tous, excepté de ses créanciers, le pauvre gentilhomme devient alors ce qu’il peut, un peu aventurier, un peu spadassin, un peu bohémien. Il s’enfonce et disparaît dans la foule, grande masse terne et noire que, jusqu’à ce jour, il a à peine entrevue de loin sous ses pieds. Il s’y plonge, il s’y réfugie. Il n’a plus d’or, mais il lui reste le soleil, cette richesse de ceux qui n’ont rien. Il a d’abord habité le haut de la société, voici maintenant qu’il vient se loger dans le bas, et qu’il s’en accommode; il se moque de son parent l’ambitieux, qui est riche et qui est puissant; il devient philosophe, et il compare les voleurs aux courtisans. Du reste, bonne, brave, loyale et intelligente nature; mélange du poè te, du gueux et du prince; riant de tout; faisant aujourd’hui rosser le guet par ses camarades comme autrefois par ses gens, mais n’y touchant pas; alliant dans sa manière, avec quelque grâce, l’impudence du marquis à l’effronterie du zingaro; souillé au dehors, sain au dedans; et n’ayant plus du gentilhomme que son honneur qu’il garde, son nom qu’il cache, et son épée qu’il montre. Si le double tableau que nous venons de tracer s’offre dans l’histoire de toutes les monarchies à un moment donné, il se présente particulièrement en Espagne d’une façon frappante à la fin du dix-septième siècle. Ainsi, si l’auteur avait réussi à exécuter cette partie de sa pensée, ce qu’il est loin de supposer, dans le drame qu’on va lire, la première moitié de la noblesse espagnole à cette époque se résumerait en don Salluste, et la seconde moitié en don César. Tous deux cousins, comme il convient. Ici, comme partout, en esquissant ce croquis de la noblesse castillane vers 1695, nous réservons, bien entendu, les rares et vénérables exceptions. - Poursuivons. En examinant toujours cette monarchie et cette époque, au-dessous de la noblesse ainsi partagée, et qui pourrait, jusqu’à un certain point, être personnifiée dans les deux hommes que nous venons de nommer, on voit remuer dans l’ombre quelque chose de grand, de sombre et d’inconnu. C’est le peuple. Le peuple, qui a l’avenir et qui n’a pasle présent; le peuple, orphelin, pauvre, intelligent et fort; placé très bas, et aspirant très haut; ayant sur le dos les marques de la servitude et dans le cœur les préméditations du génie; le peuple, valet des grands seigneurs, et amoureux, dans sa misère et dans son abjection, de la seule figure qui, au milieu de cette société écroulée, représente pour lui, dans un divin rayonnement, l’autorité, la charité et la fécondité. Le peuple, ce serait Ruy Blas. Maintenant, au-dessus de ces trois hommes qui, ainsi considérés, feraient vivre et marcher, aux yeux du spectateur, trois faits, et, dans ces trois faits, toute la monarchie espagnole au dix-septième siècle; au-dessus de ces trois hommes, disons-nous, il y a une pure et lumineuse créature, une femme, une reine. Malheureuse comme femme, car elle est comme si elle n’avait pas de mari; malheureuse comme reine, car elle est comme si elle n’avait pas de roi; penchée vers ceux qui sont au-dessous d’elle par pitié royale et par instinct de femme aussi peut-être, et regardant en bas pendant que Ruy Blas, le peuple, regarde en haut. Aux yeux de l’auteur, et sans préjudice de ce que les personnages accessoires peuvent apporter à la vérité de l’ensemble, ces quatre êtes ainsi groupées résumeraient les principales saillies qu’offrait au regard du philosophe historien la monarchie espagnole il y a cent quarante ans. à ces quatre têtes il semble qu’on pourrait en ajouter une cinquième, celle du roi Charles II. Mais, dans l’histoire comme dans le drame, Charles II d’Espagne n’est pas une figure, c’est une ombre. A présent, hâtons-nous de le dire, ce qu’on vient de lire n’est point l’explication de Ruy Blas. C’en est simplement un des aspects. C’est l’impression particulière que pourrait laisser ce drame, s’il valait la peine d’être é tudié, à l’esprit grave et consciencieux qui l’examinerait, par exemple, du point de vue de la philosophie de l’histoire. Mais, si peu qu’il soit, ce drame, comme toutes les choses de ce monde, a beaucoup d’autres aspects et peut être envisagé de beaucoup d’autres manières. On peut prendre plusieurs vues d’une idée comme d’une montagne. Cela dépend du lieu où l’on se place. Qu’on nous passe, seulement pour rendre claire notre idée, une comparaison infiniment trop ambitieuse: le mont Blanc, vu de la Croix-De-Fléchères, ne ressemble pas au mont Blanc vu de Sallenches. Pourtant c’est toujours le mont Blanc. De même, pour tomber d’une très grande chose à une très petite, ce drame, dont nous venons d’indiquer le sens historique, offrirait une tout autre figure, si on le considérait d’un point de vue beaucoup plus élevé encore, du point de vue purement humain. Alors don Salluste serait l’égoïsme absolu, le souci sans repos; don César, son contraire, serait le désintéressement et l’insouciance; on verrait dans Ruy Blas le génie et la passion comprimés par la société, et s’élançant d’autant plus haut que la compression est plus violente; la reine enfin, ce serait la vertu minée par l’ennui. Au point de vue uniquement littéraire, l’aspect de cette pensée telle quelle, intitulée Ruy Blas, changerait encore. Les trois formes souveraines de l’art pourraient y paraître personnifiées et résumées. Don Salluste serait le drame, don César la comédie, Ruy Blas la tragédie. Le drame noue l’action, la comédie l’embrouille, la tragédie la tranche. Tous ces aspects sont justes et vrais, mais aucun d’eux n’est complet. La vérité absolue n’est que dans l’ensemble de l’œuvre. Que chacun y trouve ce qu’il y cherche, et le poète, qui ne s’en flatte pas du reste, aura atteint son but. Le sujet philosophique de Ruy Blas, c’est le peuple aspirant aux régions élevées; le sujet humain, c’est un homme qui aime une femme; le sujet dramatique, c’est un laquais qui aime une reine. La foule qui se presse chaque soir devant cette œuvre, parce qu’en France jamais l’attention publique n’a fait défaut aux tentatives de l’esprit, quelles qu’elles soient d’ailleurs, la foule, disons-nous, ne voit dans Ruy Blas que ce dernier sujet, le sujet dramatique, le laquais; et elle a raison. Et ce que nous venons de dire de Ruy Blas nous semble évident de tout autre ouvrage. Les œuvres vénérables des maîtres ont même cela de remarquable qu’elles offrent plus de faces à étudier que les autres. Tartuffe fait rire ceux-ci et trembler ceux-là. Tartuffe, c’est le serpent domestique; ou bien c’est l’hypocrite; ou bien c’est l’hypocrisie. C’est tantôt un homme, tantôt une idée. Othello, pour les uns, c’est un noir qui aime une blanche; pour les autres, c’est un parvenu qui a épousé une patricienne; pour ceux-là, c’est un jaloux; pour ceux-ci, c’est la jalousie. Et cette diversité d’aspects n’ôte rien à l’unité fondamentale de la composition. Nous l’avons déjà dit ailleurs: mille rameaux et un tronc unique. Si l’auteur de ce livre a particulièrement insisté sur la signification historique de Ruy Blas, c’est que, dans sa pensée, par le sens historique, et, il est vrai, par le sens historique uniquement, Ruy Blas se rattache à Hernani. Le grand fait de la noblesse se montre, dans Hernani comme dans Ruy Blas, à côté du grand fait de la royauté. Seulement, dans Hernani, comme la royauté absolue n’est pas faite, la noblesse lutte encore contre le roi, ici avec l’orgueil, là avec l’épée; à demi féodale, à demi rebelle. En 1519, le seigneur vit loin de la cour, dans la montagne, en bandit comme Hernani, ou en patriarche comme Ruy Gomez. Deux cents ans plus tard, la question est retournée. Les vassaux sont devenus des courtisans. Et, si le seigneur sent encore d’aventure le besoin de cacher son nom, ce n’est pas pour échapper au roi, c’est pour échapper à ses créanciers. Il ne se fait pas bandit, il se fait bohémien. - On sent que la royauté absolue a passé pendant de longues années sur ces nobles têtes, courbant l’une, brisant l’autre. Et puis, qu’on nous permette ce dernier mot, entre Hernani et Ruy Blas, deux siècles de l’Espagne sont encadrés; deux grands siècles, pendant lesquels il a été donné à la descendance de Charles-Quint de dominer le monde; deux siècles que la providence, chose remarquable, n’a pas voulu allonger d’une heure, car Charles-Quint naît en 1500, et Charles II meurt en 1700. En 1700, Louis XIV héritait de Charles-

Quint, comme en 1800 Napoléon héritait de Louis XIV. Ces grandes apparitions de dynasties qui illuminent par moments l'histoire sont pour l'auteur un beau et mélancolique spectacle sur lequel ses yeux se fixent souvent. Il essaie parfois d'en transporter quelque chose dans ses œuvres. Ainsi il a voulu remplir Hernani du rayonnement d'une aurore, et couvrir Ruy Blas des ténèbres d'un crépuscule. Dans Hernani, le soleil de la maison d'Autriche se lève; dans Ruy Blas, il se couche.

Paris, 25 novembre 1838.

ACTE PREMIER

Don SALLUSTE

Le salon de Danaé dans le palais du roi, à Madrid. Ameublement magnifique dans le goût demi-flamand du temps de Philippe IV. À gauche, une grande fenêtre à châssis dorés et à petits carreaux. Des deux côtés, sur un pan coupé, une porte basse donnant dans quelque appartement intérieur. Au fond, une grande cloison vitrée à châssis dorés s’ouvrant par une large porte également vitrée sur une longue galerie. Cette galerie, qui traverse tout le théâtre, est masquée par d’immenses rideaux qui tombent du haut en bas de la cloison vitrée. Une table, un fauteuil, et ce qu’il faut pour écrire. Don Salluste entre par la petite porte de gauche, suivi de Ruy Blas et de Gudiel, qui porte une cassette et divers paquets qu’on dirait disposés pour un voyage. Don Salluste est vêtu de velours noir, costume de cour du temps de Charles II. La toison d’or au cou. Par-dessus l’habillement noir, un riche manteau de velours vert clair, brodé d’or et doublé de satin noir. Épée à grande coquille. Chapeau à plumes blanches. Gudiel est en noir, épée au côté. Ruy Blas est en livrée. Haut-de-chausses et justaucorps bruns. Surtout galonné, rouge et or. Tête nue. Sans épée.

Scène première – Don Salluste De Bazan, Gudiel; par instants Ruy Blas.

DON SALLUSTE.
Ruy Blas, fermez la porte, – ouvrez cette fenêtre.
Ruy Blas obéit, puis, sur un signe de don Salluste, il sort par la porte du fond. Don Salluste va à la fenêtre.
Ils dorment encor tous ici, – le jour va naître.
Il se tourne brusquement vers Gudiel.
Ah! C’est un coup de foudre! ... – oui, mon règne est passé,
Gudiel! – renvoyé, disgracié, chassé! –
Ah! Tout perdre en un jour! – l’aventure est secrète
Encor, n’en parle pas. – oui, pour une amourette,
– Chose, à mon âge, sotte et folle, j’en convien! –
Avec une suivante, une fille de rien!
Séduite, beau malheur! Parce que la donzelle
Est à la reine, et vient de Neubourg avec elle,
Que cette créature a pleuré contre moi,
Et traîné son enfant dans les chambres du roi;
Ordre de l’épouser. Je refuse. On m’exile.
On m’exile! Et vingt ans d’un labeur difficile,
Vingt ans d’ambition, de travaux nuit et jour;
Le président haï des alcades de cour,
Dont nul ne prononçait le nom sans épouvante;
Le chef de la maison de Bazan, qui s’en vante;
Mon crédit, mon pouvoir; tout ce que je rêvais,
Tout ce que je faisais et tout ce que j’avais,
Charge, emplois, honneurs, tout en un instant s’écroule
Au milieu des éclats de rire de la foule!
Gudiel.
Nul ne le sait encor, monseigneur.
Don Salluste.
Mais demain!
Demain, on le saura! – nous serons en chemin.
Je ne veux pas tomber, non, je veux disparaître!

Il déboutonne violemment son pourpoint.
– Tu m’agrafes toujours comme on agrafe un prêtre,
Tu serres mon pourpoint, et j’étouffe, mon cher! –
Il s’assied.
Oh! Mais je vais construire, et sans en avoir l’air,
Une sape profonde, obscure et souterraine!
Chassé! –
Il se lève.
Gudiel.
D’où vient le coup, monseigneur?
Don Salluste.
De la reine.
Oh! Je me vengerai, Gudiel! Tu m’entends.
Toi dont je suis l’élève, et qui depuis vingt ans
M’as aidé, m’as servi dans les choses passées,
Tu sais bien jusqu’où vont dans l’ombre mes pensées,
Comme un bon architecte, au coup d’oeil exercé,
Connaît la profondeur du puits qu’il a creusé.
Je pars. Je vais aller à Finlas, en Castille,
Dans mes états, – et là, songer! – pour une fille!
– Toi, règle le départ, car nous sommes pressés.
Moi, je vais dire un mot au drôle que tu sais.
À tout hasard. Peut-il me servir? Je l’ignore.
Ici jusqu’à ce soir je suis le maître encore.
Je me vengerai, va! Comment? Je ne sais pas;
Mais je veux que ce soit effrayant! – de ce pas
Va faire nos apprêts, et hâte-toi. – silence!
Tu pars avec moi. Va.
Gudiel salue et sort. – don Salluste appelant.
– Ruy Blas!
Ruy Blas, se présentant à la porte du fond.
Votre excellence?
Don Salluste.
Comme je ne dois plus coucher dans le palais,
Il faut laisser les clefs et clore les volets.
Ruy Blas, s’inclinant.
Monseigneur, il suffit.

Don Salluste.
Écoutez, je vous prie.
La reine va passer, là, dans la galerie,
En allant de la messe à sa chambre d'honneur,
Dans deux heures. Ruy Blas, soyez là.
Ruy Blas.
Monseigneur,
J'y serai.
Don Salluste, à la fenêtre.
Voyez-vous cet homme dans la place
Qui montre aux gens de garde un papier, et qui passe?
Faites-lui, sans parler, signe qu'il peut monter.
Par l'escalier étroit.
Ruy Blas obéit. Don Salluste continue en lui montrant la petite porte à droite.
– avant de nous quitter,
Dans cette chambre où sont les hommes de police,
Voyez donc si les trois alguazils de service
Sont éveillés.
Ruy Blas. Il va à la porte, l'entr'ouvre et revient.
Seigneur, ils dorment.
Don Salluste.
Parlez bas.
J'aurai besoin de vous, ne vous éloignez pas.
Faites le guet afin que les fâcheux nous laissent.
Entre don César De Bazan. Chapeau défoncé. Grande cape déguenillée qui ne laisse voir de sa toilette que des bas mal tirés et des souliers crevés.
Épée de spadassin.
Au moment où il entre, lui et Ruy Blas se regardent et font en même temps, chacun de son côté, un geste de surprise.
Don Salluste, les observant, à part.
Ils se sont regardés! Est-ce qu'ils se connaissent?
Ruy Blas sort.

Scène II – Don Salluste, Don César.

Don Salluste.
Ah! Vous voilà, bandit!
Don César.
        Oui, cousin, me voilà.
Don Salluste.
C'est grand plaisir de voir un gueux comme cela!
Don César, saluant.
Je suis charmé...
Don Salluste.
      Monsieur, on sait de vos histoires.
Don César, gracieusement.
Qui sont de votre goût?
Don Salluste.
        Oui, des plus méritoires.
Don Charles De Mira l'autre nuit fut volé.
On lui prit son épée à fourreau ciselé
Et son buffle. C'était la surveille de pâques.
Seulement, comme il est chevalier de saint-Jacques,
La bande lui laissa son manteau.
Don César.
        Doux Jésus!
Pourquoi?
Don Salluste.
      Parce que l'ordre était brodé dessus.
Eh bien, que dites-vous de l'algarade?
Don César.
          Ah! Diable!
Je dis que nous vivons dans un siècle effroyable!
Qu'allons-nous devenir, bon Dieu! Si les voleurs
Vont courtiser saint Jacque et le mettre des leurs?
Don Salluste.
Vous en étiez!
Don César.
      Eh bien, – oui! S'il faut que je parle,

J’étais là. Je n’ai pas touché votre don Charle,
J’ai donné seulement des conseils.
Don Salluste.
Mieux encor.
La lune étant couchée, hier, Plaza-Mayor,
Toutes sortes de gens, sans coiffe et sans semelle,
Qui hors d’un bouge affreux se ruaient pêle-mêle,
Ont attaqué le guet. – vous en étiez!
Don César.
Cousin,
J’ai toujours dédaigné de battre un argousin.
J’étais là. Rien de plus. Pendant les estocades,
Je marchais en faisant des vers sous les arcades.
On s’est fort assommé.
Don Salluste.
Ce n’est pas tout.
Don César.
Voyons.
Don Salluste.
En France, on vous accuse, entre autres actions,
Avec vos compagnons à toute loi rebelles,
D’avoir ouvert sans clef la caisse des gabelles.
Don César.
Je ne dis pas. – la France est pays ennemi.
Don Salluste.
En Flandre, rencontrant dom Paul Barthélemy,
Lequel portait à Mons le produit d’un vignoble
Qu’il venait de toucher pour le chapitre noble,
Vous avez mis la main sur l’argent du clergé.
Don César.
En Flandre? – il se peut bien. J’ai beaucoup voyagé.
– Est-ce tout?
Don Salluste.
Don César, la sueur de la honte,
Lorsque je pense à vous, à la face me monte.
Don César.
Bon. Laissez-la monter.

Don Salluste.
Notre famille...
Don César.
Non.
Car vous seul à Madrid connaissez mon vrai nom.
Ainsi ne parlons pas famille!
Don Salluste.
Une marquise
Me disait l’autre jour en sortant de l’église:
– Quel est donc ce brigand qui, là-bas, nez au vent,
Se carre, l’oeil au guet et la hanche en avant,
Plus délabré que Job et plus fier que Bragance,
Drapant sa gueuserie avec son arrogance,
Et qui, froissant du poing sous sa manche en haillons
L’épée à lourd pommeau qui lui bat les talons,
Promène, d’une mine altière et magistrale,
Sa cape en dents de scie et ses bas en spirale?
Don César, jetant un coup d’oeil sur sa toilette.
Vous avez répondu: c’est ce cher Zafari!
Don Salluste.
Non; j’ai rougi, monsieur.
Don César.
Eh bien! La dame a ri.
Voilà. J’aime beaucoup faire rire les femmes.
Don Salluste.
Vous n’allez fréquentant que spadassins infâmes!
Don César.
Des clercs! Des écoliers doux comme des moutons!
Don Salluste.
Partout on vous rencontre avec des jeannetons!
Don César.
Ô Lucindes d’amour! Ô douces Isabelles!
Eh bien! Sur votre compte on en entend de belles!
Quoi! L’on vous traite ainsi, beautés à l’oeil mutin,
À qui je dis le soir mes sonnets du matin!
Don Salluste.
Enfin, Matalobos, ce voleur de Galice

Qui désole Madrid malgré notre police,
Il est de vos amis!
Don César.
Raisonnons, s’il vous plaît.
Sans lui j’irais tout nu, ce qui serait fort laid.
Me voyant sans habit, dans la rue, en décembre,
La chose le toucha. – ce fat parfumé d’ambre,
Le comte d’Albe, à qui l’autre mois fut volé
Son beau pourpoint de soie...
Don Salluste.
Eh bien?
Don César.
C’est moi qui l’ai.
Matalobos me l’a donné.
Don Salluste.
L’habit du comte!
Vous n’êtes pas honteux? ...
Don César.
Je n’aurai jamais honte
De mettre un bon pourpoint, brodé, passementé,
Qui me tient chaud l’hiver et me fait beau l’été.
– Voyez, il est tout neuf. –
Il entr’ouvre son manteau, qui laisse voir un superbe pourpoint de satin rose brodé d’or.
Les poches en sont pleines
De billets doux au comte adressés par centaines.
Souvent, pauvre, amoureux, n’ayant rien sous la dent,
J’avise une cuisine au soupirail ardent
D’où la vapeur des mets aux narines me monte.
Je m’assieds là. J’y lis les billets doux du comte,
Et, trompant l’estomac et le coeur tour à tour,
J’ai l’odeur du festin et l’ombre de l’amour!
Don Salluste.
Don César...
Don César.
Mon cousin, tenez, trêve aux reproches.
Je suis un grand seigneur, c’est vrai, l’un de vos proches;

Je m’appelle César, comte de Garofa;
Mais le sort de folie en naissant me coiffa.
J’étais riche, j’avais des palais, des domaines,
Je pouvais largement renter les Célimènes.
Bah! Mes vingt ans n’étaient pas encor révolus
Que j’avais mangé tout! Il ne me restait plus
De mes prospérités, ou réelles ou fausses,
Qu’un tas de créanciers hurlant après mes chausses.
Ma foi, j’ai pris la fuite et j’ai changé de nom.
À présent, je ne suis qu’un joyeux compagnon,
Zafari, que hors vous nul ne peut reconnaître.
Vous ne me donnez pas du tout d’argent, mon maître;
Je m’en passe. Le soir, le front sur un pavé,
Devant l’ancien palais des comtes de Tevé,
– C’est là, depuis neuf ans, que la nuit je m’arrête, –
Je vais dormir avec le ciel bleu sur ma tête.
Je suis heureux ainsi. Pardieu, c’est un beau sort!
Tout le monde me croit dans l’Inde, au diable, – mort.
La fontaine voisine a de l’eau, j’y vais boire,
Et puis je me promène avec un air de gloire.
Mon palais, d’où jadis mon argent s’envola,
Appartient à cette heure au nonce Espinola.
C’est bien. Quand par hasard jusque-là je m’enfonce,
Je donne des avis aux ouvriers du nonce
Occupés à sculpter sur la porte un Bacchus. –
Maintenant, pouvez-vous me prêter dix écus?
Don Salluste.
Écoutez-moi...
Don César, croisant les bras.
      Voyons présent votre style.
Don Salluste.
Je vous ai fait venir, c’est pour vous être utile.
César, sans enfants, riche, et de plus votre aîné,
Je vous vois à regret vers l’abîme entraîné;
Je veux vous en tirer. Bravache que vous êtes,
Vous êtes malheureux. Je veux payer vos dettes,
Vous rendre vos palais, vous remettre à la cour,

Et refaire de vous un beau seigneur d'amour.
Que Zafari s'éteigne et que César renaisse.
Je veux qu'à votre gré vous puisiez dans ma caisse,
Sans crainte, à pleines mains, sans soin de l'avenir.
Quand on a des parents il faut les soutenir,
César, et pour les siens se montrer pitoyable...
Pendant que don Salluste parle, le visage de don César prend une expression de plus en plus étonnée, joyeuse et confiante; enfin il éclate.

Don César.
Vous avez toujours eu de l'esprit comme un diable,
Et c'est fort éloquent ce que vous dites là.
– Continuez.
Don Salluste.
César, je ne mets à cela
Qu'une condition. – dans l'instant je m'explique.
Prenez d'abord ma bourse.
Don César, empoignant la bourse, qui est pleine d'or.
Ah a! C'est magnifique!
Don Salluste.
Et je vous vais donner cinq cents ducats...
Don César, ébloui.
Marquis!
Don Salluste, continuant.
Dès aujourd'hui.
Don César.
Pardieu, je vous suis tout acquis.
Quant aux conditions, ordonnez. Foi de brave,
Mon épée est à vous. Je deviens votre esclave,
Et, si cela vous plaît, j'irai croiser le fer
Avec don Spavento, capitan de l'enfer.
Don Salluste.
Non, je n'accepte pas, don César, et pour cause,
Votre épée.
Don César.
Alors quoi? Je n'ai guère autre chose.

Don Salluste, se rapprochant de lui et baissant la voix.
Vous connaissez, – et c'est en ce cas un bonheur, –
Tous les gueux de Madrid?
Don César.
Vous me faites honneur.
Don Salluste.
Vous en traînez toujours après vous une meute;
Vous pourriez, au besoin, soulever une émeute,
Je le sais. Tout cela peut-être servira.
Don César, éclatant de rire.
D'honneur! Vous avez l'air de faire un opéra.
Quelle part donnez-vous dans l'oeuvre à mon génie?
Sera-ce le poëme ou bien la symphonie?
Commandez. Je suis fort pour le charivari.
Don Salluste, gravement.
Je parle à don César et non à Zafari.
Baissant la voix de plus en plus.
Écoute. J'ai besoin, pour un résultat sombre,
De quelqu'un qui travaille à mon côté dans l'ombre
Et qui m'aide à bâtir un grand événement.
Je ne suis pas méchant, mais il est tel moment
Où le plus délicat, quittant toute vergogne,
Doit retrousser sa manche et faire la besogne.
Tu seras riche, mais il faut m'aider sans bruit
À dresser, comme font les oiseleurs la nuit,
Un bon filet caché sous un miroir qui brille,
Un piège d'alouette ou bien de jeune fille.
Il faut, par quelque plan terrible et merveilleux,
– Tu n'es pas, que je pense, un homme scrupuleux, –
Me venger!
Don César.
Vous venger?
Don Salluste.
Oui.
Don César.
De qui?
Don Salluste.

D’une femme.
Don César.
Il se redresse et regarde fièrement don Salluste.
Ne m’en dites pas plus. Halte-là! – sur mon âme,
Mon cousin, en ceci voilà mon sentiment.
Celui qui, bassement et tortueusement,
Se venge, ayant le droit de porter une lame,
Noble, par une intrigue, homme, sur une femme,
Et qui, né gentilhomme, agit en alguazil,
Celui-là, – fût-il grand de Castille, fût-il
Suivi de cent clairons sonnant des tintamarres,
Fût-il tout harnaché d’ordres et de chamarres,
Et marquis, et vicomte, et fils des anciens preux, –
N’est pour moi qu’un maraud sinistre et ténébreux
Que je voudrais, pour prix de sa lâcheté vile,
Voir pendre à quatre clous au gibet de la ville!
Don Salluste.
César! ...
Don César.
N’ajoutez pas un mot, c’est outrageant.
Il jette la bourse aux pieds de don Salluste.
Gardez votre secret, et gardez votre argent.
Oh! Je comprends qu’on vole, et qu’on tue, et qu’on pille,
Que par une nuit noire on force une bastille,
D’assaut, la hache au poing, avec cent flibustiers;
Qu’on égorge estafiers, geôliers et guichetiers,
Tous, taillant et hurlant, en bandits que nous sommes,
Oeil pour oeil, dent pour dent, c’est bien! Hommes contre hommes!
Mais doucement détruire une femme! Et creuser
Sous ses pieds une trappe! Et contre elle abuser,
Qui sait? De son humeur peut-être hasardeuse!
Prendre ce pauvre oiseau dans quelque glu hideuse!
Oh! Plutôt qu’arriver jusqu’à ce déshonneur,
Plutôt qu’être, à ce prix, un riche et haut seigneur,
– Et je le dis ici pour Dieu qui voit mon âme, –
J’aimerais mieux, plutôt qu’être à ce point infâme,
Vil, odieux, pervers, misérable et flétri,

Qu’un chien rongeât mon crâne au pied du pilori!
Don Salluste.
Cousin...
Don César.
De vos bienfaits je n’aurai nulle envie,
Tant que je trouverai, vivant ma libre vie,
Aux fontaines de l’eau, dans les champs le grand air,
À la ville un voleur qui m’habille l’hiver,
Dans mon âme l’oubli des prospérités mortes,
Et devant vos palais, monsieur, de larges portes
Où je puis, à midi, sans souci du réveil,
Dormir, la tête à l’ombre et les pieds au soleil!
– Adieu donc. – De nous deux Dieu sait quel est le juste.
Avec les gens de cour, vos pareils, don Salluste,
Je vous laisse, et je reste avec mes chenapans.
Je vis avec les loups, non avec les serpents.
Don Salluste.
Un instant...
Don César.
Tenez, maître, abrégeons la visite.
Si c’est pour m’envoyer en prison, faites vite.
Don Salluste.
Allons, je vous croyais, César, plus endurci.
L’épreuve vous est bonne et vous a réussi;
Je suis content de vous. Votre main, je vous prie.
Don César.
Comment!
Don Salluste.
Je n’ai parlé que par plaisanterie.
Tout ce que j’ai dit là, c’est pour vous éprouver.
Rien de plus.
Don César.
Çà, debout vous me faites rêver.
La femme, le complot, cette vengeance...
Don Salluste.
Leurre!
Imagination! Chimère!

Don César.
        À la bonne heure!
Et l’offre de payer mes dettes! Vision?
Et les cinq cents ducats! Imagination?
Don Salluste.
Je vais vous les chercher.
      Il se dirige vers la porte du fond,
et fait signe à Ruy Blas de rentrer.
Don César, à part sur le devant,
et regardant don Salluste de travers.
        Hum! Visage de traître!
Quand la bouche dit oui, le regard dit peut-être.
Don Salluste, à Ruy Blas.
Ruy Blas, restez ici.
      À don César.
      Je reviens.
      Il sort par la petite porte de gauche.
Sitôt qu’il est sorti, don César et Ruy Blas vont vivement l’un à l’autre.

Scène III - Don César, Ruy Blas.

Don César.
          Sur ma foi,
Je ne me trompais pas. C’est toi, Ruy Blas!
Ruy Blas.
          C’est toi,
Zafari! Que fais-tu dans ce palais?
Don César.
          J’y passe.
Mais je m’en vais. Je suis oiseau, j’aime l’espace.
Mais toi? Cette livrée? Est-ce un déguisement?
Ruy Blas, avec amertume.
Non, je suis déguisé quand je suis autrement.
Don César.
Que dis-tu?
Ruy Blas.
      Donne-moi ta main que je la serre,
Comme en cet heureux temps de joie et de misère

Où je vivais sans gîte, où le jour j’avais faim,
Où j’avais froid la nuit, où j’étais libre enfin!
– Quand tu me connaissais, j’étais un homme encore.
Tous deux nés dans le peuple, – Hélas! C’était l’aurore! –
Nous nous ressemblions au point qu’on nous prenait
Pour frères; nous chantions dès l’heure où l’aube naît,
Et le soir devant Dieu, notre père et notre hôte,
Sous le ciel étoilé nous dormions côte à côte.
Oui, nous partagions tout. Puis enfin arriva
L’heure triste où chacun de son côté s’en va.
Je te retrouve, après quatre ans, toujours le même,
Joyeux comme un enfant, libre comme un bohème,
Toujours ce Zafari, riche en sa pauvreté,
Qui n’a rien eu jamais et n’a rien souhaité!
Mais moi, quel changement! Frère, que te dirai-je?
Orphelin, par pitié nourri dans un collège
De science et d’orgueil, de moi, triste faveur!
Au lieu d’un ouvrier on a fait un rêveur.
Tu sais, tu m’as connu. Je jetais mes pensées
Et mes voeux vers le ciel en strophes insensées.
J’opposais cent raisons à ton rire moqueur.
J’avais je ne sais quelle ambition au coeur.
À quoi bon travailler? Vers un but invisible
Je marchais, je croyais tout réel, tout possible,
J’espérais tout du sort! – et puis je suis de ceux
Qui passent tout un jour, pensifs et paresseux,
Devant quelque palais regorgeant de richesses,
À regarder entrer et sortir des duchesses. –
Si bien qu’un jour, mourant de faim sur le pavé,
J’ai ramassé du pain, frère, où j’en ai trouvé
Dans la fainéantise et dans l’ignominie.
Oh! Quand j’avais vingt ans, crédule à mon génie,
Je me perdais, marchant pieds nus dans les chemins,
En méditations sur le sort des humains;
J’avais bâti des plans sur tout, – une montagne
De projets; – je plaignais le malheur de l’Espagne;
Je croyais, pauvre esprit, qu’au monde je manquais... –

Ami, le résultat, tu le vois: – un laquais!
Don César.
Oui, je le sais, la faim est une porte basse:
Et, par nécessité lorsqu’il faut qu’il y passe,
Le plus grand est celui qui se courbe le plus.
Mais le sort a toujours son flux et son reflux.
Espère.
Ruy Blas, secouant la tête.
Le marquis de Finlas est mon maître.
Don César.
Je le connais. – tu vis dans ce palais, peut-être?
Ruy Blas.
Non, avant ce matin et jusqu’à ce moment
Je n’en avais jamais passé le seuil.
Don César.
Vraiment?
Ton maître cependant pour sa charge y demeure.
Ruy Blas.
Oui, car la cour le fait demander à toute heure.
Mais il a quelque part un logis inconnu,
Où jamais en plein jour peut-être il n’est venu.
À cent pas du palais. Une maison discrète.
Frère, j’habite là. Par la porte secrète
Dont il a seul la clef, quelquefois, à la nuit,
Le marquis vient, suivi d’hommes qu’il introduit.
Ces hommes sont masqués et parlent à voix basse.
Ils s’enferment, et nul ne sait ce qui se passe.
Là, de deux noirs muets je suis le compagnon.
Je suis pour eux le maître. Ils ignorent mon nom.
Don César.
Oui, c’est là qu’il reçoit, comme chef des alcades,
Ses espions, c’est là qu’il tend ses embuscades.
C’est un homme profond qui tient tout dans sa main.
Ruy Blas.
Hier, il m’a dit: – il faut être au palais demain.
Avant l’aurore. Entrez par la grille dorée. –
En arrivant il m’a fait mettre la livrée,

Car l’habit odieux sous lequel tu me vois,
Je le porte aujourd’hui pour la première fois.
Don César, lui serrant la main.
Espère!
Ruy Blas.
Espérer! Mais tu ne sais rien encore.
Vivre sous cet habit qui souille et déshonore,
Avoir perdu la joie et l’orgueil, ce n’est rien.
Être esclave, être vil, qu’importe! – écoute bien.
Frère! Je ne sens pas cette livrée infâme,
Car j’ai dans ma poitrine une hydre aux dents de flamme
Qui me serre le coeur dans ses replis ardents.
Le dehors te fait peur? Si tu voyais dedans!
Don César.
Que veux-tu dire?
Ruy Blas.
Invente, imagine, suppose.
Fouille dans ton esprit. Cherches-y quelque chose
D’étrange, d’insensé, d’horrible et d’inouï.
Une fatalité dont on soit ébloui!
Oui, compose un poison affreux, creuse un abîme
Plus sourd que la folie et plus noir que le crime,
Tu n’approcheras pas encor de mon secret.
– Tu ne devines pas? – Hé! Qui devinerait? –
Zafari! Dans le gouffre où mon destin m’entraîne
Plonge les yeux! – je suis amoureux de la reine!
Don César.
Ciel!
Ruy Blas.
Sous un dais orné du globe impérial,
Il est, dans Aranjuez ou dans l’Escurial,
– Dans ce palais, parfois, – mon frère, il est un homme
Qu’à peine on voit d’en bas, qu’avec terreur on nomme;
Pour qui, comme pour Dieu, nous sommes égaux tous;
Qu’on regarde en tremblant et qu’on sert à genoux;
Devant qui se couvrir est un honneur insigne;
Qui peut faire tomber nos deux têtes d’un signe;

Dont chaque fantaisie est un événement;
Qui vit, seul et superbe, enfermé gravement
Dans une majesté redoutable et profonde,
Et dont on sent le poids dans la moitié du monde,
Eh bien! moi, le laquais, – tu m'entends, eh bien! Oui,
Cet homme-là! Le roi! Je suis jaloux de lui!
Don César.
Jaloux du roi!
Ruy Blas.
Hé! Oui, jaloux du roi! Sans doute.
Puisque j'aime sa femme!
Don César.
Oh! Malheureux!
Ruy Blas.
Écoute.
Je l'attends tous les jours au passage. Je suis
Comme un fou! Ho! Sa vie est un tissu d'ennuis,
À cette pauvre femme! – oui, chaque nuit j'y songe. –
Vivre dans cette cour de haine et de mensonge,
Mariée à ce roi qui passe tout son temps
À chasser! Imbécile! – un sot! Vieux à trente ans!
Moins qu'un homme! À régner comme à vivre inhabile.
– Famille qui s'en va! – Le père était débile
Au point qu'il ne pouvait tenir un parchemin.
– Oh! Si belle et si jeune, avoir donné sa main À ce roi Charles Deux! Elle! Quelle misère!
– Elle va tous les soirs chez les soeurs du rosaire,
Tu sais? En remontant la rue Ortaleza.
Comment cette démence en mon coeur s'amassa,
Je l'ignore. Mais juge! Elle aime une fleur bleue
D'Allemagne... – je fais chaque jour une lieue,
Jusqu'à Caramanchel, pour avoir de ces fleurs.
J'en ai cherché partout sans en trouver ailleurs.
J'en compose un bouquet, je prends les plus jolies...
– Oh! Mais je te dis là des choses, des folies! –
Puis minuit, au parc royal, comme un voleur,
Je me glisse et je vais déposer cette fleur

Sur son banc favori. Même, hier, j’osai mettre
Dans le bouquet, – vraiment, plains-moi, frère! – une lettre!
La nuit, pour parvenir jusqu’à ce banc, il faut
franchir les murs du parc, et je rencontre en haut
Ces broussailles de fer qu’on met sur les murailles.
Un jour j’y laisserai ma chair et mes entrailles.
Trouve-t-elle mes fleurs, ma lettre? Je ne sai.
Frère, tu le vois bien, je suis un insensé.
Don César.
Diable! Ton algarade a son danger. Prends garde.
Le comte d’Onate, qui l’aime aussi, la garde
Et comme un majordome et comme un amoureux.
Quelque reître, une nuit, gardien peu langoureux,
Pourrait bien, frère, avant que ton bouquet se fane,
Te le clouer au coeur d’un coup de pertuisane. –
Mais quelle idée! Aimer la reine! Ah çà, pourquoi?
Comment diable as-tu fait?
Ruy Blas, avec emportement.
        Est-ce que je sais, moi!
– Oh! Mon âme au démon! Je la vendrais pour être
Un des jeunes seigneurs que, de cette fenêtre,
Je vois en ce moment, comme un vivant affront,
Entrer, la plume au feutre et l’orgueil sur le front!
Oui, je me damnerais pour dépouiller ma chaîne,
Et pour pouvoir comme eux m’approcher de la reine
Avec un vêtement qui ne soit pas honteux!
Mais, ô rage! Être ainsi, près d’elle! Devant eux!
En livrée! Un laquais! Être un laquais pour elle!
Ayez pitié de moi, mon Dieu!
      Se rapprochant de don César.
        Je me rappelle.
Ne demandais-tu pas pourquoi je l’aime ainsi,
Et depuis quand? ... – un jour... – mais à quoi bon ceci?
C’est vrai, je t’ai toujours connu cette manie!
Par mille questions vous mettre à l’agonie!
Demander où? Comment? Quand? Pourquoi? Mon sang bout!
Je l’aime follement! Je l’aime, voilà tout!

Don César.
Là, ne te fâche pas.
Ruy Blas, tombant épuisé et pâle sur le fauteuil.
Non. Je souffre. – pardonne.
Ou plutôt, va, fuis-moi. Va-t'en, frère. Abandonne
Ce misérable fou qui porte avec effroi
Sous l'habit d'un valet les passions d'un roi!
Don César, lui posant la main sur l'épaule.
Te fuir! – moi qui n'ai pas souffert, n'aimant personne,
Moi, pauvre grelot vide où manque ce qui sonne,
Gueux, qui vais mendiant l'amour je ne sais où,
À qui de temps en temps le destin jette un sou,
Moi, coeur éteint, dont l'âme, hélas! S'est retirée,
Du spectacle d'hier affiche déchirée,
Vois-tu, pour cet amour dont tes regards sont pleins,
Mon frère, je t'envie autant que je te plains!
– Ruy Blas! –

Moment de silence. Ils se tiennent les mains serrées en se regardant tous les deux avec une expression de tristesse et d'amitié confiante.

Entre don Salluste. Il s'avance à pas lents, fixant un regard d'attention profonde sur don César et Ruy Blas, qui ne le voient pas. Il tient d'une main un chapeau et une épée qu'il apporte en entrant sur un fauteuil, et de l'autre une bourse qu'il dépose sur la table.

Don Salluste, à don César.
Voici l'argent.

À la voix de don Salluste, Ruy Blas se lève comme réveillé en sursaut, et se tient debout, les yeux baissés, dans l'attitude du respect.

Don César, à part, regardant don Salluste de travers.
Hum! Le diable m'emporte!
Cette sombre figure écoutait à la porte.
Bah! Qu'importe, après tout!
Haut don Salluste.
Don Salluste, merci.

Il ouvre la bourse, la répand sur la table et remue avec joie les ducats qu'il range en piles sur le tapis de velours. Pendant qu'il les compte, don Salluste va au fond, en regardant derrière lui s'il n'éveille pas l'attention de don César. Il ouvre la petite porte de droite. – à un signe qu'il fait, trois alguazils armés d'épées et vêtus de noir en sortent. Don Salluste leur montre mystérieusement don César.

Ruy Blas se tient immobile et debout près de la table comme une statue, sans rien voir ni rien entendre.

Don Salluste, bas, aux alguazils.

Vous allez suivre, alors qu'il sortira d'ici,
L'homme qui compte là de l'argent. – en silence
Vous vous emparerez de lui. – sans violence. –
Vous l'irez embarquer, par le plus court chemin, à Denia. –

Il leur remet un parchemin scellé.

Voici l'ordre écrit de ma main. –
Enfin, sans écouter sa plainte chimérique,
Vous le vendrez en mer aux corsaires d'Afrique.
Mille piastres pour vous. Faites vite à présent!

Les trois alguazils s'inclinent et sortent.

Don César, achevant de ranger ses ducats.

Rien n'est plus gracieux et plus divertissant
Que des écus à soi qu'on met en équilibre.

Il fait deux parts égales et se tourne vers Ruy Blas.

Frère, voici ta part. –

Ruy Blas.

Comment!

Don César, lui montrant une des deux piles d'or.

Prends! Viens! Sois libre!

Don Salluste, qui les observe, à part.

Diable!

Ruy Blas, secouant la tête en signe de refus.

Non. C'est le coeur qu'il faudrait délivrer.
Non, mon sort est ici. Je dois y demeurer.

Don César.

Bien. Suis ta fantaisie. Es-tu fou? Suis-je sage?
Dieu le sait.

Il ramasse l'argent et le jette dans le sac, qu'il empoche.

Don Salluste, au fond, à part, et les observant toujours.

À peu près même air, même visage.

Don César, à Ruy Blas.
Adieu.
Ruy Blas.
Ta main!
Ils se serrent la main.
Don César sort sans voir don Salluste, qui se tient à l'écart.

Scène IV - Ruy Blas, don Salluste.
Don Salluste.
Ruy Blas!
Ruy Blas, se retournant vivement.
Monseigneur?
Don Salluste.
Ce matin,
Quand vous êtes venu, je ne suis pas certain
S'il faisait jour déjà?
Ruy Blas.
Pas encore, excellence.
J'ai remis au portier votre passe en silence,
Et puis je suis monté.
Don Salluste
Vous étiez en manteau?
Ruy Blas
Oui, monseigneur.
Don Salluste.
Personne, en ce cas, au château,
Ne vous a vu porter cette livrée encore?
Ruy Blas.
Ni personne à Madrid.
Don Salluste, désignant du doigt la porte par où est sorti Don César.
C'est fort bien. Allez clore
Cette porte. Quittez cet habit.
Ruy Blas dépouille son surtout de livrée et le jette sur un fauteuil.
Vous avez
Une belle écriture, il me semble. – écrivez.
Il fait signe à Ruy Blas de s'asseoir à la table où sont les plumes et les écritoires. Ruy Blas obéit.

Vous m’allez aujourd’hui servir de secrétaire.
D’abord un billet doux, – je ne veux rien vous taire, –
Pour ma reine d’amour, pour dona Praxedis,
Ce démon que je crois venu du paradis.
– Là, je dicte. “ Un danger terrible est sur ma tête.
“ Ma reine seule peut conjurer la tempête,
“ En venant me trouver ce soir dans ma maison.
“ Sinon, je suis perdu. Ma vie et ma raison
“ Et mon coeur, je mets tout à ses pieds que je baise. “
Il rit et s’interrompt.
Un danger! La tournure, au fait, n’est pas mauvaise
Pour l’attirer chez moi. C’est que, j’y suis expert,
Les femmes aiment fort à sauver qui les perd.
– Ajoutez: – “ Par la porte au bas de l’avenue,
“ Vous entrerez la nuit sans être reconnue.
“ Quelqu’un de dévoué vous ouvrira. “ – D’honneur,
C’est parfait. – Ah! Signez.
Ruy Blas.
Votre nom, monseigneur?
Don Salluste.
Non pas. Signez César. C’est mon nom d’aventure.
Ruy Blas, après avoir obéi.
La dame ne pourra connaître l’écriture?
Don Salluste.
Bah! Le cachet suffit. J’écris souvent ainsi.
Ruy Blas, je pars ce soir, et je vous laisse ici.
J’ai sur vous les projets d’un ami très sincère.
Votre état va changer, mais il est nécessaire
De m’obéir en tout. Comme en vous j’ai trouvé
Un serviteur discret, fidèle et réservé...
Ruy Blas, s’inclinant.
Monseigneur!
Don Salluste, continuant.
Je vous veux faire un destin plus large.
Ruy Blas, montrant le billet qu’il vient d’écrire.
Où faut-il adresser la lettre?

Don Salluste.
Je m’en charge.
S’approchant de Ruy Blas d’un air significatif.
Je veux votre bonheur.
Un silence. Il fait signe à Ruy Blas de se rasseoir à la table.
Écrivez: – “ moi, Ruy Blas,
“ Laquais de monseigneur le marquis de Finlas,
“ En toute occasion, ou secrète ou publique,
“ M’engage à le servir comme un bon domestique. “
Ruy Blas obéit.
– Signez de votre nom. La date. Bien. Donnez.
Il ploie et serre dans son portefeuille la lettre et le papier que Ruy Blas vient d’écrire.
On vient de m’apporter une épée. Ah! Tenez,
Elle est sur ce fauteuil.
Il désigne le fauteuil sur lequel il a posé l’épée et le chapeau.
Il y va et prend l’épée.
L’écharpe est d’une soie
Peinte et brodée au goût le plus nouveau qu’on voie.
Il lui fait admirer la souplesse du tissu.
Touchez. – Que dites-vous, Ruy Blas, de cette fleur?
La poignée est de Gil, le fameux ciseleur,
Celui qui le mieux creuse, au gré des belles filles,
Dans un pommeau d’épée une boîte à pastilles.
Il passe au cou de Ruy Blas l’écharpe,
à laquelle est attachée l’épée.
Mettez-la donc. – Je veux en voir sur vous l’effet.
– Mais vous avez ainsi l’air d’un seigneur parfait!
Écoutant.
On vient... oui. C’est bientôt l’heure où la reine passe. –
– le marquis Del Basto! –

La porte du fond sur la galerie s’ouvre. Don Salluste détache son manteau et le jette vivement sur les épaules de Ruy Blas, au moment où le marquis Del Basto paraît; puis il va droit au marquis, en entraînant avec lui Ruy Blas stupéfait.

Scène V – Don Salluste, Ruy Blas, don Pamfilo D’Avalos, marquis Del Basto. – puis le marquis de Santa-Cruz. – puis le comte d’Albe. – Puis toute la cour.

Don Salluste, au marquis Del Basto.
        Souffrez qu’à votre grâce
Je présente, marquis, mon cousin don César,
Comte de Garofa près de Velalcazar.
Ruy Blas, à part.
Ciel!
Don Salluste, bas, à Ruy Blas.
      Taisez-vous!
Le Marquis Del Basto, saluant Ruy Blas.
        Monsieur... charmé...
      Il lui prend la main, que Ruy Blas lui livre avec embarras.
Don Salluste, bas, à Ruy Blas.
          Laissez-vous faire.
Saluez!
      Ruy Blas salue le marquis.
Le Marquis Del Basto, à Ruy Blas.
        J’aimais fort madame votre mère.
      Bas, don Salluste, en lui montrant Ruy Blas.
Bien changé! Je l’aurais à peine reconnu.
Don Salluste, bas, au marquis.
Dix ans d’absence!
Le Marquis Del Basto, de même.
      Au fait!
Don Salluste, frappant sur l’épaule de Ruy Blas.
        Le voilà revenu!
Vous souvient-il, marquis? Oh! Quel enfant prodigue!
Comme il vous répandait les pistoles sans digue!
Tous les soirs danse et fête au vivier d’Apollo,
Et cent musiciens faisant rage sur l’eau!
À tous moments, galas, masques, concerts, fredaines,
É blouissant Madrid de visions soudaines!
– En trois ans, ruiné! – C’était un vrai lion.

– Il arrive de l’Inde avec le galion.
Ruy Blas, avec embarras.
Seigneur...
Don Salluste, gaiement.
Appelez-moi cousin, car nous le sommes.
Les Bazan sont, je crois, d’assez francs gentilshommes.
Nous avons pour ancêtre Iniguez d’Iviza.
Son petit-fils, Pedro De Bazan, épousa
Marianne De Gor. Il eut de Marianne
Jean, qui fut général de la mer océane
Sous le roi don Philippe, et Jean eut deux garçons
Qui sur notre arbre antique ont greffé deux blasons.
Moi, je suis le marquis de Finlas; vous, le comte de Garofa. Tous deux se valent si l’on compte.
Par les femmes, César, notre rang est égal.
Vous êtes Aragon, moi je suis Portugal.
Votre branche n’est pas moins haute que la nôtre.
Je suis le fruit de l’une, et vous la fleur de l’autre.
Ruy Blas, à part.
Où donc m’entraîne-t-il?

Pendant que don Salluste a parlé, le marquis de Santa-Cruz, don Alvar De Bazan Y Benavides, vieillard à moustache blanche et à grande perruque, s’est approché d’eux.
Le Marquis De Santa-Cruz, à don Salluste.
Vous l’expliquez fort bien.
S’il est votre cousin, il est aussi le mien.
Don Salluste.
C’est vrai, car nous avons une même origine,
Monsieur De Santa-Cruz.
Il lui présente Ruy Blas.
Don César.
Le Marquis De Santa-Cruz.
J’imagine
Que ce n’est pas celui qu’on croyait mort.
Don Salluste.
Si fait.

Le Marquis De Santa-Cruz.
Il est donc revenu?
Don Salluste.
Des Indes.
Le Marquis De Santa-Cruz, examinant Ruy Blas.
En effet!
Don Salluste.
Vous le reconnaissez?
Le Marquis De Santa-Cruz.
Pardieu! Je l'ai vu naître!
Don Salluste, bas à Ruy Blas.
Le bonhomme est aveugle et se défend de l'être.
Il vous a reconnu pour prouver ses bons yeux.
Le Marquis De Santa-Cruz, tendant la main à Ruy Blas.
Touchez là, mon cousin.
Ruy Blas, s'inclinant.
Seigneur...
Le Marquis De Santa-Cruz, bas à don Salluste et lui montrant Ruy Blas.
On n'est pas mieux!
À Ruy Blas.
Charmé de vous revoir!
Don Salluste, bas au marquis et le prenant à part.
Je vais payer ses dettes.
Vous le pouvez servir dans le poste où vous êtes.
Si quelque emploi de cour vaquait en ce moment,
Chez le roi, – chez la reine... –
Le Marquis De Santa-Cruz, bas.
Un jeune homme charmant!
J'y vais songer. – et puis, il est de la famille.
Don Salluste, bas.
Vous avez tout crédit au conseil de Castille.
Je vous le recommande.

Il quitte le marquis de Santa-Cruz, et va à d'autres seigneurs, auxquels il présente Ruy Blas.

Parmi eux le comte d'Albe, très superbement paré.

Don Salluste lui présente Ruy Blas.
Un mien cousin, César,

Comte de Garofa près de Velalcazar.
Les seigneurs échangent gravement des révérences avec Ruy Blas interdit.
Don Salluste, au comte de Ribagorza.
Vous n'étiez pas hier au ballet d'Atalante?
Lindamire a dansé d'une façon galante.
Il s'extasie sur le pourpoint du comte d'Albe.
C'est très beau, comte d'Albe!
Le Comte D'Albe.
Ah! J'en avais encor
Un plus beau. Satin rose avec des rubans d'or.
Matalobos me l'a volé.
Un Huissier De Cour, au fond.
La reine approche.
Prenez vos rangs, messieurs
Les grands rideaux de la galerie vitrée s'ouvrent.
Les seigneurs s'échelonnent près de la porte.
Des gardes font la haie. Ruy Blas, haletant, hors de lui, vient sur le devant comme pour s'y réfugier.
Don Salluste l'y suit.

Don Salluste, bas, à Ruy Blas.
Est-ce que, sans reproche,
Quand votre sort grandit, votre esprit s'amoindrit?
Réveillez-vous, Ruy Blas. Je vais quitter Madrid.
Ma petite maison, près du pont, où vous êtes,
– Je n'en veux rien garder, hormis les clefs secrètes, –
Ruy Blas, je vous la donne, et les muets aussi.
Vous recevrez bientôt d'autres ordres. Ainsi
Faites ma volonté, je fais votre fortune.
Montez, ne craignez rien, car l'heure est opportune.
La cour est un pays où l'on va sans voir clair.
Marchez les yeux bandés; j'y vois pour vous, mon cher!
De nouveaux gardes paraissent au fond.
L'Huissier, à haute voix.
La reine!
Ruy Blas, à part.

La reine! Ah!

La reine, vêtue magnifiquement, paraît, entourée de dames et de pages, sous un dais de velours écarlate porté par quatre gentilshommes de chambre, tête nue. Ruy Blas, effaré, la regarde comme absorbé par cette resplendissante vision. Tous les grands d'Espagne se couvrent, le marquis Del Basto, le comte d'Albe, le marquis de Santa-Cruz, don Salluste. Don Salluste va rapidement au fauteuil, et y prend le chapeau, qu'il apporte à Ruy Blas.

Don Salluste, à Ruy Blas, en lui mettant le chapeau sur la tête.
Quel vertige vous gagne?
Couvrez-vous donc, César. Vous êtes grand d'Espagne.
Ruy Blas, éperdu, bas à don Salluste.
Et que m'ordonnez-vous, seigneur, présentement?
Don Salluste, lui montrant la reine, qui traverse lentement la galerie.
De plaire à cette femme et d'être son amant.

ACTE II

LA REINE D’ESPAGNE

Un salon contigu à la chambre à coucher de la reine. À gauche, une petite porte donnant dans cette chambre. À droite, sur un pan coupé, une autre porte donnant dans les appartements extérieurs. Au fond, de grandes fenêtres ouvertes. C’est l’après-midi d’une belle journée d’été. Grande table. Fauteuils. Une figure de sainte, richement enchâssée, est adossée au mur; au bas on lit: santa Maria Esclava. Au côté opposé est une madone devant laquelle brûle une lampe d’or. Près de la madone, un portrait en pied du roi Charles II.

Au lever du rideau, la reine dona Maria de Neubourg est dans un coin, assise à côté d’une de ses femmes, jeune et jolie fille. La reine est vêtue de blanc, robe de drap d’argent. Elle brode et s’interrompt par moments pour causer. Dans le coin opposé est assise, sur une chaise à dossier, dona Juana de la Cueva, duchesse d’Albuquerque, camerera mayor, une tapisserie à la main; vieille femme en noir. Près de la duchesse, à une table, plusieurs duègnes travaillant à des ouvrages de femmes. Au fond, se tient don Guritan, comte d’Onate, majordome, grand, sec, moustaches grises, cinquante-cinq ans environ; mine de vieux militaire, quoique vêtu avec une élégance exagérée et qu’il ait des rubans jusque sur les souliers. La reine, la duchesse d’Albuquerque, don Guritan, Casilda, duègnes.

Scène Première: La Reine, La Duchesse d’Albuquerque, Don Guritan, Casilda, Duègnes

La Reine.
Il est parti pourtant! Je devrais être à l’aise.
Eh bien, non! Ce marquis de Finlas, il me pèse!
Cet homme-là me hait.
Casilda.
      Selon votre souhait,
N’est-il pas exilé?
La Reine.
      Cet homme-là me hait
Casilda
Votre majesté...
La Reine.
      Vrai! Casilda, c’est étrange,
Ce marquis est pour moi comme le mauvais ange.
L’autre jour, il devait partir le lendemain,
Et, comme l’ordinaire, il vint au baise-main.
Tous les grands s’avançaient vers le trône à la file;
Je leur livrais ma main, j’étais triste et tranquille,
Regardant vaguement, dans le salon obscur,
Une bataille au fond peinte sur un grand mur,
Quand tout à coup, mon oeil se baissant vers la table,
Je vis venir à moi cet homme redoutable!
Sitôt que je le vis, je ne vis plus que lui.
Il venait à pas lents, jouant avec l’étui
D’un poignard dont parfois j’entrevoyais la lame,
Grave, et m’éblouissant de son regard de flamme.
Soudain il se courba, souple et comme rampant... –
Je sentis sur ma main sa bouche de serpent!
Casilda.
Il rendait ses devoirs; – rendons-nous pas les nôtres?
La Reine.
Sa lèvre n’était pas comme celle des autres.

C’est la dernière fois que je l’ai vu. Depuis,
J’y pense très souvent. J’ai bien d’autres ennuis,
C’est égal, je me dis: – l’enfer est dans cette âme.
Devant cet homme-là je ne suis qu’une femme. –
Dans mes rêves, la nuit, je rencontre en chemin
Cet effrayant démon qui me baise la main;
Je vois luire son oeil d’où rayonne la haine;
Et, comme un noir poison qui va de veine en veine,
Souvent, jusqu’à mon coeur qui semble se glacer,
Je sens en longs frissons courir son froid baiser!
Que dis-tu de cela?
Casilda.
Purs fantômes, madame.
La Reine.
Au fait, j’ai des soucis bien plus réels dans l’âme.
À part.
Oh! Ce qui me tourmente, il faut le leur cacher.
À Casilda.
Dis-moi, ces mendiants qui n’osaient approcher...
Casilda., allant à la fenêtre.
Je sais, madame. Ils sont encor là, dans la place.
La Reine.
Tiens! Jette-leur ma bourse.
Casilda prend la bourse et va la jeter par la fenêtre.
Casilda.
Oh! Madame, par grâce,
Vous qui faites l’aumône avec tant de bonté,
Montrant la reine don Guritan, qui, debout et silencieux au fond de la chambre, fixe sur la reine un oeil plein d’adoration muette.
Ne jetterez-vous rien au comte d’Onate?
Rien qu’un mot! – un vieux brave! Amoureux sous l’armure!
D’autant plus tendre au coeur que l’écorce est plus dure!
La Reine.
Il est bien ennuyeux!
Casilda.
J’en conviens. – parlez-lui!
La Reine, se tournant vers don Guritan.

Bonjour, comte.

Don Guritan s'approche avec trois révérences, et vient baiser en soupirant la main de la reine, qui le laisse faire d'un air indifférent et distrait.

Puis il retourne à sa place, à côté du siège de la camerera mayor.

Don Guritan, en se retirant, bas à Casilda.

La reine est charmante aujourd'hui!

Casilda, le regardant s'éloigner.

Oh! Le pauvre héron! Près de l'eau qui le tente
Il se tient. Il attrape, après un jour d'attente,
Un bonjour, un bonsoir, souvent un mot bien sec,
Et s'en va tout joyeux, cette pâture au bec.

La Reine, avec un sourire triste.

Tais-toi!

Casilda.

Pour être heureux, il suffit qu'il vous voie!
Voir la reine, pour lui cela veut dire: – joie!

S'extasiant sur une boîte posée sur le guéridon.

Oh! La divine boîte!

La Reine.

Ah! J'en ai la clef là.

Casilda.

Ce bois de calambour est exquis!

La Reine, lui présentant la clef.

Ouvre-la.
Vois: – je l'ai fait emplir de reliques, ma chère;
Puis je vais l'envoyer Neubourg, à mon père;
Il sera très content!

Elle rêve un instant, puis s'arrache vivement à sa rêverie. À part.

Je ne veux pas penser!
Ce que j'ai dans l'esprit, je voudrais le chasser.

À Casilda.

Va chercher dans ma chambre un livre... – je suis folle!
Pas un livre allemand! Tout en langue espagnole!
Le roi chasse. Toujours absent. Ah! Quel ennui!
En six mois, j'ai passé douze jours près de lui.

Casilda.

Épousez donc un roi pour vivre de la sorte!
La reine retombe dans sa rêverie, puis en sort de nouveau violemment et comme avec effort.
La Reine.
Je veux sortir!
À ce mot, prononcé impérieusement par la reine, la duchesse d'Albuquerque, qui est jusqu'à ce moment restée immobile sur son siège, lève la tête, puis se dresse debout et fait une profonde révérence à la reine.

La Duchesse D'Albuquerque, d'une voix brève et dure.
Il faut, pour que la reine sorte,
Que chaque porte soit ouverte, – c'est réglé! –
Par un des grands d'Espagne ayant droit à la clé.
Or nul d'eux ne peut être au palais à cette heure.
La Reine.
Mais on m'enferme donc! Mais on veut que je meure,
Duchesse, enfin!
La Duchesse, avec une nouvelle révérence.
Je suis camerera mayor,
Et je remplis ma charge.
Elle se rassied.
La Reine, prenant sa tête à deux mains, avec désespoir, à part.
Allons rêver encor!
Non!
Haut.
– Vite! Un lansquenet! À moi, toutes mes femmes!
Une table, et jouons!
La Duchesse, aux duègnes.
Ne bougez pas, mesdames.
Se levant et faisant la révérence à la reine.
Sa majesté ne peut, suivant l'ancienne loi,
Jouer qu'avec des rois ou des parents du roi.
La Reine, avec emportement.
Eh bien! Faites venir ces parents.
Casilda, à part, regardant la duchesse.
Oh! La duègne!
La Duchesse, avec un signe de croix.

Dieu n’en a pas donné, madame, au roi qui règne.
La reine-mère est morte. Il est seul à présent.
La Reine.
Qu’on me serve à goûter!
Casilda.
Oui, c’est très amusant.
La Reine.
Casilda, je t’invite.
Casilda, à part, regardant la camerera.
Oh! Respectable aïeule!
La Duchesse, avec une révérence.
Quand le roi n’est pas là, la reine mange seule.
Elle se rassied.
La Reine, poussée à bout.
Ne pouvoir, – ô mon Dieu! Qu’est-ce que je ferai?
Ni sortir, ni jouer, ni manger à mon gré!
Vraiment, je meurs depuis un an que je suis reine.
Casilda, à part, la regardant avec compassion.
Pauvre femme! Passer tous ses jours dans la gêne,
Au fond de cette cour insipide! Et n’avoir
D’autre distraction que le plaisir de voir,
Au bord de ce marais à l’eau dormante et plate,
Regardant don Guritan, toujours immobile et debout au fond de la chambre.
Un vieux comte amoureux rêvant sur une patte!
La Reine, à Casilda.
Que faire? Voyons! Cherche une idée.
Casilda.
Ah! Tenez!
En l’absence du roi, c’est vous qui gouvernez.
Faites, pour vous distraire, appeler les ministres!
La Reine, haussant les épaules.
Ce plaisir! – avoir là huit visages sinistres
Me parlant de la France et de son roi caduc,
De Rome, et du portrait de monsieur l’archiduc,
Qu’on promène à Burgos, parmi des cavalcades,
Sous un dais de drap d’or porté par quatre alcades!

– Cherche autre chose.
Casilda.
      Eh bien, pour vous désennuyer,
Si je faisais monter quelque jeune écuyer?
La Reine.
Casilda!
Casilda.
      Je voudrais regarder un jeune homme,
Madame! Cette cour vénérable m’assomme.
Je crois que la vieillesse arrive par les yeux,
Et qu’on vieillit plus vite à voir toujours des vieux!
La Reine.
Ris, folle! – il vient un jour où le coeur se reploie.
Comme on perd le sommeil, enfant, on perd la joie.
Pensive.
Mon bonheur, c’est ce coin du parc où j’ai le droit
D’aller seule.
Casilda.
      Oh! Le beau bonheur, l’aimable endroit!
Des pièges sont creusés derrière tous les marbres.
On ne voit rien. Les murs sont plus hauts que les arbres.
La Reine.
Oh! Je voudrais sortir parfois!
Casilda, bas.
        Sortir! Eh bien,
Madame, écoutez-moi. Parlons bas. Il n’est rien
De tel qu’une prison bien austère et bien sombre
Pour vous faire chercher et trouver dans son ombre
Ce bijou rayonnant nommé la clef des champs.
– Je l’ai! – quand vous voudrez, en dépit des méchants,
Je vous ferai sortir, la nuit, et par la ville
Nous irons.
La Reine.
      Ciel! Jamais! Tais-toi!
Casilda.
        C’est très facile!
La Reine.

Paix!
Elle s’éloigne un peu de Casilda et retombe dans sa rêverie.
Que ne suis-je encor, moi qui crains tous ces grands,
Dans ma bonne Allemagne, avec mes bons parents!
Comme, ma soeur et moi, nous courions dans les herbes!
Et puis des paysans passaient, traînant des gerbes;
Nous leur parlions. C’était charmant. Hélas! Un soir,
Un homme vint, qui dit, – il était tout en noir,
Je tenais par la main ma soeur, douce compagne, –
“ Madame, vous allez être reine d’Espagne. “
Mon père était joyeux et ma mère pleurait.
Ils pleurent tous les deux à présent. – en secret
Je vais faire envoyer cette boîte à mon père,
Il sera bien content. – vois, tout me désespère.
Mes oiseaux d’Allemagne, ils sont tous morts.
Casilda fait le signe de tordre le cou à des oiseaux, en regardant de travers la camerera.
Et puis
On m’empêche d’avoir des fleurs de mon pays.
Jamais à mon oreille un mot d’amour ne vibre.
Aujourd’hui je suis reine. Autrefois j’étais libre!
Comme tu dis, ce parc est bien triste le soir,
Et les murs sont si hauts, qu’ils empêchent de voir.
– Oh! L’ennui!
On entend au dehors un chant éloigné.
Qu’est ce bruit?
Casilda.
Ce sont les lavandières
Qui passent en chantant, là-bas, dans les bruyères.
Le chant se rapproche. On distingue les paroles. La reine écoute avidement.

Voix Du Dehors.
À quoi bon entendre
Les oiseaux des bois?
L’oiseau le plus tendre
Chante dans ta voix.

Que Dieu montre ou voile
Les astres des cieux!
La plus pure étoile
Brille dans tes yeux.
Qu’avril renouvelle
Le jardin en fleur!
La fleur la plus belle
Fleurit dans ton coeur.
Cet oiseau de flamme,
Cet astre du jour,
Cette fleur de l’âme,
S’appelle l’amour!

Les voix décroissent et s’éloignent.
La Reine, rêveuse.
L’amour! – oui, celles-là sont heureuses. – leur voix,
Leur chant me fait du mal et du bien à la fois
La Duchesse, aux duègnes.
Ces femmes dont le chant importune la reine,
Qu’on les chasse!
La Reine, vivement.
Comment! On les entend à peine.
Pauvres femmes! Je veux qu’elles passent en paix,
Madame.
À Casilda, en lui montrant une croisée au fond.
Par ici le bois est moins épais,
Cette fenêtre-là donne sur la campagne;
Viens, tâchons de les voir.
Elle se dirige vers la fenêtre avec Casilda.
La Duchesse, se levant, avec une révérence.
Une reine d’Espagne
Ne doit pas regarder à la fenêtre.
La Reine, s’arrêtant et revenant sur ses pas.
Allons!
Le beau soleil couchant qui remplit les vallons,
La poudre d’or du soir qui monte sur la route,
Les lointaines chansons que toute oreille écoute,

N’existent plus pour moi! J’ai dit au monde adieu.
Je ne puis même voir la nature de Dieu!
Je ne puis même voir la liberté des autres!
La Duchesse, faisant signe aux assistants de sortir.
Sortez, c’est aujourd’hui le jour des saints apôtres.
Casilda fait quelques pas vers la porte. La reine l’arrête.
La Reine.
Tu me quittes?
Casilda, montrant la duchesse.
Madame, on veut que nous sortions.
La Duchesse, saluant la reine jusqu’à terre.
Il faut laisser la reine à ses dévotions.
Tous sortent avec de profondes révérences.

Scène II - LA REINE seule

La Reine, seule.
À ses dévotions? Dis donc à sa pensée!
Où la fuir maintenant? Seule! Ils m’ont tous laissée.
Pauvre esprit sans flambeau dans un chemin obscur!
Rêvant.
Oh! Cette main sanglante empreinte sur le mur!
Il s’est donc blessé? Dieu! – mais aussi c’est sa faute.
Pourquoi vouloir franchir la muraille si haute?
Pour m’apporter les fleurs qu’on me refuse ici,
Pour cela, pour si peu, s’aventurer ainsi!
C’est aux pointes de fer qu’il s’est blessé sans doute.
Un morceau de dentelle y pendait. Une goutte
De ce sang répandu pour moi vaut tous mes pleurs.
S’enfonçant dans sa rêverie.
Chaque fois qu’à ce banc je vais chercher les fleurs,
Je promets à mon Dieu, dont l’appui me délaisse,
De n’y plus retourner. J’y retourne sans cesse.
– Mais lui! Voilà trois jours qu’il n’est pas revenu
– Blessé! – Qui que tu sois,ô jeune homme inconnu
Toi qui, me voyant seule et loin de ce qui m’aime,
Sans rien me demander, sans rien espérer même,
Viens à moi, sans compter les périls où tu cours;
Toi qui verses ton sang, toi qui risques tes jours
Pour donner une fleur à la reine d’Espagne;
Qui que tu sois, ami dont l’ombre m’accompagne,
Puisque mon coeur subit une inflexible loi,
Sois aimé par ta mère et sois béni par moi!
Vivement et portant la main à son coeur.
– Oh! Sa lettre me brûle!
Retombant dans sa rêverie.
Et l’autre! L’implacable
Don Salluste! Le sort me protège et m’accable.
En même temps qu’un ange, un spectre affreux me suit;
Et, sans les voir, je sens s’agiter dans ma nuit,

Pour m’amener peut-être à quelque instant suprême,
Un homme qui me hait près d’un homme qui m’aime.
L’un me sauvera-t-il de l’autre? Je ne sais.
Hélas! Mon destin flotte à deux vents opposés.
Que c’est faible, une reine, et que c’est peu de chose!
Prions.

Elle s’agenouille devant la madone.

– Secourez-moi, madame! Car je n’ose
Élever mon regard jusqu’à vous!

Elle s’interrompt.

– Ô mon Dieu!
La dentelle, la fleur, la lettre, c’est du feu!

Elle met la main dans sa poitrine et en arrache une lettre froissée, un bouquet desséché de petites fleurs bleues et un morceau de dentelle taché de sang qu’elle jette sur la table; puis elle retombe à genoux.

Vierge, astre de la mer! Vierge, espoir du martyre!
Aidez-moi! –

S’interrompant.

Cette lettre!

Se tournant à demi vers la table.

Elle est là qui m’attire.

S’agenouillant de nouveau.

Je ne veux plus la lire! – ô reine de douceur!
Vous qu’à tout affligé Jésus donne pour soeur!
Venez, je vous appelle! –

Elle se lève, fait quelques pas vers la table, puis s’arrête, puis enfin se précipite sur la lettre, comme cédant à une attraction irrésistible.

Oui, je vais la relire
Une dernière fois! Après, je la déchire!

Avec un sourire triste.

Hélas! Depuis un mois je dis toujours cela.

Elle déplie la lettre résolument et lit.

“ Madame, sous vos pieds, dans l’ombre, un homme est là
“ Qui vous aime, perdu dans la nuit qui le voile;
“ Qui souffre, ver de terre amoureux d’une étoile;
“ Qui pour vous donnera son âme, s’il le faut;
“ Et qui se meurt en bas quand vous brillez en haut. “

Elle pose la lettre sur la table.
Quand l’âme a soif, il faut qu’elle se désaltère,
Fût-ce dans du poison!
Elle remet la lettre et la dentelle dans sa poitrine.
Je n’ai rien sur la terre.
Mais enfin il faut bien que j’aime quelqu’un, moi!
Oh! s’il avait voulu, j’aurais aimé le roi.
Mais il me laisse ainsi – seule – d’amour privée.

La grande porte s’ouvre à deux battants. Entre un huissier de chambre, en grand costume.

L’HUISSIER, à haute voix
– Une lettre du roi!

LA REINE, comme réveillée en sursaut, avec un cri de joie.
Du roi! je suis sauvée!

Scène III
La reine, la duchesse d'Albuquerque, Casilda, don Guritan, femmes de la reine, pages, Ruy Blas.

Tous entrent gravement. La duchesse en tête, puis les femmes. Ruy Blas reste au fond de la chambre. Il est magnifiquement vêtu. Son manteau tombe sur son bras gauche et le cache. Deux pages, portant sur un coussin de drap d'or la lettre du roi, viennent s'agenouiller devant la reine, à quelques pas de distance.

Ruy Blas, au fond, à part.
Où suis-je? – qu'elle est belle! – oh! Pour qui suis-je ici?
La Reine, à part.
C'est un secours du ciel!
Haut.
Donnez vite!
Se retournant vers le portrait du roi.
Merci,
Monseigneur!
À la duchesse.
D'où me vient cette lettre?
La Duchesse.
Madame,
D'Aranjuez, où le roi chasse.
La Reine.
Du fond de l'âme
Je lui rends grâce. Il a compris qu'en mon ennui
J'avais besoin d'un mot d'amour qui vînt de lui!
– Mais donnez donc.
La Duchesse, avec une révérence, montrant la lettre.
L'usage, il faut que je le dise,
Veut que ce soit d'abord moi qui l'ouvre et la lise.
La Reine.
Encore! – Eh bien, lisez!
La duchesse prend la lettre et la déploie lentement.
Casilda, à part.

Voyons le billet doux.
La Duchesse, lisant.
“ Madame, il fait grand vent et j’ai tué six loups. “
Signé: “ Carlos. “
La Reine, à part.
Hélas!
Don Guritan, à la duchesse.
C’est tout?
La Duchesse.
Oui, seigneur comte.
Casilda, à part.
Il a tué six loups! Comme cela vous monte L’imagination! Votre coeur est jaloux,
Tendre, ennuyé, malade? – Il a tué six loups!
La Duchesse, à la reine, en lui présentant la lettre.
Si sa majesté veut? ...
La Reine, la repoussant.
Non.
Casilda, à la duchesse.
C’est bien tout?
La Duchesse.
Sans doute.
Que faut-il donc de plus? Notre roi chasse; en route
Il écrit ce qu’il tue avec le temps qu’il fait.
C’est fort bien.
Examinant de nouveau la lettre.
Il écrit? Non, il dicte.
La Reine, lui arrachant la lettre et l’examinant à son tour.
En effet,
Ce n’est pas de sa main. Rien que sa signature!
Elle l’examine avec plus d’attention et paraît frappée de stupeur. À part.
Est-ce une illusion? C’est la même écriture
Que celle de la lettre!
Elle désigne de la main la lettre qu’elle vient de cacher sur son coeur.
Oh! Qu’est-ce que cela?
À la duchesse.
Où donc est le porteur du message?

La Duchesse, montrant Ruy Blas.
Il est là.
La Reine, se tournant à demi vers Ruy Blas.
Ce jeune homme?
La Duchesse.
C’est lui qui l’apporte en personne.
– Un nouvel écuyer que sa majesté donne
À la reine. Un seigneur que, de la part du roi, Monsieur De Santa-Cruz me recommande, à moi.
La Reine.
Son nom?
La Duchesse.
C’est le seigneur César De Bazan, comte
De Garofa. S’il faut croire ce qu’on raconte,
C’est le plus accompli gentilhomme qui soit.
La Reine.
Bien. Je veux lui parler.
À Ruy Blas.
Monsieur...
Ruy Blas, à part, tressaillant.
Elle me voit!
Elle me parle! Dieu! Je tremble.
La Duchesse, à Ruy Blas.
Approchez, comte.
Don Guritan, regardant Ruy Blas de travers, à part.
Ce jeune homme! Écuyer! Ce n’est pas là mon compte.
Ruy Blas, pâle et troublé, approche à pas lents.
La Reine, à Ruy Blas.
Vous venez d’Aranjuez?
Ruy Blas, s’inclinant.
Oui, madame.
La Reine.
Le roi
Se porte bien?
Ruy Blas s’incline, elle montre la lettre royale.
Il a dicté ceci pour moi?
Ruy Blas.

Il était à cheval, il a dicté la lettre...
il hésite un moment.
À l'un des assistants.
La Reine, à part, regardant Ruy Blas.
Son regard me pénètre.
Je n'ose demander à qui.
Haut
C'est bien, allez.
- Ah! -
Ruy Blas qui avait fait quelques pas pour sortir, revient vers la reine.
Beaucoup de seigneurs étaient là rassemblés?
À part
Pourquoi donc suis-je émue en voyant ce jeune homme?.
Ruy Blas s'incline, elle reprend.
Lesquels?
Ruy Blas.
Je ne sais point les noms dont on les nomme.
Je n'ai passé là-bas que des instants fort courts.
Voilà trois jours que j'ai quitté Madrid.
La Reine, à part.
Trois jours!
Elle fixe un regard plein de trouble sur Ruy Blas.
Ruy Blas, à part.
C'est la femme d'un autre! Ô jalousie affreuse!
– Et de qui! – Dans mon coeur un abîme se creuse.
Don Guritan, s'approchant de Ruy Blas.
Vous êtes écuyer de la reine? Un seul mot.
Vous connaissez quel est votre service? Il faut
Vous tenir cette nuit dans la chambre prochaine,
Afin d'ouvrir au roi, s'il venait chez la reine.
Ruy Blas, tressaillant.
À part.
Ouvrir au roi! Moi!
Haut.
Mais... il est absent.
Don Guritan.
Le roi

Peut-il pas arriver à l’improviste?
Ruy Blas, à part.
Quoi!
Don Guritan, à part, observant Ruy Blas.
Qu’a-t-il?
La Reine, qui a tout entendu et dont le regard est resté fixé sur Ruy Blas.
Comme il pâlit!

Ruy Blas chancelant s’appuie sur le bras d’un fauteuil.

Casilda, à la reine.
Madame, ce jeune homme
Se trouve mal!
Ruy Blas, se soutenant à peine.
Moi, non! Mais c’est singulier comme
Le grand air... le soleil... la longueur du chemin...
À part.
– Ouvrir au roi!

Il tombe épuisé sur un fauteuil. Son manteau se dérange et laisse voir sa main gauche enveloppée de linges ensanglantés.

Casilda.
Grand Dieu, madame! À cette main
Il est blessé!
La Reine.
Blessé!
Casilda.
Mais il perd connaissance!
Mais, vite, faisons-lui respirer quelque essence!
La Reine, fouillant dans sa gorgerette.
Un flacon que j’ai là contient une liqueur...

En ce moment son regard tombe sur la manchette que Ruy Blas porte au bras droit.

À part.
C’est la même dentelle!

Au même instant elle a tiré le flacon de sa poitrine, et, dans son trouble, elle a pris en même temps le morceau de dentelle qui y était caché. Ruy Blas, qui ne la quitte pas des yeux, voit cette dentelle sortir du sein de la reine.

Ruy Blas, éperdu.

Oh!

Le regard de la reine et le regard de Ruy Blas se rencontrent. Un silence.

La Reine, à part.

C’est lui!

Ruy Blas, à part.

Sur son coeur!

La Reine, à part.

C’est lui!

Ruy Blas, à part.

Faites, mon Dieu, qu’en ce moment je meure!

Dans le désordre de toutes les femmes s’empressant autour de Ruy Blas, ce qui se passe entre la reine et lui n’est remarqué de personne.

Cassilda faisant respirer le flacon à Ruy Blas.

Comment vous êtes-vous blessé? C’est tout à l’heure?
Non? Cela s’est rouvert en route? Aussi pourquoi
Vous charger d’apporter le message du roi?

La Reine, à Casilda.

Vous finirez bientôt vos questions, j’espère.

La Duchesse, à Casilda.

Qu’est-ce que cela fait à la reine, ma chère?

La Reine.

Puisqu’il avait écrit la lettre, il pouvait bien
L’apporter, n’est-ce pas?

Casilda.

Mais il n’a dit en rien
Qu’il eût écrit la lettre.

La Reine, à part.

Oh!

À Casilda.

Tais-toi!

Casilda, à Ruy Blas.

Votre grâce
Se trouve-t-elle mieux?

Ruy Blas.

Je renais!

La Reine, à ses femmes.

L’heure passe,
Rentrons. – Qu’en son logis le comte soit conduit.
Aux pages, au fond.
Vous savez que le roi ne vient pas cette nuit.
Il passe la saison tout entière à la chasse.

Elle rentre avec sa suite dans ses appartements.

Casilda, la regardant sortir.
La reine a dans l’esprit quelque chose.

Elle sort par la même porte que la reine en emportant la petite cassette aux reliques.

Ruy Blas, resté seul.

Il semble écouter encore quelque temps avec une joie profonde les dernières paroles de la reine. Il paraît comme en proie à un rêve. Le morceau de dentelle, que la reine a laissé tomber dans son trouble, est resté à terre sur le tapis. Il le ramasse, le regarde avec amour, et le couvre de baisers. Puis il lève les yeux au ciel.

Ô Dieu! Grâce!
Ne me rendez pas fou!

Regardant le morceau de dentelle.

C’était bien sur son coeur!

Il le cache dans sa poitrine. – entre don Guritan. Il revient par la porte de la chambre où il a suivi la reine. Il marche à pas lents vers Ruy Blas. Arrivé près de lui sans dire un mot, il tire à demi son épée, et la mesure du regard avec celle de Ruy Blas. Elles sont inégales. Il remet son épée dans le fourreau. Ruy Blas le regarde avec étonnement.

Scène IV - Ruy Blas, don Guritan.

Don Guritan, repoussant son épée dans le fourreau.
J’en apporterai deux de pareille longueur.
Ruy Blas.
Monsieur, que signifie? ...
Don Guritan, avec gravité.
En mil six cent cinquante,
J’étais très amoureux. J’habitais Alicante.
Un jeune homme, bien fait, beau comme les amours,
Regardait de fort près ma maîtresse, et toujours
Passait sous son balcon, devant la cathédrale,
Plus fier qu’un capitan sur la barque amirale.
Il avait nom Vasquez, seigneur, quoique bâtard.
Je le tuai. –
Ruy Blas veut l’interrompre, don Guritan l’arrête du geste, et continue.
Vers l’an soixante-six, plus tard,
Gil, comte d’Iscola, cavalier magnifique,
Envoya chez ma belle, appelée Angélique,
Avec un billet doux, qu’elle me présenta,
Un esclave nommé Grifel De Viserta.
Je fis tuer l’esclave et je tuai le maître.
Ruy Blas.
Monsieur! ...
Don Guritan, poursuivant.
Plus tard, vers l’an quatre-vingt, je crus être
Trompé par ma beauté, fille aux tendres façons,
Pour Tirso Gamonal, un de ces beaux garçons
Dont le visage altier et charmant s’accommode
D’un panache éclatant. C’est l’époque où la mode
Était qu’on fît ferrer ses mules en or fin.
Je tuai don Tirso Gamonal.
Ruy Blas.
Mais enfin
Que veut dire cela, monsieur?
Don Guritan.

Cela veut dire,
Comte, qu’il sort de l’eau du puits quand on en tire;
Que le soleil se lève à quatre heures demain;
Qu’il est un lieu désert et loin de tout chemin,
Commode aux gens de coeur, derrière la chapelle;
Qu’on vous nomme, je crois, César, et qu’on m’appelle
Don Gaspar Guritan Tassis Y Guevarra,
Comte d’Onate.
Ruy Blas, froidement.
Bien, monsieur. On y sera.

Depuis quelques instants, Casilda, curieuse, est entrée à pas de loup par la petite porte du fond, et a écouté les dernières paroles des deux interlocuteurs sans être vue d’eux.

Casilda, à part.
Un duel! Avertissons la reine.

Elle rentre et disparaît par la petite porte.

Don Guritan, toujours imperturbable.
En vos études,
S’il vous plaît de connaître un peu mes habitudes,
Pour votre instruction, monsieur, je vous dirai
Que je n’ai jamais eu qu’un goût fort modéré
Pour ces godelureaux, grands friseurs de moustache,
Beaux damerets sur qui l’oeil des femmes s’attache,
Qui sont tantôt plaintifs et tantôt radieux,
Et qui dans les maisons, faisant force clins d’yeux,
Prenant sur les fauteuils d’adorables tournures,
Viennent s’évanouir pour des égratignures.
Ruy Blas.
Mais – je ne comprends pas.
Don Guritan.
Vous comprenez fort bien.
Nous sommes tous les deux épris du même bien.
L’un de nous est de trop dans ce palais. En somme,
Vous êtes écuyer, moi je suis majordome.
Droits pareils. Au surplus, je suis mal partagé,
La partie entre nous n’est pas égale: j’ai
Le droit du plus ancien, vous le droit du plus jeune.

Donc vous me faites peur. À la table où je jeûne
Voir un jeune affamé s'asseoir avec des dents
Effrayantes, un air vainqueur, des yeux ardents,
Cela me trouble fort. Quant à lutter ensemble
Sur le terrain d'amour, beau champ qui toujours tremble,
De fadaises, mon cher, je sais mal faire assaut,
J'ai la goutte; et d'ailleurs ne suis point assez sot
Pour disputer le coeur d'aucune Pénélope
Contre un jeune gaillard si prompt à la syncope.
C'est pourquoi, vous trouvant fort beau, fort caressant,
Fort gracieux, fort tendre et fort intéressant,
Il faut que je vous tue.
Ruy Blas.
Eh bien, essayez.
Don Guritan.
Comte
De Garofa, demain, à l'heure où le jour monte,
À l'endroit indiqué, sans témoin ni valet,
Nous nous égorgerons galamment, s'il vous plaît,
Avec épée et dague, en dignes gentilshommes,
Comme il sied quand on est des maisons dont nous sommes.
Il tend la main à Ruy Blas, qui la lui prend.
Ruy Blas.
Pas un mot de ceci, n'est-ce pas? –
le comte fait un signe d'adhésion.
À demain.
Ruy Blas sort.
Don Guritan, resté seul.
Non, je n'ai pas du tout senti trembler sa main.
Être sûr de mourir et faire de la sorte,
C'est d'un brave jeune homme!

Bruit d'une clef à la petite porte de la chambre de la reine. Don Guritan se retourne.

On ouvre cette porte?

La reine paraît et marche vivement vers don Guritan, surpris et charmé de la voir. Elle tient entre ses mains la petite cassette.

Scène V - Don Guritan, la reine.

La Reine, avec un sourire.
C’est vous que je cherchais!
Don Guritan, ravi.
Qui me vaut ce bonheur?
La Reine, posant la cassette sur le guéridon.
Oh Dieu! Rien, ou du moins peu de chose, seigneur.
Elle rit.
Tout à l’heure on disait, parmi d’autres paroles, –
Casilda, – vous savez que les femmes sont folles,
Casilda soutenait que vous feriez pour moi
Tout ce que je voudrais.
Don Guritan.
Elle a raison!
La Reine, riant.
Ma foi,
J’ai soutenu que non.
Don Guritan.
Vous avez tort, madame!
La Reine.
Elle a dit que pour moi vous donneriez votre âme,
Votre sang...
Don Guritan.
Casilda parlait fort bien ainsi.
La Reine.
Et moi, j’ai dit que non.
Don Guritan.
Et moi, je dis que si!
Pour votre majesté, je suis prêt à tout faire.
La Reine.
Tout?
Don Guritan.
Tout!
La Reine.
Eh bien, voyons, jurez que pour me plaire

Vous ferez à l’instant ce que je vous dirai.
Don Guritan.
Par le saint roi Gaspar, mon patron vénéré,
Je le jure! Ordonnez. J’obéis, ou je meure!
La Reine, prenant la cassette.
Bien. Vous allez partir de Madrid tout à l’heure
Pour porter cette boîte en bois de calambour
À mon père monsieur l’électeur de Neubourg.
Don Guritan, à part.
Je suis pris!
Haut.
À Neubourg!
La Reine.
À Neubourg.
Don Guritan.
Six cents lieues!
La Reine.
Cinq cent cinquante. –
Elle montre la housse de soie qui enveloppe la cassette.
Ayez grand soin des franges bleues.
Cela peut se faner en route.
Don Guritan.
Et quand partir?
La Reine.
Sur-le-champ.
Don Guritan.
Ah! Demain!
La Reine.
Je n’y puis consentir.
Don Guritan, à part.
Je suis pris!
Haut.
Mais...
La Reine.
Partez!
Don Guritan.
Quoi? ...

La Reine.
J’ai votre parole.
Don Guritan.
Une affaire...
La Reine.
Impossible.
Don Guritan.
Un objet si frivole...
La Reine.
Vite!
Don Guritan.
Un seul jour!
La Reine.
Néant.
Don Guritan.
Car...
La Reine.
Faites mon gré.
Don Guritan.
Je...
La Reine.
Non.
Don Guritan.
Mais...
La Reine.
Partez!
Don Guritan.
Si...
La Reine.
Je vous embrasserai!
Elle lui saute au cou et l’embrasse.
Don Guritan, fâché et charmé.
Haut.
Je ne résiste plus. J’obéirai, madame.
À part.
Dieu s’est fait homme; soit. Le diable s’est fait femme!
La Reine, montrant la fenêtre.

Une voiture en bas est là qui vous attend.
Don Guritan.
Elle avait tout prévu!

Il écrit sur un papier quelques mots à la hâte et agite une sonnette. Un page paraît.

Page, porte à l'instant
Au seigneur don César De Bazan cette lettre.

À part.

Ce duel! À mon retour il faut bien le remettre.
Je reviendrai!

Haut.

Je vais contenter de ce pas
Votre majesté.
La Reine.
Bien.

Il prend la cassette, baise la main de la reine, salue profondément et sort. Un moment après, on entend le roulement d'une voiture qui s'éloigne.

La Reine, tombant sur un fauteuil.
Il ne le tuera pas!

ACTE III

RUY BLAS

La salle dite salle de gouvernement, dans le palais du roi à Madrid. Au fond, une grande porte élevée au-dessus de quelques marches. Dans l'angle à gauche, un pan coupé fermé par une tapisserie de haute lice.Dans l'angle opposé, une fenêtre. À droite, une table carrée, revêtue d'un tapis de velours vert, autour de laquelle sont rangés des tabourets pour huit ou dix personnes correspondant à autant de pupitres placés sur la table. Le côté de la table qui fait face au spectateur est occupé par un grand fauteuil recouvert de drap d'or et surmonté d'un dais en drap d'or, aux armes d'Espagne, timbrées de la couronne royale. À côté de ce fauteuil, une chaise. Au moment où le rideau se lève, la junte du despacho universal (conseil privé du roi) est au moment de prendre séance.

Scène première

Don Manuel Arias, président de Castille; don Pedro Velez De Guevarra, comte de Camporeal, conseiller de cape et d'épée de la contaduria-mayor; don Fernando De Cordova Y Aguilar, marquis de Priego, même qualité; Antonio Ubilla, écrivain–mayor des rentes; Montazgo, conseiller de robe de la chambre des Indes; Covadenga, secrétaire suprême des îles. Plusieurs autres conseillers. Les conseillers de robe vêtus de noir. Les autres en habit de cour. Camporeal a la croix de Calatrava au manteau. Priego la toison d'or au cou. Don Manuel Arias, président de Castille, et le comte de Camporeal causent à voix basse, et entre eux, sur le devant. Les autres conseillers font des groupes çà et là dans la salle.
Don Manuel Arias.
Cette fortune-là cache quelque mystère.
Le Comte De Camporeal.
Il a la toison d'or. Le voilà secrétaire
Universel, ministre, et puis duc d'Olmedo!
Don Manuel Arias.
En six mois!
Le Comte De Camporeal.
        On le sert derrière le rideau.
Don Manuel Arias, mystérieusement.
La reine!
Le Comte De Camporeal.
        Au fait, le roi, malade et fou dans l'âme,
Vit avec le tombeau de sa première femme.
Il abdique, enfermé dans son Escurial,
Et la reine fait tout!
Don Manuel Arias.
        Mon cher Camporeal,
Elle règne sur nous, et don César sur elle.
Le Comte De Camporeal.
Il vit d'une façon qui n'est pas naturelle.
D'abord, quant à la reine, il ne la voit jamais.
Ils paraissent se fuir. Vous me direz non, mais

Comme depuis six mois je les guette, et pour cause,
J’en suis sûr. Puis il a le caprice morose
D’habiter, assez près de l’hôtel de Tormez,
Un logis aveuglé par des volets fermés,
Avec deux laquais noirs, gardeurs de portes closes,
Qui, s’ils n’étaient muets, diraient beaucoup de choses.
Don Manuel Arias.
Des muets?
Le Comte De Camporeal.
Des muets. – tous ses autres valets
Restent au logement qu’il a dans le palais.
Don Manuel Arias.
C’est singulier.
Don Antonio Ubilla, qui s’est approché d’eux depuis quelques instants.
Il est de grande race, en somme.
Le Comte De Camporeal.
L’étrange, c’est qu’il veut faire son honnête homme!
À don Manuel Arias.
– Il est cousin, – aussi Santa-Cruz l’a poussé, –
De ce marquis Salluste écroulé l’an passé. –
Jadis, ce don César, aujourd’hui notre maître,
Était le plus grand fou que la lune eût vu naître.
C’était un drôle, – on sait des gens qui l’ont connu, –
Qui prit un beau matin son fonds pour revenu,
Qui changeait tous les jours de femmes, de carrosses,
Et dont la fantaisie avait des dents féroces
Capables de manger en un an le Pérou.
Un jour il s’en alla, sans qu’on ait su par où.
Don Manuel Arias.
L’âge a du fou joyeux fait un sage fort rude.
Le Comte De Camporeal.
Toute fille de joie en séchant devient prude.
Ubilla.
Je le crois homme probe.
Le Comte De Camporeal, riant.
Oh! Candide Ubilla!
Qui se laisse éblouir à ces probités-là!

D’un ton significatif.
La maison de la reine, ordinaire et civile,
appuyant sur les chiffres.
Coûte par an six cent soixante-quatre mille
Soixante-six ducats! – c’est un pactole obscur
Où, certe, on doit jeter le filet à coup sûr.
Eau trouble, pêche claire.
Le Marquis De Priego, survenant.
Ah , ne vous déplaise,
Je vous trouve imprudents et parlant fort à l’aise.
Feu mon grand-père, auprès du comte– duc nourri,
Disait: – Mordez le roi, baisez le favori. –
Messieurs, occupons-nous des affaires publiques.

Tous s’asseyent autour de la table; les uns prennent des plumes, les autres feuillettent des papiers. Du reste, oisiveté générale. Moment de silence.

Montazgo, bas à Ubilla.
Je vous ai demandé sur la caisse aux reliques
De quoi payer l’emploi d’alcade à mon neveu.
Ubilla, bas.
Vous, vous m’aviez promis de nommer avant peu
Mon cousin Melchior D’Elva bailli de l’Èbre.
Montazgo, se récriant.
Nous venons de doter votre fille. On célèbre
Encor sa noce. – On est sans relâche assailli...
Ubilla, bas.
Vous aurez votre alcade.
Montazgo, bas.
Et vous votre bailli.
Ils se serrent la main.
Covadenga, se levant.
Messieurs les conseillers de Castille, il importe,
Afin qu’aucun de nous de sa sphère ne sorte,
De bien régler nos droits et de faire nos parts.
Le revenu d’Espagne en cent mains est épars.
C’est un malheur public, il y faut mettre un terme.
Les uns n’ont pas assez, les autres trop. La ferme

Du tabac est à vous, Ubilla. L'indigo
Et le musc sont à vous, marquis de Priego.
Camporeal perçoit l'impôt des huit mille hommes,
L'almojarifazgo, le sel, mille autres sommes,
Le quint du cent de l'or, de l'ambre et du jayet;
à Montazgo.
Vous qui me regardez de cet oeil inquiet,
Vous avez à vous seul, grâce à votre manège,
L'impôt sur l'arsenic et le droit sur la neige;
Vous avez les ports secs, les cartes, le laiton,
L'amende des bourgeois qu'on punit du bâton,
La dîme de la mer, le plomb, le bois de rose! ... –
Moi, je n'ai rien, messieurs. Rendez-moi quelque chose!
Le Comte De Camporeal, éclatant de rire.
Oh! Le vieux diable! Il prend les profits les plus clairs.
Excepté l'Inde, il a les îles des deux mers.
Quelle envergure! Il tient Mayorque d'une griffe,
Et de l'autre il s'accroche au pic de Ténériffe!
Covadenga, s'échauffant.
Moi, je n'ai rien!
Le Marquis De Priego, riant.
Il a les nègres!
Tous se lèvent et parlent la fois, se querellant.
Montazgo.
Je devrais
Me plaindre bien plutôt. Il me faut les forêts!
Covadenga, au marquis de Priego.
Donnez-moi l'arsenic, je vous cède les nègres!

Depuis quelques instants, Ruy Blas est entré par la porte du fond et assiste à la scène sans être vu des interlocuteurs. Il est vêtu de velours noir, avec un manteau de velours écarlate; il a la plume blanche au chapeau et la toison d'or au cou. Il les écoute d'abord en silence, puis, tout à coup, il s'avance à pas lents et paraît au milieu d'eux au plus fort de la querelle.

Scène II – Les mêmes, Ruy Blas.

Ruy Blas, survenant.
Bon appétit, messieurs! –

Tous se retournent. Silence de surprise et d'inquiétude. Ruy Blas se couvre, croise les bras, et poursuit en les regardant en face.

Ô ministres intègres!
Conseillers vertueux! Voilà votre façon
De servir, serviteurs qui pillez la maison!
Donc vous n'avez pas honte et vous choisissez l'heure,
L'heure sombre où l'Espagne agonisante pleure!
Donc vous n'avez ici pas d'autres intérêts
Que remplir votre poche et vous enfuir après!
Soyez flétris, devant votre pays qui tombe,
Fossoyeurs qui venez le voler dans sa tombe!
– Mais voyez, regardez, ayez quelque pudeur.
L'Espagne et sa vertu, l'Espagne et sa grandeur,
Tout s'en va. – nous avons, depuis Philippe Quatre,
Perdu le Portugal, le Brésil, sans combattre;
En Alsace Brisach, Steinfort en Luxembourg;
Et toute la Comté jusqu'au dernier faubourg;
Le Roussillon, Ormuz, Goa, cinq mille lieues
De côte, et Fernambouc, et les montagnes bleues!
Mais voyez. – du ponant jusques à l'orient,
L'Europe, qui vous hait, vous regarde en riant.
Comme si votre roi n'était plus qu'un fantôme,
La Hollande et l'anglais partagent ce royaume;
Rome vous trompe; il faut ne risquer qu'à demi
Une armée en Piémont, quoique pays ami;
La Savoie et son duc sont pleins de précipices.
La France pour vous prendre attend des jours propices.
L'Autriche aussi vous guette. Et l'infant bavarois
Se meurt, vous le savez. – quant à vos vice-rois,
Médina, fou d'amour, emplit Naples d'esclandres,
Vaudémont vend Milan, Leganez perd les Flandres.
Quel remède à cela? – l'état est indigent,

L’état est épuisé de troupes et d’argent;
Nous avons sur la mer, où Dieu met ses colères,
Perdu trois cents vaisseaux, sans compter les galères.
Et vous osez! ... – messieurs, en vingt ans, songez-y,
Le peuple, – j’en ai fait le compte, et c’est ainsi! –
Portant sa charge énorme et sous laquelle il ploie,
Pour vous, pour vos plaisirs, pour vos filles de joie,
Le peuple misérable, et qu’on pressure encor,
À sué quatre cent trente millions d’or!
Et ce n’est pas assez! Et vous voulez, mes maîtres! ... –
Ah! J’ai honte pour vous! – au dedans, routiers, reîtres,
Vont battant le pays et brûlant la moisson.
L’escopette est braquée au coin de tout buisson.
Comme si c’était peu de la guerre des princes,
Guerre entre les couvents, guerre entre les provinces,
Tous voulant dévorer leur voisin éperdu,
Morsures d’affamés sur un vaisseau perdu!
Notre église en ruine est pleine de couleuvres;
L’herbe y croît. Quant aux grands, des aïeux, mais pas d’oeuvres.
Tout se fait par intrigue et rien par loyauté.
L’Espagne est un égout où vient l’impureté
De toute nation. – tout seigneur à ses gages
À cent coupe-jarrets qui parlent cent langages.
Génois, sardes, flamands, Babel est dans Madrid.
L’alguazil, dur au pauvre, au riche s’attendrit.
La nuit on assassine, et chacun crie: à l’aide!
– Hier on m’a volé, moi, près du pont de Tolède! –
La moitié de Madrid pille l’autre moitié.
Tous les juges vendus. Pas un soldat payé.
Anciens vainqueurs du monde, espagnols que nous sommes.
Quelle armée avons-nous? À peine six mille hommes,
Qui vont pieds nus. Des gueux, des juifs, des montagnards,
S’habillant d’une loque et s’armant de poignards.
Aussi d’un régiment toute bande se double.
Sitôt que la nuit tombe, il est une heure trouble
Où le soldat douteux se transforme en larron.
Matalobos a plus de troupes qu’un baron.

Un voleur fait chez lui la guerre au roi d’Espagne.
Hélas! Les paysans qui sont dans la campagne
Insultent en passant la voiture du roi.
Et lui, votre seigneur, plein de deuil et d’effroi,
Seul, dans l’Escurial, avec les morts qu’il foule,
Courbe son front pensif sur qui l’empire croule!
– Voilà! – l’Europe, hélas! Écrase du talon
Ce pays qui fut pourpre et n’est plus que haillon.
L’état s’est ruiné dans ce siècle funeste,
Et vous vous disputez à qui prendra le reste!
Ce grand peuple espagnol aux membres énervés,
Qui s’est couché dans l’ombre et sur qui vous vivez,
Expire dans cet antre où son sort se termine,
Triste comme un lion mangé par la vermine!
– Charles-Quint, dans ces temps d’opprobre et de terreur,
Que fais-tu dans ta tombe, ô puissant empereur?
Oh! Lève-toi! Viens voir! – les bons font place aux pires.
Ce royaume effrayant, fait d’un amas d’empires,
Penche... il nous faut ton bras! Au secours, Charles-Quint!
Car l’Espagne se meurt, car l’Espagne s’éteint!
Ton globe, qui brillait dans ta droite profonde,
Soleil éblouissant qui faisait croire au monde
Que le jour désormais se levait à Madrid,
Maintenant, astre mort, dans l’ombre s’amoindrit,
Lune aux trois quarts rongée et qui décroît encore,
Et que d’un autre peuple effacera l’aurore!
Hélas! Ton héritage est en proie aux vendeurs.
Tes rayons, ils en font des piastres! Tes splendeurs,
On les souille! – ô géant! Se peut-il que tu dormes? –
On vend ton sceptre au poids! Un tas de nains difformes
Se taillent des pourpoints dans ton manteau de roi;
Et l’aigle impérial, qui, jadis, sous ta loi,
Couvrait le monde entier de tonnerre et de flamme,
Cuit, pauvre oiseau plumé, dans leur marmite infâme!

Les conseillers se taisent consternés. Seuls, le Marquis de Priego et le comte de Camporeal redressent la tête et regardent Ruy Blas avec colère.

Puis Camporeal, après avoir parlé à Priego, va à la table, écrit quelques mots sur un papier, les signe et les fait signer au marquis.

Le Comte De Camporeal, désignant le marquis de Priego et remettant le papier à Ruy Blas.

Monsieur le duc, – au nom de tous les deux, – voici
Notre démission de notre emploi.

Ruy Blas, prenant le papier, froidement.

Merci.
Vous vous retirerez, avec votre famille,
à Priego.
Vous, en Andalousie, – à Camporeal.
Et vous, comte, en Castille.
Chacun dans vos états. Soyez partis demain.

Les deux seigneurs s'inclinent et sortent fièrement, le chapeau sur la tête. Ruy Blas se tourne vers les autres conseillers.

Quiconque ne veut pas marcher dans mon chemin
Peut suivre ces messieurs.

Silence dans les assistants. Ruy Blas s'assied à la table sur une chaise à dossier placée à droite du fauteuil royal, et s'occupe à décacheter une correspondance. Pendant qu'il parcourt les lettres l'une après l'autre, Covadenga, Arias et Ubilla échangent quelques paroles à voix basse.

Ubilla, à Covadenga, montrant Ruy Blas.

Fils, nous avons un maître.
Cet homme sera grand.

Don Manuel Arias.

Oui, s'il a le temps d'être.

Covadenga.

Et s'il ne se perd pas à tout voir de trop près.

Ubilla.

Il sera Richelieu!

Don Manuel Arias.

S'il n'est Olivarez!

Ruy Blas, après avoir parcouru vivement une lettre qu'il vient d'ouvrir.

Un complot! Qu'est ceci? Messieurs, que vous disais-je?

Lisant.

– ... " Duc d'Olmedo, veillez. Il se prépare un piège

“ Pour enlever quelqu’un de très grand de Madrid. “
Examinant la lettre.
– On ne nomme pas qui. Je veillerai. – l’écrit
Est anonyme. –

Entre un huissier de cour qui s’approche de Ruy Blas avec une profonde révérence.

Allons! Qu’est-ce?
L’Huissier.
À votre excellence
J’annonce monseigneur l’ambassadeur de France.
Ruy Blas.
Ah! D’Harcourt! Je ne puis à présent.
L’Huissier, s’inclinant.
Monseigneur,
Le nonce impérial dans la chambre d’honneur
Attend votre excellence.
Ruy Blas.
À cette heure? Impossible.

L’huissier s’incline et sort. Depuis quelques instants, un page est entré, vêtu d’une livrée couleur de feu à galons d’argent, et s’est approché de Ruy Blas.

Ruy Blas, l’apercevant.
Mon page! Je ne suis pour personne visible.
Le Page, bas.
Le comte Guritan, qui revient de Neubourg...
Ruy Blas, avec un geste de surprise.
Ah! – page, enseigne-lui ma maison du faubourg.
Qu’il m’y vienne trouver demain, si bon lui semble.
Va.
Le page sort. Aux conseillers.
Nous aurons tantôt à travailler ensemble.
Dans deux heures, messieurs. – revenez.

Tous sortent en saluant profondément Ruy Blas. Ruy Blas, resté seul, fait quelques pas en proie à une rêverie profonde. Tout à coup, à l’angle du salon, la tapisserie s’écarte et la reine apparaît. Elle est vêtue de blanc avec la couronne en tête; elle paraît rayonnante de joie et fixe sur Ruy Blas un regard d’admiration et de respect. Elle soutient d’un bras la tapisserie, derrière laquelle on entrevoit une sorte de cabinet obscur où l'on distingue une petite porte. Ruy Blas, en se retournant, aperçoit la reine, et reste comme pétrifié devant cette apparition.

Scène III – Ruy Blas, la reine.

La Reine.
Oh! Merci!
Ruy Blas.
Ciel!
La Reine.
Vous avez bien fait de leur parler ainsi.
Je n’y puis résister, duc, il faut que je serre
Cette loyale main si ferme et si sincère!

Elle marche vivement à lui et lui prend la main, qu’elle presse avant qu’il ait pu s’en défendre.

Ruy Blas.
À part.
La fuir depuis six mois et la voir tout à coup!
Haut.
Vous étiez là, madame? ...
La Reine.
Oui, duc, j’entendais tout
J’étais là. J’écoutais avec toute mon âme!
Ruy Blas, montrant la cachette.
Je ne soupçonnais pas... – ce cabinet, madame...
La Reine.
Personne ne le sait. C’est un réduit obscur
Que don Philippe Trois fit creuser dans ce mur,
D’où le maître invisible entend tout comme une ombre.
Là j’ai vu bien souvent Charles Deux, morne et sombre,
Assister aux conseils où l’on pillait son bien,
Où l’on vendait l’état.
Ruy Blas.
Et que disait-il?
La Reine.
Rien.
Ruy Blas.

Rien? – Et que faisait-il?
La Reine.
        Il allait à la chasse.
Mais vous! J’entends encor votre accent qui menace.
Comme vous les traitiez d’une haute façon,
Et comme vous aviez superbement raison!
Je soulevais le bord de la tapisserie,
Je vous voyais. Votre oeil, irrité, sans furie,
Les foudroyait d’éclairs, et vous leur disiez tout.
Vous me sembliez seul être resté debout!
Mais où donc avez-vous appris toutes ces choses?
D’où vient que vous savez les effets et les causes?
Vous n’ignorez donc rien? D’où vient que votre voix
Parlait comme devrait parler celle des rois?
Pourquoi donc étiez-vous, comme eût été Dieu même,
Si terrible et si grand?
Ruy Blas.
      Parce que je vous aime!
Parce que je sens bien, moi qu’ils haïssent tous,
Que ce qu’ils font crouler s’écroulera sur vous!
Parce que rien n’effraie une ardeur si profonde,
Et que pour vous sauver je sauverais le monde!
Je suis un malheureux qui vous aime d’amour.
Hélas! Je pense à vous comme l’aveugle au jour.
Madame, écoutez-moi. J’ai des rêves sans nombre.
Je vous aime de loin, d’en bas, du fond de l’ombre;
Je n’oserais toucher le bout de votre doigt,
Et vous m’éblouissez comme un ange qu’on voit!
– Vraiment, j’ai bien souffert. Si vous saviez, madame!
Je vous parle à présent. Six mois, cachant ma flamme,
J’ai fui. Je vous fuyais et je souffrais beaucoup.
Je ne m’occupe pas de ces hommes du tout,
Je vous aime. – ô mon Dieu, j’ose le dire en face
À votre majesté. Que faut-il que je fasse?
Si vous me disiez: meurs! Je mourrais. J’ai l’effroi
Dans le coeur. Pardonnez!
La Reine.

Oh! Parle! Ravis-moi!
Jamais on ne m'a dit ces choses-là. J'écoute!
Ton âme en me parlant me bouleverse toute.
J'ai besoin de tes yeux, j'ai besoin de ta voix.
Oh! C'est moi qui souffrais! Si tu savais! Cent fois,
Cent fois, depuis six mois que ton regard m'évite...
– Mais non, je ne dois pas dire cela si vite.
Je suis bien malheureuse. Oh! Je me tais. J'ai peur!
Ruy Blas, qui l'écoute avec ravissement.
Oh! Madame, achevez! Vous m'emplissez le coeur!
La Reine.
Eh bien, écoute donc!
Levant les yeux au ciel.
Oui, je vais tout lui dire.
Est-ce un crime? Tant pis! Quand le coeur se déchire,
Il faut bien laisser voir tout ce qu'on y cachait. –
Tu fuis la reine? Eh bien, la reine te cherchait.
Tous les jours je viens là, – là, dans cette retraite, –
T'écoutant, recueillant ce que tu dis, muette,
Contemplant ton esprit qui veut, juge et résout,
Et prise par ta voix qui m'intéresse à tout.
Va, tu me sembles bien le vrai roi, le vrai maître.
C'est moi, depuis six mois, tu t'en doutes peut-être,
Qui t'ai fait, par degrés, monter jusqu'au sommet.
Où Dieu t'aurait dû mettre une femme te met.
Oui, tout ce qui te touche a mes soins. Je t'admire.
Autrefois une fleur, à présent un empire!
D'abord je t'ai vu bon, et puis je te vois grand.
Mon Dieu! C'est cela qu'une femme se prend!
Mon Dieu! Si je fais mal, pourquoi, dans cette tombe,
M'enfermer, comme on met en cage une colombe,
Sans espoir, sans amour, sans un rayon doré?
– Un jour que nous aurons le temps, je te dirai
Tout ce que j'ai souffert. – toujours seule, oubliée! –
Et puis, à chaque instant, je suis humiliée.
Tiens, juge, hier encor... – ma chambre me déplaît.
– Tu dois savoir cela, toi qui sais tout, il est

Des chambres où l’on est plus triste que dans d’autres; –
J’en ai voulu changer. Vois quels fers sont les nôtres,
On ne l’a pas voulu. Je suis esclave ainsi! –
Duc, il faut, – dans ce but le ciel t’envoie ici, –
Sauver l’état qui tremble, et retirer du gouffre
Le peuple qui travaille, et m’aimer, moi qui souffre.
Je te dis tout cela sans suite, à ma façon,
Mais tu dois cependant voir que j’ai bien raison.
Ruy Blas, tombant à genoux.
Madame...
La Reine, gravement.
Don César, je vous donne mon âme.
Reine pour tous, pour vous je ne suis qu’une femme.
Par l’amour, par le coeur, duc, je vous appartien.
J’ai foi dans votre honneur pour respecter le mien.
Quand vous m’appellerez, je viendrai. Je suis prête.
– Ô César! Un esprit sublime est dans ta tête.
Sois fier, car le génie est ta couronne, à toi!
Elle baise Ruy Blas au front.
Adieu.
Elle soulève la tapisserie et disparaît.

Scène IV - Ruy Blas, seul.

Il est comme absorbé dans une contemplation angélique.

Devant mes yeux c’est le ciel que je voi!
De ma vie, ô mon Dieu! Cette heure est la première.
Devant moi tout un monde, un monde de lumière,
Comme ces paradis qu’en songe nous voyons,
S’entr’ouvre en m’inondant de vie et de rayons!
Partout en moi, hors moi, joie, extase et mystère,
Et l’ivresse, et l’orgueil, et ce qui sur la terre
Se rapproche le plus de la divinité,
L’amour dans la puissance et dans la majesté!
La reine m’aime! Ô Dieu! C’est bien vrai, c’est moi-même!
Je suis plus que le roi puisque la reine m’aime!
Oh! Cela m’éblouit. Heureux, aimé, vainqueur!
Duc d’Olmedo, – l’Espagne à mes pieds, – j’ai son coeur!
Cet ange, qu’à genoux je contemple et je nomme,
D’un mot me transfigure et me fait plus qu’un homme.
Donc je marche vivant dans mon rêve étoilé!
Oh! Oui, j’en suis bien sûr, elle m’a bien parlé.
C’est bien elle. Elle avait un petit diadème
En dentelle d’argent. Et je regardais même,
Pendant qu’elle parlait, – je crois la voir encor, –
Un aigle ciselé sur son bracelet d’or.
Elle se fie à moi, m’a-t-elle dit. – pauvre ange!
Oh! S’il est vrai que Dieu, par un prodige étrange,
En nous donnant l’amour, voulut mêler en nous
Ce qui fait l’homme grand à ce qui le fait doux,
Moi, qui ne crains plus rien maintenant qu’elle m’aime,
Moi, qui suis tout-puissant, grâce à son choix suprême,
Moi, dont le coeur gonflé ferait envie aux rois,
Devant Dieu qui m’entend, sans peur, à haute voix,
Je le dis, vous pouvez vous confier, madame,
À mon bras comme reine, à mon coeur comme femme!
Le dévouement se cache au fond de mon amour
Pur et loyal! – allez, ne craignez rien! –

Depuis quelques instants, un homme est entré par la porte du fond, enveloppé d'un grand manteau, coiffé d'un chapeau galonné d'argent. Il s'est avancé lentement vers Ruy Blas sans être vu, et, au moment où Ruy Blas, ivre d'extase et de bonheur, lève les yeux au ciel, cet homme lui pose brusquement la main sur l'épaule. Ruy Blas se retourne comme réveillé en sursaut; l'homme laisse tomber son manteau, et Ruy Blas reconnaît don Salluste.

Don Salluste est vêtu d'une livrée couleur de feu à galons d'argent, pareille à celle du page de Ruy Blas.

Scène V - Ruy Blas, don Salluste.

Don Salluste, posant la main sur l'épaule de Ruy Blas.
Bonjour.
Ruy Blas, effaré.
À part.
Grand Dieu! Je suis perdu! Le marquis!
Don Salluste, souriant.
Je parie
Que vous ne pensiez pas à moi.
Ruy Blas.
Sa seigneurie,
En effet, me surprend.
À part.
Oh! Mon malheur renaît.
J'étais tourné vers l'ange et le démon venait.

Il court à la tapisserie qui cache le cabinet secret et en ferme la petite porte au verrou; puis il revient tout tremblant vers don Salluste.

Don Salluste.
Eh bien! Comment cela va-t-il?
Ruy Blas, l'oeil fixé sur don Salluste impassible, et comme pouvant à peine rassembler ses idées.
Cette livrée? ...
Don Salluste, souriant toujours.
Il fallait du palais me procurer l'entrée.
Avec cet habit-là l'on arrive partout.
J'ai pris votre livrée et la trouve à mon goût.
Il se couvre. Ruy Blas reste tête nue.
Ruy Blas.
Mais j'ai peur pour vous...
Don Salluste.
Peur! Quel est ce mot risible?
Ruy Blas.
Vous êtes exilé!
Don Salluste.
Croyez-vous? C'est possible.

Ruy Blas.
Si l’on vous reconnaît, au palais, en plein jour
Don Salluste.
Ah bah! Des gens heureux, qui sont des gens de cour,
Iraient perdre leur temps, ce temps qui sitôt passe,
À se ressouvenir d’un visage en disgrâce!
D’ailleurs, regarde-t-on le profil d’un valet?
Il s’assied dans un fauteuil, et Ruy Blas reste debout.
À propos, que dit-on à Madrid, s’il vous plaît?
Est-il vrai que, brûlant d’un zèle hyperbolique,
Ici, pour les beaux yeux de la caisse publique,
Vous exilez ce cher Priego, l’un des grands?
Vous avez oublié que vous êtes parents.
Sa mère est Sandoval, la vôtre aussi. Que diable!
Sandoval porte d’or à la bande de sable.
Regardez vos blasons, don César. C’est fort clair.
Cela ne se fait pas entre parents, mon cher.
Les loups pour nuire aux loups font-ils les bons apôtres?
Ouvrez les yeux pour vous, fermez-les pour les autres.
Chacun pour soi.
Ruy Blas, se rassurant un peu.
Pourtant, monsieur, permettez-moi,
Monsieur De Priego, comme noble du roi,
À grand tort d’aggraver les charges de l’Espagne.
Or, il va falloir mettre une armée en campagne;
Nous n’avons pas d’argent, et pourtant il le faut.
L’héritier bavarois penche à mourir bientôt.
Hier, le comte d’Harrach, que vous devez connaître,
Me le disait au nom de l’empereur son maître.
Si monsieur l’archiduc veut soutenir son droit,
La guerre éclatera...
Don Salluste.
L’air me semble un peu froid.
Faites-moi le plaisir de fermer la croisée.
Ruy Blas, pâle de honte et de désespoir, hésite un moment; puis il fait un effort et se dirige lentement vers la fenêtre, la ferme, et revient vers don Salluste, qui, assis dans le fauteuil, le suit des yeux d’un air indifférent.

Ruy Blas, reprenant et essayant de convaincre don Salluste.
Daignez voir à quel point la guerre est malaisée.
Que faire sans argent? Excellence, écoutez.
Le salut de l'Espagne est dans nos probités.
Pour moi, j'ai, comme si notre armée était prête,
Fait dire à l'empereur que je lui tiendrais tête...
Don Salluste, interrompant Ruy Blas et lui montrant son mouchoir qu'il a laissé tomber en entrant.
Pardon! Ramassez-moi mon mouchoir.

Ruy Blas, comme à la torture, hésite encore, puis se baisse, ramasse le mouchoir, et le présente à don Salluste.

Don Salluste, mettant le mouchoir dans sa poche.
– Vous disiez? ...
Ruy Blas, avec effort.
Le salut de l'Espagne! – oui, l'Espagne à nos pieds,
Et l'intérêt public demandent qu'on s'oublie.
Ah! Toute la nation bénit qui la délie.
Sauvons ce peuple! Osons être grands, et frappons!
Otons l'ombre à l'intrigue et le masque aux fripons!
Don Salluste, nonchalamment.
Et d'abord ce n'est pas de bonne compagnie. –
Cela sent son pédant et son petit génie
Que de faire sur tout un bruit démesuré.
Un méchant million, plus ou moins dévoré,
Voilà-t-il pas de quoi pousser des cris sinistres!
Mon cher, les grands seigneurs ne sont pas de vos cuistres.
Ils vivent largement. Je parle sans phébus.
Le bel air que celui d'un redresseur d'abus
Toujours bouffi d'orgueil et rouge de colère!
Mais bah! Vous voulez être un gaillard populaire,
Adoré des bourgeois et des marchands d'esteufs.
C'est fort drôle. Ayez donc des caprices plus neufs.
Les intérêts publics? Songez d'abord aux vôtres.
Le salut de l'Espagne est un mot creux que d'autres
Feront sonner, mon cher, tout aussi bien que vous.
La popularité? C'est la gloire en gros sous.
Rôder, dogue aboyant, tout autour des gabelles?

Charmant métier! Je sais des postures plus belles.
Vertu? Foi? Probité? C’est du clinquant déteint.
C’était usé déjà du temps de Charles-Quint.
Vous n’êtes pas un sot; faut-il qu’on vous guérisse
Du pathos? Vous tétiez encor votre nourrice,
Que nous autres déjà nous avions sans pitié,
Gaîment, à coups d’épingle ou bien à coups de pié,
Crevant votre ballon au milieu des risées,
Fait sortir tout le vent de ces billevesées!
Ruy Blas.
Mais pourtant, monseigneur...
Don Salluste, avec un sourire glacé.
        Vous êtes étonnant.
Occupons-nous d’objets sérieux, maintenant.
D’un ton bref et impérieux.
– Vous m’attendrez demain toute la matinée
Chez vous, dans la maison que je vous ai donnée.
La chose que je fais touche à l’événement.
Gardez pour nous servir les muets seulement.
Ayez dans le jardin, caché sous le feuillage,
Un carrosse attelé, tout prêt pour un voyage.
J’aurai soin des relais. Faites tout à mon gré.
– Il vous faut de l’argent, je vous en enverrai. –
Ruy Blas.
Monsieur, j’obéirai. Je consens à tout faire.
Mais jurez-moi d’abord qu’en toute cette affaire
La reine n’est pour rien.
Don Salluste, qui jouait avec un couteau d’ivoire sur la table, se retourne à demi.
      De quoi vous mêlez-vous?
Ruy Blas, chancelant et le regardant avec épouvante.
Oh! Vous êtes un homme effrayant. Mes genoux
Tremblent... vous m’entraînez vers un gouffre invisible.
Oh! Je sens que je suis dans une main terrible!
Vous avez des projets monstrueux. J’entrevoi
Quelque chose d’horrible... – Ayez pitié de moi!
Il faut que je vous dise, – Hélas! Jugez vous-même!

Vous ne le saviez pas! Cette femme, je l'aime!
Don Salluste, froidement.
Mais si. Je le savais.
Ruy Blas.
 Vous le saviez!
Don Salluste.
 Pardieu!
Qu'est-ce que cela fait?
Ruy Blas, s'appuyant au mur pour ne pas tomber, et comme se parlant à lui-même.
 Donc il s'est fait un jeu,
Le lâche, d'essayer sur moi cette torture!
Mais c'est que ce serait une affreuse aventure!
 Il lève les yeux au ciel.
Seigneur Dieu tout-puissant! Mon Dieu qui m'éprouvez, Épargnez-moi, Seigneur!
Don Salluste.
 Ah , mais-vous rêvez!
Vraiment! Vous vous prenez au sérieux, mon maître.
C'est bouffon. Vers un but que seul je dois connaître,
But plus heureux pour vous que vous ne le pensez,
J'avance. Tenez-vous tranquille. Obéissez.
Je vous l'ai déjà dit et je vous le répète,
Je veux votre bonheur. Marchez, la chose est faite.
Puis, grand'chose après tout que des chagrins d'amour!
Nous passons tous par là. C'est l'affaire d'un jour.
Savez-vous qu'il s'agit du destin d'un empire?
Qu'est le vôtre à côté? Je veux bien tout vous dire,
Mais ayez le bon sens de comprendre aussi, vous.
Soyez de votre état. Je suis très bon, très doux,
Mais, que diable! Un laquais, d'argile humble ou choisie,
N'est qu'un vase où je veux verser ma fantaisie.
De vous autres, mon cher, on fait tout ce qu'on veut.
Votre maître, selon le dessein qui l'émeut,
À son gré vous déguise, à son gré vous démasque.
Je vous ai fait seigneur. C'est un rôle fantasque,
– Pour l'instant. – Vous avez l'habillement complet.

Mais, ne l'oubliez pas, vous êtes mon valet.
Vous courtisez la reine ici par aventure,
Comme vous monteriez derrière ma voiture.
Soyez donc raisonnable.
Ruy Blas, qui l'a écouté avec égarement et comme ne pouvant en croire ses oreilles.
Ô mon Dieu! – Dieu clément!
Dieu juste! De quel crime est-ce le châtiment?
Qu'est-ce donc que j'ai fait? Vous êtes notre père,
Et vous ne voulez pas qu'un homme désespère!
Voilà donc où j'en suis! – et, volontairement,
Et sans tort de ma part, – pour voir, – uniquement
Pour voir agoniser une pauvre victime,
Monseigneur, vous m'avez plongé dans cet abîme!
Tordre un malheureux coeur plein d'amour et de foi,
Afin d'en exprimer la vengeance pour soi!
Se parlant à lui-même.
Car c'est une vengeance! Oui, la chose est certaine!
Et je devine bien que c'est contre la reine!
Qu'est-ce que je vais faire? Aller lui dire tout?
Ciel! Devenir pour elle un objet de dégoût
Et d'horreur! Un crispin, un fourbe à double face!
Un effronté coquin qu'on bâtonne et qu'on chasse!
Jamais! – Je deviens fou, ma raison se confond!
Une pause. Il rêve.
Ô mon Dieu! Voilà donc les choses qui se font!
Bâtir une machine effroyable dans l'ombre,
L'armer hideusement de rouages sans nombre,
Puis, sous la meule, afin de voir comment elle est,
Jeter une livrée, une chose, un valet,
Puis la faire mouvoir, et soudain sous la roue
Voir sortir des lambeaux teints de sang et de boue,
Une tête brisée, un coeur tiède et fumant,
Et ne pas frissonner alors qu'en ce moment
On reconnaît, malgré le mot dont on le nomme,
Que ce laquais était l'enveloppe d'un homme!
Se tournant vers don Salluste.

Mais il est temps encore! Oh! Monseigneur, vraiment,
L’horrible roue encor n’est pas en mouvement!
Il se jette à ses pieds.
Ayez pitié de moi! Grâce! Ayez pitié d’elle!
Vous savez que je suis un serviteur fidèle.
Vous l’avez dit souvent. Voyez! Je me soumets!
Grâce!
Don Salluste.
Cet homme-là ne comprendra jamais.
C’est impatientant!
Ruy Blas, se traînant à ses pieds.
Grâce!
Don Salluste.
Abrégeons, mon maître.
Il se tourne vers la fenêtre.
Gageons que vous avez mal fermé la fenêtre.
Il vient un froid par là!
Il va à la croisée et la ferme.
Ruy Blas, se relevant.
Ho! C’est trop! À présent
Je suis duc d’Olmédo, ministre tout-puissant!
Je relève le front sous le pied qui m’écrase.
Don Salluste.
Comment dit-il cela? Répétez donc la phrase.
Ruy Blas duc d’Olmedo? Vos yeux ont un bandeau.
Ce n’est que sur Bazan qu’on a mis Olmedo.
Ruy Blas.
Je vous fais arrêter.
Don Salluste.
Je dirai qui vous êtes.
Ruy Blas, exaspéré.
Mais...
Don Salluste.
Vous m’accuserez? J’ai risqué nos deux têtes.
C’est prévu. Vous prenez trop tôt l’air triomphant.
Ruy Blas.
Je nierai tout!

Don Salluste.
Allons! Vous êtes un enfant.
Ruy Blas.
Vous n’avez pas de preuve!
Don Salluste.
Et vous pas de mémoire.
Je fais ce que je dis, et vous pouvez m’en croire.
Vous n’êtes que le gant, et moi je suis la main.
Bas et se rapprochant de Ruy Blas.
Si tu n’obéis pas, si tu n’es pas demain
Chez toi, pour préparer ce qu’il faut que je fasse,
Si tu dis un seul mot de tout ce qui se passe,
Si tes yeux, si ton geste en laissent rien percer,
Celle pour qui tu crains, d’abord, pour commencer,
Par ta folle aventure, en cent lieux répandue,
Sera publiquement diffamée et perdue.
Puis elle recevra, ceci n’a rien d’obscur,
Sous cachet, un papier, que je garde en lieu sûr,
Écrit, te souvient-il avec quelle écriture?
Signé, tu dois savoir de quelle signature?
Voici ce que ses yeux y liront: “ Moi, Ruy Blas,
“ Laquais de monseigneur le marquis de Finlas,
“ En toute occasion, ou secrète ou publique,
“ M’engage à le servir comme un bon domestique. “
Ruy Blas, brisé et d’une voix éteinte.
Il suffit. – je ferai, monsieur, ce qu’il vous plaît.
La porte du fond s’ouvre. On voit rentrer les conseillers du conseil privé.
Don Salluste s’enveloppe vivement de son manteau.
Don Salluste, bas.
On vient.
Il salue profondément Ruy Blas. Haut.
Monsieur le duc, je suis votre valet.
Il sort.

ACTE IV

DON CÉSAR

Une petite chambre somptueuse et sombre. Lambris et meubles de vieille forme et de vieille dorure. Murs couverts d’anciennes tentures de velours cramoisi, écrasé et miroitant par places et derrière le dos des fauteuils, avec de larges galons d’or qui le divisent en bandes verticales. Au fond, une porte à deux battants. À gauche, sur un pan coupé, une grande cheminée sculptée du temps de Philippe II, avec écusson de fer battu dans l’intérieur. Du côté opposé, sur un pan coupé, une petite porte basse donnant dans un cabinet obscur. Une seule fenêtre à gauche, placée très haut et garnie de barreaux et d’un auvent inférieur comme les croisées des prisons. Sur le mur, quelques vieux portraits enfumés et à demi effacés. Coffre de garde-robe avec miroir de Venise. Grands fauteuils du temps de Philippe III. Une armoire très ornée adossée au mur. Une table carrée avec ce qu’il faut pour écrire. Un petit guéridon de forme ronde à pieds dorés dans un coin. C’est le matin. Au lever du rideau, Ruy Blas, vêtu de noir, sans manteau et sans la toison, vivement agité, se promène à grands pas dans la chambre. Au fond, se tient son page, immobile et comme attendant ses ordres.

Scène première – Ruy Blas, le page.

Ruy Blas, à part, et se parlant à lui-même.
Que faire? – elle d’abord! Elle avant tout! – rien qu’elle!
Dût-on voir sur un mur rejaillir ma cervelle,
Dût le gibet me prendre ou l’enfer me saisir!
Il faut que je la sauve! – Oui! Mais y réussir?
Comment faire? Donner mon sang, mon coeur, mon âme,
Ce n’est rien, c’est aisé. Mais rompre cette trame!
Deviner... – deviner! Car il faut deviner! –
Ce que cet homme a pu construire et combiner!
Il sort soudain de l’ombre et puis il s’y replonge,
Et là, seul dans sa nuit, que fait-il? – quand j’y songe,
Dans le premier moment je l’ai prié pour moi!
Je suis un lâche, et puis c’est stupide! – eh bien, quoi!
C’est un homme méchant. – mais que je m’imagine
–La chose a sans nul doute une ancienne origine, –
Que lorsqu’il tient sa proie et la mâche à moitié,
Ce démon va lâcher la reine, par pitié
Pour son valet! Peut-on fléchir les bêtes fauves?
– Mais, misérable! Il faut pourtant que tu la sauves!
C’est toi qui l’as perdue! À tout prix il le faut!
– C’est fini. Me voilà retombé! De si haut!
Si bas! J’ai donc rêvé! – ho! Je veux qu’elle échappe!
Mais lui! Par quelle porte, ô Dieu, par quelle trappe,
Par où va-t-il venir, l’homme de trahison?
Dans ma vie et dans moi, comme en cette maison,
Il est maître. Il en peut arracher les dorures.
Il a toutes les clefs de toutes les serrures.
Il peut entrer, sortir, dans l’ombre s’approcher,
Et marcher sur mon coeur comme sur ce plancher.
– oui, c’est que je rêvais! Le sort trouble nos têtes
Dans la rapidité des choses sitôt faites.
Je suis fou. Je n’ai plus une idée en son lieu.
Ma raison, dont j’étais si vain, mon Dieu! Mon Dieu!
Prise en un tourbillon d’épouvante et de rage,

N’est plus qu’un pauvre jonc tordu par un orage!
Que faire? Pensons bien. D’abord empêchons-la
De sortir du palais. – oh! Oui, le piège est là
Sans doute. Autour de moi, tout est nuit, tout est gouffre.
Je sens le piège, mais je ne vois pas. – je souffre!
C’est dit. Empêchons-la de sortir du palais.
Faisons-la prévenir sûrement, sans délais. –
Par qui? – Je n’ai personne!

Il rêve avec accablement. Puis, tout à coup, comme frappé d’une idée subite et d’une lueur d’espoir, il relève la tête.

Oui, don Guritan l’aime!
C’est un homme loyal! Oui!

Faisant signe au page de s’approcher. Bas.

– Page, à l’instant même,
Va chez don Guritan, et fais-lui de ma part
Mes excuses; et puis dis-lui que sans retard
Il aille chez la reine et qu’il la prie en grâce,
En mon nom comme au sien, quoi qu’on dise ou qu’on fasse,
De ne point s’absenter du palais de trois jours.
Quoi qu’il puisse arriver. De ne point sortir. Cours!

Rappelant le page.

Ah!

Il tire de son garde-notes une feuille et un crayon.

Qu’il donne ce mot à la reine, – et qu’il veille!

Il écrit rapidement sur son genou.

– “ Croyez don Guritan, faites ce qu’il conseille! “

Il ploie le papier et le remet au page.

Quant à ce duel, dis-lui que j’ai tort, que je suis
À ses pieds, qu’il me plaigne et que j’ai des ennuis,
Qu’il porte chez la reine à l’instant mes suppliques,
Et que je lui ferai des excuses publiques.
Qu’elle est en grand péril. Qu’elle ne sorte point.
Quoi qu’il arrive. Au moins trois jours! – de point en point
Fais tout. Va, sois discret, ne laisse rien paraître.
Le Page.
Je vous suis dévoué. Vous êtes un bon maître.
Ruy Blas.

Cours, mon bon petit page. As-tu bien tout compris?
Le Page.
Oui, monseigneur; soyez tranquille.

Il sort.

Ruy Blas*, resté seul, tombant sur un fauteuil*.
Mes esprits
Se calment. Cependant, comme dans la folie,
Je sens confusément des choses que j’oublie.
Oui, le moyen est sûr. – don Guritan! ... – Mais moi?
Faut-il attendre ici don Salluste? Pourquoi?
Non. Ne l’attendons pas. Cela le paralyse
Tout un grand jour. Allons prier dans quelque église.
Sortons. J’ai besoin d’aide, et Dieu m’inspirera!

Il prend son chapeau sur une crédence, et secoue une sonnette posée sur la table. Deux nègres, vêtus de velours vert clair et de brocart d’or, jaquettes plissées à grandes basques, paraissent à la porte du fond.

Je sors. Dans un instant un homme ici viendra.
– Par une entrée à lui. – dans la maison, peut-être,
Vous le verrez agir comme s’il était maître.
Laissez-le faire. Et si d’autres viennent...

Après avoir hésité un moment.

Ma foi,
Vous laisserez entrer!

Il congédie du geste les noirs, qui s’inclinent en signe d’obéissance et qui sortent.

Allons!

Il sort.

Au moment où la porte se referme sur Ruy Blas, on entend un grand bruit dans la cheminée, par laquelle on voit tomber tout à coup un homme, enveloppé d’un manteau déguenillé, qui se précipite dans la chambre. C’est don César.

Scène II – Don César

Don César. Effaré, essoufflé, décoiffé, étourdi, avec une expression joyeuse et inquiète en même temps.

Tant pis! C’est moi!

Il se relève en se frottant la jambe sur laquelle il est tombé, et s’avance dans la chambre avec force révérences et chapeau bas.

Pardon! Ne faites pas attention, je passe.
Vous parliez entre vous. Continuez, de grâce.
J’entre un peu brusquement, messieurs, j’en suis fâché!

Il s’arrête au milieu de la chambre et s’aperçoit qu’il est seul.

– Personne! – Sur le toit tout à l’heure perché,
J’ai cru pourtant ouïr un bruit de voix. – personne!

S’asseyant dans un fauteuil.

Fort bien. Recueillons-nous. La solitude est bonne.
– Ouf! Que d’événements! – j’en suis émerveillé
Comme l’eau qu’il secoue aveugle un chien mouillé.
Primo, ces alguazils qui m’ont pris dans leurs serres;
Puis cet embarquement absurde; ces corsaires;
Et cette grosse ville où l’on m’a tant battu;
Et les tentations faites sur ma vertu
Par cette femme jaune; et mon départ du bagne;
Mes voyages; enfin, mon retour en Espagne!
Puis, quel roman! Le jour où j’arrive, c’est fort,
Ces mêmes alguazils rencontrés tout d’abord!
Leur poursuite enragée et ma fuite éperdue;
Je saute un mur; j’avise une maison perdue
Dans les arbres, j’y cours; personne ne me voit;
Je grimpe allègrement du hangar sur le toit;
Enfin, je m’introduis dans le sein des familles
Par une cheminée où je mets en guenilles
Mon manteau le plus neuf qui sur mes chausses pend! ...
– Pardieu! Monsieur Salluste est un grand sacripant!

Se regardant dans une petite glace de Venise posée sur le grand coffre à tiroirs sculptés.

– Mon pourpoint m’a suivi dans mes malheurs. Il lutte.

Il ôte son manteau et mire dans la glace son pourpoint de satin rose usé, déchiré et rapiécé; puis il porte vivement la main à sa jambe avec un coup d'oeil vers la cheminée.

Mais ma jambe a souffert diablement dans ma chute!

Il ouvre les tiroirs du coffre. Dans l'un d'entre eux il trouve un manteau de velours vert clair, brodé d'or, le manteau donné par don Salluste à Ruy Blas. Il examine le manteau et le compare au sien.

– Ce manteau me paraît plus décent que le mien.

Il jette le manteau vert sur ses épaules et met le sien à la place dans le coffre, après l'avoir soigneusement plié; il y ajoute son chapeau , qu'il enfonce sous le manteau d'un coup de poing; puis il referme le tiroir. Il se promène fièrement, drapé dans le beau manteau brodé d'or.

C'est égal, me voilà revenu. Tout va bien.
Ah! mon très cher cousin, vous voulez que j'émigre
Dans cette Afrique où l'homme est la souris du tigre!
Mais je vais me venger de vous, cousin damné,
Épouvantablement, quand j'aurai déjeuné.
J'irai, sous mon vrai nom, chez vous, traînant ma queue
D'affreux vauriens sentant le gibet d'une lieue
Et je vous livrerai vivant aux appétits
De tous mes créanciers – suivis de leurs petits.

Il aperçoit dans un coin une magnifique paire de bottines à canons de dentelles. Il jette lestement ses vieux souliers, et chausse sans façon les bottines neuves.

Voyons d'abord où m'ont jeté ses perfidies.

Après avoir examiné la chambre de tous les côtés.

Maison mystérieuse et propre aux tragédies.
Portes closes, volets barrés, un vrai cachot.
Dans ce charmant logis on entre par en haut,
Juste comme le vin entre dans les bouteilles.

Avec un soupir.

– C'est bien bon, du bon vin! –

Il aperçoit la petite porte à droite, l'ouvre, s'introduit vivement dans le cabinet avec lequel elle communique, puis rentre avec des gestes d'étonnement.

Merveille des merveilles!
Cabinet sans issue où tout est clos aussi!

Il va à la porte du fond, l'entr'ouvre, et regarde au dehors; puis il la laisse retomber et revient sur le devant.

Personne! – où diable suis-je? – au fait j'ai réussi
À fuir les alguazils. Que m'importe le reste?
Vais-je pas m'effarer et prendre un air funeste
Pour n'avoir jamais vu de maison faite ainsi?

Il se rassied sur le fauteuil, bâille, puis se relève presque aussitôt.

Ah çà, mais– je m'ennuie horriblement ici!

Avisant une petite armoire dans le mur, à gauche, qui fait le coin en pan coupé.

Voyons, ceci m'a l'air d'une bibliothèque.

Il y va et l'ouvre. C'est un garde-manger bien garni.

Justement. – un pâté, du vin, une pastèque.
C'est un en-cas complet. Six flacons bien rangés!
Diable! Sur ce logis j'avais des préjugés.

Examinant les flacons l'un après l'autre.

C'est d'un bon choix. – allons! L'armoire est honorable.

Il va chercher dans un coin la petite table ronde, l'apporte sur le devant et la charge joyeusement de tout ce que contient le garde-manger, bouteilles, plats, etc.; il ajoute un verre, une assiette, une fourchette, etc. – puis il prend une des bouteilles.

Lisons d'abord ceci.

Il emplit le verre, et boit d'un trait.

C'est une oeuvre admirable
De ce fameux poëte appelé le soleil!
Xérès-des-chevaliers n'a rien de plus vermeil.

Il s'assied, se verse un second verre et boit.

Quel livre vaut cela? Trouvez-moi quelque chose
De plus spiritueux!

Il boit.

Ah Dieu, cela repose!
Mangeons.

Il entame le pâté.

Chiens d'alguazils! Je les ai déroutés.
Ils ont perdu ma trace.

Il mange.

Oh! Le roi des pâtés!

Quant au maître du lieu, s’il survient... –

Il va au buffet et en rapporte un verre et un couvert qu’il pose sur la table.

Je l’invite.
– Pourvu qu’il n’aille pas me chasser! Mangeons vite.

Il met les morceaux doubles.

Mon dîner fait, j’irai visiter la maison.
Mais qui peut l’habiter? Peut-être un bon garçon.
Ceci peut ne cacher qu’une intrigue de femme.
Bah! Quel mal fais-je ici? Qu’est-ce que je réclame?
Rien, – L’hospitalité de ce digne mortel,
À la manière antique,

Il s’agenouille à demi et entoure la table de ses bras.

En embrassant l’autel.

Il boit.

D’abord, ceci n’est point le vin d’un méchant homme.
Et puis, c’est convenu, si l’on vient, je me nomme.
Ah! Vous endiablerez, mon vieux cousin maudit!
Quoi, ce bohémien? Ce galeux? Ce bandit?
Ce Zafari? Ce gueux? Ce va-nu-pieds? ... – Tout juste!
Don César De Bazan, cousin de don Salluste!
Oh! La bonne surprise! Et dans Madrid quel bruit!
Quand est-il revenu? Ce matin? Cette nuit?
Quel tumulte partout en voyant cette bombe,
Ce grand nom oublié qui tout à coup retombe!
Don César De Bazan! Oui, messieurs, s’il vous plaît!
Personne n’y pensait, personne n’en parlait,
Il n’était donc pas mort? Il vit, messieurs, mesdames!
Les hommes diront: Diable! – Oui-dà! diront les femmes.
Doux bruit qui vous reçoit rentrant dans vos foyers,
Mêlé de l’aboiement de trois cents créanciers!
Quel beau rôle à jouer! – hélas! L’argent me manque.

Bruit la porte.

On vient! – sans doute on va comme un vil saltimbanque
M’expulser. – C’est égal, ne fais rien à demi,
César!

Il s’enveloppe de son manteau jusqu’aux yeux. La porte du fond s’ouvre. Entre un laquais en livrée portant sur son dos une grosse sacoche.

Scène III - Don César, un laquais.

Don César, toisant le laquais de la tête aux pieds.
Qui venez-vous chercher céans, l'ami?
À part.
Il faut beaucoup d'aplomb, le péril est extrême.
Le Laquais.
Don César De Bazan?
Don César, dégageant son visage du manteau.
Don César! C'est moi-même!
À part.
Voilà du merveilleux!
Le Laquais.
Vous êtes le seigneur
Don César De Bazan?
Don César.
Pardieu! J'ai cet honneur.
César! Le vrai César! Le seul César! Le comte De Garo...
Le Laquais, posant sur le fauteuil la sacoche.
Daignez voir si c'est là votre compte.
Don César, comme ébloui.
À part.
De l'argent! C'est trop fort
Haut.
Mon cher...
Le Laquais.
Daignez compter.
C'est la somme que j'ai l'ordre de vous porter.
Don César, gravement.
Ah! Fort bien! Je comprends.
À part.
Je veux bien que le diable... –

Çà, ne dérangeons pas cette histoire admirable.
Ceci vient fort à point.
Haut.
Vous faut-il des reçus?
Le Laquais.
Non, monseigneur.
Don César, lui montrant la table.
Mettez cet argent là-dessus.
Le laquais obéit.
De quelle part?
Le Laquais.
Monsieur le sait bien.
Don César.
Sans nul doute.
Mais...
Le Laquais.
Cet argent, – voilà ce qu'il faut que j'ajoute, –
Vient de qui vous savez pour ce que vous savez.
Don César, satisfait de l'explication.
Ah!
Le Laquais.
Nous devons, tous deux, être fort réservés.
Chut!
Don César.
Chut!!! – cet argent vient... – la phrase est magnifique!
Redites-la-moi donc.
Le Laquais.
Cet argent...
Don César.
Tout s'explique!
Me vient de qui je sais...
Le Laquais.
Pour ce que vous savez.
Nous devons...
Don César.
Tous les deux!!!
Le Laquais.

Être fort réservés.
Don César.
C’est parfaitement clair.
Le Laquais.
Moi, j’obéis; du reste
Je ne comprends pas.
Don César.
Bah!
Laquais.
Mais vous comprenez!
Don César.
Peste!
Le Laquais.
Il suffit.
Don César.
Je comprends et je prends, mon très cher.
De l’argent qu’on reçoit, d’abord, c’est toujours clair.
Le Laquais.
Chut!
Don César.
Chut!!! Ne faisons pas d’indiscrétion. Diantre!
Le Laquais.
Comptez, seigneur!
Don César.
Pour qui me prends-tu?
Admirant la rondeur du sac posé sur la table.
Le beau ventre!
Le Laquais, insistant.
Mais...
Don César.
Je me fie à toi.
Le Laquais.
L’or est en souverains.
Bons quadruples pesant sept gros trente-six grains,
Ou bons doublons au marc. L’argent, en croix-maries.

Don César ouvre la sacoche et en tire plusieurs sacs pleins d’or et d’argent, qu’il ouvre et vide sur la table avec admiration; puis il se met à puiser pleines poignées dans les sacs d'or, et remplit ses poches de quadruples et de doublons.

Don César, s'interrompant, avec majesté.
À part.
Voici que mon roman, couronnant ses féeries,
Meurt amoureusement sur un gros million.
Il se met à remplir ses poches.
Ô délices! Je mords à même un galion!
Une poche pleine, il passe à l'autre. Il se cherche des poches partout, et semble avoir oublié le laquais.
Le Laquais, qui le regarde avec impassibilité.
Et maintenant, j'attends vos ordres.
Don César, se retournant.
Pour quoi faire?
Le Laquais.
Afin d'exécuter, vite et sans qu'on diffère,
Ce que je ne sais pas et ce que vous savez.
De très grands intérêts...
César, l'interrompant d'un air d'intelligence.
Oui, publics et privés!!!
Le Laquais.
Veulent que tout cela se fasse à l'instant même.
Je dis ce qu'on m'a dit de dire.
Don César, lui frappant sur l'épaule.
Et je t'en aime,
Fidèle serviteur!
Le Laquais.
Pour ne rien retarder,
Mon maître à vous me donne afin de vous aider.
Don César.
C'est agir congrûment. Faisons ce qu'il désire.
À part.
Je veux être pendu si je sais que lui dire.
Haut.
Approche, galion, et d'abord –
il remplit de vin l'autre verre.
Bois-moi a!

Le Laquais.
Quoi, seigneur? ...
Don César.
Bois-moi a!
Le laquais boit. Don César lui remplit son verre.
Du vin d’Oropesa!
Il fait asseoir le laquais, le fait boire, et lui verse de nouveau vin.
Causons.
À part.
Il a déjà la prunelle allumée.
Haut et s’étendant sur sa chaise.
L’homme, mon cher ami, n’est que de la fumée,
Noire, et qui sort du feu des passions. Voilà.
Il lui verse à boire.
C’est bête comme tout, ce que je te dis là.
Et d’abord la fumée, au ciel bleu ramenée,
Se comporte autrement dans une cheminée.
Elle monte gaîment, et nous dégringolons.
Il se frotte la jambe.
L’homme n’est qu’un plomb vil.
Il remplit les deux verres.
Buvons. Tous tes doublons
Ne valent pas le chant d’un ivrogne qui passe.
Se rapprochant d’un air mystérieux.
Vois-tu, soyons prudents. Trop chargé, l’essieu casse.
Le mur sans fondement s’écroule subito.
Mon cher, raccroche-moi le col de mon manteau.
Le Laquais, fièrement.
Seigneur, je ne suis pas valet de chambre.
Avant que don César ait pu l’en empêcher, il secoue la sonnette posée sur la table.
Don César, à part, effrayé.
Il sonne!
Le maître va peut-être arriver en personne.
Je suis pris!
Entre un des noirs. Don César, en proie à la plus vive anxiété, se retourne du côté opposé, comme ne sachant que devenir.

Le Laquais, au nègre.
Remettez l'agrafe à monseigneur.

Le nègre s'approche gravement de don César, qui le regarde faire d'un air stupéfait, puis il rattache l'agrafe du manteau, salue, et sort, laissant don César pétrifié.

Don César, se levant de table.
À part.
Je suis chez Belzébuth, ma parole d'honneur!
Il vient sur le devant et se promène à grands pas.
Ma foi, laissons-nous faire, et prenons ce qui s'offre.
Donc je vais remuer les écus à plein coffre.
J'ai de l'argent! Que vais-je en faire?

Se retournant vers le laquais attablé, qui continue à boire et qui commence à chanceler sur sa chaise.

Attends, pardon!
Rêvant, part.
Voyons, – si je payais mes créanciers? – fi donc!
– Du moins, pour les calmer, âmes à s'aigrir promptes,
Si je les arrosais avec quelques acomptes?
– À quoi bon arroser ces vilaines fleurs-là?
Où diable mon esprit va-t-il chercher cela?
Rien n'est tel que l'argent pour vous corrompre un homme,
Et, fût-il descendant d'Annibal qui prit Rome,
L'emplir jusqu'au goulot de sentiments bourgeois!
Que dirait-on? Me voir payer ce que je dois!
Ah!
Le Laquais, vidant son verre.
Que m'ordonnez-vous?
Don César.
Laisse-moi, je médite.
Bois en m'attendant.

Le laquais se remet à boire. Lui continue de rêver, et tout à coup se frappe le front comme ayant trouvé une idée.

Oui!
Au laquais.
Lève-toi tout de suite.
Voici ce qu'il faut faire. Emplis tes poches d'or.

Le laquais se lève en trébuchant, et emplit d’or les poches de son justaucorps. Don César l’y aide, tout en continuant.

Dans la ruelle, au bout de la place Mayor,
Entre au numéro neuf. Une maison étroite.
Beau logis, si ce n’est que la fenêtre droite
À sur le cristallin une taie en papier.
Le Laquais.
Maison borgne?
Don César.
Non, louche. On peut s’estropier
En montant l’escalier. Prends-y garde.
Le Laquais.
Une échelle?
Don César.
À peu près. C’est plus roide. – en haut loge une belle Facile à reconnaître, un bonnet de six sous
Avec de gros cheveux ébouriffés dessous,
Un peu courte, un peu rousse... – une femme charmante!
Sois très respectueux, mon cher, c’est mon amante.
Lucinda, qui jadis, blonde à l’oeil indigo,
Chez le pape, le soir, dansait le fandango.
Compte-lui cent ducats en mon nom. – dans un bouge
À côté, tu verras un gros diable au nez rouge,
Coiffé jusqu’aux sourcils d’un vieux feutre fané
Où pend tragiquement un plumeau consterné,
La rapière à l’échine et la loque à l’épaule.
Donne de notre part six piastres à ce drôle. –
Plus loin, tu trouveras un trou noir comme un four,
Un cabaret qui chante au coin d’un carrefour.
Sur le seuil boit et fume un vivant qui le hante.
C’est un homme fort doux et de vie élégante,
Un seigneur dont jamais un juron ne tomba,
Et mon ami de coeur, nommé Goulatromba.
– Trente écus! – et dis-lui, pour toutes patenôtres,
Qu’il les boive bien vite et qu’il en aura d’autres.
Donne à tous ces faquins ton argent le plus rond,
Et ne t’ébahis pas des yeux qu’ils ouvriront.

Le Laquais.
Après?
Don César.
Garde le reste. Et pour dernier chapitre...
Le Laquais.
Qu’ordonne monseigneur?
Don César.
Va te soûler, bélître!
Casse beaucoup de pots et fais beaucoup de bruit,
Et ne rentre chez toi que demain– dans la nuit.
Le Laquais.
Suffit, mon prince.
Il se dirige vers la porte en faisant des zigzags.
Don César, le regardant marcher.
À part.
Il est effroyablement ivre!
Le rappelant. L’autre se rapproche.
Ah! ... – Quand tu sortiras, les oisifs vont te suivre.
Fais par ta contenance honneur à la boisson.
Sache te comporter d’une noble façon.
S’il tombe par hasard des écus de tes chausses,
Laisse tomber, – et si des essayeurs de sauces,
Des clercs, des écoliers, des gueux qu’on voit passer,
Les ramassent, – mon cher, laisse-les ramasser.
Ne sois pas un mortel de trop farouche approche.
Si même ils en prenaient quelques-uns dans ta poche,
Sois indulgent. Ce sont des hommes comme nous.
Et puis il faut, vois-tu, c’est une loi pour tous,
Dans ce monde, rempli de sombres aventures,
Donner parfois un peu de joie aux créatures.
Avec mélancolie.
Tous ces gens-là seront peut-être un jour pendus!
Ayons donc les égards pour eux qui leur sont dus!
– Va-t’en.

Le laquais sort. Resté seul, don César se rassied, s’accoude sur la table, et paraît plongé dans de profondes réflexions.

C’est le devoir du chrétien et du sage,

Quand il a de l’argent, d’en faire un bon usage.
J’ai de quoi vivre au moins huit jours! Je les vivrai.
Et, s’il me reste un peu d’argent, je l’emploierai
À des fondations pieuses. Mais je n’ose
M’y fier, car on va me reprendre la chose.
C’est méprise sans doute, et ce mal-adressé
Aura mal entendu, j’aurai mal prononcé...

La porte du fond se rouvre. Entre une duègne, vieille, cheveux gris; basquine et mantille noires, éventail.

Scène IV - Don César, une duègne.

La Duègne, sur le seuil de la porte.
Don César De Bazan?
Don César, absorbé dans ses méditations, relève brusquement la tête.
Don César.
Pour le coup!
À part.
Oh! Femelle!
Pendant que la duègne accomplit une profonde révérence au fond, il vient stupéfait sur le devant.
Mais il faut que le diable ou Salluste s'en mêle!
Gageons que je vais voir arriver mon cousin.
Une duègne!
Haut.
C'est moi, don César. – quel dessein? ...
à part.
D'ordinaire une vieille en annonce une jeune.
La Duègne. (révérence avec un signe de croix.)
Seigneur, je vous salue, aujourd'hui jour de jeûne,
En Jésus Dieu le fils, sur qui rien ne prévaut.
Don César, à part.
À galant dénouement commencement dévot.
Haut.
Ainsi soit-il! Bonjour.
La Duègne.
Dieu vous maintienne en joie!
Mystérieusement.
Avez-vous à quelqu'un, qui jusqu'à vous m'envoie,
Donné pour cette nuit un rendez-vous secret?
Don César.
Mais j'en suis fort capable.
La Duègne. Elle tire de son garde-infante un billet plié et le lui présente, mais sans le lui laisser prendre.
Ainsi, mon beau discret,
C'est bien vous qui venez, et pour cette nuit même,

D’adresser ce message à quelqu’un qui vous aime,
Et que vous savez bien?
Don César.
Ce doit être moi.
La Duègne.
Bon.
La dame, mariée à quelque vieux barbon,
À des ménagements sans doute est obligée,
Et de me renseigner céans on m’a chargée.
Je ne la connais pas, mais vous la connaissez.
La soubrette m’a dit les choses. C’est assez,
Sans les noms.
Don César.
Hors le mien.
La Duègne.
C’est tout simple. Une dame
Reçoit un rendez-vous de l’ami de son âme,
Mais on craint de tomber dans quelque piège, mais
Trop de précautions ne gâtent rien jamais.
Bref, ici l’on m’envoie avoir de votre bouche
La confirmation...
Don César.
Oh! La vieille farouche!
Vrai Dieu! Quelle broussaille autour d’un billet doux!
Oui, c’est moi, moi, te dis-je!
La Duègne. Elle pose sur la table le billet plié, que don César examine avec curiosité.
En ce cas, si c’est vous,
Vous écrirez: Venez, au dos de cette lettre.
Mais pas de votre main, pour ne rien compromettre.
Don César.
Peste! Au fait, de ma main!
À part.
Message bien rempli!
Il tend la main pour prendre la lettre; mais elle est recachetée, et la duègne ne la lui laisse pas toucher.
La Duègne.

N’ouvrez pas. Vous devez reconnaître le pli.
Don César.
Pardieu!

À part.

Moi qui brûlais de voir! ... Jouons mon rôle!

Il agite la sonnette. Entre un des noirs.

Tu sais écrire?

Le noir fait un signe de tête affirmatif. Étonnement de don César.

À part.

Un signe!

Haut.

Es-tu muet, mon drôle?

Le noir fait un nouveau signe d’affirmation. Nouvelle stupéfaction de don César.

À part.

Fort bien! Continuez! Des muets présent!

Au muet, en lui montrant la lettre, que la vieille tient appliquée sur la table.

– Écris-moi là: Venez.

Le muet écrit. Don César fait signe à la duègne de reprendre la lettre, et au muet de sortir. Le muet sort.

À part.

Il est obéissant!

La Duègne, remettant d’un air mystérieux le billet dans son garde-infante, et se rapprochant de don César.

Vous la verrez ce soir. Est-elle bien jolie?
Don César.
Charmante!
La Duègne.
La suivante est d’abord accomplie.
Elle m’a pris à part au milieu du sermon.
Mais belle! Un profil d’ange avec l’oeil d’un démon.
Puis aux choses d’amour elle paraît savante.
Don César, à part.
Je me contenterais fort bien de la servante.
La Duègne.
Nous jugeons, – car toujours le beau fait peur au laid, –

La sultane à l’esclave et le maître au valet.
La vôtre est, à coup sûr, fort belle.
Don César.
Je m’en flatte!
La Duègne, faisant une révérence pour se retirer.
Je vous baise la main.
Don César, lui donnant une poignée de doublons.
Je te graisse la patte.
Tiens, vieille!
La Duègne, empochant.
La jeunesse est gaie aujourd’hui!
Don César, la congédiant.
Va.
La Duègne. (révérences.)
Si vous aviez besoin... j’ai nom dame Oliva.
Couvent San-Isidoro. –
Elle sort. Puis la porte se rouvre, et l’on voit sa tête reparaître.
Toujours droite assise
Au troisième pilier en entrant dans l’église.
Don César se retourne avec impatience. La porte retombe; puis elle se rouvre encore, et la vieille reparaît.
Vous la verrez ce soir! Monsieur, pensez à moi
Dans vos prières.
Don César, la chassant avec colère.
Ah!
La duègne disparaît. La porte se referme.
Don César, seul.
Je me résous, ma foi,
À ne plus m’étonner. J’habite dans la lune.
Me voici maintenant une bonne fortune;
Et je vais contenter mon coeur après ma faim.
Rêvant.
Tout cela me paraît bien beau. – gare la fin.
La porte du fond se rouvre. Paraît don Guritan avec deux longues épées nues sous le bras.

Scène V - Don César, don Guritan.

Don Guritan, du fond.
Don César De Bazan?
Don César.
Il se retourne et aperçoit don Guritan et les deux épées.
Enfin! À la bonne heure!
L’aventure était bonne, elle devient meilleure.
Bon dîner, de l’argent, un rendez-vous, – un duel!
Je redeviens César à l’état naturel!
Il aborde gaiement, avec force salutations empressées, don Guritan, qui fixe sur lui un oeil inquiétant et s’avance d’un pas roide sur le devant.
C’est ici, cher seigneur. Veuillez prendre la peine il lui présente un fauteuil. Don Guritan reste debout.
D’entrer, de vous asseoir. – comme chez vous, – sans gêne.
Enchanté de vous voir. Çà, causons un moment.
Que fait-on à Madrid? Ah! Quel séjour charmant!
Moi, je ne sais plus rien; je pense qu’on admire
Toujours Matalobos et toujours Lindamire.
Pour moi, je craindrais plus, comme péril urgent,
La voleuse de coeurs que le voleur d’argent.
Oh! Les femmes, monsieur! Cette engeance endiablée
Me tient, et j’ai la tête à leur endroit fêlée.
Parlez, remettez-moi l’esprit en bon chemin.
Je ne suis plus vivant, je n’ai plus rien d’humain,
Je suis un être absurde, un mort qui se réveille,
Un boeuf, un hidalgo de la Castille-vieille.
On m’a volé ma plume et j’ai perdu mes gants.
J’arrive des pays les plus extravagants.
Don Guritan.
Vous arrivez, mon cher monsieur? Eh bien, j’arrive
Encor bien plus que vous!
Don César, épanoui.
De quelle illustre rive?
Don Guritan.

De là-bas, dans le nord.
Don César.
        Et moi, de tout là-bas,
Dans le midi.
Don Guritan.
      Je suis furieux!
Don César.
        N’est-ce pas?
Moi, je suis enragé!
Don Guritan.
      J’ai fait douze cents lieues!
Don César.
Moi, deux mille! J’ai vu des femmes jaunes, bleues,
Noires, vertes. J’ai vu des lieux du ciel bénis,
Alger, la ville heureuse, et l’aimable Tunis,
Où l’on voit, tant ces turcs ont des façons accortes,
Force gens empalés accrochés sur les portes.
Don Guritan.
On m’a joué, monsieur!
Don César.
      Et moi, l’on m’a vendu!
Don Guritan.
L’on m’a presque exilé!
Don César.
      L’on m’a presque pendu!
Don Guritan.
On m’envoie à Neubourg, d’une manière adroite,
Porter ces quatre mots écrits dans une boîte:
“ Gardez le plus longtemps possible ce vieux fou. “
Don César, éclatant de rire.
Parfait! Qui donc cela?
Don Guritan.
        Mais je tordrai le cou
À César De Bazan!
Don César, gravement.
        Ah!
Don Guritan.

Pour comble d’audace,
Tout à l’heure il m’envoie un laquais à sa place.
Pour l’excuser! dit-il. Un dresseur de buffet!
Je n’ai point voulu voir le valet. Je l’ai fait
Chez moi mettre en prison, et je viens chez le maître.
Ce César De Bazan! Cet impudent! Ce traître!
Voyons, que je le tue! Où donc est-il?
Don César, toujours avec gravité.
C’est moi.
Don Guritan.
Vous! – raillez-vous, monsieur?
Don César.
Je suis don César.
Don Guritan.
Quoi!
Encor!
Don César.
Sans doute, encor!
Don Guritan.
Mon cher, quittez ce rôle.
Vous m’ennuyez beaucoup si vous vous croyez drôle.
Don César.
Vous, vous m’amusez fort et vous m’avez tout l’air
D’un jaloux. Je vous plains énormément, mon cher.
Car le mal qui nous vient des vices qui sont nôtres
Est pire que le mal que nous font ceux des autres.
J’aimerais mieux encore, et je le dis à vous,
Être pauvre qu’avare et cocu que jaloux.
Vous êtes l’un et l’autre, au reste. Sur mon âme,
J’attends encor ce soir madame votre femme.
Don Guritan.
Ma femme!
Don César.
Oui, votre femme!
Don Guritan.
Allons! Je ne suis pas
Marié.

Don César.
Vous venez faire cet embarras!
Point marié! Monsieur prend depuis un quart d’heure
L’air d’un mari qui hurle ou d’un tigre qui pleure,
Si bien que je lui donne, avec simplicité,
Un tas de bons conseils en cette qualité!
Mais, si vous n’êtes pas marié, par Hercule!
De quel droit êtes-vous à ce point ridicule?
Don Guritan.
Savez-vous bien, monsieur, que vous m’exaspérez?
Don César.
Bah!
Don Guritan
Que c’est trop fort!
Don César.
Vrai?
Don Guritan.
Que vous me le paierez!
Don César.
Il examine d’un air goguenard les souliers de don Guritan, qui disparaissent sous des flots de rubans, selon la nouvelle mode.
Jadis on se mettait des rubans sur la tête.
Aujourd’hui, je le vois, c’est une mode honnête,
On en met sur sa botte, on se coiffe les pieds.
C’est charmant!
Don Guritan.
Nous allons nous battre!
Don César, impassible.
Vous croyez?
Don Guritan.
Vous n’êtes pas César, la chose me regarde;
Mais je vais commencer par vous.
Don César.
Bon. Prenez garde
De finir par moi.
Don Guritan.
Il lui présente une des deux épées.

Fat! Sur-le-champ!
Don César, prenant l’épée.
De ce pas.
Quand je tiens un bon duel, je ne le lâche pas!
Don Guritan.
Où?
Don César.
Derrière le mur. Cette rue est déserte.
Don Guritan, essayant la pointe de l’épée sur le parquet.
Pour César, je le tue ensuite!
Don César.
Vraiment?
Don Guritan.
Certe!
Don César, faisant aussi ployer son épée.
Bah! L’un de nous deux mort, je vous défie après
De tuer don César.
Don Guritan.
Sortons!

Ils sortent. On entend le bruit de leurs pas qui s’éloignent. Une petite porte masquée s’ouvre à droite dans le mur, et donne passage à don Salluste.

Scène VI - Don Salluste

Don Salluste, vêtu d’un habit vert sombre, presque noir.
Il paraît soucieux et préoccupé. Il regarde et écoute avec inquiétude.
Aucuns apprêts!
Apercevant la table chargée de mets.
Que veut dire ceci?
Écoutant le bruit des pas de César et de Guritan.
Quel est donc ce tapage?
Il se promène rêveur.
Gudiel ce matin a vu sortir le page,
Et l’a suivi. – Le page allait chez Guritan. –
Je ne vois pas Ruy Blas. – Et ce page... – Satan!
C’est quelque contre-mine! Oui, quelque avis fidèle
Dont il aura chargé don Guritan pour elle!
– On ne peut rien savoir des muets! – C’est cela!
Je n’avais pas prévu ce don Guritan-là!
Rentre don César. Il tient à la main l’épée nue, qu’il jette en entrant sur un fauteuil.

Scène VII - Don Salluste, don César.

Don César, du seuil de la porte.
Ah! J’en étais bien sûr! Vous voilà donc, vieux diable!
Don Salluste, se retournant, pétrifié.
Don César!
Don César, croisant les bras avec un grand éclat de rire.
Vous tramez quelque histoire effroyable!
Mais je dérange tout, pas vrai, dans ce moment?
Je viens au beau milieu m’épater lourdement!
Don Salluste, à part.
Tout est perdu!
Don César, riant.
Depuis toute la matinée,
Je patauge à travers vos toiles d’araignée.
Aucun de vos projets ne doit être debout.
Je m’y vautre au hasard. Je vous démolis tout.
C’est très réjouissant.
Don Salluste, à part.
Démon! Qu’a-t-il pu faire?
Don César, riant de plus en plus fort.
Votre homme au sac d’argent, – qui venait pour l’affaire!
– Pour ce que vous savez! – qui vous savez! –
Il rit.
Parfait!
Don Salluste.
Eh bien?
Don César.
Je l’ai soûlé.
Don Salluste.
Mais l’argent qu’il avait?
Don César, majestueusement.
J’en ai fait des cadeaux à diverses personnes.
Dame! On a des amis.
Don Salluste.
À tort tu me soupçonnes...

Je...
Don César, faisant sonner ses grègues.
J’ai d’abord rempli mes poches, vous pensez.
Il se remet à rire.
Vous savez bien? La dame! ...
Don Salluste.
Oh!
Don César, qui remarque son anxiété.
Que vous connaissez, –
don Salluste écoute avec un redoublement d’angoisse.
Don César poursuit en riant.
Qui m’envoie une duègne, affreuse compagnonne,
Dont la barbe fleurit et dont le nez trognonne...
Don Salluste.
Pourquoi?
Don César.
Pour demander, par prudence et sans bruit,
Si c’est bien don César qui l’attend cette nuit...
Don Salluste.
À part.
Ciel!
Haut.
Qu’as-tu répondu?
Don César
J’ai dit que oui, mon maître!
Que je l’attendais!
Don Salluste à part
Tout n’est pas perdu peut-être
Don César
Enfin votre tueur, votre grand capitan,
Qui m’a dit sur le pré s’appeler – Guritan,
Mouvement de Don Salluste
Qui ce matin n’a pas voulu voir, l’homme sage,
Un laquais de César lui portant un message,
Et qui venait céans m’en demander raison...
Don Salluste
Eh bien, qu’en as-tu fait?

César.
J’ai tué cet oison.
Don Salluste.
Vrai?
Don César.
Vrai. Là, sous le mur, à cette heure il expire.
Don Salluste.
Es-tu sûr qu’il soit mort?
Don César.
J’en ai peur.
Don Salluste, à part.
Je respire!
Allons! Bonté du ciel! Il n’a rien dérangé!
Au contraire. Pourtant donnons-lui son congé.
Débarrassons-nous-en! Quel rude auxiliaire!
Pour l’argent, ce n’est rien.
Haut.
L’histoire est singulière.
Et vous n’avez pas vu d’autres personnes?
Don César.
Non.
Mais j’en verrai. Je veux continuer. Mon nom,
Je compte en faire éclat tout travers la ville.
Je vais faire un scandale affreux. Soyez tranquille.
Don Salluste.
À part.
Diable!
Vivement et se rapprochant de don César.
Garde l’argent, mais quitte la maison.
Don César.
Oui! Vous me feriez suivre! On sait votre façon.
Puis je retournerais, aimable destinée,
Contempler ton azur, ô Méditerranée!
Point.
Don Salluste.
Crois-moi.
Don César.

Non. D’ailleurs, dans ce palais-prison,
Je sens quelqu’un en proie à votre trahison.
Toute intrigue de cour est une échelle double.
D’un côté, bras liés, morne et le regard trouble,
Monte le patient; de l’autre, le bourreau.
– Or vous êtes bourreau– nécessairement.
Don Salluste.
Oh!
Don César.
Moi! Je tire l’échelle, et patatras
Don Salluste.
Je jure...
Don César.
Je veux, pour tout gâter, rester dans l’aventure.
Je vous sais assez fort, cousin, assez subtil,
Pour pendre deux ou trois pantins au même fil.
Tiens, j’en suis un! Je reste!
Don Salluste.
Écoute...
Don César.
Rhétorique!
Ah! Vous me faites vendre aux pirates d’Afrique!
Ah! Vous me fabriquez ici des faux César!
Ah! Vous compromettez mon nom!
Don Salluste.
Hasard!
Don César.
Hasard?
Mets que font les fripons pour les sots qui le mangent.
Point de hasard! Tant pis si vos plans se dérangent!
Mais je prétends sauver ceux qu’ici vous perdez.
Je vais crier mon nom sur les toits.
Il monte sur l’appui de la fenêtre et regarde au dehors.
Attendez!
Juste! Des alguazils passent sous la fenêtre.
Il passe son bras à travers les barreaux, et l’agite en criant.
Holà!

Don Salluste, effaré, sur le devant du théâtre.

À part.

Tout est perdu s’il se fait reconnaître!

Entrent les alguazils précédés d’un alcade. Don Salluste paraît en proie à une vive perplexité. Don César va vers l’alcade d’un air de triomphe.

Scène VIII - Les mêmes, un alcade, des alguazils.

Don César, à l'alcade.
Vous allez consigner dans vos procès-verbaux...
Don Salluste, montrant don César à l'alcade.
Que voici le fameux voleur Matalobos!
Don César, stupéfait.
Comment!
Don Salluste, à part.
Je gagne tout en gagnant vingt-quatre heures.
À l'alcade.
Cet homme ose en plein jour entrer dans les demeures.
Saisissez ce voleur.
Les alguazils saisissent don César au collet.
Don César, furieux, à don Salluste.
Je suis votre valet,
Vous mentez hardiment!
L'Alcade.
Qui donc nous appelait?
Don Salluste.
C'est moi.
Don César.
Pardieu! C'est fort!
L'Alcade.
Paix! Je crois qu'il raisonne.
Don César.
Mais je suis don César De Bazan en personne!
Don Salluste.
Don César? – Regardez son manteau, s'il vous plaît.
Vous trouverez SALLUSTE écrit sous le collet.
C'est un manteau qu'il vient de me voler.
Les alguazils arrachent le manteau, l'alcade l'examine.
L'Alcade.
C'est juste.
Don Salluste.
Et le pourpoint qu'il porte...

Don César, à part.

Oh! Le damné Salluste!

Don Salluste, continuant.

Il est au comte d’Albe, auquel il fut volé... –

Montrant un écusson brodé sur le parement de la manche gauche.

Dont voici le blason!

Don César, à part.

Il est ensorcelé!

L’Alcade, examinant le blason.

Oui, les deux châteaux d’or...

Don Salluste.

Et puis, les deux chaudières.

Enriquez et Gusman.

En se débattant, don César fait tomber quelques doublons de ses poches.

Don Salluste montre à l’alcade la façon dont elles sont remplies.

Sont-ce là les manières
Dont les honnêtes gens portent l’argent qu’ils ont?

L’Alcade, hochant la tête.

Hum!

Don César, à part.

Je suis pris!

Les alguazils le fouillent et lui prennent son argent.

Un Alguazil, fouillant.

Voilà des papiers.

Don César, à part.

Ils y sont!
Oh! Pauvres billets doux sauvés dans mes traverses!

L’Alcade, examinant les papiers.

Des lettres... qu’est cela? – d’écritures diverses? ...

Don Salluste, lui faisant remarquer les suscriptions.

Toutes au comte d’Albe!

L’Alcade.

Oui.

Don César.

Mais...

Les Alguazils, lui liant les mains.

Pris! Quel bonheur!
Un Alguazil, entrant, à l’alcade.
Un homme est là qu’on vient d’assassiner, seigneur.
L’Alcade.
Quel est l’assassin?
Don Salluste, montrant don César.
Lui!
Don César, à part.
Ce duel! Quelle équipée!
Don Salluste.
En entrant, il tenait à la main une épée.
La voilà.
L’Alcade, examinant l’épée.
Du sang. – bien.
À don César.
Allons, marche avec eux!
Don Salluste, à don César, que les alguazils emmènent.
Bonsoir, Matalobos.
Don César, faisant un pas vers lui et le regardant fixement.
Vous êtes un fier gueux!

ACTE V

LE TIGRE ET LE LION

Même chambre. C’est la nuit. Une lampe est posée sur la table.
Au lever du rideau, Ruy Blas est seul. Une sorte de longue robe noire cache ses vêtements.

Scène première – Ruy Blas, seul.

C’est fini. Rêve éteint! Visions disparues!
Jusqu’au soir au hasard j’ai marché dans les rues.
J’espère en ce moment. Je suis calme. La nuit,
On pense mieux, la tête est moins pleine de bruit.
Rien de trop effrayant sur ces murailles noires;
Les meubles sont rangés; les clefs sont aux armoires;
Les muets sont là-haut qui dorment; la maison
Est vraiment bien tranquille. Oh! Oui, pas de raison D’alarme. Tout va bien. Mon page est très fidèle.
Don Guritan est sûr alors qu’il s’agit d’elle.
Ô mon Dieu! N’est-ce pas que je puis vous bénir,
Que vous avez laissé l’avis lui parvenir,
Que vous m’avez aidé, vous, Dieu bon, vous, Dieu juste,
À protéger cet ange, à déjouer Salluste,
Qu’elle n’a rien à craindre, hélas, rien à souffrir,
Et qu’elle est bien sauvée, – et que je puis mourir?
Il tire de sa poitrine une fiole qu’il pose sur la table.
Oui, meurs maintenant, lâche! Et tombe dans l’abîme!
Meurs comme on doit mourir quand on expie un crime!
Meurs dans cette maison, vil, misérable et seul!

Il écarte sa robe noire, sous laquelle on entrevoit la livrée qu’il portait au premier acte.

Meurs avec ta livrée enfin sous ton linceul!
– Dieu! Si ce démon vient voir sa victime morte,

Il pousse un meuble de façon à barricader la porte secrète.

Qu’il n’entre pas du moins par cette horrible porte!

Il revient vers la table.

– Oh! Le page a trouvé Guritan, c’est certain,
Il n’était pas encor huit heures du matin.

Il fixe son regard sur la fiole.

– Pour moi, j’ai prononcé mon arrêt, et j’apprête
Mon supplice, et je vais moi-même sur ma tête
Faire choir du tombeau le couvercle pesant.
J’ai du moins le plaisir de penser qu’à présent

Personne n'y peut rien. Ma chute est sans remède.
Tombant sur le fauteuil.
Elle m'aimait pourtant! – que Dieu me soit en aide!
Je n'ai pas de courage!
Il pleure.
Oh! L'on aurait bien dû
Nous laisser en paix!
Il cache sa tête dans ses mains et pleure à sanglots.
Dieu!
Relevant la tête et comme égaré, regardant la fiole.
L'homme, qui m'a vendu
Ceci, me demandait quel jour du mois nous sommes.
Je ne sais pas. J'ai mal dans la tête. Les hommes
Sont méchants. Vous mourez, personne ne s'émeut.
Je souffre! – elle m'aimait! – et dire qu'on ne peut
Jamais rien ressaisir d'une chose passée! –
Je ne la verrai plus! – sa main que j'ai pressée,
Sa bouche qui toucha mon front... – ange adoré!
Pauvre ange! – il faut mourir, mourir désespéré!
Sa robe où tous les plis contenaient de la grâce,
Son pied qui fait trembler mon âme quand il passe,
Son oeil où s'enivraient mes yeux irrésolus,
Son sourire, sa voix... – je ne la verrai plus!
Je ne l'entendrai plus! – enfin c'est donc possible?
Jamais!

Il avance avec angoisse sa main vers la fiole; au moment où il la saisit convulsivement, la porte du fond s'ouvre. La reine paraît, vêtue de blanc, avec une mante de couleur sombre, dont le capuchon, rejeté sur ses épaules, laisse voir sa tête pâle. Elle tient une lanterne sourde à la main, elle la pose à terre, et marche rapidement vers Ruy Blas.

Scène II - Ruy Blas, la Reine.

La Reine, entrant.
Don César!
Ruy Blas, se retournant avec un mouvement d'épouvante, et fermant précipitamment la robe qui cache sa livrée.
Dieu! C'est elle! – au piège horrible
Elle est prise!
Haut.
Madame! ...
La Reine.
Eh bien! Quel cri d'effroi!
César...
Ruy Blas.
Qui vous a dit de venir ici?
La Reine.
Toi.
Ruy Blas.
Moi? – comment?
La Reine.
J'ai reçu de vous...
Ruy Blas, haletant.
Parlez donc vite!
La Reine
Une lettre.
Ruy Blas.
De moi!
La Reine.
De votre main écrite.
Ruy Blas.
Mais c'est à se briser le front contre le mur!
Mais je n'ai pas écrit, pardieu, j'en suis bien sûr!
La Reine, tirant de sa poitrine un billet qu'elle lui présente.
Lisez donc.
Ruy Blas prend la lettre avec emportement, et se penche vers la lampe et lit.
Ruy Blas, lisant.

” Un danger terrible est sur ma tête.
“ Ma reine seule peut conjurer la tempête...
Il regarde la lettre avec stupeur, comme ne pouvant aller plus loin.
La Reine, continuant, et lui montrant du doigt la ligne qu’elle lit.
“ En venant me trouver ce soir dans ma maison.
“ Sinon, je suis perdu. “
Ruy Blas, d’une voix éteinte.
Ho! Quelle trahison!
Ce billet!
La Reine, continuant de lire.
“ Par la porte au bas de l’avenue,
“ Vous entrerez la nuit sans être reconnue.
“ Quelqu’un de dévoué vous ouvrira. “
Ruy Blas, à part.
J’avais
Oublié ce billet.
À la reine, d’une voix terrible.
Allez-vous-en!
La Reine.
Je vais
M’en aller, don César. Ô mon Dieu! Que vous êtes
Méchant! Qu’ai-je donc fait?
Ruy Blas.
Ô ciel! Ce que vous faites?
Vous vous perdez!
La Reine.
Comment?
Ruy Blas.
Je ne puis l’expliquer.
Fuyez vite.
La Reine.
J’ai même, et pour ne rien manquer,
Eu le soin d’envoyer ce matin une duègne...
Ruy Blas.
Dieu! – mais, à chaque instant, comme d’un coeur qui saigne,
Je sens que votre vie à flots coule et s’en va.
Partez!

La Reine, comme frappée d’une idée subite.
Le dévouement que mon amour rêva
M’inspire. Vous touchez à quelque instant funeste.
Vous voulez m’écarter de vos dangers! – Je reste.
Ruy Blas.
Ah! Voilà, par exemple, une idée! Ô mon Dieu!
Rester à pareille heure et dans un pareil lieu!
La Reine.
La lettre est bien de vous. Ainsi...
Ruy Blas, levant les bras au ciel de désespoir.
Bonté divine!
La Reine.
Vous voulez m’éloigner.
Ruy Blas, lui prenant les mains.
Comprenez!
La Reine.
Je devine.
Dans le premier moment vous m’écrivez, et puis...
Ruy Blas.
Je ne t’ai pas écrit. Je suis un démon. Fuis!
Mais c’est toi, pauvre enfant, qui te prends dans un piège!
Mais c’est vrai! Mais l’enfer de tous côtés t’assiège!
Pour te persuader je ne trouve donc rien?
Écoute, comprends donc, je t’aime, tu sais bien.
Pour sauver ton esprit de ce qu’il imagine,
Je voudrais arracher mon coeur de ma poitrine!
Oh! Je t’aime. Va-t’en!
La Reine.
Don César...
Ruy Blas.
Oh! Va-t’en!
– Mais, j’y songe, on a dû t’ouvrir?
La Reine.
Mais oui.
Ruy Blas.
Satan!
Qui?

La Reine.

Quelqu’un de masqué, caché par la muraille.

Ruy Blas.

Masqué! Qu’a dit cet homme? Est-il de haute taille?
Cet homme, quel est-il? Mais parle donc! J’attends!

Un homme en noir et masqué paraît à la porte du fond.

L’Homme Masqué.

C’est moi!

Il ôte son masque. C’est don Salluste. La reine et Ruy Blas le reconnaissent avec terreur.

Scène III - Les mêmes, don Salluste.

Ruy Blas.
Grand Dieu! Fuyez, madame!
Don Salluste.
Il n'est plus temps.
Madame De Neubourg n'est plus reine d'Espagne.
La Reine, avec horreur.
Don Salluste!
Don Salluste, montrant Ruy Blas.
À jamais vous êtes la compagne
De cet homme.
La Reine.
Grand Dieu! C'est un piège, en effet!
Et don César...
Ruy Blas, désespéré.
Madame, hélas! Qu'avez-vous fait?
Don Salluste, s'avançant à pas lents vers la reine.
Je vous tiens. – Mais je vais parler, sans lui déplaire,
À votre majesté, car je suis sans colère.
Je vous trouve, – écoutez, ne faisons pas de bruit, –
Seule avec don César, dans sa chambre, à minuit.
Ce fait, – pour une reine, – étant public, – en somme,
Suffit pour annuler le mariage à Rome.
Le Saint-Père en serait informé promptement.
Mais on supplée au fait par le consentement.
Tout peut rester secret.
Il tire de sa poche un parchemin qu'il déroule et qu'il présente à la reine.
Signez-moi cette lettre
Au seigneur notre roi. Je la ferai remettre
Par le grand écuyer au notaire mayor.
Ensuite, – une voiture, où j'ai mis beaucoup d'or,
Désignant le dehors.

Est là. – partez tous deux sur-le-champ. Je vous aide.
Sans être inquiétés, vous pourrez par Tolède
Et par Alcantara gagner le Portugal.
Allez où vous voudrez, cela nous est égal.
Nous fermerons les yeux. – obéissez. Je jure
Que seul en ce moment je connais l'aventure;
Mais, si vous refusez, Madrid sait tout demain.
Ne nous emportons pas. Vous êtes dans ma main.
Montrant la table, sur laquelle il y a une écritoire.
Voilà tout ce qu'il faut pour écrire, madame.
La Reine, atterrée, tombant sur le fauteuil.
Je suis en son pouvoir!
Don Salluste.
De vous je ne réclame
Que ce consentement pour le porter au roi.
Bas Ruy Blas, qui écoute tout, immobile et comme frappé de la foudre.
Laisse-moi faire, ami, je travaille pour toi.
À la reine.
Signez.
La Reine, tremblante, à part.
Que faire?
Don Salluste, se penchant à son oreille et lui présentant une plume.
Allons! Qu'est-ce qu'une couronne?
Vous gagnez le bonheur, si vous perdez le trône.
Tous mes gens sont restés dehors. On ne sait rien
De ceci. Tout se passe entre nous trois.
Essayant de lui mettre la plume entre les doigts sans qu'elle la repousse ni la prenne.
Eh bien?
La reine, indécise et égarée, le regarde avec angoisse.
Si vous ne signez point, vous vous frappez vous-même.
Le scandale et le cloître!
La Reine, accablée.
Ô Dieu!
Don Salluste, montrant Ruy Blas.
César vous aime.
Il est digne de vous. Il est, sur mon honneur,

De fort grande maison. Presque un prince. Un seigneur
Ayant donjon sur roche et fief dans la campagne.
Il est duc d'Olmedo, Bazan, et grand d'Espagne...

Il pousse sur le parchemin la main de la reine éperdue et tremblante, et qui semble prête à signer.

Ruy Blas, comme se réveillant tout à coup.
Je m'appelle Ruy Blas, et je suis un laquais!

Arrachant des mains de la reine la plume, et le parchemin qu'il déchire.

Ne signez pas, madame! – enfin! – je suffoquais!

La Reine.
Que dit-il? Don César!

Ruy Blas, laissant tomber sa robe et se montrant vêtu de la livrée; sans épée.
Je dis que je me nomme
Ruy Blas, et que je suis le valet de cet homme!

Se retournant vers don Salluste.

Je dis que c'est assez de trahison ainsi,
Et que je ne veux pas de mon bonheur! – merci!
– Ah! Vous avez eu beau me parler à l'oreille! –
Je dis qu'il est bien temps qu'enfin je me réveille,
Quoique tout garrotté dans vos complots hideux,
Et que je n'irai pas plus loin, et qu'à nous deux,
Monseigneur, nous faisons un assemblage infâme.
J'ai l'habit d'un laquais, et vous en avez l'âme!

Don Salluste, à la reine, froidement.
Cet homme est en effet mon valet.

À Ruy Blas avec autorité.

Plus un mot.

La Reine, laissant enfin échapper un cri de désespoir et se tordant les mains.
Juste ciel!

Don Salluste, poursuivant.
Seulement il a parlé trop tôt.

Il croise les bras et se redresse, avec une voix tonnante.

Eh bien, oui! Maintenant disons tout. Il n'importe!
Ma vengeance est assez complète de la sorte.

À la reine.

Qu’en pensez-vous? – Madrid va rire, sur ma foi!
Ah! Vous m’avez cassé! Je vous détrône, moi.
Ah! Vous m’avez banni! Je vous chasse, et m’en vante!
Ah! Vous m’avez pour femme offert votre suivante!
Il éclate de rire.
Moi, je vous ai donné mon laquais pour amant.
Vous pourrez l’épouser aussi! Certainement.
Le roi s’en va! – son coeur sera votre richesse,
Il rit.
Et vous l’aurez fait duc afin d’être duchesse!
Grinçant des dents.
Ah! Vous m’avez brisé, flétri, mis sous vos pieds,
Et vous dormiez en paix, folle que vous étiez!

Pendant qu’il a parlé, Ruy Blas est allé à la porte du fond et en a poussé le verrou, puis il s’est approché de lui sans qu’il s’en soit aperçu, par derrière, à pas lents. Au moment où don Salluste achève, fixant des yeux pleins de haine et de triomphe sur la reine anéantie, Ruy Blas saisit l’épée du marquis par la poignée et la tire vivement.

Ruy Blas, terrible, l’épée de don Salluste à la main.
Je crois que vous venez d’insulter votre reine!
Don Salluste se précipite vers la porte.
Ruy Blas la lui barre.
– Oh! N’allez point par là, ce n’en est pas la peine,
J’ai poussé le verrou depuis longtemps déjà. –
Marquis, jusqu’à ce jour Satan te protégea,
Mais, s’il veut t’arracher de mes mains, qu’il se montre.
– À mon tour! – On écrase un serpent qu’on rencontre.
– Personne n’entrera, ni tes gens, ni l’enfer!
Je te tiens écumant sous mon talon de fer!
– Cet homme vous parlait insolemment, madame?
Je vais vous expliquer. Cet homme n’a point d’âme,
C’est un monstre. En riant hier il m’étouffait.
Il m’a broyé le coeur à plaisir. Il m’a fait
Fermer une fenêtre, et j’étais au martyre!
Je priais! Je pleurais! Je ne peux pas vous dire.
Au marquis.
Vous contiez vos griefs dans ces derniers moments.

Je ne répondrai pas à vos raisonnements,
Et d’ailleurs– je n’ai pas compris. – ah! Misérable!
Vous osez, – votre reine, une femme adorable!
Vous osez l’outrager quand je suis là! – Tenez,
Pour un homme d’esprit, vraiment, vous m’étonnez!
Et vous vous figurez que je vous verrai faire
Sans rien dire! – écoutez, quelle que soit sa sphère,
Monseigneur, lorsqu’un traître, un fourbe tortueux,
Commet de certains faits rares et monstrueux,
Noble ou manant, tout homme a droit, sur son passage,
De venir lui cracher sa sentence au visage,
Et de prendre une épée, une hache, un couteau! ... –
Pardieu! J’étais laquais! Quand je serais bourreau?
La Reine.
Vous n’allez pas frapper cet homme?
Ruy Blas.
Je me blâme
D’accomplir devant vous ma fonction, madame,
Mais il faut étouffer cette affaire en ce lieu.
Il pousse don Salluste vers le cabinet.
– C’est dit, monsieur! Allez là dedans prier Dieu!
Don Salluste.
C’est un assassinat!
Ruy Blas.
Crois-tu?
Don Salluste, désarmé, et jetant un regard plein de rage autour de lui.
Sur ces murailles
Rien! Pas d’arme!
À Ruy Blas.
Une épée au moins!
Ruy Blas.
Marquis! Tu railles!
Maître! Est-ce que je suis un gentilhomme, moi?
Un duel! Fi donc! Je suis un de tes gens à toi,
Valetaille de rouge et de galons vêtue,
Un maraud qu’on châtie et qu’on fouette, – et qui tue!
Oui, je vais te tuer, monseigneur, vois-tu bien?

Comme un infâme! Comme un lâche! Comme un chien!
La Reine.
Grâce pour lui!
Ruy Blas, à la reine, saisissant le marquis.
      Madame, ici chacun se venge.
Le démon ne peut plus être sauvé par l’ange!
La Reine, à genoux.
Grâce!
Don Salluste, appelant.
      Au meurtre! Au secours!
Ruy Blas, levant l’épée.
        As-tu bientôt fini?
Don Salluste, se jetant sur lui en criant.
Je meurs assassiné! Démon!
Ruy Blas, le poussant dans le cabinet.
        Tu meurs puni!
      Ils disparaissent dans le cabinet, dont la porte se referme sur eux.
La Reine, restée seule, tombant demi-morte sur le fauteuil.
Ciel!
      Un moment de silence. Rentre Ruy Blas, pâle, sans épée.

Scène IV - La reine, Ruy Blas.

Ruy Blas fait quelques pas en chancelant vers la reine immobile et glacée, puis il tombe à deux genoux, l’oeil fixé à terre, comme s’il n’osait lever les yeux jusqu’à elle.

Ruy Blas, d’une voix grave et basse.
Maintenant, madame, il faut que je vous dise.
– Je n’approcherai pas. – Je parle avec franchise.
Je ne suis point coupable autant que vous croyez.
Je sens, ma trahison, comme vous la voyez,
Doit vous paraître horrible. Oh! Ce n’est pas facile
À raconter. Pourtant je n’ai pas l’âme vile,
Je suis honnête au fond. – cet amour m’a perdu. –
Je ne me défends pas; je sais bien, j’aurais dû
Trouver quelque moyen. La faute est consommée!
– C’est égal, voyez-vous, je vous ai bien aimée.
La Reine.
Monsieur...
Ruy Blas, toujours à genoux.
      N’ayez pas peur. Je n’approcherai point.
À votre majesté je vais de point en point
Tout dire. Oh! Croyez-moi, je n’ai pas l’âme vile! –
Aujourd’hui tout le jour j’ai couru par la ville
Comme un fou. Bien souvent même on m’a regardé.
Auprès de l’hôpital que vous avez fondé,
J’ai senti vaguement, à travers mon délire,
Une femme du peuple essuyer sans rien dire
Les gouttes de sueur qui tombaient de mon front.
Ayez pitié de moi, mon Dieu! Mon coeur se rompt!
La Reine.
Que voulez-vous?
Ruy Blas, joignant les mains.
      Que vous me pardonniez, madame!
La Reine.
Jamais.
Ruy Blas.

Jamais!
Il se lève et marche lentement vers la table.
Bien sûr?
La Reine.
Non, jamais!
Ruy Blas.
Il prend la fiole posée sur la table, la porte à ses lèvres et la vide d'un trait.
Triste flamme,
Éteins-toi!
La Reine, se levant et courant à lui.
Que fait-il?
Ruy Blas, posant la fiole.
Rien. Mes maux sont finis.
Rien. Vous me maudissez, et moi je vous bénis.
Voilà tout.
La Reine, éperdue.
Don César!
Ruy Blas
Quand je pense, pauvre ange,
Que vous m'avez aimé!
La Reine.
Quel est ce philtre étrange?
Qu'avez-vous fait? Dis-moi! Réponds-moi! Parle-moi!
César! Je te pardonne et t'aime, et je te croi!
Ruy Blas.
Je m'appelle Ruy Blas.
La Reine, l'entourant de ses bras.
Ruy Blas, je vous pardonne!
Mais qu'avez-vous fait là? Parle, je te l'ordonne!
Ce n'est pas du poison, cette affreuse liqueur?
Dis?
Ruy Blas.
Si! C'est du poison. Mais j'ai la joie au coeur.
Tenant la reine embrassée et levant les yeux au ciel.
Permettez, ô mon Dieu, justice souveraine,
Que ce pauvre laquais bénisse cette reine,

Car elle a consolé mon coeur crucifié,
Vivant, par son amour, mourant, par sa pitié!
La Reine.
Du poison! Dieu! C’est moi qui l’ai tué! – je t’aime!
Si j’avais pardonné? ...
Ruy Blas, défaillant.
J’aurais agi de même.
Sa voix s’éteint. La reine le soutient dans ses bras.
Je ne pouvais plus vivre. Adieu!
Montrant la porte.
Fuyez d’ici!
– Tout restera secret. – je meurs.
Il tombe.
La Reine, se jetant sur son corps.
Ruy Blas!
Ruy Blas, qui allait mourir, se réveille à son nom prononcé par la reine.
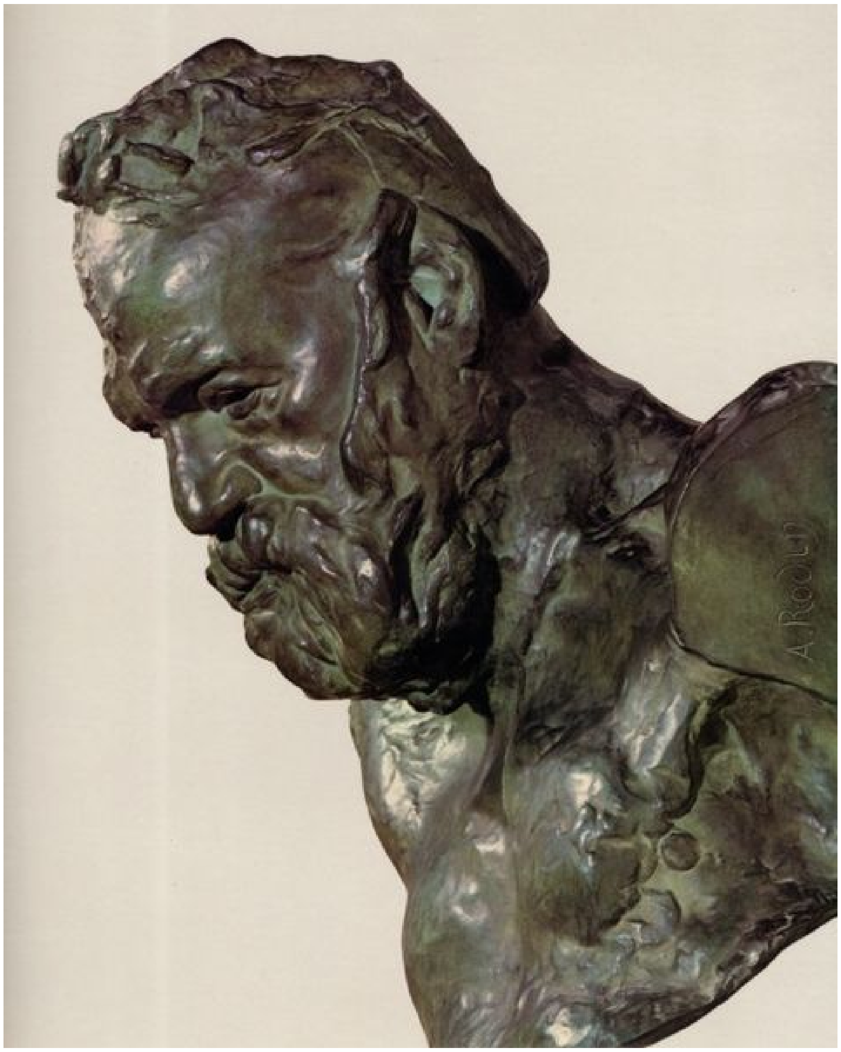
Merci!

Selected Non-Fiction



Victor Hugo, by the famous sculptor Rudin

NAPOLEON THE LITTLE

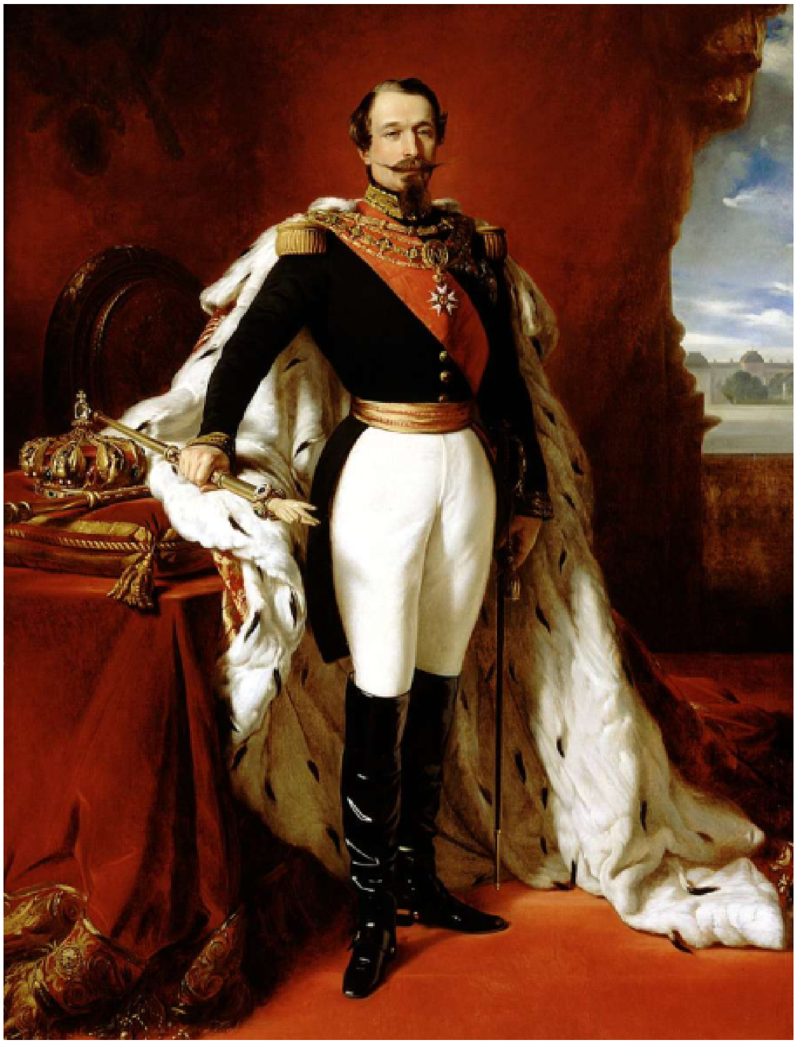
Anonymous translation, 1852

This is an influential political pamphlet, which was written by Hugo to condemn the reign of Napoleon III, Emperor of France. Hugo lived in exile in Guernsey during most of Napoleon III's reign and his criticism of the monarch was significant as he was one of the most prominent French writers of the time. This non-fiction work is famous for the satirical concept of two and two make five, as a denial of truth by authority, an idea used later by George Orwell in Nineteen Eighty-Four.

Hugo at the time of publication

CONTENTS

BOOK I
BOOK II
BOOK III
BOOK IV
BOOK V
BOOK VI
BOOK VII
BOOK VIII
CONCLUSION — PART FIRST
CONCLUSION — PART SECOND



Napoleon III, Hugo’s great enemy

BOOK I

I

December 20, 1848

On Thursday, December 20, 1848, the Constituent Assembly, being in session, surrounded at that moment by an imposing display of troops, heard the report of the Representative Waldeck-Rousseau, read on behalf of the committee which had been appointed to scrutinize the votes in the election of President of the Republic; a report in which general attention had marked this phrase, which embodied its whole idea: “It is the seal of its inviolable authority which the nation, by this admirable application of the fundamental law, itself affixes on the Constitution, to render it sacred and inviolable.” Amid the profound silence of the nine hundred representatives, of whom almost the entire number was assembled, the President of the National Constituent Assembly, Armaud Marrast, rose and said: —

“In the name of the French people,

“Whereas Citizen Charles-Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte, born at Paris, fulfils the conditions of eligibility prescribed by Article 44 of the Constitution;

“Whereas in the ballot cast throughout the extent of the territory of the Republic, for the election of President, he has received an absolute majority of votes;

“By virtue of Articles 47 and 48 of the Constitution, the National Assembly proclaims him President of the Republic from this present day until the second Sunday in May, 1852.”

There was a general movement on all the benches, and in the galleries filled with the public; the President of the Constituent Assembly added:

“According to the terms of the decree, I invite the Citizen President of the Republic to ascend the tribune, and to take the oath.”

The representatives who crowded the right lobby returned to their places and left the passage free. It was about four in the afternoon, it was growing dark, and the immense hall of the Assembly having become involved in gloom, the chandeliers were lowered from the ceiling, and the messengers placed lamps on the tribune. The President made a sign, the door on the right opened, and there was seen to enter the hall, and rapidly ascend the tribune, a man still young, attired in black, having on his breast the badge and riband of the Legion of Honour.

All eyes were turned towards this man. A pallid face, its bony emaciated angles thrown into bold relief by the shaded lamps, a nose large and long, moustaches, a curled lock of hair above a narrow forehead, eyes small and dull, and with a timid and uneasy manner, bearing no resemblance to the Emperor, — this man was Citizen Charles-Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte.

During the murmurs which greeted his entrance, he remained for some instants, his right hand in the breast of his buttoned coat, erect and motionless on the tribune, the pediment of which bore these dates: February 22, 23, 24; and above which were inscribed these three words: Liberty, Equality, Fraternity.

Before being elected President of the Republic, Charles-Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte had been a representative of the people for several months, and though he had rarely attended a whole sitting, he had been frequently seen in the seat he had selected, on the upper benches of the Left, in the fifth row in the zone commonly called the Mountain, behind his old preceptor, Representative Vieillard. This man, then, was no new figure in the Assembly, yet his entrance on this occasion produced a profound sensation. It was to all, to his friends as to his foes, the future that entered, an unknown future. Amid the immense murmur, produced by the whispered words of all present, his name passed from mouth to mouth, coupled with most diverse opinions. His antagonists detailed his adventures, his coups-de-main, Strasburg, Boulogne, the tame eagle, and the piece of meat in the little hat. His friends dwelt upon his exile, his proscription, his imprisonment, an excellent work of his on the artillery, his writings at Ham, which were marked, to a certain degree, with the liberal, democratic, and socialistic spirit, the maturity of the more sober age at which he had now arrived; and to those who recalled his follies, they recalled his misfortunes.

General Cavaignac, who, not having been elected President, had just resigned his power into the hands of the Assembly, with that tranquil laconism which befits republics, was seated in his customary place at the head of the ministerial bench, on the left of the tribune, and observed in silence, with folded arms, this installation of the new man.

At length silence was restored, the President of the Assembly struck the table before him several times with his wooden knife, and then, the last murmurs having subsided, said:

"I will now read the form of the oath."

There was something almost religious about that moment. The Assembly was no longer an Assembly, it was a temple. The immense significance of the oath was rendered still more impressive by the circumstance that it was the only oath taken throughout the whole territory of the Republic. February had, and rightly, abolished the political oath, and the Constitution had, as rightly, retained only the oath of the President. This oath possessed the double character of necessity and of grandeur. It was an oath taken by the executive, the subordinate power, to the legislative, the superior power; it was even more than this — in contrast to the monarchical fiction by which the people take the oath to the man invested with power, it was the man invested with power who took the oath to the people. The President, functionary and servant, swore fidelity to the sovereign people. Bending before the national majesty, manifest in the omnipotent Assembly, he received from the Assembly the Constitution, and swore obedience to it. The representatives were inviolable, and he was not. We repeat it: a citizen responsible to all the citizens, he was, of the whole nation, the only man so bound. Hence, in this oath, sole and supreme, there was a solemnity which went to the heart. He who writes these lines was present in his place in the Assembly, on the day this oath was taken; he is one of those who, in the face of the civilized world called to bear witness, received this oath in the name of the people, and who have it still in their hands. Thus it runs: —

"In presence of God, and before the French people, represented by the National Assembly, I swear to remain faithful to the democratic republic, one and indivisible, and to fulfil all the duties imposed upon me by the Constitution."

The President of the Assembly, standing, read this majestic formula; then, before the whole Assembly, breathlessly silent and attentive, intensely expectant, Citizen Charles-Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte, raising his right hand, said, in a firm, loud voice:

"I swear it!"

Representative Boulay (de la Meurthe), since Vice-President of the Republic, who had known Charles-Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte from his childhood, exclaimed: "He is an honest man, he will keep his oath."

The President of the Assembly, still standing, proceeded thus (I quote verbatim the words recorded in the Moniteur): "We call God and man to witness the oath which has just been sworn. The National Assembly receives that oath, orders it to be transcribed upon its records, printed in the Moniteur, and published in the same manner as legislative acts."

It seemed that the ceremony was now at an end, and we imagined that Citizen Charles-Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte, thenceforth, until the second Sunday in May, 1852, President of the Republic, would descend from the tribune. But he did not; he felt a magnanimous impulse to bind himself still more rigorously, if possible; to add something to the oath which the Constitution demanded from him, in order to show how largely the oath was free and spontaneous. He asked permission to address the Assembly. "You have the floor," said the President of the Assembly.

There was more profound silence, and closer attention than before.

Citizen Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte unfolded a paper and read a speech. In this speech, having announced and installed the ministry appointed by him, he said: —

"I desire, in common with yourselves, citizen representatives, to consolidate society upon its true basis, to establish democratic institutions, and earnestly to seek every means calculated to relieve the sufferings of the generous and intelligent people who have just bestowed on me so signal a proof of their confidence."

He then thanked his predecessor in the executive power, the same man who, later, was able to say these noble words: "I did not fall from power, I descended from it;" and he glorified him in these terms: —

"The new administration, in entering upon its duties, is bound to thank that which preceded it for the efforts it has made to transmit the executive power intact, and to maintain public tranquillity.

"The conduct of the Honourable General Cavaignac has been worthy of the manliness of his character, and of that sentiment of duty which is the first quality requisite in the chief of the State."

The Assembly cheered these words, but that which especially struck every mind, which was profoundly graven in every memory, which found its echo in every honest heart, was the declaration, the wholly spontaneous declaration, we repeat, with which he began his address.

"The suffrages of the nation, and the oath I have just taken, command my future conduct. My duty is clearly marked. I will fulfil it as a man of honour.

"I shall regard as the enemies of the country all who seek to change, by illegal means, that which all France has established."

When he had done speaking, the Constituent Assembly rose, and uttered as with a single voice, the exclamation: “Long live the Republic!”

Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte descended from the tribune, went up to General Cavaignac, and offered him his hand. The general, for a few instants, hesitated to accept the grasp. All who had just heard the words of Louis Bonaparte, pronounced in a tone so instinct with good faith, blamed the general for his hesitation.

The Constitution to which Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte took oath on December 20, 1848, “in the face of God and man,” contained, among other articles, these: —

“Article 36. The representatives of the people are inviolable.

“Article 37. They may not be arrested on a criminal charge unless taken in the fact, or prosecuted without the permission of the Assembly first obtained.

“Article 68. Every act by which the President of the Republic dissolves the National Assembly, prorogues it, or impedes the execution of its decrees, is high treason.

“By such act, of itself, the President forfeits his office, the citizens are bound to refuse him obedience, and the executive power passes, of absolute right, to the National Assembly. The judges of the Supreme Court shall thereupon immediately assemble, under penalty of forfeiture; they shall convoke the jurors in such place as they shall appoint, to proceed to the trial of the President and his accomplices; and they shall themselves appoint magistrates who shall proceed to execute the functions of the ministry.”

In less than three years after this memorable day, on the 2nd of December, 1851, at daybreak, there might be read on all the street corners in Paris, this placard: —

“In the name of the French people, the President of the Republic:

“Decrees —

“Article 1. The National Assembly is dissolved.

“Article 2. Universal suffrage is re-established. The law of the 31st of May is repealed.

“Article 3. The French people are convoked in their comitia.

“Article 4. A state of siege is decreed throughout the first military division.

“Article 5. The Council of State is dissolved.

“Article 6. The Minister of the Interior is charged with the execution of this decree.

“Done at the Palace of the Élysée, December 2, 1851.

“Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte.”

At the same time Paris learned that fifteen of the inviolable representatives of the people had been arrested in their homes, during the night, by order of Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte.

II

MISSION OF THE REPRESENTATIVES

Those who, as representatives of the people, received, in trust for the people, the oath of the 20th of December, 1848, those, especially who, being twice invested with the confidence of the nation, had as representatives heard that oath sworn, and as legislators had seen it violated, had assumed, with their writ of summons, two duties. The first of these was, on the day when that oath should be violated, to rise in their places, to present their breasts to the enemy, without calculating either his numbers or his strength, to shelter with their bodies the sovereignty of the people and as a means to combat and cast down the usurper, to grasp every sort of weapon, from the law found in the code, to the paving stone that one picks up in the street. The second duty was, after having accepted the combat and all its chances to accept proscription and all its miseries, to stand eternally erect before the traitor, his oath in their hands, to forget their personal sufferings, their private sorrows, their families dispersed and maltreated, their fortunes destroyed, their affections crushed, their bleeding hearts; to forget themselves, and to feel thenceforth but a single wound — the wound of France to cry aloud for justice; never to suffer themselves to be appeased, never to relent, but to be implacable; to seize the despicable perjurer, crowned though he were, if not with the hand of the law, at least with the pincers of truth, and to heat red-hot in the fire of history all the letters of his oath, and brand them on his face.

He who writes these lines is one of those who did not shrink, on the 2nd of December, from the utmost effort to accomplish the first of these two great duties; in publishing this book he performs the second.

III

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION OF TERM

It is time that the human conscience should awaken.

Ever since the 2nd of December, 1851, a successful ambush, a crime, odious, repulsive, infamous, unprecedented, considering the age in which it was committed, has triumphed and held sway, erecting itself into a theory, pluming itself in the sunlight, making laws, issuing decrees, taking society, religion, and the family under its protection, holding out its hand to the kings of Europe, who accept it, and calling them, “my brother,” or “my cousin.” This crime no one disputes, not even those who profit by it and live by it; they say simply that it was necessary; not even he who committed it, who says merely that he, the criminal, has been “absolved.” This crime contains within itself all crimes, treachery in the conception, perjury in the execution, murder and assassination in the struggle, spoliation, swindling, and robbery in the triumph; this crime draws after it as integral parts of itself, suppression of the laws, violation of constitutional inviolabilities, arbitrary sequestration, confiscation of property, midnight massacres, secret military executions, commissions superseding tribunals, ten thousand citizens banished, forty thousand citizens proscribed, sixty thousand families ruined and despairing. These things are patent. Even so! it is painful to say it, but there is silence concerning this crime; it is there, men see it, touch it, and pass on to their business; shops are opened, the stock jobbers job, Commerce, seated on her packages, rubs her hands, and the moment is close at hand when everybody will regard all that has taken place as a matter of course. He who measures cloth does not hear the yard-stick in his hand speak to him and say: “’Tis a false measure that governs.” He who weighs out a commodity does not hear his scales raise their voice and say: “’Tis a false weight that reigns.” A strange order of things surely, that has for its base supreme disorder, the negation of all law! equilibrium resting on iniquity!

Let us add, — what, for that matter is self-evident, — that the author of this crime is a malefactor of the most cynical and lowest description.

At this moment, let all who wear a robe, a scarf, or a uniform; let all those who serve this man, know, if they think themselves the agents of a power, that they deceive themselves; they are the shipmates of a pirate. Ever since the 2nd of December there have been no office-holders in France, there have been only accomplices. The moment has come when every one must take careful account of what he has done, of what he is continuing to do. The gendarmes who arrested those whom the man of Strasburg and Boulogne called “insurgents,” arrested the guardians of the Constitution. The judge who tried the combatants of Paris or the provinces, placed in the dock the mainstays of the law. The officer who confined in the hulks the “condemned men,” confined the defenders of the Republic and of the State. The general in Africa who imprisoned at Lambassa the transported men bending beneath the sun’s fierce heat, shivering with fever, digging in the sun-baked soil a furrow destined to be their grave, that general sequestrated, tortured, assassinated the men of the law. All, generals, officers, gendarmes, judges, are absolutely under forfeiture. They have before them more than innocent men, — heroes! more than victims, — martyrs!

Let them know this, therefore, and let them hasten to act upon the knowledge; let them, at least, break the fetters, draw the bolts, empty the hulks, throw open the jails, since they have not still the courage to grasp the sword. Up, consciences, awake, it is full time!

If law, right, duty, reason, common sense, equity, justice, suffice not, let them think of the future! If remorse is mute, let responsibility speak!

And let all those who, being landed proprietors, shake the magistrate by the hand; who, being bankers, fête a general; who, being peasants, salute a gendarme; let all those who do not shun the hôtel in which dwells the minister, the house in which dwells the prefect, as he would shun a lazaretto; let all those who, being simple citizens, not functionaries, go to the balls and the banquets of Louis Bonaparte and see not that the black flag waves over the Élysée, — let all these in like manner know that this sort of shame is contagious; if they avoid material complicity, they will not avoid moral complicity.

The crime of the 2nd of December bespatters them.

The present situation, that seems so calm to the unthinking, is most threatening, be sure of that. When public morality is under eclipse, an appalling shadow settles down upon social order.

All guarantees take wing, all supports vanish.

Thenceforth there is not in France a tribunal, nor a court, nor a judge, to render justice and pronounce a sentence, on any subject, against any one, in the name of any one.

Bring before the assizes a malefactor of any sort: the thief will say to the judges: “The chief of the State robbed the Bank of twenty-five millions;” the false witness will say to the judges: “The chief of the State took an oath in the face of God and of man, and that oath he has violated;” the sequestrator will say: “The chief of the State has arrested, and detained against all law, the representatives of the sovereign people;” the swindler will say: “The chief of the State got his election, got power, got the Tuileries, all by swindling;” the forger will say: “The chief of the State forged votes;” the footpad will say: “The chief of the State stole their purses from the Princes of Orleans;” the murderer will say: “The chief of the State shot, sabred, bayonetted, massacred passengers in the streets;” and all together, swindler, forger, false witness, footpad, robber, assassin, will add: “And you judges, you have been to salute this man, to praise him for having perjured himself, to compliment him for committing forgery, to praise him for stealing and swindling, to thank him for murdering! what do you want of us?”

Assuredly, this is a very serious state of things! to sleep in such a situation, is additional ignominy.

It is time, we repeat, that this monstrous slumber of men’s consciences should end. It must not be, after that fearful scandal, the triumph of crime, that a scandal still more fearful should be presented to mankind: the indifference of the civilized world.

If that were to be, history would appear one day as an avenger; and from this very hour, as the wounded lion takes refuge in the solitudes, the just man, veiling his face in presence of this universal degradation, would take refuge in the immensity of public contempt.

IV

MEN WILL AWAKEN

But it is not to be; men will awaken.

The present book has for its sole aim to arouse the sleepers. France must not even adhere to this government with the assent of lethargy; at certain hours, in certain places, under certain shadows, to sleep is to die.

Let us add that at this moment, France — strange to say, but none the less true — knows not what took place on the 2nd of December and subsequently, or knows it imperfectly; and this is her excuse. However, thanks to several generous and courageous publications, the facts are beginning to creep out. This book is intended to bring some of those facts forward, and, if it please God, to present them in their true light. It is important that people should know who and what this M. Bonaparte is. At the present moment, thanks to the suppression of the platform, thanks to the suppression of the press, thanks to the suppression of speech, of liberty, and of truth, — a suppression which has had for one result the permitting M. Bonaparte to do everything, but which has had at the same time the effect of nullifying all his measures without exception, including the indescribable ballot of the 20th of December, — thanks, we say, to this stifling of all complaints and of all light, no man, no fact wears its true aspect or bears its true name. M. Bonaparte’s crime is not a crime, it is called a necessity; M. Bonaparte’s ambuscade is not an ambuscade, it is called a defence of public order; M. Bonaparte’s robberies are not robberies, they are called measures of state; M. Bonaparte’s murders are not murders, they are called public safety; M. Bonaparte’s accomplices are not malefactors, they are called magistrates, senators, and councillors of state; M. Bonaparte’s adversaries are not the soldiers of the law and of right, they are called Jacquerie, demagogues, communists. In the eyes of France, in the eyes of Europe, the 2nd of December is still masked. This book is a hand issuing from the darkness, and tearing that mask away.

Now, we propose to scrutinize this triumph of order, to depict this government so vigorous, so firm, so well-based, so strong, having on its side a crowd of paltry youths, who have more ambition than boots, dandies and beggars; sustained on the Bourse by Fould the Jew, and in the Church by Montalembert the Catholic; esteemed by women who would fain pass for maids, by men who want to be prefects; resting on a coalition of prostitutions; giving fêtes; making cardinals; wearing white neck-cloths and yellow kid gloves, like Morny, newly varnished like Maupas, freshly brushed like Persigny, — rich, elegant, clean, gilded, joyous, and born in a pool of blood!

Yes, men will awaken!

Yes, men will arouse from that torpor which, to such a people, is shame; and when France does awaken, when she does open her eyes, when she does distinguish, when she does see that which is before her and beside her, she will recoil with a terrible shudder from the monstrous crime which dared to espouse her in the darkness, and of which she has shared the bed.

Then will the supreme hour strike!

The sceptics smile and insist; they say:

“Hope for nothing. This government, you say, is the shame of France. Be it so, but this same shame is quoted on the Bourse. Hope for nothing. You are poets and dreamers if you hope. Why, look about you: the tribune, the press, intelligence, speech, thought, all that was liberty, has vanished. Yesterday, these things were in motion, alive; to-day, they are petrified. Well, people are satisfied with this petrification, they accommodate themselves to it, make the most of it, conduct business on it, and live as usual. Society goes on, and plenty of worthy folk are well pleased with this state of things. Why do you want to change it, to put an end to it? Don't deceive yourselves, it is all solid, all firm; it is the present and the future."

We are in Russia. The Neva is frozen over. Houses are built on the ice, and heavy chariots roll over it. It is no longer water, but rock. The people go to and fro upon this marble which was once a river. A town is run up, streets are marked out, shops opened; people buy, sell, eat, drink, sleep, light fires on what once was water. You can do whatever you please there. Fear nothing. Laugh, dance; it is more solid than terra firma. Why, it rings beneath the foot, like granite. Long live winter! Long live the ice! This will last till doomsday! And look at the sky: is it day? is it night? what is it? A pale, misty light steals over the snow; one would say that the sun is dying!

No, thou art not dying, O liberty! One of these days, at the moment when thou art least expected, at the very hour when they shall have most utterly forgotten thee, thou wilt rise! — O dazzling vision! the star-like face will suddenly be seen issuing from the earth, resplendent on the horizon! Over all that snow, over all that ice, over that hard, white plain, over that water become rock, over all that wretched winter, thou wilt cast thy arrow of gold, thy ardent and effulgent ray! light, heat, life! And then, listen! hear you that dull sound? hear you that crashing noise, all-pervading and formidable? 'Tis the breaking up of the ice! 'tis the melting of the Neva! 'tis the river resuming its course! 'tis the water, living, joyous, and terrible, heaving up the hideous, dead ice, and crushing it.— 'Twas granite, said you; see, it splinters like glass! 'tis the breaking up of the ice, I tell you: 'tis the truth returning, 'tis progress recommencing, 'tis mankind resuming its march, and uprooting, carrying off, mingling, crushing and drowning in its waves, like the wretched furniture of a submerged hovel, not only the brand-new empire of Louis Bonaparte, but all the structures and all the work of the eternal antique despotism! Look on these things as they are passing. They are vanishing for ever. You will never behold them again. That book, half submerged, is the old code of iniquity; that sinking framework is the throne; that other framework, floating off, is the scaffold!

And for this immense engulfment, this supreme victory of life over death, what was needed? One glance from thee, O sun! one of thy rays, O liberty!

V

BIOGRAPHY

Charles-Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte, born at Paris, on April 20, 1808, is the son of Hortense de Beauharnais, who was married by the Emperor to Louis-Napoleon, King of Holland. In 1831, taking part in the insurrections in Italy, where his elder brother was killed, Louis Bonaparte attempted to overthrow the Papacy. On the 30th of October, 1836, he attempted to overthrow Louis Philippe. He failed at Strasburg, and, being pardoned by the King, he embarked for America, leaving his accomplices behind him to be tried. On the 11th of November he wrote: "The King, in his clemency, has ordered me taken to America;" he declared himself "keenly affected by the King's generosity," adding: "Certainly, we were all culpable towards the government in taking up arms against it, but the greatest culprit was myself;" and he concluded thus: "I was guilty towards the government, and the government has been generous to me."_He returned from America, and went to Switzerland, got himself appointed captain of artillery at Berne, and a citizen of Salenstein, in Thurgovia; equally avoiding, amid the diplomatic complications occasioned by his presence, to call himself a Frenchman, or to avow himself a Swiss, and contenting himself, in order to satisfy the French government, with stating in a letter, dated the 20th of August, 1838, that he lived "almost alone," in the house "where his mother died," and that it was "his firm determination to remain quiet."

On the 6th of August, 1840 he disembarked at Boulogne, parodying the disembarkation at Cannes, with the petit chapeau on his head,_carrying a gilt eagle on the end of a flag-staff, and a live eagle in a cage, proclamations galore, and sixty valets, cooks, and grooms, disguised as French soldiers with uniforms bought at the Temple, and buttons of the 42nd Regiment of the Line, made in London. He scatters money among the passers-by in the streets of Boulogne, sticks his hat on the point of his sword, and himself cries, "Vive l'Empereur!" fires a pistol shot at an officer,_which hits a soldier and knocks out three of his teeth, and finally runs away. He is taken into custody; there are found on his person 500,000 francs, in gold and bank-notes;_the procureur-general, Franck-Carrè, says to him in the Court of Peers: “You have been tampering with the soldiers, and distributing money to purchase treason.” The peers sentenced him to perpetual imprisonment. He was confined at Ham. There his mind seemed to take refuge within itself and to mature: he wrote and published some books, instinct, notwithstanding a certain ignorance of France and of the age, with democracy and with progress: “The Extinction of Pauperism,” “An Analysis of the Sugar Question,” “Napoleonic Ideas,” in which he made the Emperor a “humanitarian.” In a treatise entitled “Historical Fragments,” he wrote thus: “I am a citizen before I am a Bonaparte.” Already in 1852, in his book “Political Reveries,” he had declared himself a republican. After five years of captivity, he escaped from the prison of Ham, disguised as a mason, and took refuge in England.

February arrived; he hailed the Republic, took his seat as a representative of the people in the Constituent Assembly, mounted the tribune on the 21st of September, 1848, and said: “All my life shall be devoted to strengthening the Republic;” published a manifesto which may be summed up in two lines: liberty, progress, democracy, amnesty, abolition of the decrees of proscription and banishment; was elected President by 5,500,000 votes, solemnly swore allegiance to the Constitution on the 20th of December, 1848, and on the 2nd of December, 1851, shattered that Constitution. In the interval he had destroyed the Roman republic, and had restored in 1849 that Papacy which in 1831 he had essayed to overthrow. He had, besides, taken nobody knows how great a share in the obscure affair of the lottery of the gold ingots. A few weeks previous to the coup d’état, this bag of gold became transparent, and there was visible within it a hand greatly resembling his. On December 2, and the following days, he, the executive power, assailed the legislative power, arrested the representatives, drove out the assembly, dissolved the Council of State, expelled the high court of justice, suppressed the laws, took 25,000,000 francs from the bank, gorged the army with gold, swept the streets of Paris with grape-shot, and terrorized France. Since then, he has proscribed eighty-four representatives of the people; stolen from the Princes of Orleans the property of their father, Louis Philippe, to whom he owed his life; decreed despotism in fifty-eight articles, under the name of Constitution; throttled the Republic; made the sword of France a gag in the mouth of liberty; pawned the railways; picked the pockets of the people; regulated the budget by ukase; transported to Africa and Cayenne ten thousand democrats; banished to Belgium, Spain, Piedmont, Switzerland, and England forty thousand republicans, brought grief to every heart and the blush of shame to every brow.

Louis Bonaparte thinks that he is mounting the steps of a throne; he does not perceive that he is mounting those of a scaffold.

VI

PORTRAIT

Louis Bonaparte is a man of middle height, cold, pale, slow in his movements, having the air of a person not quite awake. He has published, as we have mentioned before, a moderately esteemed treatise on artillery, and is thought to be acquainted with the handling of cannon. He is a good horseman. He speaks drawlingly, with a slight German accent. His histrionic abilities were displayed at the Eglinton tournament. He has a heavy moustache, covering his smile, like that of the Duke of Alva, and a lifeless eye like that of Charles IX.

Judging him apart from what he calls his “necessary acts,” or his “great deeds,” he is a vulgar, commonplace personage, puerile, theatrical, and vain. Those persons who are invited to St. Cloud, in the summer, receive with the invitation an order to bring a morning toilette and an evening toilette. He loves finery, display, feathers, embroidery, tinsel and spangles, big words, and grand titles, — everything that makes a noise and glitter, all the glassware of power. In his capacity of cousin to the battle of Austerlitz, he dresses as a general. He cares little about being despised; he contents himself with the appearance of respect.

This man would tarnish the background of history; he absolutely sullies its foreground. Europe smiled when, glancing at Haiti, she saw this white Soulouque appear. But there is now in Europe, in every intelligent mind, abroad as at home, a profound stupor, a feeling, as it were, of personal insult; for the European continent, whether it will or no, is responsible for France, and whatever abases France humiliates Europe.

Before the 2nd of December, the leaders of the Right used freely to say of Louis Bonaparte: “He is an idiot.” They were mistaken. To be sure that brain of his is awry, and has gaps in it, but one can discern here and there thoughts consecutive and concatenate. It is a book whence pages have been torn. Louis Napoleon has a fixed idea; but a fixed idea is not idiocy; he knows what he wants, and he goes straight to it; through justice, through law, through reason, through honour, through humanity, it may be, but straight on none the less.

He is not an idiot. He is a man of another age than our own. He seems absurd and mad, because he is out of his place and time. Transport him to Spain in the 16th century, and Philip II would recognise him; to England, and Henry VIII would smile on him; to Italy, and Cæsar Borgia would jump on his neck. Or even, confine yourself to setting him outside the pale of European civilization, — place him, in 1817, at Janina, and Ali-Tepeleni would grasp him by the hand.

There is in him something of the Middle Ages, and of the Lower Empire. That which he does would have seemed perfectly simple and natural to Michael Ducas, to Romanus Diogenes, to Nicephorus Botoniates, to the Eunuch Narses, to the Vandal Stilico, to Mahomet II, to Alexander VI, to Ezzelino of Padua, as it seems perfectly simple and natural to himself. But he forgets, or knows not, that in the age wherein we live, his actions will have to traverse the great streams of human morality, set free by three centuries of literature and by the French Revolution; and that in this medium, his actions will wear their true aspect, and appear what they really are — hideous.

His partisans — he has some — complacently compare him with his uncle, the first Bonaparte. They say: “The one accomplished the 18th Brumaire, the other the 2nd of December: they are two ambitious men.” The first Bonaparte aimed to reconstruct the Empire of the West, to make Europe his vassal, to dominate the continent by his power, and to dazzle it by his grandeur; to take an arm-chair himself, and give footstools to the kings; to cause history to say: “Nimrod, Cyrus, Alexander, Hannibal, Cæsar, Charlemagne, Napoleon;” to be a master of the world. And so he was. It was for that that he accomplished the 18th Brumaire. This fellow would fain have horses and women, be called Monseigneur, and live luxuriously. It was for this that he accomplished the 2nd of December. Yes: they are both ambitious; the comparison is just.

Let us add, that, like the first Bonaparte, the second also aims to be emperor. But that which somewhat impairs the force of the comparison is, that there is perhaps, a slight difference between conquering an empire and pilfering it.

However this may be, that which is certain and which cannot be veiled, even by the dazzling curtain of glory and of misfortune on which are inscribed: Arcola, Lodi, the Pyramids, Eylau, Friedland, St. Helena — that which is certain, we repeat, is that the 18th Brumaire was a crime, of which the 2nd of December has aggravated the stain on the memory of Napoleon.

M. Louis Bonaparte does not object to have it whispered that he is a socialist. He feels that this gives him a sort of vague field which ambition may exploit. As we have already said, when he was in prison, he passed his time in acquiring a quasi-reputation as a democrat. One fact will describe him. When, being at Ham, he published his book “On the Extinction of Pauperism,” a book having apparently for its sole and exclusive aim, to probe the wound of the poverty of the common people, and to suggest the remedy, he sent the book to one of his friends with this note, which we have ourselves seen: “Read this book on pauperism, and tell me if you think it is calculated to do me good.”

The great talent of M. Louis Bonaparte is silence. Before the 2nd of December, he had a council of ministers who, being responsible, imagined that they were of some consequence. The President presided. Never, or scarcely ever, did he take part in their discussions. While MM. Odillon Barrot, Passy, Tocqueville, Dufaure, or Faucher were speaking, he occupied himself, says one of these ministers, in constructing, with intense earnestness, paper dolls, or in drawing men’s heads on the documents before him.

To feign death, that is his art. He remains mute and motionless, looking in the opposite direction from his object, until the hour for action comes; then he turns his head, and leaps upon his prey. His policy appears to you abruptly, at some unexpected turning, pistol in hand, like a thief. Up to that point, there is the least possible movement. For one moment, in the course of the three years that have just passed, he was seen face to face with Changarnier, who also, on his part, had a scheme in view. “Ibant obscuri,” as Virgil says. France observed, with a certain anxiety, these two men. What was in their minds? Did not the one dream of Cromwell, the other of Monk? Men asked one another these questions as they looked on the two men. In both of them, there was the same attitude of mystery, the same policy of immobility. Bonaparte said not a word, Changarnier made not a gesture; this one did not stir, that one did not breathe; they seemed to be playing the game of which should be the most statuesque.

This silence of his, Louis Bonaparte sometimes breaks; but then he does not speak, he lies. This man lies as other men breathe. He announces an honest intention; be on your guard: he makes an assertion, distrust him: he takes an oath, tremble.

Machiavel made small men; Louis Bonaparte is one of them.

To announce an enormity against which the world protests, to disavow it with indignation, to swear by all the gods, to declare himself an honest man, — and then, at the moment when people are reassured, and laugh at the enormity in question, to execute it. This was his course with respect to the coup d'état, with respect to the decrees of proscription, with respect to the spoliation of the Princes of Orleans; — and so it will be with the invasion of Belgium, and of Switzerland, and with everything else. It is his way; you may think what you please of it; he employs it; he finds it effective; it is his affair. He will have to settle the matter with history.

You are of his familiar circle; he hints at a project, which seems to you, not immoral, — one does not scrutinize so closely, — but insane and dangerous, and dangerous to himself; you raise objections; he listens, makes no reply, sometimes gives way for a day or two, then resumes his project, and carries out his will.

There is in his table, in his office at the Élysée, a drawer, frequently half open. He takes thence a paper; reads it to a minister; it is a decree. The minister assents or dissents. If he dissents, Louis Bonaparte throws the paper back into the drawer, where there are many other papers, the dreams of an omnipotent man, shuts the drawer, takes out the key, and leaves the room without saying a word. The minister bows and retires, delighted with the deference which has been paid to his opinion. Next morning the decree is in the Moniteur.

Sometimes with the minister's signature.

Thanks to this modus operandi, he has always in his service the unforeseen, a mighty weapon, and encountering in himself no internal obstacle in that which is known to other men as conscience, he pursues his design, through no matter what, no matter how, and attains his goal.

He draws back sometimes, not before the moral effect of his acts, but before their material effect. The decrees of expulsion of eighty-four representatives of the people, published on January 6 in the Moniteur, revolted public sentiment. Fast bound as France was, the shudder was perceptible. The 2nd of December was not long past; there was danger in popular excitement. Louis Bonaparte understood this. Next day a second decree of expulsion was to have appeared, containing eight hundred names.

Louis Bonaparte had the proof brought to him from the Moniteur; the list occupied fourteen columns of the official journal. He crumpled the proof, threw it into the fire, and the decree did not appear. The proscriptions proceeded without a decree.

In his enterprises, he needs aids and collaborators; he needs what he calls "men." Diogenes sought them with a lantern, he seeks them with a banknote in his hand. And finds them. There are certain sides of human nature which produce a particular species of persons, of whom he is the centre, and who group around him ex necessitate, in obedience to that mysterious law of gravitation which regulates the moral being no less than the cosmic atom. To undertake "the act of the 2nd of December," — to execute it, and to complete it, he needed these men, and he had them. Now he is surrounded by them; these men form his retinue, his court, mingling their radiance with his. At certain epochs of history, there are pleiades of great men; at other epochs, there are pleiades of vagabonds.

But do not confound the epoch, the moment of Louis Bonaparte, with the 19th century: the toadstool sprouts at the foot of the oak, but it is not the oak.

M. Louis Bonaparte has succeeded. He has with him henceforth money, speculation, the Bourse, the Bank, the counting-room, the strong-box, and all those men who pass so readily from one side to the other, when all they have to straddle is shame. He made of M. Changarnier a dupe, of M. Thiers a stop-gap, of M. de Montalembert an accomplice, of power a cavern, of the budget his farm. They are coining at the Mint a medal, called the medal of the 2nd of December, in honour of the manner in which he keeps his oaths. The frigate La Constitution has been debaptized, and is now called L'Élysée. He can, when he chooses, be crowned by M. Sibour,_and exchange the couch of the Élysée for the state bed of the Tuileries. Meanwhile, for the last seven months, he has been displaying himself; he has harangued, triumphed, presided at banquets, given balls, danced, reigned, turned himself about in all directions; he has paraded himself, in all his ugliness, in a box at the Opéra; he has had himself dubbed Prince-President; he has distributed standards to the army, and crosses of honour to the commissioners of police. When there was occasion to select a symbol, he effaced himself and chose the eagle; modesty of a sparrow-hawk!

VII

IN CONTINUATION OF THE PANEGYRICS

He has succeeded. The result is that he has plenty of apotheoses. Of panegyrists he has more than Trajan. One thing, however, has struck me, which is, that among all the qualities that have been discovered in him since the 2nd of December, among all the eulogies that have been addressed to him, there is not one word outside of this circle: adroitness, coolness, daring, address, an affair admirably prepared and conducted, moment well chosen, secret well kept, measures well taken. False keys well made — that's the whole story. When these things have been said, all has been said, except a phrase or two about "clemency;" and yet no one extols the magnanimity of Mandrin, who, sometimes, did not take all the traveller's money, and of Jean l'Ecorcheur, who, sometimes, did not kill all travellers.

In endowing M. Bonaparte with twelve millions of francs, and four millions more for keeping up the châteaux, the Senate — endowed by M. Bonaparte with a million — felicitated M. Bonaparte upon "having saved society," much as a character in a comedy congratulates another on having "saved the money-box."

For myself, I am still seeking in the glorification of M. Bonaparte by his most ardent apologists, any praise that would not exactly befit Cartouche or Poulailler, after a good stroke of business; and I blush sometimes for the French language, and for the name of Napoleon, at the terms, really over-raw, and too thinly veiled, and too appropriate to the facts, in which the magistracy and clergy felicitate this man on having stolen the power of the State by burglarising the Constitution, and on having, by night, evaded his oath.

When all the burglaries and all the robberies which constitute the success of his policy had been accomplished, he resumed his true name; every one then saw that this man was a Monseigneur. It was M. Fortoul,_— to his honour be it said — who first made this discovery.

When one measures the man and finds him so small, and then measures his success, and finds it so enormous, it is impossible that the mind should not experience some surprise. One asks oneself: "How did he do it?" One dissects the adventure and the adventurer, and laying aside the advantage he derives from his name, and certain external facts, of which he made use in his escalade, one finds, as the basis of the man and his exploit, but two things, — cunning and cash.

As to cunning: we have already characterised this important quality of Louis Bonaparte; but it is desirable to dwell on the point.

On November 27, 1848, he said to his fellow-citizens in his manifesto: “I feel it incumbent on me to make known to you my sentiments and my principles. There must be no equivocation between you and me. I am not ambitious.... Brought up in free countries, in the school of misfortune, I shall ever remain faithful to the duties that shall be imposed on me by your suffrages, and the will of the Assembly. I shall make it a point of honour to leave, at the end of the four years, to my successor, power consolidated, liberty intact, and real progress accomplished.”

On December 31, 1849, in his first message to the Assembly, he wrote: “It is my aspiration to be worthy of the confidence of the nation, by maintaining the Constitution which I have sworn to execute.” On November 12, 1850, in his second annual message to the Assembly, he said: “If the Constitution contains defects and dangers, you are free to make them known to the country; I alone, bound by my oath, confine myself within the strict limits which that Constitution has traced.” On September 4, in the same year, at Caen, he said: “When, in all directions, prosperity seems reviving, he were, indeed, a guilty man who should seek to check its progress by changing that which now exists.” Some time before, on July 25, 1849, at the inauguration of the St. Quentin railway, he went to Ham, smote his breast at the recollection of Boulogne, and uttered these solemn words:

“Now that, elected by universal France, I am become the legitimate head of this great nation, I cannot pride myself on a captivity which was occasioned by an attack upon a regular government.

“When one has observed the enormous evils which even the most righteous revolutions bring in their train, one can scarcely comprehend one’s audacity in having chosen to take upon one’s self the terrible responsibility of a change; I do not, therefore, complain of having expiated here, by an imprisonment of six years, my rash defiance of the laws of my country, and it is with joy that, in the very scene of my sufferings, I propose to you a toast in honour of those who, notwithstanding their convictions, are resolute to respect the institutions of their country.”

All the while he was saying this, he retained in the depths of his heart, as he has since proved, after his fashion, that thought which he had written in that same prison of Ham: “Great enterprises seldom succeed at the first attempt.”

Towards the middle of November, 1851, Representative F —— , a frequenter of the Élysée, was dining with M. Bonaparte.

“What do they say in Paris, and in the Assembly?” asked the President of the representative.

“Oh, prince!”

“Well?”

“They are still talking.”

“About what?”

“About the coup d’état.”

“And the Assembly believes in it?”

“A little, prince.”

“And you?”

“I — oh, not at all.”

Louis Bonaparte earnestly grasped M. F — — ‘s hands, and said to him with feeling:

“I thank you, M. F —— , you, at least, do not think me a scoundrel.”

This happened a fortnight before December 2. At that time, and indeed, at that very moment, according to the admission of Maupas the confederate, Mazas was being made ready.

Cash: that is M. Bonaparte’s other source of strength.

Let us take the facts, judicially proved by the trials at Strasburg and Boulogne.

At Strasburg, on October 30, 1836, Colonel Vaudrey, an accomplice of M. Bonaparte, commissioned the quartermasters of the 4th Regiment of artillery, “to distribute among the cannoneers of each battery, two pieces of gold.”

On the 5th of August, 1840, in the steamboat he had freighted, the Ville d’Edimbourg, while at sea, M. Bonaparte called about him the sixty poor devils, his domestics, whom he had deceived into accompanying him by telling them he was going to Hamburg on a pleasure excursion, harangued them from the roof of one of his carriages fastened on the deck, declared his project, tossed them their disguise as soldiers, gave each of them a hundred francs, and then set them drinking. A little drunkenness does not damage great enterprises. “I saw,” said the witness Hobbs, the under-steward, before the Court of Peers,_“I saw in the cabin a great quantity of money. The passengers appeared to me to be reading printed papers; they passed all the night drinking and eating. I did nothing else but uncork bottles, and serve food.” Next came the captain. The magistrate asked Captain Crow: “Did you see the passengers drink?” — Crow: “To excess; I never saw anything like it.”

They landed, and were met by the custom-house officers of Vimereux. M. Louis Bonaparte began proceedings, by offering the lieutenant of the guard a pension of 1,200 francs. The magistrate: “Did you not offer the commandant of the station a sum of money if he would march with you?” — The Prince: “I caused it to be offered him, but he refused it.”

They arrived at Boulogne. His aides-de-camp — he had some already — wore, hanging from their necks, tin cases full of gold pieces. Others came next with bags of small coins in their hands._Then they threw money to the fishermen and the peasants, inviting them to cry: “Long live the Emperor!”— “Three hundred loud-mouthed knaves will do the thing,” had written one of the conspirators._Louis Bonaparte approached the 42nd, quartered at Boulogne.

He said to the voltigeur Georges Koehly: “I am Napoleon; you shall have promotion, decorations.” He said to the voltigeur Antoine Gendre: “I am the son of Napoleon; we are going to the Hôtel du Nord to order a dinner for you and me.” He said to the voltigeur Jean Meyer: “You shall be well paid.” He said to the voltigeur Joseph Mény: “You must come to Paris; you shall be well paid.”

An officer at his side held in his hand his hat full of five-franc pieces, which he distributed among the lookers-on, saying: “Shout, Long live the Emperor!”

The grenadier Geoffroy, in his evidence, characterises in these words the attempt made on his mess by an officer and a sergeant who were in the plot: “The sergeant had a bottle in his hand, and the officer a sabre.” In these few words is the whole 2nd of December.

Let us proceed: —

“Next day, June 17, the commandant, Mésonan, who I thought had gone, entered my room, announced by my aide-de-camp. I said to him, ‘Commandant, I thought you were gone!’— ‘No, general, I am not gone. I have a letter to give you.’— ‘A letter? And from whom?’— ‘Read it, general.’

“I asked him to take a seat; I took the letter, but as I was opening it, I saw that the address was — à M. le Commandant Mésonan. I said to him: ‘But, my dear Commandant, this is for you, not for me.'— 'Read it, General!' — I opened the letter and read thus: —

"'My dear Commandant, it is most essential that you should immediately see the general in question; you know he is a man of resolution, on whom one may rely. You know also that he is a man whom I have put down to be one day a marshal of France. You will offer him, from me, 100,000 francs; and you will ask him into what banker's or notary's hands I shall pay 300,000 francs for him, in the event of his losing his command.'

"I stopped here, overcome with indignation; I turned over the leaf, and I saw that the letter was signed, 'Louis Napoleon.'

"I handed the letter back to the commandant, saying that it was a ridiculous and abortive affair."

Who speaks thus? General Magnan. Where? In the open Court of Peers. Before whom? Who is the man seated on the prisoners' bench, the man whom Magnan covers with "scorn," the man towards whom Magnan turns his "indignant" face? Louis Bonaparte.

Money, and with money gross debauchery: such were his means of action in his three enterprises at Strasburg, at Boulogne, at Paris. Two failures and a success. Magnan, who refused at Boulogne, sold himself at Paris. If Louis Bonaparte had been defeated on the 2nd of December, just as there were found on him, at Boulogne, the 500,000 francs he had brought from London, so there would have been found at the Élysée, the twenty-five millions taken from the Bank.

There has, then, been in France, — one must needs speak of these things coolly, — in France, that land of the sword, that land of cavaliers, the land of Hoche, of Drouot, and of Bayard — there has been a day, when a man, surrounded by five or six political sharpers, experts in ambuscades, and grooms of coups d'état, lolling in a gilded office, his feet on the fire-dogs, a cigar in his mouth, placed a price upon military honour, weighed it in the scales like a commodity, a thing buyable and sellable, put down the general at a million, the private at a louis, and said of the conscience of the French army: "That is worth so much."

And this man is the nephew of the Emperor.

By the bye, this nephew is not proud: he accommodates himself, with great facility, to the necessities of his adventures; adapts himself readily and without reluctance, to every freak of destiny. Place him in London, and let it be his interest to please the English government, he would not hesitate, and with the very hand which now seeks to seize the sceptre of Charlemagne, he would grasp the truncheon of a policeman. If I were not Napoleon, I would be Vidocq.

And here thought pauses!

And such is the man by whom France is governed! governed, do I say? possessed rather in full sovereignty!

And every day, and every moment, by his decrees, by his messages, by his harangues, by all these unprecedented imbecilities which he parades in the Moniteur, this émigré, so ignorant of France, gives lessons to France! and this knave tells France that he has saved her! From whom? from herself. Before he came, Providence did nothing but absurdities; God waited for him to put everything in order; and at length he came. For the last thirty-six years poor France had been afflicted with all sorts of pernicious things: that "sonority," the tribune; that hubbub, the press; that insolence, thought; that crying abuse, liberty: he came, and for the tribune, he substituted the Senate; for the press, the censorship; for thought, imbecility; for liberty, the sabre; and by the sabre, the censorship, imbecility, and the Senate, France is saved! Saved! bravo! and from whom, I ask again? from herself. For what was France before, if you please? a horde of pillagers, robbers, Jacquerie, assassins, demagogues! It was necessary to put fetters on this abominable villain, this France, and it was M. Bonaparte Louis who applied the fetters. Now France is in prison, on bread and water, punished, humiliated, throttled and well guarded; be tranquil, everybody; Sieur Bonaparte, gendarme at the Élysée, answers for her to Europe; this miserable France is in her strait waistcoat, and if she stirs! —

Ah! what spectacle is this? What dream is this? What nightmare is this? On the one hand, a nation, first among nations, and on the other, a man, last among men — and see what that man does to that nation! God save the mark! He tramples her under foot, he laughs at her to her face, he flouts her, he denies her, he insults her, he scoffs at her! How now! He says, there is none but I! What! in this land of France where no man's ears may be boxed with impunity, one may box the ears of the whole people! Oh! abominable shame! Each time that M. Bonaparte spits, every one must needs wipe his face! And this can last! And you tell me that it will last! No! No! No! By all the blood we have in our veins, no! this shall not last. Were it to last, it must be that there is no God in heaven, or no longer a France on earth!

BOOK II

I
THE CONSTITUTION

A roll of the drums; clowns, attention!

The President of the Republic,

“Considering that — all the restrictive laws on the liberty of the press having been repealed, all the laws against hand-bills and posting-bills having been abolished, the right of public assemblage having been fully re-established, all the unconstitutional laws, including martial law, having been suppressed, every citizen being empowered to say what he likes through every medium of publicity, whether newspaper, placard, or electoral meeting, all solemn engagements, especially the oath of the 20th of December, 1848, having been scrupulously kept, all facts having been investigated, all questions propounded and discussed, all candidacies publicly defeated, without the possibility of alleging that the slightest violence had been exercised against the meanest citizen, — in one word, in the fullest enjoyment of liberty. “The sovereign people being interrogated on this question: —

“‘Do the French people mean to place themselves, tied neck and heels, at the discretion of M. Louis Bonaparte?’

“Have replied YES by 7,500,000 votes. (Interruption by the author: — We shall have more to say of these 7,500,000 votes.)

“PROMULGATES

“THE CONSTITUTION IN MANNER FOLLOWING, THAT IS TO SAY:

“Article 1. The Constitution recognises, confirms, and guarantees the great principles proclaimed in 1789, which are the foundation of the public law of the French people.

“Article 2 and following. The platform and the press, which impeded the march of progress, are superseded by the police and the censorship, and by the secret deliberations of the Senate, the Corps Législatif and the Council of State.

“Article last. The thing commonly called human intelligence is suppressed.

“Done at the Palace of the Tuileries January 14, 1852.

“Louis Napoleon.

“Witnessed and sealed with the great seal.

“E. Rouher.

“Keeper of the Seals and Minister of Justice.”

This Constitution, which loudly proclaims and confirms the Revolution of 1789 in its principles and its consequences, and which merely abolishes liberty, was evidently and happily inspired in M. Bonaparte, by an old provincial play-bill which it is well to recall at this time:

This Day,
The Grand Representation of
LA DAME BLANCHE,
an opera in three acts.

Note. The music, which would embarrass the progress of the plot, will be replaced by lively and piquant dialogue.

II

THE SENATE

This lively and piquant dialogue is carried on by the Council of State, the Corps Législatif and the Senate.

Is there a Senate then? Certainly. This “great body,” this “balancing power,” this “supreme moderator,” is in truth the principal glory of the Constitution. Let us consider it for a moment.

The Senate! It is a senate. But of what Senate are you speaking? Is it the Senate whose duty it was to deliberate on the description of sauce with which the Emperor should eat his turbot? Is it the Senate of which Napoleon thus spoke on April 5, 1814: “A sign was an order for the Senate, and it always did more than was required of it?” Is it the Senate of which Napoleon said in 1805: “The poltroons were afraid of displeasing me?” Is it the Senate which drew from Tiberius almost the same exclamation: “The base wretches! greater slaves than we require them to be!” Is it the Senate which caused Charles XII to say: “Send my boot to Stockholm.”— “For what purpose, Sire?” demanded his minister.— “To preside over the Senate,” was the reply.

But let us not trifle. This year they are eighty; they will be one hundred and fifty next year. They monopolise to themselves, in full plenitude, fourteen articles of the Constitution, from Article 19 to Article 33. They are "guardians of the public liberties;" their functions are gratuitous by Article 22; consequently, they have from fifteen to thirty thousand francs per annum. They have the peculiar privilege of receiving their salary, and the prerogative of "not opposing" the promulgation of the laws. They are all illustrious personages."_This is not an "abortive Senate,"_like that of Napoleon the uncle; this is a genuine Senate; the marshals are members, and the cardinals and M. Lebœuf.

"What is your position in the country?" some one asks the Senate. "We are charged with the preservation of public liberty."— "What is your business in this city?" Pierrot demands of Harlequin.— "My business," replies Harlequin, "is to curry-comb the bronze horse."

"We know what is meant by esprit-de-corps: this spirit will urge the Senate by every possible means to augment its power. It will destroy the Corps Législatif, if it can; and if occasion offers it will compound with the Bourbons."

Who said this? The First Consul. Where? At the Tuileries, in April, 1804.

"Without title or authority, and in violation of every principle, it has surrendered the country and consummated its ruin. It has been the plaything of eminent intriguers; I know of no body which ought to appear in history with greater ignominy than the Senate."

Who said this? The Emperor. Where? At St. Helena.

There is actually then a senate in the "Constitution of January 14." But, candidly speaking, this is a mistake; for now that public hygiene has made some progress, we are accustomed to see the public highway better kept. After the Senate of the Empire, we thought that no more senates would be mixed up with Constitutions.

III

THE COUNCIL OF STATE AND THE CORPS LÉGISLATIF

There is also a Council of State and a Corps Législatif: the former joyous, well paid, plump, rosy, fat, and fresh, with a sharp eye, a red ear, a voluble tongue, a sword by its side, a belly, and embroidered in gold; the Corps Législatif, pale, meagre, sad, and embroidered in silver. The Council of State comes and goes, enters and exits, returns, rules, disposes, decides, settles, and decrees, and sees Louis Napoleon face to face. The Corps Législatif, on the contrary, walks on tiptoe, fumbles with its hat, puts its finger to its lips, smiles humbly, sits on the corner of its chair, and speaks only when questioned. Its words being naturally obscene, the public journals are forbidden to make the slightest allusion to them. The Corps Législatif passes laws and votes taxes by Article 39; and when, fancying it has occasion for some instruction, some detail, some figures, or some explanation, it presents itself, hat in hand, at the door of the departments to consult the ministers, the usher receives it in the antechamber, and with a roar of laughter, gives it a fillip on the nose. Such are the duties of the Corps Législatif.

Let us state, however, that this melancholy position began, in June, 1852, to extort some sighs from the sorrowful personages who form a portion of the concern. The report of the commission on the budget will remain in the memory of men, as one of the most heart-rending masterpieces of the plaintive style. Let us repeat those gentle accents: —

“Formerly, as you know, the necessary communications in such cases were carried on directly between the commissioners and the ministers. It was to the latter that they addressed themselves to obtain the documents indispensable to the discussion of affairs; and the ministers even came personally, with the heads of their several departments, to give verbal explanations, frequently sufficient to preclude the necessity of further discussion; and the resolutions formed by the commission on the budget after they had heard them, were submitted direct to the Chamber.

“But now we can have no communication with the government except through the medium of the Council of State, which, being the confidant and the organ of its own ideas, has alone the right of transmitting to the Corps Législatif the documents which, in its turn, it receives from the ministers.

“In a word, for written reports, as well as for verbal communications, the government commissioners have superseded the ministers, with whom, however, they must have a preliminary understanding.

“With respect to the modifications which the commission might wish to propose, whether by the adoption of amendments presented by the deputies, or from its own examination of the budget, they must, before you are called upon to consider them, be sent to the Council of State, there to undergo discussion.

"There (it is impossible not to notice it) those modifications have no interpreters, no official defenders.

"This mode of procedure appears to be derived from the Constitution itself; and if we speak of the matter now, it is solely to prove to you that it must occasion delays in accomplishing the task imposed upon the commission on the budget."

Reproach was never so mildly uttered; it is impossible to receive more chastely and more gracefully, what M. Bonaparte, in his autocratic style, calls "guarantees of calmness," but what Molière, with the license of a great writer, denominates "kicks."

Thus, in the shop where laws and budgets are manufactured, there is a master of the house, the Council of State, and a servant, the Corps Législatif. According to the terms of the "Constitution," who is it that appoints the master of the house? M. Bonaparte. Who appoints the servant? The nation. That is as it should be.

IV

THE FINANCES

Let it be observed that, under the shadow of these "wise institutions," and thanks to the coup d'état, which, as is well known, has re-established order, the finances, the public safety, and public prosperity, the budget, by the admission of M. Gouin, shows a deficit of 123,000,000 francs.

As for commercial activity since the coup d'état, as for the prosperity of trade, as for the revival of business, in order to appreciate them it is enough to reject words and have recourse to figures. On this point, the following statement is official and decisive: the discounts of the Bank of France produced during the first half of 1852, only 589,502fr. 62c. at the central bank; while the profits of the branch establishments have risen only to 651,108fr. 7c. This appears from the half-yearly report of the Bank itself.

M. Bonaparte, however, does not trouble himself with taxation. Some fine morning he wakes and yawns, rubs his eyes, takes his pen and decrees — what? The budget. Achmet III. was once desirous of levying taxes according to his own fancy.— "Invincible lord," said his Vizier to him, "your subjects cannot be taxed beyond what is prescribed by the law and the prophet."

This identical M. Bonaparte, when at Ham, wrote as follows: —

“If the sums levied each year on the inhabitants generally are employed for unproductive purposes, such as creating useless places, raising sterile monuments, and maintaining in the midst of profound peace a more expensive army than that which conquered at Austerlitz, taxation becomes in such case an overwhelming burden; it exhausts the country, it takes without any return.”

With reference to this word budget an observation occurs to us. In this present year 1852, the bishops and the judges of the Cour de Cassation, have 50 francs per diem; the archbishops, the councillors of state, the first presidents, and the procureurs-general, have each 69 francs per diem; the senators, the prefects, and the generals of division receive 83 francs each per diem; the presidents of sections of the Council of State 222 francs per diem; the ministers 252 francs per diem; Monseigneur the Prince-President, comprising of course, in his salary, the sum for maintenance of the royal residences, receives per diem 44,444 francs, 44 centimes. The revolution of the 2nd of December was made against the Twenty-five Francs!

V

THE LIBERTY OF THE PRESS

We have now seen what the legislature is, what the administration, and what the budget.

And the courts! What was formerly called the Cour de Cassation is no longer anything more than a record office of councils of war. A soldier steps out of the guard-house and writes in the margin of the book of the law, I will, or I will not. In all directions the corporal gives the order, and the magistrate countersigns it. Come! tuck up your gowns and begone, or else — Hence these abominable trials, sentences, and condemnations. What a sorry spectacle is that troop of judges, with hanging heads and bent backs, driven with the butt end of the musket into baseness and iniquity!

And the liberty of the press! What shall we say of it? Is it not a mockery merely to pronounce the words? That free press, the honour of French intellect, a light thrown from all points at once upon all questions, the perpetual sentinel of the nation — where is it? What has M. Bonaparte done with it? It is where the public platform is. Twenty newspapers extinguished in Paris, eighty in the departments, — one hundred newspapers suppressed: that is to say, looking only to the material side of the question, innumerable families deprived of bread; that is to say, understand it, citizens, one hundred houses confiscated, one hundred farms taken from their proprietors, one hundred interest coupons stolen from the public funds. Marvellous identity of principles: freedom suppressed is property destroyed. Let the selfish idiots who applaud the coup d'état reflect upon this.

Instead of a law concerning the press a decree has been laid upon it; a fetfa, a firman, dated from the imperial stirrup: the régime of admonition. This régime is well known. Its working is witnessed daily. Such men were requisite to invent such a thing. Despotism has never shown itself more grossly insolent and stupid than in this species of censorship of the morrow, which precedes and announces the suppression, and which administers the bastinado to a paper before killing it entirely. The folly of such a government corrects and tempers its atrocity. The whole of the decree concerning the press may be summed up in one line: "I permit you to speak, but I require you to be silent." Who reigns, in God's name? Is it Tiberius? Is it Schahabaham? Three-fourths of the republican journalists transported or proscribed, the remainder hunted down by mixed commissions, dispersed, wandering, in hiding. Here and there, in four or five of the surviving journals, in four or five which are independent but closely watched, over whose heads is suspended the club of Maupas,_some fifteen or twenty writers, courageous, serious, pure, honest, and noble-hearted, who write, as it were, with a chain round their necks, and a ball on their feet; talent between two sentinels, independence gagged, honesty under surveillance, and Veuillot exclaiming: "I am free!"

VI

NOVELTIES IN RESPECT TO WHAT IS LAWFUL

The press enjoys the privilege of being censored, of being admonished, of being suspended, of being suppressed; it has even the privilege of being tried. Tried! By whom? By the courts. What courts? The police courts. And what about that excellent trial by jury? Progress: it is outstripped. The jury is far behind us, and we return to the government judges. "Repression is more rapid and more efficacious," as Maître Rouher says. And then 'tis so much better. Call the causes: correctional police, sixth chamber; first cause, one Roumage, swindler; second cause, one Lamennais, writer. This has a good effect, and accustoms the citizens to talk without distinction of writers and swindlers. That, certainly, is an advantage; but in a practical point of view, with reference to "repression," is the government quite sure of what it has done on that head? Is it quite sure that the sixth chamber will answer better than the excellent assize court of Paris, for instance, which had for president such abject creatures as Partarrieu-Lafosse, and for advocates at its bar, such base wretches as Suin, and such dull orators as Mongis? Can it reasonably expect that the police judges will be still more base and more contemptible than they? Will those judges, salaried as they are, work better than that jury-squad, who had the department prosecutor for corporal, and who pronounced their judgments and gesticulated their verdicts with the precision of a charge in double quick time, so that the prefect of police, Carlier, good-humouredly observed to a celebrated advocate, M. Desm —— : "The jury! what a stupid institution! When not forced to it they never condemn, but when forced they never acquit." Let us weep for that worthy jury which was made by Carlier and unmade by Rouher.

This government feels that it is hideous. It wants no portrait; above all it wants no mirror. Like the osprey it takes refuge in darkness, and it would die if once seen. Now it wishes to endure. It does not propose to be talked about; it does not propose to be described. It has imposed silence on the press of France; we have seen in what manner. But to silence the press in France was only half-success. It must also be silenced in foreign countries. Two prosecutions were attempted in Belgium, against the Bulletin Français and against La Nation. They were acquitted by an honest Belgian jury. This was annoying. What was to be done? The Belgian journals were attacked through their pockets. "You have subscribers in France," they were told; "but if you 'discuss' us, you shall be kept out. If you wish to come in, make yourselves agreeable." An attempt was made to frighten the English journals. "If you 'discuss' us" — decidedly they do not wish to be discussed — "we shall drive your correspondents out of France." The English press roared with laughter. But this is not all. There are French writers outside of France: they are proscribed, that is to say they are free. Suppose those fellows should speak? Suppose those demagogues should write? They are very capable of doing both; and we must prevent them. But how are we to do it? To gag people at a distance is not so easy a matter: M. Bonaparte's arm is not long enough for that. Let us try, however; we will prosecute them in the countries where they have taken refuge. Very good: the juries of free countries will understand that these exiles represent justice, and that the Bonapartist government personifies iniquity. These juries will follow the example of the Belgian jury and acquit. The friendly governments will then be solicited to expel these refugees, to banish these exiles. Very good: the exiles will go elsewhere; they will always find some corner of the earth open to them where they can speak. How then are they to be got at? Rouher and Baroche clubbed their wits together, and between them they hit upon this expedient: to patch up a law dealing with crimes committed by Frenchmen in foreign countries, and to slip into it "crimes of the press." The Council of State sanctioned this, and the Corps Législatif did not oppose it, and it is now the law of the land. If we speak outside of France, we shall be condemned for the offence in France; imprisonment (in future, if caught), fines and confiscations. Again, very good. The book I am now writing will, therefore, be tried in France, and its author duly convicted; this I expect, and I confine myself to apprising all those quidams calling themselves magistrates, who, in black and red gown, shall concoct the thing that, sentence to any fine whatever being well and duly pronounced against me, nothing will equal my disdain for the judgment, but my contempt for the judges. This is my defence.

VII

THE ADHERENTS

Who are they that flock round the establishment? As we have said, the gorge rises at thought of them.

Ah! these rulers of the day, — we who are now proscribed remember them when they were representatives of the people, only twelve months ago, running hither and thither in the lobbies of the Assembly, their heads high, and with a show of independence, and the air and manner of men who belonged to themselves. What magnificence! and how proud they were! How they placed their hands on their hearts while they shouted "Vive la Republique!" And if some "Terrorist," some "Montagnard," or some "red republican," happened to allude from the tribune to the planned coup d'état and the projected Empire, how they vociferated at him: "You are a calumniator!" How they shrugged their shoulders at the word "Senate!"— "The Empire to-day" cried one, "would be blood and slime; you slander us, we shall never be implicated in such a matter." Another affirmed that he consented to be one of the President's ministers solely to devote himself to the defence of the Constitution and the laws; a third glorified the tribune as the palladium of the country; a fourth recalled the oath of Louis Bonaparte, exclaiming: "Do you doubt that he is an honest man?" These last — there were two of them — went the length of voting for and signing his deposition, on the 2nd of December, at the mayoralty of the Tenth Arrondissement; another sent a note on the 4th of December to the writer of these lines, to "felicitate him on having dictated the proclamation of the Left, by which Louis Bonaparte was outlawed." And now, behold them, Senators, Councillors of State, ministers, belaced, betagged, bedizened with gold! Base wretches! Before you embroider your sleeves, wash your hands!

M. Q.-B. paid a visit to M. O.-B. and said to him: "Can you conceive the assurance of this Bonaparte? he has had the presumption to offer me the place of Master of Requests!"— "You refused it?"— "Certainly." — The next day, being offered the place of Councillor of State, salary twenty-five thousand francs, our indignant Master of Requests becomes a grateful Councillor of State. M. Q.-B. accepts.

One class of men rallied en masse: the fools! They comprise the sound part of the Corps Législatif. It was to them that the head of the State addressed this little flattery:— "The first test of the Constitution, entirely of French origin, must have convinced you that we possess the qualities of a strong and a free government. We are in earnest, discussion is free, and the vote of taxation decisive. France possesses a government animated by faith and by love of the right, which is based upon the people, the source of all power; upon the army, the source of all strength; and upon religion, the source of all justice. Accept the assurance of my regard." These worthy dupes, we know them also; we have seen a goodly number of them on the benches of the majority in the Legislative Assembly. Their chiefs, skilful manipulators, had succeeded in terrifying them, — a certain method of leading them wherever they thought proper. These chiefs, unable any longer to employ usefully those old bugbears, the terms "Jacobin" and "sans-culotte," decidedly too hackneyed, had furbished up the word "demagogue." These ringleaders, trained to all sorts of schemes and manœuvres, exploited successfully the word "Mountain," and agitated to good purpose that startling and glorious souvenir. With these few letters of the alphabet formed into syllables and suitably accented, — Demagogues, Montagnards, Partitioners, Communists, Red Republicans, — they made wildfires dance before the eyes of the simple. They had found the method of perverting the brains of their colleagues, who were so ingenuous as to swallow them whole, so to speak, with a sort of dictionary, wherein every expression made use of by the democratic writers and orators was readily translated. For humanity read ferocity; for universal good read subversion; for Republic read Terrorism; for Socialism read Pillage; for Fraternity, read Massacre; for the Gospel, read Death to the Rich. So that, when an orator of the Left exclaimed, for instance: "We rush for the suppression of war, and the abolition of the death penalty," a crowd of poor souls on the Right distinctly understood: "We wish to put everything to fire and sword;" and in a fury shook their fists at the orator. After such speeches, in which there had been a question only of liberty, of universal peace, of prosperity arising from labour, of concord, and of progress, the representatives of that category which we have designated at the head of this paragraph, were seen to rise, pale as death; they were not sure that they were not already guillotined, and went to look for their hats to see whether they still had heads.

These poor frightened creatures did not haggle over their adhesion to the 2nd of December. The expression, "Louis Napoleon has saved society," was invented especially for them.

And those eternal prefects, those eternal mayors, those eternal magistrates, those eternal sheriffs, those eternal complimenters of the rising sun, or of the lighted lamp, who, on the day after success, flock to the conqueror, to the triumpher, to the master, to his Majesty Napoleon the Great, to his Majesty Louis XVIII, to his Majesty Alexander I, to his Majesty Charles X, to his Majesty Louis Philippe, to Citizen Lamartine, to Citizen Cavaignac, to Monseigneur the Prince-President, kneeling, smiling, expansive, bearing upon salvers the keys of their towns, and on their faces the keys of their consciences!

But imbeciles ('tis an old story) have always made a part of all institutions, and are almost an institution of themselves; and as for the prefects and magistrates, as for these adorers of every new régime, insolent with, fortune and rapidity, they abound at all times. Let us do justice to the régime of December; it can boast not only of such partisans as these, but it has creatures and adherents peculiar to itself; it has produced an altogether new race of notabilities.

Nations are never conscious of all the riches they possess in the matter of knaves. Overturnings and subversions of this description are necessary to bring them to light. Then the nations wonder at what issues from the dust. It is splendid to contemplate. One whose shoes and clothes and reputation were of a sort to attract all the dogs of Europe in full cry, comes forth an ambassador. Another, who had a glimpse of Bicêtre and La Roquette, awakes a general, and Grand Eagle of the Legion of Honour. Every adventurer assumes an official costume, furnishes himself with a good pillow stuffed with bank-notes, takes a sheet of white paper, and writes thereon: "End of my adventures."— "You know So-and-So?"— "Yes, is he at the galleys?"— "No, he's a minister."

VIII

MENS AGITAT MOLEM

In the centre is the man — the man we have described; the man of Punic faith, the fatal man, attacking the civilisation to arrive at power; seeking, elsewhere than amongst the true people, one knows not what ferocious popularity; cultivating the still uncivilized qualities of the peasant and the soldier, endeavouring to succeed by appealing to gross selfishness, to brutal passions, to newly awakened desires, to excited appetites; something like a Prince Marat, with nearly the same object, which in Marat was grand, and in Louis Bonaparte is little; the man who kills, who transports, who banishes, who expels, who proscribes, who despoils; this man with harassed gesture and glassy eye, who walks with distracted air amid the horrible things he does, like a sort of sinister somnambulist.

It has been said of Louis Bonaparte, whether with friendly intent or otherwise, — for these strange beings have strange flatterers,— "He is a dictator, he is a despot, nothing more." — He is that in our opinion, and he is also something else.

The dictator was a magistrate. Livy_and Cicero_call him praetor maximus; Seneca_calls him magister populi; what he decreed was looked upon as a fiat from above. Livy_says: pro numine observatum. In those times of incomplete civilisation, the rigidity of the ancient laws not having foreseen all cases, his function was to provide for the safety of the people; he was the product of this text: salus populi suprema lex esto. He caused to be carried before him the twenty-four axes, the emblems of his power of life and death. He was outside the law, and above the law, but he could not touch the law. The dictatorship was a veil, behind which the law remained intact. The law was before the dictator and after him; and it resumed its power over him on the cessation of his office. He was appointed for a very short period — six months only: semestris dictatura, says Livy._But as if this enormous power, even when freely conferred by the people, ultimately weighed heavily upon him, like remorse, the dictator generally resigned before the end of his term. Cincinnatus gave it up at the end of eight days. The dictator was forbidden to dispose of the public funds without the authority of the Senate, or to go out of Italy. He could not even ride on horseback without the permission of the people. He might be a plebeian; Marcius Rutilus, and Publius Philo were dictators. That magistracy was created for very different objects: to organize fêtes for saints' days; to drive a sacred nail into the wall of the Temple of Jupiter; on one occasion to appoint the Senate. Republican Rome had eighty-eight dictators. This intermittent institution continued for one hundred and fifty-three years, from the year of Rome 552, to the year 711. It began with Servilius Geminus, and reached Cæsar, passing over Sylla. It expired with Cæsar. The dictatorship was fitted to be repudiated by Cincinnatus, and to be espoused by Cæsar. Cæsar was five times dictator in the course of five years, from 706 to 711. This was a dangerous magistracy, and it ended by devouring liberty.

Is M. Bonaparte a dictator? We see no impropriety in answering yes. Praetor maximus, — general-in-chief? the colours salute him. Magister populi, — the master of the people? ask the cannons levelled on the public squares. Pro numine observatum, — regarded as God? ask M. Troplong. He has appointed the Senate, he has instituted holidays, he has provided for the "safety of society," he has driven a sacred nail into the wall of the Pantheon, and he has hung upon this nail his coup d'état. The only discrepancy is, that he makes and unmakes the law according to his own fancy, he rides horseback without permission, and as to the six months, he takes a little more time. Cæsar took five years, he takes double; that is but fair. Julius Cæsar five, M. Louis Bonaparte ten — the proportion is well observed.

From the dictator, let us pass to the despot. This is the other qualification almost accepted by M. Bonaparte. Let us speak for a while the language of the Lower Empire. It befits the subject.

The Despotes came after the Basileus. Among other attributes, he was general of the infantry and of the cavalry — magister utriusque exercitus. It was the Emperor Alexis, surnamed the Angel, who created the dignity of despotes. This officer was below the Emperor, and above the Sebastocrator, or Augustus, and above the Cæsar.

It will be seen that this is somewhat the case with us. M. Bonaparte is despotes, if we admit, which is not difficult, that Magnan is Cæsar, and that Maupas is Augustus.

Despot and dictator, that is admitted. But all this great éclat, all this triumphant power, does not prevent little incidents from happening in Paris, like the following, which honest badauds, witnesses of the fact, will tell you, musingly. Two men were walking in the street, talking of their business or their private affairs. One of them, referring to some knave or other, of whom he thought he had reason to complain, exclaimed: “He is a wretch, a swindler, a rascal!” A police agent who heard these last words, cried out: “Monsieur, you are speaking of the President; I arrest you.”

And now, will M. Bonaparte be Emperor, or will he not?

A pretty question! He is master, — he is Cadi, Mufti, Bey, Dey, Sultan, Grand Khan, Grand Lama, Great Mogul, Great Dragon, Cousin to the Sun, Commander of the Faithful, Shah, Czar, Sofi, and Caliph. Paris is no longer Paris, but Bagdad; with a Giaffar who is called Persigny, and a Scheherazade who is in danger of having her head chopped off every morning, and who is called Le Constitutionnel. M. Bonaparte may do whatever he likes with property, families, and persons. If French citizens wish to fathom the depth of the “government” into which they have fallen, they have only to ask themselves a few questions. Let us see: magistrate, he tears off your gown, and sends you to prison. What of it? Let us see: Senate, Council of State, Corps Législatif, he seizes a shovel, and flings you all in a heap in a corner. What of it? Landed proprietor, he confiscates your country house and your town house, with courtyards, stables, gardens, and appurtenances. What of it? Father, he takes your daughter; brother, he takes your sister; citizen, he takes your wife, by right of might. What of it? Wayfarer, your looks displease him, and he blows your brains out with a pistol, and goes home. What of it?

All these things being done, what would be the result? Nothing. “Monseigneur the Prince-President took his customary drive yesterday in the Champs Élysées, in a calèche à la Daumont, drawn by four horses, accompanied by a single aide-de-camp.” This is what the newspapers will say.

He has effaced from the walls Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity; and he is right. Frenchmen, alas! you are no longer either free, — the strait-waistcoat is upon you; or equal, — the soldier is everything; or brothers, — for civil war is brewing under this melancholy peace of a state of siege.

Emperor? Why not? He has a Maury who is called Sibour; he has a Fontanes, or, if you prefer it, a Faciuntasinos, who is called Fortoul; he has a Laplace who answers to the name of Leverrier, although he did not produce the “Mécanique Céleste.” He will easily find Esménards and Luce de Lancivals. His Pius VII is at Rome, in the cassock of Pius IX. His green uniform has been seen at Strasburg; his eagle has been seen at Boulogne; his grey riding-coat, did he not wear it at Ham? Cassock or riding-coat, ’tis all one. Madame de Staël comes out, of his house. She wrote “Lelia.” He smiles on her pending the day when he will exile her. Do you insist on an archduchess? wait awhile and he will get one. Tu, felix Austria, nube. His Murat is called Saint-Arnaud; his Talleyrand is called Morny; his Duc d’Enghien is called Law.

What does he lack then? Nothing; a mere trifle; merely Austerlitz and Marengo.

Make the best of it; he is Emperor in petto; one of these mornings he will be so in the sun; nothing more is wanting than a trivial formality, the mere consecration and crowning of his false oath at Notre-Dame. After that we shall have fine doings. Expect an imperial spectacle. Expect caprices, surprises, stupefying, bewildering things, the most unexpected combinations of words, the most fearless cacophony? Expect Prince Troplong, Duc Maupas, Duc Mimerel, Marquis Leboeuf, Baron Baroche. Form in line, courtiers; hats off, senators; the stable-door opens, monseigneur the horse is consul. Gild the oats of his highness Incitatus.

Everything will be swallowed; the public hiatus will be prodigious. All the enormities will pass away. The old fly-catchers will disappear and make room for the swallowers of whales.

To our minds the Empire exists from this moment, and without waiting for the interlude of the senatus consultum and the comedy of the plebiscite, we despatch this bulletin to Europe: —

“The treason of the 2nd of December is delivered of the Empire.

“The mother and child are indisposed.”

IX
OMNIPOTENCE

Let us forget this man’s origin and his 2nd of December, and look to his political capacity. Shall we judge him by the eight months he has reigned? On the one hand look at his power, and on the other at his acts. What can he do? Everything. What has he done? Nothing. With his unlimited power a man of genius, in eight months, would have changed the whole face of France, of Europe, perhaps. He would not, certainly, have effaced the crime of his starting-point, but he might have covered it. By dint of material improvements he might have succeeded, perhaps, in masking from the nation his moral abasement. Indeed, we must admit that for a dictator of genius the thing was not difficult. A certain number of social problems, elaborated during these last few years by several powerful minds, seemed to be ripe, and might receive immediate, practical solution, to the great profit and satisfaction of the nation. Of this, Louis Bonaparte does not appear to have had any idea. He has not approached, he has not had a glimpse of one of them. He has not even found at the Élysée any old remains of the socialist meditations of Ham. He has added several new crimes to his first one, and in this he has been logical. With the exception of these crimes he has produced nothing. Absolute power, no initiative! He has taken France and does not know what to do with it. In truth, we are tempted to pity this eunuch struggling with omnipotence.

It is true, however, that this dictator keeps in motion; let us do him this justice; he does not remain quiet for an instant; he sees with affright the gloom and solitude around him; people sing who are afraid in the dark, but he keeps moving. He makes a fuss, he goes at everything, he runs after projects; being unable to create, he decrees; he endeavours to mask his nullity; he is perpetual motion; but, alas! the wheel turns in empty space. Conversion of rentes? Of what profit has it been to this day? Saving of eighteen millions! Very good: the annuitants lose them, but the President and the Senate, with their two endowments, pocket them; the benefit to France is zero. Credit Foncier? no capital forthcoming. Railways? they are decreed, and then laid aside. It is the same with all these things as with the working-men’s cities. Louis Bonaparte subscribes, but does not pay. As for the budget, the budget controlled by the blind men in the Council of State, and voted by the dumb men in the Corps Législatif, there is an abyss beneath it. There was no possible or efficacious budget but a great reduction in the army: two hundred thousand soldiers left at home, two hundred millions saved. Just try to touch the army! the soldier, who would regain his freedom, would applaud, but what would the officer say? And in reality, it is not the soldier but the officer who is caressed. Then Paris and Lyons must be guarded, and all the other cities; and afterwards, when we are Emperor, a little European war must be got up. Behold the gulf!

If from financial questions we pass to political institutions, oh! there the neo-Bonapartists flourish abundantly, there are the creations! Good heavens, what creations! A Constitution in the style of Ravrio, — we have been examining it, — ornamented with palm-leaves and swans' necks, borne to the Élysée with old easy-chairs in the carriages of the garde-meuble; the Conservative Senate restitched and regilded, the Council of State of 1806 refurbished and new-bordered with fresh lace; the old Corps Législatif patched up, with new nails and fresh paint, minus Lainé and plus Morny! In lieu of liberty of the press, the bureau of public spirit; in place of individual liberty, the ministry of police. All these "institutions," which we have passed in review, are nothing more than the old salon furniture of the Empire. Beat it, dust it, sweep away the cobwebs, splash it over with stains of French blood, and you have the establishment of 1852. This bric-à-brac governs France. These are the creations!

Where is common sense? where is reason? where is truth? Not a sound side of contemporary intelligence that has not received a shock, not a just conquest of the age that has not been thrown down and broken. All sorts of extravagance become possible. All that we have seen since the 2nd of December is a gallop, through all that is absurd, of a commonplace man broken loose.

These individuals, the malefactor and his accomplices, are in possession of immense, incomparable, absolute, unlimited power, sufficient, we repeat, to change the whole face of Europe. They make use of it only for amusement. To enjoy and to enrich themselves, such is their "socialism." They have stopped the budget on the public highway; the coffers are open; they fill their money-bags: they have money, — do you want some, here you are! All the salaries are doubled or trebled; we have given the figures above. Three ministers, Turgot (for there is a Turgot in this affair), Persigny and Maupas, have a million each of secret funds; the Senate a million, the Council of State half a million, the officers of the 2nd of December have a Napoleon-month, that is to say, millions; the soldiers of the 2nd of December have medals, that is to say, millions; M. Murat wants millions and will have them; a minister gets married, — quick, half a million; M.

Bonaparte, quia nominor Poleo, has twelve millions, plus four millions, — sixteen millions. Millions, millions! This regime is called Million. M. Bonaparte has three hundred horses for private use, the fruit and vegetables of the national domains, and parks and gardens formerly royal; he is stuffed to repletion; he said the other day: “all my carriages,” as Charles V said: “all my Spains,” and as Peter the Great said: “all my Russias.” The marriage of Gamache is celebrated at the Élysée; the spits are turning day and night before the fireworks; according to the bulletins published on the subject, the bulletins of the new Empire, they consume there six hundred and fifty pounds of meat every day; the Élysée will soon have one hundred and forty-nine kitchens, like the Castle of Schônbrunn; they drink, they eat, they laugh, they feast; banquet at all the ministers’, banquet at the École Militaire, banquet at the Hotel de Ville, banquet at the Tuileries, a monster fête on the 10th of May, a still more monster fête on the 15th of August; they swim in all sorts of abundance and intoxication. And the man of the people, the poor day-labourer who is out of work, the pauper in rags, with bare feet, to whom summer brings no bread, and winter no wood, whose old mother lies in agony upon a rotten mattress, whose daughter walks the streets for a livelihood, whose little children are shivering with hunger, fever and cold, in the hovels of Faubourg Saint-Marceau, in the cock-lofts of Rouen, and in the cellars of Lille, does any one think of him? What is to become of him? What is done for him? Let him die like a dog!

X

THE TWO PROFILES OF M. BONAPARTE

The curious part of it is that they are desirous of being respected; a general is venerable, a minister is sacred. The Countess d’Andl —— , a young woman of Brussels, was at Paris in March, 1852, and was one day in a salon in Faubourg Saint-Honoré when M. de P. entered. Madame d’Andl —— , as she went out, passed before him, and it happened that, thinking probably of something else, she shrugged her shoulders. M. de P. noticed it; the following day Madame d’Andl —— was apprised, that henceforward, under pain of being expelled from France like a representative of the people, she must abstain from every mark of approbation or disapprobation when she happened to meet a minister.

Under this corporal-government, and under this countersign-constitution, everything proceeds in military form. The French people consult the order of the day to know how they must get up, how they must go to bed, how they must dress, in what toilette they may go to the sitting of the court, or to the soirée of the prefect; they are forbidden to make mediocre verses; to wear beards; the frill and the white cravat are laws of state. Rule, discipline, passive obedience, eyes cast down, silence in the ranks; such is the yoke under which bows at this moment the nation of initiative and of liberty, the great revolutionary France. The reformer will not stop until France shall be enough of a barrack for the generals to exclaim: “Good!” and enough of a seminary for the bishops to say: “That will do!”

Do you like soldiers? they are to be found everywhere. The Municipal Council of Toulouse gives in its resignation; the Prefect Chapuis-Montlaville replaces the mayor by a colonel, the first deputy by a colonel, and the second deputy by a colonel._Military men take the inside of the sidewalk. “The soldiers,” says Mably, “considering themselves in the place of the citizens who formerly made the consuls, the dictators, the censors, and the tribunes, associated with the government of the emperors a species of military democracy.” Have you a shako on your head? then do what you please. A young man returning from a ball, passed through Rue de Richelieu before the gate of the National Library; the sentinel took aim at him and killed him; the journals of the following morning said: “The young man is dead,” and there it ended. Timour Bey granted to his companions-in-arms, and to their descendants to the seventh generation, impunity for all crimes whatsoever, provided the delinquent had not committed a crime nine times. The sentinel of Rue Richelieu has, therefore, eight citizens more to kill before he can be brought before a court-martial. It is a good thing to be a soldier, but not so good to be a citizen. At the same time, however, this unfortunate army is dishonoured. On the 3rd of December, they decorated the police officers who arrested its representatives and its generals; though it is equally true that the soldiers themselves received two louis per man. Oh, shame on every side! money to the soldiers, and the cross to the police spies!

Jesuitism and corporalism, this is the sum total of the regime. The whole political theory of M. Bonaparte is composed of two hypocrisies — a military hypocrisy towards the army, a catholic hypocrisy towards the clergy. When it is not Fracasse it is Basile. Sometimes it is both together. In this manner he succeeded wonderfully in duping at the same time

Montalembert, who does not believe in France, and Saint-Arnaud who does not believe in God.

Does the Dictator smell of incense? Does he smell of tobacco? Smell and see. He smells of both tobacco and incense. Oh, France! what a government is this! The spurs pass by beneath the cassock. The coup d'état goes to mass, thrashes the civilians, reads its breviary, embraces Catin, tells its beads, empties the wine pots, and takes the sacrament. The coup d'état asserts, what is doubtful, that we have gone back to the time of the Jacqueries; but this much is certain, that it takes us back to the time of the Crusades. Cæsar goes crusading for the Pope. Diex el volt. The Élysée has the faith, and the thirst also, of the Templar.

To enjoy and to live well, we repeat, and to consume the budget; to believe nothing, to make the most of everything; to compromise at once two sacred things, military honour and religious faith; to stain the altar with blood and the standard with holy water; to make the soldier ridiculous, and the priest a little ferocious; to mix up with that great political fraud which he calls his power, the Church and the nation, the conscience of the Catholic and the conscience of the patriot. This is the system of Bonaparte the Little.

All his acts, from the most monstrous to the most puerile, from that which is hideous to that which is laughable, are stamped with this twofold scheme. For instance, national solemnities bore him. The 24th of February and the 4th of May: these are disagreeable or dangerous reminders, which obstinately return at fixed periods. An anniversary is an intruder; let us suppress anniversaries. So be it. We will keep but one birthday, our own. Excellent. But with one fête only how are two parties to be satisfied — the soldier party and the priest party? The soldier party is Voltairian. Where Canrobert smiles, Riancey makes a wry face. What's to be done? You shall see. Your great jugglers are not embarrassed by such a trifle. The Moniteur one fine morning declares that there will be henceforth but one national fête, the 15th of August. Hereupon a semi-official commentary: the two masks of the Dictator begin to speak. “The 15th of August,” says the Ratapoil mouth, “Saint Napoleon's day!” “The 15th of August,” says the Tartuffe mouth, “the fête of the Holy Virgin!” On one side the Second-of-December puffs out its cheeks, magnifies its voice, draws its long sabre and exclaims: “Sacre-bleu, grumblers! Let us celebrate the birthday of Napoleon the Great!” On the other, it casts down its eyes, makes the sign of the cross, and mumbles: “My very dear brethren, let us adore the sacred heart of Mary!”

The present government is a hand stained with blood, which dips a finger in the holy water.

XI

RECAPITULATION

But we are asked: “Are you going a little too far? are you not unjust? Grant him something. Has he not to a certain extent ‘made Socialism?’” and the Credit Foncier, the railroads, and the lowering of the interest are brought upon the carpet.

We have already estimated these measures at their proper value; but, while we admit that this is “Socialism,” you would be simpletons to ascribe the credit to M. Bonaparte. It is not he who has made socialism, but time.

A man is swimming against a rapid current; he struggles with unheard-of efforts, he buffets the waves with hand and head, and shoulder, and knee. You say: “He will succeed in going up.” A moment after, you look, and he has gone farther down. He is much farther down the river than he was when he started. Without knowing, or even suspecting it, he loses ground at every effort he makes; he fancies that he is ascending the stream, and he is constantly descending it. He thinks he is advancing, but he is falling hack. Falling credit, as you say, lowering of interest, as you say; M. Bonaparte has already made several of those decrees which you choose to qualify as socialistic, and he will make more. M. Changarnier, had he triumphed instead of M. Bonaparte, would have done as much. Henry V, should he return to-morrow, would do the same. The Emperor of Austria does it in Galicia, and the Emperor Nicholas in Lithuania. But after all, what does this prove? that the torrent which is called Revolution is stronger than the swimmer who is called Despotism.

But even this socialism of M. Bonaparte, what is it? This, socialism? I deny it. Hatred of the middle class it may be, but not socialism. Look at the socialist department par excellence, the Department of Agriculture and of Commerce, — he has abolished it. What has he given you as compensation? the Ministry of Police! The other socialist department is the Department of Public Instruction, and that is in danger: one of these days it will be suppressed. The starting-point of socialism is education, gratuitous and obligatory teaching, knowledge. To take the children and make men of them, to take the men and make citizens of them — intelligent, honest, useful, and happy citizens. Intellectual and moral progress first, and material progress after. The two first, irresistibly and of themselves, bring on the last. What does M. Bonaparte do? He persecutes and stifles instruction everywhere. There is one pariah in our France of the present day, and that is the schoolmaster.

Have you ever reflected on what a schoolmaster really is — on that magistracy in which the tyrants of old took shelter, like criminals in the temple, a certain refuge? Have you ever thought of what that man is who teaches children? You enter the workshop of a wheelwright; he is making wheels and shafts; you say, “this is a useful man;” you enter a weaver’s, who is making cloth; you say, “this is a valuable man;” you enter the blacksmith’s shop; he is making pick-axes, hammers, and ploughshares; you say, “this is a necessary man;” you salute these men, these skilful labourers. You enter the house of a schoolmaster, — salute him more profoundly; do you know what he is doing? he is manufacturing minds.

He is the wheelwright, the weaver, and the blacksmith of the work, in which he is aiding God, — the future.

Well! to-day, thanks to the reigning clerical party, as the schoolmaster must not be allowed to work for this future, as this future is to consist of darkness and degradation, not of intelligence and light, — do you wish to know in what manner this humble and great magistrate, the schoolmaster, is made to do his work? The schoolmaster serves mass, sings in the choir, rings the vesper bell, arranges the seats, renews the flowers before the sacred heart, furbishes the altar candlesticks, dusts the tabernacle, folds the copes and the chasubles, counts and keeps in order the linen of the sacristy, puts oil in the lamps, beats the cushion of the confessional, sweeps out the church, and sometimes the rectory; the remainder of his time, on condition that he does not pronounce either of those three words of the devil, Country, Republic, Liberty, he may employ, if he thinks proper, in teaching little children to say their A, B, C.

M. Bonaparte strikes at instruction at the same moment above and below: below, to please the priests, above, to please the bishops. At the same time that he is trying to close the village school, he mutilates the Collège de France. He overturns with one blow the professors’ chairs of Quinet and of Michelet. One fine morning, he declares, by decree, Greek and Latin to be under suspicion, and, so far as he can, forbids all intercourse with the ancient poets and historians of Athens and of Rome, scenting in Æschylus and in Tacitus a vague odour of demagogy. With a stroke of the pen, for instance, he exempts all medical men from literary qualification, which causes Doctor Serres to say: “We are dispensed, by decree, from knowing how to read and write.”

New taxes, sumptuary taxes, vestiary taxes; nemo audeat comedere praeter duo fercula cum potagio; tax on the living, tax on the dead, tax on successions, tax on carriages, tax on paper. “Bravo!” shouts the beadle party, “fewer books; tax upon dogs, the collars will pay; tax upon senators, the armorial bearings will pay.”— “All this will make me popular!” says M. Bonaparte, rubbing his hands. “He is the socialist Emperor,” vociferate the trusty partisans of the faubourgs. “He is the Catholic Emperor,” murmur the devout in the sacristies. How happy he would be if he could pass in the latter for Constantine, and in the former for Babeuf! Watchwords are repeated, adhesion is declared, enthusiasm spreads from one to another, the École Militaire draws his cypher with bayonets and pistol-barrels, Abbé Gaume and Cardinal Gousset applaud, his bust is crowned with flowers in the market, Nanterre dedicates rosebushes to him, social order is certainly saved, property, family, and religion breathe again, and the police erect a statue to him.

Of bronze?

Fie! that may do for the uncle.

Of marble! Tu es Pietri et super hanc pietram aedificabo effigiem meam.

That which he attacks, that which he persecutes, that which they all persecute with him, upon which they pounce, which they wish to crush, to burn, to suppress, to destroy, to annihilate, is it this poor obscure man who is called primary instructor? Is it this sheet of paper that is called a journal? Is it this bundle of sheets which is called a book? Is it this machine of wood and iron which is called a press? No, it is thou, thought, it is thou, human reason, it is thou, nineteenth century, it is thou, Providence, it is thou, God!

We who combat them are “the eternal enemies of order.” We are — for they can as yet find nothing but this worn-out word — we are demagogues.

In the language of the Duke of Alva, to believe in the sacredness of the human conscience, to resist the Inquisition, to brave the state for one’s faith, to draw the sword for one’s country, to defend one’s worship, one’s city, one’s home, one’s house, one’s family, and one’s God, was called vagabondism; in the language of Louis Bonaparte, to struggle for freedom, for justice, for the right, to fight in the cause of progress, of civilisation, of France, of mankind, to wish for the abolition of war, and of the penalty of death, to take au sérieux the fraternity of men, to believe in a plighted oath, to take up arms for the constitution of one's country, to defend the laws, — this is called demagogy.

The man is a demagogue in the nineteenth century, who in the sixteenth would have been a vagabond.

This much being granted, that the dictionary of the Academy no longer exists, that it is night at noonday, that a cat is no longer called cat, and that Baroche is no longer called a knave; that justice is a chimera, that history is a dream, that the Prince of Orange was a vagabond, and the Duke of Alva a just man; that Louis Bonaparte is identical with Napoleon the Great, that they who have violated the Constitution are saviours, and that they who defended it are brigands, — in a word that human probity is dead: very good! in that case I admire this government It works well. It is a model of its species. It compresses, it represses, it oppresses, it imprisons, it exiles, it shoots down with grape-shot, it exterminates, and it even "pardons!" It exercises authority with cannon-balls, and clemency with the flat of the sabre.

"At your pleasure," repeat some worthy incorrigibles of the former party of order, "be indignant, rail, stigmatize, disavow,— 'tis all the same to us; long live stability! All these things put together constitute, after all, a stable government."

Stable! We have already expressed ourselves on the subject of this stability.

Stability! I admire such stability. If it rained newspapers in France for two days only, on the morning of the third nobody would know what had become of M. Louis Bonaparte.

No matter; this man is a burden upon the whole age, he disfigures the nineteenth century, and there will be in this century, perhaps, two or three years upon which it will be recognised, by some shameful mark or other, that Louis Bonaparte sat down upon them.

This person, we grieve to say it, is now the question that occupies all mankind.

At certain epochs in history, the whole human race, from all points of the earth, fix their eyes upon some mysterious spot whence it seems that universal destiny is about to issue. There have been hours when the world has looked towards the Vatican: Gregory VII and Leo X occupied the pontifical throne; other hours, when it has contemplated the Louvre; Philip Augustus, Louis IX, François I, and Henri IV were there; the Escorial, Saint-Just: Charles V dreamed there; Windsor: Elizabeth the Great reigned there; Versailles: Louis XIV shone there surrounded by stars; the Kremlin: one caught a glimpse there of Peter the Great; Potsdam: Frederick II was closeted there with Voltaire. At present, history, bow thy head, the whole universe is looking at the Élysée!

That species of bastard door, guarded by two sentry-boxes painted on canvas, at the extremity of Faubourg Saint-Honoré, that is the spot towards which the eyes of the civilized world are now turned with a sort of profound anxiety! Ah! what sort of place is that, whence no idea has issued that has not been a plot, no action that has not been a crime? What sort of place is that wherein reside all kinds of cynicism and all kinds of hypocrisy? What sort of place is that where bishops elbow Jeanne Poisson on the staircase, and, as a hundred years ago, bow to the ground before her; where Samuel Bernard laughs in a corner with Laubardemont; which Escobar enters, arm-in-arm with Guzman d'Alfarache; where (frightful rumour), in a thicket in the garden, they despatch, it is said, with the bayonet men whom they dare not bring to trial; where one hears a man say to a woman who is weeping and interceding: “I overlook your love-affairs, you must overlook my hatreds!” What sort of place is that where the orgies of 1852 intrude upon and dishonour the mourning of 1815! where Cæsarion, with his arms crossed, or his hands behind his back, walks under those very trees, and in those very avenues still haunted by the indignant phantom of Cæsar?

That place is the blot upon Paris; that place is the pollution of the age; that door, whence issue all sorts of joyous sounds, flourishes of trumpets, music, laughter, and the jingling of glasses; that door, saluted during the day by the passing battalions; illuminated at night; thrown wide open with insolent confidence, — is a sort of public insult always present. There is the centre of the world's shame.

Alas! of what is France thinking? Of a surety, we must awake this slumbering nation, we must take it by the arm, we must shake it, we must speak to it; we must scour the fields, enter the villages, go into the barracks, speak to the soldier who no longer knows what he is doing, speak to the labourer who has in his cabin an engraving of the Emperor, and who, for that reason, votes for everything they ask; we must remove the radiant phantom that dazzles their eyes; this whole situation is nothing but a huge and deadly joke. We must expose this joke, probe it to the bottom, disabuse the people, — the country people above all, — excite them, agitate them, stir them up, show them the empty houses, the yawning graves, and make them touch with their finger the horror of this régime. The people are good and honest; they will comprehend. Yes, peasant, there are two, the great and the little, the illustrious and the infamous, — Napoleon and Naboleon!

Let us sum up this government! Who is at the Élysée and the Tuileries? Crime. Who is established at the Luxembourg? Baseness. Who at the Palais Bourbon? Imbecility. Who at the Palais d’Orsay? Corruption. Who at the Palais de Justice? Prevarication. And who are in the prisons, in the fortresses, in the dungeons, in the casemates, in the hulks, at Lambessa, at Cayenne, in exile? Law, honour, intelligence, liberty, and the right.

Oh! ye proscribed, of what do you complain? You have the better part.

BOOK III

THE CRIME

But this government, this horrible, hypocritical, and stupid government, — this government which causes us to hesitate between a laugh and a sob, this gibbet-constitution on which all our liberties are hung, this great universal suffrage and this little universal suffrage, the first naming the President, and the other the legislators; the little one saying to the great one: “Monseigneur, accept these millions,” and the great one saying to the little one: “Be assured of my consideration;” this Senate, — this Council of State — whence do they all come? Great Heaven! have we already reached the point that it is necessary to remind the reader of their source?

Whence comes this government? Look! It is still flowing, it is still smoking, — it is blood!

The dead are far away, the dead are dead.

Ah! it is horrible to think and to say, but is it possible that we no longer think of it?

Is it possible that, because we still eat and drink, because the coachmakers’ trade is flourishing, because you, labourer, have work in the Bois de Boulogne, because you, mason, earn forty sous a day at the Louvre, because you, banker, have made money in the mining shares of Vienna, or in the obligations of Hope and Co., because the titles of nobility are restored, because one can now be called Monsieur le Comte or Madame la Duchesse, because religious processions traverse the streets on the Fête-Dieu, because people enjoy themselves, because they laugh, because the walls of Paris are covered with bills of fêtes and theatres, — is it possible that, because these things are so, men forgot that there are corpses lying beneath?

Is it possible, that, because one has been to the ball at the École Militaire, because one has returned home with dazzled eyes, aching head, torn dress and faded bouquet, because one has thrown one’s self on one’s couch, and fallen asleep, thinking of some handsome officer, — is it possible that one no longer remembers that under the turf, in an obscure grave, in a deep pit, in the inexorable gloom of death, there lies a motionless, ice-cold, terrible multitude, — a multitude of human beings already become a shapeless mass, devoured by worms, consumed by corruption, and beginning to blend with the earth around them — who existed, worked, thought, and loved, who had the right to live, and who were murdered?

Ah! if men recollect this no longer, let us recall it to the minds of those who forget! Awake, you who sleep! The dead are about to pass before your eyes.

EXTRACT FROM AN UNPUBLISHED BOOK ENTITLED
THE CRIME OF THE SECOND OF DECEMBER
“THE DAY OF THE 4th OF DECEMBER
“THE COUP D’ÉTAT AT BAY

I

“The resistance had assumed unexpected proportions.

“The combat had become menacing; it was no longer a combat, but a battle, which was engaged on all sides. At the Élysée and the different departments, people began to turn pale; they had wished for barricades, and they had got them.

“All the centre of Paris was becoming covered with improvised redoubts; the quarters thus barricaded formed a sort of immense trapezium, between the Halles and Rue Rambuteau on one side, and the boulevards on the other; bounded on the east by Rue du Temple, and on the west by Rue Montmartre. This vast network of streets, cut in all directions by redoubts and entrenchments, assumed every hour a more terrible aspect, and was becoming a kind of fortress. The combatants at the barricades pushed their advance guards as far as the quays. Outside the trapezium, which we have described, the barricades extended, as we have said, as far as Faubourg Saint-Martin, and to the neighbourhood of the canal. The quarter of the schools, whither the Committee of Resistance had despatched Representative de Flotte, had risen even more generally than on the evening before; the suburbs were taking fire; the drums were beating to arms at the Batignolles; Madier de Montjau was arousing Belleville; three enormous barricades were in course of construction at the Chapelle-Saint-Denis. In the business streets the citizens were delivering up their muskets, and the women were making lint. ‘All is going well! Paris is up!’ exclaimed B ——, to us, as he entered the Committee of Resistance with a face radiant with joy. Fresh intelligence reached us every instant; all the permanent committees of the different quarters placed themselves in communication with us. The members of the committee deliberated and issued orders and instructions for the combat in every direction. Victory seemed certain. There was a moment of enthusiasm and joy when all these men, still standing between life and death, embraced one another.— 'Now,' exclaimed Jules Favre, 'let but a regiment come over, or a legion, and Louis Bonaparte is lost!'— 'To-morrow, the Republic will be at the Hotel de Ville!' said Michel de Bourges. All was ferment, all was excitement; in the most peaceful quarters the proclamations were torn down, and the ordinances defaced. On Rue Beaubourg, the women cried from the windows to the men employed in erecting a barricade: 'Courage!' The agitation reached even to Faubourg Saint-Germain. At the headquarters on Rue de Jerusalem, which is the centre of the great cobweb that the police spreads over Paris, everyone trembled; their anxiety was immense, for they saw the possibility that the Republic would triumph. In the courtyards, in the bureaus, and in the passages, the clerks and sergents-de-ville began to talk with affectionate regret of Caussidiere.

"If one can believe what has oozed out from this den, the prefect, Maupas, who had been so warm in the cause the evening before, and was put forward so odiously, began to back out and lose courage. It seemed as if he were listening with terror to the noise, as of a rising flood, made by the insurrection — by the holy and legitimate insurrection of the right. He stammered and hesitated while the word of command died away upon his tongue. 'That poor young man has the colic,' said the former prefect, Carlier, on leaving him. In this state of consternation, Maupas clung to Morny. The electric telegraph maintained a perpetual dialogue from the Prefecture of Police to the Department of the Interior, and from the Department of the Interior to the Prefecture of Police. All the most alarming news, all the signs of panic and confusion were passed on, one after another, from the prefect to the minister. Morny, who was less frightened, and who is, at least, a man of spirit, received all these shocks in his cabinet It is reported that at the first communication he said: 'Maupas is ill;' and to the question: 'What is to be done,' replied by the telegraph: 'Go to bed!' To the second question he still replied: 'Go to bed!' and, as the third, losing all patience he answered: 'Go to bed and be d —— d!'

"The zeal of the government agents was fast giving way and beginning to change sides. A courageous man, who had been despatched by the Committee of Resistance to rouse Faubourg Saint-Marceau, was arrested on Rue des Fossés-Saint-Victor, with his pockets filled with the proclamations and decrees of the Left. He was immediately marched off in the direction of the Prefecture of Police. He expected to be shot. As the escort which was conducting him passed the Morgue on Quai-Saint-Michel, musket-shots were heard in the Cité. The sergent-de-ville at the head of the escort said to the soldiers: ‘Go back to your guard-house; I will take care of the prisoner,’ As soon as the soldiers were gone, he cut the cords with which the prisoner’s hands were fastened, and said to him: ‘Go, I spare your life; don’t forget that it was I who set you at liberty. Look at me well, so that you may know me again.’

“The principal military accomplices held a council. The question was discussed whether it was not necessary for Louis Bonaparte to quit Faubourg Saint-Honoré immediately, and remove either to the Invalides or to the Palais du Luxembourg, two strategic points more easy to defend against a coup de main than the Élysée. Some preferred the Invalides, others the Luxembourg; the subject gave rise to an altercation between two generals.

“It was at this moment that the ex-King of Westphalia, Jérôme Bonaparte, seeing that the coup d’état was tottering to its fall, and having some care for the morrow, wrote his nephew the following significant letter: —

“My dear Nephew, — The blood of Frenchmen has been spilt; stop its effusion by a serious appeal to the people. Your sentiments are not rightly understood. Your second proclamation, in which you speak of the plebiscitum, is ill received by the people, who do not look upon it as re-establishing the right of suffrage. Liberty possesses no guarantee if there is not an Assembly to contribute to the constitution of the Republic. The army has the upper hand. Now is the moment to complete the material victory by a moral victory, and that which a government cannot do when beaten, it ought to do when victorious. After destroying the old parties, bring about the restoration of the people; proclaim that universal suffrage, sincere, and acting in harmony with the greatest liberty, shall name the President and the Constituent Assembly to save and restore the Republic.

“It is in the name of my brother’s memory, and sharing his horror for civil war, that I now write to you; trust my long experience, and remember that France, Europe, and posterity will be called on to judge your conduct.

"Your affectionate uncle,

"Jérôme Bonaparte.

"On Place de la Madeleine, the two representatives, Fabvier and Crestin, met and accosted each other. General Fabvier directed his colleague's attention to four pieces of cannon which, turning in an opposite direction to that they had before been pursuing, left the Boulevard and galloped off towards the Élysée. 'Can it be that the Élysée is already on the defensive?' said the general. Crestin, pointing to the façade of the palate of the Assembly, on the other side of Place de la Révolution, replied: 'General, to-morrow we shall be there.' — From, some garrets that look on the stables of the Élysée, three travelling carriages were observed from an early hour in the morning, loaded, with the horses put to, and the postilions in their saddles ready to start.

"The impulsion was really given, the movement of rage and hatred was becoming universal, and the coup d'état seemed to be lost; one shock more and Louis Bonaparte would fall. Let the day but end as it had begun, and all was over. The coup d'état was approaching a state of despair. The hour for supreme resolutions was come. What did he intend doing? It was necessary that he should strike a great blow, an unexpected blow, a terrible blow. He was reduced to this alternative: to perish, or to save himself by a frightful expedient.

"Louis Bonaparte had not quitted the Élysée. He was in a cabinet on the ground floor, near the splendid gilt saloon, where, as a child, in 1815, he had been present at the second abdication of Napoleon. He was there alone; orders had been given that no one should be allowed to have access to him. From time to time the door was opened a little way, and the grey head of General Roguet, his aide-de-camp, appeared. The general was the only person who was allowed to open this door and enter the room. The general brought news, more and more alarming, and frequently terminated what he had to say with the words: 'The thing doesn't work;' or 'Things are going badly.' When he had finished, Louis Bonaparte, who was seated with his elbows on a table and his feet on the fire-dogs, before a roaring fire, turned his head half round on the back of his chair, and, in a most phlegmatic tone, and without apparent emotion, invariably answered in the following words: 'Let them execute my orders.' The last time that General Roguet entered the room in this manner with bad news, it was nearly one o'clock — he himself has related these details, to the honour of his master's calmness. He told the Prince that the barricades in the centre of the town still held out, and were increasing in number; that on the boulevards the cries of 'Down with the dictator' (he did not dare say 'Down with Soulouque'), and hisses everywhere hailed the troops as they passed; that before Galerie Jouffroy a major had been pursued by the crowd, and that at the corner of the Café Cardinal a captain of the staff had been torn from his horse. Louis Bonaparte half rose from his chair, and gazing fixedly at the general, calmly said to him: 'Very well! let Saint-Arnaud be told to execute my orders.'

"What were these orders?

"We shall see.

"Here we pause to reflect, and the narrator lays down his pen with a species of hesitation and distress of mind. We are approaching the abominable crisis of that mournful day, the 4th; we are approaching that monstrous deed from which emerged the success of the coup d'état, dripping with blood. We are about to unveil the most horrible of the premeditated acts of Louis Bonaparte; we are about to reveal, to narrate, to describe what all the historiographers of the 2nd of December have concealed; what General Magnan carefully omitted in his report; what, even at Paris, where these things were seen, men scarcely dare to whisper to each other. We are about to enter upon the ghastly.

"The 2nd of December is a crime covered with darkness, a coffin closed and silent, from the cracks in which streams of blood gush forth.

"We are about to raise the coffin-lid."

By Victor Hugo. This book will shortly be published. It will be a complete narrative of the infamous performance of 1851. A large part of it is already written; the author is at this moment collecting materials for the rest.

He deems it apropos to enter somewhat at length into the details of this work, which he has imposed upon himself as a duty.

The author does himself the justice to believe that in writing this narrative, — the serious occupation of his exile, — he has had constantly present to his mind the exalted responsibility of the historian.

When it shall appear, this narrative will surely arouse numerous and violent outcries; the author expects no less; one does not with impunity cut to the quick of a contemporaneous crime, at the moment when that crime is omnipotent. However that may be, and however violent the outcries, more or less interested, and to the end that we may judge beforehand of its merit, the author feels called upon to explain in what way and with what scrupulous devotion to the truth this narrative will have been written, or, to speak more accurately, this report of the crime will have been drawn. This history of the 2nd of December will contain, in addition to the general facts, which everybody knows, a very large number of unknown facts which are brought to light for the first time therein. Several of these facts the author himself saw and touched and passed through; of them he can say: Quæque ipse vidi et quorum pars fui. The members of the Republican Left, whose conduct was so fearless, saw these facts as he did, and he will not lack their testimony. For all the rest, the author has resorted to a veritable judicial investigation; he has constituted himself, so to speak, the examining magistrate of the performance; every actor in the drama, every combatant, every victim, every witness has deposed before him; for all the doubtful facts, he has brought the opposing declarations, and at need the witnesses, face to face. As a general rule historians deal with dead facts; they touch them in the tomb with their judicial wands, cause them to rise and question them. He has dealt with living facts.

All the details of the 2nd of December have in this wise passed before his eyes; he has recorded them all, weighed them all — not one has escaped him. History will be able to complete this narration, but not to weaken it. The magistrates were recreant to their trust, he has performed their functions. When direct, spoken testimony has failed him, he has sent to the spot what one might call genuine investigating commissions. He might cite many a fact for which he has prepared genuine interrogatories to which detailed replies were made. He repeats that he has subjected the 2nd of December to a long and severe examination. He has carried the torch so far as he was able. Thanks to this investigation he has in his possession nearly two hundred reports from which the book in question will emerge. There is not a single fact beneath which, when the book is published, the author will not be able to put a name. It will be readily understood that he will abstain from doing so, that he will even substitute sometimes for the real names, yes and for accurate indications of places, designations as obscure as possible, in view of the pending proscriptions. He has no desire to furnish M. Bonaparte with a supplemental list.

It is undoubtedly true that in this narrative of the 2nd of December, the author is not, any more than in this present book, “impartial,” as people are accustomed to say of a history when they wish to praise the historian. Impartiality — a strange virtue, which Tacitus does not possess. Woe to him who should remain impartial in face of the bleeding wounds of liberty! In presence of the deed of December 2nd, 1851, the author feels that all human nature rises to arms within his breast; he does not conceal it from himself, and every one should perceive it when reading him. But in him the passion for truth equals the passion for right. The wrathful man does not lie. This history of the 2nd of December, therefore, — he declares as he is about to quote a few pages of it, — will have been written, we have just seen by what method, under conditions of the most absolute reality.

We deem it profitable to detach from it and to publish in this place a chapter which, we think, will make an impression on men’s minds, in that it casts a new light on the “success” of M. Bonaparte. Thanks to the judicious reticences of the official historiographers of the 2nd of December, people are not sufficiently apprised how near the coup d’état came to being abortive, and they are altogether ignorant as to the means by which it was saved. We proceed to place this special detail before the reader’s eyes.

[The author has concluded to reserve for this book alone the chapter in question which now forms an integral part thereof. He has therefore rewritten for the History of a Crime, the narrative of the events of December 4, with new facts, and from another point of view.]

A Committee of Resistance, charged with the task of centralizing the action and directing the combat, had been named on the evening of the 2nd of December, by the members of the Left assembled at the house of Representative Lafon, Quai Jemmappes, No. 2. This committee, which was obliged to change its retreat twenty-seven times in four days, and which, so to say, sat night and day, and did not cease to act for a single instant during the various crises of the coup d’état, was composed of Representatives Carnot, de Flotte, Jules Favre, Madier de Montjau, Michel de Bourges, Schœlcher, and Victor Hugo.

II

“From an early hour in the morning, — for here (we insist upon this point) premeditation is unquestionable, — from an early hour in the morning, strange placards had been posted up at all the street-corners; we have transcribed these placards, and our readers will remember them. During sixty years that the cannon of revolution have, on certain days, boomed through Paris, and that the government, when menaced, has had recourse to desperate measures, nothing has ever been seen like these placards. They informed the inhabitants that all assemblages, no matter of what kind, would be dispersed by armed force, without previous warning. In Paris, the metropolis of civilization, people do not easily believe that a man will push his crime to the last extremity; and, therefore, these notices had been looked upon as a means of intimidation that was hideous and barbarous, but almost ridiculous.

"The public were wrong. These placards contained in germ Louis Bonaparte's whole plan. They were seriously meant.

"One word as to the spot which is about to be the theatre of the unheard-of drama, prepared and perpetrated by the man of December.

"From the Madeleine to Faubourg Poissonnière, the boulevard was unobstructed; from the Gymnase Theatre to the Theatre of the Porte Saint-Martin it was barricaded, as were Rue de Bondy, Rue Neslay, Rue de la Lune, and all the streets which bound, or debouch at, Porte Saint-Denis and Porte Saint-Martin. Beyond Porte Saint-Martin the boulevard was again free as far as the Bastile, with the exception of a single barricade, which had been begun opposite the Château d'Eau. Between Porte Saint-Denis and Porte Saint-Martin, seven or eight redoubts crossed the street at intervals. A square of four barricades shut in Porte Saint-Denis. Of these four barricades, that one which looked towards the Madeleine, and which was destined to receive the first impact of the troops, had been constructed at the culminating point of the boulevard, with its left resting on the corners of Rue de la Lune, and its right on Rue Mazagran. Four omnibuses, five furniture-moving vans, the office of the inspector of hackney coaches, which had been thrown down, the vespasian columns, which had been broken up, the public seats on the boulevards, the flag-stones of the steps on Rue de la Lune, the entire iron railing of the sidewalk, which had been wrenched from its place at a single effort by the powerful hand of the crowd — such was the composition of this fortification, which was hardly sufficient to block the boulevard, which, at this point, is very broad. There were no paving-stones, as the roadway is macadamized. The barricade did not even extend from one side of the boulevard to the other, but left a large open space on the side toward Rue Mazagran, where there was a house in course of erection. Observing this gap, a well-dressed young man got upon the scaffolding, and, quite unaided, without the least hurry, without even taking the cigar from his mouth, cut all the ropes of the scaffolding. The people at the neighbouring windows laughed and applauded him. An instant afterwards the scaffolding fell all at once, and with a loud noise; this completed the barricade.

“While this redoubt was being completed, a score or more of men entered the Gymnase Theatre by the stage-door, and came out a few seconds later with some muskets and a drum which they had found in the wardrobe, and which were a part of what, in theatrical language, are termed ‘the properties,’ One of the men took the drum and began beating to arms. The others, with the overturned vespasian columns, carriages thrown on their sides, blinds and shutters torn from their hinges, and old scenery, constructed, opposite the guard-house of Boulevard Bonne-Nouvelle, a small barricade as a sort of advanced post, or rather a lunette, which commanded Boulevards Poissonnière and Montmartre as well as Rue Hauteville. The troops had evacuated the guard-house in the morning. They took the flag belonging to it and planted it on the barricade. It was this same flag which was afterwards declared by the newspapers of the coup d’état to have been a ‘red flag.’

“Some fifteen men took up their position at this advanced post. They had muskets, but no cartridges, or, at most, very few. Behind them, the large barricade, which covered Porte Saint-Denis, was held by about a hundred combatants, in the midst of whom were observed two women and an old man with white hair, supporting himself on a cane with his left hand, and, in his right, holding a musket. One of the two women wore a sabre suspended over her shoulder; while helping to tear up the railing of the sidewalk, she had cut three fingers of her right hand with the sharp edge of an iron bar. She showed the wound to the crowd, crying: ‘Vive la République!’ The other woman had ascended to the top of the barricade, where, leaning on the flag-staff, and escorted by two men in blouses, who were armed with muskets and presented arms, she read aloud the call to arms issued by the Representatives of the Left. The crowd clapped their hands.

“All this occurred between noon and one o’clock. On this side of the barricades an immense number of people covered the pavement on both sides of the boulevard; in some places, silent; in others, crying: ‘Down with Soulouque! Down with the traitor!’

“From time to time, mournful processions traversed the multitude; they consisted of files of closed litters borne by hospital attendants and soldiers. At their head marched men holding long poles, from which hung blue placards, on which was inscribed, in huge letters: Service of the Military Hospitals. On the curtains of the litters: Wounded, Ambulance. The weather was dull and rainy.

“At this time there was a great crowd at the Bourse. On all the walls bill-stickers were posting despatches announcing the adhesion of the departments to the coup d’état. Even the stockbrokers, while trying to bull the market, laughed and shrugged their shoulders at these placards. Suddenly, a well-known speculator, who had for two days been a great admirer of the coup d’état, made his appearance, pale and breathless, like a fugitive, and exclaimed: ‘They are firing on the boulevards!’

“This is what had happened:

III

“A little after one o’clock, a quarter of an hour after the last order given by Louis Bonaparte to General Roguet, the boulevards throughout their whole length, from the Madeleine, were suddenly covered with cavalry and infantry. Almost the whole of Carrelet’s division, composed of the five brigades of Cotte, Bourgon, Canrobert, Dulac, and Reibell, making a total of sixteen thousand four hundred and ten men, had taken up their position, and extended in echelon from Rue de la Paix to Faubourg Poissonnière. Each brigade had its battery with it. Eleven pieces were counted on Boulevard Poisonnière alone. Two of the guns, with their muzzles turned different ways, were levelled at the entrance to Rue Montmartre and Faubourg Montmartre respectively; no one knew why, as neither the street nor the faubourg presented even the appearance of a barricade. The spectators, who crowded the sidewalks and the windows, gazed in dismay at all these guns, sabres, and bayonets.

“‘The troops were laughing and chatting,’ says one witness. Another witness says: ‘The soldiers acted strangely. Most of them were leaning on their muskets, with the butt-end on the ground, and seemed nearly falling from fatigue, or something else.’ One of those old officers who are accustomed to read a soldier’s thoughts in his eyes, General L —— , said, as he passed Café Frascati: ‘They are drunk.’

“There were now some indications of what was about to happen.

“At one moment, when the crowd was crying to the troops, ‘Vive la République!’ ‘Down with Louis Bonaparte!’ one of the officers was heard to say, in a low voice: ‘There’s going to be some pigsticking!’

“A battalion of infantry debouches from Rue Richelieu. Before the Café Cardinal it is greeted by a unanimous cry of ‘Vive la République!’ A writer, the editor of a Conservative paper, who happens to be on the spot, adds: ‘Down with Soulouque!’ The staff officer in command of the detachment aims a blow at him with his sabre, which, being dodged by the journalist, cuts in two one of the small trees on the boulevard.

“As the 1st Regiment of Lancers, commanded by Colonel Rochefort, reached a point abreast of Rue Taitbout, a numerous crowd covered the pavement of the boulevard. They were residents of the quarter, tradesmen, artists, journalists, and among them several young mothers leading their children by the hand. As the regiment was passing, men and women — every one — cried: ‘Vive la Constitution!’ ‘Vive la Loi!’ ‘Vive la République!’ Colonel Rochefort, — the same who had presided at the banquet given on the 31st of October, 1851, at the École Militaire, by the 1st Regiment of Lancers to the 7th Regiment of Lancers, and who, at this banquet, had proposed as a toast, ‘Prince Louis-Napoleon, the head of the State, the personification of that order of which we are the defenders!’ — this colonel, when the crowd uttered the above perfectly lawful cry, spurred his horse into the midst of them through the chairs on the sidewalk, while the Lancers precipitated themselves after him, and men, women, and children were indiscriminately cut down. ‘A great number remained dead on the spot,’ says a defender of the coup d’état; and adds, ‘It was done in a moment.’

“About two o’clock, two howitzers were pointed at the extremity of Boulevard Poissonnière, a hundred and fifty paces from the little advanced barricade at the Bonne Nouvelle guard-house. While placing the guns in position, two of the artillerymen, who are not often guilty of a false manœvre, broke the pole of a caisson. ‘Don’t you see they are drunk!’ exclaimed a man of the lower classes.

“At half past two, for it is necessary to follow the progress of this hideous drama minute by minute, and step by step, fire was opened before the barricade languidly, and almost as if done for amusement. The officers appeared to be thinking of anything but a fight. We shall soon see, however, of what they were thinking.

“The first cannon-ball, badly aimed, passed above all the barricades and killed a little boy at the Château d’Eau as he was drawing water from the fountain.

“The shops were shut, as were also almost all the windows. There was, however, one window left open in an upper story of the house at the corner of Rue du Sentier. The curious spectators continued to assemble mainly on the southern side of the street. It was an ordinary crowd and nothing more, — men, women, children, and old people who looked upon the languid attack and defence of the barricade as a sort of sham fight.

“This barricade served as a spectacle pending the moment when it should become a pretext.

IV

“The soldiers had been firing, and the defenders of the barricade returning their fire, for about a quarter of an hour, without any one being wounded on either side, when suddenly, as if by an electric shock, an extraordinary and threatening movement took place, first in the infantry, then in the cavalry. The troops suddenly faced about.

“The historiographers of the coup d’état have asserted that a shot, directed against the soldiers, was fired from the window which had remained open at the corner of Rue du Sentier. Others say that it was fired from the roof of the house at the corner of Rue Notre-Dame-de-Recouvrance and Rue Poissonnière. According to others, it was a pistol shot and was fired from the roof of the tall house at the corner of Rue Mazagran. The shot is contested, but what cannot be contested is that, for having fired this problematical shot, which was perhaps nothing more than the slamming of a door, a dentist, who lived in the next house, was shot. The question resolves itself into this: Did any one hear a pistol or musket shot fired from one of the houses on the boulevard? Is this the fact, or is it not? a host of witnesses deny it.

“If the shot was really fired, there still remains a question: Was it a cause, or was it a signal?

“However this may be, all of a sudden, as we have said before, cavalry, infantry, and artillery faced towards the dense crowd upon the sidewalks, and, no one being able to guess why, unexpectedly, without motive, ‘without parley,’ as the infamous proclamations of the morning had announced, the butchery began, from the Gymnase Theatre to the Bains Chinois, that is to say, along the whole length of the richest, the most frequented, and the most joyous boulevard of Paris.

“The army began shooting down the people at close range.

“It was a horrible and indescribable moment: the cries, the arms raised towards heaven, the surprise, the terror, the crowd flying in all directions, a shower of balls falling on the pavement and bounding to the roofs of the houses, corpses strewn along the street in a moment, young men falling with their cigars still in their mouths, women in velvet gowns shot down by the long rifles, two booksellers killed on their own thresholds without knowing what offence they had committed, shots fired down the cellar-holes and killing any one, no matter who, the Bazaar riddled with shells and bullets, the Hôtel Sallandrouze bombarded, the Maison d’Or raked with grape-shot, Tortoni’s carried by assault, hundreds of corpses stretched upon the boulevard, and a torrent of blood on Rue de Richelieu.

“The narrator must here again crave permission to suspend his narrative.

“In the presence of these nameless deeds, I who write these lines declare that I am the recording officer. I record the crime, I appeal the cause. My functions extend no further. I cite Louis Bonaparte, I cite Saint-Arnaud, Maupas, Moray, Magnan, Carrelet, Canrobert, and Reybell, his accomplices; I cite the executioners, the murderers, the witnesses, the victims, the red-hot cannon, the smoking sabres, the drunken soldiers, the mourning families, the dying, the dead, the horror, the blood, and the tears, — I cite them all to appear at the bar of the civilized world.

“The mere narrator, whoever he might be, would never be believed. Let the living facts, the bleeding facts, therefore, speak for themselves. Let us hear the witnesses.

V

“We shall not print the names of the witnesses, we have said why, but the reader will easily recognize the sincere and poignant accent of reality.

“One witness says: —

“‘I had not taken three steps on the sidewalk, when the troops, who were marching past, suddenly halted, faced about towards the south, levelled their muskets, and, by an instantaneous movement, fired upon the affrighted crowd.

"'The firing continued uninterruptedly for twenty minutes, drowned from time to time by a cannon-shot.

"'At the first volley, I threw myself on the ground and crept along on the pavement like a snake to the first door I found open.

"'It was a wine-shop, No. 180, next door to the Bazaar de l'Industrie. I was the last person who went in. The firing still continued.

"'In this shop there were about fifty persons, and among them five or six women and two or three children. Three poor wretches were wounded when they came in; two of them died, after a quarter of an hour of horrible agony: the third was still alive when I left the shop at four o'clock; however, as I afterwards learned, he did not survive his wound.

"'In order to give an idea of the crowd on whom the troops fired, I cannot do better than mention some of the persons assembled in the shop.

"'There were several women, two of whom had come into the quarter to buy provisions for their dinners; a little lawyer's clerk, who had been sent on an errand by his master; two or three frequenters of the Bourse; two or three house-holders; several workmen, in wretched blouses, or in nothing. One of the unhappy beings who had taken refuge in the shop produced a deep impression on me. He was a man of about thirty, with light hair, wearing a gray paletot. He was going with his wife to dine with his family in Faubourg Montmartre, when he was stopped on the boulevard by the passage of the column of troops. At the very beginning, at the first discharge, both he and his wife fell down; he rose and was dragged into the wine-shop, but he no longer had his wife on his arm, and his despair cannot be described. In spite of all we could say, he insisted that the door should be opened so that he might run and look for his wife amid the grape-shot that was sweeping the street. It was all we could do to keep him with us for an hour. The next day, I learned that his wife had been killed, and her body found in the Cité Bergère. A fortnight afterwards I was informed that the poor wretch, having threatened to apply the lex talionis to M. Bonaparte, had been arrested and sent to Brest, on his way to Cayenne. Almost all the persons assembled in the wine-shop held monarchical opinions, and I saw only two, a compositor named Meunier, who had formerly worked on the Réforme, and a friend of his, who declared themselves to be Republicans. About four o'clock, I left the shop.'

"Another witness, one of those who fancied he heard the pistol-shot on Rue de Mazagran, adds: —

“‘This shot was a signal to the soldiers for a fusillade on all the houses and their windows, the roar of which lasted at least thirty minutes. The discharge was simultaneous from Porte Saint-Denis as far as the Café du Grand Balcon. The artillery soon took part with the musketry.’

“Another witness says: —

“‘At quarter past three, a singular movement took place. The soldiers who were facing Porte Saint-Denis, suddenly faced about, resting on the houses from the Gymnase, the Maison du Pont-de-Fer, and the Hôtel Saint-Phar, and immediately, a running fire was directed on the people on the opposite side of the way, from Rue Saint-Denis to Rue Richelieu. A few minutes were sufficient to cover the pavement with dead bodies; the houses were riddled with balls, and this paroxysm of fury on the part of the troops continued for three quarters of an hour.’

“Another witness says: —

“‘The first cannon-shots aimed at the barricade Bonne-Nouvelle served as a signal to the rest of the troops, who fired almost simultaneously at every one within range of their muskets.’

“Another witness says: —

“‘No words are powerful enough to describe such an act of barbarity. One must himself have seen in order to be bold enough to speak of it, and to attest the truth of so unspeakable a deed.’

“‘The soldiers fired thousands and thousands of shots — the number is inappreciable_— on the unoffending crowd, and that without any sort of necessity. There was a desire to produce a deep impression. That was all.’

“Another witness says: —

“‘The troops of the line, followed by the cavalry and the artillery, arrived on the boulevard at a time when the general excitement was very great. A musket-shot was fired from the midst of the troops, and it was easy to see that it had been fired in the air, from the smoke which rose perpendicularly. This was the signal for firing on the people and charging them with the bayonet without warning. This is a significant fact, and proves that the military wanted the pretence of a motive for beginning the massacre which followed.’

“Another witness tells the following tale: —

“‘The cannon, loaded with grape-shot, cut up all the shop-fronts from the shop Le Prophète to Rue Montmartre. From Boulevard Bonne-Nouvelle they must have fired also on the Maison Billecoq, for it was struck at the corner of the wall on the Aubusson side, and the ball, having traversed the wall, penetrated the interior of the house.’

“Another witness, one of those who deny the shot, says: —

